The afternoon excursion was more compensating. A drive of four hours to and fro on a splendid, smooth road, along a deep, dark, rapidly-flowing stream or a mad, rushing torrent, as nature determined, between high, rocky mountains, which suggested the canyons of Colorado, is one long to be remembered. The Lotefas itself is a magnificent fall 1,000 feet in height, almost perpendicular, dashing down with a deafening roar in a snow-white mass, with a drenching shower of spray, the necessarily rapid rush through which, to avoid a wetting, adds to the zest of the occasion. The mountain stream thus formed, along which we drove, suggests in its turbulence and length the rapids below Niagara falls, although not so grand or extensive.

Our departure from Odde was attended by a sad-denying event, which cast a shadow over the Fourth of July celebration, which had been arranged by the Americans for the evening. One of the sailors was drowned after being blown into the water by the premature discharge of a cannon he was firing in a parting salute to the British excursion ship, the Midnight Sun. This delayed our start, and we left without recovering the body.

I should not omit to say that, on going ashore, we did not find the total barrenness we had expected. Although naked mountain-tops arise hundreds of meters above us, the valleys and slopes are tilled for hay, and there are numerous gardens where potatoes seem the chief crop. Wild strawberries are numerous, and at this season the ground is covered with many varieties of wild flowers. JAMES TYSON.

At Sea, Seventh month 5.

II.—IN EASTERN ENGLAND.

My last letter spoke only of the first two days of our wheeling trip. The very hasty description took us only to Bedford. From that point we have journeyed northward, making short visits at Cambridge, Ely, Peterboro, Lincoln, and York.

At Bedford we were particularly interested in the story of John Bunyan's life and work. At the little village of Elstow, only a mile from Bedford, we saw Bunyan's early home, the chapel building in which he preached, and in the lower room of which he was tried and convicted. The tower of the old Norman church near by is the place in which Bunyan used to try the art of bell-ringing. We were told that the grooves over the doorway mark the effect of the rope wearing the stone, as the ringer was afraid to stand directly under the great bells.

The Bunyan meeting-house in Bedford has had ten or more pastors, and all of these have died in service there. Bunyan was one of these. The prison in which "Pilgrim's Progress" was written is entirely destroyed. We saw the door of Bunyan's prison cell at the meeting-house.

Cambridge, named from the Cam river, on which most of the colleges stand, is purely a university town. There are sixteen or more separate colleges, nearly all of considerable age. The early monks here established an institution of learning in what was then remote fen country. The motive was undoubtedly to secure seclusion and safety from attack. The one feature that seemed to us most prominent was the court or quadrangle, possessed by each college. These are kept in splendid turf, and this, with the bright-hued flowers of the window-gardens, serve to soften the stern aspect of the age-discolored, grayish stone of the dormitories, chapels, and halls.

There, more than anywhere else, our American costumes attracted attention. We were treated to something of the sensation that curiously-dressed foreigners experience in our own home cities.

There is so much to be said about the fen country around Ely and northward that it is difficult to condense. The great cathedral of Ely loomed up before us a long time before we climbed the little hill that marks the shores of the old Isle of Ely. The town is very small. The first church was built here in the year 673 A. D. It will be unnecessary to speak of the cathedrals located at each of the cities we have mentioned. They have certain general features, but differ very widely in details and in history. There is only one exception to the rule that all have the main entrance to the nave facing west, and that is Durham cathedral. Each is built in the form of a cross. All show more or less clearly the various ages of architecture that mark the development of this phase of art and building. At Lincoln and at Durham the cathedral shares the central hill of the city with the castle, the former strongholds of kings and barons. From them as centers attacks were made or repelled. At Lincoln the castle is now used as a county jail and criminal court. Here we saw the judge drive up, announced by buglers; he wore a wig and was accompanied by footmen and police, all of which seemed useless.

By the roadside we see everywhere myriads of poppies; some fields are red with them. Only since we have reached Durham have we seen the familiar daisy. Dandelions, wild roses, a clustered bell-like flower, and the various clovers, are everywhere. England seems universally green and well watered. There is "finish" on all sides. Hedges are well kept; the walls are always trim; most buildings, even barns, are of brick and have heavy, tiled roofs.

The horses are large, well groomed, and well fed. Even the complexions of the people show the effects of an even climate, with perhaps a suggestion of the national failing—the drinking of much beer and spirits. Ale is served to farm laborers very generally, I believe.

As I close, we are about ready to wheel away to the Scottish border and into the land of Scott.

EDWARD C. WILSON.

Durham, England, Seventh month 10.

PLAY IS DIFFICULT.

Review of Reviews.

ONE does not need to be a very profound student of play to discover that play is not the doing of easy things, as some have supposed. The amount of energy put into hunting, fishing, skating, bicycling, ball-playing, solving puzzles, and playing checkers, chess, etc., proves to the most casual observer that play is not always easy. Closer observers readily discover the truth that the charm of many plays depends upon their difficulty. It is true that play is one of the best means of rest and recreation, as is now quite generally recognized, not, however, because it is easy, but because one becomes absorbed in forms of activity different from those called forth in his daily work, and often those fundamental in race development. Renovation and equilibrium of the whole system are thus brought about much more perfectly than by merely stopping work in order to rest or by doing something that requires little effort and attention. Recent careful studies of the biographies of noted men have shown that in most cases they were leaders in play in boyhood, and that many of them kept the play instinct all their lives. Men who have great capacity for play usually have great capacity for work.

The characteristic of play is not ease, but the feeling of power in doing things more or less difficult without constraint and compulsion. The instant that one feels that a thing must be done it is no longer play, but work. Too many rules constraining one to do a thing in a certain way have something of the same effect of compulsion. In play the activity or the end, if there is one, must be freely chosen and enjoyed for itself. If there is any outside reward or punishment attached, the pleasure and advantage of play activity at once disappear. The professional ball-player is, therefore, not really a player, but a worker. Play is also heightened when it calls forth the fundamental forms of activity of the human race in constructing, overcoming difficulties, attacking, defending, and coöperating, that have occupied mankind for ages.

THE opal mines in Mexico and the United States have been about exhausted, no gems of much value being extracted from them, though at one time large sums were made out of these mines. Opals occur in veins in the same manner as silver or gold. Those coming from below the level of water in a mine are not considered desirable. They may lose their color or crack after being exposed to the sunlight, so as soon as a mine reaches water level it is abandoned.

AMERICAN printing presses have appeared in Edinburgh, and the only adverse criticism made is that they turn out papers faster than is necessary.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

GENERAL CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

THE Central and other committees that met at Asbury Park on the 21st and 22d ult., decided on the following program. This will be followed later by one more in detail:

From Central Committee Minutes: Robert S. Haviland, Chairman. Harry A. Hawkins introduced the subject of the next meeting of the General Conference with an invitation from George E. Vincent, General Manager of the Chautauqua Association, to hold our first meeting Eighth month 21, 1900, instead of at the close of their Assembly, as previously arranged. The invitation was accepted with the decision that we should have but one session a day during the first three days, and that the Conference close on the 28th.

The following allotment of time for the various branches of work was approved, with only one session a day during the first three days,—the number of sessions after that time to be left to the judgment of the different Executive Committees:

Third-day morning shall be devoted to the consideration of a religious subject; Fourth-day, Educational; Fifth-day, Philanthropic; Sixth-day, Philanthropic; Seventh-day to be given to Young Friends' Associations. First-day morning there shall be a religious meeting under the care of the Central Committee; First-day afternoon, a religious meeting under the care of the Young Friends' Associations; Second-day shall be devoted to First-day School work; Third-day morning to the subject of Education, closing with a devotional meeting. The time of the public meetings in the Auditorium each morning shall be from 10 to 12 o'clock, at which time there shall not be any routine business. The latter shall be transacted at meetings called for the purpose.

The Auditing Committee suggested that $1,200 be raised to defray the expenses of the next Conference.

From minutes of First-day School Executive Committee: In the absence of the clerk, Herbert P. Worth was chosen clerk for the day. The plan of the Central Committee for the Conference of 1900 was reported, showing that one day had been placed at the disposal of the First-day School General Conference. It was agreed that on this day an executive session of the Conference be held at 8.30 a. m., at which all reports shall be heard and other business of the Conference be transacted; a general session at 10 a. m., for the consideration of topics introduced by papers, followed by discussion; and a session in the evening for the presentation of practical First-day school methods.

The proposition was united with that the reports from the several associations be condensed by the clerk of this committee into one summary report, to be presented to the Conference. It was further agreed that papers to be read before the Conference shall not exceed twenty minutes in length, that two persons shall be appointed to open each discussion without papers, that these and other speakers in discussion shall be limited to five minutes each, and that no person shall speak more than once in any discussion while others desire to speak. (This rule is to apply to all sessions.) It was directed that a committee of five, in addition to himself, be named by the clerk of this meeting, to arrange a programme for the sessions of the Conference. (This is also to be done in each committee.)

Executive Committee of the Union for Philanthropic Labor: The General Superintendent of the Department of Temperance, Jesse H. Holmes, offered his resignation, owing to contemplated absence abroad; and Wilson S. Doan, of Cleveland, Ohio, was chosen in his place.

Oliver Edward Janney, of Baltimore, was chosen General Superintendent of the Department of Purity.

It was decided to hold one session of the Union for Philanthropic Labor, Eighth month 23, 1900, from 10 to 12 o'clock; on the 24th, an executive and business session at 8.30 a. m.; a public session at 10 a. m., and one at 2 p. m. A number of topics for discussion were suggested and referred to a Committee on Program. There will be two sessions, one on Third-day, the 21st, from 10 to 12 o'clock; the other of a devotional character, at the close of the Conferences, on the following Third-day.

HUNTINGDON, INDIANA.—The Young Friends' Association met Seventh month 23d, 1899, at the Maple Grove meeting-house. The meeting was called to order by the chairman, George Evans. After routine business a paper was read by Maurice S. Spencer, his subject being "Fiction." Many valuable thoughts were presented, which called forth a great deal of discussion. Cora Mason read an excellent article from the Ladies' Home Journal. The selection was in regard to the reading of cheap literature and the attending of plays. The meeting then adjourned, to meet Eighth month 20, at Maple Grove; paper to be prepared by Samuel C. Mason.

WILLIAM C. MOORE, Corresponding Secretary.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

COLLEGE AND ALUMNE.—Unusual recognition of the attainments of women has been accorded by German universities this summer. For the first time in the history of Berlin University a degree in course has been conferred upon a woman, the recipient being Fraulein Neumann, to whom the degree of Ph. D. was given. Another "first" is the exceptional academic distinction recently conferred on Mrs. Agnes Smith Lewis, of Cambridge, by the University of Halle. This learned lady has been made a Doctor of Philosophy and Master of the Liberal Arts, honoris causa, by the Philosophical Faculty of the above-named University, "in consideration of her being eminent amongst all women, not only in her own country, but in the whole world, for her learning." A Swabian journal writes of her: "There is no other woman who has devoted her money and knowledge in the service of theological and Oriental science to such extent as Mrs. Lewis." Women, it is said in the German press, have become doctors of philosophy, law, and medicine, but this is the first time, at all events in Germany, that the degree of doctor honoris causa has been conferred on a woman.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL, under the care of Germantown Preparative Meeting, will open a kindergarten the coming fall in connection with the primary and intermediate grades. It will be under the direction of Rebecca B. Wistar, a Kindergarten graduate.

LITERARY NOTES.

A WORK has recently been published, entitled "Charles Lamb and the Lloyds," which contains some correspondence between Charles Lamb and Robert Lloyd, (brother of the founder of Lloyd's Bank), dating from 1748 to 1828.

In one of these Lamb urges Robert Lloyd (who had run away from Birmingham to avoid some things he did not like in his home) not to depend on outward circumstances, or upon friends, for happiness, but to seek it in the faithful doing of his own duty and the building up of his own character. The letter, the most beautiful Charles Lamb ever wrote, ends thus:

"I do not wish to deter you from making a friend, a true friend; and such a friendship, where the parties are not blind to each other's faults, is very useful and valuable. I perceive a tendency in you to this error, Robert. I know you have chosen to take up an high opinion of my moral worth, but I say it before God, and I do not lie, you are mistaken in me. I could not bear to lay open all my failings to you, for the sentiment of shame would be too pungent. Let this be as an example to you. Robert, friends fall off; friends mistake us; they change; they grow unlike us; they go away; they die; but God is everlasting and incapable of change, and to Him we may look with cheerful, unpresumptuous hope, while we discharge the duties of life in situations more untowardly than yours. You complain of the impossibility of improving yourself, but be assured that the opportunity of improvement lies more in the mind than in the situation. Humble yourself before God, cast out the selfish principle, wait in patience, do good in every way you can to all sorts of people, never be easy to neglect a duty, tho' a small one, praise God for all, and see his hand in all things, and he will in time raise you up many friends—or be himself instead an unchanging friend. God bless you.—C. LAMB."

The Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D., has an interesting article in this issue of the Ladies' Home Journal, on "The Diffusion of Happiness Through Conversation," the third of his "Secrets of a Happy Life" series. "What Can be Done With an Old Farmhouse" pictures how an old building may be artistically remodeled at small cost. On two other pictorial pages are shown the most cosy and attractive "Houses in Woods, Valleys, and Mountains;" and "The Sweetest of Summer Charities" pictures the work of the flower missions in several cities.

Margaret Deland, author of the charming volume, "Old Chester Tales;" the book of delicate flower lyrics, "The Old Garden," etc., is reported in Harper's Bazar as giving this bit of reminiscence to a friend recently: "Mine was a quiet, old-fashioned, but very happy childhood. The quaint fancies and beautiful visions which haunted my earlier days made my life a dreamy one, and nature was very near my heart. Being a silent little personage, I loved the hills and woods and open skies. I lived in a great old-fashioned house, built by English people among the hills of western Pennsylvania nearly a century ago. Here are associated some of the happiest and dearest memories of my life. To me every flower and tree that grew on the place had a distinct personality, and to them I whispered all my childish secrets."

She adds this piece of counsel as to the development of the imagination in childhood: "There is, I think, a danger in the free expression of one's aspirations. The best things of our nature fashion themselves in silence, and if encouraged to talk about them, the aspirations and ambitions of a child are apt not to take a very deep root in the heart."

"The Making of a Journalist," a series of twelve papers by Julian Ralph, who has been called "the best reporter in the world," will appear in The Saturday Evening Post. The author writes from the point of view of one who has reached the top of his profession; who has labored unceasingly in the newspaper field for twenty-five years; who has pursued the elusive thing called "news" into every corner of the globe. To young men who would make journalism their life-work he says, "Don't;" but having thus freed his conscience, he elaborates entertainingly with anecdote and reminiscence the joys, the vicissitudes, and experiences of the young man who has ink in his blood.

In the Foreign Letter in the current number of Literature, a correspondent signing himself W. M. F., quotes interestingly from M. Brunetière's recent book, in which he details his impressions of this country, and in particular of American audiences.

M. Brunetière is a close observer, and many little points which have escaped other public speakers entirely have appeared to him especially significant. Thus he mentions a curious stir which went through a Baltimore audience when he quoted Carlyle's eulogy of Shakespeare from M. Izoulet's translation of "Heroes and Hero Worship." The people, according to M. Brunetière, felt themselves "glorified in this apotheosis of Shakespeare." A similar feeling was noticed in Canada when the critic read the "Cid," "Andromache," and Pascal's Pensees, which, according to the writer, awoke in the hearts of the French Canadians the thought that, although British citizens, they were of French origin. Whether or not there is any foundation for M. Brunetière's ideas, they make a most useful argument in his appeal to the French people, with which he concludes, begging them to defend the glory and the age of the classics.

In the current McClure's Magazine, Ida M. Tarbell gives an account of the death of Lincoln, based on the unpublished recollections of persons who were with Lincoln in his last hours and were more or less eye-witnesses of his assassination. The article is illustrated with the last life portrait of Lincoln, a facsimile of the last bit of writing done by him, a picture of the scene at his death-bed, and other pictures.

"The Cape to Cairo Railway," is contributed by W. T. Stead. As Mr. Stead is a personal friend of Cecil Rhodes, as well as of most of the important men associated with him in this enterprise, his story is of special interest. It is illustrated from photographs of incidents and scenes along the line.

In the American Review of Reviews Dr. Henry S. Lum describes the recent attempt and failure to establish "seven-day journalism" in London, where influential labor leaders joined the clergy of the nation in the fight waged against the "Sunday papers" started by two of the millionaire publishers.

Several months ago the Review of Reviews published the Canadian side of the Alaskan boundary dispute. In this number the American side is presented by William H. Lewis, of Washington State, who bases his argument entirely on the facts as set forth in the British official records.

The editor comments on educational conditions in the South, with reference to the future of both the white and colored races. He says: "The war destroyed the plantation system, which had provided training in trades and crafts; and the rapid dying off of the old generation of blacks accordingly left the South with a new generation on its hands devoid of discipline, industry, and practical skill. What the young negroes of the South needed was not Latin and Greek, but the practical training that would teach them how to mend a mule harness, and the moral training that would keep them from drinking whisky. It was the theory at the North that the colored race needed the inspiration of book-learning and of a purer system of religious and ethical instruction. In other words, it was the Northern view that the negroes needed an educated ministry of their own race and the most rapid possible multiplication of negro school-teachers. There was, of course, a certain amount of truth in all this; but it was, after all, not more than a half truth, and probably considerably less than a half. Some of the institutions which were founded to teach young negroes Latin, Greek, and theology were in the hands of men who in time came to see the situation as it actually was, and who gradually enlarged the practical and industrial departments of their schools until these features became predominant. Those are the institutions which are now best entitled to Northern support and which have won the approval and good-will of the best and wisest Southern sentiment."

W. T. Stead, writing of the results of The Hague Conference, says: "Apart from the intrinsic usefulness of the work which is being done by the peace conference, there is one aspect of its proceedings which deserves special mention. Far more important than anything which men do is the evidence which their deeds from time to time afford that there is behind them, and over them, and working through them, a Power that is mightier and wiser than they. The extraordinary manner in which the conference has been led, by a way it knew not of, to evolve a high court of justice among the nations is calculated to confirm the faith of the doubting in the reality of the 'stream of tendency not ourselves which makes for righteousness.'" When the delegates met at The Hague on May 18, few of them, possibly none of them, believed that they had come on anything but a fool's errand. They said frankly that they did not believe anything would come of it. But after six weeks they see, even the most skeptical, that great things are coming of it—whereof they are glad. The codification of the laws of war is an achievement of which any conference might be proud, and it is very satisfactory that at last—after thirty years—the beneficent rules of the Geneva Convention are now to be extended to naval warfare. But these provisions for regulating war or for rendering its sufferings less acute are trivial compared with the measures taken to diminish the danger of the outbreak of war and to provide for the administration of a system of international law. If twelve months ago any one had predicted that the representatives of all the governments would be employed for two months in elaborating a court and code for the universal establishment of a system of arbitration among nations, he would have been derided as the idlest of dreamers. But this strange thing is coming to pass before our eyes."

A COMBINATION of various New England granite quarries is under way. There are about fifteen properties which will be included in the combine, which will represent $12,000,000 capital.

CHARLES B. BROWN has filed a petition in bankruptcy in Chicago, scheduling his liabilities at $1,636,078, and his assets at $5.

COMMUNICATION.

BEACH STREET MISSION.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

THE friends who have so kindly subscribed to the summer outing for the children of the "Beach Street Mission" may be interested in the following letters received from two of the girls.

DEAR TEACHER: We are all down on the beach having a nice time in the ocean, barefooted. I thank you, and so do my sisters, for helping to send us.

NELLIE O'BRIEN, 914 Beach street.

DEAR TEACHER: I thank you very much, for I was very sick last week, and the doctor said that he didn't expect me to live, and he said if I could get away for a week it would do me good, so I guess it will. We are having fun, and I hope some of the other girls can come and see the ocean, too.

MINNIE BURNS, 702 Beach street.

SUSQUECO.¹

THROUGH the shadows cool and dim,
Willow-woven by its rim,
Threading meadow lands of bloom
Where the flowers give it room,
Through a sweet idyllic dream
Runs the naiad-haunted stream,—
Ever crooning sweetest song
Where the reeds and rushes throng:—
Through the valley's green and gold
Where the tides of battle rolled
In the stormy days of old,
Softly glide in rhythmic flow
The pictured waves of Susqueco!

Susqueco, O Susqueco!
How thy singing waters flow—
From the fountains in the hills,
From the laughing, limpid rills,
Fed by crystal dew and rain,
Gleaming through the fields of grain,
Dreaming by the slopes of fern
Where the lady-slippers burn,
Where the ponderous mill-wheels turn,
Past the miller's dusty doors,
By the lily-whitened shores,
While the sunshine softly lies
On thy mirror of the skies!

Susqueco, O Susqueco!
Whither do thy waters flow?
Under arches builded wide—
Rounded circles in the tide,
Under bridges mossy brown,
Through the meadows flowing down,
Through the woodland and the lea,
Singing ever towards the sea,
Where thy song is hushed at last
When the idle dream is passed,
In the infinite and vast:—
Thither do thy waters flow,
Stream of beauty—Susqueco!

BENJAMIN F. LEGGETT.

¹ The Indian name for the Brandywine.

GOOD-NIGHT.

GOOD-NIGHT! Now dwindle wan and low
The embers of the afterglow,
And slowly over leaf and lawn
Is twilight's dewy curtain drawn.
The slouching vixen leaves her lair,
And, prowling, sniffs the tell-tale air.
And frogs croak louder in the dyke,
And all the trees seem dark alike;
The bee is drowsing in the comb,
The sharded beetle hath gone home:
Good-night!

Good-night ! The hawk is in his nest,
 And the last rook hath dropped to rest ;
 There is no hum, no chirp, no bleat,
 No rustle in the meadow-sweet.
 The woodbine, somewhere out of sight,
 Sweetens the loneliness of night.
 The Sister Stars, that once were seven,
 Mourn for their missing mate in Heaven.
 The poppy's fair frail petals close,
 The lily yet more languid grows,
 And dewy-dreamy droops the rose :

Good-night ! —Alfred Austin.

GREAT TRUTHS.

GREAT truths are portions of the soul of man ;
 Great souls are portions of Eternity ;
 Each drop of blood that ere through true heart ran
 With lofty message, ran for thee and me ;
 For God's law, since the starry song began,
 Hath been, and still forevermore must be,
 That every deed which shall outlast Time's span
 Must goad the soul to be erect and free ;
 Slave is no word of deathless lineage sprung—
 Too many noble souls have thought and died,
 Too many mighty poets lived and sung,
 And our good Saxon, from lips purified
 With martyr fire, throughout the world hath rung
 Too long to have God's holy cause denied.

—James Russell Lowell.

HENRY FONTENELLE.

NOTICING recently a portrait of Henry Fontenelle in the New York Herald, with a review of his remarkable career, and final demise, it recalled to my mind three most joyous years spent upon the Omaha Reservation nearly thirty years ago.

At that time the man in question was a conspicuous character amongst the Omahas ; about fifty years of age, towering in stature, splendid in physique, and eagle-eyed. He was the ruling spirit in the faction which he dominated. His contemporary—Joe La Flexhe—also a noted half-breed, held sway over the remaining portion of the tribe. These two men received the homage of the Indians and were consulted by the Agents and employes when serious questions arose concerning the welfare of their people.

The following extract from the article referred to may interest the readers of the INTELLIGENCER, who have the welfare of this fast-disappearing race at heart.

Henry Fontenelle, one of the most extraordinary characters in the history of the West, in whose veins flowed the royal blood of the house of Bourbon, is dead. He was born on what is now Nebraska soil. His mother was Me-um-ba-ne (the Sun), the daughter of the chief of the Omaha tribe of Indians, and his parents were united in marriage by the famous Father de Smet.

Around the life of Henry Fontenelle cluster romances dating back into the last century, those on Nebraska soil being sufficient to fill a dozen interesting volumes. At the time of death he was nearly eighty years old, and for more than half a century had dwelt in the same house, in the extreme southeastern corner of the Omaha Indian reservation, wielding supreme sway among the Omaha and other Indians with whom he came in contact. After the death of his brother, Logan Fontenelle, who was the official chief of the Omahas, Henry Fontenelle became the head of the tribe by common consent.

When Napoleon was just rising to power on the wreck of the French throne, the story goes, Francois Marquis de Fontenelle, too loyal to the traditions of the Bourbons to remain longer in France, sailed for America and settled at New Orleans. He formed a part of the colony of the French nobility who had fled there for protection from the ravages of the French Revolution. His son, Lucien, then sixteen years old, was attracted by stories of adventure brought down the Mississippi by the French traders in the Northwest and soon ran away and joined the French colony of trappers at St. Louis.

He made his way to the Hudson Bay trading post on the Upper Missouri, and finally settled at what is now Bellevue, Neb. (Beautiful View), where the waters of the Platte and the Missouri join forces. Here he became a hunter and trapper and a prime favorite with the Indians. Here he was finally admitted as a member of the Omahas, then a powerful tribe of Indians, and given the daughter of the head chief, "the Sun," in marriage.

This marriage occurred in 1815, and was probably the first marriage to be formally celebrated according to the Catholic rites in the territory out of which Nebraska was afterwards carved. The couple had five children, but Henry and Logan were the ones who became famous in the history of the West.

When ten years old the boys were sent to Father de Smet's Indian school, at a point where Kansas City now stands. They were educated there for several years. Finally Henry Fontenelle fought a desperate duel with another student, knives being the weapons, and, through fear, ran away, and, after making his way with roving bands of Indians, went back to Bellevue and started life as a trapper.

Here he met Stephen Decatur, that extraordinary character who followed the Lewis and Clark expedition from civilization and never returned.

Decatur had been educated for the priesthood, and was a remarkable linguist. Between these two men a close friendship sprang up, and Decatur taught the young half-breed Latin and Greek so thoroughly that to the day of his death Henry Fontenelle could recite chapters of Virgil, Livy, Cicero, Ovid, and Cæsar by the hour. Professors of languages in later years who met Henry Fontenelle declared his intoning was absolutely perfect, and his conversation in Latin and Greek the marvel of the occasion.

Stephen Decatur represented the Post Trading Company, and Henry Fontenelle represented the Indians in all their trading. Both men became independently rich. These two men, with old Peter A. Sarpy, were powers through the Northwest in those days, and kept the Indians in check when all the armies of the world could not have done as much. It is to their credit that the Omahas, a fierce and numerous tribe, never lifted their hands against the whites. The Omahas maintained their superiority at that time by forcing all neighboring tribes to do their trading through them with the whites, and the Omahas saw to it that their hereditary foes were not well supplied with rifles and powder.

At the home of the Rev. George Allis, Henry Fontenelle, in 1840, met and married a beautiful Indian maiden, Emily Whiteman, the sister of the chief of the Pawnees, a very aristocratic Indian family, commonly said to be descendants of the Aztecs. This branch of the Pawnees was of most noble bearing, and well educated by the Catholic fathers, who preceded the trappers to the Upper Missouri.

Shortly after the marriage of Henry Fontenelle occurred the tragic death of his brother, Logan, chief of all the Omahas. He lost his life in battle with the Sioux, and to this day there is a tradition among the old men of the Omahas that their white chief killed twenty Sioux before he fell. Logan was leading the annual buffalo hunt of his tribe at a point said by the old men of the tribe to have been about where Fremont now stands.

The Sioux came down in force on the Omahas, and many fierce battles occurred, in which many were killed on both sides; but the Sioux were superb fighters, and eventually whipped the Omahas and cut off a small band in which was Chief Logan. He was never seen alive afterward, but his body was brought to Henry Fontenelle, sewed up in ten buffalo robes, prepared for burial.

J. Sterling Morton said of Henry Fontenelle at one time that he was one of the most wonderful men he had ever seen, and was born to command.

Henry Fontenelle was guardian for two of his young nieces, Josephine and Mary Fontenelle. One of these—I think Mary—was the daughter of Logan, and a princess of the blood by right of succession. She was also the great great niece of Kit Carson, the celebrated trapper and scout. Mary held the position of maid of all work at the Agency Home; a bright, intelligent girl, who with her cousin, Josephine, was educated at Elizabeth, New Jersey. A picture of Mary, bearing a water-pail, can be seen in the cut in FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER of Sixth month 10, which represents the rear portion of the house, with my father (Dr. Edward Painter), mother, and myself, including several of our "wards," and a little half-breed maid, in our employ.

Fontenelle was very ambitious for his nieces to be united to white men, and did everything in his power to accomplish his wish, compelling them many times to "keep company" with men whom they hated with the intensity of their nature. They confided to me the fact that their hearts were already given to young braves of their tribe, to whom they were eventually married in the school-house on the Reservation.

The weddings were unique, and Mary's, which occurred first—with William Tyndal as groom—was arranged at the Agency Home. The bridesmaids and groomsmen were chosen; they rehearsed in the usual order, the bride appropriately dressed; and all assembled, and at the ringing of the bell on the school-house, stepped into a big farm wagon and proceeded to where were in waiting the chiefs, blanketed Indians, and most of the white employes, eager to witness the first marriage ever conducted in their midst, after the manner of Friends.

My father, having procured authority, directed them to repeat after him the simple words which bind man and woman in holy matrimony without the aid of priest or bishop, and it was very impressive. The ceremony was interpreted to the Indians, who responded with an emphatic grunt of approval.

Josephine's love did not run so placidly. She came one day to tell me of her trouble. I saw a glitter in her Indian eye—she was proud and vengeful. The chosen of her heart was, as she expressed it, "giving bread and meat to another maiden;" she could not endure such a thing, and if it continued she would "give him a wound which he would carry to the grave. Would I not see the young brave and talk to him?" So I exacted a promise from Thomas McCauley,—I wish I could recall his euphonious Indian name,—that he would give no more bread or meat to the little squaw, and one day, soon after, Josephine came with a milder look in her eye to ask if she also could have a wedding, after the same fashion, which took place soon after.

Judge of my surprise when, a year or more later I chanced to turn my pony's head towards her tepee in the camp, I saw the handsome young woman, educated and somewhat refined, clothed, not in the badge of her enlightenment, but in that of the veritable squaw, and strapped to her back and wrapped by a blanket, was her little pappoose, all unconscious of its mother, "looking backward."

EMILIE PAINTER JACKSON.

Detroit, Seventh month 22, 1899.

DANGERS OF CULTURE.

From "What is Worth While," by Anna Robertson Brown.

LET us lay hold of common duties and relations. Let us lay hold of the tenderness that belongs to them. Shall we miss all the Divine sweetness of life in order to have a career? Shall we shed home, family, relatives, and domestic duties, in order to learn Sanskrit, ethnology, philology? Not all college-bred women think how that sounds when, led by no pressure of bread-winning which impels them to seek higher advantages, but simply by an absorbing ambition, they leave their father or mother, or both, in a lonely home. Let us consider life at all points before we rush into a new phase of it, from which, once in, we may not soon withdraw.

This is the great danger, and a grave one it is, that is apt, at some time or other, to confront us all—the danger of substituting some intellectual ambition for the ordinary human affections. I do not know how to speak strongly enough on this subject, and yet gently enough. It is on my heart night and day, as I consider our common problem. Ambition is, in many ways, the most deadly foe we have—the most deadly foe to our character, I mean. Little by little that intellectual ambition will draw us away if we are not careful, from our true place in life, and will make cold, unloved, and unhelpful women of us, instead of the joyous, affectionate, and unselfish women we might have been. We need not try to annihilate ambition, but let us keep it in bounds; let us see to it that it holds a just proportion in our lives. We need not let our talents lie idle, nor neglect to make the most of them; there is a place and a grand work for them all; but let us keep their development forever subordinate to simple human duties, usually at home. Very few lives are free—free to go and come, travel, read, study, write, think, paint, sing, at will. In the lives of most women these gifts are an aside in life, as it were, an underbreath. Most of us are beset with loving calls of toil, care, responsibility, and quiet duties, which we must recognize, heed, obey.

We must love our mothers more than Greek dialects. If the instinct of daughter, sister, wife, or mother dies out of a college-bred woman, even in the course of a most brilliant career otherwise, the world will forget to love her; it will scorn her, and justly. If she does not make her surroundings home-like wherever she is, whether she be teacher, artist, musician, doctor, writer, daughter at home, or a mother in her household, and if she herself is not cheery and loving, dainty in dress, gentle in manner, and beautiful in soul as every true woman ought to be, the world will feel that the one thing needful is lacking, vivid, tender womanliness, for which no knowledge of asymptotes or linguistics can ever compensate. It is better for a woman to fill a simple human part lovingly, better for her to be sympathetic in trouble and to whisper a comforting message into but one grieving ear, than that she should make a path to Egypt and lecture to thousands on ancient Thebes.

PROGRESS AT THE HAGUE.

Public Ledger.

THE Arbitration Committee of the International Peace Conference has adopted as a whole the arbitration scheme submitted to it, and there seems now no doubt that the comprehensive provisions for mediation and arbitration which have been elaborated with great care will be adopted with practical unanimity before the Congress adjourns. The project includes a permanent court of arbitration accessible at all times, the agreement by the signatory Powers to accept mediation in case of dispute and the methods to be followed in offering mediation.

The signatory Powers agree to apply to the good offices of other Powers before taking arms; they recommend that disinterested Powers shall offer spontaneously their good offices in case of a quarrel; they agree that such intervention shall not be considered as an unfriendly act; they further recommend that quarreling States should each choose two mediation Powers to prevent rupture of friendly relations during the mediating period, which is not to exceed thirty days, and that there shall be no direct intercourse between the disputing States on the subject of the quarrel, which will be left to the consideration of the mediators. There are provisions for the institution of international committees of inquiry to determine matters of fact where the parties cannot agree, and the signatories agree that in all questions of judicial bearing, "especially as regards the meaning or application of international treaties, arbitration is acknowledged to be the most efficient and equitable method of settling differences."

The work of the Peace Conference does not result in the adoption of any imperative rule which will absolutely prevent war when nations are bent upon bloodshed in order to further some unjust or unreasonable aim. Many persons who expected some such impossible outcome of the Conference will be disappointed, and will pronounce the meeting a failure. The Conference, in fact, can do little more than make recommendations in the shape of a scheme of arbitration and mediation, which the Powers, by the assent of their representatives, accept as reasonable and just.

Under the stress of ambition or greed, or when inflamed with passion, any Power may feel inclined to ignore the Court of Arbitration and repel the mediators, but the mediation is likely to be offered, the merits of the case will be set before the world, and the recalcitrant nation which perseveres in an unjust cause and in defiance of the civilized Powers, will proceed as a pariah and an outcast among nations. The enlightened public opinion of the world is becoming a more potent influence year by year, and even to-day there is no nation which would not rather embark on a war with its approval than with its condemnation. The arbitration scheme is particularly happy in its method recommended to secure mediation. The delay, the debate, the negotiation will give such pause to any controversy as will clear up misunderstandings, let passion cool, and bring to bear upon the controversy all that peaceful intervention can do. John Fiske, the historian, has said that the——"permanent peace of the world can be secured only through the gradual concentration of the preponderant military strength into the hands of the most pacific communities."

In the present instant we see the most powerful military Powers making every possible effort to secure and maintain peace, and the results of their work are beneficent now, and give hopes of more far-reaching influence and potency in the future.

Courtesy of Speech.

Ladies' Home Journal.

UPON all those who are ambitious to make the world happier and better rests the obligation of drilling the tongue into lustrous kindness, purity, and refinement. Not by spasmodic efforts, not with occasional hints and words of good cheer are men to use the tongue in the interest of happiness. The daily drill of the tongue as an instrument of happiness and influence is to enter into the fundamental conception of living. Nor is this law binding only upon those happy persons who are said to be good entertainers. Some there are who are so fortunately organized that they exhale benefactions upon any company into which they enter. Unconsciously, and without any set purpose, they oil the bearings of life, lessen friction, provoke laughter and good cheer, as naturally as flowers that do not struggle to throw off sweetness, as the cedar wood that without thinking, gives off fragrance. But the law of happiness-making is not confined to the few gifted individuals. It is binding upon all of every rank, station, and temperament.

On high festal days in Athens, when processions formed at stated intervals, in the processions marched men with instruments of music, and also incense-bearers. When one group of musicians had marched by and the sound of music was dying out of the air, another group took up the sweet strain. When distance had removed far the incense-bearers, another group came on to fill the air with clouds of smoke from the sweet aromatic shrubs. Too oft our world marches forward to the sound of sad notes and requiems. Happy are those whose sweet and gentle speech fills the common life with sweetness and light as did the ancient ministers of joy and music. For their wholesome tongues are indeed "trees of life" and their words "like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

A Desert Simoon.

Atlantic Monthly.

In agony the camels stumble on, beat at the dense, hot wall. Desperately the coolies hide their faces in the hot, swaying hunches before them; but through their stupor there beats a wave of consciousness. A shudder brings them to a knowledge of a something awful. Through the sun-steeped, sun-bleached minds there cuts a keener stab. They are awake to what?

Into the coarse camel hair they dig their fists; tighter they press to the living things beneath them; they look not to one another; words they have not. In the presence of this heat they dare not breathe. Convulsively they cling to the stumbling beasts; and in low, dry sobs the anguish of body breaks forth. Between the two, the brute and man, there strikes a flash of mutual pain and torment. An instant, and down the camel line there breaks the brutes' shrill, soul-like cry. In it they voice their all, the pent-up spirit of the bitter, yellow beasts, burdened and tortured for life. In it comes a question for the shrinking wretches lying on their humps. The bitter sounds fall on the parched, tense air and die away.

Far and away comes a gasp—a hot, vicious pant. Again it comes—a breath of fire that touched and is gone. The great line halts as one. A blank, dead moment; in it the bosom of the desert heaves, and a breath rolls towards the waiting line. With broken moans the creatures bend their knees and wait the coming of the storm. Another scorching breath—a timeless wait.

Far to the east it starts, across the sands it whirls in circling hoops that form at last a wall. On it curls, swiftly, silently; with a hot, fierce lurch it falls upon the crouching backs, stinging with fangs of fire, pelting, blinding the gasping, panting creatures; with its dry lash whipping out the lives of men and beasts. Faster, thicker, hotter fall the sands, crushing and burying with a merciless weight,—an ocean of burning fire, pouring wrath and strength upon these wretches as it hurls its mad force across the desert. The billows toss and heave, and break at last to sweep on,—on for other prey.

Salvation Through Whittier's Poems.

THE remarkable success of the late Ellen C. Johnson, the head of the Massachusetts Reformatory for women; and the methods by which she attained her success; are illustrated by an instance mentioned in Harper's Bazar, where, by appealing to her higher feelings, she was able to win the affection of a girl who had been sentenced to the reformatory, and who, even there, had proved incorrigible. Mrs. Johnson sent for her, and, all other means failing, gave her a book of Whittier's poems opened at "The Eternal Goodness," and told her to go to her room and read it. The girl was struck by the beauty of the verse, and memorized the entire poem. Her character changed from that time, and when she left the reformatory she told Mrs. Johnson that Whittier's poem had been her salvation. Later, Mrs. Johnson told the poet of the instance. "Thy heart must have been filled with love for that poor woman," he said with moist eyes. At a time when the antiquated and often inhuman methods employed in many State institutions are being brought to light, the remarkable success of the Massachusetts Reformatory, and the story of such steps by which its reform was accomplished, can scarcely fail to convince the most sceptical that a little kindness and humanity go further than any amount of corporal punishment in even the most desperate cases.

Golf Raising the Prices of Land.

THE increased popularity of golf in England is proving a god-send to the farmers and land-holders in the near vicinity of the larger towns. In his London letter in the current number of Harper's Weekly, Arnold White states that in many cases fabulous prices have been paid for club grounds, and that lands which had hitherto been considered worthless for agricultural purposes have acquired a particular value, and are being sold or leased for sums of which their owners scarcely dreamed before the general introduction of the game. A similar case is recalled when the owners of the barren moors of Scotland first began to obtain large sums for the shooting privileges over country which were regarded as utterly valueless even for grazing purposes.

CURRENT EVENTS.

IN closing the session of The Hague Conference, on the 29th ult., Baron de Staal delivered the farewell address, thanking the representatives of foreign States. He said the work accomplished, while not so complete as might be desired, was sincere, wise, and practical. The great principles of the sovereignty of individual States and international solidarity, apparently so opposing, had been reconciled by what they had accomplished. He affirmed that in time to come the institutions which had their origin in the need of concord would be the dominating influence, and that thus the work of the Conference was truly meritorious.

Minister Estournelles and Dr. Beaufort followed, the latter saying that, if the Conference had not realized utopian dreams, nevertheless it had disproved pessimistic forebodings, and the moral effect would more and more influence public opinion and aid Governments to solve the question of the limitation of armaments, which still remain a source of grave consideration for statesmen of all countries.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury has rendered a decision in the ritual cases which he and the Archbishop of York heard in May. The Archbishops declare that, while far from saying the use of incense and the carrying of lights in procession are unsuitable or undesirable accompaniments of divine worship, they are obliged, in accordance with the Prayer Book, to come to the conclusion that these adjuncts are neither enjoined nor permitted by the law of the Church of England. Therefore, the Archbishops add, though they may be used to sweeten a church or for purely lighting purposes, they urge all the clergy, for the sake of the peace of the Church, to discontinue their use as part of the services.

THE yellow fever outbreak at Hampton, Virginia, appears to have been confined thus far to the Soldiers' Home. According to the last report there were forty cases and eight deaths. A wholesale exodus from the adjacent towns has begun, and several thousand persons left by train for Richmond and points North.

In consequence of the yellow fever outbreak at Hampton, the garrison now at Fort Monroe is to be removed to some point on the northern coast. The hospital at the fort will be turned over to the Marine Hospital Service in case of necessity.

THE first bale of the new crop of Texan cotton, grown at Sinton, Patricia county, and shipped by Governor Sayers, was sold at public auction in front of the Cotton Exchange, New York, on the 31st ult., for the benefit of the sufferers by the floods in Texas. It brought $2,000. The bale was redonated to the Exchange, and will be sent to the Boston Exchange, to be auctioned off in like manner. The bale will then be shipped to some other point, and will realize a good round sum for the sufferers. The market price of the bale is $35.

DR. DANIEL G. BRINTON, the well known ethnologist and archæologist, died on the 31st ult., at Atlantic City, where he had gone some time ago in the hope of restoring his health, which had been very poor. He received no benefit from the change, and gradually grew weaker until death came. He leaves a widow and two children.

THE Dominican Republic is in a state of revolt. Ulysses Heureaux, the President, was assassinated on the 26th ult. The situation is critical. An outbreak is momentarily expected. The friends of the government are under arms and ready for action to protect property and preserve the peace.

ELIHU ROOT assumed charge of the War Department on the 1st inst., and General Alger left Washington on the same day. The new Secretary is expected to make radical improvements in the Department.

THE crisis in South Africa appears less acute, the news from Pretoria indicating that the political atmosphere there is clearing. Agitation of the subject has been temporarily stopped by the Opposition in the British Union, and an expression of sympathy with the Imperial Government's policy has been received from the Canadian Parliament.

It is reported from Montreal that the striking section men on the Grand Trunk Railroad, who recently returned to work on the understanding that the company would consider their claims for advanced wages, have been notified of an advance of 10 cents a day in wages. The advance affects 1,500 men.

In an interview at Ottawa the Canadian Premier expressed the opinion that the issues arising out of the boundary line in Alaska may be amicably adjusted by means of arbitration. He disclaimed any thought of possible war between the United States and Great Britain over the dispute.

THE Tractor Truck Company has just been incorporated at Trenton, N. J., with a capital stock of $2,500,000, to operate automobiles for the carrying of passengers, freight, and express matter.

SIR JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE, British Ambassador to the United States, has been elevated to the peerage in recognition of his services as head of the British delegation to The Hague Peace Conference.

THE police of Philadelphia are arresting those who beat drums at Salvation Army meetings on the city streets.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

THE building of Bucks Quarterly Meeting Friends' Home, Newtown, Pa., is progressing very favorably; the stone walls are up, and rafters raised, and the board roof is on ready for the felt and slate.

—At least five men prominent in politics to-day are direct descendants from signers of the Declaration of Independence: Governor Wolcott of Massachusetts, from Oliver Wolcott; Senator Hoar, from Roger Sherman; Robert Treat Paine, from Robert Treat Paine, his namesake; Charles Francis Adams, from John Adams; and T. Jefferson Coolidge, from Thomas Jefferson.

—Calvin Levi Sibley, a seaman of Norfolk, Va., has been advised that he has fallen heir to a fortune amounting to $1,500,000. The money was accumulated by Richard Sibley, Calvin Sibley's paternal uncle, who amassed a considerable part of it in Portsmouth, Va., which place he left twenty years ago. He died in October last, since which time attorneys have been seeking his heirs.

—The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has decided to establish a pension fund for the benefit of its superannuated employes. It is understood that 70 years has been fixed as the age for compulsory retirement, and that employes that have been in the service thirty years, but have not attained that age, will be entitled to the benefit of the fund.

—Articles of incorporation of the St. Louis, Springfield, and Vincennes Railroad Company state that it is intended to construct and operate a railroad from Vincennes, Ind., to St. Louis, and from Shawneetown, Ill., to Springfield, Ill. The contemplated line parallels the Baltimore and Ohio South-western.

—A negro community in Alabama, containing 400 negroes and but two white persons, is about to be incorporated. The negroes propose to have a strict negro town and negro government. All the officials will be negroes. It will doubtless be the only municipality of the kind in the United States.

—A first mortgage has been given by the American Writing Paper Company to the Old Colony Trust Company as trustees for the bondholders. The mortgage is for $17,000,000, and internal revenue stamps to the amount of $8,500 have been placed upon it and canceled.

—A collection of books, manuscripts, engravings, etc., valued at $500,000, has been offered the Public Library at Sydney, New South Wales, by D. S. Mitchell. A new public library is to be built as a result of this generous gift.

—The Pope, in a letter to Queen Wilhelmina, of Holland, expresses the hope that he will soon be able to establish harmony between the two South American nations which have submitted their dispute for his arbitration.

—Mayor Lacoste has determined that gambling in Havana must stop. Hitherto only Chinese gambling houses have been raided by the police, but now the war has extended to aristocratic gambling circles.

—It is announced that copper ore of almost incredible extent and richness has been found in the Parry Sound district, within about seven hours' railway distance of Toronto, Canada.

NOTICES.

* * Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting will be held on Third-day, Eighth month 8, at 10 o'clock a. m., at Valley meeting-house.

Special arrangements have been made to convey Friends to and from Maple Station on Chester Valley Railroad, a short distance from the meeting-house.

Members of the Select Meeting can take the 1.36 p. m. train from Twelfth and Market streets, on Second-day (the 7th), for Maple Station (without changing cars at Bridgeport), where Friends will meet them.

Friends residing at Germantown can take the 12.55 p. m. train from Main Street Station, making connection with the 1.36 train from Twelfth and Market streets, at Columbia Avenue Station.

Tickets are good for returning to the city on Second-day evening, for those who will take the 7.32 train from Port Kennedy.

On Third-day a train will leave Chelton Avenue Station, Germantown, at 6.56 a. m., making connection at Columbia Avenue with the train leaving Twelfth and Market streets at 7.21 a. m.

Tickets good for going on Second- and Third-days can be purchased at Twelfth and Market streets, Spring Garden street, Columbia Avenue, and Chelton Avenue Station. Germantown; and returning to Twelfth and Market streets, also to Germantown (by exchanging cars at Columbia Avenue Station). These will be issued at 60 cents the round trip.

The return train, Third-day, will leave Maple Station at 4.26 p. m. Ask for special tickets to Friends' Quarterly Meeting at Maple.

It is very desirable, and the committee hope, that all Friends who possibly can will avail themselves of the liberal arrangements thus secured,—otherwise such favorable conditions may be withdrawn.

CHAS. E. THOMAS,
EDMUND WEBSTER,
JOSEPH W. THOMAS, } Committee.

* * It is desired that all who anticipate attending Indiana Yearly Meeting write immediately, telling whether they are coming by private or public conveyance. Homes will be provided for all.

JOHN L. THOMAS,
Pendleton, Ind.

* * Change in time and place of holding Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends.

It will be now held on Second day before last First-day in Eighth month 1899, at 10 a. m., at Fall Creek (Pendleton), Ind.; Richmond, Ind., in 1900; Waynesville, Ohio, 1901; meeting of Ministers and Elders, Seventh-day previous at 3 p. m.; youths' meeting, First-day, at 3 p. m. The Yearly Meeting was formerly held on Second-day following the last Seventh-day in Ninth month.

* * A Circular Meeting under the care of a committee of Concord Quarterly Meeting will be held at Newtown, Pa., on First-day, Eighth month 6, 1899, at 3 o'clock p. m.

MARY P. HARVEY, Clerk.

* * Friends wishing to attend Quarterly Meeting at Gwynedd, Eighth month 10, will be met at Gwynedd Station, train leaving Reading Terminal at 8 a. m.

* * Quarterly Meetings during Eighth month will occur as follows:

8. Philadelphia, at Valley.
10. Abington, at Gwynedd.
21. Indiana Yearly Meeting, at Pendleton.
28. Ohio Yearly Meeting, at Salem.
29. Burlington, at Mt. Holly, N. J.
30. Southern, at Easton, Md.
31. Bucks, at Falls, Pa.

* * Circular Meetings will be held at the following places:

Mickleton, Eighth month 6, at 10 a. m.
Sarah C. Wilson, Waddington B. Ridgway, Anna P. Ridgway, John Bishop, Sarah J. Powell, Priscilla M. Lippincott, David B. Bullock, Samuel Powell, Virginia B. Test, Charlotte S. Bishop, William P. Test, Committee.
Cape May, Eighth month 20, at 11 a. m. (Ocean View Station.) Ocean City the same evening. Elizabeth D. Lippincott, Henry Lippincott, Rachel M. Lippincott, John Heritage,

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, EIGHTH MONTH 12, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 32.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XXXII.

FOR their learning be liberal. Spare no cost ; for by such parsimony all is lost that is saved : but let it be useful knowledge, such as is consistent with truth and godliness.

WILLIAM PENN.

—
From his Letter to his Wife and Children.

BOOKS AND FREEDOM.

WE must be free or die, who speak the tongue
That Shakespeare speaks ; the faith and morals hold
Which Milton held. In everything we are sprung
Of earth's first blood, have titles manifold.

Dreams, books, are each a world ; and books, we know,

Are a substantial world, both pure and good :
Round these, with tendrils strong as flesh and blood,
Our pastime and our happiness will grow,
—Wordsworth.

—
For Friends' Intelligencer.

THE GUARDED EDUCATION.

To my mind the most notable element in American progress during the last quarter century has been the deepened and widened interest in education. Schools and colleges have multiplied ; they have expanded their facilities until they have almost lost resemblance to the modest institutions of our fathers ; they have increased their corps of professors and instructors until, in many institutions, a single department will be served by a greater number of men than would, not long ago, have sufficed for the entire faculty ; and still the stream of students grows.

The growth of institutions of learning is to be accounted for, in part, by the wisdom with which their managers have revised the college curriculum, and connected the work of the lecture-room and the laboratory with the manifest needs of life. Modern study of biology, physics, or chemistry, of history or economics, is very different from anything that was offered to the undergraduates of our fathers' college days.

But this broadening of educational aims and educational processes is not solely a cause ; it is largely itself the result of the great force which has made possible, nay, has necessitated, the expansion of educational institutions ; I mean the increasing appreciation in America of the value of the trained and cultivated mind. Our history has been marked in every passing year by some new triumph over nature, some new application of previously wasted or undiscovered energy to the needs of man, and each new step has made life less simple, made men more dependent upon their fellows, and required of him who would achieve any considerable degree, either of success for himself or of service to others, a greater extent and variety of knowledge, a wider acquaintance with the affairs of men, a new sort of alertness to changing conditions, and new methods of accomplishing results.

One of the great causes of the still-growing interest in education is that men see more clearly and more generally than ever before that for the solution of the increasingly complicated problems of life the most adequate equipment is mental power, developed to the full, and trained to bring to the exigencies of the present moment resources stored up from labors in widely distant fields.

But there is another cause : I like to think it the more effective. I mean the modern interest in things more important than the problems of self-interest. Modern interest centres more and more in questions of social, of ethical bearing. Political economy is no longer the dismal science of selfishness ; the student of history is no longer satisfied to know what kings waged war,—he must know how their people lived, and how they were governed, and how in the slow processes of time our modern civilization has been developed.

With this altruistic tendency there is joined, partly as cause, partly as effect, a higher appreciation of culture, not only for what it will enable its possessor to do, but still more for what it will enable him to be. This is the aspect of the subject which should most nearly concern us, for although the Society of Friends has always maintained a lofty standard of action, and while success in dealing with practical affairs may almost be said to be characteristic of the Quaker, our testimony has always been that the outward action must spring from inward motive, that well-doing is to be the immediate result of well-being,—that although what a man does is the test by which his fellows must know him, yet what he does is necessarily determined by what he is.

It was this thought which governed our fathers when they provided for what they called a " guarded " education. I believe it has largely governed the action of the managers of Friends' schools at all times, and my observation of the results of training in these schools and colleges convinces me of its practical value and importance. It does not mean that any doors of knowledge are to be closed, that instruction shall be on narrow lines, that sectarianism shall be taught, but simply that the work of intellectual training shall be carried on with a constant recognition that the life is more than meat, the body more than raiment. It would take care that the end be not forgotten, in anxiety about the means ; that the great purpose of life, namely, growth towards good, shall not be thwarted by a distorted view of some single field of knowledge, but that every new acquisition shall make life more earnest, more hopeful, more filled with sweet and serious meaning.

The world is coming to our view. Our greatest educational thinkers—Stanley Hall, W. T. Harris, E. E. White—are insisting that it is the ethical side of education which is most worth consideration; that it is in the promotion of sound character that intellectual culture is to be of the highest service. It is this consideration which has justified the Society of Friends in ranking education as one of its religious concerns, and which has enabled our Friends' schools and colleges to minister to the culture of heart as well as of mind; it is because this consideration is still foremost in the minds of their managers that these institutions continue to have a reason for being, that they have a just claim upon the confidence of the community, and even a greater work in the future than they have had in the past.

WM. W. BIRDSALL.

Swarthmore, Eighth month 5, 1899.

HOW TO EDUCATE THE FEELINGS AND EMOTIONS THROUGH THE INTELLECT AND THE WILL.¹

I HAVE taken for the topic of this closing lecture, "How to Educate the Feelings and the Emotions through the Intellect and the Will."

Inasmuch as the feelings and emotions constitute the heart, my question is, in short, How to educate the heart? Over and over again we have heard the maxim repeated to us teachers, "Educate the heart, educate the heart." Many speeches made by good people who are not engaged in the business of teaching urge upon us the education of the heart, and guard us against the danger of educating the intellect without educating the heart. The maxim is urged upon us as if it were perfectly easy to follow its advice. We all know that the intellect can be educated by exercising it. It is assumed that we can educate the heart by exercising it. For how else could it be done? But I have never known this suggestion to bear any fruit. If exercising the heart does not educate it, then the advice of the would-be moral reformers is not sufficiently well defined for teachers to follow. For the education of the intellect is accomplished by exercising the intellect which the pupil already possesses. If we attempt to carry out the analogy we should say that the heart must be educated by exercising the feelings and emotions which the pupil already possesses.

Here we come upon an insight into the question, With what feelings and emotions does the pupil begin? The answer must be that he begins with a stock of inherited proclivities and propensities. These at first constitute his heart. But the child inherits not only the good proclivities and propensities of his long line of ancestors, he inherits also some bad feelings and emotions. His heart is not altogether a good heart; it overflows not only in goodness but also at times more or less frequent, in selfishness, rancor, bitterness, cowardliness; in short, in excesses and defects of various kinds. Now it is evident that if it be true that the exercise of a good heart educates it in goodness, the exercise of a bad heart will increase and fix it in evil. For as the child inherits evil as well as good the simple exercise of his heart will not improve him but will keep him in the same state of feelings and emotions as before, perhaps with an additional tendency to fix the bad and make it more difficult to correct it.

With this view of the case we see that the problem of educating the heart is not a simple one. It will not be possible to cultivate the heart directly because the exercise of the heart without the intellect and the will is simply the indulgence of the emotions.

When I first began to see the conditions of this problem—it was in 1884 at the Madison meeting of the National Educational Association—I saw that it was necessary to educate the heart through the intellect and the will, both of which we know may be developed by direct means.

The heart is the undeveloped mind; when it develops, it grows in two directions, on the one hand towards the intellect, and on the other hand towards the will. The emotions and passions grow towards the will and the sensations grow towards the intellect. The acorn contains the whole oak, but as yet undeveloped. When the oak grows it sends a root downwards into the ground, and a stalk upwards into the light to become the trunk of the tree with its branches. The heart has not yet polarized into intellect and will.

On the other hand, when we get a new view in the intellect and express it often and in a great variety of ways, the view gradually becomes our form of seeing. It becomes immediate and thus becomes a feeling. We apply our view more and more instinctively with less and less reflection, and finally we have it ready on every new occasion almost or quite in the form of a feeling or sensation. Again, when we adopt a new mode of action by our will, at first every repetition of it requires careful effort. It becomes easier and easier with practice, and by and by a habit or second nature. We then act spontaneously.

In short, both the intellect and the will can be changed in views and practices, and the result is a second nature, or what is called a new heart. The heart is regenerated.

Now let us follow out this analysis by seeing the effect of educating either the will or the intellect separately. Let us suppose that the pupil who comes to our school for the first time is taken in the act of fighting with a fellow pupil. We remonstrate with him and he informs us that his parents have taught him to "give others as good as they send." He believes in returning evil for evil. We all know that this principle causes us to desire to give others a little more evil every time than they have given us. The result of the adoption of this principle is that a man goes about the world with a chip on his shoulder. As a teacher we commence at once the education of the pupil's will. We inform him that any further action upon the basis of his principle must cease. If he fights he will be punished in this school. By direct influence of authority and penalty the teacher may secure a change of the pupil's will ; namely, he may learn to inhibit his tendency to fight. He will eventually acquire the habit of holding himself back from his tendency to fight. Perhaps the pupil will form a habit of this kind which will last him through life. But if his intellect remains unconvinced and he still thinks that it is the best theory to return to others the evil which they do to us, he will gradually recover his old habit of fighting and quarreling when he comes to deal with the world. The education of the heart had proceeded only half way. The will had been educated into a habit, but the intellect was left with a theory which opposed the habit formed by the will. A contradiction has been left in the mind of the child ; he has a habit of acting which does not agree with his intellectual conviction.

¹ Closing Lecture at the School of Psychology, Chicago Kindergarten College, by Dr. Wm. T. Harris, National Commissioner of Education.

Now to become complete the intellect should be educated into the same view that the will has already been educated into by the direct authority of the teacher. The teacher shows the child the true theory on which the civilization of the world is founded. He shows that the individual is related to his community as giver and receiver. He gives a small gift, namely, the products of his industry, to the world, and he receives an infinite gift by having a share in the productions of all the industries of the world, its food, clothing, and shelter, made for him by others, and the science produced by observations and reflections of his fellow men, past and present, to say nothing of the literature and art and means of amusement and spiritual growth. In short, he is taught the doctrine of the dependence of the individual upon the social whole for all that makes life worth living. This properly cannot be taught to the pupil by sentimental moralizing ; it must be taught and should be taught by all teachers in teaching the branches of the course of study, and in creating a public opinion in the school which makes the child almost or quite self-governed. Supposing that the intellectual view of the child is changed and he sees by examples of the greatest men that self-sacrifice is essential to success, and he sees that everybody gains good by self-sacrifice and fortitude under persecution, then gradually his intellectual view changes and he discovers the mistake of his former moral principle. He adopts a new one : Do good to those who do evil to you. Now his new principle is in accordance with the habit which the teacher's authority has already imposed upon his will. He is obliged to practice forbearance towards others who attack him, and he now does this in the full conviction that it is right. Speedily it becomes a habit—a second nature—and he finds that his immediate impulse on a given occasion is to act with a good heart and show benevolence and altruistic feelings and emotions. Now he has arrived at regeneration. Through a change of principles adopted by his intellect and a change of habits adopted by his will, he has attained a good heart.

The important thing to see is not only that the heart expresses itself in intellectual ideas and deeds of the will—that is to say, in thoughts and volitions,—but also that thoughts and volitions, the intellect and the will, become, through habit, feelings and emotions again. When a new thought or view becomes familiar it is used as a rule of action more and more unconsciously. Finally it becomes heart and is acted upon as if it were a mere impulse. So the will does deeds until its action becomes habitual and spontaneous ; then one acts from the heart. The school insists first on the right practice ; it says, " Never mind your opinion as to what is right or wrong, you must act and forbear to act in accordance with the rule established here as necessary for the existence of the school." The school is an institution, and cannot exist except on condition that pupils coöperate both with each other and with the teacher. The first thing is to obey the rule of order and inhibit one's tendency to make discord. But the good school at once commences operation upon the intellect of the pupil in order to bring him into agreement with the higher purpose which makes the individual support the institution in which he is placed. A true view of the world, when it becomes a conviction, completes the education of the heart. Before the pupil had reached the true view he had obeyed only from external authority ; now he obeys from conviction and is free. This is regeneration.

This theoretic and practical explanation of the cultivation of the heart shows the great function performed by a view of the world. All teaching must presuppose a view of the world. The highest view of the world is that of altruism, the adoption of the spirit wherein each person endeavors to benefit all others, and willingly participates in the work of the world and shares its fruits.

From this point of view it will be seen that the governing of the will is a substantial good, even if it is accomplished through punishment. The community of the school cannot exist if the pupils are permitted to exercise their evil propensities without restraint.

Quarreling and fighting destroy the educational quality in the school discipline and interfere fatally with the intellectual instruction of the school. Corporal punishment stands at the bottom of the list of school incentives, but it is and must be the last resort in order to sustain authority. The progress of school methods has discontinued the use of corporal punishment and substituted far better methods of control. More insight into the significance of the studies pursued in school has given the teacher power to educate the pupil into the true view of the world. Correct discipline and correct instruction educate the heart and there is not, nor never has been, any other way of educating the heart.

WE should read newspapers as we would an encyclopædia, for the thing we want, not for what was intended for other people. We would not think of continuous reading in an encyclopædia.—A Newspaper Woman.

THERE is no finer chemistry than that by which the element of suffering is so compounded with spiritual forces that it issues to the world as gentleness and strength.—George S. Merriam.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL.

FRIENDS' CENTRAL SCHOOL.

THIS school, located at Race and Fifteenth streets, Philadelphia, is recognized as an institution in which a thorough business education may be obtained and good business habits formed. Many young men and women have gone forth from it, who to-day take high rank in the business and professional world.

Together with the training of the intellect and the business faculties, care is taken to lead the pupils into the knowledge that more valuable than all else, is the cultivation of the moral and spiritual nature which alone will produce the truest refinement, the kindest disposition, the noblest character.

This school was established more than half a century ago at Fifth and Cherry streets, and then as now consisted of separate departments for boys and girls. From the first the Girls' Department met with success, but there were seasons of depression in the Boys' Department, until in 1855 it was given in charge to Aaron B. Ivins, who had by years of good work in the public schools, proved his skill in the management and teaching of boys.

In 1875 Lydia Gillingham resigned her position as Principal of the Girls' Department and was succeeded by Annie Shoemaker, whose long and successful term of service as first assistant warranted the committee in making such appointment. In 1883 George L. Maris was appointed Principal of the Boys' Department in place of Aaron B. Ivins, resigned.

The school had now grown so large that additional room was provided. About the same time a new plan was formulated by the committee and a few members of the faculty, and three courses of study were prescribed, although even prior to this such a system was in operation in the Girls' Department, partly for the sake of college preparation, partly to introduce more culture study.

The need of better facilities and additional room being still felt, George L. Maris considered the subject of remodeling the building, and took some steps towards procuring funds for the purpose, but it was reserved to the indefatigable industry of his successor, William W. Birdsall, and of Annie Shoemaker, who coöperated in the work, to perfect the scheme and accomplish the design.

The new building contains, besides school and class-rooms, physical, chemical, and biological laboratories, and a well-equipped gymnasium. It is heated and ventilated by the most approved systems, and is supplied with drinking-water, which has been boiled and filtered under a steam pressure. In connection with the school building is a lunch-room, and in the recently-erected building of the Young Friends' Association, at Fifteenth and Cherry streets, is a dining-room, where warm dinners may be obtained. Here, too, is a library of well-assorted books, where the pupils may find reading matter suitable to their years and pertaining to their studies. Teachers constantly consult the reference books which this library contains, and the effect is apparent in almost every class.

Two years ago a change was made in the principalship of the Girls' Department, by the resignation of Annie Shoemaker, who had given to the position the devotion of twenty-two years. A scholarship established in her name, by her friends and former pupils, will ever testify to the gratitude and appreciation of those upon whose lives she exerted an important influence. She was succeeded by Anna Walter Speakman. Last year, by the calling of William W. Birdsall to the presidency of Swarthmore College, a change was effected in the Boys' Department, and Joseph S. Walton was made Principal.

During all the years of the school the increase in the teaching force has more than kept pace with the increase in the number of pupils, and much individual instruction is given. Especially is this the case in the Irregular Departments, where provision is made to give such assistance as will promote the pupil to regular standing.

A graduate course is provided whenever a desire is felt to go beyond the regular curriculum of the institution. This is not requisite for college preparation, as is evidenced by the high standing the pupils of Friends' Central School take in the college chosen.

GEORGE SCHOOL.

The spirit that actuated early Friends in establishing, in connection with nearly every meeting, a school for the guarded education of the young of the Society, resulted in the founding of Ackworth School in England, and Westtown Boarding School in America, for more advanced education than the local schools afforded. After the separation in 1827-8, members of our branch of Friends were cut off from the advantages afforded by the Westtown school, and suffered considerable loss therefrom. Many efforts were made to supply the deficiency with varying degrees of success. It was not until the large estate of John M. George was left to the Yearly Meeting, that it became possible fully to carry out the plan of establishing a school for the more advanced academic education of the children residing in the more sparsely settled neighborhoods of Friends.

George School opened its doors to students on the 6th of Eleventh month, 1893, with an attendance of about 120 boarding students; and the next year the capacity of the school was enlarged by the erection of a dormitory to accommodate a portion of the boys. In 1895 the gymnasium and the infirmary were built, thus completing the outfit for 150 boarding students. From the beginning, George School has stood for a guarded, practical education suited to the needs of the age.

While the building was in course of construction, members of the committee and the principal visited many of the best schools of the country, extending their researches through New England, the Middle, and some of the Western States. The result has been the introduction of well-equipped laboratories for the teaching of the sciences on the most approved plan, an extended course in Manual Training, and a method of elective studies in the higher classes, so that students may, under proper restrictions, pursue the studies best suited to their chosen vocations in life.

Though George School is not, in the strictest sense of the term, a college preparatory school, it offers all the advantages of such a course, and much more. All the branches usually pursued in a high school are taught, including mathematics, sciences, languages, and an unusually strong course in history, English composition, and literature. During the past year former students were pursuing higher courses at Cornell University, Swarthmore, Columbia University, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Purdue University, the University of Pennsylvania, and other higher institutions of learning. Many go directly to teaching, and a still larger number enter at once into business. It is gratifying to note the increased interest taken by many former students in the active concerns of their respective meetings.

SWARTHMORE PREPARATORY SCHOOL.

Some features are these:—A Friends' School, unsectarian in teaching, but with the quiet, unwavering persistence characteristic of the Society.

Proximity to Swarthmore College, furnishing an atmosphere of ambition and culture; also many material advantages and opportunities.

Access to the College library, museums, etc.

Teachers who teach with the soul as well as with the intellect.

Unsurpassed location and thorough healthfulness.

Cottage plan of separate buildings.

Coeducational, with the advantages of a home school.

Classes large enough for class spirit and interest, yet small enough to enable the teacher to reach each individual.

Its graduates are making excellent records in several colleges.

Pure water, pure air, good light, abundance of wholesome plain food.

Steady and persistent growth. The number enrolled this year is more than three times the number six years ago. The enrollment of new pupils this year is much greater than in any previous year—about 50 per cent.

Many of its students are relatives or friends of former pupils.

The general excellent character of its pupils insures associates who are a benefit to each other.

Athletic culture for both sexes,—different in character, under good control and direction,—conducted in the full belief that physical readiness and courage may be made to contribute to mental, moral, and spiritual readiness and courage.

Life of teachers and pupils intimately interwoven, yet maintaining firm discipline.

During the first year of the school, 1892–93, there were ten pupils whose homes were in Swarthmore; last year there were forty-one. This increase is the more noticeable when it is remembered that the public school has steadily and rapidly improved under the guidance of a board of directors of unusual ability.

Day pupils, 1892–93, 23; last year, 75. Total enrolment last year, 135.

Edson S. Harris, '98, won the Scholarship awarded by Swarthmore College to that member of the Freshman class passing the best examinations.

Erwin S. Cooley, '95, completed his course at Cornell University, one term ahead of his class.

MARTIN ACADEMY.

"Friends, from the character of their principles, are bound to stand for sound education and for the development of the whole man." They have since their existence regarded each and every member liable to be called to deliver his message from the Heavenly Father to his people. This being true, they have recognized, perhaps more than any other religious denomination, the necessity of mental training in order to be able to grasp the purport of the spiritual message.

Friends are, owing to their habits of industry, patience, love, and economy, particularly fitted as educators. We seldom hear of a Friends' school going down. People in general have great confidence in them, and are willing to place their children in them, remarking, "We feel safe; you never attempt to proselyte." Friends do not sufficiently recognize the influence they might exert were all their schools made capable of doing the work which stands ready for them to do.

The Friends of Kennett Monthly Meeting have their interest centered in Martin Academy, at Kennett Square, Pa. This was founded by the late Samuel Martin, in 1875, for the purpose of affording the children of Friends and others a thorough and guarded education at small cost.

Many young people have taken advantage of the opportunity thus offered, 35 having been thus far graduated from it.

Since its founding a number of principals have been in charge. The first, Dr. Franklin Taylor, cousin of Bayard Taylor, remained three years. Next came Arthur W. Potter, who did much to advance the interests of the school. It was he who gave it its present name in honor of the founder. In 1880 Lewis W. Brosius was called to the head of the institution, and remained for six years, doing most efficient work.

Lewis Ambler was principal from 1883 to 1888. 1888 and 1889 saw five different principals. The following autumn brought J. Henry Painter, who soon brought order out of chaos. After four years' work he resigned, and Allen Clement made a very successful principal for the following year.

Next came one Turner, who remained a year, and was followed by Miss Smith.

In 1896 the present administration began with but 53 pupils. The number has steadily increased until the past year it reached 107. The course of study has been made a good one, and a high grade of work is done.

During the past year a kindergarten has been established. The high standard of the school will be maintained during the coming year.

Martin Academy, being the only school of its kind in the valley between Oxford and Media, has a large field to gather from and great opportunity for growth. In order to grasp the opportunity at hand the present buildings must be increased so as to accommodate a greater number of pupils. A. B.

ABINGTON FRIENDS' SCHOOL.

It is the purpose of this school to furnish a guarded and thorough education for boys and girls. Since the school is under the care of Abington Monthly Meeting, the management conforms to that conservatism in control which in general characterizes the influence of Friends. The school building, which is comfortable and substantial, is located in the Cheltenham Hills, near Jenkintown, Pa., ten miles from Philadelphia. Electric cars pass within one-fourth of a mile of the school. The location is healthful and the building is equipped with modern systems of sanitation, heating, and lighting. The dormitories for boys and girls are in entirely separate wings of the building. The number of boarding students is limited to sixty, thirty of each sex. A ten-acre campus affords ample opportunity for proper exercise for the pupils, and the athletic teams are permitted to hold friendly competitions with teams from selected schools in the vicinity. The school has primary, intermediate, and high school departments. The work in each of these is thoroughly done under experienced teachers. The more advanced pupils are allowed some options in studies, but they are required to pursue the fundamental branches. The school library, composed of carefully-selected books, furnishes reading for those so inclined. Pupils are expected to conduct themselves as they would in a well-regulated home, and to this end proper regulations are enforced.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 34.—EIGHTH MONTH 20.

SAUL.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I have looked upon my people because their cry is come unto me.—I. Samuel, ix., 16.

Scripture Reading, I. Samuel, ix., 1-24.

WE need have little hesitation in accepting as vastly more probable the account of the selection of Saul for the kingship by Samuel's personal choice and anointment (I. Samuel, ix., 15; x., 8), rather than that which describes the casting of lots first among the tribes, then among the families of the selected tribe, and finally among the individuals of the selected family (I. Samuel, x., 17-24). For the latter method involved a knowledge and recognition of the kingship on the part of all the tribes; whereas we read (chapter 11) that Saul returned home to await an opportunity which should be his call to action. The call soon came as it comes to all who so await it. Those who expect to be called out of their quiet by thunder tones heard of all men, pointing to an unmistakable duty, will wait long. But they who resolve to act, and recognize that opportunities are God's commands; that the need for a man is His call for a man; who realize that it is not even given us always to be certain of our duties, but that we must sometimes act when in doubt and act as if we doubted not—these are the men for whom God finds great missions: these are the men in whom the God-spirit has command. Such a man was Saul in the strength of his untainted youth. He was destined indeed to fall a prey to the dark passions of envy and jealousy but for the time he was a man of instant courage, suited to his time. Soon came the need for a man. A certain trans-Jordanic city, Jabesh in Gilead, was threatened by the Ammonites and sent urgent messengers to their brother tribes for help. Many offered them tears and condolence; but when Saul heard their story he hewed his oxen in fragments and sent out to all the tribes the bloody reminder that a successful invader would not be satisfied with the spoil of a single city. "So shall it be done to the oxen of those who follow not the standard of Saul and Samuel." The striking deed and skillful suggestion had their due effect. The Israelites flocked to the relief of their brethren and the siege of Jabesh was raised.

The attack on the Ammonites did not necessarily imply revolt against the Philistines. The Hebrew subjects could hardly be denied the privilege of defending themselves against enemies from the desert. But the action which immediately followed left no doubt as to the intentions of the Israelites. By his bold stroke Saul had given himself such standing among his people that even those who had doubted, doubted no more, and he was promptly confirmed as king at Gilgal. Such selection of a king was equal to a declaration of independence, and it was quickly followed up by massacre of the Philistine garrison at Geba, a city near the home of Saul. The Philistines gathered promptly to put down the rebellion, and the Israelites, accustomed to subjection, scattered at once to the hills, leaving Saul with but a handful of men at his back. But in the course of a night's reconnaissance Jonathan succeeded in spreading a panic through the enemy's camp, which, as in the earlier instance of Gideon, was followed up with great slaughter. This was the beginning of a war which lasted throughout the reign of Saul and was only brought to an end by his successor. A great misfortune which met Saul at the very outset of his career was his estrangement from the prophet Samuel. We are left in some doubt as to the cause of it. In one account (I. Samuel, xiii., 7-14) we are told that it was because Saul, in his impatience to give battle to the Philistines, did not await the coming of the seer to offer sacrifice, but took on himself the priestly office. In another (I. Samuel xv., 10-31) it is stated that Samuel's indignation was aroused because Saul spared the king of the Amalekites and their flocks and herds, after victory, in spite of the fact that he had been commanded to destroy all of them. Neither of these reasons seems sufficient—since in both cases Saul showed due repentance for his disobedience—to account for Samuel's entire desertion of Saul. However that may be, the loss of Samuel's favor was a great blow to the hard-pressed king and may have been the cause of the deep melancholy which came to possess him. The growing favor of the people toward his armor-bearer, David, added jealousy and envy to his depression, which gradually grew until it verged closely on insanity. David was finally driven forth by the distrust and hatred of the king, and became leader of a band of outlaws among the hills of his native tribe of Judah. The remaining years of Saul's life were largely given to the pursuit of the fugitive, who was finally forced out of his own land to form alliance with the Philistines. These on their part had taken speedy advantage of the dissensions in Israel and had repeatedly invaded the Hebrew territory. The growing weakness of Saul's position, with one important section of his nation against him, gave them a great advantage. Finally the two armies met in battle on the great battle plain, and Saul was defeated and slain, together with three of his sons. His body was mutilated and exposed in triumph at the gates of a neighboring city. Hearing this, the inhabitants of Jabesh in Gilead—the town which Saul's first victory had relieved—came secretly by night, took down the poor, desecrated body, and buried it with due honor in their own land. The only remaining son of Saul, Ishbosheth, was proclaimed king in the land of Gilead by Abner, who had been Saul's chief general.

During all Saul's reign his palace was his tent and his scepter was a sword. His virtues were of the kind especially needed in a period of war. He had strength, courage, and decision. On the other hand, he was incapable of meeting the higher duties which success brought in its train. He could lead an army, but he could not organize a kingdom; he could fight, but he could not rule even his own spirit. Successful as a general, he failed as a king.

NOTES FROM THE NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

THE burning scholastic question before the association was, as it has been for several years, that of the relation of secondary schools to universities. The basis of the discussion in a joint meeting of the departments of secondary and of higher education was the report of a committee formed by the two in 1895 to investigate the matter of college entrance requirements. The committee, on which every section of the country was ably represented, has been aided by the active coöperation of kindred associations, such as the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Modern Language Association, etc. Hence the outcome of the committee's labors demands attention as the expression of an expert body, national in scope, and possessed of the widest, most varied, and most valuable experience in respect to the subject considered. The pith of the committee's conclusions is in their first resolution, which is as follows: "The principle of election should be recognized in secondary schools." By this, however, is not intended unlimited election, since their sixth resolution emphasizes the importance of "'constants' in all secondary schools and in all requirements for admission to college." They recommend as to these constants and their relative values: "four units in foreign languages (no language accepted in less than two units), two units in mathematics, two in English, one in history, and one in science." Thus the gauntlet is thrown down to the classicists by a body whose conclusions will prevail at least throughout the West. This is a consideration of great moment, since this vast section can no more be ignored in education than in political affairs. It is face to face with problems differing in many respects from those with which the East has grappled, it confronts those problems with resolution and judgment, and its decisions will profoundly affect the destinies of the nation.

Among minor problems of interest that were considered in the association were those of child-study and of physical training. The two have indeed an intimate bond of union, since a prime object of the former is to ascertain, if possible, the physical basis of mental health and energy. It was noticeable, also, that the most practical discussions of the investigations of child-life, laboratory and other, were heard in the physical training department. America, which has long led in the child-study movement under the impulse of Stanley Hall, is now closely pressed by foreign countries, especially by France, under the guidance of M. Buisson and M. Compayré.

The dominating personality which this coast contributed to the meeting was naturally David Starr Jordan, whose poetic conceptions of human possibilities and humorous scorn of cherished ideals derive force and flavor from his grand physique, his affluence of speech, and his magnetic temperament. All that he stands for and dreams of in educational ideals was set forth in his address on the "Usefulness of Universities," which was beyond doubt the most brilliant effort of the sessions. His university ideal is vague, though imposing; one cannot but suspect that as Leland Stanford University ripens to its maturity, the conceptions of its master spirit will approach more and more the organic unity of older institutions.—A. Tolman Smith, in the Independent.

IT is a good thing to be with the multitude when one can do so with a good conscience. It is better to be in harmony with one's fellows than to quarrel with them, if peace and righteousness can be harmonized. And it is a mistake to cultivate differences about small matters, and thus needlessly weaken their respect for our judgment. But, as this world is constituted, it is not always possible to escape the necessity of dissent and resistance to the judgment of the multitude. The only multitude that ever rises to the highest level of the truth and righteousness is "the great multitude which no man could number," which John sees before the throne. Earthly people commonly rise no higher than the lower average of sentiment and opinion in their own ranks. They are liable to the contagion of fear, hatred, and other passions. Even the good people among them are always at their best, and have to be on their guard against "following a multitude to do evil."—Sunday School Times.

THIS is the eternal law manifest in human history, that what men desire and love and worship, the beautiful order that wins the assent of their souls, that they are ready to work for and sacrifice themselves for, till in the fulness of time the first in beauty becomes first in might.—Samuel M. Crothers.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN

PHILADELPHIA, EIGHTH MONTH 12, 1899.

Please address business letters to "Friends' Intelligencer, 921 Arch Street, Philadelphia." Communications and contributions to "Editors Friends' Intelligencer," same address.

EDUCATION AMONG FRIENDS.

In presenting our "Educational Number," in this summer season when parents are considering schools for their children, it is fitting to say something on the subject of education in our Society.

The day of disbelief in education has happily passed away; its advocates are no longer called upon to defend it. The counsels of the founders of the Society concerning the schooling of the children of Friends are being interpreted in a broad, modern spirit. We were not in past days free from the reproach of inattention to books and their refining influences. The causes for such reproach are fast dying out. We see all about us evidences that our generation appreciates the advantages of cultivation. The direct bearing of intellectual training upon the growth of the soul-life, widening the foundations upon which the spiritual in us shall be built, is recognized.

The visible tokens of such an awakening are to be found in our system of Friends' institutions of learning, in our Young Friends' Associations, in our great Friends' Conferences, in our classes pursuing Biblical study, in our local educational conferences, and in the increase of our libraries. Long, prayerful, and devoted effort has been the cost of these fruits; our conservative religious organization has come but slowly to appreciate the need of these outward means of character-building. Favored individuals to whom have been granted large resources, regarding their position in the light of a guardianship, have generously endowed our educational system. Surely we are at the dawn of renewed life and greatly increased influence for our beloved Society. Let us be deeply grateful for all that has come to us in these later years.

In the larger world we see a tendency to closer relationship between primary and higher institutions of learning. This tendency our own educational system is following. We have now a well-regulated connection of all our schools, from kindergarten to college. We believe that the highest efficiency must result from this intimate relation. Actuated by a common interest, understanding, and mutually relying on one another, our various educational institutions are prepared to equip our youth solidly and thoroughly for the fields of life. Consider what the coming years must witness from the spread of education through our ranks,—the wider outlook upon life, the fuller apprehension of God's teachings which will result from the culture of the imagination, and the emancipation from the limitations which our fathers have felt so painfully.

We are being yearly brought into closer touch with Friends in England, and we are coming to a fuller admiration of the power and beauty of address which grace their representatives who have come among us. Systematic education and habitual companionship with the best things in the world of letters have given to our brethren across the sea a grasp upon resources, a generous wisdom and sanity that are admirable. Now that we have largely made conquest over the physical drawbacks of the newer land, we are settling down to enrich in fuller measure the spiritual and intellectual side of our being. In this enrichment, untold in its possibilities for the future, our now firmly established and growing primary schools, preparatory and high schools, and our much appreciated College, must deserve the cordial encouragement, spiritual and temporal, of every concerned and hopeful Friend.

DEATHS.

ELY.—At the residence of her brother, Joseph Morgan, Palmyra, N. J., Eighth month 4, 1899, Abigail L., wife of Ramsey C. Ely, in her 62d year.

LUKENS.—At her home, near Pendleton, Indiana, Seventh month 6, 1899, Annie G. Lukens, wife of Allen Lukens, aged 74 years, 2 months, 15 days.

MARSHALL.—At Londongrove, Pa., Seventh month 29, 1899, Anna W., daughter of Edward S. and Sarah T. Marshall, members of Londongrove Monthly Meeting, Pa.

CAROLINE V. CUTLER.

"The memory of the just is blessed." With blinding tears we mourn our loss in the going out of this beautiful life that has been lived among us with exceptional judgment, unflinching trust, fervent aspiration, quiet dignity, and faithful endeavor in the way of apprehended duty, a blessing to her family and her neighborhood, and an inspiration to all who came within her influence. The thought of God dwelt in her heart, the way to him was easy and familiar, and it was not far to the heaven in which her spirit had so long been centered. "Just a little way," she said, "where I go to join the loved and gone before and where you'll all soon come to join me." So, with the peace of God in her heart and his praise upon her lips, "death was robbed of its sting and the grave of its victory."

May her love for us and ours for her not have been in vain, but grateful for the memory of her example, let us press on with renewed courage, until with our work done, our crown is won.

"The friends who leave us do not feel the sorrow

Of parting, as we feel it who must stay;

They are where changes come not, and no weeping

Is heard within that fold,

And heaven is full of strong abiding places;

O God, that we may see,

When morning breaks, the dear, familiar faces

That are at home with Thee."

SERENA A. MIMARD.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE

IX.—FROM MANCHESTER TO CARDIFF.

BY HOWARD M. JENKINS.

LEAVING the kind hospitality of Dalton Hall, and our dear friends the Grahams, on the 14th instant, I went southward by Derby and Birmingham to Gloucester. The first part of the ride is through the picturesque Peak district of Derbyshire, famous for its scenery. Not very much, however, can be satisfactorily seen from the car window,—I mean as a rule. It is possible to observe the general features, but it requires a continual reference to Baedeker and Bradshaw, and a close attention to the rapidly passing scene, to get an intelligent knowledge of the country in detail.

At Gloucester, about the middle of the afternoon, I alighted and was met by John Bellows, who had kindly invited me to visit him. He is the clerk of the Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting, and an active and earnest friend of the Doukhobors, having kept in close touch from the beginning with the movement for their aid. His home, Upton Knoll, stands on a beautiful site, on the southern side of the Cotswold hills, overlooking Gloucester and the valley of the Severn, and with a view away westward to the Malvern hills, beyond which a Welsh mountain may be seen rising. In the close neighborhood of the house there has survived until now a remnant of the ancient Saxon system of land cultivation in "strips," and there is a plainly-seen fragment of an old Roman road—a narrow stone-way, over which a messenger would run—from a camp farther up on the hill to the town in the valley below. Gloucester, the Caer Glowe of the Britons, is one of the most interesting places, from an archæological point of view, in all England,—and very few persons, if any, I may add, have devoted more intelligent attention to the historical remains found here than my kind host of Upton Knoll.

I left Gloucester in the forenoon of the 15th, and reached Bristol at noon, where I was engaged to call upon and lunch with friends at their home on the high grounds near Clifton, in the residential section of the city. Bristol, interesting in many ways as an old commercial port, an early stronghold of the Friends, and from its natural surroundings, had some special interest for me in connection with the Penn family. Here Captain Giles Penn, grandfather of our Founder, lived, and here in the church of St. Mary Redcliffe, Admiral Penn, his mother, and one of the great-grandsons of our Founder, are buried. The vault is under the pew seats; the verger moved one of them for me, raised the carpet, and uncovered the heavy, blue stone set in the pavement, on which the inscription is seen. The "naval tablet" of the Admiral is some distance away, on a pier of the tower. I looked at it with attention, because there had been some—though very little—question as to the language of the inscription.

Leaving Bristol late in the afternoon (one need make no haste for fear of nightfall; there is very fair daylight until 9, or later), I went southward to Wells, in Somersetshire, in the valley of the Cheddar, south of the Mendip hills. Here there is a very interesting old cathedral, dating from the thirteenth century, and—what adds very much to the interest of the place—ancient "closes," gate-ways, walls, etc., and a modest castle in which lives the Bishop of Bath and Wells. I was too late—it was after 7 o'clock—to go inside the cathedral, but I walked about for an hour, enjoying the exterior and the surroundings, which in such cases are much the better part of the seeing, for me. (The interiors of the churches and cathedrals have interest to the student in architecture, or to those concerned as to church arrangements and appointments, or to the lover of old tombs, tablets, stone effigies, and coffins; but descriptions of all this are intelligently and exactly given in the guide-books. The outside views at Wells have many times the attractions to me that the interior has; they are, indeed, of far more than ordinary interest.)

Later in the evening I joined friends, the Clarks, of Street, and went with them to Glastonbury, a short ride southward by rail, and then to their hospitable home, "Millfield." They are well known to many American Friends, and I am not violating, I think, the rules of privacy in mentioning that Helen P. B. Clark, the mistress of "Millfield," is the daughter of John Bright, and, with her husband, William S. Clark, is a warm and an active friend of every good cause. They have been deeply concerned over the course taken by the English Government—under the direction of Joseph Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary—in reference to the Transvaal Republic, in South Africa; and the apparent adjustment of the "question," and subsidence of the "crisis," which now seem fairly assured, will be to them an occasion of sincere gratification. The fatuous and indefensible campaign of the United States in the Philippines was, of course, a topic in connection with Transvaal affairs, and one could only say that it was a cause for daily humiliation that we had ever embarked on so thoroughly wrong an enterprise.

My stay at Street extended to the morning of the 19th. The 16th was First-day. On the 17th I visited the old town of Glastonbury, which is scarcely less interesting than Wells. Here is the "Isle of Avalon," the reputed resting-place of King Arthur, the hero of Celtic legend, and of Tennyson's great poem. The old Abbey ruins, in which his grave was said to be, and from which the Welsh tradition expected him in time to rise (as with so many other national heroes), again to confront his foes, are among the most notable of their kind in England, and there are other fragments of the Abbey buildings also remaining, including the Abbot's barn, to which, down to the days of Henry VIII., the tenants of the monks brought the tenth parts of their crops. This, indeed, is not only standing, but still in use. Nearby rises the conical hill, Glastonbury Tor, on which the last abbot was hanged, when the abbey was seized and sequestered under Henry VIII.

On the 18th, occurred the quarterly meeting at Street, that of Bristol and Somerset. I shall speak of this more particularly, I hope, in an article on the meetings I have attended. I found it, of course, full of interest in many ways, and enjoyed the day fully.

Leaving Street, with lasting impressions of the kindness of our friends there, I went again to Wells, on the morning of the 19th, and being obliged to wait for train connections, again visited the cathedral and looked through the interior. Then going westward, up the Cheddar valley to Yatton, and on to Bristol, I left the latter place soon after noon, and passing under the Severn river by the great tunnel, over four miles long, reached Cardiff, the great commercial metropolis of Wales. It is near the mouth of the river Taff, and is made great by its export of coal. "Welsh coal" is the standard for English use on land and sea, and its shipment from Cardiff is so enormous that the total export trade of the city, in tons, is the greatest in the world, one city alone excepted—New York. There are about 175,000 inhabitants. The docks, made necessary by the great rise and fall of the tide, 25 to 40 feet, are among the finest anywhere, and were constructed by a company under the leadership of the Marquis of Bute, the great landowner at Cardiff. It may be worth mention that the Marquis of Bute is the descendant of that Lord Bute who was prime minister for George the Third, before our Revolution; and that Archbishop William Stuart, a son of that Lord Bute, married Sophia Penn, the granddaughter of our Founder. The present William Dugald Stuart, of Bedfordshire, head of one branch of the Penn family, and "Pennsylvania heir," must be a cousin, remotely, of the Marquis of Bute.

My visit to Cardiff was chiefly with the object of attending the National Eisteddfod (i-steth-vode) the great competitive exhibition in singing, elocution, poetry, etc., and in the arts pictorial and useful, which is annually held in Wales,—one year in the North, and the next in the South. As a descendant through at least three Welsh lines (Jenkins, Thomas, Foulke), I had always felt an interest in this demonstration by the Welsh people of their devotion to the old-time culture which the bards represented and maintained; and the opportunity of seeing the gathering at Cardiff was naturally availed of. The Cardiff local committee of arrangements had built a pavilion for the special purpose, in a park near the centre of the city, capable of seating an audience of some ten thousand or more, and in this the exercises took place. Music, chiefly vocal, had of course a leading place, for the Welsh are great singers, and as the mass of them are poor, they cannot buy costly instruments. There were solos, duets, quartettes, choirs of children, of both sexes, of men alone,—these choirs containing in several of the competitions sixty voices and upward. In many of the classes there were many entries, but the adjudicators had given them a preliminary hearing, and allowed only the best to appear in the public trials.

The proceedings began on the 18th, in the morning, and terminated on the 22d. As I did not arrive until the afternoon of the 19th I missed the opening sessions. The devotion of everyone concerned will be better appreciated when I mention that the preliminary hearings began at 8.30 a. m., that the competitions in the pavilion began at 10 and continued until 6, or later, without intermission; and that then there was an evening concert from 7.45 until 10. The pavilion was sometimes full, and always contained a large audience. Delegates were present from the United States, from Brittany, (whose people, Bretons, are akin to the Welsh), from Ireland, from the Scottish Highlands, and from the Isle of Man, forming thus a grand Celtic reunion. The exhibition of the Arts was respectable. An effort is making by a Society (of which the Princess of Wales is a patroness) to revive the Welsh spinning and weaving, and develop other domestic manufactures; and its exhibits were specially interesting.

The weather at Cardiff was warm. I had begun to find it warm, for the first time in England, in Somersetshire, and during most of the week it was such as we should so consider. It must be remembered that the greater humidity here makes a high temperature more quickly felt, and more naturally complained of. The English standard of comfort in temperature is ten to fifteen degrees lower than ours.

Bala, Wales, Seventh month 26.

MEMORIES OF WORDSWORTH AND OTHERS.¹

THERE are not many living Americans who have seen Wordsworth face to face or become the friends of the children of Coleridge. One of that few is the author of this volume of memories. A nephew of Lucretia Mott, and a friend of the leading Abolitionists, Ellis Yarnall seems all his life to have lived in the noblest company. He saw the great Duke of Wellington sitting in the House of Lords. He knew many of the foremost Englishmen of the century,—Crabb Robinson, Samuel Rogers, Lord Macaulay, John Stuart Mill, Charles Kingsley, Frederick Denison Maurice, John Bright, Gladstone, Matthew Arnold, William Edward Forster, and others. He made the acquaintance of various of the Coleridges, and of the widow of Dr. Arnold, and was a frequent visitor in many English homes. As one reads through these reminiscences, so charmingly, so modestly told, he feels himself in the presence of high companions, and is grateful for fresh views and new impressions of men and women whose very names are an inspiration in these days of commonplace.

It was in 1849 that the author spent part of a memorable summer day with the poet of the English lakes and mountains. Passing from Lake Windermere, with "its clear waters, its green islands, and its girdle of solemn mountains," its vale "a very paradise for its sweet seclusion," he reached Rydal Mount and found Wordsworth and family at the table. In the course of the conversation the poet uttered a characteristic thought, suggested by the spread of American population to the Pacific coast.

"I noticed a fixing of his eye as if on some remote object. He said that considering this extension of our language it behoved those who wrote to see to it that what they put forth was on the side of virtue. This remark, although thrown out at the moment, was made in a serious, thoughtful way, and I was much impressed by it. I could not but reflect that to him a deep sense of responsibility had ever been present ; to purify and elevate had been the purpose of all his writings."

¹ WORDSWORTH AND THE COLERIDGES, WITH OTHER MEMORIES LITERARY AND POLITICAL. By Ellis Yarnall. New York and London: The Macmillan Company.

The close of the afternoon's visit was the most impressive part, when the poet read from a selection of his own works which his visitor had brought with him, a volume edited by the late Professor Henry Reed of Philadelphia, one of Wordsworth's earliest disciples in America. The narrator writes :

"It was a solemn time to me, this part of my interview ; and I felt it to be indeed a crowning happiness to stand, as I did, by his side on that bright summer day, and listen to his voice. I thought of his long life ; that he was one who had felt himself from early youth a dedicated spirit,—

'singled out
For holy services,'—

one who had listened to the teachings of nature, and communed with his own heart in the seclusion of these beautiful vales and mountains until his thoughts were ready to be uttered for the good of his fellow-men. And there had come back to him in all the later years of his life offerings of love and gratitude and admiration from perhaps as great a multitude as had ever before paid their homage to a living writer."

This interview deeply impressed itself upon the imagination of the writer. To Wordsworth's greatness of soul he bears testimony, saying :

"I may speak, too, of the strong perception of his moral elevation which I had at the same time. He seemed to me a man living as in the presence of God by habitual recollection. A strange feeling almost of awe had impressed me while I was thus with him."

With the surviving children of Coleridge the author of these reminiscences contracted a cordial friendship. Wordsworth once said, "I have known many remarkable men, but the most wonderful man I ever knew was Coleridge." The poet's daughter Sara (who had married her cousin Henry Nelson Coleridge) and his sons Derwent and Hartley, were not without their spiritual inheritance from their father. Hartley, the most gifted of the three, the author never saw, but he heard much concerning him from Sara and Derwent Coleridge.

"At my first visit to the Lake country, and at every later visit, I heard words of kindness spoken of him from gentlefolk and simple. He could never have had an enemy. Wordsworth himself spoke to me of him with tender regard. The great poet felt for him almost as a son, as did Mrs. Wordsworth ; his death affected them deeply. 'Let him lie by us,' was Wordsworth's request, as arrangement was being made for his burial in the Grasmere churchyard."

Ellis Yarnall quotes with approval this passage from Hartley Coleridge's disapprobation, sixty years beforehand, of the Revised Version,—an opinion agreed in by many to whom the stately and beautiful dignity of the Authorized Version is sacred.

"We doubt whether any new translation, however learned, exact, or truly orthodox will ever appear to English Christians to be the real Bible. The language of the Authorized Version is the perfection of English, and it can never be written again, for the language of prose is one of the few things in which the English have really degenerated. Our tongue has lost its holiness."

Of Sara Coleridge's rare insight and delicacy of feeling the writer has much to tell.

"Aubrey de Vere, in speaking of her, has dwelt on 'the radiant spirituality of her intellectual and imaginative being,' and no words can better describe the charm of her personal presence."

The Rev. Derwent Coleridge, he tells us, had a daughter named, most appropriately, Christabel, who became a writer of tales. She had "the full eyes of the poet and something of the dreamy look of genius." Her father considered that she, of all the descendants of the great poet, most closely resembled him.

The impression made upon the republican traveler by the noblest type of the aristocracy of the old world, the Duke of Wellington, furnishes interesting reading. Standing at the entrance to the House of Lords, one afternoon in 1849, he heard a cry, "The Duke, the Duke !" as a carriage approached.

"The Duke of Wellington was handed out. I can never forget the strangely softened, the benignant expression of the aged face which I had now the happiness to look upon. He acknowledged slightly the deferential bearing of all who stood by, as he passed from his carriage to the Peers' entrance of the House of Lords. His meek look was what first struck me—a mild serenity—the happiest result of advanced age. His hair was white, but his complexion was clear and delicate."

With several references to Quakerism we must close our review of this engaging volume. In the "venerable, irregularly-shaped parsonage" of Charles Kingsley, among the moors of Hampshire, our author heard much excellent talk from that great-hearted man.

"Quakerism was a subject. George Fox, Kingsley said, was his admiration : he read his 'Journal' constantly—thought him one of the most remarkable men that age produced. He liked his hostility to Calvinism. 'How little that fellow Macaulay,' he said, 'could understand Quakerism ! A man needs to have been in Inferno himself to know what the Quakers meant in what they said and did.'"

In the family of the Forsters the writer found noble representatives of English Quakerism, high-minded, clear-souled men and women. He saw much of William Edward Forster, M. P. He had been disowned for marrying out of meeting. This, however, did not affect his sympathy with Friends.

"The memory of his father was, moreover, to him almost a religion. William Forster the elder was a man of saintly life, considering, through all his days, the supreme duty laid upon him to be the deepening a sense of religion in the souls of men."

"Forster used to tell of an incident of his childhood. He was traveling in a coach in the charge of his nurse when a benevolent old gentleman began to talk to him. 'Where is your papa, my dear ?' said his fellow-passenger. 'Papa is preaching in America,' was the reply. 'And where is your mamma ?' continued the gentleman. 'Mamma is preaching in Ireland,' was the answer which the astonished stranger received."

So we might continue quoting, did space permit. The book is rich in its reminiscences of immortal figures. Its memories are the result of deliberate reflection, for though some of the chapters were written years ago the author has gathered them together a full half century from the time when he stood beside Wordsworth on the shores of lovely Rydalmere.

We are grateful to this cultured writer for these recollections of his greener years, and for the grace and dignity with which he speaks. Worthy nephew he of Lucretia Mott, whose character he truly sums up when he describes "the charm of her personal presence, her refinement, the deep earnestness of her manner, and what one might call her intellectual spirituality."

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING.

THE meetings held at Concord last week were favored with almost perfect weather, and also with an overshadowing of love and good-will that was sensibly felt. Especially was this the case in the meeting for ministers and elders, on the 31st ult.; there the attendance was good, all the representatives being present except one—Martha Dodgson, on account of illness—whose absence composed the meeting into a feeling of sympathetic tenderness, as her faithfulness for a long period of years to all the duties of eldership was recalled.

Much excellent counsel relative to the responsibility of membership in this body was given, both to those entrusted with the gift of public speaking—and it was felt that more were possessed of this gift than manifested it—and those who are listeners. Samuel S. Ash, Sarah Linville, and other visitors were acceptably present then and on Eighth month 1st also, when there was an increased attendance over some recent years. The service of the various Friends was most harmonious, in presenting the truth as held by Friends, and the meeting was pervaded by a deep feeling of charity towards all denominations. The reading of portions of the Extracts in the business meeting recalled most forcibly our late excellent yearly meeting, and the prevailing feeling was that of an uplift along the way towards an increase of spirituality. An earnest concern was expressed relative to the finances of our yearly meeting, that while we are very grateful for the money devoted to our use, we must not let it have undue prominence, but keep it subordinate to the things of the spirit. * * *

PURCHASE QUARTERLY MEETING.

This meeting was held at Purchase, N. Y., on the 2d and 3d of Eighth month. Isaac Hillborn and his wife were present with a minute from Philadelphia Monthly Meeting. An unusual number of Friends came from other quarterly meetings, to all of whom a cordial welcome was extended. In the meeting for worship which preceded the business meeting Isaac Hillborn delivered an able discourse on the true harmony of the seemingly different laws which govern the three divisions of man's nature,—the material, the intellectual, and the spiritual.

The business meeting is held in joint session, the clerks being Ellwood and Luella M. Burdsall. The reading of the Advices called forth expressions of appreciation of their value. After the transaction of routine business the meeting adjourned. A lunch was then served, and at about two o'clock the Friends' Association met, it having taken the place of the Philanthropic Association. After the opening address by the president, James S. Haviland, an excellent paper was presented on "Our Quaker Heritage," by Louisa E. Haviland, followed by some discussion.

On Fifth-day morning, the ministers and elders met at 9.30, and at 11 the meeting for worship convened. Our friend Isaac Hillborn again spoke, very acceptably, quoting the text, "By grace are ye saved, but not of yourselves; it is the gift of God."

After a few words from several others, the meeting closed, with a feeling of thankfulness to our Heavenly Father for his many blessings.

BIRTHDAY GATHERING AT JOHNSVILLE.

Charles Bond, of Johnsville, celebrated his 80th birthday on Sixth-day, Seventh month 7, 1899. Charles has lived in and around Johnsville for 39 years, and is widely known in the Society of Friends, being a member of Horsham Monthly Meeting. He is very active for one of his age. He had two brothers and one sister, who are all deceased; his father passed away in his 92d year. In 1841 he married Mary Stokes, and to them were born seven children, five of whom are living; he has ten grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

His first wife having died, he married, in 1872, Rachel W. Michener, of Langhorne, who is still living.

After the guests had all arrived and the noon hour came they were invited to the dining-room, where the table was loaded with the delicacies of the season. The aged couple were seated at the head of the table, and all appeared to enjoy the occasion very much. Fifty-five of the friends and relatives were present, three of whom were about 80 years of age.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.

III.—THE MIDNIGHT SUN.

THE approach to Mølde, on the fiord of the same name, is very different from that to Odde. Though for some hours before entering the fiord numerous barren and rocky islands are passed, once within it, luxuriant green fields extend to the water's edge, and ashore the gardens are found richly grown with roses, dahlias, and other brilliant flowers. There is scarcely a window which is not filled with flowers and plants. The explanation of this evidence of a mild climate in this part of Norway is not far to seek. Sheltered from the mountains behind it from cold winds, the water in front of Mølde is tempered by the warmth of the gulf stream, whose genial influence makes a latitude 3° north of St. Petersburg a continuous day in June throughout the summer season, causing it to be a popular resort. The shops offer numerous attractive articles in fur, eider-down, and objects of quaint form which some of our passengers found reasonable in price. In the church is an altar-piece—"The Women at the Sepulcher"—by Eider, of Christiania, which some of us thought excellent. Certainly the coloring, though bright, was well harmonized, and no object was more popular with buyers than photographs of this work of art. At 10 o'clock at night my friend took a photograph of the town from the ship, so strong was the light. It is interesting to note that at that hour passengers went ashore in the ship's launches as though it were early evening. During the night our ship started, and by 8 a. m. (Seventh month 6) we again anchored at Aandalsnaes, or Naes, as it is more commonly called, on the Isfiord, the starting point for excursions to Romsdøl, or the Valley of the Roura, a region little less favored than that about Mølde. Words can scarcely be found to describe the beauty of the drive in the valley along a deep, broad, and rapid mountain stream, bordered by green fields, brilliant with wild flowers, and beyond these on both sides mountain peaks of bare rock,—with names so difficult to write, pronounce, and remember that it is not worth while to attempt it,—rising 38,000 feet above us in sheer declivity. One I remember revealed a giant castle with towers and battlements hewn out of the solid rock.

Very interesting was a visit to the adjacent village of Veblungsnaes—everything situated on a point of land is inappropriately called a naes—composed entirely of modest wooden houses, unattractive and contrasting strongly with the many pretty houses in Mølde. In both towns the streets are narrow, crooked, and often without sidewalks. An old octagonal Lutheran church of wood, with quaint interior, and pulpit high above the pews, attracted many visitors.

The evening of this day found us again under steam, and by 9 of the 7th we were anchored in the river Nid, opposite the pretty, thriving town of Trondhiem, at one time the capital of Norway, and still the place where all the rulers of the Kingdom of Sweden and Norway are crowned in the Cathedral. It contains 50,000 inhabitants. It is a clean and attractive city, with good hotels and interesting shops, in which the usual furs and eider-down and quaint articles of silver made on the spot may be obtained. But the Cathedral is the most interesting object; its foundation dates back to 995, when one of the numerous Olofs—Olof Trygvason—dedicated a church, which was greatly enlarged at later periods. The vicissitudes of church war, and especially of fire, have, however, left nothing of the original structure except the foundations. It is being restored literally, the octagonal apse and chapter-house respectively afford opportunities for the study of typical Gothic and Romanesque architecture. The capitals of the numerous pillars which support the nave have furnished opportunity for an enormous amount of detail applied to medallion and other relief work. In addition to statues of the Apostles, replica by Thorwaldsen himself of his famous statue of Christ—original at Christiania—is well placed in relation to light, though too large for the niche it occupies. Doubtless it will be removed to some other place when the restoration is completed. The church, undoubtedly the finest in Scandinavia, may rank among the finest in Europe, and is well worth a visit.

Here we took a drive along the Nid river to the Lenfos falls, the upper and lower, in height 100 and 70 feet respectively. The former is divided into two parts by intermediate rocks. The volume of water passing over these falls is larger than at the Lotefas near Odde, but not so high. The drive, though pretty, is not as picturesque as that at Odde or in the Romsdøl valley. Both cascades, however, far surpass many of greater reputation. Here, as at Lotefas, the rainbow effect of the spray was superb.

At 7 in the evening we weighed anchor and started on our voyage direct to the North Cape. Out of the fiord into the ocean was a matter of a few hours, and at 10.30 the sun slowly submerged itself amid coloring of gold, purple, violet, mauve, and peacock green with intermediate shades not included in the rainbow. At 8.30 a. m., of the 8th, we crossed the Arctic circle and shortly afterwards the ragged outlines of the Lofden Islands appeared and stayed by us the most of the day on our right, the open ocean being on our left.

This night we had our first experience of the midnight sun. There was no setting. The sun approached within an hour of the horizon, and then began to rise again, amid a beauty of cloud effect I will not undertake to describe. It was a moment of great excitement. Broad daylight at midnight! Almost every one was up, the fog-horn was blown, the band played while marching around the ship, followed by the passengers. Such nights as this, if it is clear, we shall have as long as we are within the Arctic circle.

At about noon of the 9th we put in at Hammerfest, the most northern town in the world, latitude 70° 40', nestling at the foot of the mountains, a very busy place, in the summer at least, containing 2,200 population, and a great centre for the making of cod liver oil. Snow-topped mountains bounded the fiord on both sides, yet the mildness of the temperature here is marvelous. A bright, clear, sunlit day, with a smooth sea and crisp air just cool enough to brace and stimulate, makes us all feel exceptionally favored.

An incident of the entrance into Hammerfest was the overtaking of a small whale steamer which was towing three whales, one quite large, two smaller, which it will take into port for proper treatment. The whales had evidently been some days en route. The whaler's crew was grateful for fruit and provisions furnished them.

JAMES TYSON.

North Cape, Norway, Seventh month 9.

III.—THE LAND OF SCOTT.

AT Durham we found it necessary, owing to rain, to take the train, thereby missing the fine border country. This was a genuine regret, as there is much of interest between Durham and Melrose. At Melrose we saw the "regular" attractions. But these held unusual interest for us. The ruins of Melrose Abbey, with memories of Bruce, the Douglass, Sir Walter Scott, and some of Scotland's kings, were first visited. Steady rain during our stay at the Abbey only added to the impressiveness of the place. The next morning we visited Abbotsford and Dryburgh Abbey. I am unable to record anything of the two latter, as I was forced to leave the party for Edinburgh.

On the evening of the 12th we were all together in Edinburgh. The party, which up to this time numbered nine, has traveled by wheel through the eastern countries, visiting the cathedral cities, and finally the land of Scott. Here we were joined by three others whose duties made it impossible to leave home sooner.

Three days were well spent in the fine old historic city. There is so much to see,—the castle, with its varied history of war and peace, was first inspected. Then we wandered through old Edinburgh, visiting on the way John Knox's house. The "closes" or alleys are most filthy; squalor is everywhere promi-

For Friends' Intelligencer.

THE LONDON GOVERNMENT BILL.

ONE cannot but rejoice that Miss Anthony and her friends were among those received by the Queen at Windsor. It is worthy of another chapter in her life; but more than that to her must have been the debate to which she listened in the House of Lords on the amendment of Lord Dunraven to the London Government bill. It was a notable occasion. The London Standard of Sixth month 27, calls it a brilliant and magnificent assembly, and says: "There has not been such a great muster of noble Lords since the Home Rule Debate." "The rights of women had attracted no more than the two Archbishops, the Bishop of London, and four or five other Bishops." "Both of the upper side galleries were filled with peeresses," and the "Strangers' Gallery was tested to its utmost capacity." The space around the Throne, according to the report, was densely crowded with Privy Councillors and members of the late and present Government, some of whom took positions on the steps of the Throne and "when the Debate began there was no more standing room left in that part of the House."

After some business in regard to the carriage of mails, to which a very few paid attention and there was much whispering, the House went into Committee on the London Government Bill and all was silent. "The Earl of Dunraven moved to strike out the provision inserted in the Commons, whereby women were declared eligible as Councillors and Aldermen." The chief ground of his objection was that, "If the principle were sanctioned now, it could not long be confined to the bodies created by the Bill," in which the Earl was right, no doubt, because the good things of this world will go on.

It seems that the new corporations will take over the work of the present Vestries, of which women are now members, and in a careful perusal of the whole debate one finds nothing but praise for the work they have done in these positions. The Earl thought it "would withdraw them from work on other public bodies into which the principle of humanitarianism entered, and in regard to which the public owed them a great debt of gratitude." How familiar is this argument of putting women in one place and building a fence around them, because they do such good work there, and one is so afraid of what they might do somewhere else! It is the old English horror of a new step, and the Earl was alarmed at "the thin edge of the wedge."

Then arose the English prime minister, the Marquis of Salisbury, who showed, in an eloquent speech, that the proposition was not an innovation nor without precedent. "He said: 'These Councils differ very little from the Vestries'; that they were turning women out for a mere change of name, not because they had proved unworthy of the trust. He contended that there was in the Municipal Councils of London an equal entering of the humanitarian element in the work of housing the poor. 'If you remove women from the Council chamber, you are taking away from that Council one of the highest, one of the ment. As we have observed here and there in England, so far as we have gone, so here, intemperance drags downward the whole standard of life. I have never seen, among the poor, such dirty children, men so immoral in appearance, or women so loathsome. In Glasgow this impression became only more fixed.

The three vantage points from which to view hilly Edinburgh are the Castle Hill, Calton Hill, and Arthur's Seat. The first has been, and still appears to be, a military stronghold; the second has a monument to Nelson, and an unfinished National monument. Arthur's Seat is a great precipitous half hill, half mountain, that frowns down on Holyrood, the former home of Scotch royalty. The view here is very fine.

There is much to say about Edinburgh. One should speak of its great museums of art and science, of its beautiful streets and parks, and still more than all these, of its history. This calls for a book rather than a brief, hurried letter.

When we wheeled away to the Forth Bridge on our way to Stirling, we were glad to resume our trip, but very sorry to feel that Edinburgh could not be studied in greater detail. At Stirling the Castle Rock affords much the same sort of vantage-ground as Arthur's Seat, just mentioned. From the frowning battlements we looked down on the field of Bannockburn, trying to picture in our minds the array of English and Scotch armies as they covered the hill-sides for miles away to the southwest. Going to the battlefield we saw the Bore-Stone in which the Scottish standard was planted, and which was the central point of Bruce's forces as they awaited the oncoming English.

From Stirling we wheeled to Callander. For more than half a day Ben Ledi was before us, and when Callander was reached we seemed to be at the base of the mountain. The road winding through this hilly country is surprisingly level. The next day we spent in traveling to Loch Katrine, passing on the way many of the points made remarkable in Scott's "Lady of the Lake"; down Loch Katrine by boat, wheeling from the foot of that lake to Loch Lomond, where we took boat at Inversnaid for Balloch, and in the evening wheeled into Glasgow.

It was a great pleasure to meet many Americans on the boats. These Scottish lakes are mainly attractive for their mountain-bordered shores; much of their charm, too, is due to the genius of Sir Walter Scott, who has peopled the country about with a folk who, though long since gone, will always live in the minds of his readers.

From Glasgow we wheeled to Ayr and the land of Burns. We began to see relics of the peasant singer as soon as we were in Ayrshire. All the people speak so tenderly of him here; his memory is dear to all classes. When I have more time I shall hope to tell of the interesting places we have visited in a hurried view of Burns's Land.

EDWARD C. WILSON.

Cumnock, Scotland, Seventh month 19.

BE noble minded! Our own heart, and not other men's opinions of us, forms our honor.—Schiller.

most constant, and one of the most reliable stimulants to a true and honest and unflagging administration of the law. These seem to me considerations of the highest moment. . . . I protest against our being asked to differ from the other House of Parliament on a matter of this kind, to refuse to make use of the instruments of good that lie to our hands, and to do so for motives which are of a trivial character, and from apprehensions which do not deserve a moment's thought. Whatever may be the feelings of others, for myself I cannot refuse to vote for the course which will help forward in some degree, it may be to a great degree, the cause of right, of justice, and of the philanthropies."

The Lord Chancellor arose to differ. The question was wider and more important. It was not whether women should be Councillors or Aldermen, but whether distinction of sex should be maintained in respect to political power. No one could recognize more strongly than himself their admirable work in administration as distinguished from government; but his experience in political life convinced him "that the very quality which prompts the burning zeal of woman to do what she believes to be right—will accept no compromise, will accept nothing but that which she believes to be right—that very quality renders her a dangerous guide in political questions."

He declared this to be no "derogation" to women, because it made them "the light and charm of human life," but he also insisted that if they were invested with political power it would not be the best who would come forward. It was "a dangerous policy."

Strange that "light and charm" is so good in one place and so dangerous in another! Strange that the woman who will accept only what she believes to be right would be such a marplot in government; but it is the reason the Lord Chancellor of England is afraid of parliamentary suffrage for women, which he felt would be the goal of the London Government bill.

The Archbishop of York and the Marquis of Londonderry were with Lord Salisbury, and the Marquis spoke highly of the work of four lady members of a school board. He said their speeches were "always thoroughly practical and explicit, and were not too long to hear." The Duke of Northumberland closed the debate in support of the Earl of Dunraven's Amendment, and it was carried by a vote of 182 against 68. Thus the English Parliament, in fear of something without precedent, has taken a backward step, for it has since been ratified by the Commons. Nevertheless, the fact that so much importance has been attached to the question as to draw such an audience, is significant of the interest in England, which is vastly more encouraging than indifference.

We learn from the London Standard that Lady Balfour said the next day, in St. Martin's Hall, that the situation "was not altogether discouraging." "There had been two good debates and successful divisions in the House, where the work that women could do for local government had been fully recognized," and that "there was the very important and helpful speech of Lord Salisbury, which certainly marked a forward step," and "Mrs. Evans, a member of St. Martin's Vestry, said that Lord Salisbury, in opposing women in the debate on the London Government bill, had his eyes on a totally different subject to that under discussion. If he had been a member of one of the London vestries he would have been very quickly called to order (applause and laughter). He was very much afraid that women would obtain seats in the House of Commons or House of Lords. It was quite wonderful that a gentleman sitting on a woosack did not sometimes take a glance behind that seat and see a chair called the Throne, which was kept exclusively for the use of a woman, who had the right and privilege to be the first to speak in the House of Lords. MARIANA W. CHAPMAN.

COMMUNICATIONS.

DANTE'S GRADATION OF SINS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

It may have seemed strange to others, as it did to me, that according to the concluding paragraph of Prof. Thompson's article, "The Land of Least Happiness" (reprinted in the INTELLIGENCER of Seventh month 22), Dante should have "kept the lowest place in his Inferno for those who in this life were grumbling and discontented without a cause." But did Dante really believe that groundless discontent is the very worst of all sins? If true, this reflects scant credit, it seems to me, on the great poet's insight and knowledge of human imperfections.

The statement is, no doubt, an inadvertence. The ninth and lowest circle of the Inferno is in reality reserved for Lucifer, who crushes in his three mouths the arch-traitors Brutus, Cassius, and—guiltiest of all—Judas. Professor Thompson, I feel sure, must have had in mind the end of the seventh Canto, which describes the punishment of the sullen, in the fifth circle. These sullen ones are sunk below the muddy waves of a dismal swamp. "Beneath the water," Dante is told, "are folk who sigh and make this water bubble at the surface. Fixed in the slime they say: 'Sullen were we in the sweet air that by the sun is gladdened, bearing within ourselves the sluggish fume; now we are sullen in the black mire.'"

Professor Norton, whose translation I have just quoted, adds this note: "The sin here punished is that known to the Middle Ages as acedia, or accidie,—slackness in good works, and spiritual gloom and despondency. In the 'Parson's Tale,' Chaucer says: 'Envie and ire maken bitternesse in heart, which bitternesse is mother of accidie.'"

Dante's belief, apparently, was that wilful or weak yielding to despondency, the wilful or weak losing of hope and courage, the turning a deaf ear to the ever-present voice that, as of old, bids us to rejoice in the Lord,—that this despondency, if habitually indulged in, becomes a positive sin and places the higher nature in peril of death. THOMAS A. JENKINS.

Nashville, Tenn.

CONCERNING APPLETON MORGAN'S ARTICLE.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

The paragraph in the last number of the INTELLIGENCER, taken from Appleton Morgan's article "Recent Legislation Against the Drink Evil," in the current Popular Science Monthly, is certainly fearfully and wonderfully made, in its comparison and its logic, but it is a fair sample of the whole contribution.

Morgan, in what appears to be a humorous treatment of a very serious question, tosses what is evidently intended as sarcasm, at the policy of Prohibition. He attempts to illustrate the logic of prohibitory laws, by saying, "as for instance, laws, abolishing the use of spoons, as so many temptations to house-breakers; or of railways, because trespassers upon railway tracks were often killed; or steamboats, because steamboat boilers sometimes burst."

If men committed burglary with spoons, as they do with jimmies, there might be some small connection between Morgan's illustration and the thing he illustrates. Men get drunk, become demoralized and pauperized by liquor sold in saloons and taverns, and Prohibition simply holds that the State shall prohibit the beverage sale of a commodity the use of which works such dire results on the State's citizens. Prohibition is only therefore trying to repeat that wisdom which makes the State forbid the sale of jimmies for purposes of burglary. Liquor is an implement or agent producing a certain result, and the Prohibitionist believes in making it hard or impossible for men to get the cause of crime and drunkenness, as well as dealing with the effect.

It would be more correct to hold Morgan to the logic of free rum or the license system, whichever he advocates. In that case his steamboat illustration might be good. If it is logical, wise, and prudent to license the sale of liquor which makes men explosive and unsafe, then why not license the sale and tolerate the use in steam boilers of explosives or acids which would render them unsafe and perilous to life? Prohibition is not a means of punishing innocence but of preventing depravity and brutality. That is its claim, and whatever one may think about its practicability, if he writes in the name of science, he ought to be able to fairly state the case.

This brings me to consider one assertion or two made in that part of Morgan's article which the INTELLIGENCER did not print. For instance, on page 439 of the Popular Science Monthly Morgan says: "In sixty-three years Maine has seen her commerce disappear and her population dwindle." The prohibitory policy of the State is given as the implied cause of this condition. According to the United States census the population of Maine in 1830 was 399,455, and in 1890 it was 661,086. If that is a dwindling population, words have ceased to have a reliable meaning. Maine's commerce has not disappeared, while evidences of the internal prosperity of the State are abundant. With a population of 661,086, Maine had in her savings banks in 1895 deposits amounting to $53,397,590. Ohio with a population five and one-half times as great, had $34,606,213 in her savings banks, and Illinois with nearly six times as many inhabitants had savings bank deposits amounting to only $23,498,504.

Morgan's article also claims that every State in the Union but Maine has within the last five years recognized the failure of Prohibition and striven to recast its statutes in that particular. This is another untrue statement. Neither Vermont nor New Hampshire have by legislative enactment in any way crippled the prohibitory law, which has for years been on their statute books.

The whole article is honeycombed with complete errors or half-truths, but space forbids a further review of them. It is a source of amazement how an article of such evident bias found its way into such a high-class publication. It is this which gives it its power to mislead, and makes a reasonable effort to counteract it necessary. Science is not scientific when it is inaccurate and unfair. HENRY W. WILBUR.

New York City.

LITERARY NOTES.

A POPULAR feature of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps's writings is the happy blending of lively humor and tender pathos which always characterizes and illuminates them. These qualities were perhaps never more in evidence than in her latest and most touching story, "Loveliness," which appears in the current Atlantic Monthly. But the element which will attract the widest attention to the story and call forth the liveliest discussion over it, is its outspoken and trenchant attack upon the practice of vivisection and the methods of the vivisectors.

"Loveliness" is a "silver Yorkshire terrier," stolen from a delicate little girl, whose life is actually wavering in the balance through her grief over the loss of her beloved pet, when her father, a college professor, discovers the missing favorite in the operating-room of the medical school of his own university, and under the very scalpel of the operator, "kissing his vivisector's hand."

The author's indignation that such things should be and be tolerated in these days is expressed in no uncertain terms.

The defenders of those who practice what she denominates "the worst torture of all, that reserved by wisdom and power for the dumb, the undefended, and the small," will need to use their best weapons to meet the thrilling indictment drawn by her in her brilliant assault upon what she believes to be organized and scientific cruelty.

FRIENDS' ASSOCIATION MEETING.

CORNWALL, N. Y. — Friends' Association of Cornwall met Seventh month 30, 1899, at the home of Theodore Ketcham. The closing article on the life of Samuel M. Janney was read from the INTELLIGENCER by Edmund Cocks. Everyone was impressed by the usefulness of this good man's life.

The next meeting is to be held at the Seaman Homestead, Eighth month 27. There will be a reading by Mariana Seaman, and the paper postponed from last meeting will be presented. BLANCHE E. BROWN, Secretary.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

WILLIAM BELLOW, of Gloucester, England, son of John Bellows, Assistant Clerk of London Yearly Meeting, was recently in Philadelphia on his way home from Manitoba, where he had been assisting the Doukhobors in their new location. Almost his last duty before leaving Manitoba was to locate six Doukhobor men on an island out of sight of land in Lake Winnipeg, where they were to catch and pack in ice lake white-fish for the markets of Chicago and other cities. He sailed home from Montreal on the 3d inst.

THINGS THAT ABIDE.

In the bitter waves of woe,
Beaten and tossed about
By the sullen winds that blow
From the desolate shores of doubt,

When the anchors that faith had cast
Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
To the things that cannot fail.

I know that right is right,
That it is not good to lie,
That love is better than spite,
And a neighbor than a spy.

I know that passion needs
The leash of sober mind;
I know that generous deeds
Some sure reward will find;

That the rulers must obey,
That the givers shall increase;
That Duty lights the way
For the beautiful feet of Peace.

In the darkest night of the year,
When the stars have all gone out,
That courage is better than fear,
That faith is truer than doubt.

And fierce though the fiends may fight,
And long though the angels hide,
I know that Truth and Right
Have the universe on their side.

And that somewhere beyond the stars
Is a love that is better than fate.
When the night unlocks her bars,
I shall see him and I will wait.

—Washington Gladden.

"We have careful words for the stranger,
And smiles for the 'sometime guest,'
But oft for 'our own' the bitter tone,
Though we love 'our own' the best."

DR. WHITE AND THE ARBITRATION SYSTEM.

THE London Times, on the 27th ult., published a dispatch from The Hague, giving the views of Dr. Andrew D. White, president of the American delegation to the Peace Conference, on the results obtained by the Conference in the Arbitration agreement. (He refers, also, to the declaration made by the American delegates that nothing in this action, agreeing to Arbitration, was to be regarded as affecting the traditional policy of the United States, as laid down by Washington and Monroe, of avoiding complications with European politics, and of resenting European control in America.) Dr. White said: "The United States has for many years shown an earnest desire for the establishment of a large and comprehensive plan of arbitration. The feeling in favor of this method for the pacific settlement of international difficulties has greatly increased within the last few years. Since we have sat here there have come every day to the United States delegation petitions and resolutions from large meetings in all parts of the country revealing this earnest desire among vast bodies of men and women of every race, religion, and condition. I believe that the vast majority of our people will welcome our arbitration treaty and will see in it a serviceable plan from the outset, and a germ from which a more complete system will be evolved in future conferences. The tribunal here provided for will stand before the people of all nations ready at any moment to begin its work. Public opinion in any nation apparently drifting towards war will generally see in this tribunal a means of escape, and will insist that the questions at issue be referred to it. As time goes on, such reference will, doubtless, more and more seem to be natural and normal, and thus we may hope to have every advantage claimed for obligatory arbitration without its overwhelming disadvantages.

"But while the United States will readily see this and, in my judgment, will welcome the treaty, it could hardly be expected that we would be willing to accept a requirement to sweep away at once, here and now, its policy, so long observed, both as regards the American and other Continents. If any modification is ever made in that policy it must be made by the United States after it has had the fullest opportunity to study the subject in all its bearings. Such a change cannot be made here by implication in a treaty made distinctly for another purpose, and it is important that there should be no doubt on this point. As to the first part of the declaration we made yesterday, there is a deep feeling, indeed, I might say a religious feeling, in the hearts of the American people at large against our nation entangling itself in the internal questions and affairs of foreign nations. The counsel given by Washington in his farewell address against any such entanglements is regarded almost as if it were of Divine inspiration. The second part of the declaration, although it has not the historical basis of the first, is also founded upon deep convictions. Those convictions were, indeed, once largely shared by British statesman and the British people at large. I may mention, in fact, that nowhere did the declaration of President Monroe receive more earnest commendation than in The Times. Even if we were to grant that these feelings are mainly vague and indefinite still they are feelings which in the interest of the final ratification of the treaty we, the American delegation, must take into account.

"But neither of these two parts of the declaration implies the slightest withdrawal from full coöperation in the judicial settlement of international difficulties by means of the agencies and machinery provided in the convention. No Power will more gladly welcome this means of preventing war than the United States. None will more faithfully adhere to them as soon as they are agreed upon. You ask how this declaration is to be interpreted. I answer distinctly that the future is to be interpreted by the past, that the policy of the United States is hereafter to be what it has been heretofore. There is nothing is a continuance of this policy to endanger, to limit, or even to hamper the operation of the plan of arbitration now proposed. This the past history of the United States abundantly shows. The United States has never manifested the slightest desire to interfere with any arbitration proceedings, such as might arise under this convention. We have more than once asked for the arbitrament of a foreign Power and have gladly seen other American nations use the same means. Consider the four classes of arbitration which may possibly be thought involved in this declaration. As regards every one of them the United States has again and again not only accepted but welcomed the decision of European Powers and authorities."

Mr. White divided the four classes as follows: First, arbitration between the United States and European Powers. Second, arbitration between the United States and another American Power. Third, arbitration between two American Powers, neither being the United States. Fourth, arbitration between an American Power other than the United States and a foreign Power. Mr. White mentioned a number of cases belonging to each class, and continued thus:

"Every one of these arbitrations the United States has regarded with satisfaction as promoting peace. There is, then, nothing in our history to warrant for a moment the view that the attitude of our country as regards arbitration will be hostile to any settlement possible under this convention. I am convinced that the arbitration plan is to be of vast value to my own country and to mankind. Future conferences will ripen the good fruit it will bring forth. The American people will, I believe, recognize these facts heartily, and, yesterday's declaration having been made, will accept our work readily, make use of it loyally, and gladly join in any future measures for perfecting it."

WHITNEY & STEPHENSON, of Pittsburgh, who have been financing the big river coal combine, which is to be known as the Monongahela River Consolidated Coal and Coke Company, have completed the allotment of stock according to the subscriptions received. The stock was over-subscribed by $1,250,000. Securities of the company will be $10,000,000 preferred stock, on which 7 per cent. will be paid; $20,000,000 common stock and $10,000,000 fifty year gold bonds bearing 6 per cent. interest.

THE EVERGLADES OF FLORIDA.

From the stenographic report, furnished FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER, by George B. Cock, of a lecture by Dr. David T. Day, Chief of the Division of Mining Statistics, U. S. Geological Survey; delivered in Philadelphia, under the joint auspices of the Franklin Institute and Y. M. C. A.

INTO this region,—the Everglades,—those animals which dislike subjugation—the birds, the reptiles, the wild beasts, and the wild men—fled. Most of them are there still. It is the home of everything that is wild. It is a tangle of densest vegetation. Beginning on the north, near the town of Kissimmee, with the usual alternation of pines, bay trees, and magnolias, with here and there a marsh and a lake, further southward the trees become scarcer, and swamps and tall grasses prevail. Swamp, from occasional, becomes continuous, with here and there only a small island of land. Before Lake Okeechobee is reached, the grasses and cane-brakes have given place to saw-grass, which continues to the southern end of the State, where, with an equally undefined borderland, it shades off to the open waters of Whitewater Bay.

The line of demarcation between the bay and the swamp region is scarcely discernible, the water simply shading off into the Everglades on both sides. Skirting the glades, around by the southwest to the west side, the border grows more definite; and parallel to the gulf, and fifty miles east of it, is the rim of the Everglades proper. This rim of limestone, which is really an upturned edge of the floor of the State, holds back the water, and makes possible the quick change from a tropical forest to the saw-grass of the glades, which extend on the east almost to the very coast of the Atlantic,—at some points within a few miles of it. Miami, with its now beautiful hotel, is only this short distance from everglades as dense as any other part of the State.

Whitewater Bay's bottom is covered with a mud of finely divided limestone mixed with organic matter from the roots of the dense vegetation above; and the bay is filling up. It is getting higher and higher continually. Inside of the protecting coral reef, this whole region is building up in the same way, with a fine, white mud, mixed with this dark, organic matter. That mud has its origin in the Everglades, whose bottom is a limestone. This limestone is etched—eaten away—quite rapidly, by the rainwater, particularly after it has received an additional charge of carbonic acid from the decaying vegetation. This carbonic-acid-containing water rapidly dissolves the limestone floor, and carries the lime in solution to the south and there deposits it. In other words, a new set of Everglades is being formed down below; and by watching that growth we can easily see how the present ones were formed.

The Everglades, as they exist now, represent two stages of growth. The north glade and the south glade have between them a rim which is probably a rim of coral,—an original coral reef that opened south of the main land. An everglade formed, probably, first above it,—then, as a coral reef formed in about the region of Whitewater Bay to the south, it left smooth water in which the limestone was deposited, making the south bed. To understand something of what maintains this swampy character of the glade,—there is at Miami a limestone bluff, twenty-two feet high; but that bluff, if we follow it three miles into the interior, slopes down again so that it is simply the edge of the Everglade basin, and the water has difficulty in getting out on account of this rim, which extends all along the east, and much of the south, coast.

It is easy to study the Everglades in detail by a trip from Miami up the Miami river in a canoe propelled by two Seminole Indians,—getting clear into the Everglades and back to your hotel the same night. There is a considerable rapid in the Miami, three miles from the hotel, the river having cut a channel through the 22-foot limestone rim. At this point, when one happens to have taken a steam launch, it is abandoned for a canoe to go above the rapids. A half-mile further on one is stopped from further penetrating the glades by the saw-grass, and by all the other obstacles to travel in this country that have kept the Everglades practically in their original condition,—undisturbed except by the Indians.

Another and far better way of studying the Everglades is to go around by railroad to Punta Gorda; thence by steamer to Myers, near the mouth of the Caloosahatchee river, and up that river some fifty miles till you reach this limestone rim again,—the west border of the Everglades.

At Myers the Caloosahatchee's bank is an impenetrable tangle of mangrove roots, among which the water loses itself. The water is shoal from the deposit of limestone brought down from the glades; but soon it narrows to a beautiful stream, deep, and flowing between banks of soft, white, coral limestone, this having been brought from the Everglades and deposited as soon as it touched the brackish water near the river's mouth. Against this background of white limestone the water shades from an amber color where shallow to mahogany where deep; the surface, glassy smooth, reflects the outlying trees with the clearness of a mirror. Over the limestone bank hangs a drapery of jessamine creepers and other vines with a border of great ferns. The primeval forest shuts out the sky and makes simply a jungle overhead.

This is a great banana country, owing to the fertility of the marl limestone, down into which the roots of trees grow four or five feet. The luxuriance of the flora in this whole region tells of an enormous fertility where the land is high enough to be drained. As the distance from the coast increases the forest is freer from undergrowth. It gives beautiful vistas between the tall palmettos, arcades of bays, occasional pines,—far off to the marshy plains which bound every view. The river winds more and more, until the points of the compass have absolutely no significance, the boat being kept simply in the middle of the stream, which winds in S's for miles of its sinuous course.

A few "shacks" only remain at old Fort Deneaud, which figured in the war of the Seminoles; and ever since the struggle for existence has been kept up there; but Nature has practically reconquered, and Fort Deneaud will probably not even have a "shack" to recall its site in a few years.

At Thompson the sunset gave place to a moonlight considerably brighter, making a jet-black mirror of water between these banks of silvery-white limestone; the forest ends suddenly and the Everglades stretch away indefinitely. By 8 o'clock there was no sound louder than the lapping of the current against the boat. Water lettuce and water hyacinths float past all night, sometimes in large masses, sometimes individually, glistening with tiny drops of water beautifully in the moonlight. Now and then these groups assume the size of small islands, with little trees and other shrubs actually growing in them. These islands are floating by continuously; they are too strange to look real, and your picture becomes less and less distinct, but not less enchanting, as you pass the borderland of dreams. By the next morning all is changed again; the weird solitude is now a panorama of life of countless kinds, that fortunately come on the instalment plan. Had I written this in advance, I should have predicted being awakened by the flood of sunshine, which is warm here in January as nowhere else, though the air is dry and clear. Instead, we were aroused by the engineer's little alarm clock just as the sun rose, accompanied by the whistle of quails and mocking-birds. It is a region teeming with life. Some of the animals of the region you must hunt: others hunt you—especially the insects, from the irritating jigger through the long range of gnats, mosquitoes, gallinippers, alligator fleas, to the giant spider, whose web entangles small birds. You would be disappointed how few of all these insects you find, or which find you, in the winter. On a boat you have almost none—our sand-fly netting, even, not being used.

Leaving the river we now travel through a canal—cut in Lake Flirt—blasted out of limestone, which is the bottom, and which is the bottom of the whole Everglade region. It has the limestone rim seen from the rapids on the east coast. There is no lake in sight, of course;—nothing but a dense jungle of water-plants growing high above the water; but those skeptical as to the lake character of the region need only try to walk on the plants and quickly meet an awful death in the black clay ooze, in which a ten-foot pole does not touch bottom. The impassable character of the region is further evident from the waterfowl driven here, as a refuge from the sportsmen,—marsh hens, flocks of blackbirds and crested egrets. In a few hours another canal cuts through saw-grass to Lake Okeechobee. The best description I have seen of the lake states that "it is filled with thick, muddy water, which cannot possibly be used for drinking." We drank little else. Entering, you look over a beautiful blue sheet of water, forty miles to the opposite shore. It is like one of the beautiful lakes of Northern New York, although only ten to thirty feet deep. It is a common experience to find the lake so rough as to be uncomfortable for the largest steamers that navigate it. A few tall trees made an island in the Everglades here a good refuge for Seminole Indians,—the rule of the United States troops being, in the Seminole War, that, no matter what the hardships, they were to pursue the Indians until they caught them. They took their Indians with them and sent them to the west, where they would be easier to find again if wanted. Only about 360 were allowed to remain. About thirty or forty families are scattered through the wilderness. Crossing to the east side of Okeechobee, we come to a small space of firm land and find it occupied by the Indians—the most famous refugees of all the Everglades. You cannot always find them, for they have no wish to be found; and they wander from one island to another. When found they receive you courteously, but with that peculiar reserve which one is wont to show to a book agent. They raise cane, potatoes, and pumpkins for their own use, and coonti, which passes for arrowroot. Wild turkeys are a bountiful supply of food, as they wander from island to island by water-ways which only they understand.

Monkeys Picking Cotton.

Youth's Companion.

THE Cotton Planters' Journal gives an account of the training of monkeys to pick cotton, on the plantations of Mississippi, an account which it would be hard to believe if it were not accompanied with names, dates, places, and circumstances which put deception out of all probability.

The introducer of this novel kind of labor is Mr. W. W. Mangum, and the principal scene of its employment has been Mr. Mangum's plantation at Smedes, Sharkey county. The attempt was suggested first by Professor S. M. Tracey. He had seen the performances of some trained monkeys, and assured Mr. Mangum that he thought they could be trained to pick cotton.

Mr. Mangum was so much impressed by the suggestion that in the summer of 1897 he hunted out the owner of the monkeys which Professor Tracey had seen at work, bought the whole lot, ten in number, and induced their trainer to come with them to the plantation. There, in September, 1897, their training as cotton-pickers began, and was conducted to a successful issue.

Each monkey was provided with a bag which would hold about twenty-five pounds of seed cotton. This bag was hung over the monkey's shoulder. Baskets to hold the cotton were placed at the end of each row, and one man beside the trainer was needed to take the cotton out of the sacks and put it into the baskets.

A staff correspondent of the Cotton Planters' Journal visited Smedes in November last to see the monkeys at work. He writes:

"I must admit that it was a glorious sight to see, and one that did my heart great good. The rows were filled with monkeys, each with her little cotton sack around her neck, picking quietly without any rush or confusion.

"When they had their sacks full they would run to the end of the row, where a man was stationed to empty them into the cotton basket, when they would hurry back to their work. The monkeys seemed actually to enjoy picking."

The cost of picking cotton with the aid of monkeys is only about one-third as much as with negro labor, and the cotton brings a higher price, being cleaner. As cotton-picking machines have been a failure in the South, there is great interest in the Smedes experiment.

Gladstone's Personal Magnetism.

JUSTIN MCCARTHY, the Irish Nationalist, has written and published a great deal about Gladstone, but nothing more charming than a chapter in his recently published "Reminiscences," which gives a fine conception of the attractiveness of the Grand Old Man's personality.

"I must say," he writes, "that Mr. Gladstone has been an exception to all that I have known in my experience of men, for he grew distinctly handsomer as he grew older. At the time when I first became familiar with his personal appearance there was, except for the wonderful eyes, not much in his features to distinguish him greatly from other fine looking men of about the same age. It was in his later days that his face developed those noble outlines and his eyes showed that penetrating light which fastened at once the gaze of every observer. A stranger, utterly unacquainted with his appearance, seeing him for the first time among whatever crowd of men, would be sure to rivet his looks upon him, and to ask, eagerly, 'Who is that?' I have seen some few, very few, men's faces which had something like the same power of compelling attention. Nathaniel Hawthorne, the great American novelist, was one of them. Nobody could come into a crowded room where Nathaniel Hawthorne was one of the company without instantly finding himself attracted by Hawthorne's face, and especially by his eyes, and without instantly asking who he was. But then Hawthorne did not live to anything like the age at which Mr. Gladstone's presence began to be most impressive, striking, and captivating. Crabb Robinson said that Goethe seemed to him an almost oppressively handsome man. The same thought has occurred to me many times when looking on Mr. Gladstone, that he was almost oppressively handsome in the sense that you could not get his face out of your mind while he was present. Even in a crowded House of Commons, and when one was sitting on a distant bench, one could not escape from the fascination of those wonderful eyes. The effect seemed to grow more and more with his growing years. I felt the impressiveness of those eyes more when I saw them for the last time than I did when I saw them for the first time, forty years before."

CURRENT EVENTS.

A LOADED trolley car, running between Shelton and Bridgeport, Connecticut, was derailed on a trestle, on the 6th inst., and fell 40 feet into a pond. Twenty-nine persons were killed, and several more were injured. Of the forty-three persons in the car only two escaped unharmed. The trestle was without guard rails, and the car is said to have been running at a high rate of speed.

By the collapse of a slip at the Mount Desert ferry, eight miles from Bar Harbor, Maine, on the 6th inst., at least twenty persons were drowned and many were injured. The people were excursionists from Bangor and other points on their way to visit the war vessels that had just arrived in port, and in the rush to get on the Bar Harbor boat they overcrowded the slip. Over 200 were thrown into the water.

COUNTERFEIT coins are in circulation in the Philippines in large numbers. Thus far there are few, if any, counterfeits of American coin in the islands, most of those in circulation being British-Chinese dollars and Spanish coins of various denominations, these being the coins which the natives of the islands are most accustomed to. All the counterfeits thus far discovered are made in moulds, but the work on them is so good that they can easily be passed among the natives.

AN armed insurrection has broken out at La Vega, San Domingo, in favor of Jimenez, who aspires to succeed the late President Heureaux in the Presidency of the Dominican Republic. The insurgents are said to be well organized and officered and the revolutionists are gathering strength. Jimenez, who is at Havana, says he ordered the assassination of Heureaux, and declares he will lead the revolt against the Government.

THE West Chester Fire Company, of West Chester, observed its 100th anniversary on the 6th inst., with a banquet and appropriate speeches. This is the first event in the celebration of West Chester's Centennial year.

THE second trial of Alfred Dreyfus, on charges of high treason, was begun at Rennes, on the 7th inst. The prisoner bore himself with dignity and composure, and his declarations of innocence, under sharp questioning, were very pronounced. His prompt and coherent replies indicate that his intellect is unclouded.

THE political situation in Hayti has improved. All persons thought capable of taking part in a revolutionary movement have been arrested or have sought refuge in the Consulates. The Government is treating the prisoners with clemency, owing to the intercession of United States Minister Powell. The financial situation here, however, is still critical. Pourparlours on the subject have passed between the Government and Minister Powell, who has assured the Ministers that a loan, with suitable guarantees, could be floated in the United States.

SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL, ex-Premier of Canada, and leader of the Conservative opposition in the Senate, has severely criticized in a speech in the upper House, Sir Wilfrid Laurier's refusal to accept the invitation to attend the laying of the corner-stone of Chicago's great post-office building. Sir Mackenzie characterized as childish the Premier's alleged excuse of hostility to Canada on the part of the United States press.

THERE is no further excitement in Hampton or in Newport News, and the people have no fear that the dreaded fever will break out again. The refugees are returning in crowds. Every incoming train brings several hundred, and in a few days the 7,000 who fled will all have returned.

THE American delegates to the recent Peace Conference have offered on behalf of the United States to erect near the English Church at The Hague a Peace chapel, with a stone to commemorate the Conference. The offer has been gratefully accepted.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

It is said that the scheme of Bishop Turner, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, for the deportation of the negroes of the South to Liberia, and which the Bishop recently presented to the President, is not receiving approval from many of the leading men of that race. If the negro is to be transferred to Liberia, or to the islands of the East and West Indies, recently acquired by the United States, it must be done with his free consent and upon inducements of gain such as might influence any other class of our people to emigrate.

Frenchmen have secured valuable mining concessions in the interior of China and propose developing them without delay. A Parisian syndicate has secured coal, quicksilver, and other mineral concessions valued at $100,000,000. Their agent says there are mines of cinnabar in Kwee Chow province which are richer than the famous Almaden quicksilver mines of Spain, mortgaged by the Spanish Government to the Rothschilds. Along the Yang Tse Kiang river are fine copper mines and several vast coal deposits, to develop which he has secured the exclusive privilege.

Bears, which were unusually numerous in Pike and adjacent counties during last winter and spring, are again making themselves obnoxious to farmers, and are venturing into the clearances, and in one instance took possession of a farm house.

A curious old custom is building up a remarkable collection of horse shoes at Oakham Castle, in Rutlandshire, England. At this place, whenever a peer of the realm rides by, he is required by the Constable to contribute a horse shoe in lieu of a fee. These are then hung upon the walls of a room in the castle, which is thought to have been formerly used as a chapel. The custom still obtains, though nowadays noblemen who pass through the town generally contribute shoes of some precious metal, richly decorated and bearing their coats of arms.

Widely separated farm-houses in Australia are being connected by telephone in a novel and inexpensive manner. To put wires from one farm-house to another would be a work too costly to be contemplated, but it is found that the wire fences in common use in Australia are efficient lines of communication for telephonic purposes. Friendly intercourse has been established between families as many as a dozen miles apart, and fences that before had served to shut in and separate became a medium for drawing families together.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, EIGHTH MONTH 19, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 33.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK. XXXIII.

THE Scriptures may be considered a chart which has been traced for our guidance by the wise and good of former ages, who performed under Divine guidance the voyage of life. Like the mariner upon the ocean, we may refer to the chart to avoid the rocks and shoals, . . . but still we must depend upon the compass within, that points to the polar star of Truth, and guides us securely to the haven of rest.

SAMUEL M. JANNEY.

From the chapter on "Holy Scriptures," in his "Conversations on Religious Subjects."

PRAYER.

SPEAK to me, Lord! Thy word of consolation
Steals like sweet dew to freshen every hour:
Speak, I implore, a message of salvation
To shield my heart from keen temptation's power.

Thou art my life, my strength! Good Lord, remember
How weak I am, how prone to faint and fall!
When Love burns low, breathe on each dying ember,
And with thy breath its fervent glow recall.

Thou art my hope! How could I reach thy heaven,
If thou no helping hand didst lay on me?
Thy mercy oft my wanderings has forgiven:
Forgive once more, and bid me live in thee!

—Henry W. Hawkes.

JOHN TATUM: A MEMORIAL.

IN asking the insertion of the memorial of John Tatum, it may not be amiss to precede it by a statement that our late friend, Dillwyn Parrish, had from the individual concerned, who, when a young man, on one occasion visited a race course near the public road leading to Woodbury, N. J.

John Tatum, having to pass on his way home, recognized the young man, who naturally expected an "eldering" when next they met; but no allusion was made to it, and several interviews passed in like manner, until one day, when the young man least expected it, John remarked, "I was very sorry to see thee at that race course." Although brief, it had a more salutary effect than a long discourse.

John's wife, who was sister to our late friend, Clement Biddle, and her step-children, continued members of the Yearly Meeting, Fourth and Arch streets; but whilst he lived provision was always made for the proper entertainment of Friends of both bodies when their quarterly meetings were held at Woodbury.

J. M. T., JR.

A Memorial of Woodbury Monthly Meeting, New Jersey, concerning John Tatum.

It is not with a view of eulogizing the dead, that we give forth the following memorial concerning our dear deceased friend, John Tatum; but in order that the remembrance of his unblemished life and pious example may be perpetuated as a testimony to the efficacy of that Divine Power which wrought all good works in him.

He was the son of John and Sarah Tatum, members of Woodbury Particular Meeting, and was born the 11th day of the Ninth month, 1767, within the limits of said meeting, of which he continued to be a member to the time of his death. By his pious and exemplary father he was carefully educated in the principles of the Society of Friends, to which he remained firmly attached to the end of his days. But he was no sectarian; his charity extended to all, and his love, like that of his Divine Master, was universal.

From early childhood, he was remarkable for his sobriety and stability. When he was about eleven years old his mother died, leaving two children, one of whom was a daughter several years younger than the subject of this Memoir; and while he was yet a youth, he extended towards her a guardian care and solicitude as of an experienced parent; embracing every opportunity of instilling correct principles into her tender mind; which she often mentioned in after-life with feelings of gratitude and affection.

As it was difficult to procure suitable teachers for schools, when he was about seventeen years of age he entered into that useful employment, in which he continued, during the winter season, for several years, thereby rendering an essential service to the neighborhood where he was thus engaged.

About the year 1792 he settled on the farm where he resided the remainder of his life; and soon after married Hannah, the daughter of William Rogers, late of Evesham. As their minds were congenial they lived together in much harmony, until the year 1819, when she was removed by death, leaving the care of several children devolving on him, which trust he faithfully discharged, endeavoring, according to the ability received, to bring them up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord"; for he had no greater joy than to see his children walking in the Truth. In the year 1822, he was united in marriage with Anne Biddle, of Philadelphia.

He was a kind and affectionate husband,—a tender father, and a firm and steady friend, particularly to those in adversity. He was very useful in his neighborhood, especially in acts of kindness and beneficence to the poor, without distinction of color; in which he seemed unwearied; and few would be more missed on that account.

About the year 1804 he was appointed to the station of an elder in the church, in which he continued with much acceptance until the time of his decease. During which period, as well as before, he was active in several other important duties and appointments in society, being deeply concerned for the advancement of truth and righteousness. He was a diligent attender of all our religious meetings, and a bright example in reverently waiting on the Lord therein, being careful to take his family with him. He was of a tender spirit, and desirous above every other consideration to keep a conscience void of offence towards God and man. In the exercise of the discipline of the church his object was, by mild and gentle means, to bring the transgressor to a sense of the evil of his ways, that so he might be restored to the unity of his friends; and the meekness and gentleness of his spirit qualified him for eminent usefulness in treating with offenders.

He was endued with a sound and discriminating judgment; and early in life obtained the full confidence of his father, who seldom, if ever, undertook any matter of importance without consulting with him. In his intercourse among men he was courteous, kind, and obliging to all, being an example of disinterestedness and humility.

The subject of the dissensions in our religious society was cause of deep exercise to the meek and peaceable spirit of this our dear friend; and his efforts to moderate our opposing friends were fervent and sincere, though without the desired effect. When a separation took place in this meeting, he for some time attended the meetings of those who do not consider themselves as members with us; but in the year 1828 he was visited with a severe illness, which greatly prostrated his bodily strength; and in this trying situation, being much humbled, his petitions were put up to his Heavenly Father for right direction; when, after a time of deep probation, it was clearly manifested to him that his peace consisted in firmly uniting himself with the Friends of this meeting. The conflict was severe, between affection for some of his nearest connections in life, and duty to his Heavenly Benefactor; so that his faith was closely tried. But he saw that it would no longer do to reason with flesh and blood, and gave up in obedience to the heavenly vision; often expressing the great peace he felt in this act of dedication. After thus fully surrendering his will to what he believed was divinely required of him, his health and strength seemed renewed, and he again became active and useful among his friends.

In the course of his pilgrimage through life, he had to partake largely of the cup of affliction, which is more or less the lot of all; but he was enabled to bear it with patience and resignation becoming a Christian.

A few days before his death, being weak in body, but his mind clear and composed, he was visited by some of his near connections. After expressing his satisfaction in seeing them, he imparted much tender counsel to them, signifying the comfort it afforded him in believing that they had been preserved in the fear of the Lord; and in a very affectionate manner he earnestly recommended them to keep to the simplicity of their religious profession, in their dress and deportment; thus evincing the solicitude of a father for their present and everlasting welfare.

It was his primary concern to know Christ formed in him; and having, through Divine favor, attained to a good degree of this precious experience, religious doctrine was no longer speculation with him, but holy certainty. Hence, he was restrained from indulging in controversy on doctrinal subjects, which often engenders strife and contention; and, through the redeeming power of the Lord, his mind in the hour of death was preserved in sweet tranquility, having washed his "robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Thus, he passed away in a quiet state of mind, on the morning of the 12th day of the Twelfth month, 1834, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. His funeral, which took place the next day after his decease, was largely attended; and among the numbers that were present were many people of color, who in this righteous man lost a valuable, sympathizing friend and benefactor.

There is a mixture of sorrow and joy in the remembrance of this truly estimable man. When we refer to his warm-hearted friendship and hospitality, and reflect that he is gone to that bourne from whence no traveler returns, and that we can no more take sweet counsel together as in days that are past,—the mind is filled with sorrow and mourning. But again, when we consider that our loss is his eternal gain,—that he is now out of the reach of pain and sorrow, and is safely landed on that shore where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest,"—there is cause for rejoicing.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

For Friends' Intelligencer

ENGLISH SKYLARKS IN LONG ISLAND.

THE successful introduction of birds from other countries is very unusual. We are not aware of any species that has become thoroughly acclimated in this country except the English sparrow. Heartily as this enforced emigrant was at first greeted, the bird has made more enemies than it ever had friends on its first arrival.

This experiment was followed some twenty years ago, when Mr. Schieffelin, of William street, New York, of druggist fame, imported a number of English skylarks and liberated them at Flatbush, L. I. For a long time but little was seen of the birds, and it was thought that the experiment would prove a failure. After the blizzard of 1888 it was feared that the colony had all been lost; but it proved not to be so. Ever since then, having learned how to adapt themselves to the greater severity of our climate, they have been increasing rapidly, and now can be found and heard in numbers in the vicinity of Vanderveer Park, Long Island, or a few blocks to the east of it. There chances to be a farmer living east of the Holy Cross Cemetery in this locality, who is greatly interested in the protection of this pet bird, and his farm is known as "Skylark Farm."

One regrettable fact about this colony is that so far they have not distributed themselves over a wide area of country. We could wish that they had more of the habits of the sparrow in this particular; perhaps when they increase and become more numerous they will spread over a wider field. If not, means can be taken to facilitate their distribution. They are too great a prize to be allowed to do all their singing in one locality. All who have heard them abroad know what a charming feature they are in the country, and to all who have read the charming lines of Shelley the skylark will always be of very special interest.

We have repeatedly visited this spot in May and June of this year, and never failed to be charmed with all we saw and heard. One's interest deepens when he knows more about the significance of all this rich music rendered from airy heights. The song so sweetly sung is not rendered in mere caprice, for the simple love of singing, but for a purpose; it is a love-song for the mate. Rising from the field, the male bird begins an upward, easy flight, singing and soaring until nearly lost to sight. One who has heard the rapturous notes can fully appreciate Shelley's lines,

"Teach us, sprite or bird,
What sweet thoughts are thine; . . .
That panted forth a flood of rapture so divine."

When the lark has reached its height one has to gaze long and attentively before seeing the speck in the blue from which the music comes. Pausing for a time, the little songster begins a gradual descent for a brief space, finally plunging almost vertically downward and alighting in the field near where its mate, or would-be mate, is concealed in the grass. When it alights this bird, being so small, is not easily seen. Those who have had the good fortune to be near the place of alighting say that sweet as is the song sung on the wing, the bird has a sweeter and more tender note for its mate as they seek a nearer companionship. It is to be hoped that this bird has come to stay and prove a treasure from the Old World.

JOHN D. HICKS.

Old Westbury, L. I.

THE SKYLARK AND THE POET.

How the blithe Lark runs up the golden stair
That leans thro' cloudy gates from Heaven to Earth,
And all alone in the empyreal air
Fills it with jubilant sweet songs of mirth!
How far he seems, how far
With the light upon his wings;
Is it a bird or star
That shines and sings?

What matter if the days be dark and frore,
That sunbeam tells of other days to be,
And singing in the light that floods him o'er
In joy he overtakes Futurity;
Under cloud-arches vast
He peeps, and sees behind
Great Summer coming fast
Adown the wind!

And now he dives into a rainbow's rivers,
In streams of gold and purple he is drown'd;
Shrilly the arrows of his song he shivers
As tho' the stormy drops were turn'd to sound;
And now he issues thro',
He scales a cloudy tower;
Faintly, like falling dew,
His fast notes shower.

Let every wind be hush'd, that I may hear
The wondrous things he tells the world below;
Things that we dream of he is watching near,
Hopes that we never dream'd he would bestow;
Alas! the storm hath roll'd
Back the gold gates again,
Or surely he had told
All Heaven to men!

So the victorious Poet sings alone,
And fills with light his solitary home,
And thro' that glory sees new worlds foreshown,
And hears high songs, and triumphs yet to come;
He waves the air of Time
With thrills of golden chords,
And makes the world to climb
On link'd words.

What if his hair be gray, his eyes be dim,
If wealth forsake him, and if friends be cold,—
Wonder unbars her thousand gates to him,
Truth never fails, nor Beauty waxes old;
More than he tells, his eyes
Behold, his spirit hears,
Of grief, and joy, and sighs
'Twixt joy and tears.

Blest is the man who with the sound of song
Can charm away the heartache, and forget
The frost of Penury, the stings of Wrong,
And drown the fatal whisper of Regret!
Darker are the abodes
Of Kings, tho' his be poor,
While Fancies, like the gods,
Pass thro' his door.

Singing thou scalest Heaven upon thy wings,
Thou liftest a glad heart unto the skies;
He maketh his own sunrise while he sings,
And turns the dusty Earth to Paradise;
I see thee sail along
Far up the sunny streams;
Unseen, I hear his song,
I see his dreams.

—Frederick Tennyson (eldest of the three poet brothers.)

To live on, even when life seems all a failure and the comfort of life is gone, to count patient living the real thing, with or without comfort,—that is to be truly brave.—Phillips Brooks.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 35.—EIGHTH MONTH 27.

HISTORICAL SOURCES—EARLY LIFE OF DAVID.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord shall be between thee and me, and between thy seed and my seed forever.—

I. Samuel xx., 42.

Scripture Reading, I. Samuel, xxiv., 1-32.

AFTER the 15th chapter of I. Samuel the interest of the Bible narrative centres not about Saul, but about David. Up to this point the king has had the sympathy of the narrator; from this point on David is the hero and Saul takes a subordinate place. The dual narrative, several times referred to, continues in the account of the life of David and is supplemented by a new source of information not yet mentioned. The books of Chronicles, which in our Bibles follow after II. Kings tell again the story of the Hebrew kingdoms from David to the fall of Judah. They were written at a time much later than the books of Samuel and with a very different intent. The first nine chapters are given up to a series of family registers, tracing the lines of descent from Adam to the time of the kingdom. A brief chapter is devoted to Saul, telling, however, only of his death. The narrative of the kings is then taken up more in detail—chiefly, however, their relations with the ceremonial law and with the priesthood. The books of Chronicles refer as authorities to various older books (I. Chronicles, ix., 1. II. Chronicles, xxvii., 7, etc.), which seem however to be the same sources which were made use of in the writing of the parallel books of Samuel and Kings. "It may be said in a general way that Chronicles treats the older material with great freedom, reshapes it, freely makes additions to it and leaves out parts of the older narrative. At the same time, there is no mistaking the fact that the alterations made on it serve preëminently to illustrate one and the same thought, in which we may rightly recognize the leading thought of Chronicles—namely, that the Temple in Jerusalem, the Levitical priesthood of this temple, and the pious kings of Judah who were devoted to the Temple service, should appear to posterity as great and glorious." (Kittel, History of the Hebrews.) The books were undoubtedly written by some one devoted to the priestly orders, and not earlier than the fourth century before Christ, possibly as late as the second. Chronicles is therefore several hundred years later than the books of Samuel and has no further sources of information; besides being written for the special aggrandizement of the priesthood. It cannot, therefore, be considered as nearly so valuable historically as the earlier book. Ethically, also, it falls far below the books of Samuel. They were written, as were most of the Bible books, with a purpose chiefly ethical. They have the zealous prophetic ideals of the days of the prophets, and they are in marked contrast with the narrow ecclesiastical tone of the later history.

The two sources interwoven in the older story give two accounts of David's first appearance before Saul. (1) After withdrawing himself from Saul, the aged seer, Samuel, is sent by the spirit of God to Bethlehem, where he finds and anoints David, a youthful shepherd boy, the youngest son of Jesse (I. Samuel, xvi, 1-13). Soon after the boy is sent to the camp of Saul with some provisions for his elder brothers, who were in Saul's army. There he heard the challenge of Goliath, the giant of the Philistine army, and slew him in single combat. As a result of this he was made part of the king's household (I. Samuel, xvii., 1-58; xviii., 1-4). (2) Saul was afflicted with severe melancholy, and his servants sought for a skillful musician to soothe him. Then answered one of his servants, and said, "Behold, I have seen a son of Jesse, the Bethlehemite, that is cunning at playing, and a mighty valiant man and a man of war." So Saul sent for him and loved him, making him his armor bearer. (I. Samuel, xvi., 14-23.) There is no better example of the combining of inconsistent narrative in the historical books of the Bible than this. We are first introduced to David as a boy, ruddy of countenance and keeping his father's sheep. Then in the same chapter he is mentioned as "a mighty valiant man, and a man of war," who is made the king's armor bearer. Then in the next chapter he goes, again as a mere boy, to the camp of Saul's army. Saul and his officers know nothing of him. After the victory over the Philistines, Saul asks of his captain "who's son is the stripling," and the captain did not know. Another difficulty appears when we read in II. Samuel, xxi., 19, that "there was again war with the Philistines at Gob; and Elhanan . . . slew Goliath, the Gittite, whose spear was like the weaver's beam."

Plainly it is impossible to know, in such confusion, the actual facts of the presentation of David to the king. The second account as given above (I. Samuel, xvi., 14-23) is thought to be older and the more probable. In the Greek translation of the Bible called the Septuagint, made about two hundred and fifty or three hundred years before Christ, a considerable portion of the later narrative is omitted.

The further course of David's progress toward the throne of Israel has been partly indicated in the preceding lesson. The king's daughter was given him in marriage and he rose rapidly to high position in the army. In Jonathan, Saul's eldest son, he found a friend not to be equalled in all the history of the world for faithfulness and self-sacrificing generosity.

Driven forth by the king's jealousy he brought down the wrath of Saul on the priest of Nob, who, ignorant of his breach with Saul, had ministered to the necessities of the fugitive. (I. Samuel, xxi., 1-9; xxii., 9-19.) David took refuge finally in the cave of Adullam, probably not far from his home at Bethlehem, and a large number of outlaws gathered around him. They gained a livelihood by levying on the property of the inhabitants, whom they in turn protected from the fiercer marauders of the desert. During this period David more than once showed his magnanimity by sparing the life of Saul, who was hunting him through the hills as if he were a wild beast. After a time David strengthened his position in his native tribe of Judah by marriage with a wealthy widow (I. Samuel, xxv., 1-44). It was during this period that occurred the death of Samuel the Seer, who had apparently withdrawn from public affairs after his separation from Saul.

The acquisition of wealth by his marriage made David more vulnerable to attack, and he could no longer hide in caves with other outlaws. It was now that he was forced to become a vassal of the Philistine king, as mentioned in the last lesson. This Philistine king, Achish, trusted David fully and made him governor over one of his towns, thus relieving him from the necessity of remaining in the royal city with his former enemies. When war against Israel was renewed, David was summoned with the other nobles to follow the Philistine king against Saul. It was a hard position. If he fought against his countrymen and shed their blood he could hardly hope ever to be their king. From this predicament he was relieved by the jealousy of the other nobles, who insisted that David should be sent back lest he should betray them. Protesting with his lips, yet doubtless rejoicing in his heart, he returned to Ziklag, his city, and had no part in the defeat and death of Saul.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

FRIENDS' PRINCIPLES APPLIED.

SUPPLEMENTING what has already been well said on the subject in recent issues of the INTELLIGENCER, of the importance of carefully maintaining our testimonies and following closely the practices of Friends, I will relate an incident that came under my personal notice some time ago. A school girl in her teens (about her fifteenth year), living in a remote section of one of the north-western States, read in Barnes' School History of the United States (especially the foot notes, pages 69-71, new edition) of the integrity of the Quakers, their honesty in all temporal matters, their adherence to their faith under difficulties, and of William Penn's rectitude in dealing with the natives of his colony, Pennsylvania. Although she had not before heard of the Friends, these things made such an impression on her mind that she decided after careful deliberation to become a Friend if ever her lot was cast among them. In fact, so far as was possible, she adopted the views of Friends, left off dancing and many other diversions, dressed unostentatiously, and, in some degree, used the language of the Friends. After a few years she came to California and was engaged in the Indian service. Learning that there was a little colony of Friends in San Francisco she decided to make that city her home, and learn by mingling with them if they came up to the high standard she had set for them. Suffice it to say, without going into further details, she has been received into membership with Friends after a year and more residence here, and is now a consistent and valued member of the little colony that meets on First-day mornings at 11 o'clock at Swarthmore Hall, on Rincon Hill.

NOTE.—She did not make known any of the circumstances above related until she was received by Friends, and then only casually. A. B. C.

San Francisco, Eighth month 10, 1899.

THE heart is wiser than the intellect, and works with swifter hands and surer feet toward wise conclusions.—J. G. Holland.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

"BEG PARDON."

THE relaxation from business cares and thoughts at a resort of health and pleasure-seekers, is apt to carry memories far back into the past. My friend of the winter, in his broken English, told me many of his early experiences. Landing at New Orleans, nearly fifty years ago, when he was about twenty-one years of age, with but one dollar in his pocket, he found a place and earned two dollars, at his trade of blacksmithing, the first day ashore.

The combination of ability and ambition, shown then, has brought to him prosperity as a merchant, and, now, withdrawn from active business life, his chief interest, for the time, seemed to be to find an artist of the brush or needle who would picture for him the hanging branches of the pepper tree. His persistence in demanding faithfulness to nature in the picture illustrated another phase of character which, no doubt, had a good share in his success.

Nothing in his intercourse with his fellow-men which he recounted seemed to have impressed him as much as the instruction given by an American whom he met on ship-board, and who said he could teach him the necessary English for use on landing, in the two words, "Beg pardon!"

This phrase is used, as we know, in the light questioning which asks a repetition of something said, often whether understood or not. This friend of mine evidently took the lesson of these words much more seriously. The thought to him was that the phrase, timely used, indicated to those whom he met in the new land with its strange language, a proper attitude of mind, showing courtesy and the desire to be right. The fruit of the lesson was evident in the gentle bearing of the man and in the respect felt for him.

Early in life we think it a serious matter to ask pardon of another, extreme pride preventing us from doing so when we should, but the light use of the words may well be avoided as another extreme.

Santa Barbara, Cal.

G.

GOD within us! Not only ever with us unseen, not only watching us in our secret moments and reading the very thoughts of our hearts, not only covering us with the shadow of his wings and lighting us with the light of his countenance, but within us,—our bodies his temples, our hearts his home. Oh, if we could but grasp the thought, we should live lives nobler and more beautiful.—F. W. Farrar.

IT is a great advantage to learn first-rate poetry and prose early by heart, because they recur to the memory when we lose later things. I have found them a great comfort and solace. We grow old, and, from weariness or weakness, become incapable of retaining new things properly.—Tennyson.

IT contributes greatly towards a man's moral and intellectual health to be brought into habits of companionship with individuals unlike himself, who care little for his pursuits, and whose sphere and abilities he must go out of himself to appreciate.—Hawthorne.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN

PHILADELPHIA, EIGHTH MONTH 19, 1899.

Please address business letters to "Friends' Intelligencer, 921 Arch Street, Philadelphia." Communications and contributions to "Editors Friends' Intelligencer," same address.

LACK OF REVERENCE.

TENNYSON long ago besought us to let "more of reverence in us dwell;" and his injunction is more needed to-day than ever before. The conditions of our modern era are breaking down the old-time traditions; the dignity and the sweetness of life are threatened by the smart innovators of the hour, and the things that were dear to our fathers are too lightly esteemed by our superior generation.

We felicitate ourselves on the improvements of recent years, and on the conveniences with which we are enriched. But has a corresponding enrichment of our spiritual life resulted? Has a nobler manhood and womanhood come with the growth of physical comfort? We hear on all sides this talk of the wonderful advance of modern science. This is a rational thing, and arises from the conquests which are being made over the forces of nature, conquests the like of which no previous age has been given to witness. But are these outward gifts of the Creator to absorb our powers of admiration, while we gradually drift away from those precious inner gifts which are of the essence of eternity? It would seem as if the ancients—who, if they did not sleep and travel so luxuriously as we to-day, yet who "saw life steadily and saw it whole"—reached perhaps nearer to the true standards and ideals.

"Of atom force and chemic stew
Nor Socrates nor Cæsar knew,
But the old ages knew a plan—
The lost art—how to mold a man."

We are suffering in America to-day from a tide of irreverence. The older nations rightly point with scorn to a land where ignorant, commonplace men are permitted to ascend to high stations, and then, entrenched in their littleness, scoff at the sacred names of honor and justice. The corrupting tendencies of much of the popular press are acknowledged. "Sunday" editions, with their demoralizing effects, flourish openly. Our English cousins, whom we are apt to consider as less acute than ourselves, do not permit the publication of these sheets. Perhaps when we seek to revive more of the old-fashioned virtues of English character we shall stand higher in the scale of civilization.

The worst sign of this besetting irreverence is the impatience with which its critics are heard. One who attempts to oppose the great flood of national worldliness is looked upon in many quarters as unpatriotic. At the present hour his lot is a particularly hard one. The rank and file of his countrymen stigmatize him as disloyal if he lifts his voice against what his conscience tells him is an unjustifiable war. A year ago one of the noblest of living teachers was subjected to unmeasured abuse for his position in this matter. Scores of young men to whom his teaching has been the greatest inspiration of their lives were compelled to hear this wise, high-souled professor vilified by the rabble of the press and by cheap demagogues.

The Friends who are traveling among the Doukhobors speak of the simplicity of life among those people. Not until there is a return to greater simplicity of living and to a reverence for the enduring things of the spirit, can America hope to remove the stigma which rests upon her. Right-mindedness and refinement are abundant enough among certain classes; let all who possess these qualities steadily set themselves to overcome this alarming and increasing national lack of reverence.

THE interesting article in this issue on the English skylarks in Long Island, by our friend John D. Hicks, recalls the inspiration which this sweetest of all the songsters of the bird-world has constantly been to the poets. We propose to present our readers from week to week several of the choicest of the poems on the skylark.

Two correspondents call our attention to a refutation, in a later number of the Youth's Companion, of the account of "Monkeys Picking Cotton," which we quoted in last week's issue; so we must give up the attractive picture we had formed of the little creatures assisting the southern planters in the cotton fields.

CAN anyone kindly give us the address of Lybie Carter? A letter has been sent to her in our care.

BIRTHS.

FOULKE.—At Decatur, Ill., Seventh month 6, 1899, to Edward L. and Gyneitha C. Foulks, a son, who is named Robert Jerome.

HARVEY.—At Media, Pa., Seventh month 25, 1899, to Dr. Ellis Marshall and Phebe Scarlett Harvey, a daughter, who is named Anna Bartram.

JOYCE.—At Swarthmore, Pa., Seventh month 29, 1899, to C. Duane and Mary P. Joyce, a son, who is named Robert Swift.

DEATHS.

GIVEN.—Mary Ann Given, wife of the late Joel Given, of Illinois, departed this life Seventh month 31, 1899, aged 81 years, 8 months, and 25 days. She died at the home of her son-in-law and wife, Dr. J. B. and Mattie Hollingsworth, of Quaker City, Ohio, where she had made her home for fifteen years and by whom she was tenderly cared for.

This dear Friend was a devoted member of the Religious Society of Friends, and her life and conversation evinced to those with whom she mingled that she was daily concerned to live soberly, righteously, and Godly before men. She frequently expressed a desire that all Friends wherever found would unite together in forming a strong body, and thus be a wonderful power for good in the world.

HALLOWELL.—At his residence, Rockland, Sandy Spring, Maryland, Eighth month 11, 1899, Henry C. Hallowell, aged 70 years.

He was eldest son of Benjamin and Margaret E. Hallowell, and was born in Alexandria, Va. He leaves a remarkable example of what the mind and will can accomplish even when the tenants of a delicate, frail body. At an early age he evinced the faculty of seeing "a silver lining to every cloud." Being constantly in his father's society he treasured in his memory the many lessons learned from that noble source, where he was taught that "To improve the understanding corrects and enlarges the heart." After taking a course in his father's school he went to Yale College, graduated, and returned to become a teacher in Alexandria. His health gave way, however, under the long confinement, and travel was advised. During an extended visit to Europe he gathered rich treasure of information; and as it was his habit ever to share all that was good and beautiful stored in his mind, he gave forth much for the pleasure and benefit to others.

Soon after his return home he married Sarah Miller, of Alexandria, daughter of Robert H. and Anna Miller. They came to Rockland, to live on the farm purchased by Benjamin Hallowell years before. Although "not to the manor born," he made it "blossom as a rose." He soon became interested in every movement for advance in Sandy Spring, joined the Farmers' Club, and held offices in the Insurance Company, the Bank, and other organizations; but the Society that appealed most to his taste and which he loved the best, was, as he often called it, "the beautiful Horticultural." There the young and old of both sexes met and discussed topics that he enjoyed,—the orchard, garden, and lawn, and their improvement. He was always its President. His father and mother, after giving up teaching, joined him at Rockland, and their declining years were cheered and comforted by this devoted son and his wife. The younger couple having raised their children, four daughters and three sons, felt at liberty to seek other fields of usefulness. Henry opened Rockland School for girls, which was for years a great success. He studied the best interests of all, and the peculiar disposition of each. He made his pupils his friends ever after; they always rejoiced in the opportunity of visiting him again. Eleven years before his death, after a journey through the West, he suffered months of acute illness, and never after had even a brief respite of perfect freedom from pain. His patience and fortitude, the cheerful and unselfish manner in which he endured suffering, made a deep impression upon the community, and the influence of his example must affect the lives of many.

His nature was truly religious; "he was soothed and sustained by an unfaltering trust," and day by day lived his creed, ever ready to say, "Look not mournfully into the past; it comes not back again. Wisely improve the present, it is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear and with a manly heart."

M. B. M.

Olney, Md.

JONES.—Suddenly, at Balla Wray, Lake Windermere, England, Seventh month 28, 1899, William Jones, of Sunderland, aged 73 years. Interment at Friends' Burial Ground, Bishopwearmouth, Sunderland, Eighth month 1.

[He was a well-known and highly esteemed Friend, active for a long time in Peace work, and author of the volume, "Quaker Campaigns," recently reviewed in FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER.]

PARRISH.—At Chatel Guyon, France, Eighth month 10, 1899, Dillwyn Parrish, Jr., of London, England, formerly of Philadelphia, son of the late William D. and Elizabeth W. Parrish, aged 59 years, 2 months; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

ROBINSON.—At her home near Hopewell, Frederic county, Va., Fourth month 12, 1899, Mary Frances Robinson, in her 64th year; a member of Hopewell Monthly Meeting.

She was left a widow twenty-eight years ago, with three small children, all of whom survive her, and who mourn the loss of a loving mother.

WALKER.—Near New Centreville, Eighth month 12, 1899, Ellen R., widow of Thomas U. Walker, in her 82d year. Interment at Valley Friends' ground, Pa.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

X.—WALES AND THE WELSH BORDER.

BY HOWARD M. JENKINS.

THE Eisteddfod exercises practically closed on the 21st of Seventh month, but I remained at Cardiff until next day, using the morning of the 22d for visits to the public library and museum. The former contains two rare old manuscript books, in Welsh, one a poem by Aneurin, the famous old bard, the other the laws of Howell Dda (Howell the Good). Both are well preserved, and are fine manuscripts in the old Gothic letter, on vellum. In the museum there are interesting collections illustrative of Welsh history, arts, and archæology; and the curator, Mr. Ward, is earnestly exerting himself to make them so extensive and important that the museum will become the national one of Wales, as that at Dublin is of Ireland.

From Cardiff I should have come northward up the Wye valley, and stopped at Tintern Abbey, but my morning engagements compelled me to take an afternoon train. I therefore went to Newport and up the valley of the Usk, by Abergavenny, to Hereford, and thence to Leominster. This, also, is a fine ride, through a picturesque country. It is along the eastern border of Wales, through country which was earnestly fought over for hundreds of years, by the Saxons from the eastward, and the Britons, who held the mountain country on the western side. Now, however, it is peaceful enough. At Leominster I was met by our friend Theodore Neild (who was the predecessor of John William Graham at Dalton Hall, Manchester, and in charge there for twenty-one years), and I spent with him and his family, at their home, "The Vista," a delightful visit extending to the morning of the 25th,—attending the Friends' meeting on the 23d. Leominster (Lemster) is a pretty town, with an interesting old church, and a notable town-hall (not now in public use), of the "timbered" style. The Friend, London, which is under the direction of Henry Stanley Newman, whose home is at Leominster, is printed here, at the "Orphans' Press," the name of the printing-office being derived from a charitable home for orphans which is here maintained. On the 24th, Theodore Neild took me for a drive, thirteen miles southward, to Hereford (through which I passed on the 22d, but without time to see the places). This is a cathedral town, and the bishop of Hereford I remembered gratefully for his excellent peace sermon which I heard at The Hague. Our drive, especially that homeward, was very pleasant. The farmers were at work getting in their hay,—as, indeed, I have seen them now for weeks, in the different parts which I have visited. Hereford (Herr-e-ford) is famous as a county for its cattle, for hops, and for pears and apples. Theodore Neild's home is in the midst of gardens, orchards, etc., and in the strawberry beds the rare, sweet Alpine strawberry was still bearing its fruit freely.

From Leominster I came northward through Shrewsbury, to Ruabon, and up the Dee to the Vale of Llangollen, stopping off at Shrewsbury to see that famous old town on the Severn, with its castle (only to be viewed from the outside), its pretty grounds along the river, and its quaint old houses. It was market-day, as it happened, and I went into the cattle market to see them selling at auction, in three or four places at once, the horses, cows, sheep, and pigs that had been brought in. I reached Llangollen mid-afternoon, and had time to see some of its attractions before bed-time. Next morning I went up the Dee to Bala, and the following day to Blaenau Festiniog, to Portmadoc (and back again) and to Bettws-y-Coed. Next day, the 28th, I took the coach-ride southward to Beddgelert, near the foot of Snowdon, with a supplementary trip to the Pass of Aberglaslyn, and upon returning went northward down the valley of the Conway to the north coast of Wales, and to the beautiful sea-side place, Colwyn Bay, where I visited our friend William Edward Turner, editor of the British Friend.

* * *

This summary of the trip from Cardiff to Colwyn Bay, from the extreme south to the extreme north of Wales, should of course be filled out with many details, in order to do justice to the subject, and to be fair also to those who may read these letters. The places visited are among those of most interest in the mountain region of northern Wales, but only a small part of the many that are picturesque and beautiful. My time did not permit a longer stay, or more extended visits. Llangollen is one of the places which are generally seen by tourists. Its surroundings are charming, and a day or two may be well spent there. The ride up the Dee, by Berwyn and Corwen, to Bala, gives a succession of mountain views and valley glimpses. Bala itself is not so attractive, though it has some good points,—the lake (Llyn Tegid) from which the Dee issues, and the beautiful Trewern, coming down through the Arenig mountains on the north, to join the Dee. I went out from the town to see the old farm and dwelling, Coed-y-foel (the wood of the bare hill), from which Edward Foulke came to Gwynedd, (Pennsylvania), in 1698. It is occupied by a tenant, and belongs to the Price family, whose fine home, Rhiwlas, is on the banks of the tumbling Trewern, above the town, and has extensive and beautiful grounds.

From Bala, the ride north-westward to Blaenau Festiniog is in the higher hills and narrower valleys. The latter place is a comparatively new town, devoted to the slate industry, and the mountains rising around are being cut and quarried away by a busy army of men. To Portmadoc, which is some fifteen miles southward, on the western sea-coast, you go by what is called the toy railway, a road of but two feet gauge, passing over heavy grades, and in view of fine mountains and valleys. As already said, I returned by the same route, to Blaenau Festiniog; the round trip occupies about two hours. From there over to Bettws-y-Coed is another charming ride. Bettws is a popular resort, with several admirable hotels, and a large number of boarding and lodging houses. In the "tourist season" of July and August thousands of visitors come for brief or longer stay, and it is much like the favorite places in the White Mountains or the Berkshire Hills. The situation reminds one of North Conway, N. H. The coach-drives, which may be taken over several different routes, are a very pleasant feature. That which I took to Beddgelert, about 16½ miles, and back, was a delightful experience. The day could hardly have been more suitable, nor the enjoyment more complete.

From Bettws down the valley of the Conway to the northern coast, is pretty; the mountains of North Wales continue to the sea, and from a good point of view the outlines even of those in the interior may be made out. The region shares popularity with the Lake District of north-western England, and the Highlands of Scotland, and the number of summer visitors no doubt increases. Many are from America; at Bettws, at the Royal Oak hotel, out of seventy-five names on the register, within ten days, thirty-three were from the United States, and four from Canada. English is spoken, of course, at all the places a traveler is likely to go into, but Welsh is the usual language of the people, and many of them have no other. Their agriculture is simply but carefully carried on; there is relatively a large portion in pasture and meadow, and a small portion under cultivation. It is too elevated for wheat; our Indian corn is of course out of the question. Here and there are some potato fields. At Coed-y-foel there were well-filled hay barns, and a little horse-power lever, for churning and grinding. The valleys are green—deep green,—the hill-sides wooded sometimes, but the mountains generally quite bare. The roads are all good, and hundreds of cyclists, of both sexes, were enjoying them in every direction.

Colwyn Bay, North Wales.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

A VISIT TO ILLINOIS FRIENDS AT CLEAR CREEK.

IN obedience to an apprehended duty, my wife and I left Chicago on the morning of the 28th of last month for a visit among the Friends at Clear Creek, Ill. The desire was to be at their meeting on First-day, and to visit each family socially, rather than religiously. We went first to Wenona, where we were kindly met by David Wilson, and taken to his home, and were soon engaged in a pleasant, social visit with him and his wife, Lydia, and his three daughters, two of whom were home for a short visit. David took me to see David Moon, an old Friend, in his eighty-sixth year, and nearly blind. After tea we went to visit the zinc-smelting mill at that place, which was very interesting to me, as I had never seen the process of reducing the ore.

In the morning a number of people from the village came in at D. Wilson's request, and we held a parlor meeting, in which the practical nature and effects of true religion were opened, apparently to the satisfaction of those gathered. Next morning David took us to the home of Isaac and Belle Wieman, where we were kindly entertained until our friend Joshua L. Mills, from Clear Creek, came for us.

First-day morning the weather was delightfully pleasant. We went with Joshua to their First-day school, which we enjoyed; this was followed by the meeting which, as notice had been given, was quite largely attended. The audience was a mixed one, but closely attentive and receptive, as I was led to open my understanding of Friends' idea of the work of salvation and restoration.

In the evening, at the home of Abel A. and Elizabeth Mills, where friends were invited and a parlor meeting held, quite a number gathered. I was led to address several states, followed by Abel, in a short but impressive testimony, after which, at the request of Joshua L. Mills, some questions were asked and answered to the best of our ability. It was felt and acknowledged to have been a satisfactory season.

On Second-day morning Joshua L. Mills (to whom we had left the arrangements for the proposed visits which I desired should include each family and part of family belonging to their meeting), came for us and took us to visit several families during the day; we spent the night at the home of Alfred and Margaret Givens, who very kindly entertained us.

Third-day morning we awakened to find an apparently severe thunder storm approaching, but on reaching us the rainfall was gentle and did not interfere with our plans. Our first call was on Lydia Griffith, a Friend past 80 years of age.

After quite a number of interesting visits we went to the old home of Carver Tomlinson to see his widow, Mary Ann, and their daughter Alice, whom we found to be an invalid. There we also met with Mahlon Hollingsworth and wife, Josephine, from West Liberty, Iowa. After a call on W. and M. Mills we went to the home of Henry T. and Mary S. Mills, nearby, for the night.

On Fourth-day morning Joshua Mills came again for us to go to the home of Amos and Anne Wilson. This was the old homestead of the Wilson family in this neighborhood. We staid with them until after dinner, and spent the time in an interesting, and I trust, profitable conversation.

After making another call we went to the home of Morris and Emma Wilson, where we found Martha John, from East Jordan, and her sister, Sarah Hough, with her daughter, Myrtle, from Elgin, Ill., Martha and Sarah being sisters of Emma. This home has been saddened by the recent loss of a daughter, and while we enjoyed and engaged in pleasant conversation, yet we could feel this bereavement was most keenly felt. A quiet word of encouragement was left, and we went to the home of Oliver S. and Martha Mills for the night. There Joshua left us, and we shall never forget his kindness in enabling us to visit each family in this social way.

These visits have left as sweet an impress upon our mind and endeared us to the visited as much as any other visits of a religious nature we have ever made, and they appeared to be most keenly appreciated by the visited. After spending the night with our kind friends, Oliver and their daughter took us to Varna to take our train for Chicago, where we arrived safely. We shall stay here until the 18th of this month, when we commence our work within Indiana Yearly Meeting.

JOHN J. CORNELL.

Chicago, Eighth month 4, 1899.

MT. PALATINE, ILL., Eighth month 4, 1899.

On last First-day, the 30th ult., we had with us the very acceptable company of John J. Cornell and wife, at our meeting. John arose with the quotation of Scripture, "What shall I do to be saved?" and went on to illustrate in his usual logical and convincing manner, I think, so that the common mind could follow easily.

Notice having been given, there were quite a number from the vicinity, other than Friends, who were well pleased. The meeting closed with an earnest supplication to the Throne of Grace. In the evening Abel Mills called a parlor meeting at his house, which proved to be very satisfactory,—about thirty present. John and his wife visited socially all the families of Friends in this vicinity. We would be glad to welcome any other Friends who may be drawn this way at any time.

J. L. M.

LETTER FROM ABBY D. MUNRO.

At the request of a friend, Abby D. Munro has written the following—in addition to what was in the Visitor—which will be read with interest, even at this late date, by the friends of the Laing School.—EDS.

We closed the year with very hopeful feelings, having received more than usual encouragement, by letter, from our friends, and funds sufficient to pay all expenses, enabling us to place the money received from the Wilkes Company Bond with the one thousand already on hand, as a nucleus for our Endowment Fund.

We can look back upon a pleasant, successful year, although it was marked, as none other has been, by changes caused by the marriage of three of our teachers. It is no easy matter to fill the places made vacant by those who have served so long and so faithfully; but we think we have met with much success, and, in the future, all will go on smoothly as heretofore. A frequent change of teachers is detrimental to any school, we are assured.

In spite of the fact that we had an unusually severe winter, the attendance was excellent, especially in the higher rooms, and at the close we found about fifty who had not been absent at all, greatly to their credit.

Sometimes, like all other workers, we feel that we would like to see more of the results of our labors; but when we were told that a gentleman who came to Mt. Pleasant on official business, last year, said he had never been in any place, outside of the city, where the colored people could read and write so generally and so well as in our section; when we hear it said, in recommendation of the village as a place of residence, that the colored people, as a class, are orderly and well-behaved; when we remember that there has never been any race trouble anywhere in that region ; and then call to mind the fact that for two-thirds of the time since this school has been established it has been the only one within thirty or forty miles,—we are compelled to think that its influence is being felt, quietly but surely, and will go on. So we take courage in the assurance that our labor has not been in vain.

Now a word about our little Visitor. With October will begin the second volume of our double sheet. We wish those of our contributors and friends who have never received it would send us their names to place upon our mailing list. We were encouraged by the subscriptions last year, and trust the number will increase the coming year. We are glad to receive subscriptions (twenty-five cents per year) in stamps, for which we always find use.

As this will perhaps meet the eyes of some who have not seen the Visitor for May, we wish again to thank all who have sent us barrels during the year. The proceeds of our Dorcas room are of the greatest help to us, not only in "clothing the naked" and helping to care for the "fatherless and the orphans," but in supplying funds for the alterations and repairs which are always needed. So please remember the barrels.

ABBY D. MUNRO.

Bristol, R. I., Eighth month 4, 1899.

BLOCH'S GREAT BOOK ON MODERN WAR.

V.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

Now that the labors of the Peace Conference at The Hague are so nearly, for the present, and so satisfactorily concluded, Professor Mielle's account of the part of women in bringing about this great result, will, I am sure, be read with interest. I may also say here that I think our friends will feel well satisfied that they, in their organized capacity as a yearly meeting, felt at liberty to urge upon the Conference the importance of an International Court of Arbitration, in which our American Commissioners in an especial manner have taken so active a part, and so deep an interest. Andrew D. White, chairman of our Commissioners, has felt strengthened and encouraged from the beginning by the warm interest in the movement felt by those at home whom he and his co-workers had the honor to represent.

EDWARD H. MAGILL.

Swarthmore College.

WOMEN'S PEACE ASSOCIATIONS.

I had proposed not to close this series of articles upon the peaceful movement to which the circular of the Czar has given rise without reverting again to the great importance and the serious signification of the action of women in this crusade toward the ideal Holy Land of Universal Peace.

A letter which the Princess Wiszniewska, President of the League of Women for International Disarmament, has done me the honor of writing me, has fully persuaded me to do so. It is to the kind lady readers of this journal (Les Pyrenees, Republican Journal of Tarbes) that I especially address myself to-day, acknowledging in advance my intention to proselyte, and—ought I to say?—my secret hope of numerous conversions. But before coming to what is the principal object of this article, I wish to explain myself very frankly upon one of the most important points of the peaceful program, and answer in advance the objections which I anticipate.

I know that many women would be fully disposed to join in our crusade, but for the fear of appearing, by their union with it, to pronounce against the army, which, as good French women, they love with all their hearts. Let me assure them that I praise this sentiment and partake of it. Mothers, wives, sisters, relatives or other near connections of officers, many women have reasoned with themselves as follows :

"How could we unite in a movement the avowed object of which is the disbanding of the armies, that is to say, the loss for our sons, our husbands, and our brothers, of a situation obtained at the expense of so many sacrifices and labors? With what heart could we contribute toward putting literally upon the street those who are the support and the honor of our families."

My answer to this objection will be brief and direct. No one, and the Czar less than any other, has thought nor now thinks of the dismissal of a single soldier, from the infantry, cavalry, or the artillery. They propose only to stop the growth of the armaments, and the increase of the forces now enlisted ; that is to say, they wish to agree upon a general statu quo for a fixed period, say for five or ten years. However, if, as is to be desired, the establishing of a permanent Tribunal of Arbitration should so far remove all danger of armed conflict, that it would be possible to think of a partial disbanding of the armies, the present organizations, that is, the officers and most of the subordinate officers would be retained to form a permanent nucleus of defense, which would enable the nations to be prepared for all emergencies. Our lady readers—as charming as practical—may therefore be reassured and yield to all the goodness of their nature, to all the generosity of their hearts, to all their feelings of pity as women and mothers, to unite in our cry of execration against wars and to take part in the crusade of women against barbarism. For the women have entered upon the crusade, and already their number very far surpasses that of the enthusiasts whom the impassioned words of Peter the Hermit had formerly sent forth over all the roads of the East and the West to the conquest of the tomb of Christ. As in the Middle Ages, the men and women of this close of the nineteenth century have taken their places in closed battalions around the peaceful banner ; and in the ranks of these soldiers of peace, great ladies and working women, ladies of the middle classes and peasants, march in sisterly affection side by side. Two hundred and fifty thousand Swedish women, one hundred thousand German, many thousand English, American, and Italian women have taken the cross of Peace, and missionaries, with their eloquence of gentleness and persuasion, are striving to win over to the Gospel of Peace the armed barbarians of military Europe. Thanks to the Princess Wiszniewska, the women of Europe have found a common centre of their efforts and their propaganda. All French women ought to be proud that that centre of feminine influence is Paris, or rather France entire. For this League of Women for International Disarmament is a French society. Approved and authorized by the Minister of the Interior on the 28th of August,

1897, the League, presided over by the Princess Wiszniewska, includes in its ranks the most illustrious women in Parisian society, the most distinguished writers, and the most noble women whose names adorn the "Golden Book of Charity."

But thus far the number of French women who have joined the League is too restricted for one to be able, as in the case of the countries above cited, to reckon France among the nations in which women have fully arrayed themselves on the side of Peace and Civilization against War and Barbarism. And yet, who better than the French woman, can appreciate the evils of war, and who better than she understands how to take advantage of the benefits of peace? Have not the French mothers throughout history woven for their heroic martyr the crown of glory with which ten centuries of battles have adorned the brow of France? Have not our brave French women acquired and dearly bought the right to say: "Enough bloodshed! Enough tears! We wish to keep our sons, our fathers, our husbands! We refuse to be hereafter, for the pitiless slayers of men, only the despised and disdained furnishers of food for cannon. We are no longer willing that ambitious men should carve for themselves from the fragments of our bleeding hearts realms or prebendaries. We wish for peace, and shall well understand how to impose it upon the world!" Women of France, learn how to impose this peace, for it is by it, and thanks to it that France, rich and free, will become, in the midst of a united and sympathetic Europe, the centre of attraction, the fruitful and active brain, whence once more will rapidly proceed, radiant and triumphant, the grand idea of human Fraternity. If there is one consideration which, among so many, others ought in an especial manner to make of all French women convinced and active advocates of peace, it is the consideration of the material disasters which war would involve, and the ruin which will be the fatal consequence of an armed peace. For to the gift of the grace and the sovereign and charming elegance which is hers by right of nature, the French woman adds another no less precious although more modest. It is in vain that with her blood France has strewn her gold throughout Europe; it is in vain that she has scattered her savings to the four winds of speculation, and rendered fruitful by her resources the five continents of the earth. Always, thanks to the legendary woolen stocking knit by your blessed hands, oh dear laboring women of the sweet land of France, the native country has risen from her disasters, has recovered her savings, and the astonished world seeks in your hands the purse of Fortunatus. It is into your hands, French women, that falls the principal part of the fortune of France: wives or daughters of the middle class, of merchants, of farmers, of manufacturers, you are the true producers; but for you, your vigilant economy, your skillful direction, no house could prosper, all economy would be impossible, and labor, even the most assiduous, would be powerless and unproductive.

It is for you then, French women, to rise and protect the fortune of France. To the sweet feminine pity which makes you abhor blood and wounds—those horrible wounds of the new arms which tear the tissues, break the bones, deform the limbs,—to that love stronger than death which makes you dispute for the possession of your children, inch by inch, with the great Destroyer; to these qualities of the wife and mother, add the generous indignation of the good housekeeper who sees vanish in smoke the painfully accumulated gains of the household. Present to your minds France ruined and exhausted by war or an armed peace; see that France, which you have been able to make so rich and so prosperous, reduced to the condition of unhappy Italy or poor Spain! and say if it is not time that you were making those men, whom the flash of steel or the sound of the trumpet still hypnotizes, understand the voice of reason. Like the Sabines of old, throw yourselves into the midst of the people in arms, entreat them, in the name of the love they bear you; and now, as formerly, the fiercest will let fall their arms, and one day grateful Humanity will place upon the head of peace-making woman the crown snatched from the brow of the conqueror.

The following statistics will be of interest:

The League of Women for International Disarmament, at Paris, No. 7 Rue de Débarcadère (President, Princess Wiszniewska) is the central organization of the Women's Peace Associations.

The Alliance between French and English women, which includes more than 165,000 members, was concluded on the 28th of April, 1898; between French and American women, on the 4th of June and the 6th of September, 1898, and at the same time with Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, and other women.

Mme. Lina Morgenstern, a true heroine of charity, is the soul of the League of the North. It is she who, with the aid of Mme. Jenny Asch, of Breslau, Mme. Stritt, of Dresden, and Mme. Holtzel, of Hamburg, has brought to the League nearly 100,000 German women.

It is to the League of Paris, and to its distinguished President, that belongs, without question, the initiative of the beautiful movement of women for Peace. Princess Wiszniewska has put all her heart and soul into it, consecrated to it all her time, and has succeeded in uniting more than 300,000 women, acting in concert for this peaceful propaganda. From Washington alone they have recently sent her the names of 100,000 more members.

Names for the League are received by Mme. Mieille, 59 rue des Pyreneés, Tarbes. P. Mieille.

Professor at the Lycée de Tarbes, France.

IN this mysterious life

There's always gladness somewhere,

In spite of its pain and strife;

And somewhere the sin and sorrow

Of earth are known no more;

Somewhere our weary spirits,

Shall find a peaceful shore. —A. C. Shaw.

TAKE thou no thought for aught save right and truth;

Life holds for finer souls no equal prize;

Honours and wealth are baubles to the wise,

And pleasure flies on swifter wing than youth.

—Sir Lewis Morris.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.

IV.—AT THE NORTH CAPE.

THE usual good fortune of our excursion was vouchsafed us for the ascent of the North Cape, on Seventh month 9th. One in eight is about the proportion of clear days here, according to the testimony of our captain.

Shortly after 10 the launches began to carry ashore the passengers, of whom about 150 availed themselves of the opportunity. A rather arduous climb by a path variously rugged with stones, or slippery with snow or mud, brought us in forty-five minutes to a plateau, and in a few minutes over this to the edge of the North Cape. Nothing grander could be conceived. A vast expanse of water stretched away in all directions, limited only by the horizon. In the west, in almost cloudless sky, lay the midnight sun some degrees above the horizon, whence soon after 12 it began to rise. The enthusiasm was even greater than on the night before. Photography occupied some, the grandeur of the scene entranced others, and many wrote appropriate postal cards to absent friends. The steward in charge of the mail informed me that 4,000 postal cards were mailed from North Cape, and 2,000 from Hammerfest, in the morning. Fortunately a Norwegian excursion steamer lay at anchor at the foot of the Cape, and carried our letters at once to Tronjheim, whence they could proceed by rail.

North Cape is no settlement, simply a place for visitation by travelers, mainly on excursion steamers, of which ours is one. During the summer months a man lives on the Cape, and it is he who sells the wine and postals which appear to be the sole commodities dealt in here. The descent of 1,000 feet was even more difficult than the ascent, many persons preferring at times to sit down and slide for a distance, while falls were not infrequent. It was, however, accomplished without serious accident, and by 2 a. m. most were aboard the ship. Had the darkness of even an ordinary night prevailed, the descent would have been impossible.

At 3 a. m. the anchor was weighed and we started on our voyage to Spitzbergen, where we arrived in Advent Bay, 4 p. m. of the 11th. The voyage was uneventful, a pair of icebergs of moderate size being the only unusual objects encountered.

The Augusta Victoria lay at this place in the ice fiord until the morning of the 13th, for the benefit of those fond of hunting. To the rest of us it seemed a waste of time, as the shores are bleak and uninhabited, and it was cold, cloudy, and rainy throughout our stay. Perhaps I should not say uninhabited, because in a house adjacent to the shore have lived for eighteen months two families, including three men, two women, and an interesting child four years old. This barren land of "Pointed Mountains," made up of several peninsulas and islands, has heretofore enjoyed the distinction of belonging to no country, though I am informed that Norway and Russia jointly are about assuming formal possession. At times, even in summer, the fiord is so full of ice that vessels cannot enter it. In the winter the temperature falls as low as sixty below zero. The redeeming features to the excursionist are the beautiful flowering mosses, of which there are many varieties. Numerous water fowl are found, with seal, walrus, and polar bear, which are an attraction for hunters, in season.

At this time of the year four months of continuous daylight prevail, to be followed in winter by four months of total darkness, mitigated only by the aurora borealis. It is dull here, so that the arrival, on the evening before our departure, of a pretty yacht bearing the Prince of Naples and his young wife, was quite an event. They sailed around our ship several times, photographed us, and departed. The hunters of the party reported towards the end of the day with varying success, one of them with two young reindeer which it seemed a pity to sacrifice, others with ducks, gulls, and the various water fowl numerous in these waters.

The dense fog which prevailed throughout the morning of the 13th made it impossible to make our second landing on Spitzberg at Bell Sound, where we had expected to see some very extensive glaciers; so we proceeded in an uneventful voyage of two days to Tromso in Norway, arriving at 8 a. m. of the 15th. The night previous was indescribably beautiful. We saw the midnight sun again in a perfectly cloudless sky. About midnight, too, we entered Tromso Sound and soon were closed about by shores green to the water's edge, dotted with houses and hamlets, while in the distance lay the mountains, their tops and intervening valleys variegated with snow patches, on which the slanting sun-rays produced a peculiar effect. The whole picture was solemnizing and majestic. It was almost impossible to go to bed in this brilliant and peculiar daylight, and many passengers remained up all night.

Tromso is a picturesque town of red-roofed houses, lying, like all Norway towns, at the foot of mountains, which just here are less lofty and slope gradually to the water's edge, and at this season exhibit every shade of green with luxuriant vegetation, but in the distance are always the snow-covered mountains. The day was beautifully clear, and we first visited the Museum, in which we found an unexpectedly good collection of antiquities, including various weapons and instruments of remote ages, together with numerous paintings and figures illustrating mediæval church history. As for the rest, we found Tromso a busy place, dealing in fish, oil, and furs, but not otherwise interesting.

Our most important excursion was a visit to an encampment of Laplanders. The "Lapps" themselves, while picturesque in their dress, are a swarthy, undersized people, extremely unkempt, and therefore correspondingly repulsive. On the other hand, their faces and manners are not disagreeable, and it seemed to us that if the government chose to pay some attention to their education and development they might become more interesting inhabitants, instead of a nomadic people. The little children were interesting, bright-looking, and comparatively clean.

Even more interesting was the herd of nearly 300 reindeer they had collected as a part of the entertainment,—gentle, large-eyed creatures, with their horns and velvety fur, and as tame as the most tractable of our domestic animals. They did not appear to be disturbed by our attentions, yet when permitted to depart they climbed up the mountain and disappeared over its summit with surprising rapidity. We were somewhat disappointed at their small size, and they scarcely seemed capable of the endurance which is ascribed to them. They cannot endure heat, and our visit had to be delayed two hours because the day was too warm to permit their being gathered at an earlier hour. As it was, their panting showed that they were suffering from the warmth of the air.

JAMES TYSON.

Tromso, Norway, Seventh month 15.

EDUCATIONAL.

GEORGE SCHOOL NOTES.

Painters have finished putting the second coat of paint on all the exterior wood-work of the main building. New stone walks have been laid from the west end of the main building to the gymnasium, and from the front door to the board walk leading to the station.

The capacity of the steam boilers has been increased to the extent of about fifty-horse power; this will furnish power for the electric light plant introduced in the spring.

The building in the rear of the gymnasium is being remodelled and divided into sleeping-rooms for the accommodation of the workmen employed in the school.

The year's supply of coal, 800 tons, is now being stored in coal-bins near the station.

Prof. Charles M. Stabler has returned from a three weeks' sojourn on the Maine coast.

Prof. R. Grant Bennett, recently appointed teacher of physics and chemistry, is pursuing a special course at Cornell University.

The Matron, Cassandra H. Rice, is spending the month at Wildwood Springs, Cambria county.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL.—Emma Fell Paxson, who has been the efficient principal of the Friends' Select School, at the corner of Washington and Gayley streets, Media, for the last four years, has been obliged to relinquish her position on account of her mother's illness. She had made many friends among the patrons of the school and others who knew of the careful, conscientious work she was doing, and they join in the regret felt by the committee in charge of the school at her enforced retirement and the cause of it. Alice A. Roberts, now living at Norristown, Pa., has been chosen by the committee as her successor, and will enter upon her duties as principal of the school when the fall session begins, on Ninth month 11th, 1899. Alice Roberts is a good teacher of Latin, French, German, and mathematics, and gives promise of being entirely able to maintain the high reputation now held by Friends' Select School for thoroughness in all branches. She will move to Media, and will thus be in constant touch with her work. Esther F. Spicer, who has been an able assistant for the last four years, and Annabel Hill, who has been the teacher of drawing during the same period, will remain in their present positions. The school deserves the good wishes and support it receives from many citizens of Media.

THE cost of Solomon's Temple has been estimated by an eminent Old Testament student to exceed $50,000,000,000. In the first place, the value of the materials in the rough is estimated at $12,500,000,000, and the labor at $3,000,000,000. The vessels of gold were valued at $2,326,481,015; the vessels of silver at $3,231,715,000; the vestments of the priests and the robes of the singers at $10,050,000, and the trumpets of gold at $1,000,000.

ELIHU ROOT is the eighth New Yorker to hold the portfolio of Secretary of War and the thirty-first New Yorker to sit in the Cabinet.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MINUTES.

THE minutes of the Educational Conference Executive Committee, held at Asbury Park, on the 22d ult., having reached us, we extract the following:

We were informed that the Central Committee had allotted to this Committee one full session of the approaching Conference, and one session to be shared with the religious Conference. As this Conference has no routine business except to arrange for its own perpetuation, no executive session was thought necessary. The general rules governing other conferences were adopted.

Many letters had been received by the secretary relative to the work of the committee. The suggestions of subjects therein contained were read, and referred to the committee on program appointed by the chair, as follows: Dr. Edward H. Magill, Emma Speakman Webster, Mary Willets, John W. Gregg, President Joseph Swain. To them were also referred suggestions of names of suitable persons to prepare papers for the Conference.

William W. Birdsall, Chairman; Jane P. Rushmore, Secretary.

We desire to repeat the extract from the minutes of the Committee for the Religious Conference, which was imperfectly given in our issue of Eighth month 5, of which Robert S. Haviland was chairman and Annie Cooper Lippincott, secretary.

There will be two sessions (of the Religious Conference), one on Third-day, the 21st of Eighth month, 1900, from 10 to 12 o'clock; the other, of a devotional character, at the close of the Conferences on the following Third-day.

A CORDIAL invitation is extended to attend the thirty-third anniversary of the Universal Peace Union and the thirty-second of the Connecticut Branch.

PEACE GROVE, MYSTIC, CONN., Aug. 23 to 26, 1899.

With the triumph of The Hague Peace Conference, a result of the efforts of the advocates of Peace; with our country waging war in the Philippines; with a growing demand for arbitration, and yet with monstrous military preparations throughout the world, the responsibility never was greater upon the Peace Societies to labor on that we may have peace.

This Annual Meeting may be the most important and interesting ever held by the Peace Union. A number of speakers are expected not yet announced and we may change the program in some particulars. Addresses will be given by the President; H. L. Hastings, Boston; Daniel Batchelor, Philadelphia; Benjamin F. Trueblood, LL. D., Sec'y of American Peace Society, Boston; Thomas L. Poulson, Brooklyn; Jacob M. Troth, Commonwealth, Ga.; Anna Sterling, New York; James H. Earle, Newton, Mass.; Geo. Howard, A. J. McLeod, Stamford, Conn.; Cephas Brainard, New York; David Ferris, Wilmington, Del.; W. Evans Darby, LL. D., London, Secretary London Peace Society; Gamaliel Bradford, Boston; William Lloyd Garrison, Boston; Matthew Anderson, Philadelphia; Mary Frost Evans, Providence; Agnes G. Vaille, Philadelphia; Dr. M. R. Levenson, Staten Island.

There will be addresses from well known speakers, the officers and members in Mystic, Philadelphia, and elsewhere, and an opportunity for all to speak as time and good order will permit. May Wright Sewall will arrive later.

As this is the annual meeting, an earnest request is made for annual contributions. The opening of the summer school and many other expenses greater than ever before cause us to ask our members and friends to be liberal. Send to any of the officers.

ALFRED H. LOVE, President.

MICKLETON, N. J.—Young Friends' Association met Eighth month 12. In the absence of the president, Hannah A. Heritage filled the chair. The meeting was opened by reading a part of the 1st chapter of James, followed by the reading and approval of last month's minutes. Martha Engle read "Hiawatha's Childhood." Benjamin C. Heritage read a very good selection, entitled "Killing an Enemy," teaching us by good example to love our enemies and do good to those that hate us.

James G. Engle then read a very interesting account of the great historian, Bancroft, followed by Hannah A. Heritage reading "Ministers and Elders," from the Discipline. Martha Engle read a few current items of much interest. The announcements were read for next meeting and the roll called, most of the members answering to their names by reciting a quotation from Longfellow.

We were again favored with the presence of visitors who cheered us in our onward way. Meeting then adjourned.

E. L. D., Sec'y.

LITERARY NOTES.

IN the current North American Review the Countess of Aberdeen, who presided over the "Woman's International Parliament," held last month in London, gives an account of the work accomplished by the Convention, and explains the objects aimed at by the Confederation of National Councils of Women; while Kassandra Vivaria, writing from the point of view of a disinterested spectator, criticises the proceedings with some pungency, deploring the tendency evinced by many of the speakers to regard the work of women as being independent of and even hostile to the work of men. "The Case Against Christian Science" is ably and humorously stated by W. A. Purrington, who finds the material for his brief in the career and writings of Mary B. G. Eddy, and in the teachings and practices of her disciples. The Governor of Texas unfolds and defends the principles and provisions of the "Anti-Trust Legislation" recently enacted in his State. At the moment when the new treaties are going into operation in Japan which, for the first time, place foreign residents in that country unreservedly within the jurisdiction of her own laws and authorities, T. R. Jernigan, who for many years was United States Consul-General at Shanghai, reviews the history of the Island Empire of the Orient, and finds in it abundant reason for confidence that her government and people will discharge their new responsibilities with success and honor. Professor Richard Gottheil makes an eloquent statement of the origin and growth of "The Zionist Movement," and of the hopes of those identified with it, who are about to hold their third Convention at Basle.

The most striking feature of the forthcoming Century, which will be a "Salt-Water Number," is the first installment of Captain Joshua Slocum's "Sailing Alone Around the World." This is the narrative of a daring voyage of circumnavigation, undertaken by the author in 1895, in a forty-foot sloop built by himself in Buzzard's Bay, and taken back and forth across the Atlantic, and thence around Cape Horn and the Cape of Good Hope, without assistance or companionship. The distance traversed was 46,000 miles, and the accuracy of the navigator's landfalls throughout was a thing to marvel at, his chronometer for most of the time being a little tin clock of the cheapest kind. Captain Slocum was a thoroughly seasoned sailor when he started on his adventurous, single-handed cruise, but his unique achievement was not without difficulties and perils that taxed to the utmost his strength, endurance, and ingenuity. Other contents of this number of the Century are "The Way of a Ship," by Frank T. Bullen, author of "The Cruise of the Cachalot"; "The Atlantic Speedway," by H. Phelps Whitmarsh, author of "The World's Rough Hand"; and "Salvage," by Morgan Robertson, author of the forthcoming volume of sea tales, "Where Angels Fear to Tread."

Walter H. Page has resigned the editorship of the Atlantic Monthly, and has accepted an invitation to take a prominent post in the direction of the literary work of the allied houses of Harper & Brothers and the Doubleday & McClure Co. His successor in the editorship of the Atlantic is Bliss Perry, known in literature as the author of two novels and a number of essays and stories. Since his graduation from Williams College, in 1881, he has been in the department of English, first at Williams, and afterwards at Princeton University, where he was lately appointed to the Holmes Professorship of English Literature. Professor Perry is favorably known to many who have heard his addresses at various Friends' schools.

The current issue of Meehans' Monthly introduces us to one of the wild flowers that make American autumn scenery so famous, one of the golden-rod family, Solidago stricta. The popular and scientific history of the plant accompanies the colored picture. The other pictures introduce us to a new member of the wych-hazel family from Japan, Corylopsis spicata, which, it is said, will make a favorable addition to our spring-flowering shrubs. Those who admire our grandmothers' gardens will be pleased with an illustration and description of a "piney," growing on Canada's government grounds.

COMMUNICATIONS.

CONCERNING REFERENCE BOOKS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

Anna M. Jackson's communication, "Books of Reference," in the INTELLIGENCER of Seventh month 1, made a suggestion for the First-day School Lesson Leaves with which I cordially agree. No teacher of American History considers herself prepared to present her lesson if she has only the textbook used by her class, and no teacher of the Bible can make the most of her lesson unless she has a few books of reference at her command.

Wherever a school maintains a library, it will be an easy matter to devote a small sum each year to the purchase of reference books. A Bible Dictionary and a Geography of the Bible, with one or two books suggested in the Lesson Leaves, can be purchased for five dollars, and will make an excellent beginning.

When a talk or story for the children is made a part of the general exercises Moody's, "Tools for Teachers" will be found very valuable; and in teaching the life of Jesus, I have found Peloubet's "Suggestive Illustrations on the Book of Matthew," and also Gannett's "Childhood of Jesus," very helpful. Charles F. Dole's "Scripture Stories and Question Books" are also useful.

In New York Yearly Meeting the Committee on Traveling Libraries has begun a good work in fitting up a small library of Reference Books. It is hoped that several libraries of this kind will soon be in circulation.

There has also been sent out to each First-day School a series of twenty-six pictures illustrating Bible stories. These are all copies of famous paintings and can be procured for one cent each. Catalogues may be obtained by sending a two-cent stamp to the Perry Picture Co., Tremont Temple, Boston. These pictures should be closely examined by the class, and the children should be encouraged to ask questions about them,—whether they are historically correct as to dress, household furnishings, etc.

In this way the children will be led to find out how mistakes arose in the middle ages and how legends crept into sacred art just as they did into some of the Scriptures. Many of them are so beautiful that they cannot fail to make the Bible stories more impressive.

From the same place can be bought pictures illustrating almost any phase of First-day School work, among them some excellent animal pictures, which will be found useful in Band of Mercy work. A scrap-book of animal pictures, which the children could help collect, would surely bring them to love all creatures more.

Let us then not remain in the old ruts, but provide Books of Reference and other First-day School helps in every school where the teachers or school cannot afford to do so.

ESTHER H. CORNELL.

Central Valley, Orange Co., N. Y.

FOR BEACH STREET MISSION.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

An impromptu entertainment was recently given at "The Kathlu" in aid of the "Sea-side Home" of Friends' Beach Street Mission Sewing-school. Sixteen children, four at a time, have thus far been brought to Ocean City; seven more are expected next week. The proceeds of the entertainment, $13.58, were at once turned over to those having the children in charge, and each one who gave a "silver offering" should feel a glow of satisfaction from having done what he could to bring just a ray of sunshine into some little life.

The following additional donations for the sea-shore outing of the children belonging to the Mission are acknowledged :
Per Friends' Book Association :

Allan Flitcraft, $2.00
Sarah B. Flitcraft, 2.00

$4.00

Per Anna Emley :

In memory of Anna M. Green, late
Superintendent of Mission, . . . $10.00
Proceeds of entertainment at The Kathlu, " Ocean City, N. J., . . . $13.64

Total, $27.64

EMMA C. HINSZEY.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

MARGARETTA WALTON, having received a minute from her monthly meeting, which was endorsed by Western Quarterly Meeting, to attend and appoint meetings within the limits of any of our yearly meetings, left home with her companion, A. M. Martin, to attend Miami Monthly Meeting, held at Green Plain, Ohio, 11th and 12 inst. They were met and warmly welcomed by Samuel Battin and family, and will proceed to Indiana Yearly Meeting, at Pendleton, Ind., perhaps taking some meetings on their way.

Dr. E. H. Magill writes from Nashville, Tenn. : "I have rested and am resting, but still I have had a daily program, involving about four and a half hours of study, followed closely, most of the time. This in the morning while freshest, and have been devoted to writing out, with care, my lectures on French Literature. Time flies rapidly, and we shall soon be once more at our work at Swarthmore ; in all these long years I have rejoiced in the return of the students, as the young life around helps to keep us young."

The many friends of Martha Dodgson will be gratified to hear that she is recovering from her late illness, and is able to ride out and enjoy occasional visits from her friends.

Elizabeth Powell Bond and her sister Anna Rice Powell are visiting Rebecca T. Webb and family at East Freyburg, Maine.

Friends will be glad to hear that the book which Aaron M. Powell was preparing at the time of his death, is now in the hands of the printer.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

THE SUSQUEHANNA.

O LORDLY Stream, whose sparkling waters sweep
By cloven cliffs and mountains forest-stoled,
Or spread in silent leagues where mists of gold
Hang o'er soft islands in the silver deep ;

Fair as some phantom river seen in sleep
Art thou, to whom the Indians of old
Gave thy melodious name, in days when rolled
Primeval thunders round thy headlands steep.

Of thee the young and ardent Coleridge dreamed
As loveliest of the waters of the west ;
To Stevenson thy beauty peerless seemed ;—

But thy home poet,¹ to whose loving eye
Thy multitudinous isles "in clusters lie
As beautiful as clouds,"—he knows thee best !

J. R. H.

¹ Lloyd Miffin.

A MEMORY.

Of hillsides where salt breezes toss
The daisy-tops ; of gray, old rocks
Broidered with barnacles and moss ;
Of nibbling sheep in lazy flocks ;
Of swift, tumultuous waves at play
Beneath calm, towering cliffs that throw
Blue shadows on the drifting spray
When the slant sun is wheeling low ;
Of golden sunset soul-delights
That even tears but half expressed ;
Of screaming winds and inky nights
And Ocean broken of his rest ;
Of breathless, shimmering afternoons,
Day-dreams beside a dreaming sea ;
Of purple nights and rising moons,
Silence, and mist, and mystery ;
Of happy, starlit hours afloat,
With song, and tale, and laughter gay,
When all the world was just—a boat,
And all of Time was just—to-day ;
Of faces seen, of friendly hands,
Of meetings by a summer sea ;
Of footprints left on shifting sands ;—
A memory—a memory.

— The New Voice.

METEOROLOGICAL SUMMARY FOR SEVENTH MONTH, 1899.

Mean barometer,	29.993
Highest barometer during the month,	30.256
Lowest barometer during the month,	29.850
Mean temperature,	77.2
Highest temperature during the month, 22d.	96.
Lowest temperature during the month, 1st,	60.
Mean of maximum temperatures,	86.8
Mean of minimum temperatures,	67.6
Greatest daily range of temperature, 2d, 3d, 4th, 10th,	26.
Least daily range of temperature, 30th,	9.
Mean daily range of temperature,	19.2
Mean relative humidity, per cent.,	70.8
Mean temperature of the Dew Point,	64.6
Total precipitation in inches, rain,	5.16
Greatest precipitation in any 24 consecutive hours, 2.13 inches of rain, on the 25th and 26th.
Number of days on which .01 inch or more of rain fell, 13.
Number of clear days 9, fair days 13, cloudy days 9.
Prevailing direction of wind from the Southwest.
Thunder storms on the 5th, 6th, 8th, 9th, 27th, 30th.

SEMI-DAILY TEMPERATURE DATA.

Maximum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a.m., 75.5 on 22d, and 26th.
Minimum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 59 on 31st.
Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 67.9.
Maximum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 75 on 5th.
Minimum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 56.5 on 1st.
Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 68.7.
Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer for this month, 68.3.

NOTE.—The mean temperature of the month just closed is one degree above the normal.

The total amount of precipitation is very little more than the average for Seventh month.

JOHN COMLY, Observer.
Centennial Avenue, Philadelphia, Seventh month 31.

CHINA still has the old-fashioned system of private letter carrying. Letter shops are to be found in every town. If he has a letter to send, the Chinaman goes to a letter shop and bargains with the keeper thereof. He pays two-thirds of the cost, leaving the receiver to pay the rest on delivery.

BOHEMIAN geese, which are driven long distances to market, are shod before starting on the journey by being sent repeatedly over patches of tar mixed with sand. This forms a hard crust on the feet, enabling the geese to travel over great distances.

Notes From the Pennsylvania Experiment Station.

THE comparison of new and standard varieties of wheat by the Pennsylvania State College Agricultural Experiment Station has been continued throughout the present season. The six varieties giving the highest yield were :

Royal Red Clawson,	26.87 bushels
Forty-Fold or Gold Coin,	26.80 "
Dawson's Golden Chaff,	26.43 "
Century,	25.71 "
Rochester Red,	25.40 "
Reliable,	25.14 "

Twenty varieties were tested, the average yield being 22.02 bushels. There was an average difference of 3.02 bushels between the smooth and bearded varieties in favor of the smooth. About one-fourth of the grain was winter-killed, which accounts for the small average yield, it being only about two-thirds of our usual crop. The average yield of straw was 2,450 pounds, and the average weight per bushel 62.04 pounds. Turkish Red was the poorest variety, yielding 15.37 bushels of grain and 1,590 pounds of straw. The yield of ten varieties that have been tested for nine and ten years, shows no tendency to run out, except a slight decrease in the yield of straw.

A bulletin giving a complete record of all the varieties for a series of years is in preparation and will be distributed free of charge.

ENOS H. HESS.

An Ocean Steamer's Larder.

Ladies' Home Journal.

ONE tidy little refrigerator about six feet wide and twice that depth is the butter-man's stall in this market under the sea. Little tubs of butter are arranged on shelves to the amount of five thousand pounds, and in company with these are twenty thousand eggs. Twenty-five hundred quarts of milk and cream are stored in a separate room, all having been sterilized. This market has a room especially for salt meats, and here are hams, bacon, and tongues to the amount of four thousand pounds. There are some articles of food without which the epicure would be unhappy, and which must be alive when cooked. Chief among these are oysters, of which sixteen thousand are carried to meet the wants of the passengers. Clams are only provided to the number of fifteen hundred. Lobsters are not abundantly supplied; seven hundred pounds is all the storeroom shelters. This market in the bottom of the ship contains, beside the things mentioned, fruits, green vegetables, and an enormous stock of groceries. The latter is only limited by space, for groceries are not perishable goods and will keep from one voyage to another until used. Tea and coffee are used in large amounts—about thirty-three pounds a day of tea and fifty pounds of coffee. Perishable supplies are taken on board in proportion to the number of passengers booked, and anything of this kind which is left over when the ship reaches port is eaten by the crew.

CURRENT EVENTS.

PROBABLY 3,000 persons have fallen victims to the West Indian hurricane, the death losses in the district of Ponce, Porto Rico, alone being said to exceed 2,000, while other towns report hundreds killed. Relief measures have been started for the 100,000 homeless people in Porto Rico. Contributions are being raised in many cities and towns throughout the United States.

SECRETARY ROOT has sent an appeal to Governors to aid in furnishing relief to the Porto Rican storm sufferers, and supplies are being contributed in quantities to tax the transportation facilities available. The War Department has placed bovine animals for immediate consumption and all agricultural machinery on the free list for Porto Rico.

THE attempt by an unknown assassin to murder M. Labori, the senior counsel for Captain Dreyfus, by shooting him in the back while he was on the way to the court room at Rennes early on the morning of the 14th inst., has intensified the political excitement in France. The tragic act temporarily diverted attention from the court-martial. Thus far no evidence has been submitted to substantiate the charge of high treason against the prisoner.

THE Postoffice Department has decided upon a plan for the registration of mail matter by letter carriers at the door in the residential sections of cities having the free delivery system and in the rural free delivery districts.

THE Formosans are not taking very kindly to Japanese domination. Most of the population is composed of Chinese, and the Japanese are treating them very harshly, the result being that things are not working very smoothly. The native aborigines do not care who rule them. They take no interest in affairs of the Government and are not at all troublesome, but the Chinese are chafing under Japanese rule, especially as the officials of the Japanese Government are constantly showing by every action that they regard them as an inferior race and not capable of taking any part in the affairs of the island. The foreigners there share to some extent the resentment of the Chinese.

THE report of Commissioner of Pensions Evans for the fiscal year ended June 30 last, shows total disbursements of $138,253,923, leaving a balance of $1,857,188 in the Treasury out of the $140,000,000 appropriated. The total number of pensioners on the roll June 30 was 991,519, a decrease of 2,195. There were 40,991 names added to the roll and 43,186 dropped. The report shows the pension roll is decreasing. Of those dropped 34,345 were because of death and 8,841 because of remarriage, minors attaining their majority, failure to claim pension, and other causes.

A DISPATCH from Newport News, Va., to a daily newspaper, says: Over 500 people applied for rations in Phoebus on the 14th instant, when the agents of the United Charities began their work of distributing food among the needy. Hundreds of people are in almost destitute circumstances, many of them being unable to work on account of the quarantine restrictions. The Government is paying for the rations distributed. The quarantine against Phoebus will not be raised this week. Surgeon White this morning began the third house to house inspection of the town, and will make a report in a day or two to the health authorities of this city and Hampton, who will decide with the Marine Hospital official the proper time for raising the quarantine. No new cases of fever have been found.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

AFTER a long and patient struggle, the women physicians of Russia have secured a decree placing them upon an equality, both socially and politically, with the male physicians in the Empire. All official positions will be opened to them equally with men, and they will be entitled to pensions after the required length of service, and this whether or not they are married.

—The most costly Parliament in Europe is that of France. The Senate and Chamber of Deputies eat up annually $1,500,000.

—The British Isles comprize as many as 1,000 islands and islets, and this number does not include insignificant jutting rocks and pinnacles.

—Statistics presented recently to the English Board of Trade show that in Great Britain there were employed in 1891 1,748,954 women and girls as domestic servants, making that not only the largest women's industry, but the largest single industry for either men or women.

—Fire entailing a loss of about $250,000 totally destroyed the works of the Glens Falls (N. Y.), Portland Cement Company, on the 6th inst. The buildings, which are of wood, burned like tinder, and in one hour the entire plant was in ruins.

—The Detroit Street Railway company has refused the request of the conductors and motormen for increased wages, but has conceded other points asked by the men.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844. }
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, EIGHTH MONTH 26, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 34.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XXXIV.

THE principles and testimonies of Friends are as pure as Divinity, as wide as humanity, and as lasting as eternity. If only lived out by all mankind, they would restore Paradise, supply all the wants of our consciousness, and make a heaven upon earth.

BENJAMIN HALLOWELL.

From the conclusion of his "Young Friends' Manual."

For Friends' Intelligencer.

AT DAWN.

Up, with the Artist of the dawn, we gazed
With rapture on the picture fair, outspread
Before our eyes. A noble mountain wall—
Kearsarge, Chocorua, Mt. Washington,
A line of mighty giants ages old,
Stretching along the west, and circling far
To north and south, rose grandly up beyond
The green-edged lakelet mirroring the morn.
They stood in solemn grandeur gray and hushed—
The tint and stillness of the night upon them
Yet ; when, from eastern heights there flashed the bright Signal that day was nigh. Then poured the flood
Of roseate light o'er their uplifted heads
Anointing them anew, symbols to stand
Of strength and steadfastness, and messengers
Of beauty's consecrating power. We thank Thee, Father, for this service of the dawn !

E. P. B.

East Freyburg, Maine, Eighth month, 1899.

WORSHIP AND MINISTRY.

(Concluded.)

From the letter issued by London Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, 1899

WE believe it is of the utmost importance at the present time to keep before our younger members the responsibility that our system of free ministry lays upon them for filling up the ranks and keeping the ministry in touch with the needs of the day. There can be no higher spiritual ambition than to be used in the service of the Lord and the church. "Desire earnestly spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." It is not great powers of thought or of language, but experience of the things of God, that forms the chief condition of receiving a call to the ministry. And, when the call comes, there should be no "quenching of the Spirit," no "contempt for prophesyings," on the ground that the offering is small, but, instead, a willing-hearted, humble-minded obedience. Faithful use of a gift brings increase : unfaithfulness leads to the withdrawal of a talent which is entrusted to us, not for neglect but for service. Nor is it always the longer or more polished utterances that most come home to the heart. Short, perhaps broken, offerings of prayer or praise, of witness or encouragement, if made under a fresh sense of the love of God, are often a great help to the tone of a meeting. More important than the actual words used is the atmosphere the speaker brings with him, the evidence, which his hearers instinctively discern, that he is speaking of what he knows. We sympathize with those who are craving for a ministry that feeds their minds and souls and who do not find such in their own meeting. While encouraging older Friends, whose spiritual experience and practical knowledge of life may specially qualify them for such, to face their responsibilities in the matter, we believe that much of the want might be supplied by our younger members themselves, if instead of deserting a meeting, they would, under the fresh anointing of the Holy Spirit, throw in their spiritual energy to its help. The church wants the vigor and freshness of youth,—its sympathy with those of like age, its lofty aspirations and its grasp of the needs and thoughts of the time,—as well as the matured strength of manhood and womanhood and the ripe spiritual experience of old age.

We would earnestly encourage the minister to "give himself to his ministry," to consecrate to it his best powers of mind and body as well as of soul. There is among us a large and increasing number, whose inner conflict is with foes not only moral but intellectual, who need all the help that can be given by the wide vision and sympathetic insight of ministers who have thought deeply as well as felt deeply of the things of God. We have room in our meetings for helpful ministry of all kinds, for the offerings of the man or the woman whose stores of spiritual wisdom have been won in the hard school of life, as well as for the fruits of meditation and study that have been garnered by the more highly trained mind. In all cases the minister will need a knowledge of the revelation of God and a knowledge of men. Both require much patient and loving study ; and for this, leisure should, where practicable, be found or made. Meetings should consider it a privilege to do their part by providing, where possible, well-furnished libraries of helpful and stimulating books. We are not, however, speaking merely of literary study, but, in the widest sense, of the preparation of heart and mind which keeps the minister in touch with God and humanity and enriches the gift he has received. Much added power may result from the cultivation of close social and personal fellowship with the members of the congregation. Their needs are part of the inspiration of the minister.

It is an improvement in spiritual quality and sympathetic insight that we long for in our ministry. We hardly realize the wide difference in efficiency, in spiritual service, between the novice and the expert, between the raw recruit and the trained veteran, between the 'prentice-hand and the master-workman. The minister will not think to find in the meeting-house alone the consecration of heart, the discipline of character, the equipment of mind, the understanding of men, which should come to him though all avenues of life. The meetings that are before him will be often on his mind, and he will give himself to a prayerful and reverent study of the Bible, seeking to learn therefrom the mind and will of God, as the Holy Spirit enlightens his understanding and unfolds to him the meaning of the inspired message. As he devotes every faculty to the service of Christ, his reading of the thoughts of the great teachers of every age, his contact with the passing events and vitalizing ideas of the day, will become to him vocal with spiritual instruction, which he can use in ministry to others. Thus will he gain insight to speak with faithfulness and acceptance to the condition of men's hearts, and will win fuller understanding of the Divine purposes of redemption and grace involved in the central theme of all effective ministry, "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

These thoughts, however, have a wider application. Preparation of the heart and the active worship of dedicated lives are the duties of all. It is these that make up the spiritual atmosphere of a meeting. We have all a ministry; for we are all members one of another, bound to rise or to fall together; and stronger even than the solidarity of the human race is the solidarity of the gathered church. We need to say, "I dare not be weak, for my weakness is a spreading infirmity. I must be strong, for my strength is a spreading force. I cannot sit in self-contained isolation, for my brethren need the energy of my love."

A re-awakened responsibility leads to a renewed dedication of all gifts to the Master of the assembly. A living meeting is not moulded according to prescribed pattern, but by the Master's own hand. Many spiritual gifts have a right place in it, if exercised in a fresh sense of God's love and of the puttings-forth of His Spirit. Let us open our hands to receive and use all His good and perfect gifts. There is especially a place to-day for the gift of religious teaching, which may greatly promote that comprehensive grasp of truth and enlightened knowledge of the Holy Scriptures which the church is responsible to God for giving to its members.

A meeting, moulded, week after week, by the Master's own hand, may rightly vary greatly in external features from time to time; at one time, for example, having much living silence and offerings directed to the building up of Christian character and the fuller dedication of heart to God; and at another being mainly occupied with earnest Gospel preaching and testimony to Jesus. The right holding of our meetings is not to be judged by their adherence to routine, but by the exercise in them "unto edifying," and under the control of the Holy Spirit, of spiritual gifts. Varied gifts thus exercised will be kept in their true harmony and proportion; and the variety will enrich, without enfeebling, the life of the meeting. The right exercise of gifts depends largely on the whole congregation. Ministry is often a tender plant, easily blighted by the cold breath of unloving criticism, but expanding in genial warmth of sympathetic souls. May all be much in prayer, both before and during the meeting, that the Lord himself may speak and all wrong utterance may be hushed.

We have spoken of the corporate life of our meetings, the solidarity of the gathered church. This entails corporate responsibilities, and there seem to be directions in which the exercise of such responsibilities should be encouraged at the present time. Arrangements for the visitation of small meetings and for the distribution of the ministry may be often most wisely made. Ministers and meetings alike benefit by the freshness that attends such visits; and the occasional absence from his regular meeting of a Friend on whose ministry the congregation may unduly lean may be of great service in spreading responsibility and calling out other gifts. In the visiting of small meetings we would encourage ministers to invite some younger Friend to share in the service. Further, under our system of free ministry, the collective body is largely responsible for arranging the human conditions and developing the human material from which the Holy Spirit can bring forth enlightened and effective ministry. Where there is no special class set apart and trained for the work, it is essential that there should be a general high level, not alone of spiritual life, but also of religious knowledge. It is not the part of true humility to expect the Divine Spirit to save us trouble by doing our work for us. And hence meetings will do well to take religious instruction under their special care, and to make arrangements for helpful collective study of the Scriptures.

We have before us a great work. The cry for spiritual religion—from village and city, from the unlearned and the educated—was never louder than it is to-day. Does the cry pierce our hearts, as we sit immured in the meetings, which too often fall far below our ideal, but which might be replenished by our consecration of service into wells of spiritual life for the world? And, if we hear the call, do we burst the bondage of routine and brace ourselves to the work? Are our loins girt and our lamps burning and we ourselves alert for the voice of our Lord? In Him there is no failure. The failure is in our want of consecration. We owe all that is worth anything in our lives to His love. We hold this gift—the "sacred burden" of the "life we bear"—as a stewardship to be used for him. Is not Jesus Christ worth serving? Is not his work of uplifting men worth helping on? It is little we can give him—broken hearts, lowly minds, sin-marred lives: but let us give it freely, with every talent of mind or circumstance or experience with which he has endowed us; that he may sanctify the gift by his Spirit, and make us worthy, as congregations and as individuals, of being used in his supreme work of saving the world.

Signed in and on behalf of the meeting,

J. B. HODGKIN, Clerk.

SELF-CONTEMPT, self-depreciation are the worst forms of pride. Self-abasement is the negative expression of the same pride of which offensive self-assertion is the positive.—D. Quigley.

ANDREW D. WHITE ON THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

ANDREW D. WHITE, United States Ambassador to Germany, who was president of the American Peace Commission at The Hague, has written for the Associated Press the following in regard to the result of the Conference :

"In my opinion great good was accomplished, far more, in fact, than any of us dared expect or even hope when we came together.

"As to disarmament, everybody really thinking upon the subject must see that a good system of arbitration must come first, and that then, when arbitration has diminished the likelihood of war, the argument for cutting down forces and armaments is greatly strengthened. The logical order then is, first arbitration, and next disarmament.

"As to the plan of arbitration, any compulsory system is at present utterly out of the question. There are so many international differences involving questions of race, religion, security, and even national existence, and the difficulty of drawing a line between these and questions which may properly be arbitrated is so insurmountable that there is not a nation on the face of the earth willing to risk an obligatory system. Far better than any compulsory arbitration, which probably, even if it had been adopted by the conference, not one of the Powers would have finally ratified, is a thoroughly good system of voluntary arbitration, recourse to which public opinion will enforce more and more, and this I earnestly believe the conference has presented to the world.

"Some of the features in the plan adopted were due to the United States, some to Great Britain, some to Russia, some to various other Powers, and, in my judgment, the plan thus adopted is far more valuable than any scheme presented by any one of the Powers at the beginning. The present plan is the result of most careful thought by the foremost international lawyers, statesmen, and diplomatists of Europe, to say nothing of other parts of the world; they gave their whole souls to it, their pride was involved in it, and it will, I believe, be found to work satisfactorily.

"The great point gained is that, whereas formerly an arbitration court could only be provided after long correspondence between Cabinets, and negotiations between Ministers, and debates in parliamentary bodies, and hunting for proper judges, and discussions as to procedure, and a thousand other delays, just when time was most precious, the conference has given to the world an arbitration tribunal as an actual and permanent institution, with judges, procedure, officers of the court, place of meeting, and accessories all provided.

"It has added as subsidiary to its main feature, carefully systematized plans of mediation, by general and special, which are likely in many cases to prove exceedingly valuable in preventing nations from drifting into war.

"It has also provided a system of commissions of inquiry, by which the real questions and grievances at issue can be ascertained and brought out to be coolly considered, instead of the wild charges, countercharges, calumnies, sensational reports, and rumors, which have hitherto done so much to hurry people into war.

"We may fairly hope that, as time goes on, a resort to the tribunal now created will become more and more usual and natural, and that the pressure of public opinion in all cases where questions at issue can possibly be settled will be far more effective than any attempt at compulsory resort to a high international court.

"This is certainly a great gain, and, as has been very justly observed in a very remarkable and thoughtful recent article in the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, the Conference deserves credit for not attempting to go further. To have done so would have provoked resistance and reaction, which would have left the possibilities of war more serious even than they have been hitherto.

"But even without an arbitration plan, the result would have fully justified our two months' work. The extension of the Geneva rules to maritime warfare, and the improvement and establishment of the best system possible at present of the laws and customs of war would of itself be a sufficient result.

"With arbitration added to this, I feel that the world will be satisfied in time that we have made a good beginning, valuable indeed at the outset, but likely to grow more and more valuable as time goes on.

"As to gradual disarmament, that will come later. Of course the people who insist on having fruit on the day the tree is planted will sneer at our work, but history will, I believe, judge it differently."

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS,
1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 36.—NINTH MONTH 3.

DAVID'S KINGDOM.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I will be his father and he shall be my son.
If he commit iniquity I will chasten him.—

II. Samuel, vii., 14.

Scripture Reading, II. Samuel, xiv., 1-29.

PERHAPS the most striking traits of David's character were his caution and moderation. Others were as brave, as skillful in war, as wise in council. But no other in Hebrew history united with these qualities the steadiness, the unhurried self-control of David. When the news was brought to him of the death of Saul and his sons, he was in no haste to seize the throne. Indeed, the messenger paid with his life for the rash assumption that David would rejoice in the message and applaud the deed of him who would slay his enemy. David was at once made king of Judah, his own tribe. He also made overtures to the people of Gilead in his message of approval to the people of Jabesh, who had rescued the body of Saul. (II. Samuel, ii., 5-7.) But he made no hostile move against the trans-Jordanic kingdom under Saul's surviving son, Ishbosheth, which had been set up by Abner, the commanding general of the Israelites. The kingdom was in a most precarious position. The hostile Moabites and Ammonites were on the east and south, the hostile Syrians on the north, while the Philistines held all the west of Jordan. David, on the other hand, was at peace with the Philistines, retaining his allegiance to their king. The son of Saul looked upon David and his followers as traitors, and contests between the two parties were not uncommon. Ishbosheth proved a vain, weak man, incapable of welding together the tribes which had remained true to his house. Finally he estranged even his general, Abner, so that the latter turned from him and went over to David. Meantime the other leaders of the Israelites had more and more turned to David during seven years of strife and confusion. It came to be felt that only he could deliver them and set up again a united Israel. It seemed for a moment that these plans were thwarted by the murder, first of Abner, in private feud, by David's chief general, then of Ishbosheth by men who hoped to be rewarded by his rival. But David was innocent of both deeds, and by promptly punishing the perpetrators he held the wavering loyalty of the northern tribes, so that he was elected king of all Israel and anointed at Hebron. This was in effect a declaration of war against the Philistines, who moved so promptly as to give the newly-elected king no time for preparation. Like Saul, David was given only the name of king; the substance of kingship he must conquer for himself. But this he was able to do. In a series of campaigns, concerning the details of which the Bible is strangely silent, he won back all the territory of Israel, and finally near Gibeon, he won a victory so overwhelming that the Philistines appear no more in Hebrew history as enemies to be feared.

Unlike his predecessor, David proved even greater as an organizer and ruler than as a warrior. His first move was the capture of Jebus, which to this time had remained in the hands of the Canaanites, and the removal thereto of his capital. This move, in itself, showed statesmanship of a high order. The jealousy between the tribes of the north and south was one of the chief difficulties with which David had to contend. If he had retained as his capital the Judean town of Hebron he might never have won the allegiance of the sons of Joseph. But the captured city, now renamed Jerusalem (see Lesson 8, First Quarter), was neutral territory, never having belonged to any of the tribes, but captured by the united effort of all. It was on the boundary between Judah and Benjamin—between the north and the south. It was on the principal highways of inland trade, and it had great natural advantages for defense against outside attack. Jerusalem was made not only the political center, but also the religious center of the kingdom. The Ark, which had long been neglected in an out-of-the-way corner, was brought to the city with great rejoicings and set up as the central shrine of the nation. We have seen already how the unity of the nation was bound up in its religious life; so that we must regard this act of David as one of the most important of his life. And after events showed that it was not important merely for the Hebrews, but for all the peoples who afterwards looked to Jerusalem as the Holy City.

After accomplishing the independence of his people, David set about the further expansion of his territory. He successively reduced to subjection the nations south to the Red Sea, east to the desert, north to the Lebanon, and west to the Mediterranean. That he was not above the barbarism of his age is shown in the savage brutality of the wars in which he was engaged, as when he put to death a large portion of the Moabites (II. Samuel, viii., 1, 2); or, as in the cases of the Amalekites and others (II. Samuel, xxvii., 8, 9), when every man and woman was put to death by his orders. But his ability as a ruler cannot be doubted. His conquests required a considerable army. He had a body-guard of six hundred hired mercenaries, many of them Philistines. His standing army was under command of Joab, who feared no man, hesitated at no crime. Next to him were the thirty-seven heroes, distinguished by special deeds of daring. All the men of the nation made up the militia, to be called on in time of war.

The machinery of national life was also set in motion. A census was taken, new offices were created, such as Secretary of State, State Recorder, and others. (II. Samuel, viii., 16-18.) The priesthood was organized, and the prophetic office was recognized in the person of Nathan. All these, and many more, gathered round the king's court at Jerusalem, which began thus to resemble the courts of the monarchs of other nations.

The new kingdom, was, of course, brought into relations with foreign nations—with Hiram, of Tyre, the great trading nation of antiquity; with Egypt, with Hamath, with Philistia. Even the Syrians north of Damascus sent tribute. With these foreign relations came wealth, luxury, and extravagance. From these also in turn came oppression and the seeds of the destruction of the State, now in its greatest glory.

THE LIFE OF ANN HUNT.¹

THE author of this sympathetic and valuable biography of a noble woman calls her little book "an attempt to preserve the record of one of the humble souls whom Whittier called 'The dear Lord's best interpreters,' and to impart to others 'the Gospel' of her life."

Ann Hunt was born in Bristol, England, in 1810, and was the daughter of Henry Hunt, a man of strong character, one of the partners in the well-known Fry house of chocolate-makers. She early felt spiritual promptings; her youthful days were passed in the midst of great stress and much suffering, and she experienced a call to high service as the result of her resolute overcoming of her trials through Divine assistance. In 1851 she wrote:

"Oh, that in his loving-kindness He may pour out upon me of his spirit and make me a loving member of Christ's body, a fruit-bearing branch in the vine, that so in humility and faith I may fulfill His gracious designs during the short remainder of my pilgrimage, and be instrumental in leading others to Him who has done so much for me."

This prayer was amply answered. In addition to her service in the ministry, she held at different times the positions of First-day School superintendent, clerk of Women's Monthly Meeting, and elder. Her correspondence, to which the volume is chiefly devoted, shows a heart warm and cheerful, a tender sympathy, and marked spiritual strength, surety, and contentment.

¹ MEMORIALS AND LETTERS OF ANN HUNT. Compiled by Matilda Sturge. London: Headley Brothers.

After eighty-seven useful years Ann Hunt passed away in the spring of 1897. She was laid to rest in the old burying-ground at "The Friars," beside many departed friends. Her grave is far from rural solitudes, yet it seemed to those who sorrowfully performed the last rites that the green of the springtide, amid the usual dreariness of this burying-ground, was typical of "the faith and hope that illuminated a life dark in many of its passages, yet leading onward with more and more 'shining unto the perfect day.'"

Much that is uplifting might be extracted from her letters. Two passages must suffice us, however. Here is her encouragement to those who become dissatisfied sometimes with the ordinary silent meeting :

"I often long that we may not be waiting for special occasions, as the holding of general meetings or the visit of some gifted stranger, in the hope that our gracious Lord would then manifest his presence and power among us in a way that we do not look for at other times."

On the occasion of the death of our Quaker poet she wrote :

"We seem almost to have lost a personal friend in J. G. Whittier. Yet we must be thankful that a long period of feebleness has been spared him. How many are being gathered in. As the eternal world is brought nearer, the sense of its influence on and connection with our present state of being seems to grow stronger,—the interest of life increases rather than fades with advancing years."

Such memorials as the present volume richly illustrate the fact that great souls are among us in this day just as surely as in the days of the past. May everyone of these have as sympathetic and loving a biographer as the author of this book.

A COMMENDABLE PASTIME.

A CORRESPONDENT who has passed his seventieth milestone thus writes us of his method of employing leisure moments :

"In the number of the FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER for Eighth month 5, 1899, the little opening poem, 'The Silent Voices,' deeply impressed me, and—as I often do—and more of late than when younger, I committed it to memory, and often and often repeat it when alone—and especially in that time so expressively called by the poet 'the dumb hour, clothed in black.' When I awoke early this morning,—just before the day began to dawn, after a long and refreshing night's sleep (for I always retire early), the words came to me with great force, and I went over and over them, striving to turn my thoughts 'forward, and not back,' and the oftener I repeat the simple words, the fuller they seem to be of comfort and consolation. What we thus commit and repeat grows to mean more and more to us, if it is something that is really worthy. That is the reason that I love to commit choice selections, for they seem, as time passes, to enter into my spirit, and grow to be more and more a part of my being."

MANY men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

SUMMARY OF THE HAGUE CONFERENCE.

The following is the concluding portion of Baron de Staal's closing address at The Hague Conference.

"In opening the sittings of the Conference I mentioned as one of the principal elements of our common study, and as the very essence of our task, the realization of progress so impatiently looked for in the matter of mediation and arbitration. I did not deceive myself in anticipating that our labors in this matter would assume exceptional importance. The work is now accomplished. It bears testimony to the great solicitude of the Governments for what affects the pacific development of international relations and the well-being of peoples. This work is certainly by no means perfect, but it is sincere, practical, and wise. It seeks to conciliate by safeguarding the two principles which form the basis of the law of nations, the principle of the sovereignty of States, and the principle of a just international solidarity. It gives the preference to what unites over what divides. It sets forth that in the new period upon which we are entering, what shall prevail are the works springing from a desire for concord and fertilized by the collaboration of the States seeking the realization of their legitimate interests in a durable peace founded upon justice. The task accomplished by The Hague Conference in this direction is truly meritorious and beautiful. It responds to the magnanimous feelings of its august initiator. It will have the support of public opinion everywhere, and will, I hope, meet with the approval of history.

"I shall not, gentlemen, enter into the details of the Act which several of us have just signed. They are set forth and analyzed in the incomparable report which is in your hands at the present hour. It is, perhaps, too early to judge in its entirety of a work scarcely finished. We are, perhaps, still too near the cradle. We lack the aerial perspective. What is certain is that this work undertaken on the initiative of the Emperor, my august master, and under the auspices of her majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, will develop in the future. As was said on a memorable occasion by the President of our Third Commission, the greater the progress made in the road of time, the more clearly will its importance come out. Now, gentlemen, the first step has been taken. Let us unite our efforts and profit by experience. The good seed is sown. Let the harvest come. As regards myself, I who have reached the term of my career and the downward slope of life, consider it as a supreme consolation to have seen the opening of new perspectives for the good of humanity, and to have been able to cast my eyes into the brightness of the future."

SECURE a good name to thyself by living virtuously and humbly, but let this good name be nursed abroad and never be brought home to look upon it. Let others use it for their own advantage ; let them speak of it if they please ; but do not thou use it at all but as an instrument to do God glory and thy neighbor more advantage. Let thy face, like Moses's, shine to others, but make no looking-glass for thyself.—Jeremy Taylor.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN

PHILADELPHIA, EIGHTH MONTH 26, 1899.

Please address business letters to "Friends' Intelligencer, 921 Arch Street, Philadelphia." Communications and contributions to "Editors Friends' Intelligencer," same address.

VISITING MEETINGS SOCIALLY.

FROM recent observation we have had evidence of the value there is, both to individuals and to our religious organization, in the paying and receiving of what might be called social visits, to our meetings established in their various places.

Through the great pressure of work, that seems to multiply on every hand as our civilization advances,—and by civilization we mean not only our advancement in material conveniences, but our thought for the comfort of the toiling and crowded masses of people,—there has come to be a need of breaks in the routine of life. Especially in the summer season, changes of place and occupation seem to be the rule rather than the exception. This in a measure interferes with the habit of continuously assembling at our own places of worship; but it should not interfere with our desire for gathering with our fellows to perform this "most reasonable service" of worshiping God socially, wherever our lot is cast.

When Friends find themselves located within reach of any meeting, it is worth the effort to join the worshippers there, even if this meeting is small and silent. It often occurs that in these quiet assemblies, where the presence of every stranger is easily noted, that the very sense of a common religious fellowship causes us to feel an uplift of thanksgiving. Sometimes hearts are tendered and drawn nearer the Father than when at home meetings, where it is more difficult to cast aside the cares incident to the home and business life; and to the meeting visited there is a sense of being remembered that cheers the spirit and encourages to a closer adherence to the goodly practice of assembling to worship the Father. Feeling that others have the same need of spiritual strength, as well as social mingling, we greet our stranger Friends with a warmth that dispels formality and unites us in a bond of religious unity. And when the silence of such meetings is broken, even if the words are feebly uttered, they meet the witness in kindred hearts, revealing us to each other as children of one common Father, who is everywhere with us.

To those who can travel to distant States, where there are small meetings of Friends, it is especially grateful to visit these in their isolation from large Friendly centres, and the good done is practically two-fold. The traveler who has passed swiftly through new scenes has need of a quiet hour to realize the goodness and greatness of God, and he whose lines are cast perhaps in very pleasant places, still feels far remote from beloved homes of former days and has a warmth of welcome for any one from the older lands. Let the Friendly traveler therefore seek out and perform this loving social service.

And we would not ignore the assembling for worship in "vacation days," even if no Friendly place offers on the Sabbath day, but mingle with the devout in other folds, and there, too, let our prayers ascend. For to "every nation, tongue, and people" God has revealed himself, and the humble heart can everywhere learn of his "merciful kindness to the children of men."

PRIVATE inquiries are being made as to why the dates selected for the Conferences, to be held at Chautauqua, next year, were permitted to conflict with the time of holding both Indiana and Ohio Yearly Meetings. In reply, it might be well to state, that this conflict of dates was most seriously considered by the Central Committee. But to hold these meetings before the Indiana Yearly Meeting would have brought them at the height of the season at Chautauqua, and make it impossible for us to be well accommodated, either in assembling or boarding-rooms, or at the prices that the later time affords. If left till after Ohio Yearly Meeting, it would be so late that a large number of young people and teachers could not be present, as they would be detained at home on account of the opening of schools, etc., etc. The committee therefore decided on the Conference dates as the best possible ones to meet all the conditions.

We would also say, in explanation of the sum to be raised for Conference expenses, that this money is to be used for the gathering of the exercises of the meetings, printing of the proceedings, and incidentals. The Conference has nothing to pay for the use of grounds or buildings in which our Conferences are to be held.

I FEAR I must correct one or two errors of correspondent, editor, and printer. The secretary of the Old Scholars' Association of Ackworth is Joseph Spence (not Spencer) Hodgson. Our friend Charles Thompson's home, Morland, is not in Cumberland, but in Westmorland. (These counties do not have the designation "shire" coupled with their names.) The name of the river from which East London draws its (at present not too plentiful) supply of water is spelled Lea not Leigh.

H. M. J.

BIRTHS.

BALDWIN.—At Bradford Hills, Chester county, Pa., Seventh month 29, 1899, to J. Lewis and Gertrude Durnall Baldwin, a son, who is named Edwin Durnall.

EDSALL.—At Hartland, Iowa, Seventh month 15, 1899, to Horace P. and Ruth A. Edsall, a son, who is named Jehu Ralph.

MARRIAGES.

MARK—GRIEST.—By Friends' ceremony, in Albion, Idaho, Seventh month 10, 1899, Charles S. Mark, son of John and Catherine Mark, of Lebanon, Pa., and Florence T. Griest, daughter of Daniel and Rose D. Griest, of Ellis, Kansas.

DEATHS.

AMBLER.—At Norristown, Eighth month 15, 1899, Mary Bartleson Ambler, widow of the late William Ambler, in her 72d year.

DAY.—At Waynesville, N. C., Eighth month 1, 1899, Sherwin Cathcart, second son of Dr. William C. Day, of Swarthmore College, aged 11 years.

FURNAS.—At his home, Marion county, Indiana, Sixth month 2, 1899, Robert Furnas, in his 87th year, son of the late Robert and Hannah (Wilson) Furnas, and a brother of the late Seth Furnas, of near Waynesville, Ohio. He was an elder in the other body of Friends.

GARRIGUES.—At Salem, Ohio, Eighth month 16, 1899, William Henry Garrigues, of Philadelphia, in his 77th year, son of the late William and Margaret Garrigues, formerly of Philadelphia, a descendant of Morris Llewellyn, of Haverford, Pa.

MOORE.—At Rome, Ga., Eighth month 14, 1899, of heart failure, Benjamin F. Moore, in the 67th year of his age; a member of Green Street Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia.

The Atlanta Constitution says: "Professor Moore was perhaps the best known business educator in the South, and his death is felt by friends in every part of the country. He was born in Fallsington, Pa., on April 15, 1832, and remained there until after he was twenty years of age.

"In 1852 he came to Savannah, where he worked as a bookkeeper until the year 1858, when he came to Atlanta and began work as chief bookkeeper for the Western and Atlantic railway company, which position he filled for ten years.

"During the time he was connected with the railroad he began to do his first teaching, taking charge of a night school for bookkeeping. In 1868 he established his business college that afterwards made him so prominent in educational circles. He remained in charge of this school until 1893, when he sold it to the Southern University. After this time he worked as an expert accountant, with the exception of about six months spent in Athens. He was probably one of the best known accountants in the South, and did considerable work for the government. He was an expert in judging handwriting and was often called upon to testify in forgery cases."

SMITH.—In Philadelphia, Eighth month 12, 1899, Sarah Cornelia, youngest daughter of Samuel H., and Sarah W. Smith, aged 60 years; a member of the Monthly Meeting held at Green Street, Philadelphia. Interment at Fair Hill.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

XI.—A WALK TO RYDAL MOUNT.

BY HOWARD M. JENKINS.

THE rain was falling briskly in Grasmere, when the bells of the church opposite my window began to ring for 8 o'clock service, and I, in the comfortable, old-fashioned room at Mrs. Hayes's, (an addendum in the season to the "Moss Grove Temperance Hotel"), began to confess the propriety of arising. I had expected to drive over, south-westward, eight miles, to the Friends' meeting at Colthouse, near Hawkshead,—where there is a small meeting, a seventeenth-century house, and a grave-yard containing many Satterthwaites, of the old stock,—but the rain made so long a drive not attractive, and I "failed heart."

By noon, however, the clouds grew thinner; for a moment there was almost a gleam of sunshine; and I set off southward toward Rydal, over the same way I came, on coach-top from Ambleside, the day before. Grasmere was very quiet; no coaches, no charr-a-banc, were going. A few foot passengers picked their way, taking the middle of the street as often as the sidewalk,—for, indeed, in Europe the sidewalk is scantily respected.

Passing the church, in which the bells had rung earlier (it is St. Oswald's, and is a square, low building, with a square, low tower, the interior—

"Large and massy, for duration built;
With the pillars crowded, and the roof upheld
By naked rafters, intricately crossed
Like leafless underboughs," Wordsworth says), I could see again, what the evening before I had visited and viewed, the quiet corner of the church yard, in which are buried William Wordsworth himself, his wife Mary, and other members of his family,—at one side Dora, the daughter, who married Edward Quillinan, and who died in 1817, thirty-three years earlier than her father. The stones for all are side by side, and "close behind" is the resting-place of Hartley Coleridge. The "gushing Rothay," coming down from the wilder country above—for Grasmere is an open space, an amphitheatre, amid the mountains—and seeking the lake, beats here against the very wall of the churchyard, and its murmurs may be heard as you read the Wordsworth inscriptions, within the yard. There is a mural tablet to Wordsworth in the church, with a medallion head underneath a well-phrased epitaph.

But you cross the Rothay on a good stone bridge, its arch barely perceptible in the rise of the roadway, and my walk took me down to the end of the upper village, and by the pretty stone fountain, "In memory of Wordsworth, 1889," where a steady stream pours into the basin, and the traveler enjoys, what is not too common in England—or anywhere—the opportunity of drinking freely sweet, fresh water, without money and without price. Then, taking "the old road" to the left, I passed by Dove Cottage, where Wordsworth lived from 1799 to 1808, and where, Matthew Arnold has said, "almost all his really first-rate work was produced,"—though, when one thinks of it, one cannot regard "first-rate" as exactly the kind of an adjective of praise to apply to Wordsworth's poems. I passed on at this time;—Dove Cottage is now dedicated to the public enjoyment, just as Carlyle's house is at Chelsea, only that six pence is charged to enter. (I visited it later; the rooms and the grounds are as they were a century ago, and there is a beginning of an interesting collection of relics.) It is a simple, plain, little stone house, close to the street. Hither Wordsworth brought his bride in 1802, and here—it does seem a little odd—he entertained Walter Scott and Humphrey Davy. Here, too, DeQuincey came to live, when Wordsworth moved away, and made it his home for twenty years or more.

My vaguely formed plan was to ascend part way one of the surrounding hills, and enjoy the view. I walked on up the old road, and following its bends passed presently the "Wishing Gate," and near by the White Moss Common, the scene of several of Wordsworth's poems,—"The Leech Gatherer," "The Primrose of the Rock," "The Old Cumberland Beggar,"

The old road, winding and soon descending, presently joins the later and now used one; and as I came down I saw before me, not far away, the gleam of Rydal Water, the next lake below Grasmere. The sight gave my stroll a purpose, and though it was quite time to turn back if I would be at dinner at the hour appointed, I walked on, with Rydal Mount, the home of Wordsworth from 1817 to his death in 1850, as my object. To the left, presently, is a residence, formed of three cottages which Wordsworth built, and called White Moss, and here recently, (perhaps still), dwelt Colonel Mair, whose wife was a descendant of the poet. Close beside the road, further on, embowered and enflowered, as nearly every house and every cottage is along the way, a quaint dwelling, with old date-plate, draws our notice, and this is Nab Cottage, with the date upon it, 1702. Here DeQuincey was married to the Westmoreland girl, Margaret Simpson; here Hartley Coleridge lived the last years of his life, and here he died.

There were noises, now, of coming coaches, and I thought of riding back on one to Grasmere, for a late dinner. But the loaded chars-a-banc, two of them, rolled past, the horses' feet flapping and clapping on the smooth stone way—as is so noticeable on the English streets and roads—and I did not hail either driver, but kept my face toward Rydal. Other travelers were afoot now, an occasional pedestrian, some walking leisurely at my rate, some—mostly young men—striding on with firm heel-and-toe pace, looking neither right hand nor left. The bicycling world had arisen, and both ways, but chiefly northward, beves of riders came along,—all the well-known types, he with the wheezing, hard-ridden wheel, he with the pipe, he who rode erect and dignified, he who bent double, he who whizzed past, he who yawped back or ahead to his companions,—and, now and again, the young woman bicyclist, too, ruddy and resolute, independent and enterprising, going forward, on this steed that has so greatly set her sex free, to see new worlds, and derive new inspirations.

Rydal is but a little place, with less than a score of houses, and none of them new. There is no inn; it is said that in King George's time (our foolish, stubborn George, of 1776, whom we would serve no longer), the landlord of the Bank Foot here took down his sign, to avoid having soldiers billeted on him (at a ruinously low rate; it was one of the burdens of the old militarism, now replaced by many new ones), and then the powers that were deprived him of his license, and the inn ceased to be. However, I at least did not miss his drink; I had quaffed at the Wordsworth fountain, above, and there is another gushing pipe, not far from Nab Cottage, filling and overflowing a square, deep, stone trough,—a boon for the thirsty, whether four-footed or merely biped.

You turn, at Rydal, squarely up-hill to the left. Rydal Mount—the mountain—towers back and over you, to the northward; we have been passing it, as we came down the main road. You climb the road almost, for the rise is sharp. To the left now is Rydal church, not old at all, but built in 1824, by the lady "of the manor," Lady de Fleming. It is small, pretty, Gothic, without a churchyard; burials are at Ambleside or Grasmere. It awakened Wordsworth's muse—as, indeed, what object or incident about here did not?—when he saw the building begun, and he wrote of it, what surely we shall all join in echoing——"may peace, and love,

And hope, and consolation, fall,
Through its meek influence from above,
And penetrate the hearts of all."

I was gazing up at the tower when a bell within sounded twice,—making me wonder for an instant whether the sexton was warning me of intrusion (for notices not to open this gate, or cross that stile, or enter a path, or camp on a common, or cut down the trees, or pull the flowers, do much abound here as elsewhere), but the outer gate had stood wide open, and churches are not usually "private grounds," and in a moment it occurred to me that the clock had simply, and very nearly at the right time, struck two. So I was a half hour late for dinner, now, and, at my rate of movement, an hour from the table. By the church, a little farther up the hillside, is a dwelling by the road, ivy-clad and picturesque, Glen Rothay, occupied by some of Wordsworth's descendants, and on upward a hundred yards more, is Rydal Mount, the poet's home for thirty-three years, and to the close of his life. There is a positive, plain, and well painted notice of privacy on the gate, but no interdiction of gazing upon the place, from the road. The house stands in the midst of trees and gardens, and the true front is not to this hillside approach, but within, and looking up the valley.

I do not care for interiors much, especially when they are "not shown." And no relics of the poet are kept at Rydal Mount; they are all to be seen at Dove Cottage. Opposite Rydal Mount is the entrance to a more handsome place, Rydal Park, and not far away Rydal Beck, a beautiful stream, comes tumbling down to join the Rothay. I descended to the main road, and began my return. There was again a threat of rain, and the umbrella was a comfort, to say nothing of the goloshes (American rubbers) with which I had prudently furnished my feet in the early morning. An English mother, ruddy cheeked, low voiced, was hurriedly returning with her flock of four to a Rydal cottage, and I recognized her as having pleasantly given me information as I came. The pedestrians and some of the bicyclers wore water-proofs; the distant peaks looked very misty, if not actually dripping. But near Nab Cottage a lively group with a small megaphone were trying the echo across the valley to the left, and getting back their voice and tone most perfectly from the dells and nooks beyond. Nor could I decline to ascend for a moment Thrang Crag, a rocky clump by the wayside, thickly foliated, with rude ascending steps—called Wordsworth's Seat, sometimes. It was too damp, now, for either him or another to sit there long, and I set off again for Grasmere. A little later, at a turn of the road—it is always turning—you get a fine view of the place. The poets have sung its beauties, and the guide-books give it a star. Beyond the little town the mountains close the view—Helm Craig, Steel Fell, Seat Sandal, Great Rigg,—and to the left is the lake—Grasmere—with its one island, on which Coleridge wrote to Humphery Davy in 1800 he had been and made tea, with the kettle swinging from the branch of a fir-tree. There were boats out on the lake, as I passed on, for the drizzle had held up again, and I heard the clock of the Grasmere church strike three as I approached. Dinner was quite over, so I waited for tea.

Keswick, Eighth month 7.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

AWAKENING INTEREST IN SMALL FIRST-DAY SCHOOLS.

It has been the custom of representatives of West Chester First-day School, of late, led by Herbert P. Worth, to do some visiting during the summer vacation, among schools within reach, with the view of gaining suggestions for their own work, and of giving help and encouragement, if opportunity present. In this way schools at Marlborough, Center, Unionville, Londongrove, Goshen, West Grove, Birmingham, and other places have been visited this season. These Friends also assume the responsibility of having some representation at Romansville every First-day morning, and have done this regularly all summer. An adult class is conducted there, and Professor J. Eugene Baker recently addressed the school in the absence of President William W. Birdsall, who was prevented from attending by illness in his family.

At Unionville a small but active First-day school is regularly conducted, the older classes being in charge of Thomas Seal, and the younger one led by Carolien Hayes Chambers.

These earnest workers from West Chester sincerely hope that more Friends in the larger communities may be aroused to a livelier realization of the needs of many smaller meetings, where both life and leadership need to be developed, and to a willingness to do some active service for these.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.

V.—THE COAST OF NORWAY.

TROMSO and the gentle and patient reindeer are far behind us. At first the green hillsides, vivid in the brilliant morning sun, seemed to speed by us; but gradually these gave place to more distant rugged mountain peaks on our left, and the open ocean on the right. We were going southward around the curving chain of the Lofoden islands, into the West fiord, and to Digermullen, a hamlet on the south end of one of these isles. The Lofoden islands have been compared to a "backbone," because of their prominent vertebræ-like arrangement and tail-like termination towards the south. We arrived at Digermullen early on the 17th, feeling that we were approaching southern waters. Yet we are still far north of the latitude of Iceland and of much of Greenland. Such is the influence of the Gulf Stream. Yesterday for a time in Tromso it was uncomfortably warm, and we wished for lighter clothing. To-day the crisp, clear ocean air demands at least the lighter top coat.

At the southern end of the Lofoden islands is the maelstrom, which is shorn of the terrors attached to it in our school days. Nothing more than a rapid current, it may be that in times past it drew into it some of the smaller craft of those days, but the larger ships of to-day cannot be harmed by it.

Digermullen proved to be a center of many pleasurable excursions. Situated on the island Store Molla, it lies at the foot of the Digermulkollen mountain, which rises by sheer ascent of naked rock to 1,150 feet. It consists only of a few houses, and receives three weekly mails. The ascent of the mountain, impassable from the front, becomes moderately easy by a winding path at the side, at different points of which many picturesque views are obtained, while the lower levels afford good grazing for cattle, which are often watched by a woman, who is also occupied with her knitting. Higher up the sprightly goat is also found, grazing as usual on steep, outlying points. The summit once obtained, a magnificent view opened, said to be the finest in the Nordland. A visit of the Emperor William II., in 1889, is commemorated by a tablet. The Raftsund and Westfiord, with other numerous islands and naked, rocky peaks rising abruptly for 4,000 feet, make a picture of indescribable beauty.

Another excursion was made in the afternoon in two of the ship's launches, each trailing two large life-boats filled with happy excursionists; we moved off over the Raftsund to the narrow Troldfiord, bounded on each side by abrupt rocks, rising directly upwards hundreds of feet. I was reminded by this scene of the precipitate rocky sides of the Saguenay in Canada, which clearly resembles it, though the Norway picture may excel in grandeur.

On the evening of the 17th the anchor was again weighed, and our good ship set out for another thirty-six hours' uninterrupted trip on the ocean, and then by Aalesund, a busy town of 8,500 inhabitants, into the Storfiord, and thence into one of its branches, the narrow Jörundfiord, where again description fails me. Mountain after mountain rises as it were directly out of the water, terminating in every sort of jagged, fantastic shape conceivable. Occasionally, on green slopes towards their bases, we found a cottage surrounded with its little farm or "gaade," and even a village and church appeared at times where there scarcely seemed space enough for a fair sized yard in America.

At the end of this narrow fiord our huge steamer turned as easily and smoothly as though revolving on a pivot, and passed out again into the Storfiord and on into its turbid branch the Geirangerfiord, to Marvaak.

Those of us who had gone to bed at midnight awoke to find the ship anchored in what seemed a bowl dug out of the rock, but with still room at the edge for the little town and church. This was at once declared to be the most picturesque spot of all we had seen. Excellent roads, too, wound up the mountain at easy grades which tempted to walk or to drive in the comfortable two-wheeled "stolkjaerre," which is the principal vehicle in Norway. We went again in the region of cascades, grass-grown roofs, and little farms. It was the haymaking season here, and interesting to us was the method of drying hay by hanging it over a sort of fence. For the first time we noted, in addition to the hay fields and ever-present potato patch, a few little fields of rye which suggested toy-fields in farming instead of the actual thing.

After a few hours at Marvaak we returned to Aalesund, where the "Hohenzollern," the Emperor of Germany's yacht, lay at anchor. The passengers of the Augusta Victoria had previously been informed that the royal yacht would be at Aalesund and had been invited to visit her. Accordingly, our ship anchored within convenient distance, both bands playing "My Country, 'tis of thee." In a few moments a boat came from the yacht and took aboard Count Metternich, who was one of our company, and a few minutes later the Emperor returned with him to our ship. We gave him a rousing reception, and all admitted that his appearance was anything but warlike, whatever his methods and regulations. A decided blonde, with light hair and mustache, he made a good impression upon me. He remained on board nearly an hour, and during this time those who wished visited the royal yacht, which was of course most handsomely and tastefully appointed.

This evening we again set out to sea on our way to the Sognefjord and Gudvangen, the starting point of a two days' overland excursion to Bergen.

JAMES TYSON.

Aalesund, Norway, Seventh month 19.

A STORMY DAY AT TRONDHJEM.

And was it there—the splendor I behold—
This great fjord with its silver grace outspread
And thousand-creeked and thousand-islanded,
Those far-off hills, grape-purple, fold on fold?
For yesterday, when all day long there rolled
The blinding drift, methinks, had some one said,
"The scene is fair," I scarce had credited;
Yet fairer 'tis than any tongue hath told.
And it was there! Ah, yes! And on my way
More bravely I will go, though storm-clouds lower
And all my sky be only cold and gray;
For I have learnt the teaching of this hour;
And when God's breath blows all these mists afar,
I know that I shall see the things that are.

—Bishop How.

A LETTER FROM ALASKA.

We are about to leave this beautiful place, where we have been anchored since early morning, gazing, admiring, wondering. At dawn we were wrapped in mist, and knew that we had been very slowly moving through floating ice, some of which the sailors caught and packed into the ship's hold. Thousands of seagulls, covering like a fall of snow the clear, blue blocks, and filling the air with their cries, scarcely noticed the sailors, excepting to rise an instant on the wing and settle again on the nearest crystal berg.

A little later the fog swept away, revealing the treasure that was in store for us,—Muir Glacier in all its magnificence. I was mute and wondered whether I should be able to tell my friends at home how beautiful this is. Then a sound like the thundering of artillery echoing among the mountains seemed to mock me, and a vast mass of sparkling ice plunged forward into the sea, already dotted for miles with icebergs and floating masses in a thousand fantastic forms.

Small boats were lowered, and most of the passengers embarked to go on shore, that they might be nearer the great glacier, stand on it, peer behind the mountains, and try to learn how far it reached. The ice pours down from everywhere and takes possession of the country; slowly pushing onward, glittering, roaring, it finally sends its dazzling masses headlong into the Bay, to float, to charm, to wreck, and then silently melt away.

But now we are leaving. The Indians, whose canoes have rocked about our ship all day, and whose stores of gay baskets and curios are quite exhausted, now push off for their homes; but where? We have seen no sign of habitation since yesterday, except the hut of a lone prospector here, whose apparent perfect isolation we have noted with feelings of sympathy; nor can we guess which island contains the far-away wigwam of these strange natives. One young Indian sits barefoot in his canoe, while we on deck are wrapped in fur robes and blankets, still aching with the cold, as a fierce north wind is blowing.

All is bustle on board the Queen. The steward is making a door-to-door visit of the state-rooms, asking, "Is anyone missing from this room?" for the number of persons returning in the small boats proves one less than the recorded number taken to the cliffs. After much inquiry and argument it is decided that the clerk has made a mistake, as neither families nor friends are minus one of their number. The whistle has blown loud and long; all are certain that no one is left out on the glacier.

So the anchor is raised. The last canoe is hoisting its sail, while some of its painted-faced occupants skillfully use their paddles to keep the tiny craft from the floating ice. Seagulls cry their "ah oui ah!" We take a last lingering look at the icy splendor, and while hundreds of floating spectres silently watch our departure, the glacier thunders a loud and long farewell.

A. L. C.

Glacier Bay, Alaska, Eighth month 4.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

For the traveler by the "Overland Limited" dining cars are provided, so that meals can be had on time even if the train is not. Relieved of care as to the sleeping and eating one has the more time between for entertainment, which may be found in abundance.

A book from the well-selected train library is a good resource, provided long intervals are allowed between chapters to rest the eyes. The scenery will, of course, command much attention, particularly from the traveler new to the route. The one unfailing source of entertainment, however, which may be depended upon to fill all the spaces left after the sleeping, eating, reading, or sight-seeing, is the talk of fellow-travelers, that is, if one is sociable and a good listener. It is astonishing how free people are to talk of themselves and of family affairs, under such conditions. Then among strangers there is freedom from the fear of repetition, for one can bring out any old story or joke without the home restraint from having told them many times before.

Strange or picturesque characters, thus transiently met, stand out in memory like old acquaintances. The grandfather, a rangeman living near the Mexican line, returning from a visit to a grandson at an Eastern normal school and from seeing New York city after a long interval; a grandmother making a trip, alone, from Portland, Oregon, to Paris, France,—one-third of the distance around the world—to visit a daughter and grandson; citizens of foreign birth returning to fatherland in Pullman and cabin, who came, perhaps, in the steerage and in emigrant trains; and the confirmed health or pleasure seekers migrating with the sun.

Standing out more prominently on this trip and appealing more to the imagination than any other of the many personal interests, is the remembrance of the farmer and his wife, who, if they live until next spring, will be able to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, which occurred while en route in wagon train from Wisconsin to California, in 1850. The story written connectedly must lose the graphic presentment in scraps, brought out by the changing scenes.

The journey which then took four months is now covered in four days. They were a month in reaching Council Bluffs. At that point their small party of nine joined a train of seventy-five wagons and journeyed up the valley of the Platte. At Fort Lorraine the two were married. Owing to high water in the rivers, they kept far to the north of Salt Lake and across the desert to the Humboldt river. Fortunately they had started at the right season for pasture and water. The early emigrants were favored, also, by not having to contend with hostile Indians. The party was now reduced to the original nine, and this chance acquaintance of ours was the only woman in it, to face along with strong men the most critical part of the long journey.

Leaving the Humboldt valley for the unknown and unwatered desert beyond, they made a mistake in starting in the evening, thinking to save the animals from the heat of the day. For want of the usual sleep exhaustion came earlier, and it became evident that, to reach water in time, the wagons must be abandoned. So they packed what they could on the horses and continued on with strength nearly gone. At several miles' distance the horses scented the water and hurried forward as though urgently driven. Before them, yet, were the Sierra Nevada mountains rising at the passes to over 7,000 feet, but after a long struggle they all reached the gold region on the American river, California.

Their means were exhausted and there was no work at which the men could earn a living, but the woman found employment at once, and, at a critical time, saved the party from distress. The building of hydraulic works, final success, three trips across the Isthmus of Panama, happiness in their children, competence in the form of a large farm at the old home, with invested savings, were parts briefly told.

When the hills closed in and the valley narrowed, we knew that nearby was the old trail. The difficulties of the way seemed to be traced in the strong lines of the aged faces, and the early comradeship perpetuated in loving and thoughtful service one for the other.

Santa Barbara, Cal.

LITERARY NOTES.

PRESIDENT SHARPLESS, of Haverford College, will issue early in Ninth month the second and concluding volume of his History of Quaker Government in Pennsylvania on which he has been actively at work for some years. The first volume was issued in the spring of 1898 under the title of "A Quaker Experiment in Government," and reviewed the first seventy-five years of the government of Penn's Commonwealth. In the present volume, which is entitled "The Quakers in the Revolution," the story is carried into the more stirring and better-known scenes of the Revolutionary War, and crosses the track of several of the most popular of recent historical romances. The Quakers, under stress of a stormy trial of their principles, became distinctly interesting and not unheroic figures, and their history in this period is well worthy the further attention of the novel-writers. It is also true that the plain, unvarnished truth about them is not only highly instructive, but far more entertaining than most novels. Those who have become interested in them through the pages of romances will be glad to follow them into actual history in President Sharpless's interesting volume. T. S. Leach & Co., publishers, 29 North Seventh street, Philadelphia.

President Charles Kendall Adams opens the current Atlantic with a review of "The Irresistible Tendencies," the spirit of the ages, the great movements of centuries or generations, which change the face of the world; instancing chiefly the spirit of Individualism, to which he attributes the wonderful advances in liberty and progress of the last four hundred years. He claims that the fundamental fact is that the whole of this vast movement is the advance of civilization upon barbarism. He maintains that it is the ever irresistible encroachment of the modern spirit upon the spirit of antiquity; electricity driving out the rush light; the white man ever civilizing the red man or pushing him out of the way. And this great movement is in the interests of a larger and a richer and a higher humanity.

Jane H. Findlater discusses "The Scot of Fiction," and shows in a lively and entertaining sketch how a few Scotch characteristics have been taken as typical of a whole nation, and how largely misrepresented in literature the Scotch people have been, both as to their virtues and their vices; but they still remain "with all the vigor, the intellectuality, the nerve of their race, and with its vices too, a strenuous people capable of anything."

Jacob A. Riis, in "The Genesis of the Gang," explains the manner by which, out of the slum and its surroundings, naturally and inevitably arise the gangs of young ruffians and hoodlums in our great cities. The boys who are given jails for schools and the gutter for a playground, dummies for laws, and the tenement for a home, are the material from which "the Gang" is invariably and inevitably made.

J. S. Tunison, in "The Book Review, Past and Present," describes the various methods by which the criticisms of books have been put forward in times past and are to-day; their effect upon the public, and the various causes which make or mar the success of a book or an author.

In "Criticism and the Man," John Burroughs discusses the nature and province of criticism, and the opportunities, dangers, and duties of the critic.

Samuel M. Crothers, whose essay on "The Enjoyment of Poetry," in a recent number of the Atlantic, attracted such widespread attention, contributes "The Mission of Humor," an equally delightful paper and a brilliant example of the very subject it discusses.

A FLY so minute as to be almost invisible ran three inches in a half second, and was calculated to make no less than 540 steps in the time a healthy man would take to breathe once. A man with proportionate agility could run twenty-four miles in a minute.

EXTRACTS FROM PRIVATE LETTERS.

A FRIEND, sojourning in Southern California, writes :

"The days here in Santa Barbara are gloriously beautiful, —the sky without a cloud, the sun shining, and a cool wind blowing from the Pacific. To-day, Eighth month 13, is quite warm, but I am wearing a lined dress with comfort. Very many mornings are foggy ; we should call them cloudy in the East, as the fog is high, and rarely is the grass wet.

"We find many rare plants, as we walk the streets, and some very tropical-looking yards. The passion flower is in pink and bright scarlet, in addition to purple and lilac, and we see pomegranates, ginger plants, and cork trees, and the blooming cacti in white, yellow, and pink. There is an "acclimatizing" association here, to introduce and experiment with all sorts of plants, and to forward the horticultural capabilities of Southern California. We have been to their small green-house and adjoining enclosure, and were surrounded by strange trees, shrubs, and plants.

"The vegetables we do not eat with as much zest as we did East, because we have most of them all the time, and some of them, notably corn and asparagus, are not as good as at home. Canteloupes, peaches, and apricots are now in great abundance ; the peaches, however, do not have the Delaware flavor. Plums are fine and pears are coming, but I am told they do not have the Seckel."

* *

Elizabeth Powell Bond thus writes of her visit at East Freyburg, Me. :

"The days at East Freyburg were days of unspeakable delight. We made the journey from Kennebunkport in a rain that was sometimes a downpour, but the eight miles' drive from the station through a woods road and in a rain that was gentle, was charming.

"Second-day morning I woke before five, and glancing out the window, there were the giant mountains in absolute clearness, every atom of mist and haze blown away by the wind. I sat by the window, gazing my fill, and was moved to write a little memorial to keep the picture in my mind. [Printed on first page of this paper.—EDS.]

"It had been agreed the night before that my one remaining day, if it proved clear, should be given to climbing Mt. Pleasant, three miles to the east of Carter Hill, a climb of 2,160 feet. The clearness was absolute, so after breakfast we made the ascent. The view was well worth the sore muscles that resulted. Beside the wall and the billows of mountains, there were nine lakes dotting the interval. We saw nothing more beautiful abroad than the picture these dear friends live with through the summer. This glimpse of White Mountain glories, of which one could get eight or ten weeks for the cost of a steamer ticket, has made me feel that we need not go abroad very soon again.

"On First-day morning we went to the little meeting, thirteen of us, that Dr. Holmes and Dr. Janney help during their summer stay."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

WE have notes concerning some of our travelers in Europe. Mary Travilla and Sarah R. Paiste were at Amsterdam on the 8th inst., intending to go to The Hague on the 11th, and to return to England on the 15th ; they would go to the Lake Country a little later. Dr. W. I. and Hannah C. Hull, reached Grasmere, in the English Lakes, on the 4th inst., and went on to Keswick on the 10th ; they will sail for home on the Umbria, from Liverpool, on the 2d of next month. Howard M. Jenkins was at Patterdale, on Ullswater, with the Grahams, for a few days, to the 11th, when he left for a brief tour in Scotland. Anna Janney Lippincott, Susan W. Janney, and their companions, were at Cologne on the 8th instant, intending to proceed as far as Switzerland, and as far south as the Italian Lakes. They will sail for home on the 11th of next month.

Jesse H. Holmes (now with his family at East Freyburg Maine), expects to sail for England on the 26th inst.

A SYNDICATE is being formed in Cork to insure quick and cheap transport of Irish dairy produce to the English markets.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

OVERCOMING.

IN this world of joy and sorrow,
If we would not trouble borrow,
Be not anxious for to-morrow.

Each one's life is what we make ;
As we truth or error take,
Be our choice for wisdom's sake.

If there is an evil seeming,
Filling us with idle dreaming
That this life with sin is teeming,

Just believe there's naught but good,
If we rightly understood
And obeyed it, as we should.

Always is the darkest night
Soon dispelled by coming light,
Until all is fair and bright.

So the clouds of evil may
Be dispelled by coming ray
Of the truth's transcendent day,

Then the clear, inshining light
Of God's love will lead us right
Into pathways clear and bright.

We can then forsake all sin,
And our crown of glory win,
For God's kingdom is within.

ANNA M. STARR.

THE WAKING OF THE LARK.

O BONNIE bird, that in the brake, exultant, dost prepare thee—
As poets do whose thoughts are true, for wings that will up-bear thee—

O ! tell me, tell me, bonnie bird,
Canst thou not pipe of hope deferred ?
Or canst thou sing of nought but spring among the golden meadows ?

Methinks a bard (and thou art one) should suit his song to sorrow,
And tell of pain as well as gain, that waits us on the morrow ;
But thou art not a prophet, thou,
If nought but joy can touch thee now ;
If in thy heart thou hast no vow that speaks of Nature's anguish.

O ! I have held my sorrow dear, and felt, tho' poor and slighted,
The songs we love are those we hear when love is unrequited.
But thou art still the slave of dawn,
And canst not sing till night be gone,
Till o'er the pathway of the fawn the sunbeams shine and quiver.

Thou art the minion of the sun that rises in his splendor,
And canst not spare for Dian fair the songs that should attend her.

The moon, so sad and silver-pale,
Is mistress of the nightingale ;
And thou wilt sing on hill and dale no ditties in the darkness.

For Queen and King thou wilt not spare one note of thine outpouring ;

Thou art as free as breezes be on Nature's velvet flooring.
The daisy, with its hood undone,
The grass, the sunlight, and the sun—
These are the joys, thou holy one, that pay thee for thy singing.

O, hush ! O, hush ! how wild a gush of rapture in the distance,—

A roll of rhymes, a toll of chimes, a cry for love's assistance ;
A sound that wells from happy throats,
A flood of song where beauty floats,
And where our thoughts, like golden boats, do seem to cross a river.

This is the advent of the lark—the priest in gray apparel—
Who doth prepare to trill in air his sinless summer carol ;

This is the prelude to the lay
The birds did sing in Cæsar's day,
And will again, for aye and aye, in praise of God's creation.

O dainty thing, on wonder's wing, by life and love elated,
O ! sing aloud from cloud to cloud, till day be consecrated ;
Till from the gateways of the morn
The sun, with all his light unshorn,
His robes of darkness round him torn, doth scale the lofty heavens ! —Eric Mackay.

THE TRANSVAAL REPUBLIC—AN ENGLISH STATEMENT.

Robert Spence Watson, LL. D., (a prominent English Friend), in One and All, London.

BEFORE we have drifted into a war which must have far-reaching and possibly disastrous consequences to our colonial empire, it is well that we should calmly consider how far it is necessary, and what it is all about. We shall be able to do this the more easily if we are acquainted with the history of our connection with the Transvaal.

We had harried the Dutch, who did not agree with or like our rule, out of the Cape Colony into Natal and the Orange River Territory, and out of the Orange River Territory into the Transvaal, where Pretorius established a republic. In 1852, English commissioners entered into the Sand River Treaty with him. The Transvaal had never been declared British territory, and the first article of this convention guaranteed "in the fullest manner, on the part of the British Government, to the emigrant farmers beyond the Vaal river, the right to manage their own affairs, and to govern themselves according to their own laws, without any interference on the part of the British Government ; and that no encroachment shall be made by the said Government to the territory beyond, to the north of the Vaal river ; with the further assurance that the warmest wish of the British Government is to promote peace, free trade, and friendly intercourse with the emigrant farmers now inhabiting, or who hereafter may inhabit, that country ; it being understood that this system of non-interference is binding upon both parties." And thus the Transvaal Republic was formed by treaty with the English nation.

The Boers had before this formed a republic in the Orange River Free State. The Earl Grey of that day instructed Sir Harry Smith to induce the native chiefs "to establish a confederacy against the Boers." In 1848 we fought them, beat them, and annexed their territory. In 1854 we gave it back to them and guaranteed their independence. For thirteen years things went on quietly. Then, in 1867, the diamond fields were discovered in the west part of the Free State territory ; the British Government forgot all about their treaty, and, in 1871, declared the diamond fields to be British territory. In 1874, an English resident told Mr. Proude that this transaction made him ashamed of his country.

In 1871 gold was discovered in the north of the Transvaal, and diggers rushed in to avail themselves of the discovery. Then we began to support the Zulus in long-standing contentions with the Boers.

The English Government had already received a request from the handful of Englishmen who had been tempted to the country by gold, to annex the Transvaal. They sent Sir Theophilus Shepstone to investigate matters, and to advise the Dutch authorities. He entered Pretoria on the 22d of January, 1877, and on the 12th of April, in direct defiance of his commission, he issued a proclamation annexing the country.

He told our Government that this was in accordance with the wishes of the great majority of the people. But, though he used the most despotic and arbitrary means to intimidate them, out of the 8,000 adult males in the Transvaal, 6,591 signed the memorial against, and only 587 for, the annexation. Then he said that the Boers had instituted slavery in their territory. It was true that they had introduced compulsory apprenticeship. This is a form of forced labor which is a most cruel form of slavery. But the Chartered Company and the Cape Government have both adopted it in recent years.

Then he said they ill-treated the natives. We should all of us hide our heads when treatment of the natives is mentioned. Our hands are as black in this matter as those of any of our neighbors.

Then he said that the natives had beaten them in war ; but, at that very time, Secocooni was suing for peace. All the pretexts were untrue. We were told that annexation was necessary for the peace of South Africa, and all the foolish notions about upholding British power and prestige by doing wrong, which are polished up to pass current now, were eagerly brought forward then. But we were not then so materialistically inclined as we are now. The worship of the golden calf was not so universal. We had no Chartered Company of South Africa, with its alter ego, the South African League, and thus no great body of wealthy and powerful shareholders to push pecuniary interests under the specious titles of national glory and honor. We were led by the greatest of leaders, Mr. Gladstone, and we did what was right, we gave back the Transvaal to the Boers. It was unfortunate that this restitution accidentally came after the defeat of the Majuba Hill, but, if the annexation were wrong, we were also wrong in fighting the Boers at Majuba Hill.

When the Transvaal was given back to the Boers, the suzerainty of the British sovereign was retained. What suzerainty exactly is authorities differ about, but the actual position is thus stated in "The Statesman's Year Book" for 1898, where the Transvaal (the South African Republic) is placed amongst "Foreign Countries." According to the convention ratified by the Volksraad, October 26, 1881, self-government was restored to the Transvaal so far as regards internal affairs, the control and management of external affairs being reserved to Her Majesty as suzerain. Another convention with the Government of Great Britain was signed in London, February 27, 1884, ratified by the Volksraad August 8th, by which the State is to be known as the South African Republic, and the British suzerainty restricted to control of foreign relations.

Unfortunately for the peace and quietness of the Transvaal, which was a pastoral country inhabited by agriculturists, the gold-fields which it contains are perhaps the richest in the world, and there are also coal mines. Hence great numbers of foreigners (the much-talked-of Uitlanders) have rushed into the country. Many of the foreigners (who are chiefly English) have taken up their abode permanently in the land; but the greater part are mere birds of passage, attracted by the gold, and meaning to make their pile and leave the country as soon as that is accomplished.

Now this is always an awkward element to deal with, and one which must give the Government of the Transvaal constant anxiety. They cannot, and they ought not, to consent to put the future of their land at the mercy of a horde of rapacious foreigners. They ought to give men, who show that they are really desirous to become citizens, with the intention of being loyal and law-abiding, the full rights of citizenship. But how and when this is to be done is a matter for them, and for them alone. We may advise, we may suggest, we have no right to compel. All countries differ in this alien matter. With us an alien can obtain the right to vote by being naturalized. He must have lived five years in the country, taken the oath of allegiance, pay £6, satisfy the Secretary of State, who can reject without giving a reason, and then may be unable to get on to the register for nearly twelve months, or to vote for six months more—that is six and one-half years in all. In the United States it is nearly as long. President Kruger has offered seven years in the Transvaal.

But, say Sir Alfred Milner and his friends, that is no use; we want to get a great number on the registers at once, and there is talk of the next President being a foreigner. That is unreasonable and unfair. Oh, says the Daily News, but the franchise is only a stepping-stone to the abolishing of grievances. Now it is time that the truth were told about these grievances. What are they? To hear some men talk you would imagine they were personal torture at the least. We should know them well. The worst of them are not nearly so bad as the injustices inflicted by the Tories upon Ireland only ten years ago. Just as the great majority of those who shriek out forever because the Transvaal authorities are more prudent than they think proper are the men who fifteen years ago denied the franchise to their fellow-citizens, so the great majority of those who denounce the prohibition of public meetings in the Transvaal applauded their prohibition in Ireland less than ten years ago.

The grievances have been stated thus: (1) The compulsory learning of Dutch in the National schools: but the learning of English is compulsory in Welsh, Scotch, and Irish national schools, and Celtic and Gaelic are strictly forbidden. (2) The defective police and sanitary regulations: our own have many imperfections. (3) The monopolies and various taxes on necessities: there is something of a land monopoly in our own country, and we are far from a free breakfast table, and tax salt and sugar in India!

Those of us who believe in the widest freedom for those who speak and write, who have long fought for universal suffrage not confined by creed, color, or sex, are most earnest in urging upon President Kruger and the Boers that the wisest policy is the most generous one. But it is too clear that franchise, grievances, and all the rest are with too many of the war-thirsty sections of our countrymen, mere pretexts. It is gold they want; land they want; the Transvaal they want. The iniquity of war is never mentioned; its unwisdom is sneered at. Two of the present men in authority have taken steps which have gone far to make peace impossible. But the great mass of the English people has remained silent. The wild outcry for war has been confined to a few, for the most part interested people. Parliament will soon be dissolved, and then the greatest danger begins. If only the people, who have all to lose by war, who abhor injustice even to the unjust, who hold our country's honor higher than its land or gold, will speak out and let our rulers know that it is at their peril that they embark upon a war which, whatever its issue, would make our country's name live in history's curse, we shall be spared this national sin and shame.

TWO WAYS OF MANAGING CHILDREN.

I KNEW two mothers, neighbors, for whom circumstances made it necessary to choose a day even in August for washing—one of them a tubful of white curtains, the other some white bedspreads. They conferred together about it the evening before, and decided, most sensibly, to use one of the many good soaps now on the market for washing in cold water, to make a splendid suds in their bath-tubs, and let the curtains and spreads practically wash themselves by much soaking and frequent changes of water. I always felt it to be such a pity that they had not also consulted about the further arrangements. One mother boxed her little daughter's ears twice, slapped her hands three times, and finally tied her, sobbing, into a chair, there to remain until the washing was over. Why? Because the child, being only seven, found the temptation to plunge her small hands into that lovely suds simply irresistible; the splashing it all over her small body was an accident, not an intentional naughtiness.

At nightfall the mothers met on their piazza and had another conference. The washing in both cases had been eminently successful.

"Only," said one mother, "what did you do with Frances while your spreads were soaking? I could not keep my Mamie away from the bath-tub; she seemed simply possessed to get her hands in the water. Once she wet herself from head to foot, bending over too far, you know. I finally tied her into a chair and kept her there."

"Why, Frances," said the other mother, "was a real help to me. She is so fond of playing in water that I thought this was quite an opportunity. I took off every article of dress and put on a low-necked, short-sleeved, cotton slip that must go in the next wash, and told her that she might make just as big a suds for me as she wanted to in the bath-tub, and you never saw a happier child. She was as wet as a duck, of course, but it did no harm on such a day as this. In fact, I think she was the better for it; she hasn't complained of the heat, nor been cross at all to-day. I always watch for legitimate occasions to let her play in water."

Happy Frances!—Mrs. Alden, in Trained Motherhood.

The Value of "Manual Training."

IN a modern school, verbal recitations form only a small part of what the pupil is required to do, says Professor William James in the Atlantic Monthly. He must keep notebooks, make drawings, plans, and maps, take measurements, enter the laboratory and perform experiments, consult authorities, and write essays. He must do in his fashion what is often laughed at by outsiders when it appears in prospectuses under the title of "original work," but what is really the only possible training for the doing of original work thereafter.

The most colossal improvement which recent years have seen in secondary education lies in the introduction of the Manual Training Schools; not because they will give us a people more handy and practical for domestic life and better skilled in trades, but because they will give us citizens with an entirely different intellectual fibre. Laboratory work and shop work engender a habit of observation, a knowledge of the difference between accuracy and vagueness, and an insight into nature's complexity and into the inadequacy of all abstract verbal accounts of real phenomena, which, once wrought into the mind, remain there as lifelong possessions.

They confer precision; because if you are doing a thing, you must do it definitely right or definitely wrong. They give honesty; for when you express yourself by making things, and not by using words, it becomes impossible to dissimulate your vagueness or ignorance by ambiguity. They beget a habit of self-reliance; they keep the interest and attention always cheerfully engaged, and reduce the teacher's disciplinary functions to a minimum.

International Agricultural Congress, 1900.

THE program has now been issued of the sixth international agricultural congress, to be held from the 1st to the 8th of July, 1900, in connection with the Paris Exhibition. These gatherings of European agriculturists were established upon a permanent footing as a result of the International Agricultural Congress which was held at Paris in 1889. An international agricultural commission, with head-quarters at Paris, was then appointed, to consist of representatives of the chief European countries and of the United States, for the purpose of organizing similar periodical congresses in different capitals. There have thus been five of these congresses held—viz., at Paris 1889, The Hague 1891, Brussels 1895, Buda Pesth 1896, and Lausanne 1898. The work of the sixth congress at Paris will be divided into seven sections, as follows: 1, Rural economy (agricultural credit, agricultural associations, land surveying, agrarian questions); 2, agricultural education (experimental stations, field experiments, etc.); 3, agricultural science (application of science to agriculture and agricultural improvements); 4, live stock; 5, practical agriculture (industrial, crops, and agricultural industries); 6, special crops of the south (silk production, early fruits and vegetables, perfume plants, and colonial productions); 7, injurious insects and parasites (international measures for the protection of useful animals). Membership for the congress is open to individuals and delegates of agricultural societies of all countries.

Love the Farm and Farm Home.

"THE only drawback to any intelligent country community enjoying educational and refining privileges is lack of co-operation between the farmers themselves," writes Mrs. John B. Sims, of "Entertaining in the Country," in the July Ladies' Home Journal. "Whenever a farming community realize that in themselves lie the means of educating their sons and daughters to love the farm and the farm home, and that because one does not have the privileges of the town or large city there is no reason why he should stagnate either mentally or socially, they will have solved the problem of how to live happily and contentedly on a farm."

Hygienic Decalogue.

A PARISIAN publisher offered a prize for the ten best rules for acquiring and maintaining good mental and bodily health. There were over 500 competitors. Dr. Decomet won the prize for the following, as translated in The Lancet:

1. Rise early, go to bed early; and in the meantime keep yourself occupied.
2. Water and bread sustain life, but pure air and sunlight are indispensable for health.
3. Frugality and sobriety are the best elixir for a long life.
4. Cleanliness preserves from rust; the best kept machines last the longest.
5. A sufficiency of rest repairs and strengthens; too much rest weakens and makes soft.
6. He is well clothed who keeps his body sufficiently warm, safeguarding it from all abrupt changes of temperature, while at the same time maintaining perfect freedom of motion.
7. A house that is clean and cheerful makes a happy home.
8. The mind reposes and resumes its edge by means of relaxation and amusement, but excess opens the door to the passions, and these attract the vices.
9. Gayety conduces to the love of life, and love of life is the half of health. On the other hand, sadness and gloom help on old age.
10. Is it your brain that feeds you? Don't allow your arms and legs to become ankylosed. Dig for a livelihood, but don't omit to burnish your intellect and elevate your thoughts.

The Trolley in Germany.

WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS, in his latest story, "Their Silver Wedding Journey," delicately satirizes the American trolley by a description of the German.

"The conductor of the trolley car, which they hailed at the street corner, stopped it and got off the platform and stood in the street until they were safely aboard, without telling them to step lively or pulling them up the steps, or knuckling them in the back to make them move forward. He let them get fairly seated before he started the car, and so lost the fun of seeing them lurch and stagger violently and wildly clutch each other for support. The Germans have so little sense of humor that probably no one in the car would have been amused to see the strangers flung upon the floor. No one apparently thought it droll that the conductor should touch his cap to them when he asked for their fare; no one smiled at their efforts to make him understand where they wished to go, and he did not wink at the other passengers in trying to find out. Whenever the car stopped he descended first, and did not remount till the dismounting passengers had taken time to get well away from it. When the Marches got into the wrong car in coming home and were carried beyond the street, the conductor would not take their fare.

Archbishop of Canterbury for Woman Suffrage.

THE following is the petition which the Archbishop of Canterbury recently has signed, his name being one of a very distinguished list:

"Your petitioners hold that the recognition of the full rights of women as capable citizens is essential to the establishment of social justice and to the wise and efficient government of the country. Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that your honorable House will pass a measure securing to women the right of voting for members of Parliament on the same terms on which that right is or may be exercised by men."

The Archbishop of Canterbury is the highest dignity of the Church of England. He is the Primate of all England, has a prominent place in the House of Lords, and by immemorial usage he presides at the coronation of kings and queens, and places the crown on the head of the sovereign. Many conservative Episcopal clergymen will shudder at the action of the Archbishop in signing a woman suffrage petition. The Episcopal, as well as the Methodist and Catholic bishops, are divided on this question, just as they used to be on that of human slavery.

Rev. D. P. Livermore and Equal Rights.

THE death of Rev. D. P. Livermore, of Melrose, Mass., at the age of eighty, leaves Mrs. Mary A. Livermore desolate, and ends an exceptionally happy and harmonious married life. Mrs. Livermore at seventy-eight was almost as much in demand for lectures as in her prime. She was speaking on an average four times a week up to a few months ago, when her husband's health failed. During his lingering illness she devoted herself to him, withdrawing herself almost entirely from public work. Even calls from the causes most dear to her could not tempt her from his side. To an invitation to speak at the Woman Suffrage Festival, she answered, "Never during the fifty-four years of our marriage has he once failed me in any emergency. Wild horses could not drag me from home now that he is ill and needs me."

Rev. E. E. Bolles, in his funeral sermon, paid tribute to Mr. Livermore as "one of our most faithful ministers; one who lived a long and blameless life, and contributed of his wide learning and his strong common-sense in the building up of the church."

The harmony that prevailed in the Livermore family was found compatible with a great diversity of opinions. Mrs. Livermore used to say that every member of her household went to a different church, employed a different physician, and belonged to a different school in politics.

Mr. Livermore was a warm advocate of woman suffrage, and converted his wife to the doctrine. He was the author of several fiery and chivalrous pamphlets in defense of equal rights for women. In all her public work for that and other good causes, he not only approved of her efforts, but spurred her on. It is said that whenever they took a walk together, and happened to pass any particularly drunken and disreputable person, he would say, "Look, wife, look! There goes your political superior!" He was both fond and proud of his gifted wife, and it filled him with wrath to think that she was classed politically below the most worthless and incompetent men. She repaid his generous love with cordial devotion. During his long and successful pastorate at Hingham, Mass., she was his able assistant; and she first became known to the public by her writings in a religious paper of which he was the editor. He in turn aided her with his pen during the two years that she edited the Boston Woman's Journal. It has been well said, "There can be no true marriage between a man and a doll." Mr. Livermore had reason to believe in woman suffrage, for his own married life was almost ideally happy.

ETHEL C. AVERY.

The Jersey Cow.

IT was not without reason that the Greeks called a beautiful woman "cow-eyed"; but though many a famous Jersey cow has borne a Greek name, Hellas never saw cows comparing in beauty with the modern Jersey—so fine and trim in shape and so dainty in color and shading, or with eyes so large and liquid. For many years it was disputed whether the breed were not a cross between the cow and deer. The Jersey as much surpasses her ancient progenitors in the richness and abundance of her milk and cream as in beauty. At the World's Fair at Chicago, in 1893, the Jersey, putting aside all question of beauty, challenged all other breeds for quantity and quality of the butter, and was a triumphant winner over all competitors.

For some years there has been a reaction from the extravagant prices which prevailed in the eighties for Jerseys, says Harper's Bazar. During the height of that craze it is said that $20,000 was paid for the bull Prince of Pogis, and that famous cows brought from $6,000 to $10,000.

E. S. HOLMES, JR., an expert of the Statistical Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, has just completed a report to Chief Statistician Hyde, of that Department, embodying the results of a tour of the flood devastated region of Texas, and making a careful estimate of the damage done, the aggregate of which he places at $7,414,000. The report states that the greatest damage was in McLennan, Falls, Milam, Robertson, Brazos, Burleson, Grimes, Washington, Waller, Austin, and Fort Bend.

CURRENT EVENTS.

THE political strain in France, growing out of the Dreyfus case, found vent on the 20th instant, when mobs of Anarchists and Socialists took possession of the streets of Paris. The outbreaks were of the most violent character, recalling the exciting days of the Commune. Many persons were injured, and one of the mobs sacked a church, destroying the altars and statues and otherwise desecrating the edifice.

LONDON'S latest cable advices from South Africa show that President Kruger's diplomatic refusal of Secretary Chamberlain's demand for a Court of Inquiry has intensified the already acute situation; and it is now thought in England that the controversy can only be settled by war. Unless the Boers make a complete back-down, which is not probable, a crisis will quickly be reached that may end in bloodshed.

AN exhibition of Van Dyck's paintings is being held in Antwerp. The committee has collected 106 pictures and sketches, most of which are fine specimens. England has lent no fewer than thirty-six pictures, and the generosity is regarded in Antwerp as a token of good will, and has elicited much satisfaction, particularly as the Italian Government has proved rather conspicuous for its unamiability in refusing to take any part. King Humbert, however, has kindly sent a dozen sketches, and three or four unimportant pictures have come from private sources. The coveted Genoese pictures were most persistently refused. France sent sixteen pictures, Germany four, Austria five, Russia two, Poland six and Holland one.

DR. WILLIAM DELL HARTMAN, a distinguished natural scientist, died at West Chester last week. His name was known throughout this country and Europe as that of one of the most successful natural scientists of this century. He paid particular attention to conchology, entomology, geology, and mineralogy, and made a collection of shells which is especially rich in the genera of partula and achinella. Of the latter class his collection exceeds that of the British Museum and the Jardin des Plantes at Paris.

PUBLIC opinion in Great Britain is becoming agitated over the danger in regard to the bubonic plague, now that it has broken out at Oporto, which is now only three days' journey distant from England.

PROFESSOR ROBERT WILHELM EBERHARD BUNSEN, the distinguished German chemist, died at Heidelberg, on the 16th instant, aged 89 years.

PRESSURE is being brought to bear upon the Administration by Americans trading in China, to secure the negotiation of an agreement with foreign Governments having spheres of influence in the Celestial Empire, which will bind them to oppose the enforcement of differential tariffs in the territory under their control.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

THE sacred fires of India have not all been extinguished. The most ancient, which still exists, was consecrated twelve centuries ago, in commemoration of the voyage made by the Parsees when they emigrated from Persia to India. The fire is fed five times every twenty-four hours with sandalwood and other fragrant materials, combined with very dry fuel. This fire, in the village of Oodwada, near Bulsar, is visited by Parsees in large numbers during the months allotted to the presiding genius of fire.

—At Cripple Creek, writes a correspondent of the London Mining Journal, a miner can go to his work in an electric street car, descend the mine in an electric hoist, such mine being kept dry by an electric pump, do his work by an electric light, run drills operated by electric air compressors (soon to be superseded by electric drills), and fire his shots by electricity from a switchboard remote from the point of explosion.

—Andrew Carnegie has given $50,000 to found a public library at Keighley, England. He denies the report that he is a British subject.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873.

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 2, 1899.

Volume LVI.
Number 35.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XXXV.

THERE is a principle which is pure, placed in the human mind, which in different places and ages hath had different names; it is, however, pure, and proceeds from God. It is deep and inward, confined to no forms of religion nor excluded from any, when the heart stands in perfect sincerity. In whomsoever this takes root and grows, they become brethren.

JOHN WOOLMAN.

From his "Journal."

THE VISION OF THE FAITHFUL.

UPON the faithful in the common things
Enjoined of duty rarest blessings wait.
A pious nun (an ancient volume brings
The legend and the lesson), while she sate
Reading some scriptures of the Sacred Word,
And marvelling much at Christ's exceeding grace,
Saw in her room a vision of the Lord
With sudden splendor filling all the place,
Whereat she knelt, enraptured!—when a bell
Signalled her hour to feed the convent poor;
Which humble duty done, she sought her cell,
And lo! the vision, brighter than before,
Who smiling, spake, "Even so is Heaven obtained;
I—had thou lingered here—had not remained."

—John G. Saxe.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

THE LIVING PRESENT.

"SAY not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not enquire wisely concerning this." Thus said a Hebrew writer more than twenty centuries ago. It was very likely the sentiment of a young man who looked out upon life with joy, and saw it filled with promises of a glorious culmination of the work of a good and wise Power, that from the beginning has ordained the triumph, forever, of the true over the false,—the good over the evil. But amid the same collection of aphorisms we find abundant declarations of those who beheld the immense disproportion between the plans and the achievements of man,—the enormous surplus of pain over pleasure. "Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher; vanity of vanities, all is vanity,—all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

Thus philosophers may be divided into two classes—the optimists and the pessimists. As they advance in age men are prone to pass over from the former to the latter class, and we find ourselves in our later years sighing for the good old times of the past.

Some years ago my wife and I were reading John Woolman's Journal, and in it he deplored the frivolity of his day, and expressed a longing for the return of the more earnest spirit of the fathers. After this we read together the life of Rachel Hicks, and here again, in a succeeding generation, we find a similar repining, here plainly stated, for the more serious and sober minds that characterized the Friends of John Woolman's times, and regrets that the Friends of her day showed so great a lack of reverence of the testimonies of the former generations.

In a recent editorial of the INTELLIGENCER, after an allusion to the improvements of the present century and the conveniences of recent times, the question is asked: "But has a corresponding enrichment of our spiritual life resulted? Has a nobler manhood and womanhood resulted?" It seems to me that there is no doubt that there has never been a time in the world's history when there were so many evidences of the evolution of spiritual life in mankind as there are now. Never in the world's history has there appeared such a wonderful development of human conscience as now. There was a time when Friends were a peculiar people, standing in the advanced ranks of society as portrayers of a high degree of ethical and spiritual principles, and promoters of reformations in social customs and national usages that tended to exalt things that make for righteousness in the world. They may be so yet in some respects, and probably are,—in fact, were it not a digression from my present theme, I could show abundant evidences of it,—but along most of the lines of the former testimonies of Friends, the great majority of mankind has adopted the standards of our fathers.

Let any one read the account of the social life of the middle and latter part of the eighteenth century, as presented in Green's History of the American People, and compare the customs and manners of those days with the present. In insincerity of speech, extravagance of dress, rudeness of manners, intemperance of habit, intolerance of opposition, unthoughtfulness of conditions of human suffering about them, the social life of a century ago presents what seems now a shameful record. Compared with that of to-day the difference is so marked that one's faith in the power of righteousness and love, as an active force in human character, cannot fail to grow strong. Read the history of Prison Reform, inaugurated by John Howard in the last quarter of last century, and taken up by Elizabeth Fry in the early part of the present; of the beginning of a public feeling of sympathy and care for the insane, the idiotic, or the imbecile,—in the last case being a matter so recent as to be within the memory of most of the readers,—of the work for temperance, practically the labors of the present generation; of the abolishment of slavery, only a generation ago, in one of the most advanced of civilized nations; of the recognition of women as human beings endowed by God with all the rights that are needful to human welfare and development ; of the rights of man as an individual,—now under the term of socialism,—the burning question of the hour ; read of the great achievements of the people of the last one hundred years in ameliorating conditions of human suffering, and removing causes of stagnation in the growth of human character ; and can one fail to recognize that God's good work in the world is going on ?

Yes, there are still remaining wrongs to be righted, miseries to be removed, injustices to be remedied. There are still consciences to be awakened, hearts to be softened, lives to be still quickened in spirituality. But God still lives. When, after the fearful destruction of human life in the harbor of Santiago, where men fought like demons, and all the enginery of modern warfare had been employed with the greatest skill that modern science could command,—the battle being over, and the enemy, such as survived the awful carnage, were drowning amid their riddled ships and boats,—the crews of the victorious fleet were just as regardless of their own safety, in their endeavors to save life, as they were a few moments before in destroying it. Think how that compares with the customs of a century ago ; test it by the standard of the Hebrew wars, where all were put under the ban, even innocent women and children. Compare it even with the wars of a generation ago,—the horrors so vividly depicted by the pencil of Vereschagin of the Crimean war, for instance,—and behold how God has wrought his law of love and kindness and brought forth fruit even from this unfertile soil ! Consider also the wonderful instance of the triumph of spiritual life (so near to us as to fail to have perspective sufficient to exhibit it in all its Divine significance) ; of the ruler of the most powerful and warlike nation in the world, calling a convention of nations to agree upon principles for the settlement of differences among nations that shall make wars infrequent, if not impossible ; of that Congress of representatives of the world's great rulers at The Hague, from which have been given proposals for a permanent Court of Arbitration for the settlement of all international quarrels. Call to mind, as a case of the power of conscience, as a leaven, inspiring a sense of national justice, the now pending reconsideration of a seeming unjust sentence of a Jewish officer of the French army, in which, standing forth as a miracle of Divine Love and Justice, a man who had everything to gain by silence,—fame, position, wealth, the favor of his fellow-officers,—would sacrifice all these, would face degradation from office, public disgrace, imprisonment, death, rather than be false to the principles of justice and truth that stirred his soul. One feels that he stands on holy ground when he contemplates the heroism of Colonel Picquart.

Is this foreign to the question under consideration ? Is it that the check in the growth of spirituality referred to is with Friends ? Have they, amid the world's giant progress in the development of human character, failed to keep step with the advance of Truth ? I do not think so. Progress in evolution always seems to proceed in waves, and not by a steady flow of increasing power. Sometimes it seems as if there were an ebb tide, and the heart of the prophet fails. "For the Children of Israel have forsaken the covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword ; and I, even I only, am left, and they seek my life to take it away." But "the still, small voice" never fails. There may, in the overturning of ancient customs, in the reshaping of "testimonies" that have fulfilled their purpose, seem to be a lack of reverence for things that seem sacred in their memories, but I am well assured that the tarrying in the camp has been long enough, and that the word of the Lord is even now behind the movement among Friends that has taken them out from the practices of the fathers. They may seem to lack reverence for the holy things of old. They are loyal in their reverence of the voice of God in their own souls. The life within the Quaker chrysalis is struggling to emerge into a higher type. But it is Life.

WILLIAM M. JACKSON.

New York, Eighth month 20.

BEARING ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS.

In this age of the world, when everything is done with such a rush, I fear we do not glance by the roadside as we pass along, to see if amid its highways and hedges there are not fainting hearts, wishing for a little encouragement from us ; tired, and way-worn travelers whom we might help ease ; or sick and discouraged souls who need the kindly word. If we have not riches at our disposal, we can give the encouraging word, or do the kindly act, even if it be only "the cup of cold water" to the parched lips. No deed is too trivial to aid our fellow creatures.

To give vast sums of money only that the world may know of it, is not true benevolence ; but to give to some one whose life is more tried than our own, letting some cherished prospect go, doing without what we would like so much to have, if by doing it we can give nourishment to the widow or the fatherless, is true charity. Do not judge one another harshly, for in every life there are some seeds of good. We are all tempted in different ways, and where we see nothing good to speak of in another let the lips keep silent. Many a life that has drifted deep in sin might have been reclaimed if some one had stretched out the hand to lead the wandering one into better ways, ere, weary and discouraged, that guilty soul sought in the rushing river, or drug, that end only in the last long sleep, rest for the broken heart.

If you have kind parents who do everything for your welfare, oh ! help them bear the burdens of life. Remember, no sacrifice was deemed too much for you ; a mother's love and prayers were with her child ever since the days of its earliest infancy ; do not "bring their gray hairs with sorrow to the grave." Consult them in the affairs of life ; their varied experience would be well to profit by ; tell them that you love them ; do not wait till their lips are cold in death, then eulogize, alas, too late ! I have heard at the funeral service of some, words of praise, which, if the departed ones could have heard one-half of it in their lifetime, brighter would have been many of the sad, sad days. We all exert some influence (however small) over the lives of others. Happy will it be for us if we can, when the gates of life are closing and the portals of the Heavenly home are opening to our view, feel we have done what we could, and, like a little child, put our hand in the Heavenly Father's with the sweet assurance that all is well with us, with no sad repinings over a wasted life or neglected opportunities.

Pleasantville, N. Y.

LIZZIE J. HALL.

WORK OF FRIENDS AMONG THE INDIANS IN THE NORTHERN SUPERIN- TENDENCY, 1869-1899.

BY JOSEPH J. JANNEY.

Read at a public meeting of the "Associated Committees on Indian Affairs," held at Friends' meeting-house, Eutaw and Monument streets, Baltimore, Fifth month 24, 1899. The statistical portions of this paper are taken from Barclay White's very complete report made to the Indian Bureau about the time that President Grant's policy was abandoned.

PERHAPS no body of Christian people ever entered upon a great work with a more serious sense of their responsibility than was felt by the Society of Friends, when in the spring 1869 it accepted the trust offered by President Grant, and identified itself more wholly than it had ever done before with the difficult and delicate problem of Indian elevation and enlightenment. President Grant, in calling Friends into the field of activity, used this language: "Desirous of inaugurating some policy to protect the Indians in their just rights, and enforce integrity in the administration of their affairs, as well as to improve their general condition, and appreciating fully the friendship and interest which your society has ever maintained in their behalf, [the President] desires that you will submit a list of names, members of your Society, whom your Society will endorse, as suitable persons for Indian Agents.

"Also, to assure you that any attempt which may or can be made by your Society for the improvement, education, and Christianization of the Indians under such agencies will receive from him, as President, all the encouragement and protection which the laws of the United States will warrant him in giving."

For the guidance of those who might desire to accept positions as Indian Agents, and to impress such with the estimate which, after careful thought, Friends had adopted as the sum of qualifications needed to properly administer the affairs of the Agency, the following statement was published and circulated:

"First: A prayerful heart and a firm trust in the power and wisdom of God,—and not in man, or military force,—for guidance and protection.

"Second: Industry, economy, firmness, vigilance, mildness, and practical kindness and love.

"Third: A knowledge of farming and gardening, ability to superintend the construction of buildings and see that schools are properly conducted.

"Fourth: Tact in managing or influencing persons, so as gradually to induce the Indians of his agency voluntarily to join in the various employments of farming and gardening and in mechanical operations.

"Fifth, and high in the scale of qualifications: To be possessed of strict integrity, and to be perfectly reliable in financial matters, and know how to employ with economy and to the best advantage the funds entrusted to him by the Government for the use of the Agency."

To our branch of Friends was entrusted the care of the Northern Superintendency and Samuel M. Janney was appointed Superintendent. There were in this department six agencies, and they were all located in the state of Nebraska—the Santee-Sioux, the Winnebagoes, the Omahas, the Pawnees, the Otoes, and the Great Nemahas; the latter agency comprised the Iowa and Sac and Fox of Missouri tribes. An agent was appointed at once by the President for each of these agencies, and they with the Superintendent proceeded without delay to enter upon the work assigned to them. The home and office of the superintendent were in the city of Omaha, and each agent resided, of course, upon the reservation of which he had charge.

In order to show the condition of these various tribes when Friends took charge, and thus be enabled to draw a comparison, I will quote from a report of the first Visiting Committee of Friends who made a tour of the agencies in the summer of 1869, immediately after Friends entered upon the work.

"These wards of the Government were found in a very depressed and degraded condition, as a general thing poor, hungry, and idle, from want of means and inducements to labor, destitute of suitable clothing, and always complaining of unfulfilled treaty stipulations, living in lodges with several families in a single apartment, thus excluding that healthful privacy which decency and virtue require; the lodges dark, unventilated, often filthy, and as a consequence of this condition, sickness abounded, especially among the children. . . . Six Indian languages were spoken by the different tribes, very few speaking English at all. Their tribal Government was despotic and exercised by hereditary chiefs, and their religion that of the Medicine Lodge.

"The Santee-Sioux had recently been removed from Wisconsin, and by their acts had forfeited their treaty funds; they were wholly dependent upon the Government for clothing and subsistence.

"The Winnebagoes, a turbulent tribe, had fled from their Dakota home and become squatters on the Omaha's reservation, a portion of which had recently been purchased for them. They were clothed and fed entirely by the Government.

"The Omahas, a peaceable people, depended entirely upon semi-annual buffalo hunts for subsistence. They lived in earthen lodges and tents and had made some progress in agriculture.

"The Pawnees, a warlike race, lived in two villages, composed entirely of earthen lodges. Their subsistence was obtained from semi-annual buffalo hunts and the product of some degree of agriculture. An hereditary feud existed between them and the Sioux, and the two tribes were frequently at war. The women were beasts of burden and children under twelve ran wild and nude.

"The Otoes and Missourias at Otoe Agency were stubborn Indians, in about the same scale of civilization as the Pawnees. The Iowas received a cash annuity from the Government and had made the greatest progress of all in agriculture upon family farms. The Sac and Fox Indians depended entirely upon the receipt of interest on trust funds from the Government."

"The only Agency school in the Superintendency worthy of the name, when Friends assumed charge, was the Boarding School at Pawnee Agency."

"As a rule the Omahas, Pawnees and Santee-Sioux were very temperate in drinking. Among the other tribes, frequent cases of intoxication occurred. The Sac and Fox were generally addicted to intemperance."

The measures adopted by Friends to promote civilization were :

"First: Care to recommend for appointment in all grades of Agency service, such persons only as seemed to be properly qualified for the position, and whose moral influence would promote the growth of virtue, giving preference to married persons who were willing to remove their families to the Reservations. Each Agency employé was appointed for practical missionary work and expected to be a missionary for good in precept and example.

"Second: The establishment of schools and improvement of those already existing, with the intent of placing as soon as possible, all children of suitable ages in schools taught by Christian teachers. Sabbath schools were held at all agencies, in which Scripture Lessons, blended with religious instruction, were given to the children and such of the adults as were willing to attend.

"Third: The allotment of lands in severalty to members of the tribe willing to accept them, and urging the passage by Congress of such statute laws as would secure title in homestead farms to heads of families and educated Indians.

"Fourth: The instruction of Indians in agriculture, raising and care of domesticated animals, in mechanical employments and house-hold pursuits.

"Fifth: The distribution of agricultural implements, live stock, and seeds.

"Sixth: The building of dwelling houses and planting of fruit trees on their allotments of land.

"Seventh: The employment of matrons to instruct the Indian women in household duties and care of the sick.

"Eighth: The use of all proper means at command, to speedily advance the condition of the Indians under their care to the status of Christian, educated, self-supporting American citizens, living in comfortable houses on lands held by them in fee simple."

Upon the plan thus briefly outlined, Friends proceeded to carry on the work to which they were assigned in the various departments of industry connected with the agencies. Those who accepted positions labored faithfully during the time of their employment and a united purpose was manifest to bring to bear an influence that would be potent for good in the development of a better manhood and womanhood among these heretofore neglected and abused people. (To be concluded.)

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 37.—NINTH MONTH 10.

DAVID.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer.—Psalms, xviii., 2.

Scripture Reading, II. Samuel, xii., 1-23.

"DAVID was one of those divinely-favored natures that irresistibly attract everyone they touch and whose charm no one is able to withstand. Hardly had he joined the court of Saul when he won to himself in succession, first the king, then his subjects, court, son, and daughter"—(Kittel, History of Hebrews). If Saul could have kept himself from jealousy the popularity of the young courtier would have been a strength to him. As it was, it resulted in the loss of his throne and his life. There is almost nothing in the Bible story to indicate that Saul's suspicion had any foundation. David's friendship for Jonathan is inexplicable on any assumption of disloyalty to the king, his father. Even in his mountain fastness, when Saul sought his life, even when he had transferred his allegiance to the king of the Philistines, David succeeded in avoiding any act against the anointed king of Israel.

That he was superstitious and cruel cannot be denied. He shared in the fear occasioned by the sudden death of one who helped to carry the Ark from Gibeah (II. Samuel, vi., 6-11, and I. Chronicles, xiii., 1-14), and delayed for some time on account of it his purpose of transferring the Ark to Jerusalem. Again, when a prolonged drouth fell upon Israel, King David was not above the superstition, supported by the priests, that it was because the family of Saul had not been punished for Saul's violation of an ancient tribal obligation to the Canaanites of Gibeon (see Joshua, ix., 1-27). So he was induced to slaughter the seven remaining sons of Saul and expose the bodies to the elements until the rain should fall. There is no more pathetic figure in history than that of their mother, Rizpah, one of Saul's inferior wives, sitting day after day by the desecrated bodies of her dead sons, driving off the birds of prey until the blessed rain should bring her the poor comfort of bearing away and burying their bodies (II. Samuel, xxi., 1-10). The cruelty and extermination attending David's wars of conquest have been mentioned already. But these were evils rather of the times than of the man. Rather than blame him for the standard of his age, we may give him credit that he rose above it, in a measure, in his dealings with Saul, and with the followers of Saul's son, Ishbosheth. He showed no vindictiveness, no personal feeling of hate against his enemies.

Less can be said in extenuation of his sin of adultery and murder in the case of Bathsheba, wife of Uriah. Yet even here we must remember that the customs of the time made the king absolute and put all subjects at his disposal. We give him due credit for repentance when his sin was brought home to him by the brave prophet Nathan. Most despots would have answered Nathan's parable with execution or torture; while David acknowledged his sin and accepted the punishment. It is true that David's contrition does not seem to have been very deep or lasting; nor did it prevent him from taking the false wife of his murdered servant into his harem. It cannot be claimed that he was a man of high moral character, judged by the standards of a later time; but he was a good man, judged by the standards of kings of his own time.

The punishment promised for his sin—that the sword should never depart from his house, and that evil should be raised up against him in his own house—was fulfilled to the letter. His weak and doting fondness for his children, and the evil example of licentiousness which he had set them, resulted in repeated scandals in his own household. His eldest son was slain by a younger son, and the slayer, after traitorously estranging the people from the king, raised a revolt against him so formidable that he was forced to flee from Jerusalem. Only the loyalty and wisdom of his immediate friends saved him from capture and death. He fled across the Jordan, where he found that those loyal to Saul in distress were also loyal to him in his extremity. The northern tribes rallied to him against his own tribe of Judah, which took the part of Absalom. The whole issue was staked on a single battle, which was won by David, Absalom being killed in the fight. Again was the moderation of David shown in his general pardon of the rebels. There were further disturbances and rebellions at this time, but they were crushed out, and the land had peace during the old age of the king. It was during this time of peace that the taking of the census occurred. (II. Samuel, xxiv.) The author represents this act as a great sin; whether this is because of the general superstition of the East against numbering things, or whether it was because of the discontent with the system of taxation, doubtless based on the census, we cannot tell. It is curious to note that while the author of II. Samuel (xxiv., 1) attributes the incitement to census-taking to the Lord, who was in anger, the author of I. Chronicles (xxi., 1) attributes the same act to Satan.

The old age of David was darkened by intrigues for the succession to the throne (I. Kings, Chaps. 1 and 2). The king was decrepit and in his dotage. An agreement between Bathsheba, the mother of Solomon, and Nathan, the prophet, was successful in gaining for Solomon the coveted place.

The reign of David raised the Hebrew nation to a position of real greatness among the nations of antiquity. But his very successes brought upon the people the evils which Samuel had foreseen (I. Samuel, viii., 10–18). The succeeding king took their sons for his chariots, and to run before them; he set them to reap and to make instruments of war. He took their daughters for cooks, confectioners, and bakers. He took the best of their fields and vineyards for his servants. He seized a tenth of all their possessions. David was an elected monarch and a judicious ruler. Yet even during his life the people began to murmur at the burdens of his wars and of his court. In the reign of Solomon the further warning was accomplished: "And ye shall cry out in that day because of your king, which ye shall have chosen you; and the Lord will not hear you in that day" (I. Samuel, viii., 18).

THE CHARM OF OXFORD.

AMERICAN men of letters, from Hawthorne and Emerson to Lowell and later observers, have alike felt the appeal to the higher emotions made by the unique and matchless beauty of Oxford, that fairest of all seats of learning in the world. Ellis Yarnall, whose book of Memories was recently reviewed in the INTELLIGENCER, has added his tribute of admiration in these gracious words:

"I have said little of Oxford as a whole, for I shrink from attempting to define its especial dignity and charm. Again and again I have been there, and each time, 'smit with its splendor and its sweetness,' I have felt envy of the men whose minds have been moulded under influences so peculiar and so enduring. I have experienced what Newman describes as the fascination which the very face and smile of a University possess over those who come within its range. Oxford has indeed attractions quite indescribable; and it would be well if more of our countrymen would seek to enter into the spirit of the place, and experience, as they assuredly would, its manifold impressiveness."

From a letter of a friend he quotes this passage, with which he concludes his chapter on Oxford.

"Surely never was there a place that had such a subtle charm as that old city, sitting like some ancient sibyl among her deep, flowery meadows and embowering trees, with such a mystery of learning and wisdom in her musing eyes."

THE JOY OF SERVICE.—The chief joys of life, if we are wise enough to perceive it, are to be found in the path of service. Vacations are good, rest is good; but they are good only as interludes of service. In his letter to Timothy towards the close of his life, Paul does not recount his vacation experiences—if he ever had any they were like his vacation experiences at Athens while he was waiting for the arrival of Silas and Timothy—but he looked back with joy on a life of service, and forward with joy to a crown of righteousness, the reward of faithful service. So it has been and is with other servants of God, they find their chief satisfaction in current life and in recalling the past, not in the evanescent joys of side play, but in serving their day and generation according to the will of God.

Thank God for something to do! The thing which you are doing just now may not be entirely to your liking as to kind or grade or pecuniary compensation, but you can get satisfaction out of it by doing it well, and the way to higher service is opened by well-doing.

"We take with solemn thankfulness
Our burden up, nor ask it less;
And count it joy that even we May suffer, serve, or wait for Thee—
Thy will be done!"

—The Advance.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 2, 1899.

Please address business letters to "Friends' Intelligencer, 921 Arch Street, Philadelphia." Communications and contributions to "Editors Friends' Intelligencer," same address.

LEADERSHIP.

NOTWITHSTANDING we are the "heirs of all the ages," the masses of mankind have not yet reached the time when leaders can be dispensed with. However long the doctrine of individual responsibility has been taught it has not yet so permeated society that the loss of wise leadership is not felt.

Perhaps in no religious sect has there been more direct teaching that a man should govern himself and be obedient to the law of God written within him, than in the Society of Friends. And this has resulted in great good to individuals, and is certainly the ideal government. But even here there is need for men and women who can lead others successfully to a higher plane of life. There is need of a leadership that can turn our people to a more ennobling mode of living. But the very fact that we have been so long taught to think for ourselves, and to depend upon the direct teachings of the Father, unfits us in a measure for the task of leading others. We shrink from it, and withhold unduly the helpful word that, spoken lovingly, may turn a fellow-traveler from the wrong way to the right.

There is plenty of opportunity in our schools, in our meetings, and in our social life, for the exercise of what is rightly termed leadership. Some one has said that "opportunity for a Christian means responsibility, and it is this responsibility from which most persons shrink. We desire that others, whom we think more capable, shall lead, and we will follow. Alas, that this sometimes places leadership in the hands of those who are not divinely led!

But the cause of truth is not to be advanced in this way. Jesus, who taught the grand doctrine that "God was the teacher of his people himself," saw the need of leaders, and practically exemplified it by assuming that responsibility, and in calling others to assume it, for did he not call upon his disciples to become "fishers of men"? He called them to lead their fellow-men from the darkness of living unholy lives, into the light of God's truth by righteous living.

There is need for wise leaders among us in almost every Friendly community, those who will call out the latent thought in others, develop the slumbering idea till it unfolds and is made available for the good of others. Especially is this need felt in our First-day Schools. The trend of the times in our secular schools is to employ teachers who can arouse the child-mind, and not cram it with knowledge, and this principle applies alike to religious instruction. The leading here should be to awaken the spiritual life that is inborn in every one, and lovingly, gently, to impress truths that have been felt to be precious to him who has received them of the Father.

Let us then not underestimate the value of leadership. Let us be humble enough to use our powers when we see a need for them, not to enforce a dogma or creed, in our own opinions, but to encourage to the purer thought, the higher life. We may blunder, when we fain would do our best, but God sees our endeavors and will strengthen us. "Go then to work and commit thy ways unto the Lord."

BIRTHS.

TODD.—At Doylestown, Pa., Seventh month 30, 1899, to Henry Arnold and Ellen Hart Todd, a daughter, who is named Elizabeth Eastburn.

DEATHS.

HILLIARD.—At Greenwich, N. J., Eighth month 4, 1899, Reuben Hilliard, in the 86th year of his age; a member, and for many years a highly esteemed elder, of Greenwich Monthly Meeting.

Ever faithful in his attendance at meetings when health permitted, this dear Friend was a bright example to those who would allow trivial things to hinder in this particular.

It is thus by the silent performance of duty that the most eloquent sermons are preached, and the little meeting of which he was a member has truly lost one of its most faithful ones.

JONES.—In Middletown, Delaware county, Pa., Eighth month 18, 1899, Edmund, son of Edmund and Anna L. Jones, in his 20th year.

PAXSON.—At Ocean City, N. J., Eighth month 30, 1899, Ada Fell Paxson. Due notice of funeral will be given.

REES.—In Mobile, Alabama, Eighth month 12, 1899, Orlene McGuire, wife of Samuel D. Rees; he is a member of Cincinnati Monthly Meeting, Ohio, formerly of Hopewell, Va.

STYER.—At Concordville, Pa., Eighth month 21, 1899, John F., son of Jacob J. and Katharine R. Styer, in his 17th year.

TWINING.—At the residence of his son, Harry Twining, Chattanooga, Tenn., Eighth month 10, 1899, Watson Twining, formerly of Bucks county, aged 74 years. Interment at Wrightstown Friends' ground, Pa.

WILSON.—At Quakertown, Pa., Eighth month 19, 1899, Mary Harlan, widow of George H. Wilson, and daughter of the late John H. Book. Interment at Philadelphia.

SERENE, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind or tide or sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me.

—J. Burroughs.

BE a man and be one wholly;
Keep one great love, purely, solely—
Till it make thy nature holy;
That thy way be paved in whiteness,
That thy heart may beat in lightness,
That thy being end in brightness.

—J. W. How.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

XII.—THE LAKE COUNTRY, ETC.

BY HOWARD M. JENKINS.

My last letter, describing a pilgrimage from Grasmere to Rydal Mount, somewhat outran the narrative of my movements. Let me say, then, to summarize the travel and resting of several days, that I spent the week-end, after leaving the Welsh mountains, with our friend William Edward Turner, in his cheerful home at Colwyn Bay, on the north coast of Wales, and attended the Friends' meeting there, on the 30th. Our friend accompanied me to Penmaenmawr (where we climbed to the top, 1,200 feet, to see the "Druid's Circle"), and to Carnarvon, and I enjoyed the fine walks along the shore. Leaving the kindnesses of "Westholme" on the 1st (of Eighth month) at noon, eastward, I stopped at Chester, saw its old "rows" and walls, and its cathedral, and proceeded to Liverpool, where I stayed the night. On the following day, leaving Liverpool mid-afternoon, I reached Grange-over-Sands by tea-time, and was cordially welcomed there by Michael Graham,—father of our friend, the Principal of Dalton Hall.

If any one who is following these letters has read Maria Webb's little book, "The Fells of Swarthmoor Hall,"—and I am always sorry for those who have not,—they will know about Morecambe Bay, which extends into the coast here, facing southwest, and of its wide expanse of sands, bare and dry at low tide, but over which the advancing waters flow with dangerous swiftness when the tide rises,—so that many a tragic tale is told of unwary travelers caught and engulfed. This bay has upon it several pretty places, but Grange is esteemed the gem of them. Its homes, built against the side of the limestone cliffs, are overtopped by green fields, and these stretch away northward towards the meres and mountains of the beautiful Lake Country. West of Morecambe Bay is the jutting land, a peninsula, on which stands Swarthmoor Hall, the old meeting-house, Swarthmoor, which George Fox gave to Friends, and one other object of interest to such a visitor as myself, Furness Abbey, one of the very finest old ruins of its class in England, and—from its extent—one of the most impressive.

At Grange, as I have mentioned, you are on the southern border of the Lake Country. This rarely beautiful region is an area, somewhat circular, with a radius of thirty miles, taking Dunmail Raise, between Grasmere and Thirlmere, as a centre. There are fifteen lakes of tolerable size, and many mountains, the highest point of which is Scawfell Pike, 3,210 feet, and the most famous Helvellyn—next in height—3,118 feet. For "concentration of interest," Wordsworth said, the region was unsurpassed; and if he could say this, in his day, how much more true is it now that the association of his poetry and life has been added! I cannot, for myself, see that the mountain scenery is either superior to, or very different from, that of North Wales, and the views at Lake Mohonk, or in the Catskills, or in the White Mountains, may be confidently compared with those in the Lake Region; but the latter's advantage in the charm of poetic and personal connection is of real importance. The whole region seems to have an atmosphere of refined associations. The poets—though only one of importance, Wordsworth, is intimately connected with it—may seem to have themselves softened and refined the beauties that nature had provided. Such at least is the effect on the visitor's feelings, and the visitor to such scenes must have feeling, or it is not worth while to go.

The railroads reach the outer line of the region on all sides, and at no less than ten places, but none pass through it. The roads are for travelers by coach, by bicycle, or on foot; the lakes, except Windermere and Ullswater (which have small steamers), are for the oarsmen. So far, the disposition of the railways to run through the region has been effectively opposed, and it is to be hoped that the opposition will not fail at any future time. Much of the land belongs—as usual—to rich "landed proprietors." The Duke of Devonshire owns Furness Abbey, and has other estates, including Holker Hall, not far from the Abbey, the place where George Fox refused to take the oath before the magistrates, and the scene, thus, of John Pettie's well-known painting. In the northeast the Lowther family have Lowther Castle, and own a wide reach of land, to which they constantly add by purchase. There are also the Howard family, of Graystoke (kinsfolk of the Howards of Norfolk), and the Marshalls, another rich family, formerly in the cotton manufacture in Lancashire, "in the days when it was very profitable."

I did not set out merely to give such details about the Lake Country, yet I find it difficult to resume the attempt at the description it deserves. Counting the time at Grange, and my visits to Furness, Ulverston, and Swarthmoor, I spent about ten days in the region. I left Grange on the 5th, going by rail to the south end of Windermere, and then went its length, on a little steamer, to the north end, at Ambleside. The day was fine, rain had fallen the evening before, and it was a pleasant ride. I tarried at Ambleside only a couple of hours, and took coach for Grasmere, where I remained till noon of the 7th, going on, then, by coach, by Thirlmere (a lake which belongs to the city of Manchester, and from which part of the city's water supply is drawn, a distance of ninety miles), to Keswick, on Derwentwater. Remaining there over night, I went on the 8th by rail to Troutbeck, and by coach to Patterdale, at the head of Ullswater. Here John William Graham and his family are spending a month's holiday, and I enjoyed their company three days, going down the lake by steamer on the 11th, and then coaching to Penrith, from which you get a through carriage on the railway to Edinburgh by Carlisle. I reached the picturesque Scottish capital on the afternoon of the 11th.

* * *

I turn from the beauties of the Lake Region to dwell a moment upon a very different subject, which may still interest some of the INTELLIGENCER'S readers. I mean the fruits of England.

Compared with fruits in the United States they are fewer and more expensive. Not universally, however; of some there is quite a plenty. When I was on the Continent, 8th to 17th of Sixth month, I found splendid strawberries, and very good cherries, and both at moderate cost. Returning on the 17th, I then saw strawberries in the English markets nearly to the end of the following month. There were some at Cardiff, on the 22d. The best berries in England—or the standard of the best—appeared to come from Kent, in the south-eastern corner of England. They were very fine, decidedly better, I think, than the average of ours,—large, high-colored, tender-fleshed, sweet, and well-flavored. Those berries which do more or less afflict us—small, poorly ripened, hard, and tart fruit—I did not see at all, though, of course, there may be some.

Strawberries, like all other fruit and most vegetables, in England, are sold by the pound. They were as low, one day in London, (about the 20th of Sixth month), as six pence a pound, twelve cents of our money. But their usual price, in the fruiterers' stores, was about eight pence, and they were as high, I saw, as ten and twelve pence.

Cherries were cheaper. They were usually very fine fruit—the large pink-and-white sweet varieties, and the dark red, also sweet. They brought about six pence a pound. I had fine ones at Liverpool on the 2d of Eighth month. They were a delightful fruit for railway eating; the cherry, when perfect and well ripened, as these were, is such an honest fruit, proving when you eat it, just what it promised when you looked at it.

The gooseberries were abundant. They were eating green gooseberry tarts (practically our American pie, with no bottom crust), when I got to London, at the end of May, and I saw plenty of the green fruit in the Cardiff markets, on the 22d of the following month, and the ripe berries, for weeks, and even yet. The prices of gooseberries were from twopence ("tup-pence") a pound up to about twice that, and there seemed, for weeks, in all the fruiterers' shops, and the markets, even in the small towns, a great supply of both green and ripe ones. They were as a rule very large, and it seemed to me they were more amenable to the arts of cookery than ours at home.

There have been few apples in the stores, up to this time, (Eighth month 12), and practically none in the markets. Those sold by the fruiterers have generally come from far Tasmania, and are so marked. (I was looking at them to-day in a stylish shop on Princes street, Edinburgh.) They are rather flat in shape, a light green, with a delicate flush of apparent ripeness. They sell for about "tuppence-ha'penny,"—five cents—apiece.

Pears, which appeared to me to be California Bartletts, appeared in the railway station at Llandudno Junction (north coast of Wales), on the 28th of Seventh month. They were sold by number—not by weight—at two to three pence apiece. But a similar pear, not usually so ripe, I have seen in the markets and stores for the past fortnight, labeled "French Williams." These are sold here in Edinburgh to-day for ten pence a pound, about four of them making a pound.

There are fine home-grown (under glass) black grapes in the market, and I have seen them for several weeks. They are in great bunches, and are attractive fruit; but their price has been from "two and six" (about sixty cents) upward, per pound, so that they are obviously only for competent buyers.

Of currants I have seen comparatively few, of raspberries practically none. (The latter may be in the markets to the southward.) There are some purple plums, fairly good, and many green gages, the latter here, Edinburgh, twelve pence a pound, at the fruiterers'.

Melons I suddenly came upon a few days ago, but they have been, I was told, in the markets here for a fortnight or more. They are now extremely plenty in Edinburgh, and every shop window where fruit is sold is yellow with them. For yellow they are—the color, fairly, of a fully ripe cucumber. They are brought from Spain, and are cousins—pretty well removed—of our cantaloupe. The flesh is pleasant, and they are eaten here, apparently, down to the thinnest possible rind, but we should complain very much if our cantelopes were not on the average decidedly better than the best of these. They sell singly—not by the pound—at about four pence and upward. There are also a few watermelons in the market, quite round, quite small, and selling at something higher than the cantaloupe rate.

This, I think, fairly exhausts the lists of the fruits I have seen. But the tomato ought to be added; it is practically regarded as a fruit, and appears in the fruiterers' windows, or on their stands—there are no street stands, such as the Italians have at nearly every street corner in Philadelphia—along with the plums and melons. The tomato is usually the round, bright red variety, plump, firm, and good. It cannot be raised (except perhaps on the south coast of England), with success in the open air, but it grows finely under glass, and no doubt most of those I have seen in the markets, if English grown, come out of green-houses. They sell at eight pence a pound, and people at the table eat one, politely and leisurely, as if it were a rare and delicate fruit. But, as I have already said, they are very good, and each one really deserves considerate treatment.

CORRECTIONS.—The old Manchester merchant and philanthropist mentioned in my letter from that city, was Humphrey Chetham, not Chatham. And if I wrote that Henry IV. was "a Yorkist monarch,"—as I fear I did, the error is not one of a kind to charge to printer or proof-reader,—I must apologize to the House of Lancaster. Moreover, the English king who reigned 1422–1461 was Henry VI., not Henry IV.

H. M. J.

It is the steady and merciless increase of occupations, the augmented speed at which we are trying to live, the crowding of each day with more work and amusement than it can profitably hold, which have cost us, among other good things, the undisturbed enjoyment of our friends. Friendship takes time and we have no time to give it.—Agnes Repplier.

TAKE your part with the perfect and abstract right, and trust to God to see that it shall prove the expedient.—Wendell Phillips.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

MARGARETTA WALTON and her companion visited Friends in Waynesville, Ohio, on the 14th ult. Their first visit was to Davis Furnas and family; there they met his daughter Lizzie, widow of Joseph Bogardus of New York, with her little son. On the 16th they attended Miami Monthly Meeting held at Grove. They visited some of the aged and sick in these localities.

Proceeding to Pendleton, Ind., they were met at the station by John L. Thomas, who had charge of finding homes for the large number of Friends who were arriving to attend the Yearly Meeting, which was to be held at that place for the first time. Well known Friends, formerly living in the east, soon appeared and gave them cordial greeting; Annie Darlington and her brother, Ziba, from West Chester, among the number. John J. Cornell and wife, Isaac Wilson and wife, and Edward Coale were in attendance at the select meeting. The meeting-house at Pendleton is neat and comfortable, being newly papered and carpeted. The Friends there desiring to make it a memorable occasion were much gratified in having so many visitors. There was a large tent to accommodate the overflow on one side of the meeting-house, and one on the other side where lunch was served during the week.

A VISIT AMONG THE SHINNECOCK HILLS.

SPENDING my summer among these hills, in which the pretty little town of Southampton is situated, it occurred to me some account of this historic place might be of some interest to the readers of the INTELLIGENCER.

The town is situated at the most extreme eastern end of the island, about twelve miles from Sag Harbor, and between Peconic Bay and the Ocean, a mile inland from the latter, whose blue waters can be seen between the sand dunes that line the shore, and its roar, when the south wind blows, can be heard as I sit by my window as distinctly as when directly on the beach.

On entering the town one's attention is attracted by sign-boards, on the streets, reading "Job's Lane, opened 1663," on another, "Shinnecock Road, opened 1650," and it awakens a desire to search the archives of this old place, although the general appearance of the town does not impress one with its age. In the "Harriet Jones Rogers Memorial Library," established a few years ago through the generosity, of its and open free to the public, I found the "Records of the town, which with other ancient documents" comprise four volumes, and among the earliest settlers are found many familiar names.

The whole extent of what is now the town of Southampton was owned by the Shinnecock tribe of Indians, who still have a reservation, a few miles out, but they have become so mixed as to have lost much of their characteristic nationality.

"Although the land was honorably purchased of its aboriginal owners, yet the settlers never saw a moment's rest for fear of their dreaded neighbors. Guard was kept day and night; to meeting on the Lord's day they went as men prepared for instant war, and in proportion to its population the town could boast of a larger standing army than any nation on the surface of the globe.

It cannot be said the settlement was formed entirely of "God-fearing, virtuous men," for it was early found necessary to build a prison, where the stocks and whipping-post occupied a prominent position and did not suffer for a want of use; but as the town was founded by many who had suffered religious persecution, the first public labor undertaken was to erect a house for worship.

"It is pleasant to be able to record the fact that while the history of many towns on Long Island shows instances of religious persecution, especially in the case of the Quakers, the records of this town are nowhere stained with blood. This, however, seemed to be accredited, not so much to their enlightened and liberal-mindedness, as to the fact that 'none should be permitted to settle here who were not acceptable to the majority;' and their idea that the 'jail and whipping-post were the proper places for Quakers, and the best way to stop a heretic's tongue was to put a hole through it with a hot iron,' may have prevented many becoming residents. It would seem the majority had better have voted for these than for others who evidently belonged to that class who leave their country for their country's good."

A few extracts from these Laws may be interesting and amusing: "Blasphemy to be punished with death. Idolatry to be punished with death. Witchcraft, which is fellowship by consent with a familiar spirit, to be punished with death. Consulters with witches not to be tolerated, but eyther to bee cut off by death or banishment. Rebellious children, whether they continue in Riot or Drunkenesse, after due correction from parents, or whether they curse or smite their parents, are to bee put to death. Drunkenesse as transforming God's Image into a Beast is to be punished with the punishment of a beast. A whippe for the horse and a rodde for the fool's backe."

It is pleasant to read, however, that this curious code of laws was never enforced to its full extent. A school was established in 1655; all that was required of the school-master was that he have a tolerable knowledge of arithmetic and be a fair penman, and be able to teach reading and writing.

How widely different the Southampton of the present day, which, with its fine summer residences, has been named the Newport of Long Island. They are mostly built in colonial style, large and roomy, where comfort and luxury combine. Its fine library, already noted, and its beautiful art museum, endowed by James L. Parrish, of New York, who has a summer residence here, are treasures of which the town may well be proud.

It seems the first impression of Shinnecock Hills is disappointing, and a Chester-countian would scan the horizon and ask, "Where are the hills?" hardly giving that name to the small elevations he sees around him. And the next query is, "What is the attraction?" This, however, is soon discovered in the charming cool air, which one continually enjoys, while from so many places comes the report of sultry heat. Another, and not the least, attraction, is the Art Village, where William M. Chase has his summer school (about five miles from the village), where students come from all parts of the country. Of the seven in this cottage are students from Nebraska, Arkansas, Tennessee, Cincinnati, Boston, and Philadelphia. Here the art student finds much for his brush besides the hills, which, although almost entirely devoid of trees, are covered with low shrubs and beautiful lichens, which take on gorgeous coloring that one strives almost in vain to copy.

Eighth month 18, 1899. ELISA H. SCHOFIELD.

THE DOUKHOBORS.

It seems from this letter that the Doukhobors are not at present in need of further pecuniary help. Being now settled and well started they may now be trusted to make their own way largely.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION,

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, Eighth month 7, 1899.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

ACCORDING to my instructions, my accountant has no doubt long before this acknowledged receipt of your several remittances, the last one being $100 enclosed in your letter of the 5th ult.

I regret exceedingly that the great pressure of business has prevented my writing you more fully about the present condition, progress, and apparent possibilities of the Doukhobors, but my staff is limited, and it is most difficult to secure men suited for this work.

The work of handling the Doukhobors is not all sunshine by any means. On account of the eulogistic terms in which these people were mentioned in the press generally, on their arrival in this country, the public expect that they are all perfect. Unfortunately, this is not the case. While I believe the Doukhobors have noble Christian principles; while I believe that perhaps a larger majority of their people live up to their principles than do the members of other denominations here, still there are some who are not what they should be, and their own leaders here find it difficult to manage them at times.

One of the greatest difficulties we have is to get proper interpreters. While we can get plenty of men who can speak their language, yet we cannot get men that can speak their language and at the same time have a thorough knowledge of farming in this country and of business negotiations. They have all prejudices and customs that will have to be beaten down. When the Mennonites came here in '74 and '75 they tried to carry out their Russian methods of farming. Their leaders could not dissuade them from it; but after one or two years they abandoned their homemade Russian wagons, their Russian scythes, and other methods of farming of the old country, and adopted American methods. The same difficulty will be experienced with the Doukhobors, and we will have to have a little patience until they see it in this way.

One of the greatest troubles I have to encounter is that they will not buy oxen, but want to buy light, range-bred horses, train them themselves, and try to make them plough. They will learn their mistake later on, but in the meantime it is very annoying. However, I have learned from a gentleman who has just returned from the colony, that considerable progress has been made among those who settled this spring. They have quite a large crop of vegetables, almost enough, I believe, to do them all winter, and I understand that these are looking well. There is but little sickness among them.

There are now about seven or eight hundred of the men out working, some for the Mennonite farmers, others at railway and other work; and I have, to-day, if they desire, been promised work for 500 of them next winter blasting rock for a railroad between Port Arthur, at the head of Lake Superior, and this city.

Your friends, William Evans and Joseph Elkinton, who visited these people, saw the difficulties I had to contend with. Unfortunately the Russian ladies and gentlemen who accompanied them, although they mean well and are giving of their money and time to relieve these down-trodden people, are just as ignorant of the methods of farming and doing business in this country as the Doukhobors themselves, and can give them little assistance practically towards helping themselves here. If one or two good farmers could be stationed in each colony, with the confidence of the Doukhobors, and with the aid of an interpreter instruct them in the methods of farming, by superintending and doing the business generally, most of the difficulty would be overcome; but there again arises another obstacle,—the Doukhobors are very headstrong and do not like to be taught, unless by some one who has their entire confidence.

My own impression is, that while it might be of material benefit to these people to furnish them with some oxen, and a few cows for supplying milk for the children during the winter, it would not be in their own interests to advance them large sums of money by loan, or otherwise, at present. I am under the impression that while it might with some of them be an incentive to labor, with others, I believe, it would have the effect of making them somewhat indolent. The system of advancing a sum of money varying from four to six hundred dollars was tried a few years ago in the case of English-speaking settlers who came to this country without means, and it turned out a failure. They simply relaxed their energies, ate up the capital, and went away from the land. The most satisfactory farmer in this country, we find, is one who practically works up from nothing. The Galicians, of whom we have now 20,000, had little or no means on arriving here, and yet, by working out for farmers and others during the summer, they not only supported their families, but some of them have now a good team of horses and very few are without one cow, besides supporting their families and cultivating eight or ten acres of land. I believe the Doukhobors can do as well, if not better, but they should be taught that success depends on their own individual efforts, and that they are not to depend upon advances from the Government nor loans from Philanthropic people. I do not wish in any way to be thought harsh in the matter, but I believe that I am saying this in the best interests of the people themselves, from the study I have made of them since I first came in connection with them in January last.

I understand that Peter Jansen, of Nebraska, is coming up shortly to visit them again, and I think that is the conclusion he will arrive at. Labor is so plentiful at the present time, at remunerative wages, that these people can get along if they wish to work. Then, why should they be helped? I intend making a trip through the colonies within the next two months, and shall endeavor to give a more detailed account of their progress on my return.

Thanking you again for the kindly interest you have taken in these people, I am,

Your obedient servant,

W. McCREARY, Commissioner.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.

VI.—RETURNING SOUTH.

(Concluded.)

THE Sognefiord and its branches resemble the Geirangerfiord in their deep waters, their skyward-pointing rocky boundaries, and their beautiful waterfalls. Almost every country boasts of its pulpit rock, but none I ever saw compares with that seen in the Geiranger just after leaving Marvaak. Nearly 5,000 feet above us it seemed, and as though carved out of the rock for the purpose. The preacher who could proclaim with a voice adapted to its height would indeed speak from high vantage ground, though nature needs none but the still, small voice amid such surroundings to read us her most impressive lessons. Allusion to this natural pulpit recalls a fact which I believe has not been mentioned,—that in the Norway churches the pulpit is always placed very high above the congregation, in a position corresponding to the upper gallery of our churches, a practice which I think held in the earliest Lutheran churches built in America.

In a few hours after leaving Aalesund we entered the Sognefiord, and two hours later were transferred from the great steamer to a smaller Norway mail boat, because we were entering waters which though still deep were not sufficiently so for our ship. In an hour we came to Gudvangen, where began an overland journey to Bergen, a pleasant change. Carriages were taken along the beautiful Naerodol Valley, which is really the landward continuations of the fiord carrying with it a mountain stream which widens into the Naerofjord, a branch of the Sognefiord we were just leaving. All the grandeur of the fiord is continued. The mountains, bare at their summits, are just as majestic. Indeed, it is said that the little village of Gudvangen does not see the sun throughout the winter. We ascend the valley to the Stolheim Hotel in two hours, with the Jordalsunt, a rocky mound 3,600 feet in height, always in sight. The hotel is beautifully situated on a cliff 1,125 feet high, and commands a most extensive view. It is one of the best known and most frequented of the Norway hotels, and deserves its reputation. Sorely tried by an enormous number, fully 300 arriving within two hours, they yet made us comfortable. Besides a commanding view there are many walks in the vicinity which invite a longer stay. It is especially in the afternoon light that the scenic effects are most striking and beautiful.

The drive of four hours the following day from Stolheim to Vass, was over a perfect road, through a broader valley bounded by less lofty mountains than those lately familiar to us; they are well farmed and produce hay, potatoes, and barley. The grass seemed especially luxuriant, and was just being cut and dried in the peculiar way already described by being hung over a rail fence. Attractive hotels and modest villas added to the contrast between this panorama and the wild one to which for nearly three weeks we had been accustomed. Just before reaching Lake Opheim, in whose clear waters were beautifully mirrored not only the trees and adjacent objects on the banks, but our carriages as well, we passed the water-shed, whence on one side the current flows to the Sognefiord, and from the other to the Bolstod's-fiord we were approaching.

Voss, or Vossvangen, was reached in time by noon. Voss is also a center in the better known and more traveled part of Norway. It is prettily situated on a lake, the Vangs, and has many attractive walks and a hotel which is said to be the best in Norway, though we could not think it better than that at Stolheim. The delicious lake trout served here for luncheon will, however, long be a part of the pleasant memories associated with the Norway trip. Outside the scenery, the drives and walks, the most interesting object in the vicinity is the "Finneloft," a wooden house built in 1300, in which is a small collection of antique objects of interest, which, somewhat contrary to our experience in Norway, were not for sale.

The journey from Voss to Bergen was by rail, and again it was not unpleasant to change to the railway coach.

Norway has very few railways, and so difficult are they of construction, and I should suppose unprofitable, that it is not likely they will soon replace the present modes of travel in carriages or on foot. An idea of the difficulties may be obtained from the fact that 52 tunnels are met in the 65 miles between Voss and Bergen. The scenery is still fine, the Vosse river grows wider, the mountains continue, and the Sörfjord is joined at Stanghelle and reviews the pictures of fiord and mountain of which so much has been said. A little later the villas adjacent to Bergen appear: So accustomed has our party become to hear the Norwegian hymn by the band at each stop in Norway, that in its absence we felt impelled to sing the air which had become so familiar. A few minutes' walk and we were at the harbor where we saw the Augusta Victoria riding at anchor, she having steamed around from Gudvangen while we were making the overland trip. A day in Bergen was much enjoyed. Although largely a modern city as it now exists, having been so often burned and rebuilt, it still possesses many objects of interest which recall its earlier history, notably the Hanseatic Museum, in which is arranged a collection of furniture, instruments, and weapons belonging to the later Hanseatic period. In addition to this, two other Museums, the Bergen and Vestlandke, are well worth a visit, containing collections illustrating the natural history and ethnology of Sweden and Norway. The city is apparently busy and prosperous, the streets are clean, and there are many handsome residences. Of old churches the Cross was founded in 1170, but was restored in its present form in 1593. The Cathedral was originally built in 1248, but restored as recently as 1870. Between fire and sword the Christian religion has had up-hill work in Norway.

On the evening of the 22d we again boarded our ship, and reached Hamburg on the morning of the 24th, concluding an excursion of 22 days. It rarely happens that a trip of this duration into Norway is made with so few drawbacks. Rain fell so seldom and slightly that it interfered with nothing, and with the exceptions of failure to land at Bell's sound, at Spitzbergen, on account of fog, nothing was lost. All the arrangements made by the Hamburg-American Company were faithfully carried out, and fault-finding, if it occurred at all, was so feeble as to have been practically nil. Over four weeks passed on the Augusta Victoria by those of us who started on her from New York is a long time to spend on a ship in these days of express steamships, and must result in thorough acquaintance which will not be forgotten.

JAMES TYSON.

Hamburg, Germany, Seventh month 24.

THERE is religion in everything around us: a calm and holy religion in the unbreathing things of nature which man would do well to imitate. It is a meek and blessed influence, stealing in, as it were, unawares upon the heart; it comes quietly, and without excitement; it has no terror, no gloom in its approaches; it does not rouse up the passions; it is untrammelled by the creeds, and unshadowed by the superstitions of man; it is fresh from the hands of its Author, glowing from the immediate presence of the great Spirit which pervades and quickens it; it is written on the arched sky; it looks out from every star; it is on the sailing cloud and in the invisible wind; it is among the hills and valleys of the earth, where the shrubless mountain-top pierces the thin atmosphere of eternal winter, or where the mighty forest fluctuates, before the strong wind, with its dark waves of green foliage; it is spread out, like a legible language, upon the broad face of the unsleeping ocean; it is the poetry of nature; it is this which uplifts the spirit within us, until it is strong enough to overlook the shadows of our place of probation,—which breaks, link after link, the chain that binds us to materiality, and which opens to our imagination a world of spiritual beauty and holiness.—Ruskin.

It is motive, it is the great purpose which consecrates life. The real test of a man is not what he knows, but what he is in himself and in his relation to others. For instance, can he battle against his own bad inherited instincts, or brave public opinion in the cause of truth? The love of God is the true basis of duty, truth, reverence, loyalty, love, virtue, and work. I believe in these, although I feel the emptiness and hollowness of much of life.—Tennyson.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN IN CUBA.

APPEAL FROM CLARA BARTON.

ON behalf of the Red Cross Association, Clara Barton has sent out an appeal for assistance for the orphan children of the dead reconcentrados of Cuba. She writes that "a part of the debris of the terrible war that has so long been waged in Cuba consists of some 50,000 destitute orphan children of reconcentrados who have in the last few years died of starvation and want.

"These children are scattered through nearly every city and town which had been of sufficient size and importance to receive the driven-out country people. They are not children of low or doubtful origin; many are of the best of Cuban families. The reconcentrados were largely the country people of property—farmers, small planters. They were driven by Weyler into towns and cities, not because they had not, but because they had something, and it was suspected that they supported the insurgent bands by supplying them with provisions and money. The fathers were killed, or joined the Cuban army and disappeared. The mothers are dead.

"Almost every living child among them represents the sacrifice of a heroic mother. When there was little food the mother went without and died. The children ate and lived.

"They range in number from thirty to seventy-five and even 100, in the various towns; utterly homeless, and no one has the least personal interest in them or responsibility for them. All are kind to them, for the Cubans are a kind people. The townspeople still do what they can, but their main dependence is, however, begging of the passengers of every passing train. It sometimes becomes difficult to alight for the crowd of little eager faces and outstretched hands; and yet they are among the brightest, most grateful, and lovable children I have ever seen, when cared for and made comfortable.

The war is ended, but the Red Cross still stands in its tracks with the fifty thousand reconcentrado orphans on its hands. Its agents work faithfully on, gathering them up out of pollution and death. Its source of supplies is the American people and that only.

"We believe that with as many dollars as there are estimated children, aided by the Cuban people themselves, these children can all be placed in their little home asylums, taught to work and become healthful adjuncts of a community rather than a pest. A very few months would accomplish this, and the Red Cross, longer in the field than all others, more hard worked and weary than all, would rejoice, close its work, and come home.

"The Red Cross has already done much to alleviate this distress, and now desires to conclude its work, but finds what has already been generously contributed is insufficient to meet the demand, or in other words to reclaim these homeless waifs from a life not unlike that of animals.

"More money is urgently needed. Contributions may be sent to the North American Trust Company, 100 Broadway, New York; fiscal agent of the United States in Cuba, with branches in Havana and Santiago."

Educational Department.

ENGLISH FRIENDS' SCHOOLS.

THERE appears to be a distinct revival in the Friends' school work in England. The changes and improvements at Ackworth have been fully noted. The Friends' school for boys at Kendal, in the north, has been reorganized, and a new head-master, Wilfred Sessions, B.Sc., appointed. The premises "are being enlarged and refitted throughout with modern appliances." This is an old school, and enjoyed formerly a high repute, but had rather fallen behind in the educational movement; it is now, apparently, to be again made important.

At Bortham, near York, the school for boys, in whose buildings quite a disastrous fire occurred several weeks ago, is also to be reorganized. The committee in charge have decided to rebuild, in an improved manner. Arthur Rowntree has been appointed head-master. (This is the school in which A. Neave Brayshaw, who recently accompanied John Wilhelm Rowntree to the United States, is a teacher.)

At Leighton Park School, Reading, a new head-master, Prof. Ridge, has been appointed to succeed Herbert W. Jones, resigned. The latter is intending to take a year for study and then to resume his professional work.

H. M. J.

WEST CHESTER FRIENDS' SCHOOL.—A neat prospectus has just been issued by the Committee of the Friends' Graded School, on North High street, where the term opens on Ninth month 4th, under promising auspices. Esther B. Foulke, the new Principal, who has successfully taught in Bucks county, will preside over mathematics and English branches and Beulah W. Paschall will be in charge of the Primary Department, and will instruct the language classes.

The kindergarten, which has for a time been under private management, has this year been taken in charge by the school committee. Sara B. Walter will care for the very little people.

LITERARY NOTES.

"TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE and its President, Booker T. Washington," are the subjects of an interesting article by M. B. Thrasher in Appleton's Popular Science Monthly for September. The origin of the school in Booker T. Washington's desire to help his race; its very small beginnings, gradual growth in size and wealth, and finally its present equipment and practical working, are all interestingly told. A number of illustrations show some of the classes at work, and a few of the many buildings which the institute now owns, most of which have been built by the students themselves.

The importance of a pure milk supply for large cities, the great difficulties in the way of an adequate official control of such an industry, and the means by which these difficulties have been overcome in several large European cities, are discussed by Prof. H. W. Conn, of Wesleyan University. Appleton Morgan concludes his examination of the last five years of legislation against drunkenness. He shows that, despite the various laws which have been tried in nearly every State of the Union, drunkenness still persists, and if not increasing is at any rate not diminishing. He believes that the most satisfactory arrangement yet devised is that of a high license, with local option.

Ida M. Tarbell gives in McClure's Magazine for September an account of Lincoln's funeral—an event alone in its kind, since almost every man, woman, and child in the North was a personal mourner, and people stood day and night, in rain and shine, along the railroad in an almost continuous line from Washington to Springfield, to view the passing funeral train and testify their veneration and grief.

An article by Theodore Waters describes the wonderful work of the Hydrographic Office in guarding the highways of the sea, and gives many of the stories of derelicts, icebergs, sea storms, and ship-wrecks in which the records of the Office abound. It is illustrated from drawings and photographs.

Edwin Markham, author of "The Man with the Hoe," has written a poem on the Dreyfus affair for this issue.

What is the best epitaph written in English within this century? The literary paragrapher of the Pall Mall Gazette maintains that it is one which its author, the Primate of Ireland, sometime Bishop of Derry, had inscribed on the wall of Derry Cathedral in commemoration of a young curate. Here it is:

"Down through our crowded walks and closer air,
O friend, how beautiful thy footsteps were!
When through the fever's fire at last they trod,
A form was with them like the Son of God.
'Twas but one step for those victorious feet
From their day's path unto the golden street;
And we who watched their walk, so bright, so brief,
Have marked this marble with our hope and grief."

Scribner's Magazine for this month has a number of articles with an outdoor flavor to them. It opens with an account by Frederick Ireland of what he calls "the finest canoeing country in the world." He made a five hundred mile journey from Mattawa to the head waters of the Ottawa and Gatineau rivers, through a region abounding in fish and moose. It has been for centuries and is now the home of the Algonquin Indian. Much of the wilderness is as yet uncharted. The illustrations are made from the author's abundant photographs.

The Stevenson letters in this number have to do with the Saranac Lake region of the Adirondacks in winter, and describe the outdoor life led by the novelist and his family when he was trying to regain his health.

The poems also have a vacation air about them. "The Old Home Haunt," illustrated by Henry Hutt, is a boy's memories of fishing. Dr. Van Dyke contributes a "Slumber Song" for the fisherman's child, illustrated by Maude Cowles. Other outdoor poems are "In a Poppy Garden," and "The Veery-Thrush."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

PRESIDENT WM. W. BIRDSALL returned on the 31st ultimo from a week's camping out in Nova Scotia, whither he went by sea.

A letter from Professor Wm. I. Hull and wife, of Swarthmore, tells of their having spent a delightful week at Oxford University. From there they traveled to Salisbury and Tintern Abbey, and visited relatives in Street, Somersetshire. Then they went north to the English Lakes, read from Wordsworth in his own Dove Cottage garden, found the holly trees planted by him near Grasmere, and lingered in many haunts of the great poet.

Howard M. Jenkins was in Edinburgh and vicinity from the 12th to the 14th, then visited Thomas Hodgkin. His intention was to pass thence to Durham, Scarborough, York, Cambridge and Oxford, London, the Shakespeare country, and Birmingham, reaching the latter city at about the present date.

Jesse H. Holmes says in a recent letter: "I am to sail next Seventh-day, Eighth month 26, from Boston by the Cunarder Cephalaria. Shall go first to the Birmingham Conference and then "as way opens." You may be interested to know that we have been holding here (E. Freyburg, Maine), a series of three Friends' meetings, all well attended. The last was held on Carter Hill. It was quite patriarchal to see sixty or seventy people settled round on the grass to worship on the hill top.

In a letter to the editors from Rebecca B. Nicholson, who is conducting an excursion through the British Isles and on the Continent, a brief account is given of visits to towns and towers of historic interest, and to the old Warwick Meeting. She expected to be at Colwyn Bay on the 21st ultimo.

THERE are eighteen observatories in the two hemispheres wherein photographs of the heavens are being made down to the stars of the fourteenth magnitude, whose number is reckoned at 30,000,000. There are between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 stars above the eleventh magnitude.

EXTRACTS FROM PRIVATE LETTERS.

OUR friend, H. A. Plummer, of Chicago, interestingly says : Is it not good to see how the women of France are leading in the "League of Disarmament"? Yet it is sorrowful to see how the men are so under the spell of militarism that such a trial as is now being conducted can be possible. "The honor of the army" must be preserved, even through falsehood and treachery and murder. But "truth is mighty and must prevail." No nation can sin in secret now. The eyes of the world are upon them.

Siberia is going to abandon its exile system and "the truth goes marching on." Cuba now needs not only food and clothing for the poor orphaned children, but schools in every province at once. These children will become criminals if not attended to.

The Afro-American meeting, recently held here, marks an era in the progress of that race. Jane Addams always does the right thing, I think, and was justified by the intelligent interest taken by the colored women, in her attentions. Mrs. Bruce's address was good, and Mr. and Mrs. Booker Washington are both leaders. It does my heart good, this race growing in knowledge and wisdom. They must do this for themselves, but we must lend a hand.

I see the committee at Asbury Park planned for the General Conference next year. I hope live subjects will be dealt with. Surely with such advanced teaching as has been ours we should have some able exponents of it. I wish statesmen and stateswomen might come from among us. It seems as if they should with the opportunities now ours. Have our ideals been high enough? Have we been too conservative? Kept our light too much smothered? Surely if it were shining as it should, "more beams" would have reached out further.

The New England Magazine for September has an article on "The International Peace Conference at The Hague," by Benjamin Trueblood. All Friends should secure that number and read the article. It is well illustrated, and the record of the participants given. We will probably want to follow the future career of some of these able men, and this copy will be helpful. It comforts and encourages me to know that there are such earnest, noble men in the different nations, who truly have the best welfare of the whole people at heart. It seems like the calmness which dwells beneath the turbulent waves of the ocean, when we compare them with the noisy banterers for war, as Whittier says, in his "Italy,"—

"Yet, surely as He lives, the day
Of peace He promised shall be ours,
To fold the flags of war, and lay
Its sword and spear to rust away,
And sow its ghastly fields with flowers!"

* *

Abby D. Munro, from her summer home in Bristol, R. I., writes:

I feel free to write in the interest of my work. I am expecting considerable change another year. Miss Nicholas's connection with the Industrial Department has been severed, and she expects to go elsewhere. I do not know just who will take her place, but I have some one in view, who, I think, will prove satisfactory, but it will take some time to get things settled. Having had no change in the school for so long a time, it seems strange that four teachers should leave in one term. The other vacancies are now filled. Everything has seemed to go on quietly and well since I came away, and general health prevailed. There was considerable excitement caused by the appearance of yellow fever at Hampton, but it seems to have subsided and everybody breathes easily again. I expect to start for Mt. Pleasant, Tenth month 2.

We have had a singularly cool summer here. I do not expect to see many days of cooler weather than I have experienced this month, nor feel the need of much thicker clothing. The nights have been cool and comfortable, without exception. Everybody here is deeply interested in the coming races, when the fame of our noted boat-builders is at stake. Everyone is confident of the Columbia's success. She has been in the harbor, off and on, all summer. For myself, I begrudge the money spent, or that will be spent, before it is over, when it would do so much good elsewhere. The more I think of it, the more do I see the need of an endowment, and shall work and pray for it. So many new objects are pressing their needs continually. I felt encouraged last year at the interest manifested, but if we only had something to depend upon it would lighten my care a great deal. But we never know what is in store for us. Bristol is a most delightful place in summer, with Narragansett Bay on one side and Mount Hope Bay on the other, and so many pleasure resorts within easy reach.

TO A SKYLARK.

ETHEREAL minstrel! Pilgrim of the sky!
Dost thou despise the earth where cares abound?
Or, while the wings aspire, are heart and eye
Both with thy nest upon the dewy ground?
Thy nest which thou canst drop into at will,
Those quivering wings composed, that music still!

To the last point of vision, and beyond,
Mount, daring Warbler! that love-prompted strain,
('Twixt thee and thine a never-failing bond)
Thrills not the less the bosom of the plain:
Yet might'st thou seem, proud privilege! to sing
All independent of the leafy spring.

Leave to the Nightingale her shady wood;
A privacy of glorious light in thine,
Whence thou dost pour upon the world a flood
Of harmony, with instinct more divine;
Type of the wise who soar, but never roam;
True to the kindred points of Heaven and Home!
—Wordsworth.

GRANDFATHER'S DREAM.

GRANDFATHER sat in his big arm chair
Fast asleep.
The wrinkles that ran o'er his wan old face
Were furrowed deep.

The tangled web of his beard hung from
His cheek and chin,
White as the falling snow the winds
Gambol in.

His hard, brown hands were crossed above
His walking staff;
And we hushed to silence the talk in the room,
And the laugh.

For we saw a smile from his parted lips
Spread o'er his face,
As a ripple runs o'er a tranquil lake
From its starting place.

We guessed some vision the long ago
Had anchored deep
In the old man's soul was drifting now
Through his sleep.

What was that dream? Did his childhood come
And leave a map
Of all his early playing grounds
There in his lap?

Or was it a winding orchard path
In the twilight dim,
And his children's mother, a girl again,
Walking with him?

Perhaps, through time's long telephone,
He heard a coo
And felt a baby hand on his cheek,
As he used to do.

Sure we were some radiant joy
He had met somewhere
Had come to visit the old man there
Asleep in his chair.

But soon his hands dropped from his staff,
 And drooped his head;
 And those who came and went that day
 Talked of the dead.

We talked only of pearly paths
 In a Summer land,
 Where his children's mother walked with him,
 Hand in hand.

For now we knew her angel face,
 Glad in the gleam
 Of a golden city awaiting him,
 Was Grandfather's dream.

—Alfred Ellison, in Chicago Record.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLORED WOMEN.

THIS body was in session in Chicago last week and did some earnest work. "It includes in its membership some of the most earnest and best educated colored women of the times, and at its session grappled in a practical way with the most perplexing problems before the race in this country. The speakers were not idealists but practical women of experience, planning how the unfortunate of the colored race are to be better educated and better clothed and better fed."

We give an address of one of the speakers as printed in the Chicago Times-Herald.

"ONE PHASE OF THE LABOR QUESTION."

By Mrs. Josephine Bruce, widow of B. K. Bruce, former United States senator and registrar of the treasury.

Before this splendid organization of women and at this time it is eminently fitting that attention be called to the position of the negro workmen in the world of industry. For the last thirty-five years the problem of negro suffrage has, unfortunately, overshadowed the labor question in importance, but since the possibility of negro political supremacy has become a thing of the past the labor question has begun to assume due importance. The special phase to which I shall call your attention is in large part due to the formation of more numerous and more powerful combinations of labor, primarily to maintain a reasonable standard of wages. Such an object is altogether praiseworthy, but alongside of it there exists the dangerous principle of exclusion. To appreciate the effect of the labor union and certain other influences upon the negro artisans of to-day we must bear in mind conditions, economic and social, existent prior to that great upheaval of society known as the war of the rebellion. With the downfall of the old regime there began to be manifest a tendency toward congestion in large centers of population, a tendency which has resulted in a large increase of the serving class—the lineal descendants of the mansion-house class—by contributions from the other two classes. The power of the great families was broken; the white overseers, foreman, etc., in large numbers entered the field of free industrial competition.

The unwillingness of white men to work side by side with black men, the preference of the employing class—other things being equal—for white labor, the attraction of city life, the political activity of the negro, and, most important of all, the failure to give the younger generations of negroes industrial training—all these things tended slowly but surely to drive out the negro artisan and to induce the immigration of labor from the North.

In the wake of free industry comes the trade union. Manufacturing brings together great numbers of laboring men, intercommunication is easy, and out of common interests and sympathies springs concerted action. Thus it is at the North, where manufacturing is more extensively carried on than at the South, the labor union is more powerful, and the idea of exclusiveness would, under normal conditions, be more stringently applied. But here comes into play race feeling. At the South the union absolutely excludes the black laborer. At the North the union is perceptibly hesitant on the question of the color line. Moreover, with the increase of manufacturing at the South comes an increase of the labor union's sphere of influence, and consequently one industry after another is in imminent danger of being taken from the black laborer.

Discouraged at the prospects in industry, ambitious negroes have entered the learned professions in disproportionate numbers. Many have absolutely failed and been cruelly forced down into the serving class. The failure is due to two reasons, both of which are in large part clearly traceable to the industrial condition of the negro; first, a distrust among all classes of the ability of the professional negro; and, second, the financial condition of clients.

Purely ethical considerations, therefore, make plain the importance of a free artisan class among us. From the economic standpoint the importance of a great class of artisans is too clear to need elaboration. I do not belittle the literary education; I do not ask the successful preacher to abandon his church and become an artisan; I do not ask the successful lawyer to leave his clients and enter a factory; I do not ask the successful doctor to burn his books of medicine, but I remember that the supreme need of the preacher, the lawyer, and the doctor is a great industrial class upon which to base their professional activity.

No less real than the labor union itself, though possibly less permanent as an economic factor, is race feeling. But experience unquestionably shows that these two factors, powerful though they be, will not be able long to restrict the industrial advance of the negro if the industrial schools now existing receive hearty support, and others be established, so that after filling the demand for ministers and teachers the schools may in some manner supply the demand for artisans; and if negro industrial workers be locally centralized, and if a class of negro business managers be developed.

Now, what are the prospects? At this moment a great wave of industrialism is sweeping over the whole South, where, according to the census of 1890, fifteen-sixteenths of the negro population live—a wave that reaches all classes of the social structure. Industrial schools are being established for both races. Factories and cities are springing up where waste land was before. The schools are pouring out a continual stream of negro artisans, a stream each year increasing in volume. This steady increase in the number of negro artisans tends powerfully towards local centralization, thus enabling the black artisans in a given community alone to supply the labor for enterprises, large and small. Here and there a negro captain of industry contracts for a large and important piece of work; here and there a negro assumes the management of a factory.

Now the tendencies I have referred to in this discussion are purely economic and social, and let us not forget that this great democracy of ours has no conceivable justification for its existence, unless it be that it allows to all the varied tendencies, economic and social, that the advance of industry and society may unfold the fullest freedom of play consistent with the liberty of the individual and the welfare of society. We who have a firm and abiding faith in democracy may await the future with confidence.

Egg Lemonade for Consumption.

DR. A. M. CUSHING, in Chicago Tribune.—A person never dies of consumption who is gaining flesh or fat, or even "holding his own." Then the thing to be done is to keep him nourished. In some cases it can be done by drinking three or four quarts of milk a day; in others by eating chocolate caramels, perhaps a pound a day; or the two combined; but in an experience of forty-three years, eggs in lemonade, whole or beaten up, anywhere from one to six a day may be taken. If he can digest six, the patient need have but little fear of consumption. I have reason to believe the lemonade digests the eggs, for one evening, when in my teens, I drank twenty eggs in lemonade in a little while; beating a bigger boy by four eggs, without an unpleasant symptom. As to the treatment, I believe firmly in giving the well indicated, attenuated remedy by hypodermic injection into the arm, and rarely repeated. Any intelligent physician can do that. If the stomach does not tolerate food, a few drops of pure olive oil injected into the arm occasionally will start the cure, and, I believe, kill the microbes.

An Engineering Feat.

Manchester Guardian.

A CANADIAN correspondent writes: An engineering feat of an unusual character has just been completed at the Travers. The St. Lawrence is eight to nine miles wide at this point, and the channel only about a quarter of a mile wide. For the safety of navigation the channel was indicated by a lightship, but on account of the weather the light had to be removed every season long before navigation was stopped by the formation of ice in the fall. In the spring, too, it could not be got into position as soon as the river was navigable again. Navigation being unsafe for heavy tonnage in the absence of a light indicating the channel, the season for ocean steamers was correspondingly shortened, and insurance rates raised. The Government decided to substitute a permanent lighthouse for the lightship, with the best modern apparatus, to afford guidance as long as river navigation was practicable. To establish a foundation in 45 feet of tide-water (at high tide) ebbing and flowing at the rate of about eight miles an hour, was not an easy task. To accomplish it a large pier was built of heavy timbers filled with rock, floated to the designated spot, held in position by heavy anchors up, down, and across stream, and by five steamers, and sunk on a bed prepared with stone dropped from eight barges that had previously been towed to the place in readiness for immediate use. The pier was then a stationary block upon which the superstructure could be raised. The next thing was to secure permanently the stationary block by surrounding it with masses of stone, and immense quantities were sunk, forming a protection which is confidently expected to prove solid enough to resist the heaviest weather. The stationary block is 28 feet deep, and at low tide is in 26 feet of water. The superstructure will stand 30 feet out of the water at high tide.

Colored Club Women at Hull House.

ON the 17th ult., Jane Addams of Hull House, entertained at luncheon a party of colored women. The guests included in this little "social departure" were for the most part the prominent out-of-town delegates to the convention of the National Association of Colored Women, which has just closed in this city. The invitation having been extended by Miss Addams, the arrangements, as far as the colored women were concerned, were carried out by Mrs. Ida Wells-Barnett. There were thirteen guests, all told, including the president, Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, of Washington, and others. After luncheon, at which Hull House residents were also present, another party of twenty-five colored women came to inspect this social settlement. They were shown all about by the residents, evincing a great interest in every department, as the colored women of the South have undertaken a similar work in the old plantation districts. "We were impressed," said one of the residents later in the afternoon, "with the intelligence of these colored women. They inspected the settlement understandingly and poured in on us as many interested questions as we could answer." This is the first time in Chicago that the colored women have been given decided recognition in a social way by a woman of the lighter skin.

Woman Suffrage and Prize-Fighting.

THE fact that the Legislature of Colorado passed a bill permitting prize-fights on the payment of $1,000 license, has been used as a text to prove that woman suffrage did not prevent this evil. There were only three women members of this Legislature, and all of them voted against the bill. Women constitute a minority in the State, but the powerful Woman's Civic Federation in Denver and the Woman's Club of 1,200 members have passed resolutions of protest against this new law. They also have petitioned the Governor to include its repeal in the new list of subjects to be considered in a special session of the Legislature is called.

LORD KELVIN, in a lecture, stated that, as a result of recent investigations, it was estimated that the earth had been the abode of life for about 30,000,000 years.

CURRENT EVENTS.

TWELVE steel arches, weighing nearly 400 tons, which were to have formed the superstructure of a coliseum building in course of erection in Chicago, collapsed on the 28th ult. Nine men were killed, two are missing and supposed to be in the ruins, and fourteen were injured, four fatally.

THE War Department has given out for publication a statement of the financial condition of the island of Cuba, which shows that under the management of the United States Government the receipts of the island from January 1, 1899, to June 30, of the current year, exceed the expenditures by the sum of $1,480,021.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Kingston, Jamaica, on the 29th ult., says: The recent advices of the Associated Press as to the situation of affairs in San Domingo, state that the revolution is so essentially national and devoid of personal political elements that the adherents of Jimenez are advising him not to come to San Domingo for the present. What the people are clamoring for is not a mere change in the political personnel, but good government with financial solvency, with which they associate the idea of American annexation or protectorate.

WILLIAM J. LATTA, who for years has been prominently identified as general agent of the Pennsylvania railroad, resigned on the 29th ult., his resignation to take effect at once. Until his successor has been appointed the duties of his office will be discharged by D. H. Lovell, superintendent of the Delaware extension and Kensington division.

A MANILA dispatch says that the fighting spirit of the Filipinos seems to be unquenched, but that all reports from the rebel territory agree that the scarcity of food is increasing, and that the rebel commanders at various ports refuse to obey Aguinaldo's orders in regard to trade with American ships.

THE ravages caused by famine and small-pox on the east coast of Africa have become so appalling that it has been decided to appeal to the Lord Mayor of London to open a Mansion House Fund for the relief of British subjects.

A SPECIAL telegram to the Philadelphia Times, on the 29th ult., announced that the Rev. Harlan Creelman, for six years engaged in the department of Biblical literature in Yale University, had resigned to accept the place of professor of Hebrew and Old Testament literature in the Congregational College of Canada, an institution affiliated with McGill University at Montreal.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

IN the will of Rev. George F. Clark, of West Acton, Mass., there is a bequest looking toward the founding of a professorship for teaching young men and women the dangers of the alcoholic and tobacco habits.

—Windsor Castle is to be equipped with fifty sets of electric bells and fire alarm boxes of American manufacture.

—Hampton Predmore, a farmer, near Stroudsburg, Pa., mistaking the head of his neighbor, Godfrey Transue, for a ground hog, shot and instantly killed Transue on his farm. Transue was lying among the weeds.

—The Bank of England destroys about 350,000 of its notes every week to replace them with freshly printed ones. One evening in each week is set apart for the making of this bonfire.

—Women are employed at railway points and crossings in Italy because they do not get intoxicated.

—The United States Treasury has received $3,210,000 from the sale of the old Custom House site in New York, authorized by Congress.

—A set of maps of the time of Ptolemy, the geographer, has been found in some eleventh century manuscripts in the Vatican library.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 9, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 36.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XXXVI.

THE power of principle manifests its perfection through an adherence to the Law and Will of God.

JOHN HUNT.

From a private letter.

FLOWERS WITHOUT FRUIT.

PRUNE thou thy words, the thoughts control
That o'er thee swell and throng ;
They will condense within thy soul,
And change to purpose strong.

But he who lets his feelings run
In soft, luxurious flow,
Shrinks when hard service must be done,
And faints at every woe.

Faith's meanest deed more favor bears
Where hearts and wills are weighed,
Than brightest transports, choicest prayers,
Which bloom their hour and fade.

—John Henry Newman.

WORK OF FRIENDS AMONG THE INDIANS IN THE NORTHERN SUPERIN- TENDENCY, 1869-1899.

BY JOSEPH J. JANNEY.

(Concluded.)

THE Northern Superintendency was discontinued in the Sixth month, 1876, under act of Congress. Friends withdrew from active service under Government at Indian Agencies as follows: the Pawnees, in 1878; the Omahas and Winnebagoes, and Otoes, in 1880; the Great Nemahas, in 1882; and the Santee-Sioux, in 1885.

"Friends left the Santee-Sioux self-supporting, their school population all in school, the clerks, millers, blacksmiths, carpenters, and farmers of the Agency, skillful and efficient Indians. The Indian population all wearing citizens' clothing, living in comfortable houses, with the school facilities necessary for their children, living upon family homesteads and their tribal government republican and elective.

"The Winnebagoes were left self-supporting, with a large annual surplus of agricultural products for sale, a large manual-labor boarding-school house with cultivated farm attached, and two day-schools filled with promising pupils of both sexes. The Indians had one hundred and five brick and frame two-story houses of four and five rooms each on their allotments of land held in severalty by certificate. Their tribal government was elective republican. Their farmers and mechanical employees were skilled and efficient Indians. The tribe was fitted and prepared for American citizenship, with protection of property, during one generation.

"The Omahas were left self-supporting farmers, with a large annual surplus for sale. They were generally settled upon homestead farms allotted in severalty and held by certificate. They had a boarding-school and two Agency day schools, well attended. Most of the adults adhered to their Indian costume, but were living in houses. They were fitted and prepared for American citizenship, with property secured by certificate, during one generation.

"The Iowas were left self-supporting farmers on family farms selected at pleasure. They were living in good houses, had ample school facilities, and nearly all the school population was in school. They generally wore citizens' dress and were in a fit condition for citizenship.

"The Sac and Fox Indians had, in some cases, become thrifty farmers. A good school-house had been provided for them, but their children were not all in school. Strong drink and a large cash annuity have been the bane of this small fragment of a tribe.

"The Otoes and Missourias, early in the administration of Friends, presented a strong opposition headed by the hereditary chiefs, against all civilizing influences, and although the chiefs were dismissed from office, and younger, progressive men placed in their stead, their influence through tribal bands retarded most civilizing efforts and marred the work intended. A large boarding-school house with cultivated farm was provided for the children, but it was not well patronized by the parents.

"The Pawnees were removed to Indian Territory in 1874, by their unanimous and earnest request, where their numbers were in two years reduced one-third by death. Good schools were provided for them, and their children were steady attenders of both Sabbath and day schools and were promising scholars, but the great mortality of this tribe during Friends' short charge of them in the Territory very much retarded their advance in civilization."

We may gather from these facts that there was, under the administration of Friends in the Northern Superintendency, a substantial improvement in the condition of all of the various tribes; and that the "Society returned to the Government, upon retirement from its official service in the care and management of Indians, four tribes, namely, the Santee-Sioux, Winnebago, Omaha, and Iowa, in such a status of civilization, education, and self-support, as qualified them for the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship."

Soon after the displacement of Charles Hill, a member of our Society, as Agent at the Santee-Sioux Agency, in 1890, our active coöperation with the Government in the management of Indian affairs in the field gradually faded away. The policy of President Grant had had a fair trial, and the good results to the Indian were quite apparent, and if it could have been continued, it is not assuming too much to say that long before this time the solution of the Indian problem would have been within our grasp. But it could not survive the determined opposition of the practical politicians, and, like a dissolving view, it changed, and before long we found the old system resumed; the victors in each and every presidential campaign claimed the spoils, and their claims were allowed; consequently the active participation of our Society ceased.

In 1886, in company with Levi K. Brown, of our committee, I visited some of the reservations in northern Nebraska. We made a careful tour of the Santee and Ponca reservations, visiting many of the allotments and going into the houses of the Indians. One of the results of this visit was the conviction that the great need of the hour was the introduction of field Matron work as a department of Indian Education. In order to demonstrate the usefulness and the importance of such instruction, Friends appointed and maintained, at their own expense for more than a year, a field Matron at the Santee-Sioux Agency, whose good work was acknowledged by the department, and testified to by the best people on the reservation, both whites and Indians.

All friends of the Indians unite in commendation of this work, and it is conceded that in this matter of the absence from the Indian's houses of all the refinements and comforts of a home, do they fall the farthest below the standard of the Anglo-Saxon. Accepting this demonstration as conclusive, the Government adopted field Matron work as a feature of Indian education, and it is now firmly established and is provided for in the Annual Appropriation Bill by liberal amounts of money for its continuance.

The development of this branch of the service has received during the past ten or twelve years a good deal of the time and means of Friends. During the administration of Commissioner Morgan, the Indian Bureau was especially friendly to Matron work, and its extension was warmly commended in official documents and it is now firmly entrenched as a department of Indian education.

The labors of our Society in this department of philanthropy, during the past fifteen years, have been confined to the accepting of such opportunities for usefulness as presented themselves from time to time. We are always on the lookout, however, but without any definite plan of work and no concert of action, amongst the different yearly meeting, all of which have their committees on Indian Affairs and do not fail to respond when called upon for coöperative work.

The Standing Committee on Indian Affairs of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, owing to its nearness to the city of Washington, is enabled to have frequent intercourse with the officers of the Indian Bureau, and has enjoyed the confidence of Government officials at all times. It has carefully preserved an attitude of friendliness and good feeling, and while it has sometimes been compelled to oppose the views and policy of those in governmental control, it has been enabled to do so in a spirit of condescension and deference. The different Commissioners of Indian Affairs have always been approachable and exceedingly cordial in their treatment of Friends. We have not and do not now endorse the sentiments often expressed by zealous friends of the Indians, that the attitude of the Government towards them has been hostile, that in appointments to office in the various agencies a total disregard of the welfare of the Indians has been manifest. We do not believe this to be true. Speakers on the subject have been fond of saying that the Government "sends drunken men out amongst the Indians to teach them sobriety; lazy men to teach them to be industrious; and corrupt men to teach them morals." It is a trite saying and comes glibly off the tongue, and will do for a good example of a figure of speech, but it is not half true.

There have always been and are now, many faithful, honest, energetic, conscientious, painstaking, Christian men and women, who have voluntarily left comfortable homes and gone amongst the Indians, impelled solely by a desire to do them good, and animated by a purely philanthropic impulse. True, sometimes these have been displaced, and unworthy persons appointed in their stead, but the spoils system has been responsible for this, not the individuals who were compelled to carry it out. The report of the Board of Indian Commissioners strikes the keynote when it proclaims that "the one thing needed for the improvement of the Indian service is a permanent tenure of office by those officials who have proved their honesty and efficiency. No branch of the public service is more harmed than this by frequent changes, and in no branch is experience of greater value." When the Government adopts again the policy of President Grant in the administration of the Indian Service, a just and satisfactory settlement of the question will be within easy reach.

I see no reason to change the conclusions expressed in a paper read before the Union for Philanthropic labor, held at Lincoln, Va., in 1892. The policy that will the most speedily and certainly solve the Indian problem, is,—First, and just as soon as practicable, there should be a complete dissolution of the tribal relation, the family relation to be established and maintained instead, this to be brought about by the general application of the "Land in Severalty Law." The segregation of the members of the tribe into separate homes and individual holdings would tend greatly to the promotion of morality among them, and foster a feeling of independence and self-respect. Next, the compulsory moral, intellectual and industrial education of all Indian children in schools of the best character under control of the Government. Next, thorough and persistent instruction of the men in the business of farming and the women in the art of housekeeping. Next, absorption of the Indians as individuals into the general body politic. Then the most rigid and inflexible enforcement of the United States Law prohibiting the sale of liquor to an Indian. A policy based upon these purposes, with permanency and definiteness on the part of the Government to support it, would speedily bring the problem within the limits of a practical solution.

Upon this point, and in conclusion, I will quote

Commissioner Morgan. "If," he says, "the purpose is to incorporate the Indians into the national life as independent citizens, so that they may take their places as integral elements in our society, not as American Indians, but as Americans, or rather as men, enjoying all the privileges and sharing the burdens of American citizenship, then the purpose should not only be clearly and definitely stated, but should be dominant in all matters of legislation and administration. It should be understood, not only by our own people, but by the Indians themselves, and should be inculcated as a fundamental doctrine in every Indian school. No pains should be spared to teach the rising generation that the old condition is rapidly and forever passing away, and that they must prepare themselves for self-support. This is the inevitable, from which there is no escape. They should be taught that their future lies largely in their own hands, and that if they improve the opportunities for education, now so generously offered them by the Government, they may become intelligent, prosperous, strong, and happy, but that if they neglect them, they will be swept away or crushed by the irresistible tide of civilization, which has no place for drones, no sympathy with idleness, and no rations for the improvident."

PRAYER.

From Lyman Abbott's sermon on "Christ's Teachings Concerning Prayer," we extract the passages following:

IF we take up Christ's instructions respecting prayer, and read them with care, one of the first things that will strike us, possibly with surprise, will be the fact that he says almost nothing about public prayer. He lays no stress upon what we call public worship; he does not urge men to attend the synagogue or the temple or the supposed prayer-meetings of a future church; he does, indeed, say that where two join together in any request, their request will be heard; he does say that where two or three are joined together in prayer he will be in their midst; but it is all. It would be, I think, a mistake to deduce from this silence the conclusion that he did not mean that there should not be any communion in prayer, and that he did not think there was any concern or importance to be attached to it. He prescribes no ritual, he urges no form; but this is characteristic of all his teaching. It seems to have been his method to supply light, and then leave the light to find and make its own channel. As the sap is supplied by mother-earth, and then the sap itself works out all various forms of vegetation—tree and bush and grass and shrub; as the sun supplies all the sources of light and all the material out of which color is formed, and then its flowers take on different colors and reflect according to their several capacity; so Christ supplied the devotional life: he laid stress on the truth that the way is open for intercommunication between the soul and God; and then he left that intercommunication to create its own forms and find for itself its own expressions.

More significant than the silence of Christ respecting public prayer is the fact that he rarely speaks of either public or private prayer as a duty. The Old Testament contains no laws requiring men to pray; the New Testament contains scarcely anything that could be called such a law. Christ does not treat prayer as a duty, imposed on men as an obligation to be fulfilled towards God; he does not regard prayer as something that must be paid to God in coin, of petition, confession, or thanksgiving.

Christ approached the whole subject of prayer from an entirely different point of view. To him prayer was a great privilege. God was a living God and a loving Father, and it was the privilege of his children to go to this living God and get life from him, to go to this loving Father and communicate with him. In Christ's point of view prayer was not something I owe to Jehovah, but something I may have as God's free gift—the gift of his life in the intercommunication of my life with his.

Christ first of all seems to me to have said: You have a Father in heaven; you are a child; go to him. Do you want your children to go to you? Go in that spirit. "If ye, being evil, give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your Father give to you the spirit of holiness if you ask him?" He is a Father; you are children; the way is open for you to go to him and get from him.

General statements are to be found in the Gospels, such as, "Whatever ye ask, believing, he will give it to you." I think these general declarations perplex a great many people. They imagine from these declarations that they have a right to ask God for anything and they are sure to get it. But they do not always get it. But surely that would be a very poor boon—to give us omnipotence without giving us omniscience. To tell me that I can have anything I want, without my knowing what it is I ought to want, and what it is that would be best for me—that would be a poor benefaction. If a father should say to his child, Anything you want you can have, and should give him knives to cut his fingers with, and fire to burn himself with, and gunpowder to blow his eyes out with, and tobacco to poison himself with, and whiskey to get drunk on—if he should do what I see by the newspapers one incoming immigrant family did on a recent voyage, so feed the baby on whiskey that when it arrived here it had delirium tremens—what would you say of him? To give to an ignorant child whatever the child will take; to give to the ignorant person whatever the ignorant person clamors for—is that a blessing? We must use common sense even in interpreting the New Testament. To a people who have been accustomed to think that prayer is something to be paid to God, and that it must be paid in a particular way and according to a particular kind of etiquette, so many minutes of prayer in the morning and so many at night, such a form in the morning and such a form at night, and with such a ritual, Christ says, You are wrong; go to your Father as the child goes to his father, and ask him for what you want. This is prayer. Anything, everything, whatever it is right to want, it is right to pray for. Whatever it is right to desire, it is right to ask of your Father. Not a debt paid to him, but free access to him, for the whole circle of your life wants.

This principle, too, interprets another element in Christ's instruction, which I think is often misinterpreted. He bids us pray for his sake and in his name; and men have imagined that we had so sinned against the Father that he would not give us anything for our own sakes; he did not care any more for us, but he cared for his only begotten Son; and, therefore, if we asked for the Son's sake, he would do for the Son's sake, though he would not do for ours. It is not strange that men have revolted against prayer so interpreted. What Christ says is this: My disciples, I have sent you into the world as I was sent into the world; you are there to do what I was there to do; you are there to help the world, to save the world, to redeem the world; you are there to help on the coming of the kingdom of God and the perfecting of the will of God. Anything you want to accomplish that purpose, it is ready for you; whatever you want to help you do the work you are in the world to do, I will give it to you. But even that must be interpreted with common sense. I may not ask for an easy time; to be clothed luxuriously; to be rich. We are here, if we are really in the Christ spirit, not to ask for the best office, the easiest place, the largest wealth, but to ask for the best opportunity for the largest service.

Consider the Lord's Prayer one moment. What is it? It is coming to God with this one transcendent, supreme desire—Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done. That is first. And subject to that supreme, dominant desire are four desires which include all our wants. The first is supply of food for body, soul, and spirit; the second is relief from the burden of our own past transgressions and sins; the third is guidance in our perplexities; the fourth is deliverance from the powers of evil within or without, when they are too much for us. Christ says, first of all, seek the kingdom of God and the accomplishment of his will; and then, seeking this, ask for those things which you need—food for body, soul, and spirit; forgiveness for past sins; guidance, but especially guidance out of overwhelming temptation; and strength to resist evil within and without.

This is where most human petitions end, but not where Christ's desires for us end, nor where our desires for ourselves end when we are at our highest. If you will compare what is called the Lord's Prayer with the prayer which he offers for his disciples, and which is recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, you will see that this, which is the real Lord's Prayer, begins where the other Lord's Prayer ends. In this prayer for his disciples Christ does not ask for daily bread; he was willing to be poor, and willing that his disciples should be poor. He does not ask for forgiveness; he assumes that we are forgiven and have begun our new life, freed from all the burden of the past. He does not ask that we shall be kept out of temptation—"I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world;" he only asks that we should be delivered from its evil. The two prayers are in that one petition—the deliverance from evil. Then he goes on with this other, larger, transcendent prayer, that you and I may be one with the Father as he is one with the Father. Not that in some far future, distant state we may be lost and absorbed in God, but that here and now we may carry our aspirations, our desires, our purposes, our life to him, and may take from him his aspirations, his desires, his purposes.—The Outlook.

THE PHYSIOLOGICAL EFFECT OF FAITH.

THE above is the title of a paper which appeared in the Outlook for Eighth month 19, 1899. It is written by a physician (George E. Gorham, M. D.), and explains so clearly the way in which cures are wrought without the help of drugs that we quote from it at length. The object of the writer is to show how the unconscious processes of the body are influenced by the mind. After showing how the beating of the heart, the circulation of the blood, the steady rise and fall of the chest wall, the wonderful process of digestion, the making of chyle and the pouring of it into the blood, the manufacture of it into bone, blood, and muscle,—after showing how all these processes go on independently of our consciousness, he says,—

"The processes of unconscious life are under control of the sympathetic nervous system, and most of them go on independent of thought and unrecognized by it. Therefore, it is but natural that the common idea is held that we have little or no power to influence the unconscious processes of the body.

"It is the purpose of this paper to review some well-known physiological facts, and show by illustration some influences which do affect the functional activities of the unconscious processes of the body."

He then gives illustrations first of how fear may interrupt temporarily any or all of the functions of the body and continues,—

"Thus it is easily seen that all the grosser processes of the body, like the digestion of food, the beating of the heart, excretion of tears, etc., are profoundly interfered with by fear; and those processes which we can observe on the outside of the body are only part of the great manufacturing plant which builds and restores the tissues, makes and circulates the blood upon which all the energies of the body depend. Overholser says: 'We find in the ultimate analysis of the organic structure of our bodies, from the units of the most highly specialized tissues to the units of simple undifferentiated protoplasm, that the most important organic elements of the organism are the unmodified protoplasmic white blood cells. They are the seat of its physiological powers and the most powerful antagonizers of its pathological conditions; the source of all its nutrition and of all its repair; its agents of supply in times of peace and its brave warriors of defense in times of battle.'

"If blood cells are such important physiological elements of the body, is it any wonder that we have ill-health when by fear, jealousy, or anger we are throwing the whole manufacturing plant into wild confusion?

"Is it any wonder or miracle that, when we eliminate fear and implant a steady, serene faith, our bodies recover from many ills? It is delicate work to make a blood cell. There are 5,000,000 red and about 10,000 white corpuscles in one cubic millimeter, or about one drop of blood. If a man were to count at the rate of 100 per minute and count steadily ten hours per day, it would take him about three months to count the cells in one drop of blood. Think of the millions and millions of blood cells in the body! And then we have muscle and bone and brain cells by the millions. All these are the product of that wonderful automatic machine operated by the great sympathetic nervous system. Study its operation when you will: the child in the cradle, the soldier on the battlefield, or the aged, tottering on the staff, and you will find it not controlled by will, but always disturbed by fear and as truly encouraged and stimulated by faith. If sudden and great fear will so thoroughly disturb all the grosser processes, is it unreasonable to suppose that continued anxious thought of a milder character will disturb the more delicate work of making brain and blood cells?"

An example follows of how faith and love and trust stimulate the processes to improved operation, so that this condition of mind may effect the cure of many functional and some organic diseases. He says,—

"Careful observation will compel the fair investigator to admit that cures are made. But the investigator finds difficulty in accepting the explanation of the cures when he is asked to believe the power comes from a shrine or a stone; or when he is asked to believe there is no real disease the matter, but all is mind. And the problem is no easier for many when asked to believe that God wrought a miracle. If one can accept what the study of the processes of the body seems to prove, that the sympathetic nervous system and its functional activities—that is, the making and repairing of the body—are so bound to the conscious life that they respond to fear and faith in a far greater degree than we have thought, and that the release of fear and the stimulating effect of faith to improve the working of the manufacturing plant of the body that cures are the result, we then have a principle which will aid in the solution of the whole problem of faith cures. From a physiological standpoint one must say that he who is cured by faith has simply complied with one of the fixed laws of the body. This law is universal, regardless of the soundness of the faith.

"The unconscious processes respond to faith as they do to fear, blindly. It makes no difference to them what one believes, only so he believes it strongly enough to produce deep feeling. The physical and mental changes wrought in our bodies through substituting faith, a faith that amounts to genuine expectancy, leaving no shadow of fear or doubt; substituting such a faith for anxious thought, often produces the most salutary effect. We find this law operating to work a cure when one makes a journey to some noted shrine. When one is cured by adopting Christian Science we find this law operating. When one is cured in answer to prayer, we find again that this law of our life has been complied with. When one is suddenly brought into the presence of some intellectual giant and social lion, a feeling of embarrassment, fear, enters the mind, the effect of which is to cripple and disturb every process of the body. One cannot talk well, cannot think well; even the voice will tremble and not sound natural. . . . Suppose one comes into the presence of a sympathizing friend who excites all the ennobling emotions of love, trust, hope, and courage. None of the crippling effect of fear is in the body, but the whole life is stimulated by the faith and trust one has in the friend. Thoughts come quickly and freely. The body is at ease and its functions go on steadily and well."

Thus he shows how the unconscious processes of the body only do their best when they feel the throb of a great faith, a great hope, love, and courage. But he gives this warning,—

"When one goes to God in prayer for cure of a disease with such faith and love, the unconscious processes respond at once and do their full duty; but we should discriminate and know how much, and what, God does through these unconscious processes. All the accidents and ills of the body should not be left to the care of unconscious life. Physiology teaches us that it was never so intended by our Creator. The conscious life should do its part when the body is assailed by disease or accident. Suppose a car-wheel passes over the leg and crushes the bones, severs an artery, and fills the wound with gravel and dirt; here conscious life is called upon by the agonizing pain, by the sight of the spurting artery, to act, and act promptly. The artery should be ligated, instead of waiting for unconscious life to plug it with a clot of blood. The dirt should be removed, instead of waiting for the slow process of suppuration and ejection by unconscious life. The bones should be placed and supported by mechanical means in a normal position, instead of allowing the unconscious processes to unite them in the position in which the accident left them. To trust such a case to the efficacy of prayer would be to sacrifice a human life."

After giving other parallel cases he draws the following conclusions,—

"First, That cures are made under all systems of faith-healing, cures of many functional and some organic diseases, which often have resisted for a long time all regular methods of treatment. Second, That in no single instance is a cure made which may not be made by an improved condition of the unconscious processes of the body, resulting from the elimination of anxious thought and the substitution of a deep faith and trust. Third, That the power which works the cure comes in all cases from these improved physical operations of the body."

But why, if we believe in God and believe that in him we "live, and move, and have our being," should we accept this third and last conclusion? A great Scotchman once wrote thus,—

"No one can deny the power of the wearied body to paralyze the soul; but I have a correlate theory which I love and which I expect to find true that, while the body wears the mind, it is the mind that restores vigor to the body. I believe that if there be a living, conscious love at the heart of the Universe, the mind in quiescence comes into a less disturbed contact with its Origin, the heart of the creation, whence gifted with calmness and strength it grows able to impart restoration to the weary frame."

To quote from a more recent writer,—

"At such favorable seasons the spiritual bearing becomes delicately attuned so that the still, small voice is audible. The ego becomes conscious that it is face to face with the Divine Presence. There is soul-contact with the parent soul, and there follows an influx of life, love, virtue, health, and happiness from the inexhaustible fountains."

C. E. H.

SYMPATHY FOR OUR SUPERIORS.—Sympathy for those who are stronger, wealthier, healthier, more influential, and higher in authority than ourselves, is not so easily rendered. It does not often occur to us to extend the sympathetic hand or word to those whom we look upon as in any way our superiors, and yet none need our sympathy more than such as these. So, too, of the physician and his patient. One of Tennyson's biographers quotes the Queen as saying of the Laureate, "When I took leave of him I thanked him for his kindness, and said I needed it, for I had gone through much, and he said, 'You are so alone on that terrible height; it is terrible.'" The sovereign appreciated kindness, consideration, and sympathy from her subjects, and the poet had a full realization of what it meant to be so high up as to be practically alone in the world. We easily give our pity, our sympathy, and even our helping hand, to those who seem to us in sore stress, but we are not so thoughtful about what consolation and strength we might give to those who need it because their very elevation isolates them, and cuts them off from those human relations to which we all look for sympathetic aid.—Sunday School Times.

36

RELIGION is not something to be laid aside with one's best clothes, and resumed when the clothes are again worn. It must be lived out every day, enter into every transaction of business, into every piece of work, no matter how humble; and it must go with all our pleasures, and they will be the brighter for it.—Selected.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 38.—NINTH MONTH 17.

SOLOMON.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Give therefore Thy servant an understanding heart : that I may discern between good and evil.

—I. Kings, iii., 9.

Scripture Reading, I. Kings, iii., 5-15.

THE story of the reign of Solomon is told in the first eleven chapters of I. Kings, and in the first nine of II. Chronicles. The author of the books of Kings doubtless had at his disposal the annals kept by the court chroniclers—officers mentioned first as appointed under David (II. Samuel, viii., 17), and thereafter constant members of the king's court. The first two chapters of II. Kings "are closely related to the extracts from David's family history preserved in II. Samuel, ix., 20." In the subsequent chapters, "the wisdom, might, and splendor of Solomon are presented ; all leading up to the great event of the age—at least in the eyes of subsequent generations—the building of the temple." (Kent.) The book of Chronicles adds very little to the earlier account, on which, no doubt, it is largely based. Even more, perhaps, than the author of I. Kings, the author of Chronicles magnifies the importance of the temple building and all that is connected therewith.

One other book of the Bible belongs to, or at least refers to, the reign of Solomon—The Song of Songs. This is especially valuable because "it presents the impression which Solomon's character and policy made upon his own and subsequent generations." (Kent.)

It would seem from the account in I. Kings that David's eldest living son, Adonijah, looking upon himself as the heir, had taken on royal state in David's old age, and apparently with David's tacit consent. The mother of Solomon, from the first an unscrupulous and designing woman, arranged with the prophet Nathan to work upon the suspicions and jealousy of the weak-minded old king, in order to induce him to set aside the claims of Adonijah, and to declare Solomon his heir and successor. Seizing an auspicious moment, when Adonijah and his adherents were holding a feast intended to strengthen the claims of the young prince on the loyalty of his followers, the conspirators succeeded in having Solomon proclaimed king and publicly anointed. The followers of Adonijah, as well as he himself, were seized with consternation—which as the sequel showed was well founded. Although granting a temporary pardon to those concerned in his brother's attempt on the throne, Solomon used one pretext and another to slay all of any influence. Even Joab's white hairs and the long record of his services to David could not save him ; he was slain by the king's order at the very altar to which he had fled for safety. Adonijah himself, the king's brother, was slain on a comparatively slight pretext.

The reign thus begun in intrigue and assassination developed into an Oriental despotism wholly different from the kingdom under Saul and David. These two were elected kings, and although in the latter part of David's reign there were oppression and consequent discontent, yet until the time of Solomon it was the people's kingdom, and the kings commanded the loyalty and respect of their subjects. It was widely different under Solomon. The foreigners of the land, who had lived peacefully among the Hebrews in the time of David, were set to forced labor ; nor were the Israelites themselves exempt from such service. The land was divided into districts, and tax collectors were appointed over them ; probably these also had command of the levies of men who were put to labor in the construction of Solomon's great buildings. At least once the people arose in revolt against oppression. The leader was Jeroboam, the first king of Israel after the division. The revolt was a failure and Jeroboam fled to Egypt.

Solomon had none of the warlike energy which had characterized his father. After his accession the Edomites gained their independence on the south and the Syrians on the north ; their leader, Rezon, founding a kingdom with its capital at Damascus, which was destined to play an important part in the later history of the Hebrews. If he could not hold his foreign possessions, Solomon was at least able greatly to strengthen his own borders. He built fortified cities and made Jerusalem almost impregnable. Moreover, he maintained friendly relations with neighboring nations and greatly extended the commerce and industries of his people. By marriage also he strengthened his position, especially by his marriage with a daughter of the Egyptian Pharaoh. Similar alliances united him with the Hittites, Moabites, and other neighboring peoples.

The influence of these foreign wives on the religious conditions of the Hebrews was a serious one. Their religious observances were protected, and often extended among the people ideals both of God and of worship which tended toward the idolatry they had hardly escaped from.

The number of his wives and concubines is given in I. Kings (xi., 3) as a thousand ; but in The Song of Solomon (vi., 8) the number of queens is given as three-score, and of wives of second rank as four-score. The former number is probably an exaggeration.

As to Solomon's great reputation for wisdom, it should probably rather be for cunning or keenness than for what we now call wisdom. The incident of his judgment between the two mothers claiming the same child (I. Kings, iii., 28), and others connected with the visit of the queen of Sheba, show subtlety rather than depth of insight. It may be said that many of the Proverbs show the same characteristics ; they are worldly wise rather than truly wise. It is probable that many of the Proverbs may be traced to the time of Solomon, possibly some to Solomon himself. Some are referred in the text to other authors, and probably many attributed to him have collected about his name as certain stories gather round the name of Lincoln.

On the whole the Hebrew kingdom grew stronger and more secure under Solomon ; while in commerce and industry it made great strides. In every way the around it. But such approach was a doubtful gain. If laws were more strictly administered they were laws made rather for the benefit of the king than of the people. If the nation became more wealthy it was at the expense of the great mass of individuals. The great event of Solomon's reign was the building of the temple. When David brought the Ark to Jerusalem he began the work of centralizing the worship of the Hebrews, thus making a strong bond of unity among the tribes. This work Solomon completed in building the temple. The workmen of Tyre, the most skilled workers in stone, metal, and wood, were made use of in this great undertaking; and on its completion a ceremonial worship was set in motion such as inevitably presages a degeneration of real devotion and the substitution for it of formalism. Luxury and extravagance invaded church and court. In the glorious pageantry of the world of sense, the world of spirit was lost sight of. We need not wonder that at least one prophet took part in Jeroboam's rebellion (I. Kings, ii., 26-40), nor that the prophets seem to have been against the son of Solomon when the final struggle came between him and the former rebel. Yet these evils of ceremonial worship fell mainly upon the court rather than upon the people. The latter saw the rites but took no part in them. The idea of God's unity and greatness was enforced by the centering of all worship at one point. While the court degenerated, therefore, the faith of the people in Jehovah was probably made more definite and strong.

WILLIAM PENN AND ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

The American Friend.

NEW books are produced with such facility and distributed so abundantly, that we seem to be in danger of neglecting the earlier and sometimes more edifying literature of the Society of Friends, which appeared in the seventeenth century. Emerson and other distinguished literary men have, indeed, given the general advice to read none but old books. We cannot assent to that course, but we do recommend cleaving closely and tenderly to old and tried friends, while we put new ones upon probation.

The writer has been much impressed recently by two letters of Robert Louis Stevenson, written in 1881 to Horatio F. Brown, from Davos-Platz, in Switzerland. This gifted poet, essayist, and novelist, one of the great masters of language of our time, was possessed like Shakespeare, Scott, and others, with the power of penetrating to the very fountains of human thought and action, laying all things open and distinct before the eyes of less inspired mortals.

A Scotchman seeking health, an exile, wandering in the streets of San Francisco in 1879, he discovered in a second-hand bookstore a classic. It was "Some Fruits of Solitude in Reflections and Maxims relating to Conduct of Human Life," by William Penn.

We to whom Penn and his maxims are household names and words, never realized such emotions from his works as came to Stevenson like a flood, as appears in these letters. But read the maxims again under the inspiration of this poetic soul, and they have a richness of meaning and expression never seen before, by some of us. The terse, beautiful style of them is admirable. How his wonderful diction stands out when compared in strength and attractiveness with the wearisome manner of expression of most of his contemporaries:

DAVOS.

"My dear Brown: Here it is, with the mark of a San Francisco bouquiniste (keeper of a book-stall). And if ever in all my 'human conduct' I have done a better thing to any fellow-creature than handing on to you this sweet, dignified, and wholesome book, I know I shall hear of it on the last day. To write a book like this were impossible; at least one can hand it on—with a wrench—one to another. My wife cries out and my own heart misgives me, but still here it is. I could scarcely better prove myself yours affectionately,

R. L. STEVENSON.

DAVOS.

"My dear Brown: I hope, if you get thus far, you will know what an invaluable present I have made you. Even the copy was dear to me, printed in the colony that Penn established, and carried in my pocket all about the San Francisco streets, read in street cars and ferry-boats, when I was sick unto death, and found in all times and places a peaceful and sweet companion. But I hope, when you shall have reached this note, my gift will not have been in vain; for while just now we are so busy and intelligent, there is not the man living—no, nor recently dead—that could have put with so lovely a spirit so much honest, kind wisdom into words.

R. L. S.

Scribner's Magazine, vol. xxv., p. 737.

AUGUSTINE JONES.

A CHILD'S RIGHT OF SECRECY.—Young children should not be pressed into a self-analysis, nor questioned too closely about their aspirations and motives. Our interpretation of them is defeated by too insistent an appeal to their conscious inner nature. This is where the "child study" teacher must beware of doing harm. A life sketch of Margaret Deland, in a recent issue of Harper's Weekly, reports her as saying: "There is, I think, a danger in the free expression of one's aspirations. The best things of our nature fashion themselves in silence, and, if encouraged to talk about them, the aspirations and ambitions of a child are apt not to take a very deep root in the heart." The same applies to calling on young children to a public display of their intentions and aspirations Christward. Age, temperament, and personal circumstances of various kinds, call for tact and sympathetic consideration in the matter of pressing one to "declare himself."

CONSCIOUSLY and unconsciously each intelligent being makes a choice at every turn, either fulfilling or outraging the higher law of his nature, either entering into or refusing fellowship with God.—John Watson, D. D.

By flight alone we cannot overcome, but by patience and true humility we become stronger than our enemies.—Thomas à Kempis.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 9, 1899.

Please address business letters to "Friends' Intelligencer, 921 Arch Street, Philadelphia." Communications and contributions to "Editors Friends' Intelligencer," same address.

A DANGER SIGNAL.

A BABE lay on a rug on the floor with a tempting toy within long reach of its yearning fingers. Its entire body was exerted to gain the point of contact, when back it would slide. Again and again the trial was made without success. A bystander, urged by sympathy, longed to extend aid, but wisdom and right reason restrained the helping hand. Here was nature striving for development. If it would learn its lesson, its own powers must be unfolded. So sympathy was overcome by wisdom; and the child, unaided, attained to the object of desire with a two-fold result; he was a conqueror through natural methods of advancement. As he matures these struggles will be constant, and happy will he be if a wise guardianship always bears rule.

There is apparent around us a danger, growing greater, perhaps, in times of prosperity, of making too easy the pathway for the young, of destroying nature's good way of richly rewarding those who earnestly strive, not always in the greatness of their possessions, but in the greatness of character. Are not some of our young people in danger of losing the feeling of honorable independence, losing their true manhood and womanhood, by too much help being extended, and not enough self-exertion and self-denial required?

Was it not Emerson that regretted he could not give to his sons some of his own disadvantages? Wise philosopher was he, looking with distrust upon the time when he could furnish each one with an overcoat, when in his own youth one such coat had to do duty for several.

While it would not be desirable to return to such close calculation to make the family income suffice, we cannot fail to see how simplicity and high aims have resulted in famous men, the product of "plain living and high thinking."

While we can be grateful for our more advantageous conditions, the watch must be kept lest we extend help to the impoverishing of the powers, both physical and mental, of those who should become the leaders, or sustainers, of succeeding generations. Especially would we urge that the spirit of independence, of self-support, be nurtured; that the thought be not too much centered upon the possessions of the rich few to accomplish that which the many, with modest means, should unite in achieving. To feel that we have shared in the sustaining of the home, the school, the religious society, the social life of our people, as well as the government under which we share so many blessings, should be held as a precious privilege and give us just pride in life. We might well adopt the impassioned utterance of a seventeenth century writer when he says:

"Thy spirit, Independence, let me share,
Lord of the lion heart, and eagle eye;
Thy steps I follow with my bosom bare,
Nor heed the storm that howls along the sky."

OUR friend Rebecca P. Hunt sends us the following correction: In the letter in the issue of Ninth month 2, "A visit among the Shinnecock Hills," James L. Parrish is mentioned as having endowed the Art Museum and Library. It was Samuel L. Parrish, not James C. Parrish, who was the donor of both, to Southampton.

CORRECTION.—Near the close of the editorial for Ninth month 2, fifth line from the bottom, read, or our own opinions, instead of in our own opinions.

BIRTHS.

SAURMAN.—At Plainfield, N. J., Eighth month 19, 1899, to Atlee and Mary L. W. Saurman, a daughter, who is named Anna Elizabeth.

MARRIAGES.

BENNETT—HOLMES.—At the home of the bride's parents, Thomas D. and Sarah L. Holmes, at Moorestown, N. J., under the care of Chester Monthly Meeting of Friends, Eighth month 26, 1899, R. Grant Bennett, of Freeport, Ohio, and Eliza G. Holmes.

DEATHS.

ATKINSON.—At Wrightstown, Pa., Eighth month 22, 1899, after months of suffering, Edward Atkinson, son of the late Jonathan and Esther Atkinson, aged 76. A useful member of Wrightstown Monthly Meeting, and for 24 years president of the First National Bank at Newtown, Pa., and otherwise a useful citizen.

BROWN.—Near Swedesboro, N. J., Eighth month 14, 1899, Jesse S. Brown, in his 88th year.

CORSE.—At the residence of her sister, Frances P. Pitfield, Germantown, Philadelphia, suddenly, Eighth month 30, 1899, Laura Pleasants, widow of William L. Corse, in her 67th year.

FOGG.—Near Hancock's Bridge, N. J., Eighth month 29, 1899, Henry H. Fogg, aged 46.

MICHENER.—At his residence, Logan, near Germantown, Philadelphia, Amos Jones Michener, in his 64th year, a nephew of our late friend Amos Jones, of Newtown.

He was for several years connected with the management at Watkin's Glen, N. Y.

MOORE.—Near Holder, Ill., Eliza Kendall Moore, widow of Samuel B. Moore, and daughter of Jesse and Maria Kendall, in her 75th year. She was born in Wilmington, Del.; with her mother she united with the Society of Friends when a little child, and lived a consistent life, being a member of Benjaminville Monthly Meeting at the time of her death.

STOKES.—At the residence of her sister, Eleanor T. Evans, Germantown, Philadelphia, Hetty N. Stokes, in her 62d year.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

XIII—EDINBURGH AND SIR WALTER SCOTT.

BY HOWARD M. JENKINS.

THERE are two great roads from England into Scotland—by Carlisle on the west coast, and by Berwick on the east. I went north by the former, Eighth month 11, and came away by the latter, Eighth month 15.

My tour in Scotland was thus very brief. I gave but four days to it, and really did no more than see Edinburgh and visit the "Scott country." This will seem very little to the ardent admirers of the Scottish highlands, the beautiful lakes and grand mountains north of the Clyde, but "one cannot do everything." I desired especially to go at least to Aberdeen, to see Ury, and the other places associated with Robert Barclay and his father, but felt obliged to omit this from my plans.

Edinburgh deserves all the fame it enjoys as a beautiful and picturesque city. It unites its fine situation with quaint and old buildings, and a long line of interesting historic associations. Few other cities present such a combination. Quebec has the site, but not so long a history. All the "local color" in the Scottish capital seems harmonious and stimulating. The deep ravine that separates the two halves of the city; the steep upon which the Castle arises; Calton hill, and Arthur's Seat, at the other extremity; the old Palace of Holyrood; the fine Princes street; the curious features of the Canongate, and the other "gates,"—all this, and much more not to be here detailed, make up a very interesting and picturesque city.

I went on First-day morning to the Friends' meeting. It is held in a good and comfortable building in the Pleasance—where there were, as the name suggests, fine open fields once, but where now the city's streets are compact, and the immediate surroundings not very attractive. A kind Friend, Jane Miller, the widow of a famous engraver of Edinburgh, sits at the head of its meeting, with Robert Lawson, whose wife is the daughter of Archibald Crosby, formerly of Edinburgh, but now, and for several years past, resident in Iowa. Jane Miller, whose visitors' book shows the names of very many American Friends, kindly asked me to dinner, and I enjoyed very much the pleasure of the visit at her home. She walked thither from the meeting, a mile and a half, without apparent fatigue, though her age is close upon eighty years.

Edinburgh was very full of tourists and visitors, just as London was when I reached there nearly three months ago. This month, the Eighth, is the season for travel in Scotland,—indeed for travel everywhere in the British Islands. And among the tourists Americans formed a large section. At the hotels, on the coaches, in the trains, one met their easily-known carriage, manner, and speech. I met, with pleasure, Elizabeth A. Jolliffe, of Philadelphia, and the friends who are traveling with her.

* * *

The day devoted to Scott deserves a full and detailed letter. Not that it was different from the experiences of many others who have made the visit, but because the visit is always associated with so much of human interest and sympathy.

If you leave Edinburgh at 10.15 a. m., by the "Waverley Route," you can see the three places, Melrose Abbey, Abbotsford, and Dryburgh Abbey, fairly well, and be back again by about seven. It makes a full and busy day, but that is the kind of day the active tourist expects. You go, by a very good train, an express for the South (a "corridor" train, approaching somewhat our American arrangement of cars), to Melrose, alight there, take coach directly for Abbotsford, return, lunch at Melrose, drive to Dryburgh, return, and have time to see the Melrose ruins comfortably before the train leaves for Edinburgh.

My day was warm, but on the whole very pleasant. The sun shone hot, but in the shade the air was cool. (This is the sort of heat in this island; the sun blazes down, but the great body of air does not get so heated as with us, in our "hot spells;" and within doors, or under the trees, or anywhere out of the direct beams of the sun, there is a distinct coolness. But this is a subject by itself; nothing is so fruitful a theme of conversation in England as the heat, and the sufferings which dwellers west of the Atlantic must certainly endure.) The visit to Abbotsford was a thing not to be missed, but yet a brief and rather perfunctory affair. You are let in by a narrow entrance in a corner of the garden; there is no view of the house in its general outline—that is got from the other side of the river, the Tweed; you are taken into a small basement room, then up a steep winding stair, and then promptly through the suite of show rooms, the study, the library, the armory, and the entrance hall; then you are shown the door you came in by. Still, this counts for something. The rooms are as they were when "Sir Walter"—this is the name uniformly used—was here. It is just as if he might simply have gone away for a day, and left them for your visit. They are full of the furniture, the books, the pictures, the quaint old objects and historical relics that he had collected. It is hardly to be expected that the occupants of the house would care to give up more to the public, even at a shilling apiece admittance, and considering the great numbers of visitors (fifty had gathered in the little basement room when we were admitted to the stairway climb, and the party had to be divided), the showing of the place is very fairly done. The veteran cicerone did not really hurry us, and his description was not merely the tedious and formal detail which such guides are apt to give.

The ruins at Melrose are interesting, but not very extensive. (They too are carefully shut up, and the entrance charge is a shilling.) They can be seen, comfortably; there is no climbing of steps and slippery stairs, no descents into dark crypts, or explorations of dubious holes. So that is a satisfaction. (One gets critical, after seeing a good many such old places; if it isn't a pretty good abbey, or a rather high-class cathedral, or a distinctly striking Roman arch, or Saxon wall, or Celtic mound, you are apt to feel a certain more or less lofty indifference. The keenness of the new visitor, when he first sets foot on the Queen's islands, to see everything, examine everything, get to the very root of all, measurably abates in three months of such activities.)

Dryburgh is of more importance than I had supposed. Except for the atmosphere of Scott's own rooms, at Abbotsford, it would be the most important of the three places. The ruins are extensive. There is a good deal left of the church, and the conventual ruins occupy a large area. There are fine old trees about, and the grounds are pleasant. Furness and Fountains are of course very much larger, and more impressive, but yet Dryburgh has its definite distinction, and no doubt something of this—very much indeed—comes from its having the grave of Sir Walter. It is just as Grasmere has so much of Wordsworth, and is so interesting by reason of that. (And let us not forget that in the world of letters two of the greatest names, after all, are those of Scott and Wordsworth. Sometimes this is denied, but it is to no purpose.)

As we drove back from Dryburgh, by a different and prettier route than we went by, we paused on Bemerside Hill, where so often Scott is said to have come to view the prospect. The valley of the Tweed lies before you. In the front at your feet, the river is seen, and beyond, to the west, it gleams out again, in a graceful winding. The banks slope away, and on this day the wheat was ripe in scores of fields, waiting the reaper. Hedgerows, and belts of trees, divided the farms, and their dark green contrasted finely with the gold of the waving grain.

Still, it did look as though it needed moisture. The season has been one of unusual drought in England. There has been no rain of any consequence for weeks. I have seen it rain only two or three times. In London, all this month, the precipitation has been less than an inch. The extreme greenness that was so noticeable when I landed has gone. The fields look as brown, and as yellow, as ours in Pennsylvania in a dry summer,—in a dry summer, mind, not an average one. I have good authority for saying that one of the commonest experiences of a traveler is to find "unusual" weather,—heat that is uncommon, cold that is amazing, winds of unexampled character,—but still I think it is quite true that the summer in England has been one of most unusual drought. Every one says so; it is so declared everywhere; and no doubt it is a fact. As I walked over the farm pastures of a friend (John Edward Ellis, M.P., to whom I was indebted for kindnesses in London), on the Yorkshire hill slopes, near Scarborough, a week ago, it was evident that little herbage was left for his fine herd of sleek Guernsey cattle; and such is the case everywhere.

* * *

From Edinburgh I came south, as already said, by Berwick-on-Tweed, that curious city which used to be uncertain whether it was Scotch or English, to Beal, in Northumberland, and visited there, at Bar-moor Castle, Thomas Hodgkin, one of the foremost of the English Friends, his name often worthily printed in the INTELLIGENCER. Then, "stopping-off" at Newcastle-on-Tyne and Durham, I came to Scarborough, and spent a week there and at York, cordially and kindly entertained by Friends of whom I cannot now undertake duly to speak. I left York on the 24th, stayed over night with Friends at Lincoln, spent most of the 25th at Cambridge, and came on to Lincoln where I now write.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

A VISIT TO INDIANA FRIENDS.

WE left Chicago on the morning of the 18th of Eighth month, and arrived at Pendleton, Indiana, about 5 p. m., where we were met by a kind friend, John S. Thomas, and taken to his hospitable home for an abode during the time of the yearly meeting.

Seventh-day afternoon we attended the Meeting of Ministers and Elders, where we met with Margaretta Walton and her companion, Anna May Martin, and Isaac Wilson and wife. The meeting was an excellent one.

First-day, clear but warm, a large number gathered, filling the meeting-house and the tent, which had been erected near by. These meetings were thought to be favored seasons, as were those held in the afternoon. In the evening we attended a meeting at Pendleton, by appointment, and although the evening was very warm the meeting was crowded, and some went away because unable to obtain seats.

Second-, Third-, Fourth-, and Fifth-days were occupied with the routine business of the Yearly Meeting, a full report of which will undoubtedly reach you through other channels. We met the young people by invitation at Charles and Margaret Swain's on Third-day evening, and had a very enjoyable social time with them. After meeting on Fourth-day afternoon we went to Horace and Ella Lewis's to tea, and stayed part of the evening, not feeling at liberty to attend a young people's meeting, held that evening, as I did not desire to interfere with their opportunity. At the close of the meeting we went home with Edward and Mary Ann Roberts for the night and enjoyed our visit with them.

Sixth-day morning found us en route for Duck Creek neighborhood, where a meeting had been appointed for the evening. We were taken in her comfortable carriage by Martha Kennard to the house of her son-in-law and daughter, Warren and Della K. Hinshaw. The meeting in the evening was held in the meeting-house of the other branch of Friends and was largely attended by them. The message given, from the new commandment, to love one another, seemed to touch a responsive chord in the hearts of those present, their minister coming to me at the close of the meeting, and with a warm grasp of the hand bidding me God-speed in my work.

After meeting we went home, about three miles, with Jenkins and Mary Ann Kennard, where we remained until our train time on Seventh-day.

Seventh-day, 26, we left our friends at Kuyntstown, at 11.30, for Nebraska, seventy-five miles distant northerly, where we were met by Mordecai Morris and taken to his home, eight miles from Wabash and near Lincolnville, where the Rush Creek Meeting was held. We found a warm welcome in this family, consisting of his wife, Mary Ann, and two daughters, Elizabeth and Anna, with their recently-married son, Elwood, who was home spending his vacation.

nation approached the condition of the older nations

First-day morning opened bright and clear, but with a nice breeze from the north-east making the otherwise warm day very comfortable. We went with them to their interesting First-day School, held at 10 a. m. At the meeting hour the house was well filled, and as the message relating to religion, its object and effect, was delivered, the meeting was baptized into a deep feeling, and a sweet solemnity overspread it. After meeting we went to Job Holloway's to dinner. As evening approached our friend Mordecai Morris came for us to go to a meeting we had appointed at a small village called Dover, about three miles from Lincolnville, and where there had never been a Friends' meeting held before. Much satisfaction was expressed in the message given, and we were told Friends could have the house any time in the future.

Second-day morning Mordecai Morris took us in his carriage, first to call on Jonah Hancock and wife, the wife having been an invalid for two or three years, unable to walk or talk, but appearing very cheerful. We then started for Huntingdon, 15 miles distant, arriving there about 11 a. m., stopping at the home of Vincent and Emma Moon, she being a daughter of Mordecai, where we remained until near tea time in the afternoon, when we were invited to the home of Joseph Moon and his two daughters, Mary and Elizabeth.

In the evening we had a well attended and satisfactory meeting, the message being to explain our principles and their claim for attention among the various views extant.

Remained over night with Vincent Moon. Third-day morning Joseph Moon and James Plummer came for us and took us for a series of calls, first upon Sarah Moon, a widowed daughter of Mordecai Morris, and then at the home of Charles and Mary Ann Moon, and stopping at Michael W. Moon's for dinner. About 2 p. m. Morris Spencer came for us and took us to his home for a call. His wife Blanche is not a member, but she with their daughter Edith gave us a hearty welcome, which was much enjoyed by us. We then went to the home of Nehemiah Brown, where we took tea and had an excellent visit with him, his wife Sarah, and their two daughters Mary and Emma. We had appointed another meeting for the evening, and were much gratified on getting to the place of meeting to find we were to be joined by our dear sister Margaretta Walton. This meeting was more largely attended than the one the evening before, and was a deeply solemn and baptizing season, calling forth many expressions of satisfaction.

After meeting we came home with Benjamin and Lauretta Nichols, who, with their daughter, kindly entertained us for the night, and from whose home this is written at Huntingdon, Indiana.

Eighth month 30. JOHN J. CORNELL.

A. M. Martin, companion to Margaretta Walton, writes from Huntington, Indiana, Eighth month 30: After the very interesting yearly meeting at Pendleton we attended Camden Meeting, last First-day. Visited the sick and aged on Second-day, and came on here yesterday and found J. J. Cornell; had an appointed meeting for the evening, which gave us an opportunity to meet with Friends here. We expect to go on to Holder to attend Blue River Quarterly Meeting at Benjaminville, on Seventh-day, then proceed to Mt. Palatine to attend the Illinois Yearly Meeting. Do not know what after that. We keep well and are kindly cared for.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

IN QUIET WATERS.

I.—BY DYKE AND LOCK.

BETWEEN Delaware City and Chesapeake City, little towns with large names, winds a waterway known as the Delaware and Chesapeake canal. If one would escape for awhile from the dust and clamor of city streets, let him embark some bright morning on one of the boats plying between Philadelphia and Baltimore. It is a day's journey full of quiet charm, wherein one passes through scenes the most picturesque, by meadows and peaceful farms, through sleepy villages, and between green, reedy shores, until he wishes for the artist's gift that he might put on canvas a tithe of all this tranquil beauty and sweet serenity of landscape.

One drowsy August day of late I sat on the deck of one of the long, narrow steamers of the Ericsson Line, and enjoyed hours of quiet contemplation of the rich scenery on either side of the series of curving ponds and connecting canals. It was a perfect day. Mists hung over the distant woodlands and made them seem pale and remote; cattle grazed in the rich, deep meadows; and in the atmosphere brooded that utter peace and restfulness which comes over the countryside in the weeks following harvest, when scythe and fork are hung up once more and great hay-stacks and teeming barns tell of the summer's yield.

On and away we glided, over the silent, rush-margined waters, passing from one lovely view to another. Great white flowers starred the green acres of swamp-grass, feathery willows drooped in soft clusters over the stream-side, wide patches of weed shone in many a shade of brown and yellow and sumptuous purple, while the tow-path, with its dull coloring of red, wound ever away behind the verdant bank. There was many a little pond in the adjacent fields, where water-lilies floated beyond the swaying cat-tails, and over these unruffled water-mirrors small, white-breasted birds flitted and veered and sounded their blithe notes.

We moved slowly by little garden-slopes, odorous with hop-vines and bright with old-time flowers, with apple-orchards and fields of tall corn beyond. White sails now and then appeared in the wider ponds, and often we came upon lazy fisher-folk, half asleep in the sunshine, their poles dipping into the noiseless stream. In the deep locks we halted while the great gates slowly swung open and the green water gurgled and foamed up from under its imprisoning barriers, and village loungers loitered about the banks to watch the only spectacle that breaks their day's monotony.

The passengers felt the spell of the mild, placid atmosphere, and little children crooned or looked dreamily at the white clouds and the misty vapors of that idyllic afternoon. Up from the cabin came plaintive music; and elderly negroes, on their way to visit their old homes in Virginia or on the "East'n Sho'," chatted in their quaint and not immelodious dialect.

Like a piece of Holland seemed this calm, untroubled land, with its pastoral industries, its sleepy atmosphere, and its peaceful felicities. Not more tranquil or dreamlike could be "the lazy Scheldt or wandering Po" that Goldsmith sang, nor those placid Flemish streams whereon a later lover of old-world waters, Robert Louis Stevenson, drifted and mused.

"It could not be more quiet: peace is here
Or nowhere; days unruffled by the gale
Of public news or private; years that pass
Forgetfully."

There are, in that quiet land and along those still waters, the possibilities of a hundred pictures. The photograph camera is used probably every day from the decks of these vessels; not so often, I fancy, comes an artist, one who can interpret landscape, catching its spiritual significance, and giving the scene back to us clothed with a glamor and a charm which no camera can render. This little, unsung bit of Delaware and Maryland possesses scenery worthy the brush of a Cuyp or a Corot. One who looks upon it in receptive mood, enjoying to the full its pastoral and watery loveliness, retains the impression of many perfect landscapes. Weary of the noise and fever and fruitless hurry of our vaunted modern life, one may here lose himself awhile, and drink of God's beauty with a free and grateful heart.

J. R. H.

GAIN OF MUCH WORK.—To feel the pressure of work is a cause for thankfulness. The time when we are busiest is the time when we are most likely to do our best. Often there comes the temptation to feel that, if we had more leisure, we could do more and better work, but experience usually shows that to be a mistake. The world recognizes this. It does not call on the men with most leisure when it wants an exceptional undertaking carried through. No employer in any walk of life looks among the ranks of those with plenty of time to spare when he would fill a position. He wants one who is already numbered among the busiest, who is demonstrating that he has a right to live by shouldering his full share of this world's activities, and whose powers are their best through their exercise. To keep busy is to keep in training, and that is the secret of attainment as truly in the race of life as on the athletic field.—Sunday School Times.

TEMPTATION is not a disgrace; it is a test of strength. It is not the number of temptations escaped, but the number met and conquered that marks our heavenward progress. The work of the world is done by men and women who know life at its fiercest.—A. R. Brown.

A GLIMPSE OF JAPAN.

[We are permitted to print the following from a private letter of a Friend who has been making an extended trip through Japan. It gives some interesting details of life in that Eastern land.—Eds.]

WE are now on the steamer homeward bound, where we expected to be nearly a month ago. The steamer we expected to sail on was quarantined at Nagasaki, so our trip was prolonged some three weeks, rather to our regret. It has been a most enjoyable journey all the way through, with strange experiences, and everything different to what we have been accustomed; but all seemed to suit the country and people.

Instead of by horses we were drawn through the country by men, in large baby carriages, and slept on the floor on comforts instead of beds, with no other furniture visible. We also sat on the floor to eat our meals off small trays, took off our shoes on entering the house, so as not to soil the soft matting, and were served by a gentle, courteous people, who were so kindly that they were many removes from uncivilized, and might serve as a pattern to many who claim to belong to a greater civilization. We were in a place where few foreigners go, and were looked at with great curiosity; not, however, to a disagreeable extent. When we stopped at a tea house for a meal, a crowd would gather to get a peep at us, not noisy or boisterous, but merely to see us. One day one of our party counted the number and it soon swelled to over one hundred, many of them duplicated by a child tied on the back.

Each child, as soon as able, has a baby strapped to its back, and hops and jumps around with no concern for the poor little head that bobs around in an apparently precarious manner. Babies are numberless, and, really, seldom cry. I did not see a deformed child while there, and am not sure but that it is a good way to care for them, for their little stomachs are kept warm and there is no danger from colic.

It would be an impossibility for me to give any description of our rides over mountains and by rushing rivers. The last trip on a river was down the Tennigana, which was a series of rapids, and dangerous enough to make it very interesting. It was a ride of ninety miles in an open boat, between mountains which seemed at times to close up, so that we could see no way to get out.

I know thee would have enjoyed seeing the beautiful flowers which grow wild, but are exotics with us. Great bushes of azalias like trees, covered with blossoms from white to the deepest red; rhododendrons, also wild Japanese quince, honeysuckle, and the red maples were a delight. Many others, like pinks, Canterbury bell, etc., and it seemed as if almost all of our garden flowers were duplicated.

While in Yokohama we went out to a nursery to see the iris; it really was wonderful. It was when their bloom was at its height, and they wore such beautiful colors, and are so large. We were at Myanoshite, a place in the mountains where they have the most delightful mineral baths. The air was so fine that walking was a delight. One day I walked eight miles, and felt all right the next day.

The Japanese are such a healthy, happy people, with few wants and small means, and willing to lend a helping hand to those who have less. I feel sorry for them to have changes come to them, which will come if foreigners push in among them. I fear that missionary work will not improve their condition. Their ways are not our ways, and they seem quite unconscious of many things which we look upon as not proper, but being among them, one has great charity.

M. E. B.

Literature.

MADISON CAWEIN, of Kentucky, is a poet of the school of Keats; from the inspiration of that young immortal he has given to his verse a warmth and wealth of color, a summer dreaminess, and a beautiful delicacy of observation. To the five volumes of former years he now adds a sixth, "Myth and Romance." As the title indicates, he finds in the soft atmosphere of his native landscapes phantasmal shadows and images; the blossoms nodding in the twilight, the mist-dimmed sheaves, seem to his imaginative eye like the half-seen forms of dryads and fauns glimmering in the distance. Thus he brings to our American countryside and harvest fields the fair shapes of old Hellas, telling us that behind the outward beauty of field and hill and woodland there dwell mystery and spiritual loveliness.

"When I go forth to greet the glad-faced Spring,
Just at the time of opening apple-buds,
When brooks are laughing, winds are whispering,
On babbling hillsides or in warbling woods,
There is an unseen presence that eludes:—
Perhaps a Dryad, in whose tresses cling
The loamy odors of old solitudes,
Who, from her beechen doorway, calls; and leads
My soul to follow; now with dimpling words
Of leaves; and now with syllables of birds."

Of the old-fashioned country sights he writes with felicity and affection, as in these lines on an old water-mill,—

"Ah, ancient mill, still do I picture o'er
Thy cobwebbed stairs and loft and grain-strewn floor;
Thy door,—like some brown, honest hand of toil,
And honorable with labor of the soil,—
Forever open;
While, all around, the sweet smell of the meal
Filters, warm-pouring from the grinding wheel
Into the bin; beside which, mealy white,
The miller looms, dim in the dusty light."

After such true touches as these the reader finds a lack of human interest in certain of the pieces in the book, that resemble some of Poe's rhythmic exercises. But whenever Madison Cawein takes for his theme the beautiful world about him, its woods and hills, its centuried homesteads and ivied water-mills, he writes with winning charm. The poet's highest gift, that of pathos, is his; he can move to tears with his tender appeals to old memories and beloved associations. The recollection of by-gone happy days in the country is stirred by his poem, "Old Homes,"—

"Old homes among the hills! I love their gardens,
Their old rock-fences, that our day inherits;
Their doors, 'round which the great trees stand like wardens.

I see them gray among their ancient acres,
Severe of front, their gables lichen-sprinkled,—
Like gentle-hearted, solitary Quakers,
Grave and religious, with kind faces wrinkled,— Serene among their memory-hallowed acres."

(New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

The autumn bulletin of new books issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., is rich in promise of forthcoming works of value and interest. Freshly annotated editions of several of the New England poets are announced in a new Cabinet

Edition. Professor Norton is editing "Letters of Ralph Waldo Emerson to a Friend," which must be a welcome addition to the wise and beautiful utterances of our chief American sage. An edition of Keats, including many of his remarkable letters, is another attractive announcement.

Edmund Clarence Stedman is about to complete his critiques and collections of modern English and American poetry by issuing "An American Anthology," an exhibition of our nation's lyrical output brought down to the present day. No book will be more welcome than this.

Now that the poetry of Edward Rowland Sill has been collected in three small but precious volumes, we are to have his prose in a fourth volume. It will consist of the best of his contributions to the Atlantic Monthly on the subjects of Criticism, Literature, and Education, together with some of his letters to his friends. We shall here have fresh revelations of the noble and spiritual character of this lamented author.

Lloyd Mifflin, our Pennsylvania poet, whose fine imagination has won him recognition in the highest quarters, is to give forth a new volume of "Sonnets, Rendering into English Selections from Bion, Moschus, and Bacchylides." The rich diction and stately melody of which Lloyd Mifflin is a master will clothe these imperishable Greek lyrics with a fresh and enduring beauty.

A new volume of poems is to appear from the hand of Louise Imogen Guiney, the gifted young Celtic poetess of Boston.

Tennyson's poems will be issued in a volume enriched with 127 illustrations. The illustrations have been selected from the best designs made to accompany the poems by English, American, and French artists, and have been reinforced also by portraits and representations of historic buildings. In repeating the important series by Millais, Rossetti, La Farge, Vedder, and others, recourse has been had to early impressions, and sometimes to the original blocks, to secure clearness of line and freshness of color.

John Fiske is represented by a new historical work, "The Dutch and Quaker Colonies in America," in which he gives a sketch of the rise of the Quakers and of the early life of William Penn, with a discussion of the "holy experiment" of the founding of Pennsylvania.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

I ENCLOSE a letter written by one of the little girls belonging to the Beach Street Mission. Thirty children have been greatly benefited by their visit; seven are still at the shore, and three weeks remain to finish the season, which under the circumstances has been very successful. I also wish to acknowledge the receipt of the following contributions:

Per Friends' Book Association, Cash, . . . $20.00
Per Anna P. Suplee, Ellen Larkin, . . . 1.00

Total, . . . $21.00

Funds are still needed, and donations will be thankfully received.

Ocean City, N. J.

EMMA C. HENSZEY.

OCEAN CITY, N. J., Eighth month 24, 1899.

Dear, Kind Friend: We thank thee for helping us to come down here. We have been in to bathe six times, and we go out to gather shells to take home to our little sisters; every one is so kind to us here, and I wish other little girls could come, too. Our teacher, Emma C. Henszey, says she is trying to have as many come as she can, and I will be a good girl all winter so she will bring me down next summer. We all thank thee very much.

Yours truly,

BESSIE SINGER (Eleven years old.)

ACCORDING to an apparently authentic article in a French periodical, not less than 20,000 aristocrats are at present confined in the prisons of Europe. Russia stands first with 12,000 blue-blooded law-breakers, while Italy deserves to be accorded second position, her places of detention harboring thousands of noblemen.

Educational Department.BALTIMORE FRIENDS' SCHOOL.

THE Friends of Park Avenue Meeting, Baltimore, have contemplated for several years the construction of a modern school building on the ground adjoining their meeting-house and fronting upon Park Place. That building is now in the course of construction. It is designed to furnish ample accommodations for a school which will offer the best educational advantages. The aim of the school will be to give the most careful training to those entrusted to its care, that they may be prepared to enter upon the duties of later life with the spirit of independence developed and with the habits of industry and integrity established.

It will aim to give a course of instruction which will afford an education at once practical and liberal for those not intending to do other scholastic work, and to those expecting to in charge of Kindergarten Department; Dora Curtiss, assistant in Kindergarten; Louisa Thomas, assistant in Kindergarten; Roman Steiner, manual training; Elizabeth Walton, music; Dr. O. Edward Janney, medical examiner.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL, at Plymouth Meeting, will open on the 11th inst., in the new building, erected during the summer vacation. The building will be open for inspection during the mornings of the 7th, 8th, and 9th, and interested Friends are cordially invited to visit it. Patrons may consult the principal during these periods in reference to courses of study, and new pupils may be entered and classified.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

MILLVILLE, PA.—Young Friends' Association met at the meeting-house, Seventh month 9, 1899. In the absence of the president, Myra M. Eves read a portion of Scripture.

Roll-call and reading the minutes of preceding meeting followed; Sarah Reece read from "The Life and Letters of James and Lucretia Mott"; Clarence Fairman recited "Call the Roll"; Florence I. Eves read "The Beauties of Nature"; and Edith Y. Eves read "Stand up Erect"; Marius John, a FRIENDS' ELEMENTARY AND HIGH SCHOOL, BALTIMORE, MD.

Will be dedicated Ninth month 14, 1899. Description and dimensions were published in INTELLIGENCER of Third month 25th, of this year.

enter colleges or universities it will offer the most ample opportunities for preparation.

Swarthmore College and the Woman's College have already agreed to admit graduates without examination on certificate. Johns Hopkins University also agrees to excuse such pupils from many of its entrance examinations, granting to this institution the same privileges as are enjoyed by other preparatory schools. Swarthmore College offers to a member of the graduating class of 1900 of this institution an honor scholarship of the value of $150, which is to be awarded upon competitive examination under the direction of the College Faculty.

When finished the building will cost about $40,000, of which one-fourth remains to be subscribed. In addition to the new school-rooms there are rooms in the second and third floors of the Men's Meeting that can be utilized, thus accommodating 300 pupils altogether.

The Faculty for the coming school year is as follows: John W. Gregg, B. L., M. A., Principal, history; Eli M. Lamb, Associate Principal, mathematics; Stephen C. Harry, A. B., higher mathematics; William S. Pike, B. E., science and gymnastics; Rachel E. Lamb, literature and rhetoric; Emma J. Broomell, B. S., reading; Frances E. Hartley, Ph. B., classics; Anna M. Berger, modern languages; Louisa P. Blackburn, geography and grammar; Helen H. Ely, M. E., in charge of Primary Department; Hannah T. Yardley, student of the George School, delivered his graduating essay, "The Passing of the Kings." The question, "What is Orthodoxy and to what class of people does it apply?" was discussed by members of the Association. This interesting meeting was well attended, and after a period of silence, we adjourned.

The meeting of Eighth month 13, 1899, was called to order by the president, Henry W. Eves, who read the 25th chapter of Matthew. The Secretary, Mary R. Eck, called the roll and read the minutes of last meeting. The literary entertainment included the following selections: a poem, read by Elizabeth L. Burgess; "The Three Bells," a recitation, by Elena Eves; Sarah T. Eves read the 14th chapter from "The Life and Letters of James and Lucretia Mott"; and Herbert Henri, a selection, "Communion with God." Amelia Eves read from "A New England Girlhood." The question, "Have the changes made in Religious, Social, and Political Toleration been of any advantage to the world?" was deferred for discussion at a future meeting. An interesting letter was read by Wm. Burgess from a Friend in San Francisco.

FRANCIS M. EVES.

HUNTINGDON, IND.—The Young Friends' Association met Eighth month 27, at Maple Grove. After the usual business was transacted a paper was read by Samuel Mason.

His subject was "The Works of Nature : Beautiful or Otherwise." Many valuable thoughts were presented and the discussion was general. A recitation was then given by Elizabeth Mason. The meeting adjourned to Ninth month 15.

WILLIAM C. MOORE, Cor. Secretary.

THE SKY-LARK.

BIRD of the wilderness,
Blithesome and cumberless,
Sweet be thy matin o'er moorland and lea !
Emblem of happiness,
Blest is thy dwelling-place,—
O to abide in the desert with thee !
Wild is thy lay and loud
Far in the downy cloud ;
Love gives it energy, love gave it birth.
Where, on thy dewy wing,
Where art thou journeying ?
Thy lay is in heaven, thy love is on earth.

O'er fell and mountain sheen,
O'er moor and mountain green,
O'er the red streamer that heralds the day ;
Over the cloudlet dim,
Over the rainbow's rim,
Musical cherub, soar, singing, away !
Then, when the gloaming comes,
Low in the heather blooms,
Sweet will thy welcome and bed of love be.
Emblem of happiness,
Blest is thy dwelling-place,—
O to abide in the desert with thee !

—James Hogg.

THE ARCHER.

ONCE on a plain, far-stretching out before me,
With here and there a grove, as 'twere a park,
I saw an archer aiming true, and speeding
His arrows at a mark.

He knew the curves, the poises, the resistance,—
He knew how every fitful breeze would blow,
The course of every shaft he calculated
Before it left the bow.

Swift sped the arrows, strong, unchecked, unerring,
Straight to the destined mark, or low or high,
To which the skill and cunning of the archer
Directed them to fly.

And as I watched the thought bore in upon me ;
How foolish are the fears we mortals know—
Have not our courses too been calculated
Before we left the bow ?

Greater than mine the wisdom that directs me,
Stronger than mine the forces that impel,
I blindly run upon an unknown journey
Whose end I cannot spell.

Yet swift thou speed'st, my soul, unchecked, unerring,
Straight to the destined mark, or high or low,
Toward which wisdom, the Eternal Archer,
Directeth thee to go. —Howell S. England.

We have careful thought for the stranger
And smiles for the sometime guest,
But oft for "our own"
The bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best.

—Margaret Sangster.

WHERE true love bestows its sweetness,
Where true friendship lays its hand,
Dwells all greatness, all completeness,
All the wealth of every land.

—J. G. Holland.

American Enterprise in Asia.

Edinburgh (Scotland) Evening News.

A STEAMER has left Philadelphia for Vladivostock and Niu-Chang with forty locomotive engines and eighteen steel bridges for Chinese railways. This is how America takes part in the Far East squabble. She leaves Russia to annex, administer, and fortify, and Britain to protest, remonstrate, and, if necessary, fight for the "open door." Meanwhile, the Yankees make a good thing out of supplying the engines, rails, and rolling stock for the Russo-Chinese railways. So far as ships and guns are concerned, America's force in Chinese waters is, if it exists at all, barely nominal, and yet she somehow finds a market. How do our commercial Jingoes explain this miracle? From the American point of view, Britain and Russia alike are foolish nations, so intent upon rivalling each other at the game of toy soldiers that they submit alike to be relieved of their surplus cash by the energetic and acute manufacturers of the States. We make a great fuss about maintaining our prestige in the East, but whatever we may do to maintain our naval and military prestige, it is apparent that our commercial prestige is rapidly vanishing. With American engines running on Chinese railways, and American bridges spanning Egyptian rivers, it is plain the gilt is coming off the Imperialistic gingerbread.

A Unique Post Office.

IN consequence of the introduction of a house-to-house delivery of letters in Morven, Argyllshire, says a Scotch newspaper, one of the most primitive post-offices in the United Kingdom has lately fallen into desuetude. It never received the sanction of the Postmaster-General, nor was it amenable to any of the stringent rules governing other offices. Situated high up among the lonely hills, half-way between Drimmin and Barr, and about three miles from the nearest habitation, it consisted of a simple slit in the rock, closed up by a nicely-fitting stone. In the good old times, and indeed until quite recently, when any letters for Barr and neighboring places came to Drimmin post-office, they were carried by the nearest shepherd or crofter to this convenient office in the rock. Here they were left, perhaps for days, until there should happen to come that way some other shepherd or crofter who might feel inclined to deliver them at their destination. The arrangement was generally found to work very satisfactorily, and, so far as can be ascertained, no missive ever got lost or irreparably damaged at this old-fashioned post-office in the rock.

German Freedom.

THE one living American whose personality most closely resembles that of Emperor William is the brilliant young governor of New York, whom many Americans hail as the future President. The Germans feel in the same way ; if Germany were to become a republic, the people would shudder at the thought of having one of the parliamentary leaders of to-day or an average general become President, but they would elect the present Emperor with enthusiasm as the first President ; he is the most interesting, energetic, talented, industrious, and conscientious personality of our public life. Those, however, who maintain that the Emperor is an autocrat do not understand how closely the German monarchy, not only through the constitutional and parliamentary limitations imposed upon it, but still more in its inner foundations, is identical with the national will. I do not care to discuss here whether the Spanish war was necessary, whether the annexation of the Philippines was desirable, or whether Alger was a good minister ; I know only that the German Emperor would not have been able to retain a minister against such unanimous public opinion, or to make war and to create colonies, when only a year before the public soul had revolted against the idea of war and ridiculed the idea of colonies. A President with such vast powers, parties in the grasp of bosses, city administrations under the whip of spoilsmen, the economic world under the tyranny of trusts, and altogether under the autocracy of yellow press editors ! I love and admire America, but Germany really seems to me freer.—Hugo Munsterberg, in the Atlantic Monthly.

Hopeful Outlook For Farm Owners.

If you have a farm, keep it; if not, get one, for the time may come when this country will be largely divided into monopolists, dependents, and farmers, and the farmer will be the most independent of all men and the saving power of our institutions. The relief from the perplexing problems of the time is a simple, honest, character-building, faith-sustaining life on the soil.

The permanency of the New England schools and historical scenery, the assured stability of her manufactories, with a tendency to create the finest fabrics, the prospective revival of commerce, the grange, and the enterprises incidental to these conditions make the New England farm an ideal possession. The New England farmer who says that the farm is a thing of the past is himself but a product of the past. The man who has a five-thousand-dollar farm in New England, with five thousand dollars in the bank, and who will live within his means, is a millionaire, and his possession and contentment are not unlikely to outlast that of the millionaire.—Review of Reviews.

CURRENT EVENTS.

PHILADELPHIA has been given over the past week to the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. Admiral Sampson's fleet was present in the river during the week.

THE strike at the Stevens Colliery, operated by the Stevens Coal Company, at West Pittston, culminated in a riot on the 2d instant, in which one man was killed, two probably fatally wounded, and a half score more or less hurt.

POPE SOPHRINIUS, Patriarch of the Orthodox Greek Church of Alexandria, Lybia, Ethiopia, and all Egypt, died on the 3d inst., aged 103.

PRESIDENT JOHN S. WILSON, of the Baltimore, Chesapeake and Atlantic Railroad, has confirmed the reported purchase of a controlling interest of that road by the Pennsylvania railroad, which, together with other valuable properties of rail and steamboat lines, becomes immediately part of the Pennsylvania system.

A SYNDICATE of American and European capitalists has been formed to build large works in Switzerland for the construction of railway machinery. The annual capacity of the works will be 600 locomotives, 1,000 steam railway passenger cars, 1,000 electric railway cars, 10,000 switches and signals with electric motor power.

AN important move by the defense in the Dreyfus trial at Rennes was made on the 5th inst., when Lawyer Labori telegraphed urgent appeals to Emperor William and King Humbert to grant permission to Colonel Schwartzkoppen and Colonel Panizzardi to testify at the trial "in the name of justice and humanity." Should these important witnesses testify that they never had any relations with the accused, a despatch from Rennes says that the Court must order the acquittal of Dreyfus.

THE Johannesburg correspondent of the Standard says: There seems to be some ground for supposing that the peace party at Pretoria has gained a temporary advantage as the result of the influence of Mr. Fischer, the special representative of the Orange Free State. Influential German papers continue to warn President Kruger that he need not hope to receive the least help from Europe.

QUEEN WILHELMINA of the Netherlands has written to Queen Victoria, appealing to her to intervene in the interests of peace in South Africa.

THE Pittsburg Bridge Company and Charles M. Peasley, Superintendent, were held responsible by a coroner's jury on the 5th inst., for the death of eleven men, who were killed in the collapse of the arches of the Coliseum building in course of construction in Chicago, on the 28th ult.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

THE University Extension Summer School just held at Oxford, England, numbered among its students not fewer than 180 foreigners. Germany sent nearly 60, Scandinavia 40, France 14, Holland seven, Switzerland six, Austria and Hungary nine, Belgium three, Russia two, Finland one, and Japan one. The secretary states that in the year that completed the last report there were over 1,000 lectures delivered under the auspices of the Delegacy. There were 108 local centres at work and 145 courses of lectures delivered, with an aggregate average attendance of close on 20,000 students, and the figures that would soon be published for the current year would show an advance even on those he had quoted. The movement had passed out of the stage when it could be regarded as a cheap smattering masquerade on education. Whatever gauge they chose to test its strength, they would find it had vitality and soundness. Next year the students were invited by the Cambridge Union to hold the summer meeting there, and the Oxford Delegacy decided to invite them in 1901. The program was already sketched out. During that summer all England would be celebrating what was called the millenary of King Alfred, and it had been decided, as they had now completed the cycle, to go back to that early period of English history and make the whole meeting centre around the history of the great King Alfred of Wessex and of England.

—The Ruskin Coöperative Colony (Tennessee) property has been sold. Four tracts of land containing a total of 784 acres were first sold to Ransom Leech for $11,000. Another tract of a thousand acres, mostly worthless land, went to George Wright for $1,450. He also bought the storehouse and lot for $15, making the whole amount received for land and about thirty houses thereon $12,465. The land originally cost $16,500, and the houses cost several thousand more. Growing crops go with the land. The minority stockholders, who had the property thrown into the hands of a receiver, were the purchasers. Horses, mules, fine hogs, etc., went for a song, mostly to neighboring farmers. It is said that the purchasers will reorganize the colony on a somewhat different basis. Fifty-five majority stockholders already have an agent out looking for a new location. They may go to Virginia. Many of the women shed tears at the sale, and there is much feeling over the break-up of the new Utopia.

—There are 850,000 men in the world who gain a livelihood chiefly by fishing, making an annual catch of $225 worth of fish for each man. The fisheries of the United States supply 800,000 pounds annually, and those of Europe 1,800,000 pounds. The American citizen eats about twenty-five pounds of fish and 140 pounds of meat in a year, while the European eats sixty-four pounds of meat and eleven pounds of fish annually.

—A remarkable state of affairs exists at Detroit, Michigan, where out of a cut of 450,000,000 feet of lumber this season there is absolutely none for sale. The labor market is such that $28 and board is the monthly pay of the lowest grade of woods labor. Top loaders get $40 or more. A year ago swamper were paid $18, and in the fall of 1897 were flooding the labor market at $12.

—The tobacco crop this year, it is agreed, will not be a large one, and it comes after three years of small yield. The aggregate production reported for 1896, 1897, and 1898, is but 471,833,052 pounds, while for 1885, 1886, and 1887 it was 585,944,094, or more than 100,000,000 pounds greater. Prices having so long declined, the planters have become discouraged, and are paying less and less attention to tobacco every year.

—The English papers are just now warning their readers that to drink milk immediately after cherries have been eaten is a dangerous practice and sometimes has fatal results. It is said that the health authorities of Vienna have gone so far as to issue a circular warning people who wish to retain their health not to drink milk or water immediately after eating fruit of any kind.

—According to the Rome correspondent of the London Standard, Camille Barrere, the French Ambassador to Italy, will be the next French Ambassador to the United States.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 16, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 37.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XXXVII.

It is always safe to be simply obedient to the sense of duty with which we are impressed, whatever be the occasion.

JANE JOHNSON.

From a private letter.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

IF WE BUT KNEW!

If we but knew the ceaseless pulse
Which throbs beneath this life ;
If we but knew the perfect peace
Which permeates all strife ;
If we but knew the incense sweet
Each fire of anguish brings ;
If we but knew the strength with which
The tiny tendril clings ;
If we but knew the Hand that stays
The devastating storm ;
If we but knew a Force protects
And guards us from all harm ;
If we but knew the Love divine
Which circles us about ;—
All things would small and smaller grow,
Until to live without
The constant presence of The One
Who fills our every need
Would be the thing most to avoid.
All thought of form or creed
Would be as second. First 'twould be
To hold His presence near
Within our hearts ;—no burdens there.
Anxiety and fear
And endless longing—all would flee ;
And clear as perfect day
Our wants and needs would shape themselves
And be met in the way
Which in itself would satisfy.
If we but knew—
Yes ! you and I.

A. T. M.

THE BROWNS OF BARTONBURY.

Friends' Quarterly Examiner.

IN the two hundred years of its existence the little burial ground of Friends at Cirencester has never presented a more touching scene than that which was witnessed in it on an afternoon in Third month last, when a company of mourners and friends gathered round two graves in one and the same funeral, as the coffins of Elizabeth Brown and her aunt, Lydia Theophila Brown, were simultaneously lowered into them.

The young lady, well known in the astronomical world from her long-sustained observations of the sun, and especially of the solar spots, had succumbed after a week's illness. Her aunt, whose life had been wavering in the balance, at ninety-one years of age, followed her in two days more, the last of the older generation of a family circle, ideal of its kind, and such as is much less frequently met with outside than within the Society of Friends.

Bartonbury, the home of the family, stands on the high Cotteswold plateau above Cirencester, near the Agricultural College, its grounds adjoining those of Further Barton, for many years the residence of the late Thomas Crowther Brown, the eldest brother of the family, and later of his two daughters, one of whom was the lady first named in this sketch. Thomas Brown lived to over ninety years of age, carrying with him to the last the enthusiastic love of natural history that was shared by his younger brother Joshua, and which made them both delightful company to those who were privileged to visit them in their homes, and to accompany them in walks about their gardens or farther afield.

At Bartonbury the circle consisted of Joshua Brown and his three sisters, Mary, Hannah, and Lydia. They were all unmarried ; and it was a beautiful sight to see the unity and simplicity of childhood continued between them till the far-on evening of life.

Those who knew it will readily recall the picture of that sweet and lovable household ; but to those who did not, it would not be easy to convey an idea of the refined and quiet life which was the outcome of the training received in the Society two generations ago. To realize what Joshua Brown was, one has to remember his handsome features, eager with the delight of describing some insect or plant, or of listening to the bird-song that seemed to blend with and become part of his nature ; or aglow with reminiscences of his earlier life, and of the physical feats that make schoolboy or student days the never-to-be-forgotten golden age ; for Joshua Brown was what men generally are intended to be, a good all-round man. He would tell of the mountain climbs he had shared in Switzerland with his old friend James Atkins, when the latter was plant-hunting ; and of his missing his foothold on a cliff-edge as he lurched after a butterfly, when the honest cloth his Cirencester tailor had put into his coat saved his life ; as it held firm when the guide gripped it and pulled him in again. His crowning memory, however, in the matter of "bodily exercise," was of a cricket match he had played in, in the earlier half of the century, when the late Earl of Ducie was batsman, and Joshua Brown had bowled him out ; and it was noteworthy to see how his modesty would tone his pride as he recounted his triumph ; for the Earl, like his son and successor, was a man of physical power, and no mean antagonist. One could not easily forget the play of his countenance as it was animated by these reminiscences ; but most of all worth remembering was a glance at his face an hour or two after, as he sat in meeting : such a one as Charles Lamb tells us of, "over whom the dove sat visibly brooding." This, indeed, might be said of each of the sisters as well ; and the state of mind it implied was the dominant power in the daily life at Bartonbury. It was a quiet and real preparation for the life to come, harmonizing with all that is sweetest and best in nature, and conserving on into old age the freshness and enthusiasm of youth. Most readers of these lines will remember, in Caroline Fox's Memorials, the wonderful way in which her uncle Joshua kept in touch with the wild creatures around him,—how he would call to the birds in the garden, and they would perch in repose on his outstretched arms. A fitting picture to set against this is Joshua Brown's stepping out on the lawn at Bartonbury, and holding up a piece of bread in his hand, when in a few moments a hawk, at first almost an invisible speck, would swoop down from the bright Cotteswold sky, and, landing on his fingers, fearlessly eat the morsel; and then wheel up and away again—

“Through the wilderness blue.”

The soul that has come into harmony with the Creator is brought into closer unison with all that he has made; and life, as it is purified from sin, necessarily increases in reality and intensifies in interest in its every touch with the world of nature that surrounds it.

There were trials, however, even in Bartonbury,—trials from one another's failings. Dear old Mary Brown especially tried her sisters by doing all sorts of unselfish things that upset their plans for preserving her health. She would walk up the hill after a monthly meeting, when she ought to have ridden, in order that someone who she thought needed the ride, might take her place; and Hannah would confide to a friend how much Lydia and herself had been troubled about her: “Dear Mary, thou knows, would go out yesterday afternoon, though it was raining, because she thought she ought to go and see So-and-So,” indicating some old cottager Mary Brown was bent upon comforting, at the risk of an illness that might endanger her own frail life of over fourscore.

All three sisters, the very soul of kindness, were especially in sympathy with children, who had pleasant times of it at Bartonbury. “Would you like mutton or fowl?” said Joshua Brown, who was carving the former, to two little girls among the guests at dinner on a monthly meeting day. “Mutton, please,” replied the children, too shy to choose the more delicate viand. But Hannah saved the position for them: “No, Joshua! I never knew children like mutton better than fowl! I shall give them fowl!” I suspect Hannah Brown helped to attach those two children to the Society of Friends!

And thus life glided away with them all, in the daily endeavor to do what was well pleasing to their Heavenly Father, and helpful to one another and to all around them; with no startling incident to break the uniformity of their existence, except the coming of death into their household, as one after another of its beloved members were in turn summoned to the home beyond the grave.

At last, Lydia Theophila Brown was left alone of all the group that had so long made Bartonbury what it was. It is difficult to estimate the relative weight of trials. To some men, suffering comes in a few great and overwhelming blows, with, it may be, long intervals of breathing time between them. To others is allotted a continuous series of smaller sorrows and vexations; for there is a balance of forces in the mental as there is in the material world. Our means of estimating these forces are imperfect; but few trials could practically be heavier than that which was given Lydia Brown to endure: herself a solitary winter leaf,— her life-long companions all taken away, and the lessening powers—not of threescore years and ten, but of more than fourscore years and ten—glooming the days that remained.

“The last of its clan,”—

It was yet a wonderful lesson to witness the reality of the power that sustained her, and the fulfilment of the assurance, “Even to hoar hairs will I carry you.” The thin, worn face, still dignified and refined—Lydia Brown was a singularly lady-like-looking woman—lighted up with a sunset glow as she quietly told how often she had felt cast down and dismayed in the realization of her loneliness; and yet how as often the renewed sense had been granted her of the love of God, and the fresh strength given her to trust that she would be sustained to the end; for she knew that the prolongation of her trial was needed for the completion of the work that was preparing her for everlasting rest; and that “clouds and darkness” are indeed “round about Him” who dwells in the light that no man can approach unto.

Towards the end her powers grew more feeble, and for some time she wandered; but even in that wandering there remained the evidence that the day's work had been done before the night had drawn on, “in which no man can work;” for her talk was only of heaven.

And so closes the last life in the beloved family at Bartonbury; each of its members witnessing in turn to the experience that “This is eternal life, to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent.”

They were never engaged, so far as the writer is aware, in the public ministry or the outside services to which many, but not all, the living members of the church are called. It was theirs to show the truth that Milton had present to his mind when he wrote that—

“They also serve who only stand and wait.”

The Society of Friends has given to the world a multitude of such examples as those of the Browns of Cirencester, who, believing in the reality of the revelation of Jesus Christ to every human heart that he has created, have sought him, and obeyed him, and let his light shine through their quiet unobtrusive daily lives to all around them: types of the purest and healthiest form of Christianity, the form that develops the spiritual strength more fully than does any other, for the simple reason that, while there are others which lay more or less stress, as it does, upon our doing that to which the Holy Spirit leads us, “Quakerism” stands alone in the clearness of its teaching that it is hurtful to the soul to engage in any act of worship, or other intended service of God, which we are not, afresh and anew, really called to engage in.

The difference is like that which so vitally affects the physical system in the matter of food and drink ; for as the bodily health depends as much upon our abstinence from hurtful or dangerous articles of diet as upon the abundant supply of those which are nourishing, so does the strength and vigor of the soul depend not alone upon the hidden manna, without which life cannot be sustained at all, but also upon the avoidance of all that which, not falling fresh from heaven, is not our daily bread.

JOHN BELLOWES.

NEWTON MEETING: A RETROSPECT.

Read before the Young Friends' Association of Camden, N. J., Third month 8, 1899, by Howard M. Cooper.

ON this eve of the twentieth, let me take you back to the last quarter of the seventeenth century, to the origin of this ancient meeting of Newton, and trace its even flow through its almost two and a quarter centuries of life from then to now.

We cannot realize, can hardly imagine, what it was to emigrate to America in those days. With our railroads, steamships, and telegraphs, scarcely anywhere on the habitable globe could a family now, starting from England, settle, and be so completely cut off from every old association, every old comfort, and even communication with friends behind as were the first emigrants to this country. Across an ocean, the passage of which often occupied three months, to a country of forests, where there was nowhere a civilized settlement, nowhere a white inhabitant ; where one sending a letter to the old home on New Year's day might reasonably hope to receive an answer in the following July, but hardly sooner ; such was the outlook for those who simply wished our privilege of an untrammelled worship of God.

In the latter part of 1680, or the early part of 1681, when West Jersey, from the capes to the falls of the Delaware, was an unbroken wilderness, save for Fenwick's colony at Salem, the few Swedes at Raccoon, and the little cluster of Friends at Burlington, William Cooper, who about a year earlier had emigrated from England to Burlington, came down the river and settled at "Pyne Poynte," now Cooper's Point, in the city of Camden. He having in England joined Friends from conviction, and being a minister, as soon as he had built his house, opened a Friends' meeting therein. About this time, too, Richard Arnold settled in the same neighborhood, and the meetings were sometimes held in his house. To these little meetings often came, across the Delaware, the few Friends located at Shackamaxon. This was the commencement of our Newton meeting, some two years before the settlement of Philadelphia.

These voluntary gatherings were officially recognized, and the time of mid-week meeting fixed by the Monthly Meeting held at Burlington, in Thomas Gardiner's house, Seventh month 5, 1681, when it was "Ordered that Friends of Pyne Point have a meeting on every Fourth-day, and to begin at the 2d hour, at Richard Arnold's house." In less than a year was created what corresponds to our monthly meeting. For at a general meeting held at Salem, Second month 11, 1682, it was ordered "That a six-weeks' men's and women's meeting for the ordering of the affairs of the church be kept the 24th day of the Third month, at William Cooper's at Pyne Point ; and the next six-weeks' meeting at Thomas Fairman's, at Shackamaxon, and so in course." They also at the same time ordered a monthly meeting for worship to be held alternately in the same way, the first one meeting at William Cooper's. This is the origin, likewise, of what is now Philadelphia Monthly Meeting of Friends ; and thus just as the first Philadelphia Yearly Meeting was held in Burlington, the first Philadelphia Monthly Meeting was held in Camden.

The Pyne Point and Shackamaxon Friends continued thus to meet alternately till the fall of 1682, when at a meeting held at Thomas Fairman's on the 8th of the Ninth month, this minute was made : "At this time Governor Penn and a multitude of Friends arrived here and erected a city called Philadelphia, about half a mile from Shackamaxon, where meetings were established. Thomas Fairman, at the request of the Governor, removed himself and family to Tacony, where there was also a meeting appointed to be kept, and this ancient meeting of Shackamaxon removed to Philadelphia." Thus abruptly, to suit the plans of William Penn, did the Shackamaxon Friends give up their "ancient meeting" and separate from their Jersey Friends, with whom they had been meeting "to edification" before this irruption of a "multitude of Friends." But it is evident that they did not feel easy under this unceremonious withdrawal, for a few months afterward they endeavored to atone for it by asking the consent of the Jersey Friends to the division ; which was gracefully granted in this minute : "At a Monthly Meeting at Burlington the 6th of First month, 1683, Friends in Pennsylvania desireth to have a monthly men's and women's meeting, which was readily and freely assented to by Friends in this meeting." Thus was completed the separation of the two meetings.

In 1682, a large addition to the small meeting at the "Poynte" was caused by the arrival of a body of Irish Friends, one of whom, Thomas Sharpe, a young man, has left a most quaint account of their coming over and settling. He says : "It having wrought upon ye minds of some Friends that dwelt in Ireland, by such as formerly came there from England, and a pressure having laid upon them for some years which they could not gett from under the weight of until they gave up to leave their friends and relations there together with a comfortable subsistence to transport themselves and famelys into this wilderness part of America, and thereby expose themselves to difficulties, which, if they could have been easy where they were, in all probability might never have been met with," they therefore employed Thomas Lurtin, "commander of a pink," to bring them over, starting from Dublin on the 19th of September, 1681, and in just two months afterwards landing at Salem, where they spent the winter. In the spring of 1682, they all moved to Newton, and, to quote Thomas Sharpe again : "So began our settlement ; and although at times we were pretty hard bestead, having all our provisions as far as Salem to fetch by water, yett through the mercy and kindness of God, we were preserved in health and from any extreme difficulties. And immediately there was a meeting sett up and kept at the house of Mark Newby, and in a short time it grew and increased, unto which William Cooper and famely that live at the Poynte resorted, and sometimes the meeting was kept at his house, who had been settled some time before."

Immediately after the withdrawal of the Shackamaxon Friends, a monthly meeting was, by permission of the Burlington Friends, settled to be held at Newton, the first Fourth-day of the Tenth month, 1682, and so on. Which "Monthly Meeting day" we have kept without change to the present time. This Newton Monthly Meeting included not only the Friends at Cooper's Point and at Newton, but also those at Woodbury.

The meetings continued to be held at Friends' houses until 1684, when the Society purchased a lot of land of Thomas Thackara on the north bank of the middle branch of Newton Creek, and built thereon a log meeting-house, one of the first in West Jersey. It stood at what is now West Collingswood Station on the Reading Railroad to Atlantic City, the graveyard reaching to the very water's edge. They placed their house near the creek, for in those days of roadless forests, the water courses were the only available highways, alike for grave and for gay occasions. The joyful wedding processions, in boats, carried the bride to her marriage at the meeting-house; and the solemn funeral train, too, in boats, performed its last duty, and bore the dead, by water, to the grave.

At the Yearly Meeting held at Burlington, Seventh month 8, 1686, Salem and Newton Monthly Meetings were constituted a Quarterly Meeting, meeting at Newton in the Sixth and Twelfth months, and at Salem in the Third and Ninth months.

As Friends grew more numerous around Haddonfield, a meeting was set up there at Thomas Shackles' house (where Amos Kaighn lately lived), and from 1695 to 1721, the monthly meeting was held alternately there and at Newton, and was thenceforward called Newton and Haddonfield Monthly Meeting.

And so then, with their regular worship firmly established in their new meeting-house, with all the religious machinery of monthly and quarterly meetings in full sway, Newton Friends, in their plain hats and sombre bonnets, peaceably and uneventfully adored their God in that way they had braved so much and come so far to do, and grew apace with the growth of population, for then there was but one faith, one worship. And yet Thomas Sharpe in his old age thought they were not what they were when he was young, for he laments in odd rhymes the degeneracy of his times. Let me quote a few lines:

"When at the first our settlement,
We lived in peace and true content,
And although sometimes we were hard bestead,
Yet the Lord to us afforded bread.
In Newton, then, therein did shine,
Some yt were zealous and divine,
They largely did with care provide
From those that came from ye true guide,
To direct their minds to stand in truth,
They had received in their youth.

But now poor Newton is decayed,
The youth not zealous, I am afraid," etc.

In 1721, the brick meeting-house at Haddonfield was built on land given by Elizabeth Haddon, the first meeting in it being held on Twelfth month 12, 1721, and thenceforward the monthly meeting met there, ceasing to alternate at Newton, and, gradually dropping the name of Newton, was called, simply, Haddonfield Monthly Meeting. In 1794, Newton and Salem Quarterly Meeting, having largely increased, agreed to propose to the yearly meeting to constitute two quarterly meetings within their limits. This the Yearly Meeting did, calling one Salem and the other Haddonfield. But, what seems very singular, Cape May Meeting was allotted to Haddonfield instead of to Salem. Thus, old Newton finally lost her name in the titles of both the Monthly and Quarterly meetings, retaining it, however, in that of the Preparative Meeting to this day. And may the spirit of change never so warp the good judgment of the members of this meeting as to induce them to drop their distinctive heritage, the honored name of Newton.

(To be concluded.)

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT

No. 39.—NINTH MONTH 24.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Now, O my God, let, I beseech thee, thine eyes be open, and let thine ears be attent, unto the prayer that is made in this place.

—II. Chronicles, vi., 40.

Scripture Reading, II. Chronicles, vi., 14-42.

THE lessons of the Quarter now closing have viewed the growth of the Hebrew kingdom from a group of disorganized and often mutually hostile tribes to a compact and vigorous nation. After invading the territory of the Canaanites and gradually forcing a permanent lodgment there, they effected the transformation from the nomadic condition to that of a people devoted to agriculture. Of this new means of livelihood they learned much from the conquered Canaanites—a people in a much more advanced stage of civilization than themselves. Their sole superiority over the conquered people lay in their possession of a higher revelation of God's nature and of his relations with men. While the gods of the Canaanites were beings who demanded reverence and sacrifice—even human sacrifice at times—they made no special demands on the personal life of their devotees. Far otherwise was it with Jehovah of the Hebrews. He, too, demanded recognition and formal worship; but that which placed Him quite outside the classification of the gods of the Canaanites was that He subjected Himself to a law of righteousness and demanded personal righteousness of His followers. The unity of God reveled to Abraham was no further apprehended by his descendants than in a conception that they should worship but one God; the righteousness of God, and demanded by Him, was no further grasped than in a recognition of certain moral commands as binding—and even these only in special cases. But the living ideals of Divine Unity and Divine Law had germinated in the heart of the race. And this germ was destined to life and growth in spite of many storms and disasters, until it reached fruition in the Lord's Prayer and the Sermon on the Mount. When we read of the bloody strife of brother with brother, when we see the account of savage slaughter, of barbarous cruelty, we feel, indeed, that the growth of God's revealings are to be found in most unexpected places and under strangest conditions. Yet none who read the history of the Hebrews aright can fail to see that growth among them, the harvest of which has been one of the great sources of our own moral development.

The Book of Judges is a collection of hero tales gathered by an editor who used them for the purpose of arousing again among his people that loyalty to Jehovah which had been the basis of their strength. Some of these popular stories did not easily lend themselves to the ethical purposes of the writer; but the purpose is evident in almost all of them. The term "judge" is not an appropriate one as used with these popular heroes, many of whom were mere leaders of local revolts, and none of whom commanded the obedience of a united Israel. Many of them, however, in defeating an enemy dangerous alike to all, did, in some sense, stand as champions of the whole people. Such a one was Gideon, under whom was founded the first fragmentary kingdom, which passed into the hands of the next generation only to disappear because of the weakness and unworthiness of the successor. The idea of the kingdom reappeared in the mind of Samuel, a worthy successor of the great religious leaders of the earlier history of this people. A common hatred of the Philistine oppressors, and the growth, probably by the efforts of Samuel, of faith in the God of their fathers, made union under Saul possible, and after a reign of contest, including both victory and defeat, the successor of Saul was able to drive out the Philistines and to organize a strong kingdom. It should be noted again that the weakness of the great world powers—Assyria and Egypt—made possible an expansion of the kingdom under David, which could not have occurred if either had been active.

Under David and Solomon the kingdom grew stronger and more prosperous commercially and industrially. Trade was extended by way of the Red Sea probably as far as India, by the ships of Solomon. The wealth of distant countries flowed in from all sides to add to the growing luxury of the court. New arts and industries were introduced; workmen in metal, builders, and handicraftsmen of all kinds plied their trades where had been only the small farmer and those who supplied his small needs.

As the court grew more luxurious it degenerated. It passed from the warrior's tent of Saul to the gorgeous palace of Solomon. It fostered the enervating influences of the Eastern harem. Its demands led to the oppression and enslavement of the people—a condition which a few generations later drew down the denunciations of the prophets on those who added "field to field and house to house." A people cannot be enslaved in a generation; so there was resistance, even extending to revolt, but the organized powers of the despotism were too strong for suffering victims of that despotism, and the oppression grew more and more bitter.

The religious life of the nation experienced a parallel change. During the period of Judges shrines were found on the hill-tops and religious rites were performed by heads of families; rites often idolatrous, and including even human sacrifice. Samuel and Saul, as well as "the people" (I. Kings, iii., 2) sacrificed on the "high places" before the building of the Temple. Under the kings the rude and primitive forms disappeared and were soon replaced by an elaborate ceremonial. The rude shrine gave place to the Temple, which required thirteen years for its construction.

In a dark cubical room, which recalls similar Egyptian shrines, was placed the Ark of the wanderings, so that this became the central point of the worship of all Israel—the permanent abiding-place of Jehovah. Barbarous ceremonials did not disappear. Many years later than this a king of Judah offered human sacrifice to Jehovah, even his own son (II. Kings, xvi., 3). But such were not of the Jewish custom; they were violations of it, due to the influences from outside. Such influences were rendered common and powerful by the numerous marriages with foreign countries and the introduction, with the queens, of foreign worship. Thus, too, the kings were of foreign blood and often leaned to the worship of their mothers.

The formalism which became so strong under Solomon gave occasion for the sternest denunciations by the prophets. Constantly they demanded "mercy and not sacrifice." "To obey is better than the fat of rams." The war against the substitution of forms and ceremonies for personal righteousness is one which has lasted even unto this day, and is one which is of special concern to us. Ceremonial law has crept more or less into our very formlessness, and needs driving out no less than it did in Palestine in the days of the prophets.

Our lessons in the next Quarter will take up the division of the kingdom and the progress of the two to extinction and captivity. They will introduce us to the time of the prophets—a time which is at once the glory and the shame of Israel. They will also see the reappearance of Assyria and Egypt in Hebrew history, and the growth of the former to the partial extinction of the latter.

TEACHERS often rack their brains for a method, when all they need is to be personal with their pupils. Mere method never strikes any one in the heart, never reaches personal interests, aims, appreciations, or desires. It never makes the weak strong, nor the ignorant learned. The world cannot get along without method, but method will never run the world. Real, personal, sympathetic earnestness is what makes things go, and, as they go, succeed.—Sunday School Times.

IN chaste and warm affections, humble wishes, and honest toil for some useful end, there is health for the mind and quiet for the heart, the prospect of a happy life, and the fairest hope of heaven.—Hawthorne.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

H. WARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 16, 1899.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

OUR whole country is profoundly moved at the news from over the sea of the condemnation of an apparently innocent man. On both sides of the water sorrow and indignation fill men's hearts. We stand aghast at the act, and ask, "What does it mean?" What does it mean but that militarism is bearing its bitter fruit? And as we gaze sorrowfully upon it, our regret grows deeper at the thought of the military spirit abroad in our own land. Every one who truly loves his country shudders as he thinks of this new tyrant established within our borders. But shall the patriot lose heart as he sees France dishonored and America threatened; shall he allow the waves of discouragement to sweep over him at the thought of the black deed abroad and the military and worldly spirit at home? No. He who is with us is greater than those who are against us. The true patriot lays his hand in God's hand, and as an overcoming faith strengthens him and a permeating, jubilant love upholds him, his soul is filled with courage and joy and hope, and, best of all, a determination to work God's will in the world and be an instrument, however small, in helping on the rule of peace and purity and honor and justice. We repeat, with thankful hearts, the words of our latest poet. In writing of Dreyfus he says,—

Oh, import deep as life is, deep as time!
There is a Someth'ng sacred and sublime
Moving behind the worlds, beyond our ken
Weighing the stars, weighing the deeds of men.

Oh, men that forge the fetter, it is vain;
There is a Still Hand stronger than your chain.
'Tis no avail to bargain, sneer, and nod,
And shrug the shoulder for reply to God."

FRESH CONSECRATION.

SUMMER has passed away, and the autumn days are upon us. The lull in activity and the quiet storing up of energy which belong to the warm months of the mid-year must now give way to renewed life and fresh consecration of ourselves to duty. It is a wise custom, this, of more or less marked withdrawal from work during the heated season; we are but following the lead of the natural world about us in so doing. Now comes the hour when the bodily and mental forces, quickened and revived, shall apply themselves to the happy,—and it is the happiest and most wholesome,—function of daily conquest over appointed tasks and accustomed duties.

Fortunate have they been who were enabled to spend some portion of the vacation in the country or at the seashore; to those who found themselves in the cities let us hope there came opportunities for suburban excursions and visits to the refreshing verdure of shady squares and parks. From sea or mountain, harvest field or green lawn, we bring home treasures of health, and joyous memories that cannot soon fade. The home-coming has its own pleasures, too; family ties are renewed, the old haunts seem dearer for our weeks of absence from them; meetings and First-day schools and Young Friends' Associations are taken up with fresh devotion, and we feel a spiritual uplift and an inspiration to better, higher deeds than our past has known.

The schools and colleges re-open their doors, and it is in the educational world that the fresh consecration to which we allude is most marked. There are some parents who wish that the summer vacations might be shortened;—we have not heard any such complaint from the younger generation. Whether our excessive American heat would permit of this, or whether the stress of modern school-life does not make necessary long periods of rest from study, and an outdoor physical rebuilding, we cannot attempt to decide. Certain it is that the wiser of our youth look forward to the autumn return to books, and to school or college companionships, with ardor and happiness. Teachers find the long weeks of summer leisure a stimulant for the winter's work, and they meet their pupils with strengthened purpose and re-kindled enthusiasm.

May the harvest be a bountiful one. As the corn and the fruits respond in ample measure to the summer's ripening touch, so may we give forth plentifully in our various fields of duty, showing by renewed earnestness in the matters of the hour, and the consequent growth toward communion with that which belongs to the eternal, that we have truly appreciated God's gift of the restful mid-summer hours. In the words of Richard Jefferies, "Let us labor to make the heart grow larger as we become older, as the spreading oak gives more shelter," and "take to the soul some of the greatness and the beauty of the summer!"

THE Managing Editor is expected to arrive in New York to-day, from his visit to Europe. The last days before sailing he was in attendance at the Friends' Summer School, Birmingham.

CORRECTIONS.—On page 693 of last week's issue, in the article entitled "The Physiological Effect of Faith," first column, seventh line from bottom, read "The artery should be ligated," instead of the reading which the printer's error presents. To the last line of second column, page 694, add the first line on page 699, and then resume on page 695.

BIRTHS.

WILSON.—At Hemet, California, Seventh month 1, 1899, to William and Emma Worstall Wilson, a son, who is named Heston Lawshe.

MARRIAGES.

DOING—BRANSON.—At Hopewell meeting-house, Frederick county, Virginia, Ninth month 6, 1899, under the care of Hopewell Monthly Meeting, James Herald Doing, son of Charles H. and Rosa Doing, of Prince George county, Maryland, and Tacy Branson, daughter of Jonathan W. and E. Caroline Branson, of Frederick county, Virginia.

DEATHS.

BAKER.—At Atlantic City, N. J., Ninth month 10, 1899, Lydia Ann, widow of the late Elias Baker, aged 81 years. She was a consistent Friend, formerly of Chester county, Pa., where she had a large number of relatives and friends.

KIRK.—In West Philadelphia, Ninth month 4, 1899, at the residence of her son-in-law, Thomas C. Jones, Caroline J., widow of Abraham Kirk, in her 84th year.

MICHENER.—At his residence, Logan, near Germantown, Philadelphia, Eighth month 29, 1899, Amos J. Michener, in his 64th year.

MOTT.—At Radnor, Pa., Ninth month 8, 1899, Thomas Mott, aged 76, son of the late James and Lucretia Mott, of Philadelphia.

PUGH.—Ninth month 6, 1899, at his home in East Nottingham, Pa., Harold B. Pugh, in his 36th year. Interment at Little Elk burying ground.

PYLE.—Ninth month 8, 1899, at her home in New Garden township, Chester county, Pa., Ann P., wife of Samuel Pyle, aged 77 years. She was a member and elder of London Grove Monthly Meeting of Friends, beloved and esteemed by her circle of friends for her upright Christian character.

WESTALL.—Eighth month 30, 1899, at Cornwall, New York, at the home of Rowland Cocks, G. Milton, son of George and Elizabeth Cocks Westall, of New York City, aged 9 months.

YERKES.—In Frankford, Philadelphia, Ninth month 3, 1899, Susan J. Yerkes, aged 85 years, aunt of Susan Y. and Phebe W. Foulke.

Love that asketh—Love again
Finds the barter naught but pain;
Love that giveth its full store
Aye receives as much and more.—Anon.

☪
"As shines a star in the deep sea,
So shines the thought of God in me;
It lights my eye and I behold
What sages saw and prophets told."

☪

WE believe, as a matter of fact, that the commonly silent pauses before the meals of Friends, have exercised a very great influence upon successive generations who have observed this usage—an influence far greater than they have been aware of. Twenty or thirty pauses made by a family every week, ostensibly for remembering together the bounty of God, must exert an enormous influence in maintaining a sense of the nearness of the spiritual world, even though some formalism may often enter into the observance.—J. S. Rowntree.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

XIV.—THE ROWNTREE AND SHERWELL TEMPERANCE BOOK.

BY HOWARD M. JENKINS.

AT York, where I spent three days,—twice as many would not be too much for the remarkable attractions of that historic city,—I was the guest of Joseph Rowntree, in his pleasant home in Bootham, near the picturesque ruins of the old Abbey of St. Mary's. Joseph Rowntree is the father of John Wilhelm, who recently visited the United States, and the head of extensive manufactories of cocoa, chocolate, etc., located at York. In collaboration with Arthur Sherwell, he (J. R.) is the author of the book, "The Temperance Problem and Social Reform," published in the spring of the present year, and recently noticed in FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER. Of this book it is not too much to say that it is the most notable and important which has appeared on this subject for a long time, and as I have desired to write something about it, I take the present opportunity.

Joseph Rowntree is, of course, an advocate of total abstinence ("teetotaler" is the ordinary designation in England), and strongly desires to effect some practical reform of the present bad conditions. Arthur Sherwell has been for a number of years interested in social reform, and has been actively engaged in labors among the London poor; it is his experience of the poverty and misery that accompany drink which brings him earnestly to the Temperance problem. He was for some time associated with Hugh Price Hughes, the famous Wesleyan minister, in social reform work, but H. P. H. held some views as to "classical" methods and manners which A. S. found not according with his rather Friendly convictions.

The book is notable for several reasons, one of which is its very full presentation of data. It is a mine of information, in fact, from which those who discuss intemperance, temperance, abstinence—all the phases of the problem—may draw. Great pains have been taken to verify figures and statements. Many months' labor has been bestowed on this. Whether the interested reader likes the conclusions of the authors, or wishes to controvert them, he will find their introductory chapters most useful. The terrible prevalence of the drink habit, the surprisingly large consumption of alcohol per capita in England (it is almost double that of the United States, being 2.05 gallons of "proof spirits," per capita, per year, as against 1.16 gallons), the political influence wielded by "the Trade," are among the points plainly presented. A most complete demonstration is made of the value in many instances of the license which the community gives the liquor-seller. It is shown that this gift is often an enormous one. Old and ordinary buildings, worth themselves only a small sum, become raised five or even ten times the value by the simple grant of the license. In other words, the owner of the "premises" is thus directly enriched by the community. He may have a house worth a thousand pounds; he receives his license, and behold, its value at public sale has become ten thousand! The book gives instances like this, over and over, with photographs of some of the places.

From the facts thus outlined the authors draw the conclusion that the community is guilty of gross folly in thus giving over to individuals the profit of liquor sale. They think this profit should be retained by the community, and should be applied to a beneficial use. They propose, in brief, that one use should be the establishment of public places of cheerful resort for the people—"people's palaces," as they would be called here—to which those who now take the tavern for a club-house might be drawn.

It will be said, in a moment, by the attentive reader, that this plan is not that of Prohibition, but of License, and that in the feature of State profit it is similar to the "Gothenburg plan" of Sweden, or the "dispensary system" of South Carolina. This is quite true, but the authors of the book do not leave either of these points unconsidered. As to Prohibition, their argument is that it cannot be enforced, under present conditions of public opinion, in the cities or larger towns, and that therefore some plan of restriction and control must be found. As to the use of the community's profit on the sale of liquor, they have worked out their scheme with great care (for adoption in England), and they expect to avoid some of the objections arising under the Gothenburg and similar systems.

In their chapters on Prohibition the authors present many facts and figures to show laxity of enforcement, and as the United States is the principal field where prohibitory laws have been enacted, most of these apply to experience there. I feel quite sure that the Temperance workers of our country will read the chapters on this part of the subject with dissent, and yet—sharing their feelings in part at least—I cannot see exactly what answer is to be made to the clear and conclusive evidence that in the large towns and cities of Prohibition States there is either open sale or practically that. For example, in Portland, Maine, although Neal Dow's laws have now been in force in that State for over half a century, there are hundreds of places in which liquor is openly sold. I may say here that Arthur Sherwell has now gone to the United States to collect additional data, and to verify further those given in the book, and Joseph Rowntree read to me at York a letter just received giving his observations in Portland. He found liquor sold freely in from 250 to 350 places in the city—the police admitting the latter number—and as the population of Portland is under fifty thousand, this makes, counting 250 places, more than one for every 200 people, a condition worse than that of England, where there is one to every 243.

Arthur Sherwell, I feel sure, is not hostile to the logic of Prohibition as an ideal and ultimate aim, and he and Joseph Rowntree, if I understand their thesis, are supporters of what is known here as the Local Veto plan, corresponding to our Local Option; but, as already said, they think Prohibition unworkable in places of crowded population, and only to be adopted now in rural districts, where a favorable vote of two-thirds of the people can be had in its support. And, in their examination of American experience, they think this view fully borne out.

It is not my purpose in this letter to do anything more than outline the facts and views presented in the book. They are certainly entitled to fair consideration and frank discussion. They are meant primarily, of course, for English readers, and for use in England, and the book, which is now in its fifth edition, has been widely read here in the last six months, and reviewed and discussed by the leading newspapers and periodicals. A good article upon it, in the Contemporary Review for last month, was by Canon Hicks, of Manchester, one of the leaders in the great Temperance organization of Great Britain, the United Kingdom Alliance. He takes the view, while acknowledging its great merits, that the book has in its general outline of the Temperance problem, the appearance of needless unfriendliness to Prohibition, and that it would have been better not to emphasize so strongly the argument of its failure of enforcement in urban populations. This has been somewhat my own view, and yet, as suggested above, what answer can be made in behalf of Prohibition in the cities, if Portland's example is to be cited? I do not know what answer is made by Mrs. Stevens, the head, now, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who is a resident in Maine, and must know the disregard of the law in the cities, but perhaps Arthur Sherwell may have conferred with her and obtained her views.

The situation of English politics is such that a division among the Liberals on the Temperance issue might be very serious to that party, who, anticipating the general election of members of Parliament next year, are looking forward to the contest with great hopes of changing the ministry, or at the least of reducing the present great conservative majority to a narrow margin. There have been some troublesome incidents in close relation to this line of danger. In one Parliamentary division of Yorkshire, the Osgaldcross, a "by-election" took place last month, in consequence of the resignation of Sir John Austin, a Liberal, but not a "Local Veto" man. The Local Veto Liberals put up a candidate against Sir John—who stood again, in order to show that he had the support of his constituency—and he polled nearly 3,000 votes. Frederick Andrews, the head-master of Ackworth School, was active in the support of the Temperance candidate, who was a Mr. Roberts, an earnest and capable man. (He is the son-in-law of the Earl of Carlisle; a Conservative, but Lady Carlisle, who is a Liberal, canvassed the division in company with Mr. Roberts, going about everywhere among the people and to the meetings.) As the Conservatives put forward no candidate, Sir John Austin was reelected by a large majority, but the Temperance vote was so large as to make it certain that the division would be lost to the Liberals, if these candidates ran at the general election.

The Rowntree and Sherwell book devotes particular attention to the enormous political influence exerted by "the Trade," the distillers, brewers, and public-house licensees. They estimate that the capital controlled by them in Great Britain is £250,000,000, which must be multiplied nearly five times to be expressed in dollars. They count that 388 Conservative members of the House of Commons favor "the Trade," while nine only are unfriendly to it, and thirteen doubtful. On the other hand, they estimate that 172 Liberals are unfriendly to it, while only five are friendly, and two are doubtful. Under such conditions it will be easily seen on which side the tremendous influence of the manufacturers and venders of drink is likely to be used, and the book undertakes to show that in the Parliamentary election of 1895 it accounted largely for the enormous Conservative majority, on which the present Government rests.

Much more might be said on the subject, but this will serve, I think, for the present purpose, which is explanation, not argument.

London, Eighth month 28.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

A VISIT TO INDIANA FRIENDS.—II.

SOON after closing my last letter in the home of Benjamin Nichols at Huntingdon, our friends Margaretta Walton and Anna Mary Martin came in and we spent a few hours together very pleasantly, they leaving to reach Benjaminville, Illinois, to attend Blue River Quarterly Meeting previous to their attendance of Illinois Yearly Meeting.

We left Huntingdon at 12.45 p. m., for Camden, going first to Kingsland, where we had to wait a little over three hours for our connections to Montpelier, Ind. On our arrival at the latter place, we were met by Albert Grizzell and taken ten miles to his hospitable home at Camden, Ind. It was very dry and dusty, but we had a comfortable ride, arriving at his home a little after dark.

Fifth-day morning, Eighth month 31, we called at the home of Chalkley Meredith and wife. His mother, aged about ninety, was an old acquaintance of Eliza's. After a pleasant call there we went to the home of Isaac Underwood, where we remained until the meeting hour, 11 a. m. Quite a goodly number of Friends gathered, much larger than we had expected from their scattered situation. The message given seemed to be satisfactory, and from expressions heard assured a more earnest desire for increased faithfulness in the future. After meeting we went home with David Hoover and wife, and passed an agreeable afternoon with him and his family. Toward evening we drove to the home of Joseph Jones for a call, but did not find them at home. We then went to Warren Gregg's for tea and to stay the night; there we found an interesting family of five girls yet in young life. In the morning we held an appointed meeting in the Methodist house, which was largely attended, and appeared to be a very satisfactory season to those visited.

We had to make an early start on Sixth-day morning, to ride twelve miles to reach our train at Portland, Ind., at 9 a. m., to go on to Richmond. This was the most disagreeable ride we had yet had, owing to the deep dust and the wind at our backs. We arrived at Richmond at 10.30 a. m., and were met by our kind friend Joseph Ratliff, and taken to his home to await the departure of our train for Camden, Ohio, near which Whitewater Quarter was to convene under the new arrangement for its holding. We had a detention of nearly two hours, owing to the train being behind time, which made it rather late in reaching our destination. We were taken to the home of F. Ashbury and Mary Bell, where we were nicely entertained for the night.

Seventh-day morning the Meeting of Ministers and Elders convened at 8 a. m. The meeting for worship convened at 10 a. m., and proved to be a baptizing season, closing about 11.30, and a recess was taken for an abundant lunch about 1.30. The meeting for business convened, and was conducted in much harmony and deep feeling. At the close of this meeting the First-day School Association met and an interesting program was presented, which was much enjoyed by all present.

At the close of the meeting we returned to the home of the Bells, and after resting a short time started for the train to take us back to Richmond, arriving there at 7.20 p. m.

First-day morning opened warm and sultry, but a good-sized meeting gathered, to whom the gospel message of Love as evidenced by the teachings of Jesus was given, and seemed to reach many hearts. Another well-attended meeting was held in the evening. The tender expressions of satisfaction with our visit at Eliza's old home and our labors among them were a source of much gratification to us. This afternoon we proceed to another meeting, and we hope to conclude our labors in this visit by next First-day.

JOHN J. CORNELL.

Richmond, Indiana, Ninth month 4, 1899.

NOTTINGHAM QUARTERLY MEETING.

This meeting was held at East Nottingham, Cecil county, Md., Sixth-day, Ninth month 1. The weather was fine and the attendance quite large.

William Wood, of Baltimore, who was the first speaker, began with the words, "That which is known of God is manifested within man; for God is the teacher of his people himself," and presented our individual responsibility in the performance of life's duties, and the necessity of obedience to spiritual guidance, that our souls may have true life, giving the consciousness of the great truths that God is love, and the universal Father of the human and material world. He urged the necessity of holding fast the principles of purity, excellence, and simplicity in daily life. The sense of wrong-doing gives us unrest; the turning to the Father gives peace. There was no penalty required of the Prodigal son; just the willingness to return and a sense of his condition; and so may we receive the benediction of peace and joy from our Heavenly Father.

Chalkley Webster, of Penn's Grove, arose with the words, "Wait upon God; is there anything more important?" and continued with a presentation of the high standard of man's creation, "only a little lower than the angels," and the great necessity of conforming our lives to the Divine will, that we be spared the feeling that Adam experienced after his transgression, of wishing to hide when we hear the voice of God in our hearts, and showing the necessity of cleansing our words, thoughts, and actions, that we may be prepared for our eternal home. "To-day is life; let us learn these things now; for to know them is life eternal."

Samuel Broomell, of Chester county, Pa., began his exhortation with the words, "There is much to be gained by reflection on the work and teachings of Jesus," that we may have the Christ power awake within us to speak peace and calmness when the storms arise on our voyage on the sea of life. And as we have this spirit within us, so will we be led up to a higher plane of life. "Let us labor for that which will bring peace, joy, and harmony to our souls."

Mary H. Way, of Oxford, next arose, with the inquiry, "Shall we this morning thank God for answered prayers; for faithful feet?" and after expressions of thankfulness for the spiritual presence manifest in the meeting, continued with the earnest desire that all present might have come for spiritual strengthening, and that there might exist the true condition of charity or love, which accords to everyone the right of following the peculiar customs and ordinances of religious practice which are to them most helpful. Then came the inquiry as to what constitutes true marriage and a perfect home, showing them to be the results of faithful lives. "The outward manifestation of Christ is beautiful, but the indwelling of the holy spirit is better." She then addressed a condition felt to be present, which had known and given expression to the sweetness and strength of the spirit, but did not so now; pleading for a return to that which had been departed from. "Do that which Christ metes out as thy individual duty, and so shalt thou learn the meaning of the power of God unto salvation."

Samuel Broomell and Howard Coates gave earnest expressions of the importance of the business meeting and the interest which should be taken therein by all, and especially by those in the early walks of life. Chalkley Webster appeared in supplication, and the business considerations of the meeting were taken up, during which there was a continuation of earnest feeling and expression by several present. The statistical report for the past year showed within the limits of the Quarterly Meeting a loss of membership from various causes, chiefly by death, of thirty-six, with an increase of nineteen, leaving a net loss of seventeen. But while there has been a decrease in numbers, there was felt to have been an increase and spreading of the great truths and principles of the Master, which are the fundamental principles of the Society.

SETH L. KINSEY.

Delta, Pa., Ninth month 4, 1899.

BLUE RIVER QUARTERLY MEETING.

This meeting commenced its series of meetings with that for Ministers and Elders, on Sixth-day afternoon, Ninth month 1, with representatives from all of our subordinates; Chicago, 125 miles distant, Blue River, near 300, Richland and Clear Creek, each about 60 miles. These figures are given that an idea may be had of the distance our representatives are obliged to travel in order to attend their superior meetings. And this is not accomplished without considerable sacrifice on the part of some, as to time, money, and business. Yet many of these feel that any sacrifice in these particulars is amply repaid to them in the satisfaction they derive from this social and religious mingling.

Our friend Margaretta Walton, of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, was drawn, by love that knows no separation in feeling by distance in miles, to be with us on this occasion, helping us by words of counsel and encouragement. Her companion, Anna Mary Martin, was not able to be with her this afternoon. During the exercises the query was put, Can we maintain our principles, as a Society, without meeting together for worship?

In the evening an interesting session of the Quarterly Conference of First-day schools was held, in which a paper was read on the propriety or desirability of Friends uniting with the schools of other denominations in township, county, and State work, the general feeling of the Conference being that it is best to do so.

Seventh-day, at 10 a. m., the quarterly meeting convened, with a larger attendance than sometimes. The silence was broken by the voice of prayer from Edward Coale, followed by Thomas H. Trueblood quoting the words of Jesus, "I am the vine," etc., and querying whether we know of an individual grafting on to the true vine, and experience a spiritual baptism.

Margaretta Walton then spoke of the disciples asking Jesus how to pray, and how he was willing to teach them; the daily bread that He taught them to pray for was not that alone that was required for the sustenance of the physical body, but a spiritual food, also. And what is this daily bread? By doing our daily duties we become strengthened for their performance, and in this way they become to us the bread of God. We must endeavor to get out of the hindering things of time, to climb above them, as did Zaccheus of old, when he climbed the tree to look over obstructions that obscured his vision as he endeavored to see Jesus. The young were earnestly appealed to not to delay listening to the call of the Father; parents were tenderly reminded of their responsibilities towards their children; those advanced in years were lovingly encouraged to a perseverance in their work so nearly finished, and all were exhorted to an increased outward manifestation of an inward principle.

After the lunch at the noon hour we proceeded the business of the Quarter, which was transacted in a spirit of condescension to one another's opinions. All of the queries were read, and some of the answers elicited expressions of interest and concern.

Some of us have long felt that these quarterly gatherings should be made occasions of more than the common interest of routine business (and the quarter has but little else), and that subjects of general interest and of vital importance to the welfare of our Society in common, and of our own localities, should be freely discoursed upon, under the belief that such a course would tend to encourage the growth of life among us; as our dear friend, M. W. said, might lead to an "increase of the outward manifestation of an inward principle," and we hope some day in the near future to inaugurate something of the kind.

First-day morning, quite a large audience gathered; the weather was extremely warm, and the dust lay thick in the roads; our eastern friends, who visited us at Clear Creek, two years ago, no doubt have a vivid recollection of the physical discomforts experienced then, from these combined causes, which are in full force at this time, and can sympathize with those in attendance here, now; yet, notwithstanding this, the meeting was quiet and attentive, seemingly hungry for the bread that was handed forth by several exercised minds. Prayers were offered, seeming to pave the way for the communications following. Abel Mills reminded us of the promise, that all should know the Lord, from the least to the greatest, which was a comforting thought; none need be excluded; all could come, if they would. M. Walton spoke of the happiness of children when they obey their parents, comparing us all to children; when we obey the promptings of the divine voice in our souls, we are happy. A caution was extended lest we be too hasty in judging our brother when he strays from what we deem right; we know not what may be his temptation, what difficulties he may have had to contend with, or what struggles he may have made to overcome these, and we should be careful not to give him the harsh word. The efficacy of prayer was dwelt upon, not that we can, by praying, change the Lord's will, but it will bring us into a condition to accept cheerfully that will, whatever it be. A mother's prayers for her child were spoken of, and the speaker said she would not separate the father's prayers from the mother's, for both have duties in common toward their children. They were tenderly advised to endeavor not to be too busy to find a little time, a few minutes every day, for silent communion with their Heavenly Father to gain strength for the better performance of life's serious duties. To those who have arrived at an age when they are beginning to think about selecting a life-companion the speaker addressed words of affectionate counsel, showing the necessity of wisdom in making their choice, and portraying the comfort and satisfaction resulting from a wise choice. Those who are far advanced in life, and who have not yet bowed their necks to the yoke of duty to their God, were reminded that but little time is left for work, and urged to employ it diligently. We were advised not to measure our gifts with those of others, but use to the best of our ability the talents our Father has given us, no matter what others may have or do, for, "What is that to thee?" When trials come, when sorrow overtakes us, when in our affliction we feel we are left alone, with none to turn to, then come to the stricken, faithful heart the words, "Am I not with thee?"

At the close of the meeting, prayer was offered, as of praise on the banks of deliverance.

A meeting being appointed for evening service, quite a large assembly gathered; a cool breeze having sprung up, the intense heat was somewhat relieved. Much vocal exercise was offered by E. C., A. M., and M. W., the first dilating on our moral rights, quite extensively and clearly. A. M. said there were two kinds of false worshipers; idol worshipers and idle worshipers, and queried whether we are as clear of being the latter kind, as we claim to be of the first. Among many other good things from M. W. were her words on the benefit to be derived from useful occupation, when the spirit is borne down with sorrow: working for others lifts us out of the depths, and we find there is something to do for our Master.

The meeting closed with the feeling that it had been good for us to be there, as was evidenced by the crowding up of all, to take the hands of those who had been led to visit us in gospel love. Especially did the younger portion of the meeting seem to realize the worth of the testimonies borne.

M. W.'s companion attended all the meetings but the one for Ministers and Elders. The social mingling with these dear Friends was not the least pleasing feature of their visit, which will long be remembered by all who met them. After the meetings they visited a few families.

And thus has Blue River Quarterly Meeting of Ninth month, '99, gone into history, as one not soon to be forgotten, and this sketch, though long, is not long enough, or concise enough, to convey an adequate idea of it, as experienced by those attending it.

Holder III.

ELIZABETH H. COALE.

DUANESBURG QUARTERLY MEETING. •

Duanesburg Quarterly Meeting was held at Quaker street, New York, the 3d and 4th of Ninth month. The Meeting of Ministers and Elders, held on Seventh-day, was small, but we were refreshed and strengthened by the presence and precious words of counsel and encouragement from our dear friends Henry and Sarah M. Haviland, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

On First-day morning Friends arrived from Troy and Albany, and with them Henry W. Wilbur and wife, of New York. Helpful words were spoken in the First-day school to both teachers and scholars. At 11 o'clock the minister, and most of the congregation of the Christian church, gathered with Friends for worship, as has been the custom at this time. After a short period of quiet waiting, our dear friend Sarah M. Haviland spoke to us earnestly and impressively of the value of true silence in our meetings,—that it was not time lost, but if the mind was rightly gathered, we should know of that sweet communion wherein we might exclaim with the Psalmist, "Be still, and know that I am God."

She was followed by Henry W. Wilbur, who spoke of the "new heavens and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." He referred to the physical changes continually going on in this old earth of ours, of the creative power still operating in leveling or upbuilding, and perfecting all for man's better habitation; of the changes, also, in our physical frame; of the constant waste and new growth which impart new vigor and new life; of the great advancement in art and science even in the last century; of the tremendous growth in intellectual achievement, and then of our spiritual growth,—how best to attain it, how so to coöperate with God that righteousness may prevail, and that the building of life and character into the image and likeness of God is our whole business here.

On First-day afternoon a special meeting was called, and conference held, at the suggestion of a committee appointed by our last yearly meeting to endeavor in some way to develop a greater interest and a reawakening of Friendly sentiment in the vicinity of our smaller meetings. The meeting was quite well attended, some active interest manifested, and some new thought expressed, which, it is hoped, will be productive of good to our meeting and to individuals.

In the evening Friends met by invitation in the Christian church, it being well filled by an appreciative audience. After the opening exercises our Friend H. W. Wilbur spoke from the text, "Zaccheus, come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house." He said: "It is well sometimes to gain the heights, that we may have a clearer vision, but we must come down to the level of the masses before we can do them good. He cited the works of Jesus, so wonderfully and constantly helpful to those about him, and said along these lines of helpful activity, in the service of humanity, lies our most acceptable worship, and from this springs the development of the highest and best in our nature, because of the abiding principle of Christ in the soul. He spoke at all times with earnestness and logical clearness, and was listened to with marked attention and appreciation.

On Second-day morning, at 10 o'clock, we again gathered for worship and for the business of the quarterly meeting. Sarah M. Haviland arose with the words, "If ye knowt these things, happy are ye if ye do them," urging all to greater faithfulness to known duty, and to continued desires for more steadfast abiding-near that Divine power which is not only able to make known to the attentive mind what are the requirements, but to prepare the way, and crown us with the peace of satisfied endeavor.

Our friend H. W. Wilbur again spoke, quoting the words of the Psalmist, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life;" not only keep pure the source and fountain of physical life for the fit dwelling-place of the Holy Spirit, but so coöperate with the Divine mind, that the very best possible life shall be the result.

At the close of this discourse the meeting entered upon its business in joint session. Much expression was given of love and unity with our visiting Friends, whose labor in Gospel love at this time has not only refreshed and strengthened our little body of Friends, but has, we believe, extended its influence for good for miles around in this community.

M. J. HOAG.

Is it not to a considerable extent true that as man advances in life, work becomes his real play and suffering his real work; that a few months, or a few weeks, spent in what are beautifully called "God's prisons," do more to fit the soul for immortality than years of activity?—J. B. Mosley.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

IN QUIET WATERS.

II.—UP THE DELAWARE.

THE rivers of England are perhaps without rivals in the world, for to their scenic beauty is added the crowning interest of prolonged and immemorial human association. The tranquil Thames, winding through golden meadows and past the cloisters of Oxford and of Eton, reflecting in its bosom alike the hoary towers of Windsor and the sedges of Runnymede; the pastoral Avon, beside whose green shores the boy Shakespeare must often have dreamed; the Duddon and the Wye, with their memories of Wordsworth; the mighty Severn, flowing by the grave of Hallam, and rich with old Celtic memories;—these and a score of other English streams are so freighted with romance and association that their very names are beautiful.

Hundreds of years must flow by ere our American rivers become so surcharged with the glamor of a storied past; yet we have many a stream whose natural beauty may easily be enhanced if one will bring to his enjoyment of them an imagination open to the inner meaning of things,—the spiritual vision which Wordsworth has awakened in the lovers of his poetry. Such a stream is the Delaware; the ride from Wilmington northward towards Trenton, when taken on a day of summer or early autumn, is one that cannot soon be forgotten. The broad, majestic aspect of the lower river, and the more pastoral beauty of the upper stretches, might not inaptly be compared to the special charm of the Severn and of the Thames respectively.

Gazing upon the shipping, as the steamboat cleaves the broad tide of the river above Wilmington, one is impressed with the pictures made by the varied craft that sail or steam along the watery highway. Here are slow barges with wide spread of dark canvas glassed in the clear tide; hay-boats piled high with fragrant brown and green grass cut in Delaware marshes; great steamers that are soon to trample the wide ocean's paths, bound for some far port or tropic isle, sweeping majestically past, and soon to fade over the soft horizon, leaving nothing but a trail of ghostly smoke behind.

Along the shores are frequent river walls that hold back the waters from the rich underlands where bloom the blue-starred flags and tall weeds of golden flower. Country-houses and villas are nestled among the trees on the high Pennsylvania shores, and on the opposite banks stand silent woodlands that reach inland and stretch away league upon league in misty beauty.

A glorious river this;—its wide, brimming tides, unruffled in their serenity, unwearying in their stately onward sweep, are the symbol of power and majesty and endurance, teaching us the lesson of faithfulness and silent, unwavering devotion. One who would try to record in some small measure his impressions of the river's deeper significance must say, with good old Sir John Denham,—

"O, could I flow like thee, and make thy Stream
My great Example, as it is my Theme!"

Passing the serried masts, the tangle of dark cordage, and the clangor and unrest of the Philadelphia wharves, the traveler finds himself once more amid green waters and green meadow-lands. In our wake the clean white foam tumbles and breaks and wastes away on the far water-line. We pass the shady towns that slope to the stream-side,—Riverton and Beverly, Burlington and Bristol,—the beauty and soft charm of the peaceful scenery increasing with every mile. Here is hardly a suggestion of the commercial aspect of the river, as it winds between placid fields and enchanted woods.

The ripeness and glamor of the coming autumn brood over these farms and orchards, lighting the banks with graceful golden-rod and flushing the apples with tender crimson. Here and there white ducks are feeding among the sedges, and on the breeze comes the complaining note of some lonely water-bird. The level meadows are severed from the river's edge by corridors of white-stemmed sycamores, soft willows, and pendent water-birches. Gleaming beneath the shadows are cardinal flowers, fairest of riverside blooms, and pink mallows and boneset and blue gentians. The faint, sweet aroma of rag-weed comes from the meadows, white barley-fields stand out in contrast to the encircling green, and except for an occasional farmer with his cart, all is at rest. The very spirit of blissful peace pervades this opulent and dreamy countryside,—

"Elysian quiet, without toil or strife."

The upper Delaware has notable associations. Here, at Penn's Manor, or Pennsbury Manor as it was formerly called, once dwelt the great Founder of our commonwealth. The tradition of his residence here is all that one hears of him in the neighborhood; and of any relic of the original manor buildings little remains, save the stone foundations of the brew-house. But the landscape must be essentially unaltered, and one can imagine how dear to the great-hearted Quaker must have been his hours of retirement in this lovely and sequestered spot.

It is related that when Granville John Penn was entertained at a shad supper in Philadelphia, in 1857, on his second visit to America, one of the company remarked upon the fish's habit of returning to the same waters where it was hatched. "Is that the case?" asked the distinguished guest. "O, yes," was the reply, "and there is no doubt, Mr. Penn, that you are to-night eating part of a lineal descendant of one of the shad of which your great ancestor partook when he lived at Pennsbury Manor!" This pleasantry is said to have much amused this latest of the Penns.

At Bordentown, a few miles further up the river, is the stately park where Joseph Bonaparte, King of Naples and of Spain, found an ideal seclusion when the fortunes of his unhappy brother were waning. The mansion is now a seminary for Catholic priests; and as one sees the young acolytes slowly pacing in meditation down the silent, leafy avenues and across the wide lawns, he thinks this a happy sanctuary for those who are consecrating themselves for spiritual service in a great and venerable, though sadly misunderstood, church.

I have spoken of the charms of the ride up the Delaware. When this voyage is prelude to a visit at one of the peaceful farmsteads along the shore, where a genuine, old-time hospitality prevails and the noises of the world seem far away, one's happiness and satisfaction are complete. The days pass but too rapidly, and among the memories carried away there stands out the picture of the beauteous dream-river,—almost encircled, as it seems, with its curving shores, and fair almost as Killarney or the middle reaches of the Thames; its glassy waters at eve dying away into the mists and golden vapors of sunset, as in some wondrous painting of Turner's, touching the soul with indefinable longing and pathos.

"O happy river, could I follow thee!

O yearning heart, that never can be still!

O wistful eyes, that watch the stedfast hill."

The bright, unsullied stream, the exquisite green and gold of the sweet meadow edges, the glory of the drifting cloud-land above,—could one ask for more beautiful assurance of the Father's love for us?

J. R. H.

Literature.

WE have had a good deal in our columns of late concerning Wordsworth and the Lake Region of England. Great men and great movements awake an interest that is enduring. The latest addition to our literature on the subject in question is a study in historical criticism by Albert Elmer Hancock, Ph.D., of the Department of English, Haverford College, entitled "The French Revolution and the English Poets."

The author first prepares a background by examining the principles of the French philosophers Helvetius, Holbach, and Rousseau, and the English Godwin. He then discusses the Romantic Movement, and finally treats at large of the four poets of the Revolution, Shelley, Byron, Wordsworth, and Coleridge, in the order of their respective intensity of surrender to the enthusiasms of that great upheaval in the social and political regime. The book is a logical and adequate presentation of the subject.

Professor Lewis E. Gates, of Harvard, furnishes an admirable introductory note reconciling the scientific and æsthetic or spiritual schools of students of literature. "Science," he says, "ministers directly to the intellect only; literature, to mind and heart and will and imagination;" yet he shows that the former must be in a measure the hand-maiden of the latter.

From the chapter on Wordsworth we take one of several fine passages of characterization:

"Wordsworth's greatness has then two elements: he is the poet of healthy emotion and joy; he is also the revealer of a higher gnosis transcendent to reason. . . . What now, to resume, had the French Revolution to do with the development of Wordsworth and the making of his poetry? In a word, it was this: it humanized him. The poet passed his boyhood in isolation among the hills and the lakes; there, like a prophet apart, he derived from communion with nature an intense and unique experience. . . . When he crossed the Channel and faced for the first time the realities and ills of life, the abnormal misgrowth of society, the curative endeavors of the Revolution, the interest in man, in human affairs, became the supreme centre of his thoughts."

(New York: Henry Holt & Co.)

The Pall Mall Gazette has recently given a list of curious book titles, some of which are as follows:

"The Great Shipwreck of Fools, who are in the Hold of Ignorance, swimming in the Sea of the World; of great Effect, Profit, Utility, Value, Honor and Moral Virtue, for the Instructing of Everybody: which book is adorned with a great number of Figures, the better to demonstrate the Folly of the World." . . . "The Little Dog of the Gospel barking at the Errors of Luther'; 'The Royal Post to Paradise, very useful to those who wish to go there; a collection of the Works of Pious Doctors who have curiously treated the subject'; 'The Spiritual Snuffbox, to lead devoted Souls to Christ'; 'Sixpennyworth of Divine Spirit'; 'Seven Sobs of a Sorrowful Soul in Sin'; or, the Seven Penitential Psalms of the Princely Prophet David.' In the time of Oliver Cromwell we have 'A Reaping Hook, well tempered for the stubborn Ears of the Coming Crop,' and 'Some Beautiful Biscuits, cooled in the Oven of Charity and put aside carefully for the Fowls of the Church, the Sparrows of Spirit, and the Swallows of Salvation.' There is something terse and tailorish in 'Buttons and Button-holes for the Believer's Breeches' and cobblerlike in 'High-heeled Shoes for those who are Dwarfs in Sanctity.' Here is a title in which all kinds of imagery are mingled: 'A Sigh for the Sinners in Zion coming from a Hole in the Wall, by an Earthen Vessel known among Men under the name of Samuel Fish.'"

Edouard Rod, the distinguished French scholar who visited the United States last year to deliver a course of lectures, and incidentally to investigate the condition of the higher education in the United States, writes of "American Universities" in the current number of the North American Review in a spirit of high appreciation and admiration. M. Rod was specially impressed by the great vitality and enterprise shown not only in the multiplication of palatial buildings for the use of the universities, but in the establishment and endowment of courses of study which are unknown in the seats of learning of the Old World. While all the universities bore the unmistakable stamp of a common American character, each, he found, had an individuality of its own; and among the most taking portions of this article are those in which he delineates the special features of the various universities visited by him. M. Rod is enthusiastic in his commendation of American students.

Now that Colonel Ingersoll is dead, the question arises, What, precisely, was the influence which he exerted upon the thought and feeling of his contemporaries, and what is the likelihood that the effect of his teachings, in his writings and lectures, will prove a lasting one? That is the subject to which Rev. Dr. Henry M. Field addresses himself in his article on "Ingersoll's Influence," in the North American Review for this month. Dr. Field is singularly well qualified to deal with this topic, as he was not only an intimate personal friend of the great agonist, but was the champion of the Christian faith in the most famous religious controversy in which Colonel Ingersoll engaged.

Writing of Colonel Ingersoll's personal qualities, Dr. Field says:

"The more I became acquainted with Ingersoll, the more I was interested in his personality. He was not as other men are. The typical American is a bundle of nerves, which shows itself in his quick step, in the flash of his eye, and the gesture of his hand. When Thackeray was in New York, he would sometimes take his stand at the corner of a street to watch the passing crowd as a study in national character. Had he seen a man of stalwart frame walk slowly by he would have said: 'There goes an Englishman!' In all the years that I have known Ingersoll, I never saw him in a hurry. The crowd might rush by, but he never quickened his pace, but walked slowly as if in deep thought. When I met him in Broadway he was always ready to stop under an awning, or by a friendly door, and discuss the questions of the day. If all the wisdom that was exchanged between us had been preserved, possibly some might have been wiser, but alas, it has been blown away like the autumn leaves.

"The two gods that Americans worship are time and money. Ingersoll cared for neither. Money had no attractions for him except for the use he could make of it. I am told by one who knew of his affairs perhaps even better than Ingersoll himself, that his income from his practice at the Bar and his lectures was often not less than a hundred thousand dollars a year, yet it was soon scattered. He could not deny himself the pleasure of giving it away. The tales of his generosity had gone far and wide, and every morning there was a pile of letters on his desk from poor clerks who were starving in garrets, and young women who could not find any means of support. To such appeals he responded so bountifully that they came faster and faster. His friends warned him against the impositions that were practiced upon him, and told him that he ought to have a bureau of inquiry; but he answered that he had rather be cheated a dozen times than leave one poor girl to suffer and perhaps to die!

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

MANSFIELD, N. J.—At a meeting of the Young Friends' Association, held at the home of William L. Biddle, Eighth month 24, twenty-five members were present, with nearly as many visitors beside. The report of the Executive Committee was read by Bertha Taylor, secretary for the evening. In answer to a question Elizabeth B. Zelle gave a long and very interesting history of the people called Friends, her paper evidencing much careful thought and study in its preparation.

Sarah A. Biddle responded to the question, "Why am I a Friend?" by reading a beautiful selection from the INTELLIGENCER on the subject. A paper on the same subject, prepared by a member of another association, was also read by the secretary; it contained many beautiful thoughts which all true Friends could appreciate.

Anna Biddle read "Grandma's Answer," and Mattie Taylor recited "Queen o' the May." After a brief silence we adjourned to meet at Robert Taylor's, Ninth month 21.

MARTHA E. GIBBS, Secretary.

WOODSTOWN, N. J.—The Educational Conference held in the Friends' meeting-house, Ninth month 6, was opened by Jessie Colson reading the 4th chapter of Proverbs. Deborah Leeds, of Chadd's Ford, Pa., very ably addressed the meeting on "Thoughts for Mothers as to the Training of Children." She advised that parents should have confidences with their children, but teach them never to have secrets with their little companions. Truth is the first lesson to teach a child. It is the privilege of parents to lay the foundation for good habits while the child is young and impressionable. You should teach even very small children that nothing but evil can come from intemperance and impurity, fighting and quarrelling. War and intemperance go hand in hand. Selfishness is one of the greatest sins in the world. We will meet on a level in Heaven; then let us live nearer on a level here on earth.

After remarks by several on this subject, Florence Moore gave a recitation, "An Earnest Cry." William W. Birdsall, President of Swarthmore College, gave an address on "The Education of the Older Children." He thought the broad and central purpose for which we should train our children is for complete living. The principal purpose of our schools and colleges is to give our children freedom of thought and view. Our richest possession is to know how to use our minds and by this means be able to make the noblest use of our powers. Mental culture will set us free from narrow views and elevate us above commonplace ideas.

Many remarks followed this most able discourse, after which the meeting adjourned. S. H. P., Sec.

SOLEBURY, PA.—The Young Friends' Association of Solebury held its first meeting following the summer vacation, on First-day, the 10th inst., at Solebury meeting-house.

Mattie Reeder called the meeting to order, and Edward Simpson read the minutes. The report of appointments for next month was given by Hugh W. Michener, as follows: "Is the United States justifiable in the acquisition of the Philippines?"—Florence R. Kenderdine; Recitation, Laura Haddock; Discussion of the Peace Congress, Frederick L. Smith; Reading, Martha B. White. A report on Current Topics was given by John S. Williams, after which the introduction to the Discipline was read by Annie M. Smith. An address, "Give While We Live," was read by Edith Michener, and George H. Ely read an original article on "The Conflict of Labor and Capital." Marion M. Rice recited "The Quaker Widow," by Bayard Taylor.

Remarks upon the different papers were made by Seth T.

Walton, Frederick L. Smith, Annie M. Smith, Ellen K. Reeder, and Watson Kenderdine.

¶ The chair appointed the following persons to serve on the various sections : Literature, Ella B. Carter ; Current Topics, George H. Ely ; History, Martha Simpson ; Discipline, Mabel Haddock.

The members of the Executive Committee were requested to meet immediately after First-day school, on the first First-day in Tenth month.

After a brief silence the meeting adjourned until the second First-day in Tenth month, at 2.30 p. m.

FLORENCE R. KENDERDINE, Correspondent.

CORNWALL, N. Y.—The Cornwall Friends' Association met Ninth month 3, 1899, at the Seaman Homestead. Extracts from "The Life of Ann Hunt" were read by Marianna Seaman.

A paper entitled "Charity" was read by its author, Alice Mary Brown. The thought was emphasized that charity is not simply giving alms, but is "love, benevolence, good-will, that disposition of heart which leads man to think favorably of his fellow man."

After a short discussion and the giving of sentiments the meeting adjourned.

B. E. BROWN, Sec.

Educational Department.

NOTICE TO TEACHERS.

THE Committee on Education and the Disposition of the Samuel Jeanes' Fund, of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, desires to compile a register of teachers who are members of our Society, whether of our own or other yearly meetings, in order that information concerning them may be available to School Committees desiring teachers.

For this purpose it is requested that all such teachers send (1) name, (2) address, (3) references, (4) place of preparation, (5) experience in teaching, (6) present position, (7) department of work or specialty, to

LUCY S. COOPER,
633 Penn street, Camden, N. J.

The Committee desires to make the record as complete as possible, and it is hoped that all Friends engaged in teaching will respond to this request.

Martin Academy opened on the 4th instant under most favorable auspices. Seventy-nine answered to roll-call, with others to follow very soon. The class of pupils that have entered is very encouraging. They all seem energetic and enthusiastic and we predict a strong year's work.

The new teachers, Edna Pownall and Sylvia Linvill, enter into the work with a will that betokens success for them.

The Friends' First-day School re-opened also on the 3d instant, with very encouraging outlook ; nearly all the officers and teachers were in their places to greet the pupils, and everything seemed to start off very satisfactorily.

PERSONAL NOTES.

WILLIAM EVANS DARBY, LL. D., Secretary of the London Peace Society, and a member of the London bar, who has been attending the Universal Peace Union Convention at Mystic, Conn., visited Swarthmore on the evening of the 7th instant, and addressed Friends and others in the meeting-house on the subject of his experiences at The Hague Conference. He is a man of broad culture and fine address, and his visit was enjoyed by all who heard and met him. On the evening of the 9th instant Dr. Darby gave a lecture in Philadelphia on "Shakespeare's Tempest, a Study for the Times." On the 10th instant he spoke at the Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, on the subject, "The Hague Peace Conference, Its Inception, Work, and Results."

BLESSED is the man who sees the royal splendor
Hid in the landscape, though the thick fogs roll,
Whose heart is kept by Love so warm and tender
That fogs or tempests never reach his soul.

—E. L. Martin.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

TO MY FATHER.

How with the joyous ardor of thy youth
Thou bearest all thy weight of toiling years !
How fresh and fair thy westerling path appears
Flushed with the morning crimson that reneweth
Thy life at even ! The same sun of Truth
That blessed thy soul's uprising ever cheers
Its onward way ; and as the close it nears
Of thy clear day, with deeper rose imbue
Thine atmosphere, till a reflected glow
Gleams upon gray horizons not so fired
With fine enthusiasms. 'Oh ! if inspired
Sometimes with noble thought, what debt I owe
To thee, my father, not alone in blood,
But in that deeper life that yearneth toward the Good.

OAKES BURLEIGH.

TO A SKYLARK.

Written on seeing one restlessly endeavoring to escape from its cage, at a bird-fancier's, in Philadelphia.

AGAINST thy prison-bars still fiercely beating
With restless wings, striving to find thy way
Out from thy gloomy cell and give thy greeting
Triumphant to the broad and glorious day,
In vain endeavor thus thy short and fleeting
And cheerless life thou here wilt wear away.

Poor alien, can it be that thou art haunted
By visions such as the sad exile sees,
Of some deep, amethystine gulf enchanted,
Far in the bosom of the Pyrenees,
Where, by no hand of mortal ever planted,
Wild blooms are reddening for the golden bees ?

Or, maddening dreams of some blue lakelet lying 'Mid the white Alps, mirroring but the sun,
A star, or warbling skylark o'er it flying
To meet the morn, or, when the day is done,
Sinking unto his mate, and sweetly trying
His vespers o'er his nest so nearly won ?

Or, yet, of England's hills, and of the auroral
And crimson beams flushing the orient through ;
Upon her highland-moors the rose-tints floral
Deepening on heath-bells wet with sweetest dew,
Longing, with longing vain, to join the choral
And exquisite chaunt far in those skies of blue ?

Thy alien fellow-captives never greeting,
Gathered in this dim cell from many lands,
Thou wearest out thy little life and fleeting,
Striving all vainly with thy prison-bands,
Beating against them with a restless beating,
To gain that Temple grand not made with hands.

—Howard Worcester Gilbert (a late Chester County poet).

LETTY'S GLOBE.

WHEN Letty had scarce pass'd her third glad year,
And her young, artless words began to flow,
One day we gave the child a color'd sphere
Of the wide earth, that she might mark and know,
By tint and outline, all its sea and land.
She patted all the world ; old empires peep'd
Between her baby fingers ; her soft hand
Was welcome at all frontiers. How she leap'd,
And laugh'd, and prattled in her world-wide bliss ;
But when we turn'd her sweet, unlearn'd eye
On our own isle, she raised a joyous cry,
"O ! yes, I see it, Letty's home is there !"
And, while she hid all England with a kiss,
Bright over Europe fell her golden hair.

—Charles Tennyson-Turner.

WRONG ever builds on quicksands, but the Right
To the firm centre lays its moveless base.

—James Russell Lowell.

Social Restlessness in Italy.

Manchester Guardian.

THERE is perhaps more in the Pope's continued protests against his exclusion from the Peace Conference than appears upon the surface. It was natural enough that he should attempt to obtain recognition as a temporal sovereign from the Congress at The Hague. That is of a piece with the consistent policy of the Papacy ever since the armies of United Italy entered Rome, now nearly thirty years ago. Were King Humbert as popular with his subjects as his father, the policy of the Vatican would hardly call for a passing comment. But there is a restlessness in Italy to-day which lends a certain importance to the hostile attitude of the Church. Ever since the Chamber was prorogued and the Coercion Bill promulgated by Royal decree there have been ominous signs of an alliance between the Republican Left and the Clerical Right. Between them they have carried the municipal elections in Milan and other great centres of population. There is again the same dearth of bread which led to the Milan riots, and it is significant that the Cabinet has just ordered the sale, at a low price, of the wheat stored in the military granaries. It may be possible for modern Italy to govern its peasantry by doles of wheat, as the Romans managed their hordes of freedmen. Underfed and overtaxed, they seem to have drifted into a state of apathy that suggests anæmia; but, on the other hand, both the Church and the Garibaldian organization are showing signs of active discontent.

Keep the Birthdays.

KEEP the birthdays religiously. They belong exclusively to and are treasured among the sweetest memories of home. Do not let anything prevent some token, be it ever so slight, to show that it is remembered. Birthdays are great events to children. For one day they feel they are heroes. The special pudding is made expressly for them; a new jacket, trousers with pockets, or the first pair of boots is donned, and his brothers and sisters sink into insignificance beside "little Charlie," who is "six to-day," and is soon "going to be a man." Fathers who have half a dozen little ones to care for, are apt to neglect birthdays—they come too often. Sometimes they are too busy, and sometimes they are bothered; but if they only knew how much such souvenirs are cherished by their children years afterward, when, away from the hearthstone, they have added one more year to the perhaps weary round of life; or would wish them, in the good, old-fashioned phrase, "many happy returns of their birthday," they would never permit any cause to step between them and a parent's privilege. —Exchange.

CURRENT EVENTS.

CAPTAIN DREYFUS was convicted by the court martial before which his case has been tried. With the exception of the Jesuit organs in Rome and the anti-Semite papers, the press of the whole world is ringing with execration. Even the Russian press joins in the chorus, although, perhaps, the Jews are nowhere more hated than in Russia. The judges are everywhere described as criminals, and gloomy speculations are indulged as to what future is in store for France.

THE Peary-Harmsworth steamer Windward arrived at New Foundland on the 10th inst. Lieutenant Peary and the sledge parties were in the field almost continuously from autumn, 1898, to summer of this year, and have effected an extraordinary amount of important work, bearing on the future of his own expedition, and adding much to the geographical knowledge of the coast line and the interior of Ellesmere Land, the southern portion of Grinnell Land. His sledging journeys aggregated more than 1,000 miles, including several trips repeated over portions of the track.

THE Philadelphia Exposition was formally opened this week, prominent officials taking part in the exercises.

The judges who constituted the court martial at Rennes have signed "a formal recommendation for mercy" to President Loubet, urging him not to enforce the degradation feature of Dreyfus's sentence. A dispatch from Paris also says that the Premier has intimated that Dreyfus will be pardoned by January 1. This has given the prisoner renewed hope.

THE Secretary of War has appointed a Central Porto Rican Relief Committee to systematize the work and prevent confusion and waste of effort.

THE steamer Philadelphia, from Venezuelan ports, brings news of the spread of the revolution and the waning strength of the Government. The insurgent leader, General Citiriano Castro, has 10,000 men under his command.

According to the same authority, a strict censorship of cable dispatches has been established; mail matter is freely opened, and a close watch is kept upon out-going passengers. President Andrade has purchased a Spanish gunboat, with an equipment of eight guns, for $135,000.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY
Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN
Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS
Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK
Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
EOKSTEIN }
ATLANTIC }
BRADLEY }
BROOKLYN } New York.
JEWETT }
ULSTER }
UNION }
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL }
SOUTHERN }
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO
Philadelphia.
MORLEY
Cleveland.
SALEM
Salem, Mass.
CORNELL
Buffalo.
KENTUCKY
Louisville.

THE truth of the matter is, there are so many mixtures of Zinc, Barytes, Whiting, etc., sold under misleading brands of "White Lead" and "Pure White Lead," that in order to obtain Pure White Lead it is absolutely necessary to make sure that the brand is right.

Those named in the margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

A SWEDISH officer named Kuylenstjerne, who is at present traveling in China, reports that the Manchurian Railway cannot be completed under five years, partly because all the wood has to be imported from America, and partly because most of the 12,000 Chinese laborers who had been engaged went home again, being dissatisfied with the treatment they received at the hands of the Russians, and unable to endure the cold winter.

—Fishermen who have returned from the cod fishing grounds on the Labrador coast report a serious condition of affairs. The cod fishery has been almost an absolute failure, and all vessels are returning with small fares. As the fisheries are the chief support of the people, it is feared their failure will be followed by starvation in many parts of Labrador unless assistance is forthcoming.

—Drivers for electric vehicles are so scarce in London that one concern has been compelled to give up business.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873.

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 23, 1899.

Volume LVI.
Number 38.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XXXVIII.

It is not opinion, or speculation, or notions of what is true, or assent to articles or propositions, though never so soundly worded, that makes a man a true believer or a true Christian; but it is the conformity of the mind and practice to the will of God. WILLIAM PENN.

TWO WINGS.

By two wings man is lifted from the things of earth—
Simplicity and purity.
Simplicity must be the keynote to his motive :
Purity the keynote to his love.
His motive aims at God ;
His love embraces and enjoys Him.

—Thomas a' Kempis.

THE BIRMINGHAM SUMMER SCHOOL.

THE "Summer School" work of the English Friends began in 1897 with the school held at Scarborough. That gathering proved so satisfactory that the committee on the subject of Continuation decided to hold a second one this year at Birmingham.

Answering the question, What is a Summer School? it may be said that in this instance it is a meeting for a fortnight of several hundred persons, mostly Friends, to hear lectures, addresses, and papers. The lectures are by scholars and experts, mainly in reference to the Scriptures, and Biblical history, while the addresses and essays, by others well qualified, relate to general religious or ethical subjects, or to questions affecting Friends.

At Birmingham, this year, the members of the School gathered on the 4th instant. The first list of Members contained about six hundred names, and a supplementary list added one hundred more, so that it may be said there were about seven hundred in attendance. Many were entertained in private houses, others found their own lodgings. All were desired to take luncheon and dinner (at 1 o'clock and 7), in the large rooms in Upper Priory street, near the main meeting-house of Friends in Birmingham, in Bull street. The lectures and papers were presented in a large hall conveniently near, and the meeting-house and its adjacent premises were used for a reception room, writing-room, committee meetings, etc. Birmingham Friends are famous as skillful organizers, and all the arrangements had been made with a thoroughness and completeness from which those who have similar undertakings in hand might learn much. It hardly seemed as if any detail had been unanticipated, and so left unarranged.

The list of lecturers included Professor Robert W. Rogers and Professor A. C. McGiffert, Dr. J. Rendel Harris, Professor W. T. Davison, Prof. W. M. Ramsay, Professor A. S. Peake, and G. B. Gray, M. A. Paul Sabatier, the distinguished French author of the Life of Francis of Assisi, had been expected, but was too ill to come. Pastor Cremer, of the French Protestant church, spoke one morning on French Protestantism—which is but about 500,000 people in nearly forty millions—and there was an address by John Wilhelm Rowntree, on "Responsibilities of a Free Ministry," with a series of papers, "Studies in Personal Illumination," by Joan M. Fry (Tauler and Boehme), John William Graham (Isaac Penington), Dr. J. Rendel Harris (Madame Guyon), and Horace E. Govan (Terstegen). The "Development of Christian Morality" was treated in papers by William C. Braithwaite, and Edward Grubb. On the opening evening, Canon H. D. Rawnsley (of Keswick, whose charge there is the Crosthwaite church, where Southey is buried), gave a lecture on the "Franciscan Monastery of La Verna," in Italy, the final refuge and home of Francis of Assisi (1224–26), and in connection with this George E. Thompson gave a fine exhibition of lantern pictures. As part of the School program, also, a public meeting was held on the evening of the 5th instant, in the great Town Hall of Birmingham, at which the chairman was John Edward Ellis, M. P., and an address was delivered on "Commercial Morality," by Sir Edward Fry, of Bristol, formerly one of the judges of the higher English courts, and a distinguished legal and judicial authority.

Devotional meetings were held each morning from 9.30 to 9.50. Classes in Greek and Hebrew were also instructed daily.

This outline of the program may give some idea of the general character and scope of the work, though it is necessarily meagre. Of the lecturers, Prof. Rogers and McGiffert are well known American scholars,—the former has repeatedly lectured on Old Testament history, etc., before our Friends' schools; and the latter is that member of the faculty of Union Theological Seminary, New York City, whose treatment of the "Supper" in his recently published history of the Early Christian Church has brought him under censure of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and may occasion his trial for "heresy." His lectures were four in number—two on "The Spiritual Conception of the Church," and two others treating of the "Supper," in the light of modern study of the Scriptures. Prof. Rogers had a series of five lectures on "The Enemies of Israel," and he made very real, in his emphatic and animated way, the story of the assaults upon the Jewish people and the other communities along the western end of the Mediterranean, by the Assyrians,—giving, as he said, these chapters of the Old Testament from the records of "the other side," the tablets found at Nineveh and elsewhere, in modern explorations.

Two of the other lecturers, Prof. Davison and Prof. Peake, were, like Prof. Rogers, members of the Methodist body, though Prof. Davison is classified not under that exact name but as a "Wesleyan." He had a course of three lectures on "The Poetical Literature of the Old Testament," sympathetic and scholarly studies of the Psalms, Proverbs, Job, the (so-called) Song of Solomon, Ecclesiastes, etc. Profs. Peake, Ramsay, and Gray were in the second week's program, and I therefore did not hear them; their subjects were "Episodes in the Life of Paul," "Pauline Theology," and "Growth of Moral Ideas in the Old Testament."

Dr. J. Rendel Harris, who may be regarded as the leading spirit in the organization of the Summer School, is a Friend, well known in both England and America. Connected in late years with Clare College at the University of Cambridge, he was formerly associated with Johns Hopkins University and Haverford College. He is an authority on ancient manuscripts, and has devoted much attention to those of the Bible, especially the New Testament. He spoke particularly in his lectures of an "Apocryphal Gospel," resembling if not identical with, the "Gospel of the Twelve Apostles," which is known to have existed about the Second Century. A manuscript of this, with added leaves of an Apocalypse, both ascribed to about the Eighth Century, he has recently found in Syria, and he recently exhibited the "find," for the first time at the Summer School, and read the English translation as part of his lectures.

It will be pretty well understood from this summary that the "School" is a serious and systematic course of study. The great majority of those who attend come for earnest work. The program of the day, after the devotional meeting, began at 10 a. m., and included three lectures of three-quarters of an hour each, up to 12.45, with two fifteen-minute intervals. At 1, lunch was served in the large dining-halls of the Upper Priory adult-school building, and then the afternoon was free for excursions into the surrounding country, by rail or bicycle, for visits to Birmingham's "city sights," or for other engagements. On two afternoons, the 6th and 13th garden parties were given at Edgbaston,—one of the city's most pleasant residential quarters,—the former of which, in the beautiful grounds of John Edward Wilson's home, "Wyddrington," I had the pleasure of attending. The evenings were all occupied by lectures and addresses, from 8 to 9 o'clock. Three of these,—by Canon Rawnsley, John Wilhelm Rowntree, and Prof. Rogers, I was able to hear. The fourth, by Joan M. Fry, I was obliged to forego, as I left Birmingham at noon of that day.

Of the full significance and importance of this Summer School movement in England I cannot here speak, but the work is both significant and important. A fuller and more accurate knowledge of the sources and of the character of the Scriptures will have, and is having, a broadening influence upon the Friends in England.

H. M. J.

A HIGHER morality, like a higher intelligence, must be reached by a slow growth.—Herbert Spencer.

NEWTON MEETING, N. J.: A RETROSPECT.

(Continued.)

Read before the Young Friends' Association of Camden, N. J., Third month 8, 1899, by Howard M. Cooper.

AMONG the eminent Friends who met in this old log house on Newton Creek, were William Cooper, who for nearly thirty years exhorted his hearers to a simple and pure life, and, in the language of his meeting's memorial concerning him, "lived here in a Godly conversation, exercising his gift in the meeting at Newton whereunto he belonged to the benefit of God's people until it pleased God to remove him." Another was John Estaugh, "a mild man, desiring people to be true to what was made known to them," who traveled widely in the ministry, and finally died at Tortola, one of the West Indies, where he had gone on a religious visit. And on the women's side sat John Estaugh's wife, Elizabeth Haddon, whose brave, pure youth, romantic courtship, and lofty, exemplary life have thrown a halo around her memory, that in the Catholic faith would long ago have canonized her. Lydia Maria Child, in her "Tale of the Youthful Emigrant," and Longfellow, in his poem "Elizabeth," tell each the story of her courtship; and a narrative of her, published only last year, by Edwin L. Peirce, gives it, in an interesting account of her long and useful life. Upon her death Haddonfield Monthly Meeting said of her:

"She was endowed with great natural abilities, which, being sanctified by the Spirit of Christ, were much improved, whereby she became qualified in the affairs of the Church, and was a serviceable member, having been clerk to the Women's Meeting nearly fifty years, greatly to our satisfaction. She was a sincere sympathizer with the afflicted, of a benevolent disposition, and in distribution to the poor was desirous to do it in a way most profitable and durable to them, and if possible not to let the left hand know what the right hand did. Though in a state of affluence as to this world's wealth, she was an example in plainness and moderation. Her heart and house were open to her friends, whom to entertain seemed one of her greatest pleasures. Prudently cheerful, and well knowing the value of friendship, she was careful not to wound it herself, nor to encourage others in whispering supposed failings and weaknesses. Her last illness brought great bodily pain, which she bore with much calmness of mind and sweetness of spirit. She departed this life as one falling asleep, full of days, like a shock of corn fully ripe."

Later than these were Joshua Evans, a minister, and his wife Priscilla, who were strong opponents to slavery and to the use of any of the products of slave labor, long before it had become a matter of much public agitation even in our own Society. She would use no indigo, nor wear any cotton garment, dressing only in linen and wool, even her bonnet being covered with brown linen. Neither he nor she would use any salt. When visiting they would let their host know beforehand, that a loaf of bread might be made for them without salt. His clothes were made from the natural black or white wool of his sheep, and never dyed, and his shoes from the red unblackened leather, just as it came from tan vats, and tied with thongs of the same kind.

But Newton Meeting, thus favorably established, was not to escape those dissensions which our Society, notwithstanding its purest of faiths and its simplest of worship, has had from its beginning. About 1797, James and Joseph Sloan, two of its members, having purchased land adjoining the meeting property, got into a dispute with the trustees about the boundary, they claiming the ground even where the house stood. Joseph, in 1811, released to Friends his claim, but James continued the dispute for several years, and never again became reconciled to Friends. He had previously established a burying-ground adjoining the meeting property, where grave-stones were allowed, and placed at its entrance a small marble tablet, still there, with this inscription: "Here is no distinction. Rich and poor together. The Lord is maker of them all. Founded by James Sloan, 1790." He was a member of Congress for two or three terms, had some ability as a speaker, but was very eccentric.

The old meeting-house, which had been once rebuilt, had again become very much dilapidated, and Friends decided instead of repairing it to build a new and larger one. And as roads were then generally opened through the country, it was no longer necessary that the house should be on the water, so they determined to move to a place more central. On the 13th of the Fourth month, 1801, Joseph Kaighn gave them the land on the Mt. Ephraim road, within the present limits of Camden, upon which, in the same year, they built the house where our Orthodox Friends now meet. This exasperated James Sloan still more. He denounced it in unmeasured terms and refused to go to the new meeting, but bought of Friends the old house, and, moving it to his own ground, repaired it and held meetings in it, where he preached to such as he could persuade to stay with him. His adherents, however, gradually dropped off, until he used to preach to but a single listener.

On the night of Twelfth month 22, 1817, this old meeting-house was burned to the ground, ending at once these disputes and any further meeting on this spot, so full of hallowed memories. Nothing now remains but the old graveyard, with its unmarked graves, over-grown with briars, and James Sloan's yard, adjoining, to show where the first meeting-house in Newton stood.

The building of the new house of brick, much larger, more comfortable, and plain as it is, altogether a more grand affair than the old one, was quite an event. At the raising Friends all came, as was the custom, to assist the carpenters, and had a great dinner on the ground, the provisions being in the most profuse quantities.

In 1809, Richard Jordan, a prominent minister from Hartford, Conn., moved to Newton, and settled in the old frame house, yet standing, on Chestnut street, nearly opposite the brick meeting-house. A man of marked personality, positive in the expression of his views, he was a minister of more than ordinary ability, whose sermons for many years drew full houses. But he was often violent in the utterance of his prejudices, even from the gallery. Joseph Kaighn, one of the most public-spirited of Newton Friends, having started the first steam ferry at Kaighn's Point, Richard, annoyed by the stealing of apples from his trees, charged it to boys brought by the ferries from Philadelphia, and became so provoked at Joseph for starting another ferry, that he refused to speak to him with whom he had before been in the closest intimacy, even going so far as to preach an excited sermon from the gallery against the ferries, while before him sat each of the owners of the ferries at Cooper's Point, at Cooper street, and at Kaighn's Point. Stamping his foot and pointing his finger at Joseph Kaighn, he charged him with opening "the floodgates of corruption";—an anathema about as effective to stop steam ferries as that of the Pope against Galileo's heresy, to stop the Earth moving.

(To be concluded.)

For Friends' Intelligencer.

IN QUIET WATERS.

(Conclusion.)

III.—ALONG THE BRANDYWINE.

"THE rivers of home are dear in particular to all men," wrote Robert Louis Stevenson. As one may love the winding Schuylkill, another the Wissahickon's woodland pools, or a third the soft and fairy beauty of the Susquehanna,—so is the Brandywine endeared to those who have spent endless summer days along its green banks, and boated on its placid reaches; and particularly so when the bond is the stronger by force of ancestral association with some old farmstead and willow-bordered meadow beside the beautiful stream.

"Susqueco," one of the musical names given it by the Indians, seems to ally it in a measure to the Susquehanna; and the resemblance goes beyond that of the names, for in its lesser way our Chester county stream has the same alternate charm of tranquil deeps and of sparkling rapids that distinguishes that loveliest of Pennsylvania's interior rivers. And our Brandywine has a special character of its own, and that is its pastoral or idyllic aspect. Few are the minor streams that so completely satisfy one's sense of peaceful and untroubled rural tranquility, or beside whose calm waters he would rather pitch his tent or read his favorite poets. The gray old homesteads and venerable barns of the Brandywine valley seem an inseparable part of the landscape, around which cluster the dear associations and memories of generations. The corn has sprung up on these hillsides and given of its golden wealth through countless Octobers; it seems almost as if there never was a time when the wheat did not lie in abundant sheaves on these uplands in the silent midsummer nights, or the apples grow mellow and fall to earth in the long, drowsy days of September. It is a region of placid and serene security, such a happy countryside as Virgil, immortal laureate of husbandry, would have described with affectionate art,—such an opulent land as we read of in the ancient Odyssey, where "pear upon pear waxes old, and apple upon apple,—yea, and cluster ripens upon cluster of the grape."

The very fishermen that haunt its shores seem to partake of the stream's lazy placidity; it was long ago despoiled of its finer fish, but still may these patient anglers be seen, seated in their favorite nooks under some drooping willow or white-armed button-wood, where the turf is softest, waiting through the quiet hours for the nibbles that so seldom disturb their motionless corks. Yet one cannot call these hours idly spent, for the true angler is of honest Izaak's ilk, and his hours of serene contemplation beget in him a vein of mild philosophy which makes him sweet of temper and most companionable. The literary fisherman is perhaps not seen here so often, yet there are those who love equally well to read and to fish.

"Sometimes an angler comes, and drops his hook
Within its hidden depths, and 'gainst a tree
Leaning his rod, reads in some pleasant book,
Forgetting soon his pride of fishery;
And dreams, or falls asleep,
While curious fishes peep
About his nibbled bait."

* * *

Flowing down through the heart of old Chester County the Brandywine enriches many a secluded dale and meadow where the quiet cattle graze beside the fragrant mint and the nodding buttercups. Curve by curve it winds among the folded hills, silencing and receiving into its tranquil bosom "the filtered tribute of the rough woodland" from the thousand little brooks that purl and babble down the slopes of wild grass and crimson clover. Beneath the arching boughs it drifts, home of the squirrel and fox, and of the wood-robin that pours out his solitary song in cool sylvan retreats. Wild grapes hang over the water, the stately cloud-fleets sail slowly above and melt away beyond the hill, and the locust shrills in the loneliness of the hot mid-noon.

As the twilight hour draws on it is pleasant to push one's boat out from shore and watch the closing of the day on the farms. Down from the hillside comes the shout of the farmer's boy and the lowing of cattle, and the idler in his boat knows that in the old stone barns the horses are crunching their oats and hay, that the swallows are nested beneath the eaves, and the pigeons have ceased their day-long crooning. Then, as he rows slowly in the sunset glow, while the boat's eddies lap the lily-pads and set all the reeds to nodding, he will perhaps pass in his musing fancy from these scenes to the green downs of England, where at this hour the "tender ewes, brought home with evening sun,

Wend to their folds,
And to their holds
The shepherds trudge when light of day is done."

* * *

After all, the associations that cluster about a stream make it beautiful to us beyond other waters; if one's dearest memories are allied with the Delaware, the Susquehanna, or the Wissahickon, that particular home-stream is to him fairer than all others. To Chester Countians our sweet, pastoral Brandywine must ever have an especial appeal; there the grass is softest, the plashing of the water most melodious, and there the twilight grieving of the ring-dove most touches the heart. For us those remembered hills are clothed with beauty, and those misty woods with enchantment. Something of ancestral feeling awakes at the thought of peaceful townships with their names that carry us back to the old hills and shires of England and Wales; and we bless the tranquil serenity of the gray homesteads about which the memories of our fathers are yet green.

"Old homes! old hearts! Upon my soul forever
Their peace and gladness lie like tears and laughter;
Like love they touch me, through the years that sever,
With simple faith; like friendship, draw me after
The dreamy patience that is theirs forever."

JOHN RUSSELL HAYES.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

TRUTH MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD.

THERE is a deeper reason than mere sympathy with a wronged man which has caused the Dreyfus case to become world-famous, and has stirred all civilized nations to the depths.

It is because, from its beginning, the case has involved far more than the guilt or innocence of Captain Dreyfus; it has had bound up with it questions of right and wrong which appeal individually to every human heart, and which must be met and solved by every nation which hopes to maintain a foremost place and be a power for good in the world.

All know what these burning questions are, for France has so blazoned them forth in the face of mankind that everyone has to consider them, whether he will or no, and every one in his inmost soul also knows the true answer to these questions, for they were solved ideally long ago, even at the very time when Christianity took its rise; but never yet in all the centuries that have passed since then have they been solved practically. Not because men have been without a true guide have they gone on fighting against one another, increasing the proportions and the power of armies and maintaining them by cruel, oppressive taxes, for one day in Judæa, nineteen centuries ago, John the Baptist stood beside the Jordan river, and drew all men to him by his earnest, eloquent call to repentance. Among the multitude which hung upon his words were some Roman soldiers, and it appears that even their hearts, hardened as they were by severe discipline and merciless conquest, were touched by the preaching of the great herald of the Christ, for they went up to him and said, "And we, what must we do? And he said unto them, "Do violence to no man, neither exact anything wrongfully; and be content with your wages." Following and perfecting this teaching came that of Jesus himself, who bade men overcome their enemies by doing good to them and loving them.

The problem of race prejudice has been as prominent in the Dreyfus case as the army question; but that, too, was solved long ages ago; by a vision, whose meaning could not be misunderstood, God made known to Peter that He "is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is acceptable to him."

When Paul wrote his letter to the Galatians he declared to them that there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. All people, then, who have accepted the teachings of the New Testament have known these things well; happy would they have been had they put into practice the truths they knew!

But the journey from knowledge to practice has been slow and painful; it has proceeded line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. At the end of nineteen centuries we can look back and see that progress has been made, and we must feel grateful because, slow though the conquest be, the truth is bound to prevail in the end.

One day during the trial at Rennes that "soul of sorrow" cried out, declaring his innocence, and saying he so loved his country that he would gladly give his life for France. Suppose that he had done so,—that he had fallen one day upon the battle-field, while fighting heroically for his country, as he said he would be glad to do,—could he, think you, by the laying down of his life, have rendered the smallest fraction of the service to France which he has unconsciously rendered unto her through his five years of living death?

His martyrdom has been the agent which has brought into the full light of day the fatal weaknesses of the French national character and the germs of evil, which, if allowed to develop further must involve the whole nation in ruin. Through his tribulations the clear, loud note of warning goes reverberating through France; through his anguish a deep love of justice has been borne into the world, whose voice can no more be silenced.

May we not rightly call this Dreyfus case a great object lesson, over which Divine Providence rules, bringing good out of all the evil and teaching France and all the world beside that wrong unchecked grows ever greater and greater, until it ends in overthrow and death?

It is noteworthy that the great practical lessons which need to be demonstrated in this age have been set forth before the whole world through the life experience of a Jew; again God uses as his instrument that race through whom he taught his greatest lessons of Truth in times of old,—the race accustomed to suffering, made steadfast to endure, and so fitted to be truth-bearers and martyrs.

"My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

E. W. C.

A TEACHER who can arouse a feeling for one single good action, for one single good poem, accomplishes more than he who fills our memory with rows on rows of natural objects, classified with name and form.—Goethe.

LET us be only patient, patient; and let God our Father teach his own lesson his own way. Let us try to learn it well, and learn it quickly; but do not let us fancy that he will ring the school-bell, and send us to play before our lesson is learned.—Charles Kingsley.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

NO. 40.—TENTH MONTH 1.

THE DIVISION.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If thou wilt be a servant unto this people . . . and speak good words to them, then they will be thy servants forever.—I. Kings, xii., 7.

Scripture Reading, I. Kings, xii., 1–33.

THE Bible story of the Hebrew people from the death of Solomon to their complete overthrow as a nation by the armies of Assyria and Babylon is continued in the books of Kings and in II. Chronicles. The latter part of this period is further illuminated by the contemporary writings of the prophets Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Micah, Zephaniah, Nahum, and Jeremiah. Some few Phœnician inscriptions have been found which tell something of the religious life and thought of the Canaanites of this time. Of this time, too, is the famous "Mesha Stone"—a pillar of triumph set up by the king of Moab on the occasion of a great victory over the Israelites. This will be spoken of again in the appropriate place. The records of the kings of Assyria contain much valuable material to supplement the meagre accounts of the Bible historian. For we are now again brought face to face with the great world power of the Tigris valley. Its comparative weakness allowed the development of the kingdom of David and Solomon; a kingdom which, if it had retained its integrity, might even have successfully withstood the advance of the eastern conqueror. But the returning strength of Assyria, combined with the dissensions and the entire lack of unity among the western Semites, made certain the ultimate downfall of the latter. In the royal inscriptions of the Assyrian kings, we meet repeated references to the Israelites either as a subject people paying tribute, or as combined with other enemies in opposing the victorious careers of their armies. The Assyrian official lists of names and years form the basis of our Bible chronology. An eclipse which can be shown by astronomers to have occurred in the year 763 B. C., supplies the definite date from which to reckon. As in the book of Judges, so in the books of Kings (after I. Kings, ii.), we have the narrative portions set in a framework of formula. "Each king of Judah is introduced by a notice regarding the time of his accession in relation to the time of accession of his royal contemporary in Israel, his age at the time of his entrance into office, and the duration of his reign, as well as the name and home of his mother. . . . In the case of the kings of Israel there is no mention of their age, nor of their mothers; we get only information regarding the contemporary king of Judah and the length of the reign. In the case of each king, it is stated whether he did or did not what was right before the Lord." (Kittel.) The account of each king closes also with a reference for further information to the chronicles of the kings of Judah and Israel respectively. As has been indicated already, these chronicles were probably the records kept for each reign by the court historian (II. Samuel, viii., 17). Set into this framework, in addition to some details of the various reigns, are several narratives evidently derived from different sources. Such are the long accounts of the doings of certain of the prophets—Abijah (I. Kings, xiv.), Elijah, Elisha, and others. Of these Canon Driver says: "These narratives are written mostly in a bright, chaste, Hebrew style, though some of them exhibit slight peculiarities of diction, due doubtless (in part) to their North Israelitish origin. Their authors were in all probability prophets—in most cases prophets belonging to the northern kingdom." The writer of our present books of Kings seems mostly to have transferred these narratives, almost unchanged, to their appropriate places in his account of the course of Hebrew history. Who this writer was it is, of course, impossible to say with any certainty. The work has been attributed to the prophet Jeremiah. If he were not the author, it was probably written by one of his contemporaries (about 600 B. C.), and by one who lived under the same influences. "Deuteronomy is the standard by which the compiler judges both men and actions" (Driver); and, as will be told later, Deuteronomy appeared in the reign of King Josiah of Judah (639–608 B. C.), and was thereafter the basis of the Jewish code of laws.

As explained already (Lesson 35) the books of Chronicles are based upon the same sources as those of Kings and are much less reliable, being written long after and with the special purpose of exalting the temple and the priestly class.

While we shall make use of information derived from the prophetic writings of Isaiah and others, we will postpone the study of those writings themselves to a special series of lessons, dealing with them in detail.

It is evident that Solomon had lost, long before the end of his long reign, much of the great popularity enjoyed by his father, and transferred in large measure to himself. The story of the revolt under Jeroboam (I. Kings, xi., 26–40) shows that the prophets, almost always the champions of the poor and oppressed, were against the king both because he had "not walked in my ways, to do that which is right in mine eyes and to keep my statutes and my judgments" (I. Kings, xi., 33), and because of the idolatrous worship of the Canaanites, which had become common during his reign. It was not that Solomon himself had given way to the heathen rites, but that he had allowed, and even encouraged, their introduction into his kingdom. It is easy to understand, moreover, that the jealousy of the northern tribes was aroused by the enormous concentration of the wealth drawn from them by the king, on his capital at Jerusalem. The oppression of the lower classes, the subversion of religion, the concentration of wealth in Judah, all served to make the nation ready for revolt. Nevertheless if the successor of Solomon had been either a man of tact or a man of strength and decision the kingdom might have held together yet a little longer. But Rehoboam lacked both of these qualities.

It is not certain whether the events immediately leading to the disruption of the kingdom occurred at once on the accession of Rehoboam, or after some time. It seems probable that his kingship received at first the acquiescence of all Israel (I. Kings, xi., 43). But the discontent of the northern tribes culminated in a gathering of their representatives at Shechem to demand the lightening of their burdens. There the king met them, attended by a small retinue. The people had evidently some sense of their right to select their ruler, even after the experience of the despotic rule of Solomon, as is made evident by the terms of their demand: "Now, therefore, ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee." The king was at first inclined to yield to this reasonable demand, but the rash counsels of his courtiers prevailed, and he gave only such answer as that of a master to slaves. The free spirit of the Israelites arose to the king's taunt and united Israel was no more.

Oppression and the loss of the hunger and thirst for righteousness menace a republic no less than a kingdom. There is oppression where opportunity to labor is a privilege to be granted by the few to the many; where the results of the labor of thousands pour into the pockets of idlers; where the bounty of God rewarding the industry of men is selfishly appropriated by the few, to whom such power is given under the law of the land. The hunger and thirst after righteousness has been exchanged among us for the hunger and thirst after money and the luxuries that money will buy. The church called Christian is the church of the rich and powerful; it has little hold upon those who labor and are heavy laden, because it has shirked its mission and prefers to be comfortable rather than to preach a gospel unacceptable to the comfortable classes. But we the citizens are the kings of the republic. Cannot we, choosing a better part than that of the son of Solomon, seek for the causes of the oppression of our people and even be ready for self-sacrifice, that we may ease somewhat their grievous servitude.

HONESTY.—Andrew Marvell was a member of Parliament in the time of Charles II., and great efforts were used to win him over to the interests of the Court. It is related, that the Lord Treasurer Danby, who had been his school-fellow, called upon Marvell in his garret. At parting, the Lord Treasurer slipped into his hand an order on the Treasury for £1,000, and then went to his chariot. Marvell, looking at the paper, calls after the Treasurer, "My Lord, I request another moment." They went up again to the garret, and Jack, the servant boy, was called. "Jack, child, what had I for dinner yesterday?" "Don't you remember, sir? You had the little shoulder of mutton that you ordered me to bring from the woman in the market." "Very right, child. What have I for dinner to-day?" "Don't you know, sir, that you bid me lay by the blade-bone to broil?" "'Tis so, very right, child, go away." "My Lord," said Marvell, turning to the Treasurer, "do you hear that? Andrew Marvell's dinner is provided; there's your piece of paper. I want it not. I knew the sort of kindness you intended. I live here to serve my constituents; the ministry may seek men for their purpose; I am not one."—Smiles.

Correspondence of Friends' Intelligencer.

ILLINOIS YEARLY MEETING.

In pleasant contrast to the weather of the previous week, was that of the day on which most of the Friends arrived at Clear Creek to attend the oncoming Yearly Meeting. On Seventh-day morning many cordial greetings passed from one to another, as they assembled for the Meeting for Ministers and Elders.

Gathering into silence it was broken by the voice of prayer, petitioning for strength and guidance to perform individual duty; following which Margaretta Walton spoke of our having met as for a "living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to the Lord," and feeling poor, have come as with empty vessels, yet not empty, for they are filled with faith. Many have come a long distance, that they may meet together and partake of the good things of God; have been led to this centre of organization to exercise the gifts God has given them. It is no matter how strange the place, how new the faces, the gifts of the spirit, the oneness of the feeling, the life that quickens is the same in one place as another, if we come to the living centre, and are drawn to the footstool of God, and there ask for his quickening presence, to enable us to bring every power, physical, intellectual, and spiritual to the work, for though these are different, all are needed for perfect work. In carrying on the business of the meeting, if we do not all unite in sentiment, there is a beautiful submission in the desire that right shall ever hold sway, feeling that truth will arise, and we can wait patiently till it does arise, and others, beholding a light has arisen, will turn to it.

On these blessed occasions, when we have feasted at the Lord's table, with our lamps trimmed, our hearts prayerful, our spirits watchful, others will see and know it also. At such times we will not say, "O, my leanness, my leanness," but will thank God for this fraternal feeling that will draw us to the heavenly altar on the mountain top, where all may behold the light. If we are faithful to the requirements of duty here, we will return to our home duties and cares strengthened to perform them, and then we will hear the words "Well done, good and faithful servant." On the other hand, if we neglect the little monitions of duty while here, we will go home with a sense of unfaithfulness, and be unhappy in consequence. We sometimes neglect our duties in these meetings, on the plea that strangers are here, and we will let them speak, and so have kept to ourselves what belonged to others, and it has turned back on us, without any refreshing.

Supplication was then made by a Friend, T. H. T., that we may be so filled with the life and love of God, that we will manifest it in our lives. A. M. expressed the hope that each of us would be faithful to the admonitions of God in the individual heart, and thus be enabled to perform our respective duties.

Isaiah Lightner felt before coming into the house, and since, a desire that we may be individually watchful, not only here, but everywhere, and not forget the principle that caused us to leave our homes and come here, the spirit of love.

The reading of the name of a representative, who, since her appointment has passed on to the higher life, caused a deep solemnity to spread over the meeting, and many loving tributes were given to her memory.

A minute for our friend Margaretta Walton was read, and she and her companion Anna Mary Martin, were welcomed to our little meeting.

During the reading of queries and answers the responsibility resting on the ministers was touched upon, increasing as the years roll by, also the responsibility of the elders toward the ministers, to give counsel in the right time and right spirit, thus helping them to grow in grace and knowledge. Those also who are not recommended as ministers were encouragingly spoken to.

In considering the Third Query and answer we were glad to know that harmony exists among us. Regarding criticism from elders on ministers and ministry, it was remarked that oftentimes it was a great help, when given in the right spirit. The same spirit should animate the elder and the minister. We should not look for too much encouragement from man, yet human sympathy is very pleasant and cordial to the hungering soul. Every faithful servant has great influence over others, and there is often that in the face that reflects love and attracts others.

The second session of this part of our body was held on Fifth-day morning, in which the frequency of prayer during our various meetings was dwelt upon with much satisfaction, as it acknowledged our dependence on our Father, yet we were cautioned as to a redundancy of words in our supplications.

A Friend remarked on the various kinds of prayer, according to our feelings: thanksgiving and praise at one time, at another earnestness of supplication for the success of our meetings, and again, when there is a feeling of desolation. Another remarked that as the rain cometh silently from the clouds, to the thirsty earth, so our principles are permeating other societies, and he thought the time would come when creeds and catechisms would pass away, and we would all be brothers and sisters, all over the earth. Again, it was remarked, that the faith we have in truth is from a divine source, and that truth must live, because divine. Another advised not to refrain from speaking the little word, that is not for us to keep, but give it in its simplicity, and the gift will grow, and not compare our gifts with the greater ones of others. If we wait in littleness and humility, it will be a strong tower of refuge to us, we will grow and feel our life-work is being done day by day. E. H. C.

[We have further reports of the Yearly Meeting, from our correspondent, but must reserve them for next week.—EDS. INTELLIGENCER.]

If any one tells you that such a person speaks ill of you, do not make excuses about what is said of you, but answer, "He was ignorant of my other faults, else he would not have mentioned these alone."—Epicetetus.

Look within. Within is the fountain of good; and it will ever bubble up, if thou wilt ever dig.—Marcus Aurelius.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 23, 1899.

THE question of most intense interest in England continues to be that arising out of Transvaal affairs. For at least a month past the danger of war has seemed to be acute, and the departure of troops and munitions from England for South Africa, the open and threatening preparations for war, have given the appearance, day by day, of an imminent conflict.

Those in England with whom the great majority of our readers are sympathetic have been deeply grieved and distressed over this apparent intention of their government to coerce the Boer people, and earnest protests have been sent up by individuals, by meetings, and by committees. One of the most recent of these was addressed to Lord Salisbury, on the 1st instant, by the Meeting for Sufferings at London. It concludes with the prayer "that wisdom from on high may be granted to the Queen's Government, and that they may be so guided in all their actions that Peace may be maintained, and this nation preserved from the sin and calamity of war."

There is, we hope, a good prospect still for the maintenance of peace, and avoidance of the cruelty and injustice which would be embodied in the proposed attack on the Transvaal people. Heretofore the Marquis of Salisbury, the Prime Minister, has firmly checked, though at the last moment, similar schemes of the war party, and it will be a disappointment if he does not again use his authority before war is actually begun.

WE have come to the annual time of resumption in the schools, and work has begun, or is on the point of beginning, in all these directions. The numerous schools, and the one college, in which our Friends are directly interested, compose an educational body of no mean dimensions, and the importance and extent of the work which they represent must be impressive to all who look into the subject.

HOWARD M. JENKINS reached home safely and in usual health, on the 16th instant, the steamer, the St. Louis, arriving at the dock in New York about 7.30 in the morning. He is glad to be back and to take up his usual work on the INTELLIGENCER. He will contribute to it, for some weeks to come, some further articles on his observations in England, especially with reference to Friends there.

WE call attention to the communication in another column, from "A Member of Bucks Quarter." The sum, $10,000, which the donor of the new Boarding Home at Newtown asks shall be raised as an Endowment Fund, has not yet been fully subscribed, and all who are interested, or who should be, are earnestly appealed to.

BIRTHS.

MAULE.—At Gum Tree, Pa., Sixth month 2, 1899, to George C. and Clara B. Maule, a son, who is named Charles Edwin.

MAULE.—At Christiana, Pa., Eighth month 1, 1899, to Charles Edwin and Hannah J. Maule, a son, who is named William Loyd.

MARRIAGES.

COATES—GATES.—At Girard Avenue meeting-house, Philadelphia, Ninth month 13, 1899, under the care of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, Robert Livezey Coates, son of William and Elizabeth Livezey Coates, and Ethel Moore Gates, daughter of Edwin Edgerton and Georgiana H. M. Gates, all of Philadelphia.

DEATHS.

BROWNING.—At Chatham, N. Y., Ninth month 13, 1899, Mary L. Harrison, wife of Charles Browning, in her 63d year.

BUNTING.—Ninth month 16, 1899, Mary M., widow of J. Ridgway Bunting, in her 48th year, daughter of the late Sketchley Morton, of Morton, Pa. Funeral from the residence of Samuel J. Bunting, West Philadelphia.

HAINES.—In Philadelphia, Ninth month 10, 1899, E. Anne, daughter of the late Ephraim T. and Sarah B. Haines, in her 76th year; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

LIPPINCOTT.—At Fellowship, N. J., Ninth month 12, 1899, Mary L., widow of Clarkson Lippincott, aged 77 years.

LUKENS.—At Conshohocken, Pa., Ninth month 13, 1899, Lewis A. Lukens, in his 93d year.

SATTERTHWAITE.—In Baltimore, on Ninth month 12, 1899, Ellen G. Satterthwaite, in the 93d year of her age.

VALENTINE.—At Glen Cove, L. I., Sixth-day, Ninth month 8, 1899, Anna Kirk, wife of Samuel T. Valentine. Funeral from her late residence, 154 Clinton street, Brooklyn. First-day, 10th inst., at 3 o'clock. Interment private.

TRUE EDUCATION.

The American Friend.

THOSE who are connected with institutions of learning must labor to make them centers of power as well as of light, and we may trust with confidence that when educational institutions perform their true functions for the church they will receive the loyal support of the church. In any case the fact remains that the church cannot increase in influence unless its youth are trained and prepared for the widest possible life and service, and our own institutions must aim to be feeding places for the growing life of our young members.

Whatever may be the condition of our public schools, our professedly religious institutions of learning must not neglect the culture of the heart. They must present ideals of life as well as ideals of scholarship, and they must think no less of what will feed the spiritual nature, in its broadest sense, than of how to make the mind skillful in its grasp of problems of thought. Character is the eternal thing and a teacher who is not a skillful master of the mysteries of character building is not a true educator.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

XV.—THE EAST COAST OF ENGLAND: NOTES.

BY HOWARD M. JENKINS.

I WRITE this at Birmingham, in which city I am to spend the last few days of my stay in England, in attendance upon the Friends' Summer School. This begins to-day, the 4th, and closes on the 16th; as I am to sail for home on the 9th, I shall only be able to enjoy the first few days.

* * *

Let me then give an outline of my visits between Edinburgh and Birmingham. I left the Scottish capital on the 15th of last month, and spent two days with Thomas Hodgkin, at his home at Barmoor, in Northumberland, a few miles south of Berwick-on-Tweed. Leaving Barmoor's refined and gracious hospitality on the 17th, I made short stops at Newcastle-on-Tyne and Durham, and late in the evening alighted at Scarborough to find John Wilhelm Rowntree and his wife waiting for me on the platform. I spent then six most agreeable days at and near Scarborough and York. From York I went to Lincoln, staying over night in the home of Friends there. On the 25th I spent part of the day at Cambridge, seeing the exterior of the more notable and interesting of the colleges that compose that university, and reached London in the evening. Remaining in London until the morning of the 30th, I went to Reading, stopped off a few hours, mainly to visit the Friends' School at Leighton Park, and proceeded to Oxford, where, that evening and the following forenoon, I saw the chief features of that old university city. On the 31st and the two following days I visited Stratford-on-Avon, Warwick, and Kenilworth, and on the evening of the 2d reached Birmingham.

* * *

With this bare outline, let me give a few details.

* * *

On the north-eastern shore of England there are two particularly interesting remains of the very early Christian time,—the period, about eleven hundred years ago, of Saxon and pre-Norman planting of the faith. These are the old abbey of Lindisfarne, on the Northumberland coast, and Whitby, which stands high above the sea, on the coast of Yorkshire, near Scarborough. Both are in ruins, and have been deserted since the "suppression" of the monasteries by Henry the Eighth. But the remains are of much interest, and connected as they are with the first Christian names of northern England, Aidan, Cuthbert, and Hilda, with the rude and violent rule of the Saxon chiefs and the still more fierce incursions of the Danes, the two abbeys are invested with a romantic and attractive atmosphere.

To Lindisfarne we drove, from Barmoor, on the 16th of Eighth month. You come down from the hills on which Barmoor stands (to the north-west of the castle is Flodden Field, that fatal spot for the Scotch army and its king, James V.), and passing through the little village of Lowick, you come to the shore near Beal. Then, when the tide is out, and the sands are nearly bare, you may safely cross them, over three miles, to the peninsula on which Lindisfarne stands. There were five in our party, my host and hostess, a Cambridge professor and his wife, and myself. It was a most interesting day, and but for the high wind, which almost rose to a gale as we returned, a most pleasant one. We ate our luncheon in pic-nic fashion near the walls, and looked out to sea, or down the coast to where the ancient keep of Bamborough stands bodily out against the sky. The early afternoon was given to the inspection of the ruins, and we reached Barmoor in time for dinner in the early evening.

To Whitby, on the 18th, John Wilhelm Rowntree accompanied me. There are more impressive and extensive church ruins here than at Lindisfarne, but the domestic buildings of the monastery are not so well defined. Readers of Scott's "Marmion" will recall the pages in which the Abbess of Whitby is mentioned, her sail up the coast to Lindisfarne, and the dark conclave, at night, in the subterranean chamber there, when Constance, the nun who had followed Marmion, was judged, condemned, and then walled in, alive, by her executioners. Whitby and Lindisfarne, thus connected by the poetic imagination of Scott (for his tale of Constance is pure fiction), were connected in veritable history, and their chronicle has many episodes most romantic and striking.

* * *

From Scarborough, itself most pleasant in the summer days, and most attractive of the seaside places on the eastern coast of England, there are fine excursions to be made along the shore,—to Scalby, to Robin Hood's Bay, to Whitby, etc. I spent First-day at Scarborough, attending the meeting there, morning and evening.

* * *

York is one of the most interesting cities in England. It has old-time attractions of every age, from the Roman down, and modern enterprise and activity besides. The great Minster is one of the first cathedrals of all England, and the ruins of St. Mary's Abbey, the almost complete ancient city walls, with the quaint old "bars," the venerable guild-hall, the curious old streets, such as that of the butchers, where the upper stories of two houses nearly touch across the way,—all these make a list which is rarely equalled. The two days which I spent in looking at these, and at schools, the Friends' meeting-house premises, etc., were full of interest, and my kind host and companions omitted nothing to make them agreeable to me. On the last day of my stay, I went, accompanied by Henry B. Binns, (who was recently for more than a year in California), to Ripon, and Fountains Abbey. Fountains is esteemed the greatest and most impressive abbey ruins in England, and I found it all that, exceeding even Furness in extent and importance. The cathedral at Ripon is fine, and the drive from the town to the Abbey, partly through the park grounds of the Marquis of Ripon, was very charming.

* * *

Lincoln has one of the four or five finest cathedrals in England, an interesting old castle and tower, and some remarkable Roman remains, discovered—in building excavations—in recent years. The kind friend who accompanied me to see these, takes a deep and intelligent interest in these attractions of her city, whose site, upon a bold hill overlooking the level Lincolnshire country, is itself very striking.

* * *

The drought which had lasted so long in England generally began to break toward the end of the month. Some rain fell in London on the 28th, when I was there, and on successive days, as I journeyed about, there were further showers, which though they seemed light revived the pastures more than they would have done with us, since the air is more moist, and the evaporation not so great.

The dry weather had indeed been prolonged and severe. It was an unusual, an exceptional, summer, there is no doubt. One of the London newspapers, on the 29th ult., said the drought had continued thirteen weeks; in that time there had been but one really wet day in London, the 1st of July. (It rained heavily at Manchester, as I well remember.) The famous "backs," the grounds along the river, in the rear of the colleges, at Cambridge, were parched and brown, on the 25th, when I walked about them, and at Leighton Park School, on the 30th, there was hardly a green patch in the tennis ground, and the cricket field. It may be set down as a fact that the larger part of England is liable to have a summer as dry as south-eastern Pennsylvania.

* * *

The harvest and the hay-making were about completed by the end of last month. From the 27th of Sixth month, when we saw the Bucks farmers at work, on our ride to Jordans, on to the middle of the Eighth, in northern England, I found them gathering the hay. I was interested to observe that mowing machines are generally used, sometimes one horse, often two. There were hay-tedders in the fields in Cumberland, and hay-rakes there and elsewhere, and in Northumberland I saw a steam-thresher busily at work. Many pasture and hay fields are never plowed. The yield of hay per acre varied very much, of course; in a hill field near his home at Upton Knoll, in Gloucestershire, John Bellows told me he had cut two tons per acre, but in other fields in the country farther north, the yield was short and light,—perhaps not one-fourth as much,—and the women who took up the little bunches in their hands and carefully shook them about had plenty of ground on which to spread them.

The grain grown was largely wheat, though there were good oats fields in northern England. The wheat was just ripe, along the Scottish border, in the middle of Eighth month, and about Scarborough, a week later, it was lying in the fields, bound, and gathered in "stooks." The crop is a fairly good one, but probably most readers of these letters know that England raises but a minor part of her own bread.

Potatoes grow luxuriantly in middle and northern England. In Northumberland I saw fine fields of turnips; one of them, near Lowick, contained probably twenty-five acres, and eight one-horse cultivators were at work among them. Thomas Hodgkin says that agriculture in Northumberland has been less depressed in recent years than in some other parts of England.

Among the things unknown in England, as a growing crop, is Indian corn. I did not see a stalk anywhere. Wheat, hay, oats, turnips, are the chief crops.

Birmingham, Ninth month 4.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Notes from a Private Letter.

THE subject of Isolated Friends was quite a live one, largely through the remarks of Edward Coale introducing it and bringing out the latent feeling. There was a large number of young people present, who gave close attention to the business, though their voices were not often heard. They did some good work on committees. We took some action on Temperance, in the fullest unity, giving the moral support of the Yearly Meeting to the work of the Anti-Saloon League, now engaged in testing the matter before the courts as to whether the presence of a saloon in a specified neighborhood is not "morally wrong and a menace to the public welfare." In which case the saloon must be banished, as no money can make good the loss to the complainant. This was the legal ground on which slavery was abolished, and other reforms of wrongs entrenched in legal protection, finally brought about.

Wilson S. Doan gave a very forcible presentation of the work of the Anti-Saloon League, which—to my mind—is exactly the ground on which all churches and religious bodies, irrespective of party affiliation should stand, and work harmoniously together.

Much excellent counsel was given on Christian living in the home, which was more the burden of the messages this year than usual. A Friend, at her own request, was re-instated into membership with us, bringing a "letter" from the Methodist church, recommending her to our Christian care. What a wonderful advance! Of course the "letter" did not admit her to us, but our sense of her fitness for membership did, without a committee appointed. It is lovely to feel that no "sectarian warfare" either prevented the Methodist church from sending it, or our meeting from listening to it without protest, beyond placing her admission upon its proper basis.

Many of the exercises seemed to be visions of the religious conditions of some present. That seems to be the present order.

HONOR to the heart of love,
Honor to the peaceful will,
Slow to threaten, strong to move,
Swift to render good for ill!

—J. W. Howe.

36

WE fancy it is the detail of life, its smallest grievances, its apparent monotony, its fretful cares, its hours alternately lagging and feverish, that wear out the joy of existence. This is not so. Were each day differently filled the result would be much the same.—A. Repplier.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

A VISIT TO FRIENDS OF SOUTHERN QUARTER.

ON the 30th and 31st of Eighth month last, Southern Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Third Haven Meeting-house, Easton, Md. The Meeting of Ministers and Elders met at 2 o'clock on Fourth-day, the 30th, and the general quarterly meeting at 3 o'clock of same day. Of the several visiting Friends, Alvin Haines, Lydia H. Price, and Joseph Powell, produced minutes of concurrence from their respective monthly meetings,—Martin Melony and Thomas Sheward had no minutes; all were cordially welcomed.

On Fifth-day, 31st, convening at 10 o'clock, the Youths' Meeting for Divine Worship was held. This was felt to be a profitable occasion, and we realized "there is one Lord, one Faith, and one Baptism," and were baptized into harmony with God and with each other. When, under the canopy of love, and a feeling that it was good to be there, the meeting adjourned.

Fifth-day evening, in company with Martin Melony, I rode with Martha Willis and family about ten miles, to their home, which is near a small town called Harmony. On Sixth-day morning we were kindly furnished with a horse and light carriage, when we called on several families of Friends, and found all very busily engaged gathering their tomato crop, and hauling to the "canneries," which have become very numerous, making a market near their farms. We returned at evening to the Willis family, a parlor meeting having been appointed to be held at the residence of W. Penn Willis (son of Martha), in the village of Harmony. An unexpectedly large number assembled, none members with Friends except the Willis family; it was a favored occasion.

On Seventh-day we were conveyed five miles to Preston, where Martin took train for his home. Attended Preston Meeting on First-day morning; the company there was not very large, but the meeting was a good one; these people were not only a seeking people, but were hungering for a deeper spiritual worship, with a desire to come into harmony with God. I was told that the meeting was made up from five different religious societies, and I realized that all accepted what was presented as representing the Truth.

An appointment had been made for a meeting in Pine Grove meeting-house in the afternoon. Friends had not held meetings here for twelve years. When the concern to have it opened for this purpose and at this time (in case the house was suitable) was presented to the few remaining members in that vicinity the response was cordial and encouraging and the assurance that they would put the house in order, which promise was faithfully fulfilled.

The few members and many others gathered at the appointed hour; the house was more than filled, some standing outside at the doors and windows. This was surely an appreciative company, and the live silence which spread over it, gave evidence of the Divine Master's presence. After the meeting, when speaking with many not in membership, some of these expressed a desire that a Friends' meeting be again established there, and more than once did I hear the desire most earnestly expressed that Friends' principles be spread amongst them.

I have a concern for the spreading of a deeper interest in the cause of Truth in that Quarter; and the prayer has ascended for Friends there, that they be spiritually clear-sighted, and weigh this matter justly to themselves and to our Heavenly Father. At this time many concerned Friends of other quarterly meetings are experiencing an increasing interest in our Heavenly Father's cause, particularly toward this distant and almost isolated Quarter. That all of these concerned Friends may be faithful to the Father's promptings is my desire.

Ninth month 9, 1899.

JOSEPH POWELL.

THE WARRINGTON ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual special meeting in the old meeting-house at Warrington, York county, Pa., occurs on First-day next, the 24th inst.

From Philadelphia: Leave Broad Street station, Seventh-day, 23d, at 12.27 (noon), change at Harrisburg to Cumberland Valley Railroad, reach Dillsburg at 4.36 p. m. Return on Second-day, 25th, at 8.48 a. m. Fare, round trip, $4.90. Or, by Reading lines, leave Terminal, 12th and Market, at 4.06 p. m., and arrive at D. & M. Junction, 7.43. Return First-day evening, at 6.13 p. m. Fare, round trip, $4.68.

William R. Cook, Box 64, Dillsburg, Pa., will meet and arrange for Friends, if seasonably notified.

BUCKS BOARDING HOME.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

THE members of Bucks Quarterly Meeting are now offered a very generous present by a friend who was born a member of that meeting, but who many years ago removed out of its limits, but still feels a warm interest in its welfare, on certain conditions, which are very reasonable and ought most certainly to be gladly complied with. The conditions are as follows:

If the Quarterly Meeting or its friends will raise the sum of $10,000 for an endowment fund, the income of which shall be used for the purpose of assisting in paying the necessary expenses of a Boarding Home for Friends of limited means, he will transfer to the Quarterly Meeting as a separate body for holding the title and the endowments, a large lot of land well adapted for the purpose, centrally located, to accommodate Friends belonging to Bucks Quarter, and near Friends' meeting-house, in Newtown, Bucks county, Pa., on which is erected, and now being finished, a large and substantial stone building, fully equipped with all the necessary modern improvements and conveniences to accommodate about twenty-five or more inmates as boarders, and their needed attendants.

This certainly is a most generous offer, and Friends ought to be ready to accept it. But as most of the members of this Quarter are farmers, the sum of $10,000 in cash is not so easily raised by them as it could have been some years ago, when farming was a much better business than it is at the present time. Up to the day of the Quarterly Meeting at the Falls, the last of the Eighth month, only about two-thirds of the necessary amount had been subscribed. Therefore the necessity seems to exist that those who are blessed with larger means should be liberal in subscribing the balance needed, in order that the meeting can obtain the very valuable gift offered it.

It is hoped that those who have not yet subscribed will avail themselves of the opportunity now offered, and that those who are able will increase their subscription, so that by the time the next Quarterly Meeting occurs this most generous offer may be accepted.

A MEMBER OF BUCKS QUARTER.

Ninth month 14, 1899.

LITERARY NOTES.

At a time when the Jewish question is playing such an important part in the politics of Europe, Mark Twain's article, "Concerning the Jews," in the current Harper's, can scarcely fail to attract wide attention. The paper is written in response to a letter received from a Jewish lawyer shortly after the appearance of Mr. Clemens's article, "Stirring Times in Austria." In it he reviews the causes of the present feeling against the Jews, and gives his ideas as to the steps which should be taken to improve the situation. The paper is as a whole a most powerful vindication of the race, and a biting arraignment of their persecutors.

"Solomon and Solomonic Literature" is the title of the latest work by Dr. Moncure Daniel Conway, and is announced by the Open Court Publishing Company. Dr. Conway has traced in this book the development of the Solomonic legend in the history of all religions, and especially in that of ancient and modern folklore.

The Merchant Tailors' School, of London, is about to erect a stained-glass window to the memory of the poet Spenser, in the Great Hall, to celebrate the tercentenary of his decease. The company also propose to place a second window in the Great Hall, as a memorial of another eminent pupil, Dr. Lancelot Andrews, whose name occurs near that of Spenser on the records of the school, although his death occurred more than a quarter of a century later. Dr. Andrews was one of the chief divines to whom we owe the authorized translation of the Bible.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have in their possession a posthumous volume by James Russell Lowell. It consists of a series of letters to friends in America which Lowell wrote from Spain when he was acting as Minister. "Impressions of Spain" is the title under which the book is likely to appear.

While publishers have not been slow in supplying the increasing demand from schools for books relating to the study of nature, there has remained a field almost barren of any literature, and yet one which has a most intimate relation with human life. There is now a book, however, from the press of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., which admirably treats of this hitherto neglected subject. Under the title of "Corn Plants," Frederick LeRoy Sargent, a well-known botanist, has written a very interesting account of six leading grain plants,—wheat, oats, rye, barley, rice, and maize. In an entertaining style, free from unnecessary technicalities, the author gives the history, growth, distribution, and use of these plants, and also narrates the myths and religious customs which have grown up about them.

Nora A. Smith, sister of Kate Douglas Wiggin, and an equally ardent kindergartner, has written a story for children based upon the experiences she had when she taught school some time ago in Mexico. "Under the Cactus Flag" contains many folk-songs never before recorded, and here skillfully interwoven with the narrative. (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

John Fiske's historical work has now progressed to the Middle States. His book, dealing with the beginnings of Pennsylvania and New York, is entitled, "The Dutch and Quaker Colonies in America," and will soon appear from the publishing house of Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

SQUARE PEGS. By Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney. Pp. iv. and 507. $1.50. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.)

NANNIE'S HAPPY CHILDHOOD. By Caroline Leslie Field. Pp. 155. $1.00. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.)

WHAT A YOUNG HUSBAND OUGHT TO KNOW. By Sylvanus Stall, D.D. Pp. xvii. and 300. $1.00. Philadelphia: The Vir Publishing Co.

SOCIAL ASPECTS OF THE QUAKER FAITH. By Edward Grubb, M.A. Pp. vii. and 252. Price 3s. 6d. net. London: Headley Brothers.

EDUCATIONAL.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL, BALTIMORE.—Opening exercises were held in the new Friends' School, Baltimore (Park Avenue), on the afternoon of the 14th instant. Jonathan K. Taylor presided. There was a large gathering of interested friends of the school. Frances E. Hartley read from the Scriptures; John J. Cornell offered prayer, and addresses were made by the chairman, by Dr. John F. Goucher, president of the Woman's College; Dr. E. S. Todd, Professor John W. Gregg, Professor Eli M. Lamb, and Alice C. Robinson.

In closing his address, Dr. Goucher made the offer of a $125 scholarship at the Woman's College to the girl student who shall make the highest record for the year.

Letters of congratulation on the completion of the new building, and of regret at being unable to be present at the exercises, from President Gilman and Dean Griffin, of the Johns Hopkins University, were read.

It was announced that about 175 pupils had been enrolled.

GEORGE SCHOOL.—The school opened last week. There are several new teachers, taking the places of Mary E. Speakman, Dr. J. H. Holmes, J. Russell Smith, and others.

Winifred Craine, of Detroit, who takes rhetoric and composition, is a graduate of the University of Michigan, and has taught successfully for several years in Columbus, Ohio.

R. Grant Bennett, a graduate of Swarthmore College, comes from the Friends' School on Long Island, where he was principal. He spent the past summer in special work at Cornell. He is in charge of the department of physics and chemistry.

William H. Glasson, history, is a graduate of Cornell University, where he took a post graduate course in history and economics. He also pursued his study in this same line for two additional years, one at the University of Pennsylvania and one at Columbia University.

Belle W. Hannum, assistant in mathematics, comes from the Friends' School at Woodstown, N. J., where she has been the efficient principal for several years.

Anne Russell, assistant in German and French, is a graduate of Woman's College, Baltimore. She took post graduate course at Amherst during the past year.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

MICKLETON, N. J.—At a meeting of the Young Friends' Association held Ninth month 9, the first chapter of John was read as the opening exercise. The minutes of last meeting read and approved. "Hiawatha's Fishing" was read by Ruth W. Peaslee. Hannah A. Heritage read a portion of the 16th chapter of Janney's History containing many interesting accounts of early Friends. A beautiful recitation, "The Arsenal," was given by Hannah L. Peaslee. Martha R. Heritage read Queries for Meetings of Ministers and Elders, from the Discipline, after which Benjamin C. Heritage recited a poem, "Wishing," showing us how discontented we are with what we have of this world's good, and our wish for what we have not. Martha Engle read a very interesting account of the life of our beloved friend Aaron M. Powell. An essay called "Priceless Treasures" was read by Elizabeth F. Andrews. Mabel C. Haines read an account of the life of Longfellow, which we all enjoyed.

The question, "What is the origin of the hand-shaking at the close of our meetings?" was not answered, and it is the desire of the Association that the INTELLIGENCER may kindly publish an answer for our benefit.

The Current Topics were read by Ruth W. Peaslee. As voluntary exercises we were favored by Louisa Heald's reciting Milton's "Sonnet upon his own Blindness."

The announcements were read for next meeting, and the roll called. Meeting then adjourned to meet Tenth month, 4. E. L. D., Secretary.

COMMUNICATIONS.

FARM TEACHING AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

WALTER S. BUCHANAN, a graduate of Tuskegee Institute, was sent out by us in July to organize Farmers' Conferences. He took with him many leaflets with "Suggestions," "Things to Remember and Practice," "For the Women to Remember," etc. The leaflets were printed here and contain such questions as,—

"How many mortgage their crops? How many plant nothing but cotton? How many live on rented land? How many live in houses with but one room? How many are paying off mortgages? How many have bought land?" etc. Also if women are treated better, less whiskey used, money squandered on excursions? Best way to raise children. Will better homes make our wives and children better? Respect yourselves and other people will respect you.

"To remember and practice. Do not stand still and complain but go forward ;—mere fault-finders accomplish little. If you have an immoral minister or teacher get rid of him. Go in debt just as little as possible. Pay off old debts and do not make new ones. Keep out of law-suits. Do not lie around town on Saturdays. Don't waste money on whiskey, cheap jewelry, and other things which can be done without. See that you treat your wife better than you did last year."

There are many more just as practical, and the organizer goes into a neighborhood, stays until the people are interested, then organizes, and delegates are sent to our Annual Conference held in Aiken.

This summer work is the most wide-reaching of any we do. During the school term, when the organizer is a teacher with us, he often goes out to keep up the interest. Our best students come from the places where he works, and men and women drive all night to be at the annual meeting, and each goes home with a bundle of Farm literature, saved from the barrels for this purpose. Like all good things it costs something ; we pay the salary of a teacher, and supply the horse and buggy.

This young man was a stranger, but R. Benson planned his first few places ; he then made trips to towns, country settlements, spoke in many churches, and school-houses, often driving in the night, as cooler for himself and horse. His last letter says :

"So far I have organized sixteen conferences, visited eight old ones, driven six hundred and eighty-seven miles. Total expense, $38.00. Buggy much worn, my health excellent, but shall make my stay in low country short as possible. Fever here."

This expense was board for himself and horse, as we are teaching the people not to let others impose on them. He makes close bargains, and this $38 was from July 13th until September 2d, over and above his salary.

The Schofield School work goes through this year. Ten young men are at the farm, earning next term's schooling ; as soon they enter others will take their places, but we have to feed them both here and at the school. Soon as spring work was over they commenced cutting and hauling wood ; often by 7 a. m., two teams are in here, having come the three miles in the cool of the morning. They make two trips a day, and eighty cords are now ready for us to use here next winter. Fodder pulling has commenced, and it will be Christmas before corn, cow peas, cotton, and all crops are gathered.

MARTHA SCHOFIELD.

Aiken, S. C., Ninth month 8, 1899.

THE distance of Manila from New York by the (proposed) Nicaragua Canal is 11,078 nautical miles, or 518 miles less than by the Suez Canal.

PERSONAL NOTES.

DR. JESSE H. HOLMES, recently of George School, but now appointed to a place at Swarthmore College, sailed from Boston on the Cephalonia, of the Cunard Line, on Eighth month 26, and reached Liverpool on the 5th instant. He proceeded at once to Birmingham to attend the Friends' Summer School. He will remain abroad for study—probably at Oxford University, mainly—until the early summer of next year, and may make a visit to Palestine.

Mary Travilla and Sarah R. Paiste remained at the Summer School, at Birmingham, to its close, and then sailed for home, from Liverpool, on the 16th instant. They are due to arrive at New York at the close of this week.

THE DEATH-SONG OF THE HEMLOCK.

BY JULIA C. R. DORR.

YE say I am old—I am old—and ye threaten to hew me down, Lest the roof of your puny dwelling should be crushed by my heavy crown ;

Ye measure my spreading branches, ye mock me with idle fears—

Ye pigmies that creep at my footstool, what know ye of age or years ?

I reckon ye all as shadows ! Ye are but as clouds that pass
Over the face of the mountains and over the meadow grass ;
Your generations are phantoms ; like wraiths they come and go,
Leaving no trace behind them in the paths they used to know !

But I ! For six hundred rolling years I have stood like a watch-tower, I !

I have counted the slow procession of Centuries circling by !
I have looked at the sun unblenching, I have numbered the midnight stars,

Nor quailed when the fiery serpent leaped from its cloudy bars !

Or ever ye were a nation, or your Commonwealth was born,
I stood on this breezy hill-top, fronting the hills of morn ;
In the strength of my prime uplifting my head above meaner things,

Till only the strong winds reached it, or the wild birds' sweeping wings !

It was mine to know when the white man ventured the unknown seas,

And silence fled before him, and the forest mysteries ;
I rose, his towers and steeples that pierced the unfathomed sky,
And his proud domes darkened the Heavens—but above them all soared I !

He builded his towns and cities, and his mansions fine and fair,
And slowly his fertile meadows grew wide in the tranquil air ;
He stretched his iron pathways from the mountains to the sea,—

But little cared I for his handiwork ! 'Twas the One Great God made me !

The Earth and the Sun and the mighty Winds and the Great God over all,

These bade me stand like a sentinel on the hill-top grand and tall.

Know ye that a hundred years ago men called me old and worn ?

Yet here I tower above their graves, and laugh them all to scorn !

For what are three-score years and ten, ye creatures of a day ?
Ye are to me like the flying motes that in the sunshine play !
Shall I tremble because ye threaten, and whisper that I am old ?
I will die of my own free, lordly will, ere the year has shed its gold !

But till then, as I stood or ever the land of your love was born,
I will stand erect on my bill-top, fronting the hills of morn ;
In the pride of mine age uplifting my head above meaner
things,

Till only the strong winds reach it, or the wild birds' sweeping wings !

THE TWO TAVERNS.

I REMEMBER how I lay,
On a bank a summer's day,
Peering into weed and flower,
Watched a poppy all one hour,
Watched it till the air grew chill,
In the darkness of the hill,
Till I saw a wild bee dart
Out of the cold to the poppy's heart,
Saw the petals gently spin,
And shut the little lodger in.
Then I took the quiet road
To my own secure abode.
All night long his tavern hung,
Now it rested, now it swung—
I asleep in steadfast tower,
He asleep in stirring flower,
In our hearts the same delight,
In the hushes of the night,
Over us both the same dear care,
As we slumbered unaware.

—Edwin Markham.

BABY HAS GONE TO SCHOOL.

THE baby has gone to school, ah, me !
What will the mother do,
With never a call to button or pin,
Or tie a little shoe ?
How can she keep herself busy all day,
With the little "hinderer thing" away ?

Another basket to fill with lunch,
Another "good-by" to say,
And the mother stands at the door to see
Her baby march away ;
And turns with a sigh that is half relief,
And half a something akin to grief.

She picks up the garments here and there,
Thrown down in careless haste,
And tries to think how it would seem
If nothing were displaced ;
If the house was always still as this,
How could she bear the loneliness ?

—Exchange.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

IMPRESSIONS OF NORMANDY.

THIS letter was written in the shade of a scrubby, woody elderberry-tree hedge, high up the side of one of the steep, grassy chalk hills characterizing this part of the French coast, and overlooking the narrow little valley with its slate (I believe) and thatch-roofed houses perched on the steep slope on either side of the one village street or road. These chalk hills appear just as do the Downs of the English coast from the sea and are evidently the same formation, soft, white, chalky earth streaked sometimes with patches of iron stain.

The country is beautiful and fertile, its rolling hills covered with timber of fair size, and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile after mile of fine grain fields.

Indeed, the impression of the country between Paris and the coast was that of one immense broken stretch of oats and wheat, comparatively very few domestic animals being seen at pasture. Here in France, when one sees a few cows in a field, one naturally looks around for the accompanying small boy or old woman, and the extravagance of our long heavy rail-fenced pastures is a thing undreamed of. Picturesque Brittany is the haunt of the artist hordes, but La Normandie is the farming and fruit-raising province of northern France, and its tanned and weather-beaten peasants have a reputation for thrift and sharp, hard dealing which has made them notorious even among the French. All are Catholics, of course, and no village of any size but has its big church, often rising to the dignity of a cathedral, the pride of the neighboring community. Last Seventh-day we went to the nearest "village" with our Catholic host and family, to see the market, and go to the church. Madame took her maid, who carried the provision basket ; we all went in to mass, where I could appreciate a beautiful organ chant. When we walked out, Madame did her marketing, and we all walked home, having satisfactorily performed the duties of Seventh-day morning towards soul and body, according to the Catholic conscience.

The beach along this coast for miles is of flint and limestone pebbles, from a marble in size up to an adult cobblestone,—anything else than pleasant to walk or recline upon,—so that our one general country store does a thriving trade in bathing slippers. But as "it isn't the world,—its the people !" so it is these same sunburned farmers and fisher families that give the touch of strangeness and novelty to the place. I thought men and women literally worked like horses in Paris, drawing carts by harness in the streets ; here they are pack animals, specially made baskets or paniers being the ordinary means of carrying loads wherever they cannot own a horse or donkey. And such old women ! One sees rough-looking specimens enough at home ; but such leathery, wrinkled, and tanned human faces as one sees here, often on elderly working-women, are usually and quite properly confined at home to the mummy department of our museums. Worse still, with few exceptions, their lives of burden-bearing has made them all hump-backed and bent to a pitiful degree, and small wonder to one who sees them leaning forward, hands folded, trudging up these Norman hill-sides with a whole wet wash on their backs, or a pile of fish-net enough to load a hand cart ! Most of them have large families, too, and I must say for them, generally a very comely, chubby lot of little ones they are, the flaxen or light-haired and blue-eyed are predominating over the black-haired and dark-eyed southern French type.

There are a few misshapen and terribly demoralized looking exceptions, bearing evidence of the rough and too-hard labor of these toil-worn and early-ageing mothers. One of the most unpleasant impressions was that of the harsh, loud voices of many of these women, some of them strangely masculine and grating on ears accustomed to ordinary and quiet tones ; but one soon discovers that their bark must be worse than their bite, for the tiniest child may be seen trudging along, its little hand fast in the horny, knobby palm of some awful-looking old scold whose face would be a curiosity and whose voice a terror to many a gently-reared infant at home. Indeed the regard of the French nation for children,—I think I might add dogs,—is a matter of notice, and the freedom they largely enjoy is, so far as I have ever seen, very rarely abused—this might include the dogs, also! One wonders sometimes if, in growing used to some of the things of habit here that must be deprecated, one does not lose a certain delicacy like the freshness of youth; but after all the true education is that one which if it dulls one's capacity for being shocked, opens the mind to the perception of what may be good in rough things, cultivating a charity and a human interest, where perhaps the natural and selfish instinct would begin and end in a repellant aversion as unfriendly as it would be narrow-minded.

SARAH P. BYRNES.

La Normandie, France.

THE LATE WILLIAM JONES.

The following sketch of the notable English Friend and philanthropist, whose book, "Quaker Campaigns," was reviewed in FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER of Sixth month 17, is from the British Friend.

ONE more familiar face has disappeared, and another earnest voice, which pleaded for truth, peace, and brotherhood, has become silent in the grasp of death. Our Friend William Jones, of Sunderland, was called suddenly hence on the morning of the 28th of Seventh month, whilst on a visit to a friend at Balla Wray, Windermere. William Jones had completed his last work, "Quaker Campaigns," but a few months previously, and though the effort was laborious, owing to his failing health, he had happily accomplished his task and had received not a few tokens of public appreciation of his work. He took much interest in the proceedings of the late yearly meeting and those who were present at the last sitting of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight will not have forgotten his earnest Catholic remarks when the "Letter on Worship and Ministry" was under consideration.

William Jones was present at the Meeting for Sufferings early in the Seventh month, attended the Continental Committee, the Peace Committee, and the Madagascar Sub-committee, where his help was much appreciated. His warm interest in the cause of international peace and arbitration extended over many years. For a short time he was Secretary to the Peace Society after the decease of Henry Richard. But a weakness of the heart's action required him to be very careful how he undertook public work involving much speaking.

In his early life he was apprenticed to a grocer, but soon found the employment uncongenial to his literary tastes. Following his studies, and acquiring considerable proficiency in languages, he found a home as tutor in the family of the late Joseph Pease, of Darlington, and for many years was associated with the interests of that family. We may refer the reader to interesting details of his life-work, published in the recently issued volume "Quaker Campaigns." The Society is made poorer by the loss of such members, but has been enriched by their lives. The following brief allusion to the close of this useful Christian life, will interest our readers. It is from the pen of one of his sons, writing to the editor from Sunderland the day after the occurrence:

In sending you the enclosed memorial card of my dear father's decease, which will give you the particulars which are usually inserted in The British Friend, I thought, perhaps, you would like to have a few further particulars of the close of his life.

After the completion of his book he seemed to gain somewhat in health, and was largely free from the pain he had suffered from frequently when writing it, and especially during a severe illness in Second month last.

He and his wife were looking forward with pleasure to a short visit they were to pay on the invitation of Mrs. James Richardson, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, to Balla Wray, her lovely house on Lake Windermere. The journey was delayed one day until the 27th, however, owing to some indisposition, but, feeling much better then, they started on that date and duly arrived, and he did not seem to have felt the journey at all. In the evening he was very cheerful, and enjoyed the lovely scenery from the garden. He had rather a sleepless night, but arose feeling well (for him), and at breakfast took part as usual in the conversation. His head was then observed to drop quietly forward, and although restoratives were at once applied, it was found he had passed away painlessly and without a sound. The doctor, who resided some way off, was summoned in haste, but could only confirm the worst forebodings. I was at once telegraphed for, but could only arrive in the evening, and had but the melancholy satisfaction of gazing upon his cold features, which looked calm and happy. Our friends were more than kind in every way, but we decided to remove the remains next day to this house from which the interment is to take place to-morrow.

My dear father's recent life was so serene, and his Christian experience was so full and rich, that death for him had no terrors, and it is the knowledge of this that is our chief solace in this heavy bereavement.

King Corn's New Conquests.

It is doubtful, says the Chicago Tribune, if the happy farmer, as he looks out over his acres of splendid corn, realizes how many new uses science has found for the product of his fertile fields. Corn, so long neglected, has within the last few years advanced rapidly in importance, not only as an article of food, but as a raw material from which at least twenty manufactured compounds are produced. If the corn crop promises to be the greatest on record, it is also true that the demand for corn will be equally as great. The fluttering green pennons on a thousand Western prairies are the signal to all the world that King Corn has come again into his own.

Twenty articles of commerce are produced from corn. Some of these corn products promise to attain wide use, and their manufacture may develop into important new industries. Here is the list of manufactured products for which corn furnishes the raw material:

Mixing glucose,	British gum,
Crystal glucose,	Granulated gum,
Grape sugar,	Gum paste,
Anhydrous grape sugar,	Corn oil,
Special sugar,	Corn oil cake,
Pearl starch,	Rubber substitute,
Powdered starch,	Gluten feed,
Refined grits,	Chop feed,
Flourine,	Gluten meal,
Dextrine,	Corn germ.

Every particle of the grain, including the cob, is manufactured into some useful product. A market is found among refiners of table syrups, brewers, leather manufacturers, fruit preservers, confectioners, druggists, cotton and paper mills, paper box makers, mucilage and glue makers, table oil and lubricating oil mixers, shade cloth manufacturers, paint grinders, manufacturers of fibre. This long list gives an idea of the large number of important industries which are now dependent to an extent on the product of Western cornfields.

Greatest in the promise of future developments is the use of a corn product as a substitute for rubber. This new rubber, which is made from the waste of ordinary corn, will, it is predicted, soon be used in the manufacture of all rubber goods, and, it is expected, will cheapen the price of those goods 25 per cent. It can be produced, so its inventors claim, for six cents a pound, and, in connection with an equal quantity of Para rubber, can be used in the production of all classes of rubber articles.

Helen Kellar's Triumph.

SURELY no other human being has ever encountered so many and great obstacles in acquiring an education as Helen Keller. The hardships of students combating poverty or delicate health, or compelled to receive instruction in a foreign tongue, are as nothing compared with Miss Kellar's handicaps in taking her examinations preparatory to entering Radcliffe College this fall. No particle of their severity was abated for her. Indeed, on the contrary, they were made unintentionally difficult. To sit in total darkness and silence, with no idea of the time, with no touch of a friendly hand,—for neither Miss Sullivan, her constant companion, nor her master, Mr. Keith, was allowed to communicate the questions to her,—these were sufficiently difficult conditions. But her labor was unnecessarily increased by the college authorities. They had the examination papers written out in Braille characters by a man who had never seen Helen, and who, it was discovered too late, used a different system of writing for the blind from that to which she was accustomed. Helen Kellar did not hesitate or draw back even at this, but puzzled out the unfamiliar, punctured points as best she could, and wrote her answers on her typewriter, passing triumphantly in every study, even "with credit" in some. Her intellectual achievement is, however, almost overshadowed by the girl's indomitable moral courage in surmounting difficulties. Does she not put to shame every slothful and easily-disheartened soul? —Congregationalist.

CURRENT EVENTS.

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT died suddenly on the 12th inst., at his New York city residence, from an attack of paralysis, aged 56 years. His estate is estimated at about 100,000,000.

DR. POZZI, an eminent Paris surgeon, says Dreyfus is a physical wreck. He is thin and worn; his muscles are atrophied. He is 39 years of age and looks 60. He will never, Dr. Pozzi says, be thoroughly alive again. If he recovers his liberty he will live, but only if surrounded with every care, wrapped up, as it were, in cotton and placed in a greenhouse like a plant which has suffered too much for it ever to recover its pristine vigor.

FOR the first two months of the new fiscal year our Government has expended $102,969,090.33, of which $21,066,489.81 has gone for the support of the civil and miscellaneous establishment, and all the rest for military expenses of one kind or another. The army got $34,262,080.06; the navy, $9,688,245.40; military pensions, $26,055,674.80, and interest on the war debt, $9,153,845.38, a total on the military side of the ledger of $79,159,845.64, or at the rate of $474,959,073.84 a year for warlike outgoes, while the total cost of the civil establishment was at the annual rate of $126,398,938.86.

CARLIST plots in Spain have been discovered, and the Queen Regent has proclaimed martial law in the Province of Vizcaya.

RAILROAD traffic centering at Chicago was very large last week. It was regarded as the beginning of the heaviest fall and winter seasons that the roads have experienced. Deliveries of grain were the largest of the year, aggregating 8,772,000 bushels. It is estimated that the roads of the country are short 100,000 cars; this in the face of an enlargement of 100,000 cars in their equipment last year. They now have, however, 100,000 more cars in the process of construction. Orders for 1,000 more cars were given out at Chicago last week.

THE Government's crop figures, according to the calculations of the statistician of the New York produce exchange, point to a total wheat yield of 516,250,000 bushels, compared with a crop last year of 675,148,705 bushels, and 530,149,168 bushels in 1897. The August 1 corn crop estimates are materially reduced by the September 1 report—the present indicated crop being 2,088,960,000 bushels, which was exceeded by the crops of 1896 and 1895.

THE losses of the United States troops in the Philippine Islands since August 6, 1898, are as follows:

Killed,	293
Died of wounds and accidents,	141
Died of disease,	499
Total deaths,	933
Wounded,	1,615
Captured and missing,	18
Grand total,	2,566

SPEAKER THOMAS B. REED, having resigned his seat in the United States House of Representatives, as a member from the First (Portland) district of Maine, has now written a letter of thanks to the Republicans of the district, in which he expresses his confidence that the district "will always be true to the principles of liberty, self-government, and the rights of man."

THERE has been for some time a "revolution" in progress in Venezuela, and dispatches now state the situation to be "critical." The revolutionists, it is said, are in possession of towns within eighty miles of the capital. Minister Loomis is returning to his post to protect American interests.

MANILA advices by way of Hong Kong announce that "Aguinaldo is willing to release all sick and civilian Spanish prisoners," but that "Major General Otis refuses to allow Spanish vessels to proceed to Filipino ports to receive them." It is reported from Hong Kong that two British steamers near Luzon Island were recently overhauled by American gunboats on the watch for filibusters.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

A MEETING of executive officers of Western railroads was held in New York City on the 19th, to discuss an agreement as to the issuance of annual "passes" for next year. This is the regular form, and of late years the number of annuals has been decreased. The agreement has not been lived up to as a rule, but it has helped the roads. "If no passes or half-rate tickets were issued except to the officials of each individual road," one official says, "the roads might make a rate of a cent a mile for the general public."

—Attorney-General Akin at Springfield, Ill., has rendered an opinion that the medical practice act of 1889 does not prohibit the treatment of disease by mental or spiritual methods by Christian scientists, or others, where no medicine is used, and that where a person dies during such treatment it is not an offense under the criminal code of Illinois.

—Andrew Carnegie has given to libraries all over the United States, since January 1, fully $2,450,000, says the Library Journal, and this without counting the inconsiderable doles of $50,000 here and there. Half that and more went to Pittsburg, where it has made Homestead riots forgotten.

—H. A. Haigh and S. S. Angus, capitalists of Detroit, have, it is announced, completed arrangements which will give a new electric road from Toledo to Buffalo, which will be the longest road of its kind in the world. The new system will be in running order by June, next year.

—A grand jury at Owensburg, Ky., has returned indictments against the Louisville and Nashville, the Illinois Central, and the Louisville, Henderson and St. Louis Railroads for violating the separate-coach law by providing inferior accommodations for negroes.

—Sir Thomas Lipton told an inquirer on board his steam yacht Erin in New York harbor, that if the Herberts accepted his offer of $250,000 for the Muckross estate, which includes the lakes of Killarney, he will make a gift of it all to the Irish people.

—Governor Stone of Pennsylvania has reappointed Prof. J. T. Rothrock, of West Chester, State Forestry Commissioner. This is very gratifying to all those interested in Forestry work.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844. }
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 30, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 39.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XXXIX.

THROUGH this unspeakable gift [Divine grace] mankind are put in possession of "the unsearchable riches of Christ," and know him to be their resurrection and their life; and because he lives in them they live also,—not in the oldness of the letter, but in the newness of the Spirit.

SARAH HUNT.

From a letter, 1857, to the members of Duanesburg, N. Y., Quarterly Meeting.

JOY.

LET thy day be to thy night
A letter of good tidings. Let thy praise
Go up as birds go up, that when they wake
Shake off the dew and soar. So take Joy home,
And give her time to grow, and cherish her.
Then will she come, and oft will sing to thee,
When thou art working in the furrows; ay,
Or weeding in the sacred hour of dawn.
It is a comely fashion to be glad,—
Joy is the grace we say to God.

—Jean Ingelow.

FRIENDS IN ENGLAND.

I.

A PRINCIPAL object of my visit to England was to see and visit Friends. I therefore attended all the meetings I conveniently could. In the time I had on land there were fourteen First-days; one of these I spent in Holland, and on another, at Grasmere, in the English Lake country, I failed, because of rain, to get to Colthouse meeting, eight miles distant. On the other twelve First-days I sat with companies of Friends in the meetings in Chelsea, Westminster, (twice), and Devonshire House, London; at Manchester, Southport, Street, Leominster, Colwyn Bay, Edinburgh, Scarborough, and Birmingham. Besides these First-day meetings, I was at the Yearly Meeting in London (as heretofore detailed), at Bristol and Somerset Quarterly Meeting, and at Hardshaw East Monthly Meeting.

* * *

The meeting at Chelsea (London), has always been held in private houses. There is no meeting-house. The home of Thomas W. and Anne Warner Marsh, in Cheyne Walk, on the river bank, has been used for the purpose, but their absence from Chelsea has rendered it unavailable since last spring. As I have heretofore said, it was held, at the time of my visit, in the home of Percy and Edith Bigland, at 32 Tite street—a short distance from Cheyne Walk. The appointed time is 6.30 p. m., except on the first

First-day in the month, when it is at 11 a. m. The meeting is very much one of "waiting" upon the Source of Strength, and varies in size, not being at any time large. The ministry of Anne Warner Marsh is sympathetic and welcome. One of those present in the morning meeting, Sixth month 4, was the wife of Leonard Courtney, M. P., one of the most prominent and independent members of the House of Commons (he sits for Bodwin, in Cornwall). A Friend present quoted the beautiful text, Isaiah, xl., 31, "They that wait upon God shall renew their strength," etc., and this seemed to have impressed her by its appropriateness to the occasion, and by its significance in connection with worship. Mary Travilla, in the meeting Sixth month 25, had a brief but helpful and acceptable message.

* * *

The First-day morning meeting at Devonshire House (where the Yearly Meeting is held), on Sixth month 25, was small,—about forty persons, perhaps. It was held in what is called the "old" house, not the "large" one, in which the men sit at yearly meeting. The principal speaker was Mary Ann Marriage-Allen, who had just returned from a visit to Cyprus and Palestine. Soon after the meeting had gathered, she rose and gave a brief explanation of the views of Friends as to silent waiting. Later, she spoke at some length, mainly a commentary on parts of a chapter in the Old Testament, which she read as she proceeded. One or two others, men, spoke, and prayers were offered by two persons.

There were, in 1898, according to the "Book of Meetings," 128 members, and 23 attenders, at Devonshire House.

* * *

The two meetings which I attended at Westminster (52 St. Martin's Lane, near Trafalgar Square), were on the 18th of Sixth month and 27th of Eighth month. In the former there was a good, though not large, attendance,—perhaps a hundred persons. Anne Warner Marsh, A. W. Bennett, and two other Friends spoke. Prayer was offered by two or three. The general epistle of the Yearly Meeting was read at the close. On my second visit, the attendance was smaller, probably about forty, so many people being "out of town." There were but two Friends in the gallery, both men, William Hobson (originally from Lurgan, in the north of Ireland), and Frederic Taylor. Both had ministry, and the former offered prayer. Frederic Taylor is the general secretary of the Friends' First-day school work, and devotes his time to it. He is a brother to Alfred Taylor, (who was secretary of the committee at Ackworth General Meeting, and whom I spoke of in my letter on Ackworth), and his (F. T.'s) wife is the daughter of John Stephenson Rowntree, of York.

J. Began Braithwaite, who has long occupied a prominent and influential position among Friends, especially in London, attends at Westminster, but was not present on either of the days I attended. I heard him speak in the yearly meeting. He is now well advanced in years, and his health is not strong.

The meeting-house at Westminster stands back from the street somewhat, and an iron gate admits to a passage-way by which it is reached. It has a number of committee-rooms, a pleasant "lobby," or entrance hall, etc. The meeting-room itself is lighted from the roof and by two high windows in the gables. A fine old-oak wainscot occupies the sides of the room, and with the subdued light gives the aspect of quiet and retirement. The adult schools are conducted in rooms adjoining the meeting-house, and I was present in the men's class, conducted by Percy Bigland, on both the mornings on which I was at meeting.

The "Book of Meetings," 1898, gives 314 members at Westminster, and 10 attenders.

* * *

I attended at Manchester on the morning of Seventh month 2, after being at the adult school class conducted by John William Graham. The meeting-house stands in Mount street, near Albert Square and the Town Hall. It is a large, substantial building,—the largest, perhaps, out of London,—and conveniently accommodated the large gatherings at the time of the Conference held here in 1895. The morning was wet and dark the day I was present. There was a good attendance, but the meeting was considered smaller than usual. There was ministry by two or three Friends in the gallery, including Jane Eliza Brayshaw, who was until recently Clerk of Women's Yearly Meeting. Her son also spoke, and Dr. E. Vipont Brown,—these from the body of the meeting. Prayer was offered by several Friends.

The "Book of Meetings," 1898, reports 395 members and 90 attenders for Manchester. The evening meeting is at 6.30.

* * *

On the following First-day, Seventh month 9, I was at Southport. I attended, first, the adult-school class taught by Edward Grubb. The class-room is in the meeting-house building. The meeting was at 10.30 a. m. Hannah Wallis (who is principal of a private school for girls, long established at Southport), and Edward Grubb had ministry. Prayer was offered by another Friend.

The house at Southport is of modern erection, a light and pleasant building. The report for 1898 gives 137 members and 14 attenders. There is evening meeting at 6.30.

* * *

A week later, the 16th, I was at Street, in Somersetshire. I accompanied our friends, the Clarks, and was seated beside John Morland, now the Clerk of the Yearly Meeting (who lives near Street, and is associated in business with William S. Clark), who sits at the head of the meeting. The house, of stone, and modern erection, stands in pleasant grounds, with some fine old trees beside it. The burying-ground is in the rear, neatly kept.

In the meeting there were about fifty persons present. John Morland offered prayer, and also had a brief communication. A woman Friend had a short testimony. The time of the sitting was a little over an hour. (This is rather under the average; most meetings that I attended continued about an hour and twenty minutes.)

It was a beautiful day, and as we left the meeting, we walked about to the homes of several Friends, before returning to "Millfield." There was apparent a most kindly and cordial feeling among the Friends at Street.

The meeting at Street, 1898, was reported as having 58 members and 4 attenders. A reading meeting is held at 6 p. m., on Fourth-day.

* * *

Two days later, the 18th of Sixth month, Bristol and Somerset Quarterly Meeting was held at Street, and this I also attended. The meeting of ministers and elders, "Ministry and Oversight," as it is called in England, was held the previous evening at 6. It contained some young persons, as well as older. The quarterly meeting began at 11.15 on the 18th. In the meeting for worship, most of the time was occupied by a doctrinal discourse by Charles W. Goddard, of Kansas, who had minutes from meetings at Wichita, dated some two years ago. The general epistle of the yearly meeting was read. The business meeting was appointed to begin at 12.45 and to continue to 1.30; it was, however, rather late, owing to the protraction of the meeting for worship. Both sexes remained, though later, at 3, the women held a short separate session in another room.

At 1.30 the meeting adjourned until 3. Dinner was served for all who would remain (a few were privately entertained), across the street, at the Bear Coffee Tavern, a pleasant and convenient temperance place. The large dining-room was fitted up with long tables, and nearly the whole quarterly meeting dined together. It was very sociable and pleasant.

The adjourned business meeting continued until about 5 o'clock. There was a variety of business, including the consideration of several "selected minutes" from the yearly meeting. The clerk was Charles E. Frank; the clerk of the women's branch of the quarterly meeting was Hannah Maria Grace; Arthur Smith, assistant clerk, aided in the reading of reports, etc. The attendance was probably one hundred to one hundred and fifty. The proceedings were conducted very systematically, and with much kindness of manner. The clerk, as is the custom with English meetings, kept the business well in hand, and helped the meeting forward with it. Altogether, it appeared to me to compare very favorably with any of our American quarterly meetings, and I enjoyed being present.

H. M. J.

NONE can be a minister of Christ Jesus but in the eternal Spirit, which was before the Scriptures were given forth; for if they have not his Spirit, they are none of his. Though they may have his light, them that hate it, yet they can never bring any into unity and fellowship in the Spirit except they be in it.—George Fox.

MAKING GOD A FACTOR.

Read to the students at Swarthmore College, Ninth month 24, 1899, by Elizabeth Powell Bond.

It is the autumn of the year ; but the spring-time of the young souls of this congregation. The earth has had her annual seed-time when the farmer put his plow-share into the hardened crust and opened it to the fructifying power of the sunshine and the showers, and dropped into the furrows the wonderful seed, so full of possibilities. Then began the activities of nature's laboratory, the seeming perpetual miracle of growth,—the transformation of the single grain of corn into the stately plant bearing a hundred-fold increase. The earth's foodful harvests have been gathered into barns. And now, when her season of rest is approaching, her profound sleep that will follow the touch of frost, we have come together for our season of activity, to repeat in other guise the seeming perpetual miracle of growth. It is to be believed that in this company of happy, hopeful young souls there is no hardened crust waiting the plow-share's severe service. It is to be believed that here are receptive and eager souls, the "good soil" having depth enough and richness enough to receive seed and bring forth many-fold. You have arranged your programs—the order of your seed-sowing. You have chosen language studies to open to you the vast stores of history and literature—the records of man's progress ; you have chosen mathematics to reveal to you relations and proportions that establish the order of the universe—one expression of God's truth ; you have chosen science, to let you into some of the secrets of nature, to find out how God himself has worked, combining the elements into the wonderful products of earth and air.

There is one inquiry I would suggest to your minds—an inquiry most vital in its significance: Have you made God a factor in your program ? If there is one place more than another in the world that calls for reverent recognition of God, it is the college class-room. For the theme of every college class-room is one of the ways leading ultimately to God. It is happy for us, indeed, if at the beginning of the year's work our anchorage is "the thought of God ;" if all our work is lifted up into the luminous atmosphere of this thought. Is some one among you wishing for more definite words than these, wishing for a portraiture of God ? Let me remind you that any portraiture of God, the Infinite, can be only partial and incomplete ; that our conception is narrow and shallow or broad and deep in proportion as we have grown toward God, and of necessity bounded by our finite vision. We can only feel after him, our souls turning toward him, as growing things stretch toward the light. You will remember that Jesus did not definitely portray God ; that he said to the Samaritan woman, "the hour cometh and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth. . . . God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." Jesus does not picture Him, but turns our thought toward the Fatherliness of God. "Hitherto my Father works, and I work." "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business ?" "I and my Father are one." If this thought is beyond our own growth and we cannot enter into it, perhaps the sky and the trees and the beautiful flowers—even the one blade of grass that no man can make, will be to us the outward and visible expression of the Infinite—of the Power that so loves beauty, and must be truth, and must be the soul of love to shine and shine above the places darkened by "man's inhumanity to man." Or it may be that the revelation of the Infinite and the Divine is written for us in some human heart,—father or mother, sister or brother, or friend. That which points us to a higher level than our own—that is a message to us from out the heart of God.

"How can we make God a factor in our work," are you asking ? By fitting our work to a standard of sincerity, as God's work is sincere. The translation that has your own effort and research, that is work in which God is a factor ; and goes to the up-building of mental and moral fibre alike. The problem whose hidden relations you have yourself striven after and developed—that is work in which God is a factor, and makes you a sharer in the very wisdom and power of God. To do our work, whatever it may be, in habitual consciousness of God, referring all our doubts and perplexities to the judgment seat of our highest conceptions—this it is to make God a factor in our work, and to go on our way upborne by the Everlasting Arms ; and when work is done and recreation is the privilege of the hour, not less may God be made a factor in our lives, if it be still our habit in the midst of play to lift up our thought in gladness and thanksgiving to the perennial Source of joy, and this is but another way of saying that beautiful assurance of Isaiah : "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength ; they shall mount up with wings as eagles ; they shall run and not be weary ; and they shall walk and not faint." If you have already learned this lesson of lessons, blessed indeed are you for all eternity.

And let us not lose sight of one other thought—the privilege that is ours of being in some small measure a revelation of God to the souls that stand near us. Insignificant as we feel ourselves, it may be that just our sincerity, our truthfulness, our faithfulness will make our doubting neighbor believe there is sincerity and truthfulness and faithfulness ; and that these are of God. It may easily be that the kindliness of our look as we pass along our college halls may be the ray of comfort needed by some sorely tried soul, to renew his courage and hold him to God. O, it is a life of wonderful opportunity, this life of ours within college walls, where it is the privilege of each to shine in comfort, to stand fast in truth, to lead all the rest straight onward toward God !

"One thought I have, my ample creed,
So deep it is and broad,
And equal to my every need,—
It is the thought of God."

THE religious optimist, whose faith in God means tolerance of the devil, is not a useful citizen nor an entrancing spectacle.—Ex.

NEWTON MEETING, N. J. : A RETROSPECT.

(Conclusion.)

THE meeting was generally attended by the neighbors, whether members or not, and flourished for a quarter of a century, before its second dissension occurred. The sad separation of 1827 came, with its breaking up of heretofore cherished friendships, and its damage to the great influence Friends had had with those not of their membership. The Orthodox branch retained the meeting-house, and when John Comly appointed a meeting to be held there, refused to open it to him, whereupon, on his declining to have the doors forced open, as was ready to be done had he consented, our Friends secured Hatch's school-house, in the upper part of Camden, and the meeting was held there, where also, within about four weeks, one was appointed by Elisha Dawson and one by Mary Pike. No other meetings were held in that house. On Second month 7, 1828, Edward Bullock, clerk of the Preparatory Meeting, records, as the first minute of that meeting after the separation, that arrangements had been made with the Trustees of Camden school, then held in the Academy, at the southwest corner of Sixth and Market streets, where the Genge School now is, for the holding of meetings there on First- and Fifth-days. The first meeting was held there on First-day, Second month 10, 1828, and the meetings continued to be held there until the fall of that year. On Seventh month 6, 1828, Joseph W. Cooper, though not a member, gave to Friends, much to the chagrin, freely expressed, of some of his Orthodox cousins, the ground whereon we now meet. At the Preparative Meeting, held the same month, John Ward was appointed to collect moneys for the erection of a meeting-house, and Joseph Kaighn and Edward Bullock to superintend the building of it, and by winter time the house, plain and small, was built. From Market street to far north of Cooper street was then all woods, extending as far down as Sixth street. And our meeting-house soon became known as "the little meeting in the woods," some of the Orthodox styling it, "the Hicksite Cabin," and predicting that it would only be "a nine-days' wonder."

If I give some instances of imperfection of temper in respected worthies long gone to their reward, it is from no unkindly spirit, but as a part of the history of troublesome times that happily have passed and which we may now review without bitterness.

Twice during the Revolutionary war was the ground where Friends now meet the scene of war-like manœuvres. In the spring of 1778, a sharp spirited skirmish took place between the British, drawn up between Sixth and Market Streets and Cooper's Creek bridge, and the Americans, led by Count Pulaski, and stationed in the woods along the Haddonfield road, then intersecting Market street at the present Broadway. The British kept up a heavy firing, from about where our meeting-house stands, upon the Americans, and, outnumbering them ten to one, forced them to retire, but without the loss of a man, although the British had one killed and several wounded. Later, Pulaski came near leading the Americans into an ambuscade arranged by the British, near our meeting-house, but, being warned in time, by William West, a patriot apprised of the danger, he turned the Americans in time to save themselves.

At the head of our meeting from the separation until his death sat John Ward, a worthy Friend, odd in his bluntness, and much given to holding long meetings, which were no better relished by the younger members then than now. On the way home from meeting once, his son remonstrated with him for this, but he stopped him short by saying, "Thee don't know anything about it. Does thee think I can break up under a cloud?" J—— W——, a minister from Philadelphia, used frequently to come to Camden Meeting, and generally preached. One day, however, he sat silent. After meeting, John Ward, shaking hands with him, said: "J——, thee never attended this meeting more acceptably than to-day." Taking tea at a Friend's house once during the yearly meeting, his host's daughter, who presided at the urn, said to him: "Friend Ward, will thee take milk in thy coffee?" "I'll take cream, gal," was his answer. With all his peculiarities he was a most hospitable and kind-hearted man, a Friend of sterling integrity, and one deeply concerned for the promotion of the cause of Truth. Next to him in the gallery sat Joseph Kaighn, a generous man of resolute will and much ability, whose counsel largely moulded the course of Friends of our meeting during the trials of 1827-28, and who was many times chosen to fill important public positions.

On the "separation," the monthly meeting, after a lapse of one hundred years, was again held alternately at Newton Meeting, continuing appropriately so to the present time. And long before another century shall be completed, let us hope, the quarterly meeting will see the fitness of again holding one of its sittings in this, the oldest of its branches, and where it was founded.

The prominent deceased recommended ministers who, since 1828, have sat at different times at the heads of our galleries were, Rachel Wainwright, Samuel J. Levick, Sarah Hunt, and Mary S. Lippincott. For many years sat there William Folwell, a retired Philadelphia merchant, who made his fortune trading with China, whither he several times went to personally superintend his ventures. A hale, handsome man, with white hair and ruddy cheeks, gentle, manly, dignified, even distant in his manners, sitting erect and with head thrown back, with his hands on the buck-horn knob of his large yellow cane, his imposing presence threw a mellow dignity over the meeting. For many years an elder, he occasionally in the latter part of his life would, near the close of the meeting, give a few earnest words of encouragement and invitation to the younger Friends to take their part in the meetings which he must soon leave. He died in 1871, over eighty years of age.

The little meeting-house in the woods, heated by a wood stove, with its low ceiling and attic room, for the holding of men's business meetings, remained unchanged for nearly sixty years. In 1885 it was lengthened, its ceiling raised to the roof, doing away with the attic room; a heater, to warm it in cold weather, was placed in a cellar made for that purpose ; an open fireplace, to heat it in mild weather and to ventilate it at all times, was placed between the men's and women's galleries, and a porch and a small library room added to it, so improving its comfort and appearance as to make it one of the most attractive meeting-houses belonging to Friends. The first meeting in the newly-altered house was held on First-day, Tenth month 25, 1885, and completely filled it. Mary S. Lippincott spoke from the text, "God is a God hearing and answering prayer." Elizabeth Plummer, who came not knowing of anything to call the people forth on that day, began her sermon with the words, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you ;" and Isaac C. Martindale gave a brief sketch of the early establishment of the meeting.

Such are glimpses at the past of Newton Meeting ; to-day, with our membership of 131, let us look forward in the belief that its mission is not yet ended, and in the hope that its standard bearers, following the Light, will be earnest and fit successors to its worthies gone before. HOWARD M. COOPER.

Correspondence of Friends' Intelligencer.

ILLINOIS YEARLY MEETING.

SOON after gathering into silence First-day morning, the vision of Peter was presented to us, with his remark that nothing unclean or common had ever passed his lips, and he was told that what God had cleansed, he should not call common or unclean. The lesson to be derived from this was that we be careful not to form too hasty a judgment. A friend quoted the following beautiful verse :

"As flows the river calm and deep
In silence toward the sea,
So floweth ever, and ceaseth never
The love of God to thee."

The pleasant change in the weather and our outward surroundings was spoken of, and our gathering together was compared to being seated at the table of the Lord ; the silence was the "grace," and we were now prepared to partake of the bread to be offered. The speaker's mission to-day seemed to be to the children, who, she said, had something to do in these meetings, as well as the older ones, and she appealed to them lovingly to try to sit still and think good thoughts. They were advised to be kind to all, but most especially to the old, watching for little opportunities to manifest their thoughtfulness. The older people were reminded that the Beloved Son was sent into the world to draw us to the Father: When we enter into our form of worship, we must bring our wandering thoughts into stillness, then hearts may be anointed and appointed to give forth to others of the good gifts they have partaken of. If we strive to find the centre of life and love, we will find it. The gospel of Jesus Christ as proclaimed in the Sermon on the Mount, is so plain, simple, and practical, that all can understand it, but unless we practice these precepts, of what avail are they to us ? for it is the living out of these that cleanses the soul from sin.

Fervent prayer followed, and this little couplet repeated,

"When Jesus shows his smiling face,
There is sunshine in the soul."

In the afternoon a much larger company assembled,—more than the house could accommodate. After a short silence these appropriate words were spoken, "Be still and know that I am God."

E. C. then said that every religious organization represents its own particular thought, and that the Society of Friends need not be ashamed of its position ; it has been a pioneer in moral reforms,—positive and not negative in its stand. Truth has not changed, but is the same now as it was in the time of Adam, though the application of its principles to existing needs has changed. The religion proclaimed by Jesus is an advancing religion, and we to-day are on a higher level than were the people of old. In former times the priest and prophets were looked to as expounders of God's truth to the people, but in our time we know that God speaks to his people himself, for all shall know Him, from the least to the greatest. Jesus's mission was to lift the world higher,—not to change the manner of salvation, but to open our hearts that we may receive God into them.

We were told that we must practice what we have heard, if we would vitalize their truths, and the meeting closed with prayer.

After assembling in business capacity, on Second-day, and the opening minute read, the beauty of harmony was delineated by quoting the 133d Psalm, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," etc. We were reminded that we have our duties, privileges, and responsibilities, and if we have a word that will further a good cause, we should give it to the meeting. An affectionate tribute was here paid to our former assistant clerk, who has done us such excellent service for many years ; she and her husband having been faithful attenders of our meeting, but now removed within the limits of another yearly meeting. Both are much missed from our annual gathering.

At this time a minute was read from her meeting for Margaretta Walton, and she and her companion received a cordial welcome.

The calling of the representatives showed all present but two ; coming from north-western Nebraska, southern Indiana, and different parts of Illinois. After some other routine business, epistles from other yearly meetings were read, calling forth many remarks. We were impressed favorably with the friendly recognition by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of visitors from across the sea. This visit and recognition will help to draw the different branches of our Society closer together, and we were glad that this step was taken by the largest body of our Friends, and one of the oldest.

It was felt that now was a fitting time to render a loving tribute to the memory of our valued friend, Aaron M. Powell, and we remembered his devotion to duty in little things as well as great, and it seemed almost as if we could still hear his pleading voice, urging us to "come up higher."

The thought in Baltimore epistle of holding a short devotional meeting before entering on the business impressed us deeply.

We felt a great truth was expressed in New York epistle, that living on the past—on the works and words of our fathers—will not do the work for us. We entered into sympathy with Indiana friends as they deplored the war in which our country is now engaged. A member who had attended their late yearly meeting spoke hopefully of their condition; this sentiment was endorsed by M. Walton, who had also been there. She plead with the fathers and mothers now present not to spend all of the first day of the week over newspapers and questionable books, without manifesting some love for the Father, and craved his blessing on both parents and children, and that all might be gathered into the hollow of that hand which alone can preserve through life.

Third-day morning, M. W. was led to supplicate that each might know and fill his own place, as ability was given, and that a double portion of our Father's wisdom might be the lot of those who bear the burdens of the business of the meeting.

Continuing the queries, we came to the one pertaining to a free gospel ministry, the answer to which elicited the expression of much and different thought; sympathy was felt for members whose isolation from Friends gave them no choice between attending the meetings of salaried ministers and absenting themselves entirely from places of worship. It was suggested that inspiration was not bounded by place or time, but might be felt in the workshop or the home, as well as within the walls of a meeting-house: it touches the best that is in us, and enables us to bring forth from the treasure house of memory, things both new and old. The more enlightened and intelligent the minister, the more effective his ministry; therefore it is important that he keep abreast of the times, for the world moves, and he should move with it, storing his mind with useful knowledge, yet with all this his dependence must be on the Lord, who gives no uncertain call, and if strictly obedient to it he will be helped, for there will ever be a way made and a strength given for the message and a growth experienced, the heart being touched as by a live coal from off God's holy altar; and he should also search the Scriptures prayerfully. The mission of the Society of Friends is to call people to the light and life of God in the soul, and if we are loyal to this, we will draw them thereto: we should wait near the footstool of God for his qualifying power to give life to the ministry.

The first matter claiming attention in the afternoon was the reading of a letter from our aged friend, Robert Hatton, containing a message of brotherly love and interest, he having been with us at the opening of this yearly meeting twenty-four years since. Our hearts were touched by his loving remembrance, and the meeting directed that a fitting reply be prepared and forwarded.

Fourth-day morning—again bright and beautiful—at the appointed hour, 10 o'clock, we again assembled for public worship. Isaiah Lightner thought there should be brightness in every soul to correspond with the surrounding brightness. Jesus, the pre-eminent son of God, did deeds of love and kindness, and if we emulate his example we will not be in haste to cast a stone at an offender, but rather, as did he, say, "Go, sin no more." Attention to the Christ within, the hope of glory will keep us in the narrow-way that leads to peace, and we can commune with that spirit now and here, if we rely on His promise, who said the Comforter will come.

M. W. rose with this quotation from Isaiah "Have ye not known, have ye not heard, hath it not been told you from the beginning, have ye not understood from the foundation of the earth?" She realized that this coming into a knowledge of God and his everlasting love is what all minds recognize at times. There is no need for any one to tell us what God is, no need to go to any man to know the things of God, for on the blackboard of our own hearts he writes his lessons so clear, so plain, none can misunderstand: we need not forsake business, nor sit with eyes closed and ears stopped, in order to know him, for he is so near us we can be in close communion with him at all times and places, and this communion must be renewed daily, for the manna of yesterday is not good for to-day. This will bring us into a condition wherein we can say in the morning as did Mary of old, "Be it unto me as thou wilt," and in the evening, when our work is done, we feel pleasant, and as we wake to another day, realizing that we must have bread for the physical, so we look to the Saviour for a fresh supply of spiritual bread. In mingling with us she felt there is a recognition among us of our accountability to God; but we must not wait till the last hour to reckon up our accounts, for though God may be able to save then, it is not safe to leave it: every day should know its work done, its accounts squared. We should know the watch-towers of our hearts are clean, the windows clear and bright, look through the glass of God and see whatsoever is good. We cannot be so old that there is not service for us that will not be set aside, and so may our last days be our best days. God's riches will not buy material needs, but they will qualify for business. Seed sown by God will grow and raise fruit that will redound to the glory of the giver, and there will be an arising of new life. Every one has his own work to do and knows his own individual responsibility, and no other one can take it from him. If we tread in the same tracks to-day that we did yesterday, what progress do we make. Speaking of the plain dress and language, she said they are not all, but they are a safeguard to those using them; no one would expect a person wearing the plain dress to be seen in vile places. In order to come to a better understanding of our relations to God we should enter into the closet of our souls and there meet him—not to talk of it afterward, but to act it. When Saul was converted he conferred not with flesh and blood; this flesh and blood may sometimes be our own hearts, the human promptings of which must be put aside, so we can say, "Here am I, Lord, do with me as seemeth to thee best."

Fourth-day afternoon being a short session (on account of the funeral of a near resident) was devoted mainly to the reading of the report of the Philanthropic Committee, which showed much work accomplished in the various departments of labor.

Fifth-day morning, the committee on Visiting Isolated Members reported much work done, both by visiting and correspondence. At noon of this day, the women held their meeting, which usually has its place the day previous, but was postponed because of the funeral before spoken of.

The afternoon session was occupied with reports of committees, which finished the business of the meeting for this year, after which we enjoyed a "love feast," parting messages of love and kindly encouragement coming from one to another, tendering our hearts, so we could all endorse the sentiment of the last speaker, that it has been good for us to be here.

Holder, Ill.

E. H. C.

AUSTRALIAN POLITICAL EXPERIENCE.

London Daily Chronicle.

AMERICAN opinions on the prospects of the new Commonwealth of Australia are of especial value, since the people of Australia have taken the Federal idea from America and have, in framing their new Constitution, carefully studied the Constitution of the United States. Consequently much interest attaches to an interview in the Boston Herald with Henry D. Lloyd, the well-known author of "Wealth against Commonwealth," who has just returned from a visit to New Zealand and Australia, made expressly for purposes of political and social observation. Mr. Lloyd arrived in Australia right in the thick of the Federation campaign, and he was interested to find women suffrage at work in South Australia. "It was no uncommon sight to see an entire family go to the polls, the husband wheeling the baby carriage, which they would leave outside the booth, while the father and mother went inside to vote. It was, indeed, an amusing sight, yet it did not seem to provoke any comment. Woman suffrage goes along smoothly there and creates no matrimonial difficulties." Mr. Lloyd found that opposition to the new Federal Constitution came from two mutually opposing quarters, the rich capitalists and the Labor men. The former believed that concentrated suffrage would work havoc with their vested interests, while the Labor politicians feared that "the adoption of a Constitution largely formed on American lines would have too strong a conservative effect in preventing and suppressing reforming legislation. They pointed to our failures for thirty odd years in our legislative dealing with railroad abuses. They referred to the overthrowing of the income tax by the Supreme Court, and stated that with confederation it would become impossible for them to get any reforms carried through." Mr. Lloyd argued with these people, and told them that, bad as the state of things might be, it would have been worse, in the opinion of most American people, had the various States remained separate instead of being formed into a great Union. Mr. Lloyd thinks that the new Constitution has been very carefully drawn, and that it avoids some of the faults of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Lloyd has made a remark about the so-called Socialist legislation of Australia and New Zealand which is very acute and worth recalling. He is of opinion that there is no country in the world in which there is so little Socialism as in these lands of the Southern Seas, and that, if the paradox can be admitted, because there is so much. "As a matter of fact," he says, "I have never seen a people among whom there is less professional Socialism or less Socialistic propaganda of any kind than there is in Australia and New Zealand. There is no Socialistic party there. Whatever advanced legislation they may have is not the result of any theoretical or Utopian judgment, but merely and specifically a practical step taken by democratic people to meet an evil or accomplish a purpose, as in the case of the development of the export business which I have described." All of which means that if the Australians and New Zealanders are Socialists they are purely practical Socialists, who have made no attempt to reconstruct society, but have not hesitated to use the collective powers of society to remedy practical grievances and to raise the standard of life. Australia, in fact, is adopting the homœopathic principle of taking small quantities of Socialism in order to ward off an attack of economic disease which might end in the adoption of a completed collectivism, with all its risks to liberty. Mr. Lloyd looks forward to the growth of monopolies and of the power of wealth as Australia grows in population, but he thinks that the people will be able to deal with these evils with far less friction than in America, and he attributes this to the fact that so many monopolies have been caught young.

RELIGIOUS LIFE IN MEETINGS.

Address to its members issued by Hardshaw West Monthly Meeting (Liverpool), England.

MEMBERSHIP in a religious Society is supposed to imply the possession of religious life. Neither birth-right membership nor any other human arrangement can secure that this shall always be realized. We do not suggest that absence of religious life is the only, or even the chief, cause of want of interest in our meetings; and we know too well that even regular attendance at them may be a form without life. Yet we feel it deeply laid upon us to appeal to those who often absent themselves, to consider where they stand. How is it with you, brother or sister? Are you spiritually awake, or are you content to be awake to the world and asleep to God? That is a state of spiritual slumber in which there is no prevailing sense of the spiritual universe that surrounds us, no recognition of its claims or its powers; in which the deepest realities of life are never seriously pondered; in which there is no earnest seeking after the deep joy of prayer and communion with the Father of Spirits, no supreme desire to surrender perfectly to his guiding and moulding hand. In the thronging claims and interests of life it is only too easy to let these things, which lie behind the scenes, pass unregarded, but this can only be done at the certain risk of the atrophy of our highest and noblest powers.

"For a cheerful heart there is no security so perfect as a high faith in the Eternal Goodness of the world."

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, NINTH MONTH 30, 1899.

THE DOUKHOBORS' NEEDS.

JOSEPH S. ELKINTON, who has been recently in Canada visiting the Doukhobors, and who has kept closely in touch with them from the beginning of their immigration, has called on FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER to say that in his judgment continued and very considerable help must be given them, in order that they may pass through the winter, and be able next year to provide for their own necessities.

This may be a somewhat different statement from that which has been expected, but it is not at all difficult of explanation. The situation of the immigrants is such that it is practically impossible for them to be self-supporting before they have full opportunity to raise next year's crops.

The expense of the removal exhausted completely the funds of most of the immigrants; they reached Winnipeg without resources. They then had to be moved from that city to their new location, and when they reached there everything had to be done at once, in the provision of homes, as well as the planting of crops. It has resulted that there has been hardship in many cases, and Eliza H. Varney, the Canadian Friend (well known to many of our Friends in Philadelphia), who has recently been among them, reports to this effect. The crops, in some localities, could not be got in in good time, and early frosts (in Eighth month) have cut short the potatoes on which dependence had been placed.

Joseph S. Elkinton feels it necessary to begin again the raising of a considerable sum of money for aid to these worthy people, and has already set about the work. He thinks his duty discharged so far as concerns those whom the INTELLIGENCER can reach by thus stating the facts of the case. We shall endeavor to give, as opportunity offers, some more detailed information.

It had been said that the Doukhobors were about concluding arrangements for a considerable loan of money, but we do not understand that these reports are correct. A Canadian banking firm had agreed to make a loan, it is said, but at a high rate of interest—eight per cent.—and on difficult terms. The Canadian Government, it is also stated, might have lent a sum of money, but a condition proposed by it was that the advances already made, some $35,000, should be counted as part of the loan. This seemed too much of a burden for the settlers to undertake—to borrow one dollar and agree to pay two back, principal and interest.

We shall be glad to again reopen our Doukhobor Fund. The sums heretofore received have been, we are confident, effectively applied in the relief of the sick and the purchase of cows.

It is not too soon for Friends to have in mind the biennial Conferences of our body, to be held at Chautauqua Lake, New York, in Eighth month of next year. The time for them has been definitely fixed. It will include eight days, beginning on the 21st, and closing on the 28th of Eighth month. The 21st is the Third-day of the week.

Chautauqua is so well known a place, and its annual "Assembly" has been attended, at one time or another, by so many, that it hardly needs extended description. It is easily accessible from all directions, and Friends of the several yearly meetings will find it comparatively near to them all,—at any rate, quite a central place for all. The accommodations are almost unlimited; there is no danger of being overcrowded.

In an article which we reprint elsewhere, Edward Everett Hale gives some interesting notes on Chautauqua.

BIRTHS.

FELL.—Near Chatham, Pennsylvania, Eighth month 23, 1899, to Abner G. and Mary M. G. Fell, a daughter, who is named Edith Margaretta.

TAYLOR.—At Wilmington, Del., Ninth month 18, 1899, to Arthur K. and Rebecca R. Taylor, a son, who is named Roger Kirkbride.

DEATHS.

DARLINGTON.—Ninth month 18, 1899, at her home in West Chester, Pa., Sarah J., daughter of the late Jared and Mary Darlington, aged 66 years; a member of Birmingham Monthly Meeting of Friends.

DARLINGTON.—In West Chester, at Friends' Boarding Home, Ninth month 20, 1899, A. Elizabeth Darlington, daughter of the late Thomas and Edith Darlington; a member of Birmingham Monthly Meeting of Friends.

GREEN.—In Philadelphia, Ninth month 22, 1899, Walter Williamson Green, in his 80th year. Interment at Newtown Square Friends' ground, Delaware county, Pa.

HARMER.—Ninth month 20, 1899, at the residence of her son-in-law, Morris Goodwin, near Greenwich, N. J., Ann Harmer, in her 86th year.

JOHNSON.—At the residence of his son-in-law, Watson Tomlinson, Byberry, Philadelphia, Ninth month 22, 1899, Joseph A. Johnson, aged 69 years.

JONES.—Ninth month 15, 1899, in Philadelphia, Sarah K., wife of William H. Jones, aged 73 years.

LONGSTRETH.—At her home in Philadelphia, Ninth month 18, 1899, after a prolonged illness, Anna Wise Longstreth, aged 58 years, wife of Edward Longstreth, and daughter of the late Charles and Lydia Pusey Wise.

MARSHALL.—At London Grove, Chester county, Pa., Ninth month 20, 1899, Sarah T., wife of Edward S. Marshall, in her 66th year.

MATHER.—At the residence of David Palmer, in Newtown, Bucks county, Pa., Ninth month 24, 1899, Benjamin Mather, in his 76th year; a member of Middletown Monthly Meeting, and the last survivor of the children of the late Benjamin Mather, who was for years a recorded minister belonging to Bucks Quarter.

NEWLIN.—At her home in Wilmington, Delaware, Ninth month 24, 1899, Edith Newlin, last surviving child of the late Joseph and Sarah Newlin, of New Garden, Chester county, Pa., in her 82d year.

Her end was peaceful as her life was beautiful.

PRICE.—At Overbrook, Pa., Ninth month 22, 1899 of pneumonia, James Martin Price, aged 74 years; a grandson of the late Philip and Rachel Price, and a nephew of the late James Martin.

SCHOFIELD.—At her former home, near Selma, Clark county, Ohio, Ninth month 7, 1899, Sarah E. Warner, wife of Joseph F. Schofield, of Knoxville, Tenn., and daughter of the late Simeon and Elizabeth M. Warner, in her 50th year.

A wife but one short year, when her Heavenly Father called her unto Himself, leaving a void in many hearts.

M. J. W.

SMITH.—At Lincoln, Va., Ninth month 13, 1899, Edward J. Smith, in his 61st year; a member of Goose Creek Monthly Meeting of Friends.

He was a devoted and consistent Friend, an upright and energetic business man, and a kind and capable adviser and assistant to many. The meeting and the neighborhood sustain a severe loss in his decease. *

SWANEY.—At her home in Lincoln, Neb., Eighth month 23, 1899, Mary Ann Swaney, wife of David Swaney, aged 71 years, 6 months and 9 days.

She was born near Smithfield, Jefferson county, Ohio. Her parents, Joseph and Ruth Hoyle, removed to Clear Creek, Putnam county, Ill., when she was six years of age, while the red men still roamed through the country. About eighteen years ago she removed to Nebraska with her husband and three sons. These, and three motherless grandchildren are left to mourn the loss of a devoted, Christian woman, whose lovely character and conscientious life endeared her to all who knew her. She was laid to rest beside her parents and sisters in the Hoyle burying-ground at Clear Creek, Ill., Eighth month 26, the last direct descendant of Joseph Hoyle.

May her pure and beautiful life be an inspiration to those she loved so well. May we "follow the gleam."

M. L. B.

TYSON.—At Willamette, near Chicago, Ill., Eighth month 31, 1899, Sarah S. Tyson, wife of John P. Tyson, and daughter of the late Charles and Susan H. Trump, of "Millwood," Baltimore county, Maryland.

WHITSON.—At Bendersville, Adams county, Pa., Ninth month 14, 1899, Jane C., wife of William Whitson, and oldest daughter of Cyrus and Mary Ann Griest, both deceased, aged 69 years, 11 days.

This dear friend was a lifelong member of Menallen Monthly and Warrington Meetings. She has been afflicted with rheumatism for years, and while much of the time enduring extreme suffering, yet with such patience was it borne that she was an example to all who knew her, and her very presence a benediction.

All that devoted hearts and tender hands could do for her was done, and her gentleness and gratitude made it indeed a service of love.

Her "earthly temple" was laid in the grave-yard at Menallen meeting-house on First-day afternoon, the 17th.

The 14th chapter of John was read, and a portion of the 7th chapter of Revelation. Some words of the latter were especially fitting, for our dear one seemed truly to be one of those "which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

G.

WORRALL.—Ninth month 19, 1899, at her home in Kennett Square, Pa., Anna M., wife of J. Ellwood Worrall, in her 58th year, a daughter of Sharpless and Abigail Worrall, of Sugartown, Chester county, Pa.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

FIRST-DAY EVENING meetings in Philadelphia during Tenth month, will be held at 17th street and Girard avenue, except on the 29th, when the meeting will be at 35th street and Lancaster avenue, all at 7.30 o'clock. It is much to be desired that Friends will feel a live interest in attending them.

Meetings on First and Fifth-day will be resumed to-morrow at 9th and Spruce streets, at 10.30 o'clock.

The hour at West Philadelphia and Girard avenue changed on First-day, to 11 a. m. to accommodate the First-day Schools, which are all resumed to-morrow. The First-day School and Conference at Race street is after meeting, and at Fair Hill at 2 p. m.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

NO. 41.—TENTH MONTH 8.

THE KINGDOM OF ISRAEL.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt have none other gods before me.

—Exodus, xx., 3.

Scripture Reading, I. Kings, xiii., 1-10, 33-34.

A LEADER to the rebellion against the house of David was found in the person of that Jeroboam who had led an unsuccessful revolt in the reign of Solomon. Jeroboam had fled into Egypt after this failure, and had there received assistance and a temporary home from the Pharaoh. This fact requires some explanation, since, as we have seen, the chief queen in Solomon's harem was an Egyptian princess, and the relations of the two nations in the early part of Solomon's reign were close and friendly. But a successful revolution had taken place in Egypt. The Pharaohs of the twenty-first dynasty were the Theban high priests of the god Ammon. Under them the kingdom grew continually weaker, and the last of them, the father-in-law of Solomon, was deposed by the commander of his Libyan mercenaries (945 B. C.). Shishak, the founder of the twenty-second dynasty, was naturally hostile to the allies of his former master, and was ready to welcome their discontented subjects. Jeroboam either had returned to Israel at the time of the gathering at Shechem or he was recalled immediately thereafter, and he was promptly elected king of Israel. Thenceforth there remained to the house of David only the bare hills and valleys of Judah. The wealth of the nation and the sources of wealth—the rich lands and the great trade routes—were in the hands of the rebels. Judah was shut off from the great trading nations by the desert on the east and south and by the new kingdom of Israel on the north. She retained, however, one great source of strength and unity which her sister nation lacked, in Jerusalem, the center of the religious life of the whole Hebrew people. Moreover, the very isolation and poverty of Judah proved for a long time her bulwark of strength. The desert which prevented the flow of her wealth in the ways of trade was a strong wall, protecting her from Assyria and from Egypt. And it was not until repeated waves of invasion had washed away the rival nation on the north that Assyrian arms penetrated the fastnesses of the kingdom of the south.

FLOWER in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies,
I hold you here, root and all, in my hand,
Little flower, but if I could understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is.

—Tennyson.

It is evident that Jeroboam felt the weakness caused by the loss of the Temple, for one of the early acts of his reign was the establishment of two new shrines at Dan and Bethel. Dan was at the extreme north, Bethel near the southern border, of the kingdom. The former is the city whose capture is told of in the story of the Danites (Judges, xviii.); and it will be remembered that there was set up here an altar and an image. This sanctuary was continued until the time of Saul. As for Bethel, it was connected with some of the most sacred traditions of the patriarchs. Here was the sacred stone, supposed to have been set up by Jacob himself (Genesis, xxviii.). It was here, too, that the promise was given to Jacob which was Israel's title-deed to the land of Canaan: "The land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed" (Genesis, xxviii., 13). Unlike the temple at Jerusalem, these new sanctuaries were supplied with images. There were golden calves or bulls, by which it was intended to symbolize the God of the nation. For it must not be understood that the use of these images implied, of necessity, apostasy from Jehovah, God of Israel, or that it was so understood in that time. We have seen that the use of images was by no means uncommon among the Hebrews (note the cases of Micah, of the Danites, of Gideon). The words of Jeroboam are, "Behold your God, who brought you up out of Egypt" (see I. Kings, xii., 28). And there was no evidence that any general offence was felt by the nation, nor any feeling that a change of gods was involved. But it was quite otherwise with those who had striven for the centralization of the national faith, and especially with those whose revolt from the house of Solomon had been chiefly occasioned by the introduction of foreign religions with the consent of the king. These had hoped, by the political revolution, to accomplish at the same time a reformation in the religious life of the court, to purify the land of foreign superstitions, and to strengthen the loyalty of the nation to the national God. No doubt their disappointment was very great at the course taken by the king of Israel. To him it probably seemed simply a matter of political prudence; to them it was evidence of the total wreck of their hopes, and there is reason to believe that the strength of their influence was thereafter turned against him and his successors.

Chief among the religious leaders of the Hebrew people were the prophets. They are first mentioned under that name in the time of Samuel, but under other names they had led the people in the most critical times of their history. Abraham, Moses, Samuel—to these and others had God revealed his will, and at the same time given power and will to impress it upon their fellows; and this is the distinguishing mark of the prophet. In the Book of Samuel mention is made of "companies of prophets" and of "bands of prophets" (I. Samuel, x., 10; x., 26; xix., 20.) From the little we know of them they seem to have been bands of religious devotees, who moved about through the land chanting their "prophecies," the nature of which we can only guess by their intimate relations with Samuel himself. This order of prophets, apparently founded in the time of "the Seer," seems to have continued into the period of the divided kingdom (I. Kings, xviii., 4; xxii., 6), and to have been recognized as a distinct institution. There would seem, however, to be little in common between these recognized officials and the striking figures which came out, self-appointed, from among the people to pronounce the word of the Lord. These individual prophets—God's interpreters among men—were sometimes of great power with court and people, as in the cases of Samuel, Nathan, Elisha; sometimes were feared and persecuted, as Elijah; or were merely despised, as in the case of Amor. In future lessons their influence and message will be more fully discussed. It was these unofficial messengers of Jehovah who turned against Jeroboam after his introduction of idolatry, as they had previously, for similar causes, turned against the rival king of Judah. This antagonism is shown in the curse pronounced upon the altar at Bethel by the prophet Iddo (I. Kings, chapter xiii.), and in the condemnation uttered by the prophet Abijah upon the house of Jeroboam (I. Kings, chapter xiv).

Image-worship does not require that a distinct figure shall be set up in a sanctuary, and that men shall bow down before it. Anything set in the place of the King of Righteousness and made an object of adoration is a heathen idol. It may be a creed or a ceremonial, a church or a political party. A mis-called patriotism which asserts that the flag shall never be hauled down, regardless of the right or wrong of its being run up; an absurd party loyalty, which judges the right and wrong of men and measures by party labels; an arrogant race-pride, which considers that violence, fraud, and manslaughter become right, if used in the direction of Anglo-Saxon supremacy; these are among the most dangerous forms of image-worship among us. They cause many among us to "sin with the sin of Jeroboam."

Educational Department.

NOTES ON ENGLISH FRIENDS' SCHOOLS.

THE Committee of the Bootham School (boys and young men), at York, England, whose buildings were seriously damaged by fire in Fifth month last, decided to rebuild on the present premises, and to raise £10,000 ($50,000) for the purpose, in addition to the insurance money. There will be a large library and assembly hall, to which the name of John Bright will probably be given. The school is to be made of "high secondary" grade, and to prepare students for university admission, where desired. Arthur Rowntree, the new head master, has taken charge.

I visited the Mount School (girls and young women), at York, in company with an "old scholar," on the 22d of Eighth month. The school was then in vacation, of course. It is pleasantly situated, and the rooms, though originally those of a private residence, are well adapted to school purposes. The grounds and gardens are very charming; more ground has recently been acquired. The school can take sixty-four pupils, and the course of study leads up practically to the requirements of the women's colleges. Lucy Harrison is the present Principal. The school is in charge of a committee of Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting.

I also visited Leighton Park School (for boys and young men), at Reading; this was on the 30th of Eighth month. I was very kindly received by the new head master, John Ridges, and by the first massistant aster, Frederick J. Edminson, who showed me over the school buildings. They stand on high ground, (170 feet above the Thames), in an estate of forty-five acres, purchased for this purpose some years ago from Captain Cobham. The mansion house, enlarged, is the main building, and has the class-rooms, etc., with sleeping-rooms for thirty pupils, while Grove House, a dormitory building, accommodates thirty-two pupils. This latter is the most pleasant and best-arranged for its purpose that I have seen on either side of the Atlantic. Leighton Park School has been established since 1890; it is in charge of a committee of London Yearly Meeting. The course leads up to university admission, and a considerable part of the graduates go to the universities, especially Cambridge. The charges are about $525 per school year, with some "extras." The age of pupils is restricted to the range between 11 and 19 years.

H. M. J.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.

ONCE more Swarthmore has opened her doors to receive new students and to welcome back old ones for another year of work. The college halls are astir with life, and work has begun in earnest. It is felt that Swarthmore opens under most auspicious circumstances and with every prospect of an unusually successful year.

The increase in the number of teachers was noted in the INTELLIGENCER some time ago. Since then, another addition has been made to the corps of instructors. Edwin Haviland, Jr., B. S. Swarthmore '84, A. M. Cornell '99, has been secured as Assistant in Mathematics and Engineering. Since his graduation from Swarthmore, Professor Haviland has been largely occupied in Civil and Mining Engineering in the West.

The number of students now actually in attendance and at work is 199. It is expected that this number will receive several additions within a few days. These figures show a marked increase over last year when, on the corresponding date, 174 students were enrolled. The number of pupils now at college is greater than at any time since the winter of 1892-1893, when 201 students were enrolled. This number then included the sub-Freshman class. There are now, therefore, more regular College students at Swarthmore than at any previous time in the history of the institution.

A number of changes and improvements have been made about the buildings and grounds during the summer. The Assembly Room, several class-rooms, the Chemical Laboratory, and other parts of the Science Building have been painted. A new concrete walk has been laid in front of the Science Building to the meeting-house.

The young men's gymnasium is approaching completion. A boiler which was ordered at the close of the last college year, and which should have arrived by the end of last month, has just been shipped. It is believed, however, that the gymnasium will be ready before cold weather and in time for the regular work at the usual season.

M. S. H.

FRIENDS' ACADEMY, LOCUST VALLEY, L. I.—This opened regularly on the 19th of Ninth month. The class of pupils that assembled was gratifying, and gave promise that the year just opening would be a satisfactory one.

The Committee, at their recent meeting, complimented the new Principal, A. Davis Jackson, upon the expeditious manner with which he was disposing of the various duties attending the opening of school. They also made a liberal appropriation for current literature. There are as yet a few vacancies in the girls' wing, but applications for boys' rooms have to be refused, and several names are enrolled on the waiting list. The boys are already evincing enthusiasm in athletics and work regularly under the direction of Ross Jewell.

The faculty consists of A. Davis Jackson, B. S., Mathematics; Charlie McClure, A. B., Greek, Latin, and English Grammar; Perry C. Pike, B. P., Science; Ross Jewell, Ph. B.,

History, Literature, and German; Emily R. Underhill, B. L., French and English branches; Eloise Leland, Primary; Edna B. Downing, Music. * *

FRIENDS' SEMINARY, NEW YORK.—This opened on the 19th of Ninth month, with an attendance a little in excess of that of a year ago.

During the summer various improvements have been made at the hands of the painters and plumbers, and a new furnace has been placed. The first instalment of books for the Library for Home Reading is on the shelves, and a piano has been added to the equipment of the Primary Department.

Four new teachers have been engaged: Arthur C. Smedley, of Willistown Inn, Pennsylvania, Science and Mathematics; Alice S. Palmer, of West Chester, Pa., Arithmetic and Singing; Agnes E. Foster of Palmyra, N. Y., Drawing and Wood-Carving; and Lillian J. McDowell of New York, Primary work. To fill the place of Ella B. McDowell, who is prevented by illness from resuming her duties in the Primary Department, Dorothy E. Dressler, of New York, has been engaged pro tem. Of the five, four are Friends and three have been educated at Swarthmore College.

There has been, by the way, a marked increase of interest in Swarthmore among the pupils of the Seminary, and an unusual number are preparing to enter the College. *

LITERARY NOTES.

EDITIONS of the poetry of Tennyson continue to come from the press, testifying to the permanency of its high worth and spiritual influence. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have just put forth the Household Edition of Tennyson's Poetical Works in one volume. The special merit of the book lies in its abundance of illustration. Here we have the pictures which Doré made for the "Idylls of the King," romantic and mystical of atmosphere, and reflecting the medievalism of the subject-poems. The best illustrations by Tennyson's pre-Raphaelite artist friends and contemporaries are given, as are also the works of later artists, English and American. There are 127 pictures in all.

The volume contains some of the fragmentary and juvenile poems never regularly included by Tennyson in his later works, but well worth studying in connection with the works of Tennyson's maturity, in exemplification of the truth that poetry, like every other art, attains the heights of grandeur and beauty only through the poet's long and arduous and consecrated devotion to his muse.

J. R. H.

It is a welcome announcement that Caroline. Hazard, of Rhode Island, who is now president of Wellesley College, is about to publish another of her careful monographs resulting from researches into the history of her native State, and that it is a study relating to Friends. The title is "The Narragansett Friends' Meeting in the XVIIIth Century."

"John S. Wise's "The End of an Era," soon to be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston, is autobiographical, a contribution to the Southern history of the Civil War, and a notable one, for the Wise family has ever been prominent in Virginia. J. S. Wise's father, Henry A. Wise, was Governor just before the war, and one of the last acts of his administration was the execution of John Brown. Later he was a brigadier-general in the Confederate army. The son himself, a youth at the time, took an active part in the struggle.

"The Wheat Lands of Canada" is the title of an important contribution to the wheat controversy which appears in the current number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly. The author S. C. D. Ropes, brings out in a very striking manner the enormous possibilities of Canada as a wheat producer, and apparently dispels the last vestige of reason for any uneasiness over Sir William Crookes's statement that the time was not far distant when wheat would be a luxury.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

ILLINOIS YEARLY MEETING FIRST-DAY SCHOOLS.—The First-day School Association, on Seventh-day evening (Ninth month 9), indicated a steady work, if not a marked increase in numbers. There were two practical illustrated lessons for primary classes, one "By their fruits ye shall know them"; the other, "The Sower"; both giving evidence of matured thought. At the second session, Third-day evening, a clear and concise paper on Friends' views regarding oaths was read. Delegates to the Conference, to be held next year at Chautauqua, were appointed. (Delegates to the other Conferences were appointed by the meeting.)

On Second-day evening, the Children's Meeting, which is held regularly at this time in the week, was held. To this meeting the little ones look forward with as much interest as the older ones do to theirs.

The Representative Committee met, as usual, on Second-day morning, in which a concern was expressed that some effort be made by our Society to give increased interest to our meetings, and a sub-committee appointed to consider the matter, bringing to the next session, Fourth-day morning, a short paper, which, after deliberation, was referred to the attention of the committee next year. E. H. C.

NORRISTOWN, PA.—Norristown Friends' Association was held at Valley Meeting on the afternoon of the 17th inst. It was the first session after the summer vacation. The program was as follows:

Selection, Whittier's "Meeting," Sara Flowers; paper, "Thoughts Suggested by the Second Query," John W. Harry; recitation, "The Voice in the Twilight," Anna B. Hughes.

An article from a lecture delivered at Fifteenth and Race street meeting-house, Philadelphia, on the "Peace Conference," was read by Mary Jane Walker.

A discussion followed. Remarks were made by Isaac Roberts, Joseph Flowers, Winfield W. Conard, and others.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Ellwood Roberts, Main and George streets, Norristown.

NEW FRIENDS' LIBRARY.—A library for the use of members and others has been formed in connection with Norristown Pa. Preparative Meeting of Friends, at Swede and Jacoby streets. A substantial bookcase was constructed with the proceeds of a small legacy from the late Sarah Leedom, supplemented by individual donations. The First-day School library occupies a portion of it, and the other shelves are to be filled with what may be called "Friends' books," including biographies, journals, and travels of eminent ministers and the works of those who have been concerned to uphold the testimonies of the Society. A number of donations of valuable books have been received "and there is ample room for more."

LOS ANGELES, Cal., is distinguished for the number of petroleum oil wells it possesses. The output for 1898 approximated 1,100,000 barrels, and that of 1899 is estimated to be about the same.

TOURISTS in Europe are usually much puzzled by the question how much they ought to give in fees at hotels. The Berlin Tageblatt, in discussing the matter, suggests that the porter should get 25 pfennigs (6 cents) a person a day, the "boots" the same, the head waiter six to ten cents a day, and no one else a cent, unless special services have been rendered.

In the year 1898 this country exported to Cuba malt and other liquors to the value of $10,796. In the first five months of 1899 we—that is, everybody who is responsible, actively or passively, for the government's liquor policy—sent to Cuba liquors to the value of $472,272. In 1898 the value of liquors sent from the United States to Porto Rico was $3,668. In the first five months of 1899 it was $191,422. In 1898 we shipped $337 worth of liquors to the Philippines; in the first five months of 1899 we sent $86,833 worth. [Union Signal.]

COMMUNICATIONS.

A NOTE FROM DR. TYSON.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

MAY I ask space to explain a few typographical errors which the careful reader may have noted in my Norway letters? In the first place, the reading of the letters in proof by the writer was obviously impossible. Second, many of the Norwegian names are so unusual and unfamiliar that neither printer, proof-reader, nor editor could be expected to recognize errors growing out of the indistinctness of writing which was almost unavoidable—such errors are Lenfos for Lerfos, Marak for Marok, etc. One other only needs further allusion. In letter III., p. 633, occurs the statement that almost any place seated on a point of land is "inappropriately" called a naes or nase. The correct meaning is entirely lost by the omission of the word not. It should read "not inappropriately."

J. T.

London, Ninth month 12.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

ISAIAH LIGHTNER, his wife, son, and daughter, of Monroe, Neb., who had been in attendance upon Illinois Yearly Meeting, came East to pay a visit to their old home, in Carroll county, Maryland. They came by way of Coldstream, Canada (where they visited the Friends), and Niagara Falls, arriving in Philadelphia on the 22d, and proceeding next day for Maryland.

Mary E. Seaman, Brooklyn, N. Y., who received the Lucretia Mott Fellowship, Swarthmore College, for this school year, will pursue her studies at Newnham College, Cambridge, England. The Principal of Newnham is Mrs. Sidgwick, wife of Professor Henry Sidgwick, and sister of Arthur J. Balfour, the Government leader in the English House of Commons. She takes a lively interest in the American students from Swarthmore who come to Newnham.

Dr. Harold J. Turner, who received Ph.D. from Johns Hopkins University, the present year, for chemical study, has been appointed associate professor in the Southern Homœopathic Medical College, Baltimore.

George J. Webster, of Conshohocken, Pa., who has been living in Athens, Greece, for the past year or more, and who was in London, during Yearly Meeting (receiving permission to sit), has returned to Athens. He is interested in the possible spread of Friends' principles and views in that part of the world, and solicits aid and correspondence. His address is No. 11 Hippocrates street, Athens, Greece.

THE ladies of Darmstadt, Germany, are collecting contributions for a monument to be erected in their town to the memory of the late Grand Duchess of Hesse, Princess Alice of Great Britain.

THE crop of tomatoes in Delaware has been very large. The Wilmington Evening says: "Some contracts were made at the rate of $6 per ton, or about 9½ cents per basket, but now only $1.50 per ton is offered, or a little over 2 cents per basket. Lots have been shipped to city markets by boat at 5 cents per basket on the wharf."

THERE is a dawning suspicion that this Commission business has been overdone. We have had commissions and commissioners for everything—about the conduct of the war of 1898, about Porto Rico, about the Philippines, about the trusts—about a dozen or more things. If the smallest good has been accomplished by any of them, the American people have not heard of it.—Washington Post.

A WRITER in the Railroad Gazette claims that railways will in the near future use a rigid foundation for their rails, employing to this end metal cross-ties. Heavier and harder rails will also be used, with the result of a large saving of annual expense for repairs and renewals. In the cities the tracks of street cars are given a rigid and solid construction, whereas opinion formerly favored an elastic track.

A PRAYER.

Tudor Jenks in The Outlook.

LORD, in thy abounding grace,
Give to me one little place
Where earth's beauties I may see
With no man to envy me !

Let my children breathe in health ;
Let them know the poor man's wealth—
To live free beneath the sky,
Shunning, dreading no man's eye.

Let the dear wife of my heart
Share with me the greater part
Of my hours, and grant that we,
Free of care, may worship thee.

To our own give us true claim,
Wronging none in right or name,
Loving all things to their worth
Till we leave thy blessed earth.

But if it should be thy will
We should strive and suffer still,
Give us grace to keep unstained
Till thy peace at last is gained.

Fame and wealth to others, then ;
This to me and mine. Amen !

A SOLDIER'S REPORT FROM MANILA.

C McC. Reeve, who went out to the Philippine Islands as colonel of a Minnesota regiment, (the 13th), was promoted to be brigadier-general, "for meritorious conduct in action," and was made Chief of Police of the city of Manila, has returned to San Francisco, and was interviewed by the Call newspaper. He objected to an interview, but said he was willing to speak of what he saw and heard while on duty at Manila, and to express his judgment regarding the capacity of Filipinos for self-government. On these topics he remarked :

"WHEN I was appointed Chief of Police of a city of 350,000 inhabitants I deemed it wise to ascertain as soon as possible something definite and to the point regarding the character, traits, disposition, and intelligence of the native population. Accordingly I sought the counsel of the leading English, Scotch, and German merchants. They told me that the Filipinos were intelligent, industrious, peaceable, and fond of home life. Personal investigation convinced me that the natives were engaged in all branches of industry. In the profession of law and medicine were many of the natives.

"The best dentist in Luzon was an officer in Aguinaldo's army. In the field of mechanical and railway pursuits the Filipinos were active and promising. I was surprised to ascertain that the diffusion of knowledge was general. The percentage of natives able to read and write was large. The enrollment of students in the San Tomas and Dominican Universities and the attention paid to such branches of knowledge as law, medicine, liberal arts, and civil engineering excited my surprise. Five thousand students were enrolled at the Dominican University. I mention these facts to dispel the impression that the Filipinos are ignorant and unlettered savages. Throughout the provinces in the island of Luzon good common schools and high schools are maintained, the teachers being native priests.

"In the provinces we found courts and schools established, and found local authorities administering affairs of government. Here was a system of collecting taxes and disbursing the money so collected in the interests of the governed. The disposition of the natives was that of extreme friendship towards Americans. In the city of Manila the Filipinos, especially these who were wealthy, were anxious to remove the impression that they were ignorant of the requirements of modern life and the usages of civilization. They readily extended the hospitality of their homes to American officers of the military and civil service.

"While I was General Garcia's guest I met an officer of his staff, who spoke English fluently. Naturally the future of the islands was the topic of conversation, which brought forward the question whether the natives were capable of self-government. General Garcia's talk was interpreted. He favored a policy of permitting the natives to test their ability to govern themselves under the protection of the United States. The same sentiments were expressed by Aguinaldo. At Malolos, in October, I saw Aguinaldo and had extended talks with him. Then he did not signify a desire that the Filipinos should have absolute independence at once, but expressed the thought that protection guaranteed by the United States would be acceptable. He had in mind that the natives should conduct the local government and the United States should protect them against foreign oppression or interference. When Aguinaldo was asked if the Filipinos were united on that point, he frankly said no, but assured us that he could bring the dissenters into line. He said one party was for absolute independence, while the other party favored a protectorate."

General Reeve was asked if the bloodshed—the conflict of arms—could have been averted by an intelligent policy of conciliation, and to the question he replied :

"Conciliatory methods would have prevented the war. . . . In the beginning a conciliatory course was not adopted. General Otis's unfortunate proclamation of January 4 rendered conciliation almost impossible. He adopted the policy of ignoring the natives, of treating them as half-civilized savages. No indication was given to the Filipinos as to the future intentions of the government. In August, September, and October immediately following the capture of Manila the Filipinos kept inquiring what were we going to do, and our authorities replied, 'We cannot tell until the Paris Commission gets through.' The Filipinos would ask, 'What will you do if you acquire the islands?' And still no hint was given to them by General Otis until it was too late. He ignored them completely. At every step of the peace negotiations he stipulated that nothing should be considered until the Filipinos laid down their arms. Herein is where the natives mistrusted the Americans. The Filipinos had many lessons from Spain in the folly of laying down arms. They were not able to comprehend the difference, between Spanish and American promises.

"Admiral Dewey entertains a high opinion of the industry and intelligence of the natives. He employed many of them at Cavité arsenal and spoke highly of them. The natives expressed great admiration for the Admiral. He holds to the opinion that the Filipinos are capable of self-government, and in my judgment he firmly believes that the war could have been honorably avoided by an enlightened policy of conciliation in dealing with the natives. The Filipinos are much better fitted for independence and self-government than are the Cubans. It is my understanding that Admiral Dewey has on several occasions stated that the Filipinos were capable of self-government and that a wise policy of conciliation would have averted the war against the natives."

CHAUTAUQUA.

Edward Everett Hale, in Christian Register.

I FIRST knew Chautauqua Lake some twenty years ago. Every year since has added to the attractions of the place and to the conveniences of the establishment.

One of Cooper's pioneers might well have camped here alone, merely that he might enjoy its natural charm. The lake, "a Swiss lake," as every one likes to say, stretches along in front of us. Indeed, the sun rises above it or from it every morning. We are a quarter of a mile above the level of the ocean,—higher, I believe, in space than our friends at the Crawford House. So we are well rid of flies and mosquitoes, even in August.

The lakeside was originally covered with forest,—not, I think, very dense, but still forest. The tangles of this forest have been cleared away, so that we can walk freely anywhere, and on the lake front only the largest and finest of the veteran trees are left. Under the personal supervision of Dr. Duncan and the intelligence of a permanent board of men who love nature, the glory of the forest has been left, and only its inconveniences removed.

From the annual report in which Miss Kimball reviews the work of the year I learn that the enrolled members of the Reading Circle, in the twenty-one years of its existence, number more than two hundred and sixty thousand. Of these, more than forty thousand have taken the full course of reading prescribed by the management, requiring in each instance four successive years to carry through the required reading. A careful series of correspondence and suggestion extends this study, in the great majority of cases, far beyond the lines of absolute requisition.

The summer meeting here is the centre of that system, and the geographical word "Chautauqua" has come to denote, with more or less precision, the various applications of that system to the needs of different parts of the nation. It is the largest of about fifty "assemblies," or "Chautauquas," held in different parts of North America. Some of these, notably that in Louisiana, hold sessions of a month in length. From some of these assemblies official delegates are present here. Measures are proposed by which each of them will be officially represented, as at a central congress of Chautauqua.

The assembly here lasts about two months, July and August. Here there is a summer school for all who wish to follow studies in detail, in the vacation of other schools. This summer school brings together pupils who are taught by forty professors, men and women of the first rank as teachers. Any teacher in any school who wishes to follow a detail for six or eight weeks of special study has an opportunity here.

This opportunity alone calls together a great many people. The associations of old-time readers and students, the luxury of such a climate, and the beauty of the spot call together, I suppose, as many more who come with their families for the summer. These people own or hire the pretty cottages, which are generally built on corners of vantage commanding the exquisite views. For such people the fleet of boats, the tennis and golf and base-ball grounds, and other indispensables of a summer home are provided. A third class of people, hardly to be called residents, are the butterflies or birds of passage. They look in, as I have done, for a week to be spent among a cosmopolitan company of Americans, representing every community from the St. John to Tia Juana.

I looked back over sixteen pages on the hotel register, to find that sixteen States were represented in the arrivals of three days. The majority are from New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. The other thirteen States were about evenly represented, three from Massachusetts and nine from California.

Among these, but only a part of them, are the representatives of the quarter million of people who have been members of the Literary and Scientific Circles.

Now observe that for the daily population of twelve thousand people, more or less, some occupation or entertainment is provided every day, from eight in the morning, when the Chautauqua College opens the chapel for morning prayers, until ten at night, when the last "Receptia" turns down its lights or unlights its torches. It may be a rollicking ball game, in which the professors of the college play against the head-masters of high schools. It may be an exhibition in the Amphitheatre of the celebrated pictures of the Madonna. It may be a cantata or oratorio rendered by the chorus and artists of national distinction. It may be a lecture on some subject of science or literature. It is something interesting to people who believe in education, and the care with which this "something" is arranged gives the permanent value to a summer at Chautauqua.

DESIRING to feel that her life has not been wasted, a woman in Virginia (says an exchange) has announced to the authorities her wish to take the place of any convict in the State prison who is serving a life sentence. She says that life has not given her many of the things that others deem worth striving for, and she thinks that the rest of her existence would be best spent in suffering vicariously for some unfortunate fellow-being.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL Jacob H. Smith, of the 12th United States Infantry, now in the Philippines, has written a letter to William H. Thomson, a banker of St. Louis, in which he says: "The United States must understand that we are only in the beginning of this war, and that it will take 100,000 soldiers to put down the troubles we are beset with in the Philippines. The army here, which is minus the tried veterans, has a very alarming amount of sick men and officers, and there appears to be no let-up, owing to our having so many soft recruits."

THE HURRICANE IN PORTO RICO.

Annie L. Croasdale sends the INTELLIGENCER a letter, dated at Ponce, Puerto Rico, on the 14th of last month, from her nephew, who went out to Ponce, in Sixth month, in connection with a Philadelphia business enterprise. We make extracts from the letter, as below.

THE climate of the island is everything that could be desired, being even better than in the United States. Of course we have no winter, and while we have a dry and rainy season, on the coast there is very little difference between them. In the mountains, however, it rains nearly every day during the rainy season. It is always cool and pleasant in the mornings, and in the evenings it is necessary to cover yourself with a sheet or blanket, a mosquito net, however, being necessary. During the middle of the day it is hot in the sun, but cool in the shade, and from 10 a. m. until 6 p. m. there is a cool ocean breeze which necessitates weights on all papers on the desk to keep them from blowing away.

I have taken several trips into the interior of the island, both on horseback and by coach, and the scenery is grand beyond description. There are several ridges of mountains, which are crossed by good roads built by the Spaniards, and the bridges prove that the engineers were very capable men. These roads are as fine as you will find in Fairmount Park, and built by the convicts here,—not for the good of the people, but to enable the Spanish troops to get to any part of the island quickly in case of revolt.

I suppose you have read in the papers of the awful hurricane which passed over the island [on the 8th of Eighth month], but will tell you what I saw of it.

Monday night, at 6 p. m., I sat on the veranda, admiring the beautiful colors in the clouds, never before having witnessed such combinations. There were great masses of black clouds, with here and there a patch of the bluest blue, and one little sulphur-colored cloud, which made me think of the stories I had read of approaching storms, but such a thing as this being a reality never entered my head. About 9 p. m., the stars came out, and the night was perfect, but along towards 7 a. m., Tuesday, it started to rain, and about 8.30 a. m., the wind began to blow, and kept on increasing, until when I started for the office, (about 100 yards distant), the trees began to fall and the roofs to fly. The force of the wind was appalling, and I saw an immense tree right back of the office pulled out of the ground and thrown against the gas plant. The roofs here are mainly galvanized tin, and this was flying through the air like so many shingles. As the lady with whom I board was home by herself, her mother being out in the country, I thought she might be scared, and so went home again, and there we sat all day expecting any minute that the house would come down on us, but it did not. About 3 p. m., the wind stopped blowing, but the rain came down in torrents. My room and bed had been soaked by the rain, so I availed myself of the offer of a friend and went to sleep with him. I retired at 8 o'clock, and when I awoke at 9 o'clock and got out of bed I stepped into a foot of water. I naturally became anxious about Mrs. Lee, with whom I boarded, as the house was about 150 yards down the road, on much lower ground, and so started with two other boys to bring her to a place of safety a couple of hundred yards further up the road. When we went down the road, it was a foot deep, but when we came back with Mrs. Lee, about a half hour later, it was two to three feet deep in the centre of the road, and four in the gutters. We had an awful time going up against the current, and at one place, about half way up, had to crawl under a telegraph pole and wires that obstructed our course, but finally got started again, and owing to the darkness got out of the middle of the road into the gutter, where we were swept off our feet, and here I thought it was all up with us, but the current from a side street threw us up on the pavement, which began at this point where the water was only two feet deep; here Mrs. Lee fainted, but we got her in the house all right. We sat there all night in our wet clothes, and in the morning, when the rain had stopped and the water had subsided, were pleasantly surprised to find that the house we had left still stood. Tuesday was a day of horror, as they were continually finding the drowned bodies of men, women, and children, as well as oxen, horses, pigs, etc., and in the street where we had our trouble they found fifty bodies.

It is impossible to estimate the damage done, as the natives are incapable of helping themselves and stand around begging for money. The reports which come in state that the roads and bridges have been washed away and the population drowned, and yet others have suffered very little. I am glad to say no Americans were lost or injured, which, I suppose, is due to the fact that they have ambition enough to come in out of the wet when it rains.

GEORGE W. ROBERTS.

The Colored People.

AT the International Christian Endeavor Convention, at Detroit, Mich., a sitting was devoted to a consideration of the negro question. Dr. W. Boyd, of St. Louis, Mo., gave a number of figures. He said: About one-eighth of our people, 8,000,000, are negroes. In the eight States lying nearest the Gulf these negroes increased from 1880 to 1890 at the rate of 19.1 per cent., while in the rest of the South the rate of increase was only 5½ per cent. This shows that the centre of negro population is steadily moving southward, and that the natural home of the negro therefore must be in that low and warm climate. The relative proportion between the negro and the white is steadily changing against the negro. In 1790 the negroes were nearly one-fifth of our population. In 100 years they had relatively decreased from one-fifth to less than one-eighth. Even in the eight black States the increase of the whites from 1880 to 1890 was 10 per cent. greater than the increase of the negro.

Gems of Irish Speech.

From a London Newspaper.

THE governor of a prison in Limerick told an amusing story of a refractory prisoner with whom he had once to deal. The man refused to work on the treadmill, and was brought before the governor for disobedience of the warden's orders. The governor asked him what objection he had to working on the treadmill. "Me go on the treadmill!" he cried. "Niver, sorr," and proudly drawing himself up he added, "I'd rather lave the jail first."

A farmer's wife bought a box of matches in a shop in Limerick on her weekly visit to the city. On the next market day she returned the matches, as they were damp. "They're all right, ma'am," said the shopkeeper; "look at this," and he lit one of the matches by rubbing it on the leg of his trousers. "Arrah, get out with you," cried the country-woman. "When I want to light the fire must I come in six miles from Ballyneety to strike a match on yer ould britches?"

There is a classic locality in Dublin known as Pill Lane. The way to the Four Courts from the northern part of the city lies through it. As a distinguished member of the Irish bar passed down the lane one day the following conversation took place between a fishwoman and a man: "Faix, if ye had all the larnin' that that gentleman has got under his hair, ye might consider yerself a wise man," said the woman. "O, thin, I'd sooner have the money he has in his purse," replied the man. "More fool you, thin," said the woman; "sure, 'tis with their brains the likes of him fills their pockets."

The Dreyfus Decision.

American Friend.

THE indignation of the world has followed the decision, as it ought, but the indignant editors and ministers and general public do not seem to see that standing armies and military systems cannot exist without victims. Individual justice has never had more than scant recognition in any country when the alleged honor of the army was at stake. Let any poor, innocent, unfriended man get in the way of those red chariot wheels and what hope is there for him? If a country is to worship such a god at all, it must expect to give victims when they are asked, and this is only one glaring instance which has at length shocked the moral sense of the world.

The menace of a standing army and of an imperial military system is infinitely greater, more subtle and far-reaching than most persons realize or dream of.

Insurance a la Chinese.

New Voice.

A CHINAMAN's conception of life insurance is rather amusingly illustrated by an incident related in one of our Pittsburg exchanges.

A Pittsburg life-insurance agent wrote a policy on the life of a Chinaman—the first ever written for a man of that race in Pittsburg.

How the insurance man did it he alone knows. The Chinaman had no very clear idea. He only understood that if he paid the premiums promptly he would be entitled to $5,000 some time. He began bothering the agent for the money after a couple of weeks had passed, and the agent tried to explain to him that he would have to die before any one could get it. Then the Chinaman fell down a cellarway on Grant street and was badly hurt. His friends tried to attend to him without calling in a doctor. When they did call in one, two days later, the doctor was angry.

"Why didn't you call me sooner?" he asked. "This man is half dead now."

Next day the injured man's brother was at the insurance office with a claim for $2,500.

"You are not entitled to anything on this," said the insurance man, "until the man is dead."

"Doctor say him half dead," answered the brother. "Why he no get half?"

CURRENT EVENTS.

THE immigration statistics for the (fiscal) year ending Sixth month 30, 1899, have been made public. The total number of immigrants arriving in the United States from July 1, 1898, to June 30, 1899 was 246,845; total number for year ending June 30, 1898, 178,448; total number for year ending June 30, 1897, 180,556; total number for year ending June 30, 1896, 263,709.

YELLOW fever at Havana appears to be "under control." The report on the 24th stated that there were no new cases, and but two convalescent cases. At Key West, on the 24th, the new cases numbered forty and deaths three. The weather continued rainy and favorable for the spread of the fever.

A DISPATCH from St. Joseph, Michigan, on the 22d, said: The entire cucumber crop in the district northeast of Benton Harbor, representing over 2,000,000 bushels of small pickles per season for the last ten years, has in the last ten days been completely destroyed by a foreign red bug. The total loss to growers is estimated at over $100,000.

Early on the morning of the 20th inst., M. Guérin, the President of the "Anti-Semitic League," who had defied the authorities of Paris for six weeks, barricading the entrance to the house where the anti-Semitic publication was issued, surrendered to the authorities. The surrender followed negotiations, and all of M. Guérin's companions were permitted to go free.

THE French Government issued a "pardon" to Dreyfus, on the 19th instant,—in other words, an order for his release, notwithstanding the court-martial's verdict. It caused no excitement, being generally expected. He was released from the prison at Rennes on the 21st, very early in the morning, and went to Carpentras, in the south of France, to the home of a relative. He withdrew his appeal to the military "Court of Revision," but signifies a purpose to procure a definite acquittal in the civil courts.

A MEETING proposed to be held in Trafalgar Square, London, on First-day last, to oppose the proposed attack on the Transvaal, was mobbed by war crowds, and greatly interfered with. It appears that the Orange Free State will make common cause with the Transvaal. Dispatches from London on the 23d represent that the British Government feels that the Boers are more ready for war than it is, and now desires delay, in order to make better preparations. It is estimated that the Transvaal and the Orange Free State united can put 50,000 men in the field.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

THE annual meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Alliance of Pennsylvania will be held in West Chester, Pa., (in the First Baptist Church), next week, the 4th, 5th, and 6th inst. There will be reports of the year's work, addresses, etc.

—The bequest of $100,000 left by John G. Lane to New York Yearly Meeting (Orthodox), for educational purposes, is subject to a government "war tax" of ten per cent., which means that $10,000 of the bequest must go into the United States Treasury for war purposes.

—On Fifth-day, the 7th inst., when Philadelphia was full of visitors to the reunion of veterans of the Civil War, a considerable number of strangers attended the Friends' Meeting at Fourth and Arch streets. On the afternoon of that day and on Sixth-day about one thousand, it was thought, visited the grounds attached to the meeting-house.—American Friend.

—General Otis has cabled from Manila, in reply to an inquiry, that sixteen churches have been occupied by United States troops, but that the property is respected and protected. Most of the buildings were previously occupied by the "rebels."

—The Bessemer Association has fixed the price of pig-iron for next year at $22 a ton in the valleys of western Pennsylvania, and $23.25 a ton at Pittsburg. The price of Bessemer pig was less than $11 a ton at Pittsburg no longer ago than last January, and only about $10 a ton in November, 1898.—Springfield Republican.

—President Tucker, of Dartmouth College, announced last week a gift of $300,000 to the college by Amos Tuck of the class of 1835. The gift is on the condition that the annual income, $12,000, shall be applied exclusively to the purposes of instruction.

DR. JULIA HOLMES SMITH has been elected dean of the National Medical College of Chicago. This is the first time that a woman has attained this place in a co-educational medical school.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH 7, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 40.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XL.

ALL God requires of us is a ready and unfeigned obedience to his known laws and clear commands; thus, my friends, has been the declared experience of multitudes who have trusted Him.

SUNDERLAND P. GARDNER.

From short-hand report of a sermon delivered at Hamburg, N. Y., Quarterly Meeting, 1862.

CONSCIENCE.

"GOOD-BY," I said to my conscience—

Good-by for aye and aye."

And I put her hands off harshly,

And turned my face away;

And conscience, smitten sorely,

Returned not from that day.

But a time came when my spirit

Grew weary of its pace;

And I cried: "Come back, my conscience,

And I long to see thy face."

But conscience cried: "I cannot,

Remorse sits in my place."

—Paul Lawrence Dunbar.

FRIENDS IN ENGLAND.

II.

I ATTENDED the monthly meeting of Hardshaw East, on the 13th of Seventh month. This was held at Eccles, practically a suburb of Manchester. The monthly meeting of Liverpool is called Hardshaw West, and that of Manchester is Hardshaw East. The two monthly meetings are jointly interested in a tract of land, given in early times to Hardshaw Monthly Meeting for society purposes, on which the busy manufacturing town of St. Helen's, about half way between Manchester and Liverpool, has been in part built. The property has become very valuable, and is so administered that a considerable net income is derived from it, which the two meetings apply to appropriate uses.

Eccles is a pretty town, and the Friends have built here within a few years (I think 1879) a neat and comfortable meeting-house,—one of the best I have seen. It stands back from the street, and has pleasant grounds at the rear. The monthly meeting met at 4 p. m. The attendance was probably fifty or over. There was ministry by several Friends, and prayer was offered. Closing about 5, tea and bread-and-butter, etc., were promptly provided for all on tables under the trees in the grounds, and the company present had a sociable and truly Friendly half hour together. Then reconvening, the business, which included several subjects of interest, occupied the time until nearly 8. The meeting was held without separation by sexes. The clerk was Joseph Walker, of Eccles. (There is a woman's monthly meeting, however, to transact such business as women may specially have; the clerk, 1898, was Elizabeth Ashworth, Manchester.)

* * *

On the 23d of Seventh month, First-day, I was at the meeting at Leominster (Lemster), in Hereford, having accompanied Theodore Neild, at whose home, "The Vista," I was staying. The meeting here, by the report in the Book of Meetings, 1898, has ninety-two members and eighty-one non-members. The attendance was perhaps sixty. An active and prominent member here is Henry Stanley Newman, editor of The Friend, London, whose home, "Buckfield," is near Leominster. He spoke, as did also two women Friends, and a man Friend, a missionary. Prayer was offered by one or two. The First-day morning meeting is at 11, the evening meeting at 6.30. Leominster belongs to Herefordshire and Radnorshire Monthly Meeting, and Western Quarterly Meeting.

* * *

On the following First day, the 30th, I was at the meeting at Colwyn Bay, on the north shore of Wales. The meeting here is an "allowed" one, and has been established within two or three years, under the care of Hardshaw West Monthly Meeting. The Book of Meetings, 1898, reported thirteen members and one non-member. A comfortable room in the second-story of an office building is used for meetings, but a capacious new house has been in process of erection, it is understood, through the Friendly interest of individuals. The fact was not yet officially announced.

The attendance at Colwyn Bay varies in the summer, according as the resident members are away for their holiday, or other Friends come to the place for theirs. Twenty to twenty-five would be a good number; there were not so many on this day. We had prayer and a brief sermon by our friend William Edward Turner, who has been living at Colwyn Bay since removing from Birkenhead.

* * *

The meeting at Edinburgh, which I attended on Eighth month 13, is small. There is a good house, which stands within a plot of ground at 74 Pleasance. This name, "Pleasance," signifies that this was once an open part of the city, a pleasure ground, but it is now all built up, and the more "genteel" residence districts are some distance away. Arriving there about 10.30, I found a small Bible class receiving instruction from Jane Miller, an earnest and devoted Friend, now advanced in years (I think about eighty, she told me), but still active. The meeting began at 11. There were about twenty-five present. Three Friends sat in the gallery: Robert Lawson, James Robertson, and Jane Miller. The last-named offered prayer and spoke, and so also did Dr. Gillett, a young man (resident in Edinburgh, I believe, a nephew of J Bevan Braithwaite), who sat in the body of the meeting.

The report for 1898 gives Edinburgh 42 members, and 7 non-members. Eliza Wigham, who was for many years a well-known member of the meeting, has removed her home to Dublin. Robert Lawson's wife, Margaret, is the daughter of Archibald Crosby, formerly of Edinburgh, but for some eighteen years a resident at West Branch, Iowa,—an earnest and "old-fashioned" Friend. (Others of his family are at San José, California.) * * *

The meeting-house at Scarborough, in York Place, is a comparatively new building, neat and comfortable, with committee rooms, etc., in the building. The report, 1898, gives 109 members, and 51 non-members. After attending, on First-day morning, Eighth month 20, with William Stickney Rowntree, his adult class (in another place), we went to the meeting, which begins at 10.30. There was a good attendance, there being a number present who were temporarily staying in Scarborough. Walter Robson, of Essex, one of these, spoke, as did also John Stephenson Rowntree, of York. A woman Friend offered prayer and spoke; prayer was also offered by another Friend.

The evening meeting begins at 7, and continues less than an hour; in this Walter Robson again spoke. It was preceded, at 6.30, by a "reading meeting," in which, by invitation, I read a brief paper, on Peaceableness and Simplicity as common to all real Friends, of all "bodies," adding a few pages from the works of John Woolman. After the meeting proper a First-day school class was formed for the study of a Scripture Lesson, under the direction of Joshua Rowntree, the subject being the Ascension. * * *

Of the meeting at Westminster (London), which I attended on the 27th, I have already spoken. On the 3d of Ninth month I was at Birmingham, at the meeting-house in Bull street,—in the chief business section of the city, near the public buildings. This is the chief meeting of the city,—there are three or four smaller ones, in suburban localities of comparatively recent establishment,—and there were probably two hundred and fifty persons present. The house, roomy and substantial, would accommodate three times that number. The meeting began at 10.30. Five Friends were in the upper gallery, William White sitting at the head of the meeting. The meeting lasted about an hour and twenty minutes, nearly half the time being in silence. William White offered a prayer, and there were then sermons by Samuel N. and Annie Holmden, of Cambridge, and Samuel Price, of Birmingham, a woman Friend offering prayer in conclusion.

Birmingham is one of the strongholds of the Friends. Their local year-book, for 1899, shows 432 members and 92 non-members at Bull Street; 150 members and 47 non-members at George Road, and a small number at two other meetings—Farm street and Mosely road. The monthly meeting, Warwickshire North, to which Birmingham belongs, and of which it is the main part, has 12 recorded ministers, six of each sex; 22 elders, 13 men 9 women; and 28 overseers.

I wish to speak more particularly of the great Adult School work done at Birmingham. It deserves an article to itself, and cannot be adequately dealt with at the conclusion of these notes on the meetings.

H. M. J.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

NO. 42.—TENTH MONTH 15.

THE KINGDOM OF JUDAH.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thus saith the Lord, ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren.—I. Kings, xii., 24.

Scripture Reading, II. Chronicles, xi., 1-4; xii., 1-16.

ANOTHER class which was driven from the kingdom of Israel was that of the Levites. From this family or clan were appointed the priests and other officials who served in the temple. (Deut., x., 8-9; Num., i., 47-54). The establishment of the new sanctuaries at Dan and Bethel seems to have offended this class so that it was impossible for Jeroboam to obtain its members to serve at the new altars. That he should appoint "the lowest of the people, which were not sons of Levi" to such service is especially noted against him. (I. Kings, xii., 31; xiii., 33-34). It is possible that Jeroboam feared to use the Levites because of their strong clan feeling for their brethren in the Temple. It may be that he feared treachery on their part, and that it was from choice that he appointed others to the holy offices. This would account for the migration of the whole clan into Judah (II. Chron., xi., 14), and also for the bitterness of the priestly author of Chronicles against the northern sanctuaries (II. Chron., xi., 15). This assumption is not necessary, however, since the feeling of the unique sanctity of the Temple at Jerusalem, and of the inviolability of the right of the house of Levi to the priesthood, was much stronger at the time when the books of Chronicles were written than at the time of the writing of the books of Kings. Moreover the writer of Chronicles was doubtless himself a priest, while the writer of Kings would be much less scandalized by a lack of consideration for the priestly order.

Meanwhile the kingdom of Judah under Rehoboam was adapting itself to the new conditions. At first an army was raised with the intention of forcing the rebellious tribes into submission. But the comparative weakness of Judah, together with the warnings of the prophet Shemaiah (I. Kings, xii., 21-24), induced the king to abandon this undertaking, and he set himself to making strong his remaining possessions. War soon broke out between the two kingdoms, however, and lasted intermittently for many years, draining the resources of both, and keeping alive the animosities generated by the secession (I. Kings, xiv., 30). Either because of this war or because of the raid of Shishak, king of Egypt, Jeroboam, of Israel, found it necessary to remove his capital from Shechem, where it was first located, to Pennel on the east side of Jordan (I. Kings, xii., 25).

The invasion by the king of Egypt took place in the fifth year of the reign of Rehoboam. His inscriptions in the Egyptian temple of Karnak, shows that the expedition was against both kingdoms, and was not, therefore, as might be supposed, undertaken in support of his former protege, Jeroboam. It was, indeed, simply a marauding expedition, invited by the weakness of the divided Israelites, and it resulted in the carrying away into Egypt of the treasures of the Temple at Jerusalem as well as the spoil of many cities.

It might have been expected that Rehoboam would realize and make use of the great source of strength which he possessed in the Temple, and the loyalty of the people to the worship conducted there. But he does not seem to have been able to comprehend what might be accomplished by rallying his whole people to the support and worship of Jehovah. Born and brought up in the harem of a heathen mother, the state of religion seemed to him, no doubt, an unimportant portion of the state machinery. At any rate we find early in his reign that "Judah did evil in the sight of the Lord." "They built them high places, and images, and groves, on every high hill and under every green tree." (I. Kings xiv., 22, 23). Moreover the licentious rites of the Canaanites became common in Judah (I. Kings xiv., 24). During the brief reign (920-917 B. C.) of the second king of Judah these abuses continued, but under his son Asa a reform was instituted. The foreign forms of worship were repressed; the religious prostitutes were banished, and although the various local shrines were continued, only Jehovah was allowed to be worshiped there. Correspondingly the importance of the Temple was increased as well as the value of the offerings presented at its shrine.

But Asa did not escape any more than his father the evil heritage of strife and confusion resulting from the division. War continued between Judah and Israel, and a new feature of danger was introduced in the person of the king of Damascus. It will be remembered that on the accession of Solomon the Syrian provinces which had been conquered by David revolted from his son and set up a capital at Damascus under the kingship of one Rezin. Asa, king of Judah, being hard pressed by the king of Israel, sent presents to Damascus, and urged the Syrian king to assist him. This he did, and a strife commenced with this northern neighbor which lasted for generations. On the other hand Asa was successful in repelling a raid from the side of Egypt. His reign was a long one, lasting over forty years, and on the whole was a prosperous period for Judah.

The north meantime was experiencing all the evils of anarchy. Assassination became the regular method of succession to the throne. The son of Jeroboam was killed by his general-in-chief, Baasha, while his son, Elah, in turn met a similar fate at the hands of Zimri. After a reign of seven days Zimri was defeated and slain by another general, Omri by name, who was able at last to establish a comparatively stable rule.

A nation grown strong under an elective monarchy was subverted to a despotism by the ambition and luxury of an hereditary king, and forced into rebellion by the silly pride of his weak and inefficient son. Thenceforth the people of the two kingdoms were continually harried by wars, in which their own interests were not in the least concerned, and which left them powerless when attacked from without by the brutal power of Assyria. "War is a game which, were their subjects wise, kings would not play at." Our own testimony against war is one which needs stimulation in these times, when every form of specious argument is being brought forward in its favor. A testimony against war which is only in evidence when no war is threatened is a very worthless thing. Our nation is being brow-beaten by high-sounding phrases. These are used to cover the hideous fact that our sons are sent to a far country to slaughter a once friendly people, that we may rule over their land. That the worst evils of the war fall on a people with a dusky skin should not blind our sympathies nor stifle our sense of right. Shame upon us that slaughter and fire and robbery should be the forms in which we send the "Gospel of Christ" to a far-off people!

THE NEW ARBITRATION SYSTEM.

Dr. Andrew D. White, United States Ambassador to Germany, and President of the United States Commission at The Hague Conference, has written the following letter to Dr. Edward H. Magill, of Swarthmore, from Hamburg, Germany, under date of Eighth month 10.

My Dear Dr. Magill: Pardon my delay in answering your very interesting and thoughtful letter, but I had a great deal to do, and discussion of many of the points you raise would, I felt, be premature. I have borne them in mind, though I cannot say that they have taken shape to any considerable extent in the plans finally adopted by the Conference.

The fundamental principle which you seem to lay down—namely, that arbitration should be made compulsory, or at least that there should be some means of enforcing the decrees of a high International Court—is utterly inadmissible in these days, and, so far as I can see, will never be attained.

While we, in common with Russia and several other Powers, were willing to have compulsory arbitration adopted for some minor questions of ordinary business, and while I myself, in view of my experience in the diplomatic service, would hail some such relief of our diplomatic representatives with especial satisfaction, even this was swept away in the opposition of various Powers to anything like a compulsory system.

The great difficulty is that there are such a multitude of difficulties between nations, involving burning questions of race, religion, national security and even existence, and it is so exceedingly difficult to draw a line between these and other questions that no nation represented at the Conference was willing to tie itself to anything like a thorough system of compulsory arbitration.

Compulsory arbitration, unless so carefully restricted that it ceases to be really compulsory, in cases likely to produce war, would unquestionably come to mean the power of any and every nation to drag any and every other into an international tribunal. Think what that would mean in the question between France and Germany, or Russia and some of her neighbors, or Italy and Austria, or in a multitude of other cases which we could think of.

As to enforcing the decrees, I must confess to you that this seems even more chimerical. Your plan would simply dismiss these Powers from diplomatic relations with the others; that is, it would abolish all the ordinary means of preserving peace, with the result that a condition of war would doubtless soon follow.

I understand that young Professor Woalsey, of Yale, has written an article in which he takes the ground that arbitration to be effective must be compulsory, and that the logical result of this is that the various nations should maintain an army sufficient to enforce their decrees. I have not read the article, but am told that this is the fundamental idea of it. This, of course, means something infinitely worse than the difficulty which afflicts the world at present. It means the increase of armies and the use of them in accordance with intrigues between various powerful States, in so far as the Powers would consent to allow their contingents in this vast army to be thus used.

It is as clear to me as the day that our Conference did the best that could be done. After a world of thought and pains by a great body of men among the most competent in the world to really discuss the subject, there was prepared a system of voluntary arbitration with a carefully stated procedure and with various subsidiary institutions to promote general mediation, special mediation and commissions of inquiry, the purpose of which last is to substitute facts carefully ascertained by experts for the insane or malicious lying with which the public is generally deluged on both sides when questions arise likely to produce war.

Our trust to make resort to this court more and more constant, and its decrees more and more like law, must be in the public opinion of various countries. My hope and, to a considerable extent, my belief, are that such public opinion will more and more oblige governments to resort to the court and to abide by its decisions.

Another thing to be done by public opinion is to discountenance the sort of journalism which lives by providing sensation—reports likely to provoke hostile feelings between nations. At present that sort of thing is rampant, and especially in the United States and France.

It may interest you to know that the best features of our own American plan were carefully considered, and various important parts of it adopted, but I will confess that the plan given by the Conference to the world is, in my judgment, better than that submitted by any single nation.

Never was anything of the kind looked over with more care or by more competent men. Their pride was at first enlisted in producing a good result, and finally their interest in the subject led them to work night and day to give to the world the best plan possible.

The system of "special mediation," which emanated entirely from our own Commission, was adopted unanimously, first by the Committee on Arbitration and afterward by the full Conference, and will, I believe, prove to be one of the subordinate features of very great use. It would, I think, have prevented some wars in modern times, and would have stopped others before they became especially serious. For example, had the system existed during our recent war with Spain it would unquestionably have stopped the war after the destruction of Cervera's fleet, and thus saved many lives and much treasure.

I suppose that before long you will have the full text of the arbitration and other conventions before you with our reports, and so you can judge for yourself.

As to disarmament, that is simply impossible at the present time. It requires long and careful preliminary studies by experts before any conference can propose any distinct plan.

Besides that, it must come after arbitration rather than before it. When arbitration shall have diminished the probability and frequency of wars or armaments, the arguments for the present enormous armies and navies will be greatly diminished.

I believe that the diminution of armies and forces will begin in Europe within a few years, but it will be after careful comparative studies of the different forces, so that any nation will be prevented from gaining undue advantage in the process, and it will be greatly promoted by the likelihood of effective results from the arbitration scheme.

Remember, also, that apart from the whole arbitration, mediation and examination schemes, the extension of the Geneva rules to maritime warfare and of the codification of the laws and customs of war in the most humane sense, which the Conference accomplished, would of itself be sufficient to warrant the calling of such an international body.

Altogether, I feel that a thoroughly good beginning has been made and plans presented which will work well from the first, and grow steadily more and more effective for good as the world goes on.

With love to you all, I remain, yours faithfully,
ANDREW D. WHITE.

NO "CLERGY" IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

ONE of the most broad-minded and highly-respected of the bishops of the English Established Church is the Bishop of Hereford. Speaking at a recent meeting of Church workers, "lay" and "clerical," he made some timely remarks on the conditions of life and government of the early Christian Church.

Each of these early Christian communities, he said, was simply a Christian brotherhood, its government democratic in life and spirit. The words in the twentieth chapter of John on the remission of sins were addressed to the whole body of disciples, not the apostles only, and that might, as he believed, include women as well as men. Again, it was the whole body of believers upon whose judgment depended the critical decision recorded in the fifteenth of Acts. Further, in those early communities, in the language of such letters as those of the Apostle Paul, they had abundant evidence, said the bishop, that the organization of the Christian ministrations was not what it was to-day ; that there was no distinct separation between the clergy and the laity, that there was no order holding clerical offices, but there was the equal call of God to all alike to perform some spiritual function, some one and some another, according to the gift and the calling. Apostles, prophets, evangelists, overseers or bishops, presbyters, deacons, pastors, teachers, ministers, helpers, interpreters, stewards, were not separate bodies of men in the Church so much as men endowed with special gifts and performing special functions.

Such truths may be truisms in the Society of Friends, but they are not often heard from the mouth of a high dignitary of the Church of England, and are specially opportune at a moment when sacerdotalism is making such extravagant claims, and advancing by open and hidden steps.

THE TYRANNY OF LITERATURE.

The Friend, Philadelphia.

THE demands of fashion have become as imperious within the realms of literature as ever they were in the matter of dress or address.

In this day of innumerable books and periodicals a wise discrimination is imperative, and yet the multitude follow the approval of public opinion implicitly.

An author of some acknowledged ability produces an inferior work—the more fictitious, the more eagerly accepted—and none are supposed to be “well read” who have not wasted their time over it.

The answer to the query whether such and such a new book has been read sometimes, and not infrequently, decides the literary, if not social, standing of the individual addressed—within certain circles. This ought not to be. Many well-informed persons either conscientiously abstain from or are not situated so as to have leisure for reading such ephemeral literature.

The bane of our generation is cramming. Literary dyspepsia results and the benefit arising from the proper assimilation of well selected and digested mental food is never realized. We need to bring back that careful classical culture—subject always to the limitations of the Spirit of Truth—which made the best writers, in all ages and every tongue, such fountains of literary excellence.

The importance of training the youthful appetite for good reading and the diligent use of leisure moments to store the mind with profitable knowledge has frequently been brought to view, but this modern craze for the “latest” publication has scarcely received the attention it deserves—by way of protest.

“Of making many books there is no end,” and the world's stock of knowledge is greatly increased thereby, but the capacity of the human mind will never be such as to be able to appreciate more than a very small portion of this. No pressure or fashionable demand should be permitted to divert or disturb the student or general reader who may be pursuing a more worthy course than that which is only too popular.

Much of the current literature has been written to gratify a morbid taste for the realistic and even dramatic, and when one has scanned its pages a certain sense of dissatisfaction, if not disgust, arises, so that anything that will not bear a second reading or by which one feels a real uplift, might well be omitted altogether, notwithstanding the verdict of the would-be all-informed.

FALSE AMBITION.

THE extravagant theory of the young people as to the necessity for keeping up a certain style, is the reason why so many of them put off marriage year after year, and finally drift into the irremediable stage of celibacy. Girls without fortunes are supported in idleness and luxury by over-indulgent parents, and expect to be thus cared for after marriage. The annual cost of such a girl's maintenance is more than the income of a young man, unless he be exceptionally fortunate. The fault lies with parents. Unless they are prepared to give a fortune with a daughter when she marries, they have no moral right to make her unfit for the position of wife in the home of a young man who has his fortune to make. And this is not a trivial mistake, for it is a great and increasing source of personal unhappiness, and it inevitably promotes immorality. Instead of thousands of bachelors and spinsters in boarding-houses in Baltimore, Washington, and other cities, there should be thousands of modest homes, in which young married couples would be helping each other to realize the dreams of their youth. The old-fashioned virtue, thrift, domestic economy, saving up for a rainy day, needs a revival, not especially in the homes of the poor, but in those who have fair incomes, and whose ambition to make a show prompts them to adopt the habits and ape the ways of the rich.—Washington Post.

A PASSAGE FROM JOHN RUSKIN.

“WITHIN the last few years we have had the laws of natural science opened to us with a rapidity which has blinded us by its brightness, and means of transit and communication given to us which have made but one kingdom of the habitable globe. One kingdom—but who is to be its king? Is there to be no king in it, think you, and every man to do that which is right in his own eyes? Or only kings of terror, and the Empires of Mammon and Belial? Or will you, youths of England, make of your country again a sceptred isle, for all the world a source of light, a centre of peace; mistress of learning and of the arts; faithful guardian of great memories in the midst of irreverent and ephemeral visions; faithful servant of time-tried principles; under temptation from fond experiments and licentious desires, and amid the cruel and clamorous jealousies of the nations, worshipped in her strange valor of good will toward men? Which king? There are the two oriflammes; which shall we plant on the foremost islands—the one that floats in heavenly fire, or that which hangs heavy with the foul tissue of terrestrial gold?”

THE fact of never having known the leveling influences of a nickname, is in itself not without weight in the sum of one's personal dignity.—Anna Fuller.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH 7, 1899.

UNDER "The Home Club," in The Outlook, a contributor concludes an article with these words: "Are young men and women not willing to begin house-keeping on the plane upon which their fathers and mothers began? Will the next war we fight in this country be to free ourselves from the slavery to things? Is it true that what we need is emancipation from the false standards that make permanent homes impossible to the innumerable thousands who are thereby deprived of the sweetest experience of love and life because of the lack of a home?"

These are interesting and pointed questions, but what are the answers to them? Undoubtedly the "slavery to things" increases. In some respects it is not unreasonable that we should desire increased convenience, comfort, and even beauty in our lives, but in other respects it is true that many of the things we toil for do not contribute in any way to these ends; they are purely needless, worthless, and even injurious.

But how difficult it is to thus persuade any one! How few the Friends and other "plain people" are! And how many arguments are brought to prove that even what remains of Friends' plainness is wholly without good reason!

At this writing, it looks as if war between England and the Transvaal Republic could not be avoided. The people of the latter, the "Boers," have become convinced (whether rightly or wrongly), that England means to attack and crush them, and that the Government at London has only been delaying in order to get a larger army to South Africa; they therefore are taking the field themselves, in order not to be "taken unawares." At any moment a collision may occur.

This is a most melancholy and painful situation. It is indeed humiliating that the "two great English-speaking nations," the two who brought order out of chaos at the Hague Conference, and secured the great Arbitration agreement, should the same year have their hands imbrued in blood, in disputes arising from their own aggressions. We know that great numbers of the good men and women of England will feel the progress of such a conflict in South Africa as a personal weight of suffering,—as we do with our shocking war in the islands of the Pacific.

WE have received from the National Temperance Society and Publication House, New York (3 and 5 West 18th street), copies of some of their tracts relating to current temperance questions. One of these is an address by Henry B. Metcalf, of Rhode Island, delivered at Ocean Grove, N. J., in Seventh month last, on the violation of the law respecting "canteens" in the United States army; it is entitled "A Nation's Crime against her Own Soldiers." The facts of the case are concisely set forth, and the tract deserves to be generally read. The crookedness with which this whole matter has been handled by Government officials is painful, and the evidence that the men in arms have suffered as a consequence is conclusive.

Another tract on the same subject is the Address presented to President McKinley on the 11th of Seventh month, by the committee of the National Temperance Society, and the "legal brief" which they handed the President, prepared by Eli F. Ritter, of Indianapolis, in which the nullifying opinion of United States Attorney-General Griggs is considered. It may be said, in a few words, that if such an opinion as this of the Attorney-General can be allowed to stand, no law of Congress is worth the paper it is written on, except where executive officers may choose to obey it.

ONE of the curiosities of life is the persistency of misinformation. An incorrect idea, once set afloat, will survive and be perpetuated "through the ages." For example, it is commonly believed that the Indians are "fast disappearing." But this supposition has been entertained for a long time, and, as a matter of fact, there are about as many Indians in the United States now as there were many years ago. Some tribes have diminished, some have disappeared, and some, on the other hand, have increased. Dr. Senn, of Chicago, who has recently come back from the Hawaiian Islands, says in an interview that the natives, "like the North American Indians, will in the near future be a race of the past." Perhaps Dr. Senn speaks advisedly in relation to Hawaii, but to expect the Indians of this country to be "a thing of the past" in the "near future" is altogether unjustified by any existing facts. It is very likely that the Census of 1910 will show a larger number of them than the Census of 1900.

THERE was a very notable passage in last week's Swarthmore College notes. It said that the number of College students then in attendance was larger than ever before in the history of the institution. The number then was 199; a day or so later other students arrived, making now 204. There never were so many as two hundred college students at Swarthmore before. There were a number of years ago more than two hundred students in attendance, but a considerable part of them were in the preparatory school, or the "sub-collegiate" class.

It is cause for encouragement that Swarthmore's college work is thus increasingly appreciated.

BIRTHS.

HESTON.—Ninth month 27, 1899, to Henry B. and Lillian Hall Heston, of Rosemont, Pa., a son, who is named Henry Benjamin.

THOMAS.—Near King of Prussia, Pa., Eighth month 1, 1899, to Charles L. and Amy C. Thomas, a son, who is named Charles Edwin.

MARRIAGES.

PETERS—WHITE.—At the residence of the bride's parents, "Glenmore," Cheltenham, Pa., Ninth month 27, 1899, under the care of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, Clarence C. Peters, son of Charles P. and Mary A. Peters, of Philadelphia, and Mary D., daughter of Oscar W. and Annie M. D. White, of Cheltenham, Montgomery county, Pa.

THORNE—WILSON.—At the residence of the bride's father, Ninth month 27, 1899, under the care of Chester Monthly Meeting, held at Moorestown, N. J., Dr. Nathan Thorne, of Moorestown, son of Morris and Maria C. Thorne, of Washington, D. C., and Mary Rebecca, daughter of Pusey and the late Rebecca P. Wilson, of Moorestown.

DEATHS.

ELLIS.—Ninth month 28, 1899, Hannah Henry, widow of James P. Ellis, in her 72d year; a member of the Monthly Meeting held at Green street, Philadelphia.

She was a daughter of the late James Sterling, of Trenton, N. J.

HALL.—At her home, near Spencer's Station, Ohio, Eighth month 7, 1899, Priscilla T. Hall, in the 68th year of her age; an esteemed elder of Stillwater Monthly Meeting.

She was the daughter of the late William and Rebecca Thomas, of near Barnesville, the former a minister in the Society. This dear Friend bore with patience her last illness, which was from heart disease and of three months' duration. A faithful attender of meeting, whenever health would permit, and a firm believer in the truth of the principles of Friends, she would often advise her children to give all proper attention to the affairs of the world, but first of all pay their allegiance unto God. Always patient, kind, and hopeful, her desire was to live, if it was God's will, that she might do good in the world. But she was resigned to go, if it was His will, saying, there was nothing in her way and that she would leave a host of friends here, but would meet a host over yonder. With a smile on her face, she passed from earth to her heavenly home.

The funeral was largely attended; ministers from both branches of Friends were present and spoke comforting words to the bereaved ones. * *

PARRY.—Fourth month 21, 1899, Hannah Parry, daughter of the late Robert and Sallie Parry, in the 76th year of her age.

She was one of the Lord's dear children, bound to him by the ties of adoring love and unwavering faith. Her Christian patience and cheerfulness during various afflictive dispensations, her forgetfulness of self and thoughtfulness for others, bore testimony to a "life hid with Christ in God," and were an inspiration to all who came within her influence. * *

SHAW.—In Carversville, Bucks county, Ninth month 22, 1889, Grace R., widow of Eleazar C. Shaw, and daughter of the late William and Mary Roberts Green, of Quakertown, Pa., in her 85th year; a member of Buckingham Monthly Meeting, Pa.

SMEDLEY.—At his home, in Malvern, Chester county, Pa., Ninth month 30, 1899, Thomas G. Smedley, in the 80th year of his age; a member of Goshen Monthly Meeting of Friends. Interment at Willistown.

ELLA B. MCDOWELL.

Our dear friend, who has passed away so suddenly from among us, will long be held in our most loving remembrance. With the beginning of our winter's work we will realize afresh our loss, for we will miss her vivacity and sociability, her faithfulness to duty, and her clearness of judgment in overcoming difficulties. She was a teacher in our New York-day school, as well as in the First-day school, a leading spirit in the Young Friends' Association, the Young Friends' Aid, and the Mission Kindergarten. While her interest in the meetings of our Religious Society was active, and her appreciation of the seriousness of life was keen, her sunny nature was overflowing with enthusiasm and happiness. Her whole life was a preparation for the higher one.

"The blessing of her quiet life

Fell on us like the dew;

And good thoughts, where her footsteps pressed,
Like fairy blossoms grew.

"Alone unto our Father's will
One thought hath reconciled:
That He whose love exceedeth ours
Hath taken home his child.

"Fold her, O Father! in thine arms,
And let her henceforth be
A messenger of love between Our human hearts and Thee."

H.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

ISAAC WILSON and wife, of Bloomfield, Ontario, have obtained a minute of unity from their monthly meeting in a prospect of a religious visit to some parts of the Western States, and on to California, where they find Friends, and where way is made for visiting them.

The annual meeting in the old meeting-house at Warrington, (York county), Pa., was held on First-day, the 24th. An item in the York Press says "about 3,000 people of all religious denominations, and some having no religious connections, assembled to listen to the speakers and meet old friends. The hospitality of the good people of Warrington was equal to the occasion and all enjoyed the day heartily."

Many were present, it is stated, from York, Mechanicsburg, Dillsburg, and other places. There was ministry by Hiram Griest, of Menallen (Adams county), and by Joseph Vail, of Carlisle. The meeting continued about two hours. "It was strongly urged that they hold weekly meetings at that place instead of annual meetings, as heretofore."

Gwynedd Monthly Meeting (Gwynedd, Plymouth, and Norristown), has added a number of new members within the past year. Four new members were accepted at the meeting in Eighth month; at the same meeting Robert Hatton obtained a minute approving his concern to visit Friends and others in New England.

At Race street meeting, Philadelphia, on the 1st instant, Francis Smith, of Plymouth, England, was present, and acceptably bore a share of the ministry. He also took part in the Conference class held after meeting. In the afternoon he attended the religious meeting at the Friends' Home for Children, in West Philadelphia.

Friends at Lincoln, Nebraska, feel the need of a meeting-house, and a movement to secure one is in the mind of some of them. They have been obliged to rent a hall or other place, from time to time, as meetings were proposed, and the cost of this is somewhat a hindrance. There are a number of Friends in and about Lincoln, and no doubt the possession of a permanent home for the meeting would tend to its encouragement.

On First-day next (8th inst.), at 10.30 a. m., Merion meeting is held, and the company of Samuel S. Ash is expected.

Merion First-day school, on 15th instant, will be held at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Isaac H. Hillborn has consented to attend and give an illustrated talk on the Jewish Tabernacle.

A VISIT TO INDIANA FRIENDS.—III.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

AFTER closing my last letter in Richmond, we passed the day until near evening with our friends, receiving some calls, among which was one from a member of the other branch of Friends who had been at the meetings the day previous. We had a good deal of conversation in a pleasant and friendly way, and he appeared to be well satisfied with the answers given him to the questions he asked. In the evening we left Richmond for Waynesville, Ohio, about seventy miles by rail, and were met at the station by Isaac and Hannah Kelly and taken to their hospitable home for the night, where we met their sister Anna,—these three composing the family. The next morning they proposed to us to call upon some of the "shut-ins," as they termed those who were not able, from various reasons, to get out to meeting. To this proposition we cordially acceded, and Anna then took us in their carriage to the village, calling first at the store of James and Eunice Shute, and had a little chat with them; then at the home of Clarkson Gause, who was very ill. We did not see him, but his daughter, Lizzie Packer, came out to the carriage, and we had a short visit with her. We then called to see Mary Bailey, and spent a little while with her and her daughter, who compose her family; then went to the home of Edwin and Ella Michener, where we remained until near the time of the meeting appointed at that place. We called again at Clarkson Gause's and found he appeared to be passing away (which he did during the night).

Fourth-day morning Davis Furnas came for us, and took us to his home, where we spent the fore part of the day with him, his wife Sidney, and her sister, Elizabeth Blackburn, these latter formerly from Baltimore. In the afternoon we went to John Furnas's, a son of Davis, and found there his wife's mother, Sarah Clifton, an old acquaintance from Plainfield, New Jersey. After a pleasant, social time here we left to attend the meeting we had appointed at Harveysburg, which was held in the United Brethren meeting-house. The meeting was not large, yet in this, as well as in the one on the preceding evening, I found considerable service, which from expression given seemed to be satisfactory to many of those present. We returned to Davis Furnas's for the night, and passed another forenoon in pleasant association with him and his family. After dinner Davis and Elizabeth took us to Thomas Frame's, who is an old man and unable to get out to meeting. The time spent with him, his wife Elizabeth, and their daughter Anna in social converse, passed very pleasantly. About 4 p. m., we took the train for Selma, Ohio, about thirty miles, where we were met by Nathan Branson, and taken to his home for the night. We had met him, his wife Anna, and daughter Luella, at the Yearly Meeting, and our visit with them was much appreciated by us. Here we learned that Sarah Schofield, wife of Joseph Schofield, seemed to be near the end of her earthly life. She was a daughter of Simeon Warner, and had been married only a little over a year, and by morning we found her pure spirit had passed from its earthly home.

After breakfast Nathan and his wife took us over to the home of her sisters, where the last few days of her life had been passed, and we had a little opportunity with the family in which to express our sympathy and leave a word of comfort, as we could not stay to attend the funeral, owing to appointments we could not well change. We then drove to the home of Samuel R. Battin, and had a pleasant visit with their children, Samuel and his wife, Emily, being absent to attend the funeral of Clarkson Gause. We had a small meeting that afternoon at Green Plain meeting-house. The funeral of C. G. and the death of S. S. prevented many of the Friends from attending. In the evening Samuel and Emily Battin, who had returned from Waynesville, took us to South Charleston, where a meeting had been appointed in the town hall. This too was small, and yet I found room for a testimony describing our principles and the reason for them, which seemed to find some receptive hearts.

After meeting we went home with Reuben and Susan Roberts, she a daughter of Edward Merritt, who lives with them. Had a good visit with them until time for our departure for Cardington, which, after some five hours waiting in Columbus, Ohio, we reached about 5 p. m., and were met by Willis Keese, and were kindly entertained by him and his wife Eunice. We learned after arriving there that a meeting had been arranged for in the town of Cardington, at the Methodist Protestant house, at 10.30 a. m., and at the meeting-house, about two miles distant, near the Olentaugy Creek, where there was formerly a meeting, but for some untoward circumstances was no longer held (I believe it was called Whetstone meeting), and a meeting suggested for the evening. We held all three and they were well attended, the one in the afternoon by a number of the other branch of Friends. These meetings, the testimonies given, the quiet solemnity which overspread them, and the baptism of spirit witnessed, called forth many expressions of satisfaction, and as the day closed and I went over in retrospect its work, a sweet feeling of peace overspread my mind, and the heart was raised in thankfulness to the Heavenly Father for the privilege we had enjoyed.

We returned to the home of W. Keese for the night, and during the morning hour, as we waited for the train which was to bear us homeward, we had much instructive religious conversation with these Friends, and I felt to encourage them to again make the effort to hold a meeting.

We left them Second-day morning near noon, happily making good connections with our train at Columbus for our home in Baltimore, where we arrived about 8 a. m. Third-day morning, after an absence of nearly eleven weeks, and after attending Indiana Yearly Meeting, which closed on the 24th of Eighth month, having held eighteen meetings, and we feel amply rewarded for our labors.

JOHN J. CORNELL.

Baltimore, Ninth month 12.

[CORRECTION.—In J. J. C.'s letter in issue of Ninth month 9, the name Moon should be Moore.]

LETTER FROM ISAAH LIGHTNER.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

FOUR of us left our Nebraska home on the 7th of Ninth month, to visit our old home in Maryland and other points along the way. We attended Illinois Yearly Meeting, which commenced on the 9th and closed on the 14th. The meetings, from the Ministers and Elders meeting until the close of the general business sessions, were acknowledged to be of an uplifting character; harmony and love prevailed throughout and much satisfaction was expressed for thus being permitted to be together. The closing was especially precious, all coming under the true baptizing of the All Father, and we separated with the feeling of renewed spiritual life and growth. We went to Wenona, Ill., on Sixth-day, where we were met by our friend, David Wilson, and dined with himself and wife, after which we started for Chicago, where we were met by our friend, Thos. W. Woodnutt. After spending a few hours with him in viewing parts of the city, we started at 8.10 p. m. for Komoka, Canada, where we arrived at 10 a. m. on Seventh-day and were met by our friend, Samuel P. Zavitz, and taken to his home, seven miles from the station, where we were very kindly received and entertained. Such homes make a bright spot along the pathway of life. Sarah Zavitz and two daughters visited us in the afternoon, and it was a pleasant meeting, for she had been one of our Nebraska neighbors.

We attended First-day school, and the meeting for worship, at Coldstream, on First-day the 17th. It was a great pleasure for us to see so many young people coming in at 10 o'clock to attend First-day School. The lesson for the day was "Solomon," many points of whose character were brought out in the classes and in general discussion in the closing exercise. The meeting for worship convened at 11 o'clock. After gathering into silence vocal prayer was entered into, expressing thankfulness and desiring the Father's influence to be with us in our meeting. The spoken word was kindly received and we felt at the close that the hour had been profitably spent, which was confirmed by the shaking of hands and social greetings afterward. We went from meeting to the home of our friend, Sarah Zavitz, wife of Webster Zavitz. A number of Friends came in during the afternoon, and the time was spent very pleasantly and we hope profitably. We returned to Samuel's for the night, feeling especially thankful for the spiritual food of the day.

Second-day morning it was raining, but Ida Zavitz took us to Uncle Isaac Zavitz's for dinner, where we spent a few hours pleasantly with the aged parents, their son Jonah, wife, and children. We were taken to Daniel Zavitz's for tea, where we spent the early evening very pleasantly with the family, and felt sorry to separate, but found it best to go to Samuel's early in the evening.

Third-day morning we bade farewell to our kind Canada friends in the neighborhood of Coldstream, and Samuel brought us to Komoka, where we separated, feeling that our visit in Canada had been one of pleasure and profit. We arrived at Niagara Falls about 3 o'clock, and were met by Marian Vail, who took us to her mother's, Sarah Vail, 31 Niagara street. Here we stayed two days and visited the Falls. We will not attempt to describe them, but will just say that we often found ourselves standing lost in wonder in looking at what was before us.

We left Niagara on Fifth-day evening for Philadelphia, where we arrived on Sixth-day morning, the 22d, spent one day visiting the Zoölogical Garden, the Exposition, and other places of interest. We met several friends, from all of whom we received a very cordial shake of the hand and kindly greetings. We arrived at Union Bridge, Md., Seventh-day evening, went to the home of our friends Thomas and Mary Russell, spent the night, and on First-day attended Pipe Creek Meeting. It has been twenty-two years since we sat as a family with these dear friends, and we can see that the change has been very great. The children have grown to men and women, the middle-aged have grown old, and the aged have passed away. The feeling of this meeting was one that words cannot express, but as the soul filled up the lips in prayer and speech opened and the oil of love filled our hearts, and we lingered long and pleasantly about the house after meeting; and we are glad to say from what we saw of the meeting, the members present and the surroundings, that we believe Pipe Creek Meeting to be in a healthy condition.

ISAAH LIGHTNER.

Union Bridge, Md., Ninth month 25.

PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

IN the INTELLIGENCER of Ninth month 16 is one of our editor H. M. J.'s interesting letters from England. This letter is mostly devoted to a review of J. W. Rowntree and Arthur Sherwell's new book, "The Temperance Problem." I have no doubt of the great care taken in the compiling the information and statistics therein; yet I feel confident that the information in A. Sherwell's letter, which was received at York while Howard was there, even if statistically correct, would give a wrong and very misleading impression as to the enforcement and effect of the prohibition law in Maine.

One city only (Portland) is mentioned of 50,000 inhabitants, the great State containing probably over 1,000,000. Nearly every one of these places where liquor is sold it is in violation of law. The police, from whom A. Sherwell appears to get his information, must be exceedingly derelict in performing their duty to allow over 300 illegal places for selling intoxicants to carry on their traffic without protest. But the citizens of Portland are as culpable as the police in allowing their laws to be openly violated; and it must be admitted that the public conscience needs a renewed awakening, as it was aroused fifty years ago by the devoted, persistent labors of Neal Dow. I believe Arthur Sherwell has as yet but very limited and one-sided information as to the whole liquor question on this side of the Atlantic. I feel sure he is sincere and earnest in his desire to discover the best mode to diminish the awful demoralization and ruin caused by the liquor traffic. I hope he can stay in this country long enough to examine the question thoroughly and from every point of view, and I think his conclusions will undergo a great change in another year. I think he will find that notwithstanding there are so many places in Portland where intoxicants are sold, yet there is not one-fourth the quantity consumed or one-fourth the drunkenness in that city (in proportion to its population), that there was fifty years ago.

It is asserted by our prohibitionists that nearly every city of over ten thousand inhabitants in this country is controlled by the Liquor League. I do not know how far this is true, but Rowntree and Sherwell are well aware of the enormous influence exerted by the trade in Great Britain. A. Sherwell will find that it is equally great in this country, and the Liquor League uses enormous sums to prevent temperance legislation and to make it ineffective and to discredit it after it is passed; then they exultingly exclaim, "Oh, prohibition don't prohibit!" Now the most sanguine prohibitionist never expected to entirely prevent the sale and use of alcoholic liquor. All laws against crime are prohibitory laws, yet none of them are any more successful than the prohibition of the sale of alcohol. Murder, arson, robbery, etc., go on and increase, notwithstanding all prohibitory legislation. Yet I believe, and I think it can be fairly proved, that prohibition has been more successful in controlling and diminishing the evils of the liquor traffic than any other plan yet tried.

I think the evidence of Neal Dow is as reliable as that of any person regarding the Maine law and its results and enforcement. In 1894, when he was ninety years old, yet a vigorous, clear-headed old man, he said: "The quantity of liquor now sold in Maine in violation of law is not one-twentieth its former volume. In Portland it is within the fact to say that not one hundredth part so much liquor is sold now as was before the law, and the city is twice as large as it was then. I think it a great success."

James G. Blaine (who was never a prohibitionist), said at a great meeting in the city hall, Portland: "Maine is the most prosperous State in the Union; before the Maine law it was the poorest."

There were many distilleries in the State, seven of which and two breweries were in Portland. This law struck them all down and wiped them all out. This was forty-three years ago; an entire generation has grown up in Maine never having seen a licensed grog-shop. The State is entirely changed in character; from being the poorest State in the Union it has become one of the most prosperous. It formerly spent in drink the entire valuation of all its property in every twenty years; now one million dollars a year will more than pay for all the liquor smuggled into the State and sold in violation of the law. The State saves annually directly and indirectly more than $20,000,000, which but for prohibition would be spent, lost, wasted in drink, as in the old rum time.

This was the testimony of Neal Dow five years ago. No other man then living, no man now living has a better right to be believed. He has left a character pure, exalted, above suspicion or reproach.

From religious, unselfish concern for the good of humanity this inspired apostle devoted the greater part of his life, his untiring energy, and his means to this great cause. As I before said, no other plan of restricting and diminishing the liquor curse has been so successful. All plans of license—the South Carolina State control, the Norwegian plan—have failed. I think the public places of cheerful resort, as proposed by Rowntree and Sherwell, would be failures, if any intoxicants are to be dispensed, but if not, there are several such places now being tried with good results.

In 1884, after thirty-two years' experience, the people of Maine engrafted prohibition into their State constitution by a majority of 47,075, the affirmative vote being three times larger than the negative.

DAVID FERRIS.

Wilmington, Del., Ninth month 24.

W. M. JACKSON APPROVED.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

I wish to express my appreciation of the paper by William M. Jackson on "The Living Present" in the INTELLIGENCER of Ninth month 2. Evil is seen in many details, while good, more retiring, is only fully manifest in great movements covering long periods, and it is well to present, as our friend has done, the broad view by which a correct comparison between the past and present can be made.

The improved methods in agriculture, greater facilities in transportation and a vast extension of commerce, are driving from the earth the danger of famine, from which, even down to our own times, millions of people have perished. Medical science is discovering the secrets of the pestilence and is proving that "cleanliness is next to godliness."

My belief is that the consciences of men have quickened with the more rapid means of intercourse and that decisions as to conduct of life are made as justly, now, while the wires are waiting, as a century ago, when days or weeks could be taken to consider questions no more important. Collectively, as individually, there has been great gain. While the people are at school taking lessons in the, as yet, unsolved problems of popular government, selfish and unprincipled men, taking advantage of inexperience and consequent mistakes, seem to triumph. We, as Friends, believing that the seat of spiritual government is in the hearts of men, must believe in the "divine right" of government by the people, and have faith that, under this rule, the ultimate end will be the triumph of good.

Improvement in material conditions helps the spiritual. The enlightened conscience of the world is becoming more and more the guardian of the welfare of the people of all lands, and is now unified by wire and type into an immediate expression impossible in any other age.

HENRY GAWTHROP.

Santa Barbara, Cal., Ninth month 12.

I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways
And what is mine shall know my face.

—Burroughs.

FRIENDS CONNECTED WITH THE ORIGIN OF FOUR UNIVERSITIES.

The American Friend.

It is a remarkable fact that Friends, with a membership of only one hundred thousand in the United States, yet control and manage eight colleges, but it is a fact not so well known, that Friends have been directly or indirectly connected with the founding and development of four great American universities. The first Friend, our founder, believed that there should be institutions to teach "everything civil and useful in creation," and when he spoke those words he expressed clearly, tersely, and broadly the scope of a modern university, and he took a position as sound and broad-based as ever any religious leader took. This idea has never been entirely lost in the ebbs and flows of our two and a half centuries of history, though unfortunately too few of our members have kept within sight of our broad-minded founder, and not seldom have our Friends of different periods proved timorous and fearful of the unrestrained search for truth. The truth which is fundamental in our religious body—viz., that the Spirit of God is still leading men, and the living Christ is still acting upon all responsive hearts—should make us capable of taking a brave and valiant place in the front ranks to-day in the work of interpreting Christianity to our age, and in making modern thought constructive for the truth. So believed the men who helped lay the foundations of the higher institutions of learning of which we shall speak, though they all builded greater than they knew.

Brown University, first called "Rhode Island College," was the seventh American college in order of foundation, and began a precarious existence, with one student, at Warren, Rhode Island, in the year 1765.

In these early days the college was "for the most part friendless and moneyless, and therefore forlorn, insomuch that a college edifice was hardly to be thought of," but in the year 1770 a vigorous contention arose regarding the proper location of the college, almost as many cities claiming it as of old claimed the poet Homer after he was dead. The first suggestion of Providence for its home came from Moses Brown, who joined Friends that same year, and when he once conceived the idea he allowed no obstacle to block this purpose. He headed the movement of the citizens to raise the necessary funds to secure the college, while he and his three brothers took charge of building the necessary buildings and purchasing the land for the same. They decided upon the original home lot of Chad Brown, "the first Baptist elder in Providence." So that Moses Brown could write modestly and with truth to President Wayland, in 1833: "Thou may see that our family had an interest in promoting the institution, now Brown University, besides the purchase of the name by my worthy nephew, Nicholas!" This last remark refers to the donations of money and land made by Nicholas Brown, which secured the name Brown University. It should be added that Stephen Hopkins, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a member of the Society of Friends until 1770, and an attender of Friends' meeting all his life, was chancellor of the corporation all through its early history, and two members of the Society of Friends have been kept on the board of trustees until the present time.

Cornell University, at Ithaca, New York, now one of the foremost seats of learning in this country, was founded by Ezra Cornell in 1868 and endowed munificently. Ezra Cornell's parents were both Friends, and he himself was a member at the time of his marriage, but as he "married out," he was required to make "an acknowledgment of regret," or to be formally excluded from membership. He felt that he could not honorably make the acknowledgment, and so he "continued in suspense" during the remainder of his life. He always attended Friends' meeting, however, and never gave allegiance to any other religious sect. He maintained throughout his life his love and sympathy for the Friends, and he always used the "plain language" with his parents and relatives. He suffered the loss of his membership through the enforcement of a rule which was perhaps the greatest blunder the Society of Friends ever made, and so, as a result, he was technically not a member when the university was founded; but he was nursed a Friend, and his life and character were formed amid Quaker customs and associations, so that Cornell distinctly has a Quaker pedigree, though it now is in the strictest sense undenominational.

Johns Hopkins University, in Baltimore, was founded and endowed by Johns Hopkins of that city in the year 1873, and opened in 1876. It soon became one of the leading universities in America for graduate work, and it probably has done as much as any other institution in our country for the introduction into our universities of European methods of research and study, and for the promotion of profound and exact scholarship.

Johns Hopkins, its founder, was born of consistent and devout Quaker parents, and grew to manhood in their faith. He early showed that he had a remarkable ability as a man of business, and he became one of the great merchants of his city. The overseers of his meeting felt that in a certain feature of his extensive business he violated the letter of the "Discipline," and he was disowned by the Monthly Meeting as a result. He, however, remained attached to the Society of Friends through the rest of his life, and was a constant attender of Baltimore Meeting, contributing regularly to the support of the meeting and for the erection of the meeting-house, and he was buried according to Friends' custom. He was a great reader of good books, a close student of the Bible, which he read daily, and he was a great helper of young men, both in financial and many other ways. Ever since the founding of Johns Hopkins University, Friends have been prominent in the management of it, Francis T. King, James Carey Thomas, Joseph P. Elliott and Francis White being members of the board of trustees. Strangely enough, the three men who were most prominently associated in the foundation of Brown, Cornell, and Johns Hopkins University, viz, Stephen Hopkins, Ezra Cornell, and Johns Hopkins, were all disowned from membership with Friends, and yet they all three maintained their love, their loyalty, and their interest in the Society of Friends in spite of its action toward them, and they were Friends at heart to the end of their lives.

The connection of Friends with Princeton University is much more indirect, and yet the historical association is an interesting one. In the year 1681 the Quakers came into control of New Jersey, and Robert Barclay, the Scotchman, the famous apologist for "the sect called Quakers," was appointed governor of the colony, though he never came over in person.

The appointment of Robert Barclay as governor, and the liberal policy of the government promised by the Quakers, with the assured stability of the colony under such management, went far toward determining the emigration to New Jersey of a large company of Scotch Presbyterians. In 1746 the Presbyterians in the colony founded the College of New Jersey, which was opened first at Elizabeth, afterwards moved to Newark, and finally located permanently at Princeton in 1756, where, under the name of Princeton University, for nearly a century and a half it has carried on its great work. We have no desire to overestimate the association of Friends with these four institutions, and we are aware that in the case of Princeton the connection is at the most remote and indirect, yet we believe that the facts which are here set forth should be generally known, and they show distinctly that Friends have helped to pass on the torch of truth, though they have not always held the staff in their own hands.

Educational Department.

GEORGE SCHOOL NOTES.

SCHOOL opened on the fifteenth of Ninth month with an increased attendance of boys and day scholars. A noticeable feature of the new students is the large number taking advanced standing in classes. The method adopted this year of arranging the classes and giving out books considerably facilitated the work of the first few days.

On the first Seventh-day evening, Prof. George H. Nutt, entertained the students with an interesting account of his summer trip to Cape Cod.

Many of the students attended the Bucks First-day School Union, held at Langhorne, Seventh-day, 23d of Ninth month.

On the evening of the 23d, the Whittier Society gave the following program:—Paper, Ethel Brinton; Oration, "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men," William Smith; Recitation, "The Wayside Inn," Bertha A. Moore; two selections from Paul Lawrence Dunbar; first, "The Spellin' Bee," Marion M. Rice, second, "Angelina," Hamilton Gilkyson; "Comin' thro' the Rye," Ethel Brinton. "The Complete Service" was given in three scenes, participants, Grace Woodman, Margarita Allen, Bessie Foulke, Ethel Brinton, Anna Tyler, Bessie Johnson, Horace Way.

The meeting of the Young Friends' Association on the 30th, was devoted to the subject of Temperance. Mary Taylor read an essay entitled "Recent Phases of the Temperance Question." Fred Griest explained the New York and South Carolina methods of dealing with the liquor question, Elizabeth Andrews read a selection from the "Old Red School House." The chief interest of the evening centred in the discussion of the question, "Resolved—That the granting of the ballot to women would be the surest method of securing Prohibition." The principal participants were Horace Way, Maurice Griest, Ethel Brinton, Bertha Stover, Malcolm Farquhar, Ralph Jackson and Howard Carpenter.

In the reorganization of the Faculty, Prof. Nutt was elected Secretary.

The fine weather has been quite conducive to out-door sports, tennis, base ball and golf occupying the attention of the students and teachers during recreation hours in the afternoon. * *

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.

THE second week of work finds the College in perfect running order, every student assigned to his place and every class fairly at work. The plan in accordance with which the various programs were, so far as possible, arranged before the opening of College, has proved most successful. The friction incidental to preparing and harmonizing so many varied lines of study has thus been reduced to the minimum.

Among the most welcome of the many recent improvements is the introduction of a filtering plant. The water used by the College is drawn from a small stream near Wallingford, and in times past, heavy rains have often made it very turbid, but now a sand filter has been introduced at an appropriate place in the course of the stream. All filters such as the one employed are somewhat in the nature of experiments, but it is hoped that this may prove successful, and thus far it has worked admirably.

The various College organizations have all held meetings and the officers of the literary and other societies have been elected.

President Birdsall has formed a class for the study of the Life and Teachings of Jesus, as shown in the Gospels. This class will meet from 9.30 to 10.30 on First-day mornings, and it is expected to be very helpful. M. S. H.

LITERARY NOTES.

OUR readers may recall the short account in the INTELLIGENCER of the 10th of Sixth month, of "The Man with the Branded Hand," Captain Jonathan Walker, of Harwich, Mass., who was taken, in the waters near Florida, in 1844, with seven fugitive slaves in an open boat, and who was condemned to be imprisoned, and to be branded with the letters "S S" (slave stealer) on his hand. A booklet of forty-six pages has been issued by Frank Edward Kittredge, Albion, N. Y., in which the story of Captain Walker is retold, and Whittier's poem on him, and other matter, is added, with several illustrations.

Captain Walker died in 1878, aged seventy-nine years, at Lake Harbor, near Muskegon, Mich., and a granite obelisk in his memory was erected in the Muskegon cemetery by Photius Fisk, of Boston, a chaplain in the United States Navy.

F. E. Kittredge has also added to his booklet an account of the erection of the monument to Frederick Douglass at Rochester, N. Y., with a portrait of him, and a picture of the monument. (Price 50 cents.)

As the first of the current year's issues of the "Riverside Literature Series," Houghton, Mifflin & Company will publish as Nos. 135 and 136 an annotated edition of Chaucer's Prologue, The Nun's Priest's Tale (No. 135), and The Knight's Tale (No. 136), in two parts, each, paper, 15 cents, net, bound together in cloth, 40 cents, net. These numbers are edited, with Introductions, Notes, and Glossaries, by Frank J. Mather, Jr., Ph.D., Assistant Professor of English and the Romance Languages in Williams College.

The Atlantic Monthly, this month, has an interesting and very ably written article, by H. D. Sedgwick, Jr., on "The United States and Rome." Its thesis is the possibility, if not likelihood, that the Papal church will after a time "control the religious life of the majority of the American people," and while—as is likely to be the case in an article dealing with so great an array of facts—some of the statements seem to us unjustified, the general argument contains many things that are startlingly true.

It may be mentioned here that the ratio of Catholics to the whole population of the United States was in 1783 one in eighty, in 1829 one in sixteen, in 1844 one in fifteen, in 1890 one in ten, or according to some, one in seven.

J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, will issue this fall "Much Ado About Nothing," in Dr. Horace Howard Furness's Variorum Edition of Shakespeare's Works.

The new edition of the History of Bucks County (Pa.), by W. W. H. Davis, of Doylestown, is ready for the press. It will be issued in two volumes of about 700 pages each, at $8. The original work, issued in 1876, has been very scarce for a number of years.

Dr. R. G. Moulton, of the University of Chicago, has revised and enlarged his "Literary Study of the Bible." This is considered by many the most scholarly and convenient book that has yet appeared upon this subject. In the new and enlarged form many attractive additions have been made, and the book is now prepared to serve even a larger public than in its original form. The new edition is in the press. D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

The Macmillan Company publish a notable book by Jenkin Lloyd Jones, the Unitarian minister, of Chicago, editor of Unity, "Jess: Bits of Wayside Gospel." "Amidst the rush and turmoil of this end of the century," says the Outlook, it is a pity that time has not been found, by the few who can do such work, for the writing of more volumes of this character. "Jess" is a saddle horse, and out of that horse's service its master extracts the kind of sermons and genial philosophy in which an exquisite sympathy between the horse and its rider, the charm of the landscape, and a broadening of the religious spirit of man are blended."

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

GOD'S EDUCATION OF MAN. By William DeWitt Hyde, President of Bowdoin College. Pp. xiv., and 252. $1.25. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.)

DELUSCAR'S MERRIS, AND OTHER POEMS. By Horace Deluscar. Pp. xii. and 276. Gay and Bird, Bedford St., Strand, London.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

WOODSTOWN, N. J.—The Woodstown Association held a meeting Ninth month 28, 1899. The president, Mary E. Borton, gave a Bible reading, after which roll-call was responded to with appropriate sentiments. Reports from the different committees were listened to with interest.

The program for the evening was opened by Cornelia Woolman, with a carefully prepared paper on the "Life and Writings of John Woolman," tracing his family down to the present age, and to his one descendant still living. Her paper told of his very early religious impressions, and his earnest solicitude for his young companions. The beautiful example of his life was far reaching, and in reading the quiet pages of his book, you will feel a purifying influence steal gradually over you, from the lesson of its gentle words.

Jessie L. Colson gave a talk on Association work, reviewing what had been done since the Association was organized. She spoke of the papers written and books read by the different committees, also of the gradual and healthy growth of the Society; and concluded with some suggestions for future work.

Joel Borton followed with remarks bearing on the work the Association should do. The meeting then adjourned.

ELIZABETH L. DAVIS, Sec.

BUCKS FIRST-DAY SCHOOL UNION.—This met at Langhorne, (Pa.), on the 23d ult. Reports were received from ten schools, generally of a satisfactory character. A discussion arose as to the wisdom of holding vacations in the First-day schools. Walter Laing and John Wildman thought them a mistake, while Joshua D. Janney, Cynthia S. Holcomb, and others, thought that in many cases the winter vacation was necessary. (The vacations in Bucks Union are usually in winter, on account of bad weather.)

The exercises included a biographical sketch of Henry Drummond, by Anna Comfort, read by Esther B. Justice, and a paper, "Give us this day our Daily Bread," prepared by a member of Buckingham school, and read by Florence K. Blackfan. Teachers' meetings were discussed by M. Ellen Longshore and Sarah J. Reeder. The former said such meetings would be a great help to young and inexperienced teachers. The latter said, "A true teachers' meeting should be a training school for teachers. Such a school would bring about results which could never be realized except by notes compared. Teachers' meetings should be educational, qualified by increased zeal, greater tact and the practice of a higher and greater consecrated intelligence."

The question, "To what extent should disputed theological questions be discussed in the First-day school?" was discussed. Oliver H. Holcomb thought Friends' principles should be thoroughly taught in the schools, and doctrinal points to some extent, but that attention should first be given to teaching the way to right living. Charles M. Stabler said Friends "ought to use discretion in teaching doctrines to children; when a child's mind is too thoroughly indoctrinated, it is more or less likely to result in doubt, bad judgment, or a complete revolution of thought, when he grows up and becomes acquainted with the doctrines held by others. Moreover, is there time, in our First-day schools, to dwell long on old questions of theology, thus crowding out the more practical, vital questions of the day?" George L. Maris approved of teaching the disputed theological questions, not only from the standpoint of Friends but of other denominations also. Every young Friend should have a fixed belief and be able to give a reason for it. He should always be taught, with a broad charity, wherein Friends differ, and why they differ in their views from other denominations. "There never was a time so ready and so ripe for Quakerism as to-day; we want our young people to no longer be on the defensive, but on the aggressive." Remarks followed by Walter Laing, Joshua D. Janney and Elizabeth Lloyd. The latter thought that such questions as the free ministry, silent worship and Friends' idea of salvation could very profitably be discussed in the First-day schools.

The next meeting will be held in Fourth month of next year, at Falls.

MANSFIELD, N. J.—At a meeting of Young Friends' Association, held at the home of Robert Taylor, Ninth month 21, with the president, Thomas S. Gibbs, in the chair, twenty-five members were present.

It saddens us to record the death of another member, Abram Scott, this being the second since our organization less than a year ago.

In answer to the question, "What cause had Friends to make such a radical change in the form of worship at the rise of the Society?" Franklin S. Zellely said in part, that "Friends took strong ground against the prevailing Church of England; they believed that God did not dwell in temples made with hands, but that 'Ye are the temples of the living God.' They believed in essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; and in all things charity. Another strong reason was the prevailing idea in regard to the ministry. They thought as George Fox said, that 'to be bred at Oxford or Cambridge was not enough to qualify a man for the ministry.' Many other and sufficient reasons were given.

"Why do Friends object to singing as a form of worship?" was answered by Peter E. Harvey. "Friends have always considered the proper mode of worship is to obey the injunction, 'Be still and know that I am God.' How can we come into that state of quiet passiveness, when we can hear his voice prompting to good thoughts which lead to good deeds, while we are singing or listening to music? It was not in the strong wind nor in the earthquake or the fire that Elijah the prophet heard the command of the Lord, but in the still, small voice."

Mattie Taylor read an extract from the biography of Whittier.

After a brief silence, we adjourned to meet at Chas. Hancock's, Tenth month 19. M. E. GIBBS, Sec'y.

COMMUNICATIONS.

SEMI-CENTENARY, WOMAN'S MEDICAL COLLEGE.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

THE spring of 1900 will mark the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania, and the Alumnae are looking forward to a fitting celebration of this epoch in the history of the education of women in medicine.

An interesting feature of the commemoration exercises will be the presentation at the next Annual Commencement in 1900, of the portrait of the late Dr. Ann Preston, who was a member of the first graduating class, and subsequently, one of the College Faculty and the first woman to hold the office of Dean. She was also the leading spirit in the founding of the Woman's Hospital of Philadelphia.

Since many of Dr. Preston's old friends are unknown to the present officers of the Alumnae Association, we take this method of informing them of our desire to raise a sufficient sum of money to secure the services of an artist who can reproduce on canvas one whose memory is held in such reverent esteem.

Contributions (which will be duly acknowledged) may be sent to Dr. Clara Marshall, 1712 Locust Street, Philadelphia.

ELIZABETH L. PECK, M.D.,

Secretary of the Executive Board, Alumnae Association,
Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia, Eighth month 22.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

JESSE H. HOLMES, who, after attending the Friends' Summer School at Birmingham, proceeded to Oxford to enter upon his studies, writes from that city, Ninth month 21, a private letter, in which he says:

"My University arrangements were easily made, and are convenient. I have decided to make my work here consecutive until that time [Third month next], and do my Eastern travelling in the spring. I find the leading Friends here cordial and kind. I am having exceptional opportunities of seeing the adult school work here and hereabout. The meeting at Oxford is not strong, but the adult school is bringing in members."

A Friend in Bristol, England, writing (Ninth month 16) to H. M. Jenkins, and referring to his remarks on the summer weather, says: "Yes, this has been an exceptional summer. I have never seen the Downs and the fields about here so brown as they were a few weeks ago. Now, the improvement is wonderful; the grass has come out after the rains almost brighter than in spring, a real emerald green—if emeralds deserve the comparison."

At Newtown meeting (Bucks county, Pa.) on the 24th ult., Martha Schofield was present, and spoke. The Newtown Enterprise says: She mentioned that it had been forty-seven years since she last sat in Newtown meeting, which in her childhood she regularly attended in company with her parents, the late Oliver Schofield and wife. Their home was the farm on the Swamp road now owned and occupied by Samuel S. Tomlinson. For several years, in a room over their spring house, they maintained a school for the benefit of their own and their neighbors' children.

Francis Smith, of Plymouth, England, a Friend, has been visiting Friends in Philadelphia and vicinity, having arrived here on the 20th ult. He left England on the 26th of Eighth month, landing at New York, and has been mostly in New England, spending some days at Portland, where he was interested in inquiring into the operation of the Prohibitory law. His views are favorable to the law, and he thinks that, though liquor is sold secretly in Portland, there is an advantage to the morals of the community in the partial suppression of the traffic, and making it unlawful and disreputable.

Francis Smith is a brother of Stephen Smith, of Pleasantville (near Chappaqua), N. Y.

INTELLIGENCER DOUKHOBOR FUND.

WE have reopened our subscription, as announced in last week's issue, in aid of the Doukhobors, and hope that as many of our readers as find it possible to do so will send us something in aid of the Fund.

Cash, A Friend, $5.00

For Friends' Intelligencer.

IF WE OBEYED.

[To A. T. M., FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER, Ninth month, 16.]

OH yes! we know the Father's love

Dwells with us every hour,

And if we but obeyed its light,

Would feel its wondrous power.

'Tis not because we do not know,

We wander from the right;

It is because we choose the wrong,

And thus obscure the light.

The Father's love points out the way

So clearly all can see,

If only we obeyed its call

How happy we might be.

We surely know "the strength with which

The tiny tendril clings;"

When we tear down a last year's vine,

And cut away the strings,

It clings with such tenacious grasp

We cannot tear it free,

Until each separate tendril's cut

And loosened from the tree.

Just so our warm affections cling

To earthly things we love,

Until our heart-strings must be cut,

Our idol gone above.

If we obeyed all that we know,

How boundless the supply!

We know enough to "mind the light,"

Yes! even thou and I.

Richmond, Indiana.

Anna M. Starr.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

MORNING.

MORNING, morning, and the dawn uprising,
Painting on the sky a changing landscape,

Like some land grotesque of giant Titans

Piling of the clouds a palace glorious.

Morning, yea, forever dawn uprising—

Not above us, may be to the eastward;

Not above us, may be to the westward,

But forever morning and the dawn uprising.

Hope forever in the soul uprising,

Somewhere blazing into glorious morning,

Doubt dispelling, fear defying,

Hope, the morning of the soul, uprising.

EVENING.

The day is done and its sorrows are over,

Its sins are sinned and its dead are dead,

Its lilies that flaunted are crushed in the clover,

Its hopes that blossomed are withered and sped,

But God, who painted the sky of the morning,

And rode aloft o'er the blazing noon,

Satisfieth his beloveds' longing

With a far more precious boon

Than pleasures that fade in the midst of their glory,

Or hopes that spring in the track of the dawn—

His night brings rest to their souls that are weary

When the troubles and cares of the day are gone.

SEELEY ARTHUR.

UNITED STATES TEA INSPECTION.

New York Evening Post.

THE method pursued by the Government Inspectors in determining a standard of tea is as interesting as it is simple. The essential is a fine, discriminating, educated palate on the part of the inspector, and in addition to this the expert must have an acute sense of smell and an eye quick to recognize foreign matter. When a consignment arrives, the importer furnishes samples from packages of the several varieties included in the invoice designated by the collector. Examiners must test all the teas for any foreign matter on the surface of the infusion, and for quality of leaf after infusion. The quality is ascertained by drawing according to the custom of the tea trade, with the weight of a five-cent piece to the cup. Country green teas, imperials, Hysons, coarse leaf, gunpowders, and extra young Hysons are to be compared with Hyson standards, and all the other young Hysons and small leaf gunpowders with the young Hyson standard. The quality must be equal to the standard, but the flavor may be that of a different district as long as it is equal in sweetness. As an illustration, a Teenkai may be equal to a Moyune, but a distinctly smoky or rank Wenchow of sour character must not be considered as equal to the two first mentioned, according to the rules laid down by the government.

In order to test for floating coloring matter, and also for the quality of the infused leaf, a second drawing is made of double the foregoing weight. Before distributing the infusion, examination is made for any floating substance, and after pouring off the water the infused leaf is taken out so as to exhibit the lower side which rested against the cup. Should the mass show a larger quantity of exhausted or decayed leaf or foreign substance than the standard, it is considered inferior in quality, and the tea is rejected, even if it be superior to the standard in some of the qualifications. In greens and Japans particularly, the brightness of the leaf is considered as an evidence of quality. Macao or Canton Congous are compared with the standard for the South China Congou, and brick tea compared with the standard for the district whence it comes. Mustiness or damaged flavor, which is exhibited in certain Canton teas imported for Chinese consumption, is considered as sufficient cause for rejection. Until the establishment of a new standard for Amoy Oolongs, they will be tested for the Foochow standard.

The dust and fannings must be restricted to 10 per cent. when sifted through a sieve of No. 16 mesh made of brass wire. In order that the "needle leaf" and tips may not be confounded with dust, they are returned with the dust for a second and third sifting until separated through a smaller sieve. This course is followed in all Formosa, Foochow, Amoy, Oolongs, Canton teas, Congous, Indies, and Ceylons. Dust and fannings in Japanese teas must not exceed 4 per cent. when tested by a No. 30 sieve of No. 31 brass wire. Before condemning any tea or dust, examiners must sift at least two packages.

Tea is cheaper than any water bottled. By actual measurement over 300 cups of tea can be made from every pound of black tea, which, at the rate of fifty cents a pound, would give six cups for one cent. The choicest tea imported, which can be bought at $1 a pound, would cost the consumer one cent for three cups. Coffee at its present low price is much dearer than tea, as only forty cups can be made from one pound.

Colored Industrial Home, Columbia, S. C.

RICHARD CARROLL, of Columbia, S. C., a colored man, and a minister, is engaged in the establishment of an Industrial Home for colored children, near that city. Land has been secured, "and paid for," 316½ acres, with one seven-room building; it is proposed to erect three cottages, and to open the School, next month, on Thanksgiving Day.

It is proposed to gather in "homeless, uncared children," as many as can be provided for, and educate them, train them, and teach them agriculture and trades.

Richard Carroll is a well-known man in South Carolina, and is cordially approved of by leading white people. The Columbia State says: "Preacher Carroll is much like Booker Washington in thought and utterance, and, like him, aspires to lift up his race. We know him, respect him, and wish him well with his work." The Governor of South Carolina, Gov. McSweeney, and others, endorse him very strongly.

His enterprise has been brought to the attention of FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER, and we have no doubt it is very deserving of aid. He asks for money, tools, agricultural implements, old clothing, etc. He refers in Philadelphia to Dr. A. J. Rowland, 1420 Chestnut street, or to B. F. Dennis, Cashier of the Market Street National Bank.

Women's Degrees in Germany.

WHILE the doctor's degree has been granted in course to a number of women by German universities, a positive innovation has been introduced by the University of Halle (which has all along been the most liberal in its appreciation of the scholarship of the sex) by giving a woman the double degree of doctor of philosophy, and doctor of laws and master of arts, honoris causa. The recipient of this rare honor is Mrs. Agnes Smith Lewis, of Cambridge, England, and it was bestowed especially in recognition of her services as discoverer and editor of the Syrian Gospel palimpsest on Mount Sinai, which she published with the assistance of her sister, Margaret Dunlop Gibson. She made no fewer than four journeys to the famous cloister in the interest of the publication. Mrs. Lewis had also the good fortune to bring to Europe the first sheet of the Hebrew original of the book of Ecclesiasticus, which had been lost for centuries.

Stood His Ground.

"CAN you hollowgrind this razor?" asked a customer who had stepped into a razor-grinding establishment presided over by a hard-headed man with bristling hair and an aggressive look on his face.

"You want me to hollowground it, I suppose?" he said.

"No, sir," rejoined the other. "I want you to hollowgrind it."

"If it's ground hollow ain't it hollow-ground, sir?"

"If you grind it hollow don't you hollowgrind it, sir?"

"Do you think you can come in here and teach me anything about my business? I've been hollowgrounding razors for twenty-five years—"

"No, you haven't. You've been hollow-grinding them."

"Do you reckon I don't know what I do for a living?"

"I don't care whether you do or not. Will you hollowgrind this razor?"

"No, sir, I won't! I'll hollowground it or I won't touch it."

The customer reflected a moment.

"See here, my friend," he said. "Can I have it ground hollow here?"

"Certainly."

And they compromised on that basis, each feeling that he was a little ahead.—[Youth's Companion.]

CURRENT EVENTS.

A DISPATCH from Calcutta on the 26th inst., reports a series of earthquake shocks at Darjeeling in the "hill country," and in that region. Afterward there was a tremendous rain, twenty-eight inches of water falling in thirty-eight hours, and many landslides occurred. Nine European children were reported killed at Darjeeling, and as many such are sent to "the hills" for the hot season, the loss of life is probably greater. About 1,000 acres of tea gardens were destroyed from Jalapaha to Birch Hill. Part of the eastern slopes slipped 3,000 feet. At Phool a bazar was overwhelmed and 200 persons were killed. Twenty-one bodies had already been recovered at Tamsong, in the district of Bustee. The loss of life runs into the hundreds.

REPORTS of military operations in the Philippine Islands continue. The Filipinos recently captured a small United States gunboat, the Urdaneta; the officer in command and nine men was taken prisoner or killed. The vessel was beached and burned. On the 30th ult., the Filipinos sent fourteen American prisoners of war to Manila, and gave them up. They were all "enlisted men"—not commissioned officers. They "looked the picture of health, and were dressed in new Filipino uniforms of blue gingham, and were carrying monkeys and other presents from their Filipino friends." They unanimously praised their treatment, and one said, "we have been given the best the country afforded, including good food and a money allowance."

THE prisoners surrendered by the Filipinos were in charge of three "envoys" who desired to negotiate terms of peace, and brought a letter from Aguinaldo, signed by him as "President of the Republic." General Otis, the United States Commander declined to "recognize" Aguinaldo as head of any civil government. One of the envoys, General Alejandrion, is described in the Associated Press dispatch as "dignified and dispassionate, a keen man of the world." He was educated in Europe, and designed "the remarkable entrenchments" which the Filipinos have been defending. When asked how long his people could "withstand 60,000 American troops," he replied: "Fighting in our way, we can maintain a state of war and the necessity for a large army of occupation indefinitely."

A SHIPWRECK, with serious loss of life and much suffering, occurred last week. The Scotsman (6,041 tons gross; built at Belfast, Ireland, 1895), of the Dominion Line (Montreal and Liverpool), went ashore, owing to mistaking a new light, in the Straits of Belle Isle. She had on board 396 people, of whom 268 were passengers. In landing, ten women and one child were drowned, and it was reported that some perished after landing. The officers behaved well, but the crew, many of whom were rough and vile characters, picked up in Liverpool (on account of the strike of the sailors for better wages), robbed the passengers, breaking open their baggage, etc.

ADMIRAL GEORGE DEWEY, of the United States Navy, arrived in New York harbor, in command of the war ship Olympia, early on the morning of the 26th ult. On the 29th and 30th, extraordinary demonstrations of welcome took place at New York, including a great procession. In an interview with him, on the 26th, he said: "Do I think the Filipinos are fit for self-government? Well, no, not just now. They probably will be in a little time. Many of them are quite civilized and good people." He added that he considered them "more fitted for self-government than the Cubans, and a better people in every way;" saying also, "I do wish the whole business was settled."

DISPATCHES from South Africa report the military activity of the people in the Transvaal Republic and Orange Free State, in preparation for war. There are unconfirmed reports of collision already occurred, and of the seizure of a large sum in gold "in transit" by the Boer government. The English movement of troops seems slow. One report in London says Lord Salisbury does not intend that there shall be a war.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

CURRENT newspaper reports say that Sarah Terry, of Philadelphia, reached her 108th birthday, on the 26th ult. "She lives with her stepdaughter, Mrs. R. E. Fairbrother, at No. 545 North Sixteenth street. She was born in Pemberton, N. J., September 26, 1791." Her father was Stacy Doron, and at his death, when she was three years old, she "was adopted by a Quaker family named Campion, with whom she remained until early womanhood."

—The large number of applications for discharge from the army has caused Secretary of War Root "to caution all department commanders to inquire carefully into all applications." It is announced that it has come to the knowledge of the War Department that "a number of men who have enlisted for the Philippines, regretting their action," have made untrue representations that their families were sick, etc.

—Throughout Bucks and Montgomery counties the crop of apples is big beyond precedent. In many orchards limbs of trees are breaking down under the weight of the fruit. The enormous yield of apples has made them a drug on the market. In many orchards the fruit is allowed to decay where it falls, as the low prices do not warrant the time and trouble of marketing it. More cider will be made the present season than for many years.—Newtown, Pa., Enterprise.

—Of the English crops, this year, a Manchester newspaper says: "The yield of wheat is slightly above the average, though not so good as the exceptionally bountiful crop of last year, and that of barley and oats a little below the average. The average yield of the three cereals for the past decade is: Oats (always the heaviest crop), 39 9-10 bushels to the acre; barley, 33 3-5 bushels; and wheat, 29 4-5 bushels."

—Governor Stone of Pennsylvania has issued a proclamation designating October 20 as Autumn Arbor Day.

—We find it stated that "paw-paws, the wild fruit that grows on the Susquehanna river hills, are plentiful this year. The small trees which bear the paws are prolific and people are scouring the woods for them."

—The Lewiston (Maine) Journal, the newspaper of the late Congressman Dingley, states that Speaker Thomas B. Reed resigned his seat in Congress and retired from public life because he would not support the policy of the Philippine war.

—According to the report of the Indiana State Geologist, the supply of natural gas and oil is giving out. It is now confined largely to a field of less than 150 square miles in area, and wells drilled last November showed a pressure of only 181 pounds, as compared with 264 pounds in 1895. Not long hence, in his opinion, the great industries which have been planted in the natural gas field will be compelled to turn to coal for fuel, but he points out that the local supply of coal is nearly inexhaustible. There are fourteen counties entirely underlain with coal, and a dozen more largely underlain. The estimated total coal tonnage in the State is forty billions, with eight billions of easily workable coal, which would last 300 years.

—The Councils of Philadelphia, on the 28th ult., without a dissenting vote, passed the ordinance to submit to the voters at the general election next month, the question whether or not they will authorize an increase of $12,000,000 in the city debt to provide for the extension of the water supply.

—A despatch from Cripple Creek, Colorado, says that the gold output for that district for September amounted to $1,731,000, surpassing all records. The production of gold in the district from the time of its discovery in 1891 to date is $62,057,292.

—President Diaz of Mexico has been obliged to abandon his proposed trip to Chicago on account of the illness of Mrs. Diaz.

—In an interview at Chicago, on the 20th ult., United States Senator William E. Mason, of Illinois (Rep.), said: "On the floor of the Senate I shall continue my opposition to the war upon the Filipinos. I would sooner resign my seat than treat a dog the way we are treating those people. I am ashamed of my country"

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH 14, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 41.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLI.

THE highest thing that we can say of the teaching of Jesus is that it was one with his life. His teaching rested on his own inner experience. In this inward harmony of holy teaching and living he moved.

MARY ANNE WALLIS. •

From a paper read at the Friends' Summer School, Birmingham (1899), on "Methods of Christ's Teaching."

LINES FROM LANDOR.

OUR brother we believe we must not slay ;
His blood we may not spill, his tears we may.
Alas ! in this wide world how few abstain
From seizing pleasure through another's pain.

—Walter Savage Landor.

FRIENDS IN ENGLAND.

III.

THE ADULT SCHOOLS.

THE "Adult School" work of English Friends is an engagement which must impress very much anyone who gives it attention. The Friends in the United Kingdom number about 18,000, but they have in their First-day schools nearly twenty-nine thousand men and women, and nearly seventeen thousand children, making 45,541 altogether. These are not members, but non-members; practically it is a home mission work.

The mere statement of numbers is impressive, but from other points we get still further views of the magnitude of the work. The extensive and carefully planned buildings which have been erected in many places, especially in London and Birmingham, for the use of these schools; the earnest devotion of many Friends, men and women, often very busy, and of large means, to their direction and teaching, and the importance which the work has assumed with reference to the future membership of the Society itself,—all these are impressive also.

I did not get to see the Adult Schools of London, as I would have wished. The usual hours for rising and breakfast in that great city are not helpful to an arrival at a distant First-day school by 9 a. m. The schools at the Bedford Institute and at Bunhill Fields (where George Fox is buried), are important, but I failed to get to either. I was twice at the adult school, First-day morning, at Westminster, in the class conducted by Percy Bigland,—who must hasten his breakfast in Chelsea, and come by underground train, in order to meet his class punctually. The classes at Westminster occupy several rooms, in a building adjoining the meeting-house. They have, I think, between three and four hundred members. At Bedford Institute, 1898, there were 175 adults and 373 children on the rolls; at Bunhill 577 adults and 226 children; at Croydon 452 adults, at Ratcliff 488 children,—with several other schools of varying size at other points.

At Manchester I accompanied John William Graham to his class. They were studying the Temperance question, and considering especially the influence of "the Trade" in politics. There were 270 adults on the rolls in the several Manchester schools, last year, and 250 children. I also attended the class of Edward Grubb, at Southport, and that of William S. Rowntree, at Scarborough. The work at Southport is comparatively new, having been begun in 1896, and the number on the list at the close of 1898 was eighty. The class were studying a Scripture lesson. Two men were present from other cities—Sheffield and Leeds, perhaps; they were "Sunday" visitors to Southport, and being adult school men at home, came in for a fraternal visit. At Scarborough, also, a Scripture lesson was studied. The list there in 1898 had on it 353 names, adults. The work there has been in progress since 1867. William S. Rowntree is a busy man, the senior partner in a large department store; he must rise early First-day morning to meet his class.

There are such schools generally throughout England, wherever there are Friends' meetings. They are, as already said, practically home missions. They are for adults of both sexes, and for children. They are held primarily on First-day, and mostly in the morning, but meetings relating to the work, social gatherings, etc., are liable to be held also on evenings during the week. The subjects taught have a wide range; in the beginning, a half-century ago, men were taught the very rudiments, reading, writing, and spelling; but in the last twenty years there has been such progress in popular education in England that now the rising generation is better instructed, and men will hardly be wanting in elementary knowledge.

There are classes in the Scripture, reading the Bible itself, others using Scripture lessons, others following some course of reading, others discussing ethical or economic subjects, others—children—in charge of teachers. Various means are employed to get them, and to keep them, interested. Lectures are given, papers are read, lantern-slide and other exhibitions are given, there are excursions, picnics, afternoon teas, and lawn parties, debates on current questions (old-age pensions, the housing of the poor, The Hague Conference), united breakfasts on First-day morning, Christmas dinners, botanical expeditions, etc., etc. Then there are affiliated organizations—savings banks, blanket clubs, book clubs, bands of hope, coal clubs, doctor's clubs, mothers' meetings, peace societies, sick benefit societies, total abstinence societies, employment agencies, etc., etc. In fact the effort is made to provide for the scholars a very large part of all the entertainment, as well as instruction, which they are likely to have time for, or to care for, and thus to keep them within the range of wholesome influences not only fifty-two days in the year, but almost three hundred and sixty-five.

How devoted and persevering many Friends are in this large work may be seen in many places, in the smaller ones and in the larger. At Lincoln, the meeting had been laid down, but it has been revived. The old house has been put in order, and is made a centre for sundry worthy activities. At Sheffield the classes are large; there were 2,350 on the rolls last year, of whom 1,403 were men, 418 women, 529 "juniors."

But in Birmingham, the numbers of the scholars, and the ample scale of the arrangements, are probably most impressive of all. The work in that city was begun in 1845. On the 12th of Eighth month, that year, a meeting was held at the home of Joseph Sturge, the Quaker philanthropist, in Edgbaston (the southern residential suburb), and it was resolved that the work should be undertaken,—the establishment of a school "especially for those who had not been in the way of receiving instruction in other schools." Joseph Sturge is regarded as the father of the work; in 1895, when its semi-centennial jubilee was celebrated, a medal bearing his portrait on one side, and a teacher and scholars on the other, was struck. (He died in 1859.) From 1845 to the present time there has been a remarkable growth. In 1850 there were 282 men and 145 women in the classes; in 1895 there were 3,396 men and 968 women. In 1898 the numbers of adults, both sexes, on the rolls, was 4,816, and of children 4,250, making over 9,000 in all. For the children's classes there were no less than 212 teachers.

This Birmingham work is most energetically and intelligently directed. The men of affairs at the head of it do not manage their own business with more earnestness, more industry, or more system. The principal buildings used are large and well arranged and appointed. The new one, in Moseley road, erected by the late Richard Cadbury, at his own cost, and given for the work, cost some £30,000, or $150,000. It was occupied only a few months ago. It is a model building as to careful planning and excellent construction, and contains many rooms, of various sizes, for all purposes of the work. Had Richard Cadbury lived it would have been in his charge; since his decease, last year, his son Barrow Cadbury directs it.

One of the oldest, perhaps quite the oldest, of those engaged in the work is William White, who celebrated his half century's connection with it last year. He is one of the best known of the citizens of Birmingham, and has been identified for many years with its municipal and business life, serving as alderman, mayor, etc. On the First-day of my visit there (Ninth month 3), I attended the teachers' breakfast at Severn street, and then spent a half-hour in William

White's class, which was engaged in Scripture study. And it may be remarked here that the energy and devotion of the Birmingham teachers are well exemplified in the Severn street schools. The breakfast for them is ready at 7 a. m., and punctually at that hour they sit down together. On the morning of my visit, there were some twenty or more at the table. One of them was George Cadbury, head of the large cocoa manufacturing establishment, and others besides were men with large business, whose week-day engagements are exacting and engrossing. The class-work begins promptly at 7.30, and at that moment teachers and scholars were in their places. If the reader will reflect how much self-denial and devotion this calls for, week after week, he will see what the adult-school work at Birmingham implies.

H. M. J.

NOTES OF A VISIT TO DOUKHOBOR VILLAGES.

Job S. Gidley, of Mass., in The Friend, Phila.

WITH the various belongings necessary for a camping out trip for a week or two, we left Yorkton on the first of Eighth month on our journey over the prairies, which was a new experience to most of us save the drivers; but nevertheless a very interesting and instructive one to us all.

The various paths, or more properly called trails, over which we travel, were very similar in appearance, so that a guide must have good judgment to be able always to take the right one. We were fortunate however in this respect, for our drivers seemed to understand the lay of our land, and always succeeded in bringing us out at the places we desired to reach.

A short distance north of Yorkton we passed a very fine looking field of wheat waving in the sunshine. This lot was a half mile in length, and adjoined our trail. A fine field of oats of the same length was next to the wheat. Both fields looked as though they would yield a good crop.

Trails over the prairies are found leading from place to place, wherever it is the least trouble to make them. Instead of being straight, as one might suppose them to be, judging from the general survey of the country, they are often found winding around on the east side of one swale, and perhaps on the west side of the next, or going along on the south side of this hill and on the north side of another, or wherever it is judged the draught will be made the lightest. Sometimes a fence will be found placed across an old trail that may have been used for many years, by some farmer who had recently "taken up a claim." In such cases the old trail must be given up, and a new one made. The drivers and guides over the prairies understand all these things, and they seem to have a remedy for each and every hindrance.

In one instance our drivers, in order to make a short cut to a village, drove through the "brush," where the young poplars as large as one's arm and ten or twelve feet high were bent down by the neck yokes of the horses, and they seemed to be as much at home going through the "brush," where there was no trail at all, as they were in moving along in the trail on the open prairie.

All the trails of recent date are made by the driving of double teams, and all the wagons being of the narrow gauge pattern, the horses and wheels move along in nearly the same path. This arrangement seemed desirable, except where the soil was of a clayey nature, but in such places immediately after a rain I noticed that the horses would slip more or less on the inclines, which made their traveling somewhat difficult.

The prevailing wood where we journeyed was white poplar and willow, mostly of a small growth, except on or near the rivers. This is owing to prairie fires. The "brush" grows for a few years, then it is killed by fire, and then it takes a fresh start again. We saw very little poplar away from the streams more than six inches through at the butt, and very little as large as even this.

Golden-rod was very plentiful, as was also dwarf sun-flower. In many places the prairies were yellow with it. In one field of oats which we passed these flowers looked quite as prolific as they did in some other places out on the open prairie.

Birds and animals were numerous. Gophers appeared to be the most common. One would often see them just ahead of the horses running along in the trail, and on either side, bobbing their heads up and down. I hit one with my foot while walking along a path near a field of potatoes. We saw one badger, fat and sleek, only a few feet from our carriage.

Birds were quite plenty. Prairie hens and chickens were often seen on the wing. Hawks and crows were quite numerous; the former were seen on the top of dead poplar trees. King-fishers were seen also, which shows that fish abound in the lakes and streams. Plovers were also quite plenty, and as we watched them in their flight, we were reminded of the lines of Sir Walter Scott:

" More stately thy couch by this desert lake lying,
Thy obsequies sung by the gray plover flying,
With but one faithful friend to witness thy dying
In the arms of Helvellyn and Catchedécam."

For the open prairie does look much like a great lake. Very often after we had left the "brush" and entered upon a stretch of open prairie, where one has an unobstructed view for miles, did I hear Ignace Alamanoffsky exclaim, "O beauty! O how beautiful!"

There were many wild ducks also seen upon the lakes and ponds which we passed. In one flock seen near Good Spirit Lake it was estimated that there were more than five hundred. In one village we saw a young crane which had been tamed by the Doukhobors.

There is one crop which grows upon the prairies that is of great value to the Doukhobors, and which costs them nothing in labor to cultivate. This is the berry crop, which grows in abundance. While at East Selkirk we were told that during the strawberry season the Doukhobors would pick about ten bushels of them per day. The season for these berries, however, was about over when we were there. At that time they were picking saskatom and gooseberries. I saw several come into camp with eight or ten quarts each of these, which they sold at East Selkirk for about five cents per quart. Red raspberries were also plenty. In many places we saw quite a large number of women and children gathering these, and strawbereies also, for the different villages visited beyond Yorkton. Being so much farther north than East Selkirk, the strawberry season is later than at the former place. We were often supplied with both kinds of these berries by the Doukhobors, which was a great treat to us, and we always made it a point to leave something in return at each place as a full equivalent that may be more substantial to them than the berries.

On our first day out from Yorkton we saw a man near the trail who held up a paper as though he wanted some information. Our driver stopped, and he was asked what was wanted. He handed us the paper, upon which was written, in English, information to the effect that a certain man whose name I have forgotten had lost two horses and a colt, which the owner had heard nothing from for about a week.

The man proved to be a Russian, who could make his wants known to our interpreter. He wanted to reach a certain farmer living several miles away. Our driver happened to know where this man lived, so that by a little help from our driver and interpreter, the stranger was directed which trail to take, and he left us and went on his way, I doubt not with rejoicing. We were also glad to be able, in a small way, to assist a stranger in a strange land.

We reached Jacob Wurz's soon after midday, where we were kindly received, and as it had begun to rain, we were doubly glad that there were good roofs over us and our horses and carriages. After we had partaken of a substantial lunch, the rain had subsided, and we proceeded onward, reaching the first village of Doukhobors on White Sand River, late in the afternoon. Just before reaching this place, however, we saw not far away, on the right of our trail, ten Doukhobor men mowing. The interpreter and I alighted and went to interview them, and the rest of our company drove on to the village.

All of these men were in Halifax last winter, and they all appeared glad to see me once more. Ignace Alamanoffsky told them that I was also a farmer, and had come two thousand miles or more to see them. They seemed grateful that one had come so far to visit them.

I tried one of their scythes, which was rather peculiar; they are about three feet in length and are attached to a stick which is perfectly straight, in the middle of which is fastened only one nib or handle. This is made by taking a stick about a foot and a half in length, having about half of its thickness cut out in the centre, and then bent around the scythe stick, and the ends fastened securely with a string. The first stroke or two I took with this novel mower seemed a little awkward; but I soon got used to the hang of the scythe, and had no trouble in cutting the grass, for the scythe was a keen one.

The Doukhobors have a novel way of sharpening these scythes, when dull. Instead of using a grindstone, they place them upon an anvil, and pound the edge with a small hammer. I saw one young man doing this out on the prairie where there were a number of men mowing. After the hammer has been applied, they use a whetstone, in the same way as a rifle is used. They keep their scythes apparently as sharp as though they were ground.

After leaving the hay field, on our way towards the village, we saw a man plowing with three oxen, having two lads to drive them. Two of the oxen were yoked together and attached directly to the plow, while the third was harnessed somewhat like a horse, and put ahead of the others as a leader. One boy drove the yoke and the other the single ox. After holding the plow awhile we proceeded towards the west, to reach the village, where we joined the rest of our party.

Previous accounts have sufficiently elaborated our crossing the Assiniboine River; but our journeyings along the Swan River are worthy of a more extended account. After reaching Swan River and partaking of our dinner somewhat after the middle of the day, our friends the Jews, to whom allusion has already been made, took leave of us, as they were quite anxious to reach a Jewish settlement a short distance north of Thunder Hill, and return to Yorkton before the end of the week. One of the men was president, and the other secretary, of a fund called "The Baron de Hirsch Fund," the amount of which is $2,000,000 or more; the interest is to be given to Jews who settle in Canada. These people were taking some of the income of this fund to assist this colony of Jews. Before leaving they expressed satisfaction in having joined our company, and we bade them farewell, desiring that they might be successful in performing the remaining portion of their journey.

This Doukhobor village is in two sections. The eastern portion contains eleven houses and one hundred and twenty-two persons; the western, about half a mile further up the river, through the "brush," contains eight houses and one hundred and two persons.

The interpreter and I went alone to this section, to give notice to the villagers of our visit, and that we would like as many of them as were desirous of so doing to go back with us to the east section. Most of those who were at home and able to go accompanied us on our return. Very soon there was quite a large gathering near one of their houses on the hillside. After an impressive season of silent waiting, E. H. V. [Eliza H. Varney] appeared in supplication, "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." After she had finished, Ignace Alamanoffsky gave its interpretation, after which the Doukhobors, with tearful eyes, all bowed themselves to the earth.

Testimonies were then offered by E. H. V. and myself, which were interpreted in parts, that is a sentence or a few sentences at a time. These words also seemed to be received with grateful hearts, and we were made to rejoice in the Lord for all his benefits to the children of men.

Soon after the meeting closed, preparations were made for our crossing the Swan River. The regular place for fording the stream was a mile or two further down the river, and our drivers both thought that it would be almost impossible for their horses to draw the carriage up the steep bank on the other side; but the Doukhobors kindly offered their services, and removed all the goods from the wagons, then unhitched the horses and attached ropes to the empty wagons, and pulled them across the river and up the bank on the other side.

The drivers rode on horseback across the stream. The rest of our company and all our baggage that had been removed from the wagons were taken over on a raft of logs, made by the Doukhobors for such purposes. All was accomplished without accident, and our horses were saved two or three miles drive by the kindness of our friends.

Quite a number of Doukhobors gathered on the south bank of the river, watching us as we were moving slowly over the water, and one might conclude by their animated countenances they were wishing us God speed.

WEST CHESTER CENTENNIAL ODE.

Read at the Hundredth Anniversary of the Borough of West Chester, Pa., Tenth month 11th.

BY JOHN RUSSELL HAYES.

I.

HERE in the golden waning of the year,
When vale and wood are wrapped in drowsy peace,
And languid vapors dim the distant hill,
When from his toil the farmer finds surcease,
And 'mid the orchard's shadows cool and still
The robin twitters clear,—
We come from clangorous cities far away,
From quiet villages, from peaceful farms,
Long wandering children to the Mother's arms,
Here at the tranquil ending of her Century gray.

II.

The sickle and the scythe are laid away,
The sheaves of harvest long are gathered in,
And corn-shocks crown the hill in rustling row;
The wheat is stored in granary and bin,
The ample mows are filled to overflow
With sweet and odorous hay,
Rich Autumn reigns o'er field and wood and stream,
The Queen of peace and of abundance she;
No troubles vex her deep tranquillity,
No discord mars the placid glory of her dream.

III.

The golden-rod is drooping by the road,
From bended boughs the ruddy apples hang,
The aster and the crimson sumac gleam
By fields where late sweet harvest-carols rang;
And up the old barn bridge the latest team
Hath labored with its load.
What happier season than the Autumn old,
What fairer time than ripe October days,
To turn upon the Past our loving gaze
And hail our centuried Town with greetings manifold!

IV.

It is a precious and a touching hour,
An hour of mingled happiness and tears;
We stand to-day and see a Century's close.
From out the silence of those hundred years
Comes, like the fragrance of a faded rose,
Old Memory's subtle power.
The Future looms before us dim and vast;
With prayerful hopes we face a Century's dawn,
With fond regret we mourn a Century gone;
This sacred moment links the Future with the Past

V.

Let joyous music greet this stately day,
 Let oratory play its noble part,
 While happy children with united voice
 Uplift high harmonies that touch the heart ;
 Let all the grateful multitude rejoice ;
 Let tears their tribute pay.
 The glory that we feel, the dear regret,
 Must make of this a memorable hour ;
 We yield unto its pathos and its power ;
 The joy of this Centennial Day let none forget !

VI.

How strange it seems, and quaint, and far away,
 The little hamlet by the old cross roads !
 The log-built school ; the ancient inn, "Turk's Head" ;
 The humble, low-roofed houses, the abodes
 Of sturdy village worthies born and bred
 Beneath King George's sway.
 Remote and dim as half-forgotten dreams
 It fades into the legendary Past ;
 A glamour and a spell are round it cast ;
 So strange,—so strange and quaint and far away it seems !

VII.

West Chester lies historic regions near ;
 From yonder hills she heard the thunders roll
 Where surged and seethed all day the fiery flood,
 Where that young champion pure and high of soul,
 The knightly Lafayette, gave of his blood.
 And in a later year
 These streets were filled with clamor and acclaim
 When that great son of France stood here once more,
 Rehearsed the battle and each scene of yore,
 And left behind the splendor of a deathless name !

VIII.

West Chester's founders lie in peaceful sleep,
 Her worthies rest beneath the ivied grass ;
 Across their graves the sweet wild roses run
 And give their balm to all the winds that pass.
 Long silent are those gray heads every one,
 But still their children keep
 Their honest wisdom and their virtues strong ;
 And much that beautified those quiet lives
 In gracious souls among us still survives,
 Like fine and far-borne echoes of an ancient song.

IX.

Here by the green heart of the countryside,
 Close to the pleasant dales and wooded hills
 That border on the beauteous Brandywine,—
 Sweet stream that "dallies with its hundred mills,"—
 By meadow-lands where browse the placid kine,
 And calm and peace abide,
 Our sires strayed not from Mother Nature's arms,
 Lost not their contact with the wholesome earth
 Where sterling virtues ever have their birth ;
 Fresh strength they drew from these encircling fields and farms.

X.

What well-known sights the wanderer doth behold
 As once again his boyhood he renews,
 And looks on many an old remembered place,
 Though mellowed now and touched by Time's soft dews !
 Once more in meditation doth he pace
 Each avenue of old ;
 And yet he sees no more in yonder street
 The ancient hostelry once standing there,
 The "White Hall" inn, nor famous old "Black Bear," Nor the "Washington" that stood where here to-day we meet.

XI.

And as each old-remembered haunt he sees
 He thinks of those brave lads who fought the fires
 In former days, and whose successors yet
 Are brave and true as were their valiant sires ;—
 Let none in this memorial hour forget
 The honor owed to these !

And looking back he seems to see once more
 The old-time schools that gave our Town its fame ;
 For Bolmar, Evans, Gause, and Wyers,—each name
 Calls up green recollections of the days of yore.

XII.

In those old times of cherished memory
 Along these quiet streets the forms were seen
 Of many a gifted, many a gracious one :
 Here often passed with wise and pensive mien
 The Nestor of our science, Darlington ;
 And from the polar sea
 Came he whose white-haired sire is with us yet ;
 Here cultured Miner dwelt, and honored Bell,
 And Worthington, and Haines ;— thou knew'st them well,
 Old Town ; their precious names we may not soon forget !

XIII.

Nor were there wanting in a later day
 Those who by gifts and culture stood apart,—
 The sturdy Lewis, of a learned line ;
 The courtly poet-scholar Everhart ;
 Good Father John, the widely-loved divine ;
 And noble-hearted May,
 Sweet old-time gentleman of life serene ;
 Hickman, the brilliant and the eloquent ;
 Futhey, in whom the law and letters blent ;
 And Townsend, he of thoughtful brow and gentle mien.

XIV.

And here our Chester County poets came,
 Twin stars of song and brothers of the lyre,—
 Taylor and Read. They roam no more, alas,
 In Old-World paths, nor chant with lyric fire !
 One sleeps beneath the quiet Longwood grass ;
 Old Kennett keeps his fame,
 And sacred are the groves of Cedarcroft.
 Nor less endeared is Read, whose passionate heart
 Found two-fold voice in poetry and art
 Rich as his native Chester Valley deep and soft.

XV.

These we remember well, and many more ;
 In memory's vision once again they rise
 To speak the glory of departed hours.
 We gaze about us here with misty eyes,
 For like the odor of immortal flowers
 On some enchanted shore,
 The fragrance of the Past is strong to-day ;
 Old voices call across the vanished years,
 Old faces rise through consecrating tears,
 Old names resound from out the bygone hours and gray.

XVI.

And now while Autumn spreads her golden tide
 Across old Chester County's happy vales,
 Beside our stream of beauty, Brandywine,
 And each green township's fertile meads and dales ;
 While soft October suns serenely shine
 O'er Chester Valley wide,
 Let us, the children of this peaceful shire,
 And heritors of this beloved old Town,
 With consecrating rites the Century crown,
 With ceremony high and song of stately choir !

XVII.

O let us not forget our noble Past,
 Nor lose our fathers' virtues strong and true,
 Heirs as we are of old simplicity !
 Let us go forth to meet the Century new Remembering this solemn jubilee
 While life's sweet days shall last !
 And this high hour we ever consecrate
 With reverent hearts, unto our God above,
 Who rules with His all-wisdom and His love
 Each happy home of man, each commonwealth and state.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 43.—TENTH MONTH 22.

THE HOUSE OF OMRI.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Let not him that girdeth on his armour boast himself as he that putteth it off.—I. Kings, xx., 11.

Scripture Reading, I. Kings, xvi., 15-34.

OMRI was elected to the throne of Israel by the army, which, at the time of the assassination of Baasha, was engaged in the siege of one of the Philistine towns. After a brief period of civil war against other claimants he succeeded in establishing his authority on a firm foundation. He was obliged, however, to assume a burden of almost constant warfare against Benhadad, king of Damascus—a war begun at the instigation of Asa, king of Judah. Although the king of Israel proved himself an able general, the results of the contest were, on the whole, adverse to Israel. Several towns were surrendered to Syria, and certain special privileges were granted to Syrian merchants in Israel. From the inscription on the Moabite stone, we infer that Moab was reduced by Omri to subjection and tribute—a dependent state from which it had revolted in the troubled times following the accession of Solomon.

One act of great importance was the founding, during this reign, of the new capital at Samaria. Since the time of Jeroboam the capital had been located at the unimportant town of Tirzah, not far from the upper Jordan valley, on the west. Omri purchased the hill Samaria, not many miles from the ancient capital at Shechem, and added to its natural strength fortifications which rendered it almost impregnable. Even those masters of the art of war, the Assyrians, were only able to capture it after a three years' siege. The judgment of the historian on the reign, as a whole, is an unfavorable one. "Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the Lord, and did worse than all that were before him. For he walked in all the way of Jeroboam, son of Nibat, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin" (I. Kings, xvi., 25-26).

Ahab, the son and successor of Omri, continued the policy of his father and improved upon it. He built cities and palaces (I. Kings, xxii., 39); he carried on the war with Syria with courage, and with partial success; he supplied a large force to resist the advance of the conquering Assyrians; and he made friendly terms with most of the nations about him.

At the beginning of his reign he seems to have recognized the king of Damascus as his over-lord, and to have acquiesced in a demand for heavy tribute and humble submission. But when messengers came from Benhadad imposing still more degrading conditions, the king roused himself and answered in terms of defiance. To the threats of the oppressor he returned the famous answer, magnificent in its simplicity and self-restraint: "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." In this defiance council and prophets alike were with him, and doubtless the people as well, for the attack on the Syrian invader was made with hearty good-will, and he was routed in two great battles, so that for a time conditions were reversed, the captured cities being returned to Israel, and certain quarters in Damascus being set aside for the merchants of the victorious kingdom.

It was probably at this time (854 B.C.) that the soldiers of Israel and those of Damascus found themselves fighting in the same ranks against a common foe. Assyria had never surrendered her ancient claim to the lands lying along the Mediterranean. About the time of the accession of Omri (889 B.C.) Assyria began a new career of conquest under the famous Asshur-nasir-pal. His reign was largely given to the conquest of Babylon, and of the various mountain tribes near the borders of his kingdom, and to the strengthening of the internal resources of his country. His successor, Shalmaneser (II. 860-825 B.C.), found himself free to extend his conquests farther to the west. It was this advance upon them that led to union among the warring Semites of Syria and Israel. A great battle was fought at Karkar, in which the allies were defeated, though Shalmaneser does not seem to have followed up his victory at that time by any further invasion. We learn these facts from the Assyrian monuments, where the names of Ahab and the king of Damascus are given in the list of the allies who were defeated at Karkar. The invasion is not mentioned in the Bible, so the exact chronology of events cannot be determined. At least one authority places the invasion of Shalmaneser in a later reign.

One important phase of the policy of Ahab remains to be mentioned—that with neighboring nations. In this he returned to the policy of Solomon, contracting many alliances. The most important of these was his marriage with Jezebel, daughter of the king of Tyre (I. Kings, xvi., 31). With her was introduced into Israel the full ceremonial of Baal-worship, with all its degrading rites and practices. It would even seem that some general persecution was directed against the worshippers of Jehovah (I. Kings, xviii., 4). The king himself continued in some measure to patronize the home religion (I. Kings xxii., 6), but he permitted the Phœnician worship to hold an equal or superior station.

Another alliance of importance was the marriage of the daughter of Ahab with Jehoram, son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah (II. Kings, viii., 18), thus terminating, for a time at least, the long strife of the two sister nations.

The withdrawal of the Assyrian arms after their victory at Karkar gave opportunity for the renewal of the war between Israel and Damascus. Now, as before, the strife concerned itself with certain trans-Jordanic cities, which had been seized by the Syrian king. The armies met at Ramoth. Ahab was accompanied in the battle by his ally, the king of Judah. The battle went against Israel, and king Ahab was slain.

The reign of Asa in Judah was followed in turn, as already indicated, by that of his son, Jehoshaphat (I. Kings xxii., 41). These two reigns are set down in the Bible as, on the whole, satisfactory to Jehovah, though "the high places were not taken away." Edom, which had been in revolt, was subdued. Jehoshaphat attempted to renew the commerce carried on by Solomon with the east by way of the Red Sea, the ports being in his lands ; but his ships met with wreck and he did not repeat the venture.

The really striking event of the reign of Ahab was the appearance among the prophets of the figure of Elijah. His part in the affairs of the kingdom will be the subject of our next lesson.

THE EDUCATION OF WOMEN.

From President (Caroline) Hazard's Inaugural Address at Wellesley College.

It must always be remembered that men and women are not a different order of beings. They find their fullest and completest development together. The order of nature does not change, yet Nature's law is growth, and with that growth the position of women has changed and with that change the cultivation of the individual becomes more important. The problem is not simply that of bringing children into the world, but what kind of children shall be born, what kind of a mother shall be educated ; or if the highest development of motherhood is denied her, how shall she take her place in the world, a useful and honored member of the community, having children of her spirit? For I take it the eternal feminine is simply this. It is the power of love which has its throne in a good woman's heart. Call it altruism, if you like, call it the mother sea, found a philosophy or a system of speculation upon it—it is simply this endless capacity of love and devotion which Mary of Bethany showed when she sat at Jesus's feet. . . .

The soul is the supreme power always. To enlarge its kingdom, to bring warring elements under its control—this is the supreme task of education. Intellectual knowledge is so much dead matter until it is vitalized by a union with the soul's wisdom. . . .

It is because I believe with all my heart in the holiness of life that I stand here to-day. I believe that women have an increasingly important part to play in that life. With enlarged opportunities come increased responsibilities—responsibilities as yet unadjusted to unaccustomed shoulders. It is to cast my mite into the treasury of the world's experience that I come. Wellesley has always stood for the high and ideal things of life. It is because I believe in divine life among men, in the direct and personal connection of each soul with its Maker, that I dare to take up the great work you are committing to my care. Humanity without divinity is of the dust that perishes. Humanity joined to divinity can compass the impossible. Therefore on this day, at this solemn hour of accepting a trust, I speak not of knowledge, wide and profitable as is that great field, but I speak of wisdom, the gift of heaven, which must descend like gentle rain to fructify and fertilize, or there can be no harvest fit for the nourishment of man. And so I take what you give me, promising with divine assistance to be faithful to the trust.

ALMOST any man can think and talk like a philosopher under ordinary circumstances ; but to act like one in a great emergency requires extraordinary will and character.—Harper's Bazar.

THE FOLDED HANDS.

LONG ago, in that quaintest of old German cities, Nuremberg, there lived two friends, Franz Knigstein and Albrecht Durer. Both wished to be artists, and both were sent to the studio of a painter to serve their apprenticeship in art. They studied and worked patiently and earnestly, but as time went on it was seen that while one had genius, the other had only talent and a love for art.

One day the two friends planned to make an etching of the Christ, and each bent his best thought and energy to the work. Their task finished, they compared the result of their labors. Albrecht's picture was a masterpiece of beauty and pathos, while that of Franz, though true in drawing and details, was yet cold and lacking in feeling.

Both men saw the difference, and while they stood in contemplation of the two pictures, Franz folded his hands in resignation and, his heart almost breaking with disappointment and his voice choking, said :

"Albrecht, my friend, the good Lord gave me no such good gift as this of yours. Be you artist of Nuremberg and I—I will do some plain, homely work somewhere——"

"Stay, Franz ; be still one moment !" cried Albrecht, seizing his pencil, and while his companion still waited patiently, his hands folded together, Albrecht drew a few lines and showed the sketch to his friend.

"Are those my hands? Why do you draw them?" asked Franz.

"Those hands may never paint a picture, but they can certainly make one," said Albrecht. "I have faith in those hands, my friend. They will go to men's hearts in days to come."

And the prophecy was a true one, for into the world of art has gone the picture of Albrecht Durer's "Folded Hands," the hands of his brother artist, who so bravely surrendered his heart's dearest wish, believing that God, in denying him artistic genius, had still some other work for him in the great world.—[Selected.]

CONSECRATED WORK.—"All noble work is consecrated work. It involves sacrifice, self-denial, pain ; it requires endurance. It may be wrought in obscurity, and over its victories no song of triumph may be raised. But if the worker love it, and his toiling is hallowed by sincerity, by generous impulse, by unselfish devotion to others' welfare, the work will be its own reward."—Harper's Bazar.

AN index or alphabetical catalogue of all the words and also a chronological account of the transactions in the Bible was first made under the direction of Hugo de St. Caro, who employed as many as five hundred monks upon it, 1247. It was based on one compiled by Anthony of Padua. Thomas Gibson's "Concordance of the New Testament" was published in 1535 ; John Marbeck's "Concordance" (for the whole Bible) in 1550. Cruden's was first published in London in 1737. The latest was published by James Strong in 1894. It is the most complete, and is expensive.—New York Tribune.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH 14, 1899.

A SYMPTOM, NOT THE DISEASE.

So much has been said about the trial of Dreyfus that the subject may seem threadbare. Yet we doubt whether in some of its aspects there have been such clear and definite explanations that a proper understanding of it has really been had. In every such case there is a coating, a veneering, of the conventional, the superficial, beneath which one must go for truth.

The extraordinary perversion of truth and justice which the ruling powers of France,—not so much the Government of the day as the forces which stand behind all public action,—brought to pass in the proceedings against Dreyfus from 1895 to 1899, are a symptom, not the disease itself. They are symptomatic of the malady from which France suffers.

What, then is this malady? Stated briefly, it is that from which all nations suffer, some more acutely than others,—the lack of real and practical Christianity. This lack appears in France, as elsewhere, in different particulars, but we here speak only of the one whose relation to the Dreyfus case is most definite—namely, the surrender of the public conscience to military ideals. France is given over to worship of the "glory" which it is hoped may be gained in war. Upon this altar—most unholy, indeed—she offered up truth and justice in the case of this accused captain, and however evil the act appeared, however completely its naked absurdity, its want of reason and of common sense, stood disclosed, still the demand that the war god have his sacrifice was conceded, and the falsity, the folly, the utter imbecility of thus dealing with a question of right and wrong, were all disregarded.

We are quite aware that other explanations may be given of the Dreyfus affair. We are quite as confident that this is the one which goes nearest its centre. If the people of France had not, for centuries, been taught to cherish above all the ideal of their national prestige in war, if they had not been fed to sickness with the stories—largely false—of the "glory" which Napoleon the First achieved, if they had not renounced the simple and plain teachings of the Christianity which they nominally held, then they would no more have sacrificed Dreyfus than they would have perpetrated any other offense against the common conscience of man. The French people are like other people in essential respects. The "one blood" which flows in all men's veins makes all akin' and all alike are prone to evil, yet capable of good. The French are not by nature an unjust or perverse people, more than other men and women in other lands. But, from different causes, they have especially fallen under the military influence. It has possessed them far beyond the point of self-control. They have been unable, many times, to see with the eye of sanity its cruelty, its hollowness, its antipathy to the real welfare of man. There are peaceable people in France, and some of the most generous, the most courageous, the most honorable; but the voices of these are but as "the sparrow on the housetop, the owl in the desert," beside the beating of the war drums, the blowing of bugles, the clamor and pomp and circumstance by which war and war-making are kept in vogue.

The condition of any country thus possessed is pitiful. It remains to be seen whether France can throw off her malady. In 1685 she expelled her Huguenot people, and never has made good the loss. In the wars of Louis XIV. she established the tradition of aggression upon her neighbors, and laid the foundation for enmities that survive to the present day. In her Revolution of 1789 she unchained passion to displace justice. In the day of Napoleon the First she ravaged Europe until every other nation of Europe united against her, and she sacrificed her own sons until the country was exhausted. In the time of Napoleon the Third, she fatuously yielded to his profligate and corrupt rule, and was shipwrecked by it through his war of 1870. All this is a chapter in which military mania has replaced the practice of the Christian precepts. If they could have been kept in sight, if they could have been but measurably respected by the French people, none of these things from 1685 to 1899 could have occurred with anything like the mad and destructive force which characterized them.

Thus, we say, the affair of Dreyfus, and all its accompanying features of evil, are a symptom merely. They have commanded wide attention, but it would indeed be a pity if their real relation to conditions in France were not perceived and understood. When Christianity is sacrificed to militarism what may we not expect?

IN the "Negro Problem," serious as it is, one great cause of difficulty is the want of good information, and, yet great efforts are made to supply this, and if we did but avail ourselves of it, we should be vastly better qualified to speak. Here, for example, is the monthly magazine published at the Hampton School, Virginia—the Southern Workman and Hampton School Record. The number before us—that for the present month—is filled with sensible and judicious articles, all of them calculated to improve the capacity of the reader to understand the situation of the colored people. There is, especially, an excellent report of the Conference held at the School in the Seventh month. We purpose printing some part of the papers read at it.

AN important thing, Dr. Andrew D. White says (in his letter to Dr. Magill, published in the INTELLIGENCER last week), is to discountenance the sort of journalism which lives by providing sensation,—reports likely to provoke hostile feelings between nations. This is a most timely and pertinent suggestion. Would that it were well acted on!

Dr. White adds that this sensational brewing of international hatred "is rampant, especially in France and the United States." Is every reader of these lines clear of supporting or encouraging it?

MARRIAGES.

GARRETT.—CLARK.—Tenth month 5, 1899, at the home of the bride's parents, Henry and Lydia Clark, Unionville, Pa., under care of London Grove Monthly Meeting, Abbie Clark and Howard, son of Amos and Anna Garrett, of Willistown, Chester county, Pa.

HENDRICKSON.—BEARDSLEY.—At Hunt, N. Y., Sixth month 27, 1899, Charlotte S. Beardsley and Richard Hendrickson, son of Benjamin E. and Hannah H. Hendrickson, of Washington, D. C.

DEATHS.

BARR.—At her home, near Winchester, Frederick county, Va., Ninth month 30, 1899, Sidney Barr, wife of the late Robert Barr, and daughter of the late Abel and Rachel Jackson; a member of Centre Preparative and Hopewell Monthly Meeting, in the 72d year of her age.

She was left a widow, many years ago, with four small children to raise and educate, all of whom survive her and deeply feel the loss of so loving a parent. She also leaves a brother and sister, both her seniors in years, who have homed with her for many years, and who are now left in the decline of life without the care of one who has kindly given them a home.

B.

DUTTON.—In Norristown, Pa., Ninth month 28, 1899, Simeon M. Dutton, aged 70 years.

[He was formerly proprietor of flour mills at Radnor and other places, but had lived retired for a number of years.]

EDWARDS.—Ninth month 3, 1899, Pennock Edwards, for many years an interested attender of Race Street Meeting, Philadelphia, aged 76 years.

HAIGHT.—At Magnolia, N. J., Tenth month 6, 1899, Jane S. Haight, in her 80th year. Interment at Poughkeepsie, New York.

HEALY.—At Portland, Oregon, Tenth month 6, 1899, Rachel W., widow of Joseph Healy, formerly of Philadelphia, Pa., in her 88th year.

LONGSHORE.—In Lisbon, Ohio, Sixth month 2, 1899, Mary Longshore, widow of William Longshore, and daughter of Thomas and Ann Raley, in her 82d year; a member of Salem Monthly Meeting of Friends.

LYTLE.—At the residence of her brother, John J. Lytle, West Moorestown, N. J., Tenth month 7, 1899, Hannah Lytle, in her 85th year.

MORRIS.—At Rogers, Ohio, Ninth month 23, 1899, Albina Morris, wife of Samuel Morris, and daughter of Thomas and Ann Raley, aged 67 years; a member of Salem Monthly Meeting of Friends.

NEEDLES.—At his late residence, in Baltimore, Md., Tenth month 3, 1899, John A. Needles, aged 71 years; a member of Baltimore Monthly Meeting.

He was a son of the late John Needles, an esteemed minister.

WOLLASTON.—At the residence of her nephew, T. Ellwood Wollaston, New Garden, Pa., Ninth month 16, 1899, Amy Wollaston, in her 91st year; a member of Wilmington Monthly Meeting.

IN the issue of last week (the 7th), the death notice of Hannah Henry Ellis should read, "She was a daughter of the late Thomas C. Sterling, of Trenton, N. J.," instead of "a daughter of James Sterling."

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

THE new building for the Friends' Home, at Newtown, Pa., is progressing to completion, and will be "practically finished," it is stated, by the end of this month. Judge Edward M. Paxson, who is erecting the building as a gift to Bucks Quarterly Meeting, and a memorial to his parents, is collecting a library, which he proposes to place in it.

The Meeting for Sufferings of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, Arch Street, at their meeting last month, adopted the following minute:

"Two members of the Committee to assist the Doukhoborts gave some interesting information in regard to these people derived from a recent visit among them. Owing to the lateness of their arrival, the scarcity of stock and implements, and the cutting off of some of their crops by an early frost, they will be largely dependent on the contributions of the charitable for the means of support for the coming winter. The Committee were encouraged to continued exertion on their behalf, trusting that the liberal minded among our own members and others may be induced to give further contributions for their help."

THE GERMAN FRIENDS AT MINDEN.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

ALL of August and a part of September we spent in a cycling trip through Germany, Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland. While crossing from the Harz mountains over into Holland, we stopped over in Minden, near Hanover, and had a delightful visit with Max Rasché, the correspondent of the Society of Friends there. We found him with a friend, taking the usual afternoon coffee, and were invited to join with them; afterwards we walked and sat a while in the lovely garden back of the house. The whole atmosphere of the place seemed very "friendly." Friend Rasché was preparing to start the next morning for the Harz mountains to spend his vacation in a walking trip.

We wheeled back into the centre of the city and saw the meeting-house. It is a plain, private house, noticeable only because of the double steps. The meeting is held every First-day morning, in a small room in the third (German, second) story, furnished in a simple manner with a stove, table, and plain benches to accommodate perhaps fifty persons. The Frau, who lives in the house and showed us the room, remarked that the numerous, beautiful flowers, which were in the windows, were removed each First-day morning, just before meeting. We regretted that we did not reach the city on First-day, so as to meet others of the Society in Minden.

B. F. and E. W. BATTIN.

Jena, Ninth month 23.

THE United States Government pension roll contains 991,519 names.

LENGTH OF MEETINGS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

I BELIEVE there is no fixed rule establishing the time for adjourning or closing a Friends' meeting. It seems natural and proper that a business meeting should adjourn when all the business to come before it shall have been done. In a meeting for worship where there are ministering Friends, and one or more persons feel it to be their duty to give forth the spoken word, and all have relieved their minds, then I apprehend would be the proper time to close the meeting. When Friends hold a meeting for divine worship, and where there is no spoken word, how long should that meeting continue in session?

It has been said that there is a living silence and that there is a dead silence. It seems to me that when there is a silence of the human, the physical, the earthly part of our being, and life and strength in our spiritual nature, then we could say there was a living silence, and while that kind of a silence pervades the congregation the meeting should not be closed. When the spiritual feeling is absent, and the human powers of the mind are still alive and active, then I presume there is a dead silence. I feel that when a large majority of the members of a meeting are in such "dead silence," it would be wisdom to close the meeting. It might be asked, at what time, according to the dial, would you close such a meeting? From my experience, I am willing to say that I think in a silent meeting, after a sitting of forty-five minutes, a majority of the members' thoughts are turned to worldly, to material things,—such as the prices of stocks and bonds, or perhaps the price of wheat, or the proper time to sell fat cattle, or about buying a new carpet or a new bonnet. I think that our silent meetings are generally held from fifty-five to seventy-five minutes, and sometimes longer. Could part of that time be spent to more profit? Perhaps it could be as well spent in social and Friendly intercourse. Will Friends think on the subject?

Union Bridge, Md.

S. SHEPHERD.

Educational Department.

LECTURE AT SWARTHMORE BY CANON RAWNSLEY.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE students and friends have in prospect the pleasure of hearing Canon Rawnsley, of Keswick, England, on Third-day evening, 17th inst. His address will be illustrated with lantern pictures of English scenery and memorials. He invites the coöperation of Americans in the work of the "National Trust for Places of Historic Interest or Natural Beauty." This trust is empowered to hold, for the public good, lands or buildings or monuments of beauty or historic interest.

Canon Rawnsley is a delightful interpreter of the charms of the English Lake region, amid which he lives, and has given in his book, "Literary Associations of the Lake Country," pictures of the noted men and women who have lived in that region. And with these word pictures he depicts the scenes which were loved by Wordsworth and many another, less noted, and which the author regards with such tenderness that he has given his best efforts to preserve them from injury or decay.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.

On Third-day, 3d inst., an unusually interesting illustrated lecture on the Pariah class of India was given in the large lecture hall. The lecturer, T. B. Pandian, is a Hindoo of the princely caste, who has been converted to Christianity. He has forsaken his caste and is devoting his life to the interests of the wretched Pariahs.

Some of Swarthmore's graduates are doing advanced work. Anna B. Eisenhower, '99, who made the highest record for scholarship ever attained by any woman at Swarthmore, has entered the Senior Class at Radcliffe, and is also doing graduate work in mathematics.

Mary Underhill, Swarthmore B. S. '94, M.S. '95, is also pursuing graduate courses at Radcliffe, but her work is entirely at Harvard, with the regular men students. The privilege of attending Harvard classes has been open to Radcliffe students since 1895. It is felt that both of these students, by their thorough and vigorous scholarship are reflecting the utmost credit upon Swarthmore.

In the fourth and fifth year French classes, Dr. Magill has been giving a course of lectures on French Literature, beginning with the 9th century. Three of these lectures have already been given, in which the first three centuries of French Literature have been considered. The departments of French and German have been strengthened by the added services of Professor Woods. Speaking and writing the foreign language is not totally subordinated to translation. Dr. Magill devotes two periods a week to translation, one to lectures, and one to conversation and composition.

TO ANN ARBOR.—William H. Parry, who graduated in the Arts Department of the University of Pennsylvania, 1899, will pursue his law studies at the University of Michigan.

THERE have been received about fifty responses to the request of the Committee on Education for the names of teachers, members of the Society of Friends. These have been registered, with the information which accompanied them, and when testimonials were sent they have been filed, that they may be accessible to any who desire to see them.

A good proportion of the teachers thus registered are prepared for advanced work, and a number are now pursuing special courses in colleges at home and abroad. Several teachers would be glad of positions this year if vacancies occur, and the names of three have been sent with information that they were willing to substitute for small compensation. The names can be obtained by teachers or committees upon application.

SWARTHMORE PREPARATORY SCHOOL.—The enrolment and attendance at the end of the first month of school, is twenty in excess of last year at end of first month,—sixty boarding pupils, eighty day pupils—total one hundred and forty. Since Tenth month 10, 1898, the attendance from Swarthmore has increased from thirty-four to forty-eight. Many new pupils have entered the upper classes. Work is in unusually good condition for the first month. *

WON A SCHOLARSHIP.—The Norristown Herald, 3d inst., says :

"Benjamin Abraham Thomas, of Abrams, has won a four-year faculty scholarship at the University of Pennsylvania, being one of three who were successful in an examination last week in which there were eighteen competitors. Mr. Thomas is a grandson of Annie L. Thomas, of Jacoby street, Norristown. He is a graduate of Friends' Central School, Philadelphia, and of Swarthmore College. He will enter the Medical Department of the University."

He is a graduate of Swarthmore in the Class of 1899. His success honors the College.

J. WALTER MALONE, who conducts the Friends' Theological School ("Orthodox" body), at Cleveland, Ohio, writes in the American Friend that Prof. George Adam Smith "was only allowed a few minutes to speak" at D. L. Moody's Northfield Conference, this summer, and adds that "the teaching at Northfield was in every respect in harmony with the belief in the depravity of man, the deity of Jesus Christ, and redemption by his blood, the plenary inspiration of the nerrant Bible, and the necessity of regeneration."

LITERARY NOTES.

THE volume by Caroline Hazard, of Peace Dale, R. I., now president of Wellesley College, Mass., recently mentioned under this heading, "The Narragansett Friends' Meeting in the 18th Century," has just been issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. (Pp. vi. and 197. $1.50.) The book is the outgrowth of a paper read before the Rhode Island Historical Society in 1894. It has a chapter on the beginnings of the Friends in Rhode Island in the 17th century, and then presents, in several following chapters, a study of the later system of the Society as shown in meeting records, chiefly those of South Kingstown Monthly Meeting, established in 1743.

These records appear to have been well preserved. "There are eight folio volumes belonging to the men's meeting, which contain the business of the meeting from month to month, the list of births, marriages, and deaths, and a beautiful manuscript of the English book of discipline," this last made between 1761 and 1763, by Joseph Congdon. Besides these there are three volumes of women's meeting records, and a mass of papers,—deeds, epistles, etc. "They are a set of time-stained books and documents, the paper discolored and brittle, cracking in the folds, exhaling the peculiar breath of long-kept mustiness. The handwriting is often crabbed, the spelling eccentric, the records themselves curt and scanty. Yet here is preserved all that is left of the best life of many good men and women. The voice of their preaching has died upon the air; the savor of their virtues exists only in tradition; but the record of their actual work is preserved."

This allusion to the records, however, is but a minor feature of the book; it sketches the coming of the Friends to Rhode Island, when "Boston and the Bay towns" persecuted them, with the condemnation and execution of poor Mary Dyer; traces the establishment of meetings, and develops the administration of the discipline. Chapters on the clerks of the meetings, on slavery, the trials of the Revolution, etc., are given. The work, we hardly need say, is marked by an intelligent and sympathetic knowledge of the whole subject, and is a valuable addition to the literature which has gathered about Friends.

Lloyd Mifflin, the Pennsylvania poet, whose verse is attracting wide attention, composed a poem for the unveiling, last week, of a monument in memory of Revolutionary soldiers, at Donegal, Pa. It is a stately and elevated ode, and it contains touches, too, of that tender, pastoral sentiment which beautifies many of this author's sonnets, as in these stanzas:

"Far from this vale, the heroes, lone, are lying
In peaceful fields, now tilled by happier men;
The patriots fell, but each dim eye, in dying,
Looked to these dales again.

"Some near the Wissahickon shades are sleeping;
On far Long Island some as bravely died,
And sylvan Brandywine has in her keeping
Some whom death glorified."

We do not know whether, when the audience at Donegal heard these lines they reflected on the difference there seems to be between some men fighting for Independence in 1776, and some other men fighting for the same, in 1899. It may be that the poets do not think there is any difference. There is considerable complaint, we observe, that the outburst of poetry at New York on the return of Admiral Dewey by no means kept pace with the other demonstrations.

In Scribner's Magazine, this month, a new development in photography is described by Dwight L. Elmendorf, the amateur and expert whose work is so well known. Under the title "Telephotography" he describes the attachment to an ordinary camera by which views are taken at a distance of twenty or thirty miles, as though the instrument were within a few hundred feet of the object. It is the telescope applied to the camera. A series of striking illustrations from the author's own pictures shows the tremendous power of this instrument. On one page is given a view as taken by an ordinary lens, and facing it is a view from the same point taken by the telephoto attachment.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will bring out Whittier's "Tent on the Beach" for a holiday book, with illustrations by the Woodburys, who performed like work, very successfully, for Sara O. Jewett's "Deephaven." They will also issue T. W. Higginson's new volume, "Contemporaries," in which he gives reminiscences of Emerson, Theodore Parker, Whitman, Sidney Lanier, Mrs. Hawthorne, Lydia Maria Child, "H. H.," Whittier, Garrison, Phillips, Sumner, and others whom he met in this country and in England.

The Review of Reviews contains the first complete account of the remarkable architectural competition for plans of buildings for the University of California, at Berkeley. This came to an end September 7 with the award of a first prize of $10,000 to the eminent French architect, E. Bénard, and of four other prizes amounting to an equal sum to American competitors. The giver of the prizes and the promoter of the competition is Mrs. Phœbe Hearst, widow of United States Senator Hearst; a portrait of her is given in the article.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

FLEMING, PA.—After a vacation of two months we opened our Young Friends' Association to-day, with much interest shown by the members. The entire program for this meeting was based upon the subject "Charity." Our president, Bertha K. Cleaver, having gone to Adams county to spend the winter, the vice-president took her place and opened the meeting by reading "The Gates of Sympathy." Roll-call was responded to by the repeating of Scripture texts or sentiments on the subject. Myra Underwood gave the references from the Bible containing the word charity; she stated that it is not found in the Old Testament.

"What is it to love our Neighbor as Ourselves?" from FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER, was read by M. J. Fisher, who stated that charity means love. Sue Underwood read a poem from Whittier, entitled "Charity." Another by Florence N. Cleaver, "Charity Never Faileth." A part of the chapter, entitled "Other People," from the book, "Making the Most of Life," by J. R. Miller, was read by Nancy M. Fisher, reminding us that there are other people besides ourselves, and we dare not live to ourselves if we would be called Christians; we may not turn our backs to any human being in distress, if there is aught we can do to relieve, and beside gifts of charity, we owe to others love and sympathy.

A piece entitled, "Sympathy for our Superiors," was read by the vice-president, giving some thoughts on the other side of the question. We are prone to think that those who have attained to heights above us do not need our sympathy. Yet they really do, for they are more alone in the world than we, and by helping to hold up their hands we are serving. If the purpose be a worthy one, we receive our reward.

A committee was appointed to select new officers to serve the Association. Closed in silence.

N. M. FISHER, Secretary.

HUNTINGTON, IND.—The Young Friends' Association met Ninth month 16, at the home of Michael W. Moore. The secretary, Emma Brown, read the minutes, which were approved as read.

After the business was transacted, Pearl Rall entertained the Association by presenting a paper entitled, "The Struggle of the Elements." The paper beautifully illustrated the struggles and trials of life, especially those of the poor and down-trodden classes, whose condition is so deplorable and yet whose minds are continually grasping, though in vain, for something higher and purer. After the general discussion the Association adjourned to meet Tenth month 13, at the home of Nehemiah Brown.

E. M., Secretary.

LANGHORNE, PA.—The first meeting of the Langhorne Young Friends' Association, after the summer vacation, was held at the home of Edward Palmer, Ninth month 23. The president called the meeting to order, and in the absence of the secretary, Sara E. Allen was appointed for the evening. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

A reading from Adelaide Proctor's poems preceded the address for the evening, delivered by Isaac H. Hillborn. His subject was "The Tabernacle," which was illustrated by a miniature reproduction of the first one, and interestingly explained. A vote of thanks was extended to him and his wife for their kindness in being with us.

The executive committee offered their report and the meeting adjourned to Tenth month 21, at the home of J. Howard Marshall. S. E. A.

NEWTOWN, PA.—Newtown Friends' Association held its first meeting after the summer vacation at the home of Abbie K. Rice, on the evening of Tenth month 4th. The meeting was called to order by the president, who, after a period of silence, read the 121st Psalm. The committee appointed at the last meeting to take charge of the distribution of magazines and other literature, reported and was continued.

The program was then presented as follows: first, a biographical sketch of Aaron M. Powell, by Anna Worthington. This paper, beginning with a brief personal reminiscence, gave some of the facts and incidents of his life, that have been recently published. Other Friends present who had known him made brief remarks.

Sarah J. Reeder next read some carefully-selected extracts from Trines "In Tune With the Infinite," which, with her remarks, gave an idea of the contents and purpose of the book. Lydretta Rice next read a poem, entitled "A New-boy's First Visit to Church." The Discipline Committee was represented by Evan T. Worthington, who read the conclusion of "The Scriptural Basis of the Queries." On behalf of the Current Topics department Mary T. Hillborn read an article called "The Passing of Ingersoll." The Executive Committee then presented its report, giving the program for the next meeting. Roll was called, to which a large number responded with sentiments, and the meeting adjourned, to meet Eleventh month 1st, at the home of Silas and Sarah F. Cary. A. W.

SOLEBURY, PA.—Solebury Young Friends' Association met on the afternoon of the 8th inst., at Solebury meeting-house. After the reading of the minutes, the report of the Executive Committee was given by Hugh W. Michener.

The appointments for next month are, "What are the essentials of a useful life?" Mabel Haddock. Recitation, Mary D. Ely. "Against what customs of the present time should Friends bear testimony?" Joseph B. Simpson and Martha B. White. George H. Ely reported on Current Events, Ella B. Carter on Literature, and Mabel Haddock read that part of the Discipline relating to war. Martha C. Ely gave an interesting report of the meeting of the committee to arrange for the General Conference of Associations to be held at Woodstown, N. J., Eleventh month 18. Ely J. Smith was appointed to represent Solebury Association at that conference by a five-minute speech. Five delegates were named by the meeting to attend the Woodstown Conference: George H. Ely, Edith Michener, Martha C. Ely, Florence R. Kenderdine, and Martha B. White.

"Is the United States justifiable in the acquisition of the Philippines?" was answered in the affirmative by Florence R. Kenderdine. Remarks upon the question were made by Annie M. Smith, Watson Kenderdine, Frederick L. Smith, George H. Ely, and William M. Ely. A recitation "That Men Die," by Helen Hunt Jackson, was given by Laura Haddock, and a reading, "The Legend Beautiful," by Longfellow, was given by Martha B. White. Frederick L. Smith discussed the Peace Congress held at The Hague.

The president appointed Ely J. Smith on the section for History, Edith Michener on Literature, Hannah Kenderdine on Discipline, and Martha C. Ely on Current Topics. Those present decided to hold the meetings in the afternoon, instead of following the First-day morning meeting. The Association accordingly adjourned until the second First-day in Eleventh month, at 2.30 p. m. FLORENCE R. KENDERDINE, Cor.

CHARITABLE REPORTS.

WE have received the twenty-first annual report of the Children's Homœopathic Hospital of Philadelphia, now located in a new building at Franklin and Thompson streets. The officers include a number whose names would be familiar to our readers. In the new building, the report states, they have capacity and facilities for the treatment of more than double the number of patients now under care, but additional funds are needed for this.

The number of inmates of the Hospital, in the year 1898, was 145, of whom 89 were discharged cured, 24 were discharged improved, 5 died, 8 were removed, and 19 remained. The number treated in the Hospital since its establishment is 2,307. The accident cases treated in 1898 were 353, the out-door visits made by resident physicians, 2,924, the number treated at the general medical clinic, 3,732, and at special clinics, 28,584.

The Vacant Lots Cultivation Association of Philadelphia report for the season of 1899 a good showing of results. They were able to assign 268 quarter-acre plots in the suburbs of the city to as many families, and the crops raised were quite good, the report being from 3,000 to 4,000 bushels of potatoes, 10,000 to 12,000 baskets of tomatoes, 60,000 to 70,000 heads of cabbage, 10,000 to 12,000 ears of corn, 10,000 to 12,000 stalks of celery, 4,000 to 5,000 bushels of turnips, besides other vegetables, including egg plants, carrots, cantaloupes, watermelons, beets, peppers, onions and radishes.

The Association has its office at room 310, Rothschild Building, 14 S. Broad St. (hours 11 to 12). R. F. Powell is Superintendent. James T. Shinn is president, and Dr. W. I. Hull, of Swarthmore, is one of the Directors.

An exhibition of the season's crops was given last week, for three days, in the main aisle of John Wanamaker's store.

THE PARIAHS OF INDIA.

[T. B. Pandian, of Madras, India, delivered a lecture at Swarthmore College, on the evening of the 3d instant, on the Pariah (or outcast), class of India. A Friend writes:]

FLUENT as his English is, and earnest as his words are, while he pleads for the Pariahs—the outcast, suffering people of his own land—yet the high purpose of the man himself, his unselfishness, his dedication, his clear perception of duty, his buoyant hope, his happiness in his chosen work, all these impress his hearers most deeply, and speak more eloquently than any words can do, for the uplifting power of the religion of Christ.

For this man of India was born a Brahmin prince, but has been converted to a belief in the Christian faith. According to the traditions of his race, he should despise and religiously avoid the lowest class of the people of his country,—the poor Pariahs, whose mere touch and shadow are regarded as pollution. These people live in wretched, disease-breeding huts, far removed from all respected people of India, and are not permitted so much as to take a drink of water from a well used by their more favored brethren. Deprived of education, of all religious instruction, of the comforts of life, of medical attention in times of sickness, of suitable food, and even of pure water to drink, these outcasts attracted the attention of Mr. Pandian; he could not share any longer the prejudices of his caste against these poor outcasts, after he learned the meaning of these words of his chosen Master: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Perhaps we can scarcely imagine the self-sacrifice of this man, when he left his caste, adopted the Christian religion, and took for his life-work the amelioration of the condition of the nine million Pariahs of India. In our country we are accustomed to honor those who unselfishly give their lives to the service of the poor and down-trodden; in India, a man who goes among the Pariahs becomes an outcast himself. "I know you not," are the words he must expect, even from those who are his nearest and dearest. Brave indeed was this man who dared to face such trials, and glad are we to believe when looking in his happy, earnest face that he has found that peace which the world cannot give, and neither can it take away.

His modest plea for money with which to dig wells, whence the Pariahs may draw the life-giving water, so needed in their intensely hot climate, will surely appeal to the generosity of all those who have it in their hearts to say, as did Miranda: "O! I have suffer'd with those that I saw suffer."

E. W. C.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"THOU DOES."

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

BY means of the INTELLIGENCER a Friend would like to put in a plea for the correct use of a certain essentially Friendly expression, namely—the form "Thou dost."

It has recently come to my notice that some members of the Society, presumably in protest against the manifestly ungrammatical "thee does," are endeavoring to introduce a no less intolerable form, "Thou does." I hesitate to believe that affectation can have ought to do with the absurd blinding of the grammatical sense of a people always so mindful of simplicity; therefore do I say "presumably in protest."

"Thee does" is an incorrect form, similar exactly to "me does," so eagerly corrected in children; "Thou does" equally faulty with "I does"; yet of the two forms, "Thee does," "Thou does," the former is preferable, since it has the sanction of many years of usage, while the latter is but newly coined by a few. Now if we are not satisfied with "Thee does," as we have good reason not to be, why not turn to our grammars and bring out the one, the only correct form, "Thou dost?" "Two wrongs won't make a right," especially when we have the right all ready-made and close at hand.

In closing let me add one word of warning. Have we ever reflected upon the meaning of the expression so frequently found in every dictionary, "Incorrect, sanctioned by usage?" Is it not to our shame that forms and expressions should be so qualified, and are there not already enough such without another being added by our Society to the list?

As our Heavenly Father gave to us a language, it is the duty of every human being to preserve its dignity, its beauty, and its purity.

A FRIEND.

Richmond, Ind., Tenth month 1.

[The above comes to us without other name than that above, "A Friend." It bears the post-mark Richmond, or we might have supposed its origin to have been farther eastward. Perhaps our correspondent would feel impressed with this view: the use of "thee" in the nominative case (unless the "sanction of long usage" can give it justification), is plainly incorrect; if, then, we begin a reform with "thou" instead of "thee," perhaps the "does" will yield also, later. Can we not take one step at a time? As a matter of fact, "Thou does" has also sanction of long usage by many.—EDS. INTELLIGENCER.]

THE ONE I MISS.

THE children play on the porch and lawn,
In merriment bright and free—
The toys lie scattered upon the grass,
The dollies are dressed for tea.

Here Jane comes running to meet papa,
And Mary comes toddling, too,
Their little faces alight with love,
As sweet as e'er childhood knew.

I hug the little ones close—so close—
A kiss on each cheek I press;
They romp about me with laugh and shout,
And many a soft caress.

Ah, sweet is the love that their lives outpour,
And sweet is their joyous kiss;
But my tears will come, and my heart ache sore,
For the little girl I miss.

O God, for the smile—for the vanished smile—
That my hungering heartstrings crave;
O God, for the love of the little heart,
Asleep in her silent grave.

—Howell S. England.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

THE DESERTED HOUSE.

ON the western slope of the hill, half way down to the road which winds, white and dusty, along its foot, there is a slight depression,—a dimple, as it were, in its softly rounded cheek. From the summit I had often surveyed the beautiful scene below with its billowy woodland falling away into undulating pasture-land and meadow and the farm buildings far below gleaming white against the green; and I had speculated as to the cause of this break in the rounded contour of the hillside. I knew, however, that the way thither lay through a tangled maze of briers and undergrowth and until to-day I had never ventured upon it.

It was a sultry day in August; I had been wandering aimlessly through the cool forest aisles, glad to have escaped the dust of the town. And now, as the lengthening shadows of the trees told me that night was approaching, I forced my way through an unusually stubborn thicket and found myself suddenly upon the edge of a small clearing. I recognized it at once as forming the depression which had excited my curiosity.

Leaving the shade of the great oaks and chestnuts, I plunged for a few yards waist deep amid the russet sea of briers and tall weeds which covered the ground, and came upon the ruins of what once evidently had formed a human habitation. The roof had fallen in; the blackberry and sumac grew rank about the ruined wall; the door, rusted or broken from its hinges, lay prostrate at my feet, where a few bricks, long since overgrown with grass, bore mute testimony to the footpath which had once existed there. The shingles and timbers of the fallen roof were grey and warped from long exposure to sun and storm, to rain and heat.

A circular hollow in the ground, choked with rank grass and surrounded by a vagrant cluster of belated tiger lilies, marked the old well curb, and at my feet a rude outline of stones and shells told eloquently how a loving hand had sought to cherish her familiar flowers amid the woodland wilds; but the wild weeds had now crowded out their more civilized and less hardy relatives—too often the case in the human brotherhood itself. About the four sides of the little clearing the great trees rose straight and tall like a frame for the picture in which the scene of desolation and decay upon which I gazed might well form the foreground.

As I came at every step upon some new trace of human life, a vision rose before me. I saw the clearing filled with the mighty trees it once had born. I saw the honest-hearted yeoman beneath whose ringing axe the white chips fell in showers while the wood resounded to the drum beat of his blows, punctuated here and there with the thunder crash of the falling tree. I saw the house rise slowly, wall and rafter and roof, solid and substantial, until at last, gaily dressed in the time of nesting birds, it waited expectant for the coming of the bride. I saw the work in the field, the work in the house, hallowed and made sacred by the love in the heart and the tender silence amid "God's first temples." I saw the miracle of the young madonna even as she looked from Rafael Sanzio's loving touch upon the Sistine wall, the sunlit clouds of a new immortality behind and above her, one light foot still touching our earth beneath her new found heaven, and deep in her eyes the mystery of Life. There is but one more scene, but one more secret, the life of man may know; and even it is here. Do not the falling door-way, the crumbling wall, the broken hearthstone, speak but one word, and that word Death? And is Death not the great interpreter of all things?

"So lonely and silent it is, so tattered and rent with the sun and the snow

You would think it the work of a dead man's hand a hundred year's ago;

And he who finds it suddenly there as he wanders far and alone

Is touched with a sweet and a beautiful sense of something tender and gone—

The sense of a vanished life in the waste, the mark of a soul's command,

The going and coming of vanished feet, the touch of a human hand—

But God's sunshine is too bright, too searching, to let us moan the shadow long.

"Wrecked is the ship of pearl

And every chambered cell

Where its dim dreaming life was wont to dwell,

As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell,

Before thee lies revealed;

Its irised ceiling rent, its sunless crypt unsealed."

But still through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that sings"—

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,

As the swift seasons roll,

Leave thy low-vaulted past,

Let each new temple, nobler than the last,

Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,

Till thou at length art free."

And above all else, from the deserted clearing, from the silent wood, from the falling house, comes a voice which whispers still "I am the Resurrection and the Life." And we look upon the old house with other eyes. It is no more a grave, a tomb; it is a last year's nest from which the birds have flown singing into the larger air, a chrysalis whence has come the beauty of the present, a token by the wayside both of the progress of the race and the Providence of God.

ELY J. SMITH.

LET not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time, but choose such which are healthful, short, transient, recreative, and apt to refresh you; but at no hand dwell upon them, or make them your great employment; for he that spends his time in sports, and calls it recreation, is like him whose garment is all made of fringes, and his meat nothing but sauces; they are healthless, chargeable, and useless.—Jeremy Taylor.

An English Minister's Testimony.

Springfield Republican.

A TRUE and lofty note was struck by Rev. Dr. Mackennal, of England, in his address on war before the International Congregational Council in Boston. That he represents Christianity above some other clergymen, whose bloodthirsty utterances have lately startled sober people, cannot be doubted. A war may be necessary, under existing conditions, but that would simply prove that the conditions were un-Christian, not that the war was Christian. Christianity stands for an ideal, and there is nothing ideal in war. The English preacher truly said: "There will be no end to the liability of war until nations are Christian in the sense that many men and women are so; and in this sense there is not, and never has been, a Christian nation." And how well phrased was this: "War squanders and degrades the noble impulse which gave it being." The Congregational council needed this kind of talk. That it came from an Englishman is particularly gratifying.

Monument to Indians.

THE Minnesota Valley Historical Society is erecting, in Ren-ville county, a monument to Indians who, during the terrible "Sioux outbreak" of 1862, rendered faithful service to the whites. The structure is to be fifty-two feet high, and ten feet square at the base.

Four names have been chosen to be placed on it. They are John Other Day (Am-pa-tu-to-ki-cha), Lorenzo Lawrence, Simon Anah-wang-mannee, and Paul Mah-za-ku-ta-mannee. John Other Day led and guided a party of sixty-two men, women, and children from the Yellow Medicine agency to within the lines of the whites, then joined the forces of Gen. Sibley and served against the hostiles throughout the campaign. Lorenzo Lawrence took Mrs. De Camp and her two children and another family from the Indian camp and brought them down the Minnesota in boats to Fort Ridgely. Old Simon Anah-wang-mannee stood sentinel over the imperiled people at Yellow Medicine, and subsequently brought a German woman and her children all the way from the upper country in an ox-wagon to Fort Ridgely. Paul Mah-za-ku-ta-mannee helped the captives all he could, and his brave and forcible speeches to the hostiles contributed largely to the decision not to murder the 250 prisoners helpless in their hands. All these were full-blooded Indians.

The names of some Indian women, who also aided in saving life, may have places on the monument.

An Old Colored Man Dead.

Newtown, Pa., Enterprise.

PETER WILSON, an aged colored man, who for many years lived in a little cabin along the road from Dolington to Taylorsville, died on Thursday morning of last week [Ninth month 21], at the home of his brother, near Titusville, N. J. He was removed to that place a few weeks ago, as on account of age and decrepitude he could no longer care for himself. Peter was a somewhat eccentric character, very religiously inclined. He was a local exhorter, and in his better days attended camp meetings far and near, often walking twenty and thirty miles to be present at these religious feasts. His mode of life was different from that of the community, be they white or colored. He was accustomed to pulling the swill for his pig from Taylorsville on a little hand truck, and took the fruit and vegetables he produced on his little hillside lot to Trenton market on a wheelbarrow. He had lived in the Taylorsville neighborhood since his youth; possibly he was born there. His father used to distinguish himself at the old Newtown exhibition by driving sometimes a steer and sometimes a heifer to a sulky, and was the beheld of all beholders. Residents of Newtown remember when father and son gathered garbage about town in a cart drawn by a bull.

Peter's funeral was held on Saturday; interment in the burying-ground on Frost Lane, Newtown. As the funeral procession passed Peter's long-time home, his housekeeper came out and followed the cortege on foot, saying "Old Pete's goin' to Jesus and I'm goin' with him." At Dolington she took off her shoes to expedite locomotion, and reached the cemetery in time to witness the interment. No one seems to know just how old Peter was; middle-aged men say that when they were small boys he appeared to be a very old man.

English Fruit-Growing Under Glass.

SOME statements made in recent letters from England in the INTELLIGENCER are illustrated in a paragraph in an English newspaper:

"It is estimated that the area of ground in the United Kingdom which is covered by glass-houses devoted to fruit culture has increased more than ten-fold during the last thirty years. The latest statistics show that there are at present over 1,000 acres of land covered in this way. The superintendent of Covent Garden Market, London, estimates that these houses produce about one thousand tons of grapes, six thousand tons of tomatoes, and 500,000 dozens of cucumbers every year, besides which there are, of course, lesser quantities of such fruits as strawberries, peaches, nectarines, and figs."

The South African Gold Fields.

THE great "Witwatersrand" gold fields of South Africa located in the South African Republic, are better known as the Johannesburg mines. The Dutch word "Witwatersrand," means, literally, "White Water Range," and the strip of territory, a few hundred miles long and a few miles in width, to which it is applied, was but a few years ago considered a nearly worthless ridge, useful only for the pasturage of cattle and sheep, and for even this comparatively valueless. In 1883, however, gold was discovered, and in 1884 the value of the gold production was about $50,000. It increased with startling rapidity, the production of 1888 being about $5,000,000, and that of 1890, $10,000,000; 1892, over $20,000,000; 1895, over $40,000,000, and 1897 and 1898 about $55,000,000 in each year. Recent discoveries lead to the belief that these wonderfully rich mines are the long lost "gold of Ophir" from which Solomon obtained his supplies.

Practical Forestry Teaching.

A YEAR ago Cornell University secured 30,000 acres of woodland in the Adirondack region for the exclusive use of her Forestry Department. The land has been divided into a number of sections and several seed beds have been laid out in which there have been planted over a million small trees of different varieties. The students of forestry will study the theory of the subject from October to April, and from then until commencement they will study the practical side of forestry.

Professor John C. Gifford was recently elected to the Chair of Forestry at Cornell. He is a graduate of Swarthmore College, with the degree of B. S., and was for some years Instructor in Botany at Swarthmore. Later, he devoted himself to the forestry movement in New Jersey.

A SINGULAR and interesting discovery has been made at Borboyla, in Hungary, where the remains of an unusually large antediluvian animal have been unearthed, which a Hungarian savant pronounces to be larger than anything of the kind previously found in Europe. According to this authority, the animal is a whale, eight metres long, and judging by the stratum in which it was embedded, he believes it to be the most ancient animal yet brought to light in this quarter of the globe.

THE smallest piece of real estate in New York is an odd-shaped corner lot, somewhat smaller than a double page of a newspaper. This limited estate is at the north-west corner of Fourth Street and Irving Place. It occupies a curious little niche in the corner property, and has a frontage of a few inches on both these important streets. Taxes are regularly paid on it, and the high rent ($50 per month) which its owner demands for it has been paid regularly for years.

CURRENT EVENTS.

AN interesting meeting to consider the situation of the Doukhobor people in Canada was held on the evening of the 3d instant at Friends' meeting-house, Fourth and Arch streets, at the call of the sub-committee of that Yearly Meeting in charge of the subject. There was a good attendance. Joseph S. Elkinton and William Evans, who have visited the Doukhobors, explained their situation, and the need there is for aid to get through the winter. It is proposed in Arch Street Yearly Meeting to have committees canvass the several monthly meetings, and a general appeal to the public will also be made.

THE Annual Conference of Friends of the Indian was held at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., this week. At West Chester, Pa., on the 11th, 12th, and 13th instant, a Centennial Celebration of the establishment of the Borough took place. The first day was "Literary Day," and among other exercises, Gilbert Cope read a historical paper, Charlton F. Lewis, of New York, delivered an oration, and Prof. J. Russell Hayes, of Swarthmore College, read an Ode (published in full in this issue of the INTELLIGENCER.) All the chief participants in the day's program were natives of the county,—Chester.

THERE has not been at this writing any collision of arms between the English and the Boer forces, in South Africa. Large bodies of armed men are near the border on both sides. In England the most extraordinary military activity prevails. Twenty-five thousand "reserves" have been called out. It is announced that the commander of the British forces, Gen. Buller, "will have twice as many men as the Duke of Wellington ever commanded." London reports continue to hold out the idea of negotiations for peace before there is an actual outbreak of war. Parliament has been summoned to assemble on the 17th instant.

THE condition of affairs at Manila is described very unfavorably by John H. Peyton, of New York, "army secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew," who was sent out last spring by Bishop Doane (Episcopal Church), of Albany, N. Y. He said in an interview on the 3d instant, that Manila was "a hell hole," with "430 or more saloons," and a great number of immoral places. It is practically useless, he said, to undertake to do anything in the way of mission work "until the United States troops depart or reform." He speaks highly of the morality of the native Tagalo people.

A STATEMENT was made public, last week, by N. E. Guyot, of Pueblo, Colorado, in which he charges that wholesale fraud and corruption exist in the administration of civil and military affairs at Manila. He was a soldier in the 1st Colorado regiment, and was detailed (having been an accountant), to serve in the office of the "auditor of public accounts." Having now returned with the regiment, he says that the accounts were habitually falsified, corrupt contracts made, and bribery of officials regularly practiced. "Commissary supplies are purchased at rates 100 to 200 per cent. above market prices," the difference being divided by the sellers and the officials. Beef is condemned, bought by favorite contractors, and then taken for the Government at high prices "without leaving the refrigerator ships." About the same time that Guyot made this statement, Rev. Peter MacQueen, of West Somerville, Mass., a Congregational minister, who has been in the Philippines, published his observations. He said the custom-house at Manila was "a seething abomination," on account of corruption and incompetency, and gave many details similar to those of Guyot.

THERE has been, a Washington dispatch states, no progress towards a final agreement upon a "modus vivendi" fixing the Alaskan boundary, even temporarily, since the tentative scheme framed by Secretary Hay and Mr. Tower, the British Charge, was sent to London for ratification. So far as is known in Washington, the London authorities are still waiting upon the Canadians to act in the matter.

THE United States transport Siam, which left San Francisco for Manila, on the 19th of Eighth month, with 330 mules, to be used in the campaign against the Filipinos, reached Manila on the 6th inst., and reported that all but nineteen of the mules were killed in violent typhoon storms encountered after leaving Honolulu. In the storm the ship rolled heavily, and the animals were thrown from side to side and frightfully mangled. The Quartermaster's Department, Washington, states that they were "trained pack-mules," and were considered the most valuable that had been sent out.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has approved the sentence imposed by a military court-martial, a year ago, upon Captain O. M. Carter, of the corps of engineers, United States Army, who was found guilty of defrauding the Government of from $1,600,000 to $2,000,000, while engaged in the construction of river and harbor works at Savannah, Georgia. The sentence was that he be dismissed from the service of the United States, pay a fine of $5,000, and be imprisoned at hard labor for five years. Wayne MacVeagh ineffectually made an argument before the President to have the sentence reconsidered.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

DR. D. D. CROWLEY, a member of the California Board of Health, has proposed to that body a resolution forbidding persons suffering from tuberculosis ("consumption," etc.), from coming into the State. "With the mildest form of a quarantine, he believes that seven-eighths of the consumptives who annually come to California would make no attempt to enter the State." It may be a question whether under the Constitution one State can forbid citizens of other States from coming into it.

—Dr. D. K. Pearsons, who has given so much money to colleges, has paid over his gift of $50,000 to Berea College, Ky., which was conditioned on the raising of $150,000 among other friends of the institution. The work of Berea College is among the people of both races,—white and colored,—in eastern Kentucky.

—Great agitation appears to exist in China against the missionaries stationed there. Many native converts, especially of the Catholic faith, have been killed, while the missionaries in several instances have been driven out of the towns. It is most probable that one cause of this is distrust of the "Christian nation," on account of their wars of aggression, and their proposal to "partition" China.

—It appears that many of the places reported captured by the United States troops in the Philippine Islands, are afterward recaptured by the Filipinos. A correspondent, J. T. McCutcheon, of the Chicago Record, enumerates twenty such places. One of them has been captured and abandoned six times by the United States troops. Several of them have been taken and abandoned three or four times. Some of the points were of no great military value, but others "were of strategic importance."

—At the annual meeting of the State Hospital for the Insane, Norristown, Pa., on the 6th instant, there were reported 1109 female and 1103 male patients. Of the latter 418 are compelled to sleep in the corridors and 190 upon mattresses on the floor. This is due to lack of room and the overcrowded condition of the Hospital.

—The Children's Homœopathic Hospital of Philadelphia (Franklin and Marshall Sts.), issue occasionally a neat little newspaper, Our Hospital Messenger, at 25 cents a year, giving information concerning the institution.

—Details received at Constantinople of the recent earthquakes in Asia Minor show that about 1,500 persons perished, several villages being destroyed.

—The formal inauguration of Miss Caroline Hazard as president of Wellesley College, Mass., took place on the 3d instant. Addresses were delivered by her, by Presidents Eliot, of Harvard; Angell, of the University of Michigan; Hadley, of Yale, and others. President Hazard is 42 years old. For her literary work the University of Michigan has given her M. A., and Brown University, Litt. D.

—The Philadelphia Bulletin says: "It is reported from Harrisburg that, in addition to a three per cent. levy on their annual salaries, the employes of the State have been 'requested' by Chairman Reeder to deliver up another one per cent. for the Republican State Committee. The 'contributions' will be paid to the heads of the departments which are put under levy, and they are to receive, it is said, a certificate stating that each man gave the money of 'his own free will.'"

—The Pennsylvania Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union began its session in Philadelphia on the 6th instant. Rebecca B. Chambers, Chester county, the president, delivered the annual address. During the past year there was an increase of 1,689 members, making the total membership 14,311.

—Francis T. White, New York city, has added $25,000 to the endowment fund of Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, ("orthodox" Friends). He and his brother, Morris M. White, had previously given $25,000 jointly.

—An electric road for the Catskill Mountains is now being surveyed. It will connect with the Otis Elevating Railway, and from there will run from Saugerties to Catskill, connecting from there with the railway. The right of way has been secured, and construction will soon begin.

A NEW way of blasting rock is to place a cartridge of water into a shot hole and convert it into steam instantly by electricity. This method is especially applicable in coal mines.

THE advance in agricultural methods is illustrated by an Ohio paper, the Ash-tabula Sentinel, thus: One evening, a short time ago, a society in Jefferson needed a gallon of cream. The committee called up by telephone the proprietors of a milk farm two miles north of the town, and asked if they could furnish it. The reply was that they could as soon as milking was done. In thirty minutes from the time the call was made the cream was delivered.

The milk had been drawn from the cow, put into a separator, the cream extracted and sent to town by a man on a bicycle.

A few years ago the committee would have had to send a boy in the afternoon, "yesterday's milk" would have had to be skimmed, and if the boy had not treed too many chipmunks on the way, he might have got back in time for the festival.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY
Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN
Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS
Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK
Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN }
ATLANTIC }
BRADLEY }
BROOKLYN } New York.
JEWETT }
ULSTER }
UNION }
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL }
SOUTHERN }
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO
Philadelphia.
MORLEY
Cleveland.
SALEM
Salem, Mass.
GORNELL
Buffalo.
KENTUCKY
Louisville.

HE gains wisdom in a happy way who gains it by the experience of others. In painting why not avail yourself of the advice of those who have had the greatest experience — the painters.

Competent, practical painters everywhere use Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil. They know they cannot afford to use anything else.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH 21, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 42. }

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLII.

MAN has attained his perfection when all his powers are brought into habitual and permanent harmony and charity, and perfect love has cast out all fear. This is the state realized at the loosing of the last seal in the book of human experience. SUNDERLAND P. GARDNER.

From a stenographic report of a sermon delivered at Plainfield, Ohio, Ninth month, 1873.

RETURNING HOME.

To leave unseen so many a glorious sight,
To leave so many lands unvisited,
To leave so many worthiest books unread,
Unrealized so many visions bright,—

Oh! wretched yet inevitable spite
Of our brief span, that we must yield our breath,
And wrap us in the unfeeling coil of death,
So much remaining of unproved delight.

But hush, my soul, and vain regrets be stilled;
Find rest in Him who is the complement
Of whatsoe'er transcends our mortal doom,
Of baffled hope and unfulfilled intent;
In the clear vision and aspect of whom
All longings and all hopes shall be fulfilled.

—R. C. Trench.

FRIENDS IN ENGLAND.

IV.

AFTER what has been said in detail of meetings, adult schools, etc., some general observations may be of interest and pertinency. In the first place, it may be remarked that for the last thirty years or more there has been a moderate but steady increase in the number of Friends in the United Kingdom, the growth keeping pretty even pace with that of the total population.

The attitude of the Society in England, to be understood, must be regarded in the light of three or four definite events and conditions. First, and most important, of these was the refusal of London Yearly Meeting, in 1888, to adopt or approve the "Declaration of Faith" drawn up at Richmond, Indiana, in 1887. This refusal was an epochal action. It definitely assigned the English Friends to a position unlike that of the church-like bodies in the Western United States, and gave notice that they meant to adhere to the non-pastoral and non-ritualistic system which is the Society's inheritance from George Fox. I may say that I talked with several Friends in England who spoke freely of the crisis of 1888, and of the earnestness with which many of those who were attached to the essentials of "Old-Fashioned Quakerism" exerted themselves to secure a full and fair hearing of the question in the Yearly Meeting,—the result being that it was made evident that no such creedal Declaration could be imposed upon the Society, and that the Western American system was repugnant to a large part, and probably the great majority, of the membership.

I may pause here to remark that there is a noticeable variation in the attitude of Friends in the north and south of England. The northern meetings, as a rule, are less inclined to what, for want of a better adjective (and in the full consciousness that this is not a satisfactory one), may be called "evangelical" ideas, both in theology and in method. The southern meetings, as a rule, are the homes of a more favorable feeling toward the evangelical cult. It results from this geographical variation that the Friends in the North have occasionally felt that London and the places within easy reach of the metropolis have a disproportionate share of control in the Yearly Meeting and its committees, and that if the annual gathering were held at York or Manchester its tone at times might be rather different.

So far as my observations went I saw no Friends' meeting in England which departed at all from the substance of what was approved in earlier days. Those I attended were all held "on a basis of silence." There were no "pastors," no infringement of the freedom of ministry, no pre-arranged services, no music, no singing, no "revival" methods. All the meetings began with silence, and closed with it, by the usual signal of those who occupied the gallery seats. Not in the exterior of the meeting-houses, nor in their interior arrangements or appointments, nor in the procedure, was there any notable departure from what most of those who will read this description regard as consistent with Friends' principles. But I am only describing as far as my observation extended.

It must be said that the "plain dress" has nearly disappeared. At the yearly meeting there might have been four or five plain bonnets,—one of them worn by a Friend from Canada, who went over on the St. Louis, at the time I did,—and perhaps as many broad-brimmed hats and straight-cut coats. Richard Brockbank and his wife, from Cumberland (one of whose daughters is the wife of John William Graham), are "plain Friends" in the older sense of the expression, and as they passed out among the throng at Devonshire House, they were noticeable on that account. There is, also, not much use, in ordinary conversation, of thou or thee, though these survive in meeting business and family intercourse. I met some Friends who expressed a concern to maintain the plain language, but many regard it as formal, and as non-essential. In all meeting business, in the dating of Society documents, epistles, etc., so far as I observed, the numbered days and months are employed, and the names derived from the heathen deities, etc., unused. But in ordinary conversation this is rare.

Another circumstance of importance to the English Friends, within the past two decades, has been the character of the Society literature. The issue of a number of books, pamphlets, tracts, etc., in which the spiritual side of the Friends' faith has been definitely presented, has disclosed the present attitude of a large element in the Society. The doctrinal rigidity which was the dominant note for half a century has softened, and it has been demonstrated that such books as Edward Worsdell's "Gospel of Divine Help," "A Reasonable Faith," Francis Frith's "Quaker Ideal," William Pollard's "Old Fashioned Quakerism," Caroline Stephen's "Quaker Strongholds," and other works, in which the doctrine of the Divine Indwelling was reasserted, and its natural and logical corollaries followed out,—such books, it is found, have a large acceptance.

A third notable thing has been the holding of the Conference at Manchester, in 1895, and the Summer Schools at Scarborough in 1897, and Birmingham, in 1899. In these gatherings there has been a free and courageous consideration of religious and social problems, and of the relation which the principles of Quakerism bear to them. Such a consideration of such subjects is something quite new among Friends in England,—as, indeed, among Friends elsewhere,—and the demonstration that it could be and would be permitted without the visitation of the Society's censure upon expressions that did not exactly square with traditional standards was a fact of much significance. These Conferences and Summer Schools opened the eyes of many to better and clearer understanding of what they themselves, as well as others, really were thinking. There has been a broad-minded liberty of expression, and there has been, as a result, an earnest and helpful renewal of the essential faith of the Society. It has been demonstrated that Friends are bound together in ties of Christian unity, by their agreement upon the fundamental articles, and that they enjoy a liberty of difference upon the larger list of minor and subordinate matters. That such liberty should exist among Friends in England, as the Nineteenth Century draws to its close, is a fact of great significance. It has not always been so. It has been as nearly as possible a century since a woman Friend from the United States, a minister, was brought to the bar of the Society, silenced, and sent home for her inability to believe that the wars of the Jews were waged by Divine authority. "There has been a great change among us," said a prominent Friend to me, in London, in the course of conversation on such subjects, and he gave me some interesting illustrations of the diminished disposition toward doctrinal rigidity, church inquisition, and the repression of individual opinion. Some of these I should be glad to quote if the conversation had not been one which I must regard as private and in confidence.

H. M. J.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 44.—TENTH MONTH 29.

ELIJAH.

GOLDEN TEXT.—After the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still, small voice.—I. Kings, xix., 12.

Scripture Reading, I. Kings, xix., 1-21.

FROM the narrow political point of view the house of Omri had done well by the kingdom of Israel. By their skill in war and in diplomacy they had checked its descent, due to the degenerating influences of strife and oppression. But the admission of the Canaanite religion as coequal with the worship of Jehovah, and the grinding despotism of a military dictatorship, were destroying that which was best and strongest among the children of Israel—the sense of personal responsibility to Jehovah, and the personal independence growing therefrom. It would be easy to fall into the error of thinking that the differences of religion of which so much account is made in the Bible are mainly differences of names; that God could be worshipped as well and as truly under the name of Baal as under that of Jehovah; that the peculiar forms of the Hebrews were no better than the peculiar forms of the Canaanites. But this error involves a misconception of the fundamental difference introduced into the worship of Jehovah by the traditions of the great leaders of the Hebrews. This difference is the element of personal righteousness, of individual self-command. Whereas in the theology of the Canaanites the sacrifice and the ceremonial was the religion and the whole debt demanded by their God, among the Hebrews there was super-added to this the requirement of a moral life. The ceremonial itself among the Phœnicians included acts of immorality, which though sometimes introduced into Hebrew worship, formed no part of it in its purity. The necessity for the isolation of Israel, the great danger of all foreign alliances lay in this difference. For the attractions of the easier and cheaper religion—the salvation of the bargain counter—was perilous in the extreme to a people who only comprehended the superiority of their God in a shallow and superficial way. If Baal's favors could be so much more easily won if he did not object to these attractive vices, should we not rather turn to him than to the stern and unbending figure of Jehovah, ever demanding of us a denial of our dearest passion.

The very priests of the service of Jehovah were often carried away by the easy attractiveness of a worship devoid of personal effort. It was the prophets who in every age withstood it; and these not the official order of prophets, although it seems to have sometimes accepted their leadership. They were self-devoted men, God-called, coming from all classes of society, without official position, without recompense—these it was who were at once the scourge and the salvation of the children of Israel. Sometimes, indeed, by their very strength and persistence they won recognition and power, but their appointment was from on high and needed no human warrant.

Thus Samuel crowned Saul and afterward set him aside for David. Nathan substituted Solomon for Adonijah, and Abijah called Jeroboam to the throne of Israel. Most of the prophets mentioned in the story of the period following the division are in Israel, though several appeared in Judah.

Among them all there is no more striking figure than that of Elijah. In him one of the strongest representatives of the prophets was set in antagonism to one of the strongest of the kings of Israel. It was not merely the religion of Israel which was in danger. The crisis was political and social as well. "Gradually, and almost imperceptibly Israel was again becoming like the other nations about—a consummation fatal to the performance of its unique mission in the world."

"One man alone had courage to act. Later generations, appreciating somewhat the sublimity of Elijah's personality, cast about it an atmosphere of wonder." (Kent.) There is something which strongly appeals to our sense of the mysterious in the sudden dramatic appearances and disappearances of the wild and rugged figure of Elijah. No wonder the tale of his doings is veiled with the supernatural so that it is impossible to separate with any certainty that which is truly historical from the popular tradition which clings round it. Enough for our purposes, however, we can discern. It is plain that his intensity and clear vision cut like a lightning flash across the plans of the harmonizers, who would reconcile the claims of Baal and those of Jehovah. (I. Kings, xviii.) For a moment he lifted the whole people into understanding, and commanded their loyalty. The priests of Baal were cast down. Even the king was forced to go with the throng. But the success of the prophet was only temporary. The easy way was too tempting. The king yielded in this matter wholly to his wife's influence, while the passion of the people was only a sudden flame of excitement, and had no basis in deep conviction. Elijah fled to the wilderness of the south in that black despair which only strong natures can know; "he requested for himself that he might die." But the Lord had further work for him. Though his whole people would not hear him, yet were there some who would hear. Though his own generation rejected him, yet should his words and his spirit inspire others to effort and to success. Such was the comfort that came to him, not by the whirlwind or by the earthquake, but by the "still, small voice." So he girded himself with strength and returned to his duty.

Ahab added to his disloyalty to the faith of his fathers, a further disloyalty to the duties of his great office. He was the slave of his desires. Coveting his neighbor's field, which he wished to add to the park surrounding his palace at Jezreel, he allowed by the prostitution of the machinery of justice the judicial murder of Naboth and his house. (I. Kings, xxi.) Again appears the stern figure of the prophet with unsparing condemnation upon the deed. It would seem that the king once more bent to the storm of the Lord's wrath. "He put sack cloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and lay in sack cloth, and went softly." Nevertheless his house was condemned for unfaith with his people as with his God, and in his son's day came the fall thereof.

Like the prophets who came after him, Elijah took strong ground against all foreign alliance. He saw instinctively that only in isolation could Israel work out her highest possible destiny. No doubt the judgment of the unnamed prophet (I. Kings, xx., 35-43), on the alliance with Damascus expressed the feeling of the master-prophet.

Shall we say that he failed? Others took up the labor when his hand dropped helpless, after a strenuous and faithful life—every generation since his day; for people of whom he never dreamed have thrilled at the story of his life and at his words. Men have struggled Godward because of him. To-day because of him men look within and are ashamed that they have chosen the cheap god whose favor is so easily bought, and so choose again. He did not fail.

QUAKER TOLERATION.

Dr. Charlton T. Lewis, of New York, one of our foremost scholars and thinkers, a native of West Chester, Pa., and descended from Chester county Quaker stock, in his address at the Centennial of his native town last week, paid a high tribute to the broad tolerant spirit of the founders of Pennsylvania. We quote as below:

EVEN by tradition, we who had the fortune to be born in this region know little or nothing of the narrowness, bigotry and self-righteous arrogance which passed for saintliness in many of the American colonies, and lasted even in several of the States until long after our century began. It is true that even in Pennsylvania, until 1776, no man could sit in the Assembly unless he professed his faith in the Trinity and in the inspiration of the Bible. But the elective franchise was never limited here by a creed, and under the wise guidance of Benjamin Franklin all religious tests for public office were abandoned in the year of Independence, so that Jews, Catholics and Deists were under no disability before the law. But in this respect Pennsylvania long stood almost alone. It was, perhaps, the only State in the Union in 1799 in which a Hebrew could hold any office; and except in New York and Maryland, the Catholic was equally under ban. As late as till 1835, none but a Protestant Christian, at least by profession, could serve the State of North Carolina in any capacity. Thus the absolute freedom of faith is peculiarly a Pennsylvania principle, and this too is fast making its way around the world.

Nor is it in the laws alone that religious liberty has grown with the sentiment of human brotherhood. In the churches, and without them, there has been a progressive amelioration of the relations among men of differing faith. Persecution for conscience' sake, even a century ago, was hardly to be found in the crude and violent forms of earlier days; but its spirit lingered in the most enlightened lands. Religious zeal was thought inconsistent with tolerance, and mere questions of words, without relation to conduct or character, sufficed to fill churches, neighborhoods and families with discord. The passing away of this narrowness has been gradual; most rapid during the last twenty years; and now it would be hard anywhere in Christendom—impossible in our own country—to find in the pulpit or the sectarian press more than traces of the bigotry which within living memory was widespread. This change, however, is far more noteworthy in other parts of the country than here. And this is not because our community now lags behind the age in the progress of religious freedom and in broad and liberal sympathy with the love of truth in every form, but rather because it was long ago far in advance of others. It would be hard to name in this or any other country a city or village in which such perfect freedom of religious belief and speech has been enjoyed without interruption for one hundred years as here.

It is only just to recall in this connection the predominant influence of the Society of Friends among our early settlers and generations of their descendants. Quakerism has sometimes been described as narrow, full of prejudice, fanaticism and bigotry. But of all forms of earnest religious conviction which have made their mark in the world's history, this has been the most completely free from every taint of intolerance. From the first preaching of George Fox until now, the whole body of the Society has been one consistent demand and proclamation of liberty of conscience. Nor is the testimony of Quakerism to this effect a whit less potent, now that its fragile organization has been broken into pieces, and that multitudes of its younger members have passed out of the fold. The so-called "hickory Quaker" has been a large element in the permanent citizenship of our country, and while he may have discarded many of the special tenets and observances of his sect, he has very commonly retained, and even strengthened, the best moral and social characteristics of his fathers. It is to this source that we may largely ascribe, not only the welcome which our people as a whole have always given to advanced and progressive thought in politics, science and literature, but in particular their intense moral earnestness of hostility to every form of slavery, and their large toleration for dissent from even the most cherished traditional beliefs. Many sons of Quakers have so far deserted the principles of their sect as to go to the battlefield and die for their country, but I have yet to hear of one who has ever treated free thought and honest conviction as a crime.

If there be nothing celestial without us, it is only because all is earthly within. If no divine colors are upon our lot, it is because the holy light is faded on the soul. If our Father seems distant, it is because we have taken our portion of goods and traveled into a far country to set up for ourselves, that we may foolishly enjoy rather than reverently serve.—James Martineau.

THE Lord will have some to honor him in every situation; and he can preserve them unhurt in their proper places, however perilous, by the power which protected the three young men in the fiery furnace; for "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ" will be with all his true people, wherever dispensed or however distinguished, and prove eventually "sufficient for them."—Thos. Scott.

NOTES OF SERMONS.

At Newtown meeting, Pa., Ninth month 24, 1899.

SAMUEL S. ASH said, in substance: To whom shall the gathering of the people be. "Whom say ye, that I, the son of man am?"

These questions, and the truthful answering of them, involve considerations of vital interest to every thoughtful mind. They penetrate too deeply into our human needs for us to be fully satisfied with any of the varied responses that come from the world about us. When Jesus asked his Disciples "whom say men that I, the Son of Man am?" They reported the diverse opinions that were entertained by men concerning him; but he cared not to know these. What he did want to know was their ability to answer this next question, "Whom say Ye that I the son of man am?" The reply of Peter was evidently satisfactory, for Jesus responded, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee but my Father which is in heaven. I say unto thee Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." So, dear friends, as we gather at this hour in recognition of our common needs, and of the opportunity of being mutually helpful to each other, we put away from our thoughts the varied voices of the world around us, and, waiting upon the Lord for the renewal of our strength, hearken to that still small voice which is seeking to animate us with the true answer that opened Peter's lips with the words "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

The true church then is the organized and consecrated instrumentality for promoting the Father's revelation of the Son, and the living members of this Church are those who coöperate with the energizing influences of the Holy Spirit, to the end that much good fruit may be brought forth to the glory of God. Let us seek to realize for ourselves true answers to the questions that penetrate us, in the growing consciousness that the Son of Man who is seeking to make our acquaintance is also the Son of God."

Martha Schofield spoke upon the text: "I will lift mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." After pausing a moment she continued with emotion: "We are all human. Forty-seven years since my feet were on this floor; then they came from the new made grave of my father, and the mid-winter snow upon your hillsides is no whiter or purer than the spirit that went out of the life who lived with malice towards none and charity for all.

Within these walls my father and my mother worshipped God, their God, though in their experiences the rough turbulent waves rolled over them; but it was the pressure that forced down to the deeper calm of the Sea, where they found and realized that greater peace—the peace of God in their purified souls. If there has been anything in my life worth recording, it came from the training and example of my father and my mother, who imbued their children with the deepest principles of this Society; who taught that life must have its overcomings and thus be lifted unto the hills and find the help that cometh from the Lord.

They taught us that principles were greater than persons, and each was accountable to God only for actions that duty demanded at our hands—to follow our highest convictions, regardless of the praise or blame of men, and to know the God who was their guide and from whom help cometh to the seeker after righteousness.”

After a silence, Samuel S. Ash added: “Sometimes there comes to us with a new significance the old saying—“The Fathers, where are they? and the Prophets, do they live forever?” The parents and the grandparents of our friend who has spoken were wont to worship here, in this place, the God of their fathers. They served him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind. Their convictions were in advance of the age in which they lived, and not always sympathized with by some who should have been their nearest friends; their courage to declare the truth as God gave them to see the truth brought them under suffering for its sake. But this never disturbed their faith, nor ruffled the calm of their spirits. With malice toward none and charity for all, they maintained the profession of their faith without wavering. “They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.” The duty of the hour for us, younger and older, is to strive to be as faithful to the responsibilities and opportunities of our day as they were to theirs, and seek to follow them as they followed Christ.

PEACE FROM PEACEABLENESS.

From an address by Prof. William N. Trueblood, Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana. (Published in the American Friend, Phila.)

My third proposition is that the peace which the world hopes for is but little dependent on the abolition of Militarism.

The first and obvious ground for the support of this proposition is the fact that militarism is but a phase, a part, a branch of the world's great upas tree. Lopping off branches is well enough by any process whatever when they interfere with the free sunlight and air; but to effect a permanent security we know that the axe must be laid to the roots of the tree. Knowledge of the cause is the first step always to the confident control of the effect.

Now, an examination of the world's warfare will show that its contentions have been of three kinds: 1. Strife among merely predatory peoples; 2. Strife between a merely predatory people and one that has become civilly and industrially organized; 3. Strife among a people imperfectly organized, arising from the imperfect organization. The first stage has passed to most of the world, but may be instanced by the wars among our Indian and African tribes; the second has also largely passed away, but may be instanced by England's wars in India and Africa, and our own present war with the Philippine Islands; the third, the one that springs out of imperfect or false organization, civil or industrial, is everywhere in the world to-day, and may be instanced by our war of the Rebellion and our present social and industrial unrest. The first of these strifes arises from animal appetites and lusts; the second and third arise more from ambition and other intellectual distortion. But it is safe to say that no state of society founded on any of these bases can have enduring peace, because these are selfish, and men cannot live together without war on any other than a social basis.

The peace that the world seeks is dependent upon the establishment of benevolence, good will, brotherhood as the basis of civil and industrial organization; in a word, upon Christianity. “Not the mass of theological doctrine ingeniously piled up by Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Clement, Athanasius and Augustine,” than which there has not been a more fruitful source of war, “but upon the real and essential Christianity, taught by Christ and Paul.” This alone brings peace on earth, because it brings good will to men.

Now, it is very encouraging that many signs of this benevolent basis of life are now appearing above the horizon. Green and fertile spots they are in our desert of war. They augur that man is coming on to a fourth basis of civilization, on which war shall find no place, but brotherhood instead. But it will not come suddenly nor very soon; it will not come by legislation, by lopping off branches here and there. It will come only by the slow process of education, by the removal of the passion of ambition from the mind of man and the implantation in its stead of the love of virtue for itself, by the removal of that notion so deeply instilled by the world's long ages of strife, that merit consists in winning place and power above our fellows, and the inculcation of the idea of service, of helpfulness and common interest instead.

It is evident that the times are not ripe as yet. The sword and the defense of it are still among us, though the signs of peace are undoubtedly multiplying on the horizon. But it is time to plant the seed, to preach the doctrine of that perfect life on earth which is to be realized only by and by; “that state of society from which every vestige of strife and the modes of behavior adapted to the ages of strife shall be utterly and forever swept away. Through misery that has seemed unendurable and turmoil that has seemed endless, men have dreamed of this happy state and placed it beyond the grave, deeming it too good to be found upon earth. But they should have remembered that the Great Teacher of the doctrine said it belonged to the earth. “The kingdom of heaven is now and here in this world.”

WE make the mistake of supposing that growth, after the great meridian of middle age is passed, means either growing old, or wearing out. And therefore it follows that one way, and the best way, if not the only way, of not growing old, would be in the constant development of new parts of us, those too often disused.—Harper's Bazar.

To stand with a smile upon your face against a stake from which you cannot get away,—that, no doubt, is heroic. But the true glory is not resignation to the inevitable. To stand unchained, with perfect liberty to go away, held only by the higher chains of duty, and let the fire creep up to the heart—this is heroism.—F. W. Robertson.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH 21, 1899.

EVOLUTION THROUGH EFFORT.

SETTLING down, as no doubt the majority of intelligent people have done, into acceptance of the theory of evolution, there has come with this, it would seem, a certain easiness of conscience as to the need for earnest effort in behalf of the good and the true. It probably is, consciously or unconsciously, a thought in the mind that if all human affairs, as well as all forms of life, evolve, and tend in this process from lower to higher, there need be no cause for anxiety, we may calmly omit the change.

How, then, does the evolution upward come about? Does it come independently of human effort? May we sit down in the confidence that "all will come out right in the end," whether we help make it come out right, or not?

Certainly nothing throws so much real light on these questions as the lamp of experience. To it most of us will have to turn, in default of the ability to reason out by a priori methods the philosophy of the case. For experience is a lamp which lights every degree of understanding. If we cannot reason, we may remember.

That all the changes of betterment in a long period of time have come as the result of earnest effort is a commonplace of history. They do not evolve easily, but with struggle and stress. Whether this ought to be so or not, it is so. Whether the forces on the wrong side are marshaled by an active and evil personality, a devil, or whether they are simply the undeveloped and baser natures of men, reluctant to ascend, and clinging to the evil which they know best, still it is made plain by our observation in our own life-time and by our knowledge of those who lived earlier, that whatever is won on the line of progress is won by the courage, the faithfulness, the perseverance, of those who have the fullest light. Nothing good comes easily in the social state; it is secured only as the result of conflict, and secured usually not by a sweeping and complete success at any one time, but piece by piece, "here a little, and there a little."

Experience then surely teaches that it would be fatuous and treasonable for us to relax our efforts, if we would have things bettered. We may see, certainly, without difficulty how forces for good and forces for evil are balanced at the present moment. There is an increase of knowledge through the progress of science, but a pagan unspirituality confronts our enlightenment. We have laid aside many old barbarisms, but there is a deep desire for our own luxurious living, even at the cost of others' sufferings. Peaceableness commands increased respect, but oppression is yet bold and defiant.

We do not need to be told by those who are at ease in their possessions, or who sit oblivious to the signs of the times, how much of good there now is in the world, and how many nice people there are alive this year. This is beside the issue; it does not meet the question. The question is, as we have stated it: Granting that good outweighs evil, granting that evolution is onward and upward, is it true that the forces which make for good dare relax those struggles by which, as we read, and as we see, progress comes? Let us look about us—look in our families, look in our neighborhood, look abroad, judge from the small things to the larger, from reforms in the narrower life to those in the broader—and where is there the appearance of any fact to justify us in thinking that an active, faithful effort for the good is not required of us, day by day, hour by hour, as much now as ever? We are here to do the will of God, and we are not automatons, but possessors of a choice. What is the choice? How do we show and prove its character?

THE revenue for the United States for the last fiscal year, (ending Sixth month 30, 1899), from the numerous "war taxes" was $102,617,763. The stamp taxes alone yielded over $37,000,000. There seems to be no likelihood of these "war taxes" being repealed for a long time to come.

SUBSCRIPTIONS amounting to $4,423.60, in aid of the Doukhobors are acknowledged in The Friend (Philadelphia), last week, including two subscriptions of $1,000 each, three of $500, and one of $300. These are by Friends of Arch Street Yearly Meeting.

BIRTHS.

LAMB.—In Baltimore, Md., Ninth month 13, 1899, to Arthur Lincoln and Edith M. Lamb, a son, who is named Arthur Motter.

MARRIAGES.

LINCOLN—HUTCHINSON.—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Maybeury, McDowell county, West Virginia, on Fourth-day, Tenth month 11, 1899, by Friends' ceremony, John Lincoln, of Oxford, Chester county, Pa., and Rachel Lloyd Hutchinson, daughter of Edward S. and Clay L. Hutchinson.

NEILD—LANGE.—Ninth month 5, 1899, at Westminster meeting-house, London, Newman Neild, M.B., of 15 Westbury Road, Durdham Down, Bristol, only son of Theodore and Helen N. Neild, of The Vista, Leominster, and Gertrude, third daughter of the late Hermann L. Lange, C.E., of Manchester, and Stéphanie Lange, of 23 Nethershall Gardens, N. W.

SMITH—BRANSON.—At the home of the bride's parents, near Selma, Ohio, under the care of Green Plain Monthly Meeting of Friends, Tenth month 4, 1899, Howard S. Smith, son of Samuel and Esther Jane Smith (the latter deceased), and Lewella Branson, daughter of Nathan V. and Anna S. Branson. All of the former place.

TURNER—CHAPMAN.—At the residence of the bride's parents, "Heronwood," Sands Point, Long Island, Tenth month 11, 1899, under the care of New York Monthly Meeting of Friends, Henry Chandlee Turner, son of Richard T. and Martha B. Turner, of Betterson, Md., and Charlotte Haines, daughter of Noah H. and Marianna W. Chapman.

WARRINGTON—GARTLEY.—Tenth month 11, 1899, by Friends' ceremony, Curtis Warrington and Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel H. and Mary C. Gartley, of Philadelphia.

DEATHS.

GAUSE.—At his home in Waynesville, Ohio, after many years of annoying and a few weeks of painful affliction, Ninth month 6, 1899, Clarkson Gause, aged 85 years, 5 months, and 25 days; a member and Elder of Miami Monthly Meeting.

He was a valuable and faithful Friend and good citizen—son of Samuel and Mary (Peirce) Gause, early settlers in the neighborhood. Was cheerful—even merry—industrious and successful. A man of little outward pretension or sanctimony, but tenderly regarding those in affliction, towards whom he was sympathetic and helpful. He was thrice married. First to Sidney Thomas; of the fruit of the union there remains one daughter, M. Elizabeth G. Packer, wife of Franklin Packer of the same meeting. Second, to Elizabeth C. Sherwood, nee Smith, of the Bucks county, Pa., Smiths, widow of John Sherwood. One daughter resulted from that union also, now Anna G. Jones, wife of Samuel Jones, of Philadelphia. Third, to Ruth Richardson, of Green Plain, who died without issue, in 1889.

His daughters had the melancholy satisfaction of being present to assist in caring for him through the last weeks, during which he lacked nothing that sympathetic and obliging neighbors could supply.

Having been faithful to every trust, finished his work and set his house in order, he has been gathered to his rest as a shock of corn in its season. His life, and the sweet savor of his name, invite to faithful and upright living on the part of all. C. B.

GREGG.—Mahlon Janney, second son of Leander M. and Mary E. Gregg, and grandson of the late Mahlon T. and Frances S. Janney, of Springboro', Ohio, was born at Camden, Ind., Second month 18, 1878, and died at the home of his parents, in Dayton, Ohio, Ninth month 17, 1899.

When he was seven years of age the family removed to Springboro', Ohio, where they resided until their removal to Dayton, one year ago.

An illness extending over a period of almost one and a half years, was borne with a patience and fortitude truly remarkable in one so young. *

LEEDOM.—In Lower Merion, Pa., Tenth month 10, 1899, Benedict Leedom, in his 86th year; a valued member of Merion Particular and Radnor Monthly Meeting.

LEEDOM.—Tenth month 12, 1899, Alice, daughter of Sarah T. and the late Edward Leedom. Funeral from the home of her brother, Walter F. Leedom, Bristol, Pa.

SMITH.—At the residence of Horace G. Broadhurst, Buckingham, Bucks county, Pa., Tenth month 9, 1899, Sarah Jane, widow of Benjamin W. Smith, aged 74 years.

Interment at Buckingham Friends' ground.

WALTON.—Tenth month 14, 1899, Edward H. Walton, in his 87th year.

Funeral private, Second-day, 16th, from his residence, 3721 Lancaster Avenue, Philadelphia.

WILLETS.—Suddenly, at his home near Mineola, Long Island, Tenth month 10, 1899, in the 80th year of his age, Isaac W. Willets, a life-long member of Westbury Monthly Meeting, leaving a widow and three children.

He was one of the oldest and most respected residents of North Hempstead, where he had always lived, having been born near Westbury in 1819. His funeral was held at the Westbury meeting-house on Fifth-day, the 12th inst., and was largely attended by his relatives and the many friends he had made during his long and useful life. *

WOOLMAN.—On the morning of Tenth month 14, 1899, Elgar S., only son of Isaac L. and Mary S. Woolman, of Crosswicks, N. J.

About to enter his 17th year, after a brief and suffering illness, this young life went out. The little meeting at Crosswicks will sadly miss his bright face from their midst, where he was a regular attender. *

PAUL TOMLINSON.

Of typhoid fever, at his home, in Winchester, Randolph county, Indiana, Ninth month 27, 1899, Paul Tomlinson, aged 65 years, two months and one day; a valued member of White Water Monthly Meeting.

He was born and raised in Highland county, Ohio, married Lydia Ann Daniel, and later settled in Green county, where he carried on farming and stock-raising, and a few years ago moved to Winchester. He took little pains to polish the exterior, but had a cultivated mind and an honest, kindly heart. He sympathized with those in distress, helped the needy, and sheltered the homeless with a generous hand, and without display or pretense, not letting his left hand know what his right hand did; stood with wonderful firmness for what he was convinced was right, was an advocate of temperance and purity, and of justice and freedom to all. He regarded all forms of useful labor as highly honorable, and did his own full share without shirking the hard or difficult parts—his full share of the honest work of the world.

He leaves the choice inheritance of a good name to his bereaved companion and their three sons and grand children. May they bear their trials bravely and live nobly, purely and serviceably, as becomes their long line of worthy Quaker ancestry!

He was the son of Moses and Ruth (Smith) Tomlinson, which Moses was the son of Josiah and Charity Tomlinson, whose parents respectively were Josiah and Olive Tomlinson and Moses and Dinah Mendenhall,—all North Carolina Quaker stock, and which Ruth was daughter of Joseph and Rachel (Hayhurst) Smith, of Bucks county, Pennsylvania, whose respective parents were Thomas and Mary (Ross) Smith and John and Mary (Wiggins) Hayhurst. The said Thomas was the son of Thomas and Elizabeth Smith, and the said John, son of Cuthbert and Elizabeth Hayhurst, and the parents of the said Mary Ross were Thomas and Kesia (Wilkerson) Ross, and those of Mary Wiggins Bezelleel and Rachel Wiggins. This Rachel was one of the daughters of an older brother of said Cuthbert Hayhurst, so that both the brothers Hayhurst were ancestors of said Ruth Smith. Their father's name was also Cuthbert Hayhurst, who was an eminent minister among Friends, came from England in the Welcome, with William Penn, in 1682, and died in his own house in Bucks county in 1683,—the next year after his son Cuthbert was born. Nicholas Waln wrote a memorial of him, which, with many other memorials of deceased Friends, was published in a book in the latter part of last century. It is believed that Cuthbert, second, was likewise a minister.

Thomas Ross was also a minister of note, traveled much in the exercise of his gift, and while on a religious visit in England died, Second month 13, 1786 (one account says 1785), and was buried at York. Many of the Rosses were highly gifted. Edward Hicks said, "they were high-headed fellows." Among them were John Ross, a physician, and Thomas and Phineas Ross, lawyers, of Lebanon, Warren county, Ohio,—men of marked ability. Their sister married the eminent Thomas Corwin, Governor of Ohio, Representative and Senator in Congress, Secretary of the Treasury, Minister to Mexico, etc.; yet not so distinguished for any of these offices as for his great gifts and powers as a public speaker. C. B.

The area of the Transvaal Republic is 120,000 square miles, or about the same size as the combined areas of the States of Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Vermont.

THE DOUKHOBORS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

THESE persecuted, patient, long suffering people have been enabled to remove from Russia to a region in the British Dominion, near Winnipeg, distant from railroads or traveled roads. Their number now in this land is about 7,000. Those who arrived early enough were enabled to plant some crops, but a severe frost in the Eighth month greatly injured their potatoes and tender vegetables. Two thousand of them arrived too late to plant any crops. The long winter is now near upon them, with poor, insufficient buildings to protect them, and not much food of any kind. Most of them eat no meat. They have done all that industry, perseverance and economy can do for themselves. Their situation is critical, and the time is short to get needed supplies to them. They need corn-meal, flour, onions, and potatoes. What is now urgent is money, promptly sent to the care of H. M. Jenkins, at the office of FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER, 921 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

No time should be lost. The object is a most worthy one, and the need urgent.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto Me."

Money now sent will be used for the relief of these suffering people with the least possible delay.

Wilmington, Del.

DAVID FERRIS.

THE "INTELLIGENCER" FUND.

A Friend, Philad'a,	$ 10.00
M. W. M., Huntington, Ind.,	2.50
Cash subscriptions, collected by David Ferris, Wilmington, Delaware, (see list below),	29.00
R. B.,	10.00
Cash,	100.00
A Friend,	2.00
	153.50
Acknowledged, Tenth month 7,	5.00
	$158.50

COLLECTIONS IN WILMINGTON MONTHLY MEETING.

David Ferris desires us to acknowledge the following. He paid $100 directly to William Evans, treasurer of the Fund raising by Friends of Arch Street Yearly Meeting. The remainder is acknowledged above :

Albert W. Smith,	5.00
Clement B. Smyth,	5.00
Alfred D. Warner,	5.00
Lindley C. Kent,	2.00
William Painter,	2.00
Wilmer Palmer,	1.00
Allen Speakman,	1.00
John Richardson, Jr.,	1.00
Lewis Brosius,	1.00
Benj. K. Smedley,	1.00
John B. Martin,	1.00
David J. Reinhardt,	1.00
Joseph M. Mather,	1.00
Frances Mather,	1.00
Mary Mather,	1.00
William P. Bancroft,	$100.00
	$129.00

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

At the Central Executive Meeting of Friends of Chicago, Albert B. Bayes, a member of Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting, England, was present at our meetings on the 1st and 8th inst., and on both occasions spoke acceptably. He is traveling in this country, accompanied by a companion, and is on his way to the Pacific coast. Coming here (Chicago) he has visited the meetings of both branches of Friends in New York and Canada, and hopes to stop in Philadelphia on his return trip. C. J. E.

A religious meeting will be held at the unused meeting-house at Providence, (Montgomery county), near Phoenixville, on First-day afternoon next, the 22d inst., at three o'clock. Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting's Visiting Committee are expected at Schuylkill in the morning, and a number of Friends are likely to be at Providence in the afternoon.

THE MOHONK INDIAN CONFERENCE.

THE annual Conference of Friends of the Indians, at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., was held last week, on the 11th, 12th, and 13th inst., upon the invitation of Albert K. Smiley and wife. There was about the usual attendance, and the proceedings, as usual, were of much interest to those who are concerned for the advancement of the Indian people. Among those in attendance, as members of the Conference, were Joseph J. Janney and Bertha Janney, of Baltimore; Marianna Burgess and A. J. Standing, of the Carlisle Indian School; Philip C. Garrett, James T. Shinn, and members of his family, Charles M. and Mrs. Lukens, Edward M. Wistar and wife, and Herbert Welsh, of Philadelphia; Samuel M. Brosius, of Washington, D. C., agent of the Indian Rights Association; Mrs. A. S. Quinton, president of the Women's National Indian Aid Association; and Howard M. Jenkins and wife.

The United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, W. A. Jones, was present, also Estelle Reel, the Superintendent of Indian Schools. Dr. Merrill E. Gates (formerly president of Amherst College), who presided over the sessions, has accepted the position of secretary to the United States Board of Indian Commissioners, at Washington, and is actively engaged in the Indian work. He made last summer an extended trip among the Indians on the Pacific coast and in the Northwest, in company, for some time, with Major Pratt, of the Carlisle School.

Six sessions were held altogether, occupying the forenoons from 10 to 1 o'clock, and the evenings from 8 to 10, or later. The afternoons were given to recreation,—driving, walking, boating, etc. The weather was uniformly fine, and it was by common agreement declared that the autumn foliage on the mountains about Mohonk was the finest that had ever been seen,—certainly that it had never been exceeded. The leaves were just beginning to fall; the chestnuts, the maples, the oaks, the sumach, the low huckleberries, all contributed to a most remarkable and most exquisite glow of colors. The coming of so many "Indians of the Mohonk Tribe," Albert Smiley said, had made an Indian summer of beauty seldom seen!

Most of two sessions was occupied in discussion of a report presented by a committee appointed last year, of which Philip C. Garrett was chairman. It made several suggestions as to the Indian service, the chief of which were (1) a proposal to abolish, as soon as may be practicable, seventeen of the present agencies; (2) that all agents be selected by civil service examination, instead of political influences; (3) that the powers of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs—the head of the Indian Bureau—be made more definite and less limited, so that his authority and control may be more proportionate to his responsibilities and his knowledge of the details of the service. In the discussion of this report many points were brought out illustrating the present situation of Indian affairs. It is generally conceded that the service has distinctly improved within the last quarter-century; that most of the Indian agents are good and capable men, though there are some very unfit; that the schools are doing excellent work, and the teachers are generally devoted and efficient; that the results of the educational work are beginning to plainly appear in the rising generations; and that in most respects the adult Indians are making progress.

Several mission workers and others actively engaged in Indian work gave reports "from the field." Among these were Miss Collins, of Standing Rock agency, in North Dakota, whose reports to the Conference in 1896 were a most interesting feature, and who now added touching details illustrating the Indian character; W. M. Wellman, a missionary among the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, at Darlington, Oklahoma; F. H. Wright, of Dallas, Texas, a Choctaw Indian of half-blood, who has been at work lately among the Apaches of Geronimo's band, who are still held by the War Department "prisoners" at Fort Reno, in the Indian Territory; Miss Scoville (grand-daughter of Henry Ward Beecher), teacher at Hampton School, and especially acquainted with the Sioux; and others. General John Eaton, formerly United States Commissioner of Education, gave a resumé of the situation of the Alaska Indians,—who have never received government rations or payments of money,—and of the success of the reindeer enterprise. Dr. Gates gave an interesting account of his visits to the Klamath reservation in northern Oregon, to the Pi Utes and Blackfeet; his description of the sittings of the Indian court, presided over by Judge Shorty White Grass ("four feet four inches in height, with a head like Daniel Webster's, broad shoulders, and a green parrot sitting on his left arm"), was a piece of description which all highly enjoyed, and which, with other reports from the field, we shall reproduce in the INTELLIGENCER when the full report of the Conference comes out.

The Indian lace industry, directed by Sybil Carter (described in the INTELLIGENCER a few weeks ago), continues, and she has established two more schools, one of them in South Dakota, whose support is guaranteed for eight years. Her pottery enterprise (for which the Conference subscribed $1,500 last year) has been located at Laguna, New Mexico, on the line of the Santa Fé railroad, and its success is hopefully expected. A kiln of approved character has been built for "hard firing," and the process of giving a good glaze, it is believed, has been assured. The pottery of the Indians of the Southwest has long been regarded with interest, as to its form, but it needed hard firing and better glazing. It is to be hoped Miss Carter's enterprise will be entirely successful; a subscription to go on with it secured $2,000 from those present at the Conference.

The common question, as to the increase or decrease of the Indians, was succinctly answered by Commissioner Jones, who said that those of pure blood were decreasing, but that by the increase of those of mixed blood (all of whom are classified as Indians), the total shows a steady growth. There are many marriages between the races on the frontier, especially in the Indian Territory. In the course of a half-century more the Indians of pure blood will probably be few.

—The hotel at Lake Mohonk has undergone important alterations since the Conference met last year, a new stone section having replaced an older frame part, and the Conference was now held in the just-finished parlor, a large and finely constructed room, with a grand outlook on the lake, and over to the mountains.

H. M. J.

PHILADELPHIA QUARTERLY MEETING FRIENDS' HOME.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

THERE are doubtless many of your readers within the limits of Philadelphia Quarter who will feel interested in knowing just what progress has been made by the Committee appointed by the Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting for the establishment of a Home.

The first appeal sent out by that Committee asking for contributions brought responses from over one hundred friends, with subscriptions amounting to $11,924.50. This was the amount in hand on Sixth month 1, 1898.

About that time, the Managers of the Friends' Boarding House Association voluntarily offered to hand over to the Committee, absolutely and without reservation, the premises 1708 Race Street, together with all the furniture and other personal property therein contained, subject however to a mortgage of $3,500. This the Committee accepted, and steps were taken looking to a transfer of the title, the Committee, pending such transfer, taking possession of the property. Their next step was to pay off the mortgage for $3,500, or rather to have it assigned to Trustees, to be held for their benefit and use until the title was legally consummated. This reduced the actual cash in hand to about $8,400, but, assuming the property conveyed them to be worth say $10,000 (which is probably a low valuation), it increased the actual holdings of the Committee to about $18,400.

About Seventh month 1, 1898, the Committee appointed to look for a suitable location for a Home, made a report recommending the purchase of premises No. 5800 Greene street, Germantown. It contained about 150 feet front on Greene street, extending westward a distance of about 150 feet to a back street; having a house and stable thereon, which it was thought could be utilized for the purposes and benefit of the Home, and was situated directly opposite to the Public Park (formerly the Wistar property) which would forever remain open, looking out into Germantown Avenue. The recommendation of the Committee was approved, and the premises purchased for $21,500; $14,000 of which was paid in cash, and $7,500 allowed to remain on mortgage. Of the subscriptions previously received, the sum of $10,000 had been donated by Anna T. Jeanes, $5,000 from the Estate of Samuel Jeanes, and $5,000 from the Estate of Joseph Jeanes. Upon learning that the Committee had purchased a property to be used as a Home, she generously donated a further sum of $5,000 to be used in payment of the purchase money, and $1,000 additional to be used in furnishing it. This gave the Committee about $13,400 available cash, to which was added their quota of income from the Trustees of the Joseph Jeanes Fund, viz:—

To Fifth month 1, 1897, . . .	$1,057.61
“ Eleventh “ “ “ . . .	874.64
“ Fifth “ “ “ . . .	946.11

$2,878.36

making altogether a total of about $16,000, out of which was paid the $14,000 purchase money, leaving a balance for running expenses. They have since that date received for account of income from the Trustees two further payments as follows:—

To Eleventh month 1, 1898, . . .	$946.11
“ Fifth “ “ 1899, . . .	706.47

The Home at 5800 Greene Street, after considerable expense incurred in the way of alterations, such as plumbing, paper-hanging and repairs, was ready for occupancy and opened, Tenth month 1, 1898. Therefore the first year in the history of the Home has now expired, and the Management will be able to form a close approximation of the income and expenditures likely to accrue during the next fiscal year.

The present building accommodates about eight or nine boarders comfortably, besides providing accommodations for the matron and other necessary help. Owing to the limited capacity of the present building, the cost per head for maintenance seems abnormally high. There being ample ground available for an extension or addition to the present building, the Committee may at some future time deem itself justified in considering an enlargement of the present building.

If double the present number could be accommodated, the cost per head would be materially reduced.

Considerable criticism has been indulged in by some who think the Home should, upon the payment of an entrance fee of say $200 or $250, be willing to agree to provide a Home for applicants for life. A little reflection should show the fallacy of such a proposition. The Home has no Endowment Fund to fall back upon for such a purpose. How could they possibly assume such a responsibility without knowing where the necessary funds were to come from? If it was simply providing a supply of necessary food, there might be some ground for assuming the care of a limited number of that description, but it must be remembered in case of accident or sickness, the doctor must be paid, nurses engaged and provided for with wages and board, and such clothing furnished as would be needed by such inmates.

Surely no one can imagine this could be done out of the quota received from the Jeanes Fund. Moreover, it has never been the thought of the generous friend who was instrumental in placing this Fund in the hand of the Yearly Meeting to provide a free Home for friends. It was expressly stated when the gift was made that it was to assist in establishing Boarding Homes for aged and infirm friends. That is, a congenial and comfortable home, where friends of limited income could be respectably provided for, at a minimum charge for board. It has always been a rule in our Society not to let the right hand know what the left hand was doing when assisting any of its indigent members. To establish a free Home for such, would at once make a very decided and undesirable departure from this custom, destroying that creditable feeling of self-respect which shrinks from making public our private necessities. There does not seem room for any concern to arise with our members on this score. The way to overcome it is plain, and void of all objections. Each Monthly Meeting is supposed to know best who among its membership should be assisted. If any such desires to take advantage of the opportunities presented by the Quarterly Meeting Home, an arrangement can easily be made and entered into between the Monthly Meeting Committee and the Admission Committee of the Home, the Monthly Meeting agreeing to assume some portion of the amount paid for board, the applicant agreeing to pay the balance.

A concern having arisen in the minds of some of the Committee in charge of the Home, that way should be made for such cases among the membership of the Philadelphia Quarter as are unable to do more than pay a suitable entrance fee, a sub-committee was appointed and an appeal sent out for subscriptions with a view to raising an Endowment Fund of Fifty Thousand Dollars, the income only to be used in providing a suitable Home for the class mentioned. Thus far about $900 has been subscribed. It is greatly to be hoped that Friends generally will see their way clear to send forward their subscriptions to complete the amount asked for. What better way can be found to silence criticism in regard to what class of members shall or shall not be entitled to admission, than to generously and promptly respond to the recent appeal made by the Committee, so that all worthy applicants may be provided for? No matter how little you may feel disposed to contribute to the cause, send it along, whatever it may be, with a cheerful heart, and if all do this promptly, the amount will speedily be made up.

Should there be any point upon which Friends desire further information in connection with the Home, they should not hesitate to make it known by personal application to some member of the Committee or by letter to its clerk, or by inquiry through the columns of the INTELLIGENCER, with a reasonable assurance that the information will be forthcoming.

ROBERT MORRIS EARLY.

Philad'a, Tenth month 9, 1899.

OUR dead are never dead to us until we have forgotten them.—George Eliot.

TAXES ON CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

THE allusion in the INTELLIGENCER to the legacy of $100,000, left by John G. Lane, of West Philadelphia, to New York Yearly Meeting, of which James Wood, Mt. Kisco, is a member, also some time ago to the legacies of our late friend, Harriet W. Paist, showing that one-tenth of these will be deducted for State tax and United States "war tax," prompts me to call attention to a method by which this may be avoided.

Our late friend, Jesse Ogden, although wearing the Friends' distinctive dress and supposed to be a member, did not actually become such till a few years before his death, for which privilege he felt grateful, and when it was decided to start a free school fund, in conversing with John Saunders (one of the committee), on his way from meeting, he expressed his interest, and that he would like to aid it, but his income being limited, he was not in a position to do so. Subsequent conferences resulted in Jesse presenting a communication offering to transfer to the monthly meeting twenty shares of railroad stock (par value $1,000), conditioned on the income being paid to him during life. This was accepted, and the matter thus settled did not suffer any "shave" on account of collateral inheritance tax.

Where possible, it is very desirable to have concerns attended to whilst the parties are living. The late Robert Morrisson, of Richmond, Ind., had left in his will a bequest for a public library, but he afterwards concluded to erect it whilst he was living, and remarked his satisfaction in doing so.

Philadelphia.

J. M. T., Jr.

Educational Department.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.

THE College library has recently been enriched by a gift of more than twenty volumes, duplicates from the Friends' Historical Library [the collection kept in the fire-proof room in the College]. This swells the library department of Friends' literature—biography, history, etc.—to more than four hundred volumes. Many of these books have an especial interest and value on account of their age, as, for example, a large folio, calf-bound edition of the "Life and Works of William Penn," published in London in 1726. There is also a "Journal of George Fox," dated 1765, and, older still, a copy of "Gospel Truth Demonstrated," London, 1706.

The Library has also purchased a number of books relating to Dante, so that the students who take up the study of the Divine Comedy under Dr. Appleton, will find a very admirable and complete Dante library at their disposal. Dr. Appleton's course in masterpieces of foreign literature has proved exceedingly popular, the class being a very large one. The French and German classes are also unusually full.

On the evening of the 13th inst., Mr. Allen, of the University of Pennsylvania, gave a delightful, informal talk on College settlement work. Mr. Allen has taken an active, personal interest in this field, and has done valuable work in the Philadelphia settlement.

The first regular meeting of the Young Friends' Association was held on the evening of the 15th, with a very good attendance. Hannah Clothier Hull read an excellent paper on "Mission Work among Friends," which was followed by a discussion. An interesting paper on "Revelations" was given by Emma Waln, of Philadelphia. At the close of the meeting a number of new members joined the Association.

M. S. H.

GEORGE SCHOOL NOTES.

On First-day mornings the students are divided into the following classes : Seniors and Juniors are studying the Gospel of Matthew with Principal Maris ; third year and second year classes, History of the Old Testament with Prof. Nutt, and the first-year students the Life and Travels of Paul with Belle Vansant.

Seventh-day afternoon, the 7th inst., the Bucks County Natural Science Association held its semi-annual meeting at George School, with Nathaniel Richardson president and Agnes Cunningham secretary. The Ferns of Bucks county, the places where they grow, and the best time of year for studying them, was very interestingly discussed by Belle Vansant, of the Biological Department. J. P. Hutchinson, of Newtown, presented an exhaustive paper on "Our Creek Lamprey ;" George Pennock, of Philadelphia, read a paper that had been prepared by Mary Walter, of Philadelphia, subject, "Does the Delaware Water Gap Consist of Two Gorges?"

The Penn Literary Society met on the evening of the 7th. Ernest R. Darby recited "The First Banjo ;" Bernice Eves, "Old Robin ;" A. Russell Burton, Kipling's "East and West." The paper was read by the editor, Ralph Jackson, and Frank Eves spoke on the subject of Patriotism.

The General Committee was in session at the school on Sixth-day, 13th, about thirty members in attendance.

Students are enjoying much of the out-of-door hours in gathering chestnuts in the George School wood ; the trees are numerous, and have been loaded with nuts. The corn crop in the vicinity is so abundant that the farmers are glad of the assistance they get on Seventh-days, in cutting and husking, from fifteen or twenty boys of the School.

Several students have entered since the opening of school, making the enrolment to date larger than the total number in attendance last year.

The Pennsylvania railroad has withdrawn its opposition to the running of the trolley under the "Cut Off" bridge at Langhorne, and men are at work laying the track, which they expect to finish this week. This will make a continuous line from Bristol to Doylestown, passing by the school grounds.

*

LITERARY NOTES.

THE second volume of President Isaac Sharpless's "History of Quaker Government in Pennsylvania" has been issued (T. S. Leach & Co., 29 N. 7th St., Philadelphia) under the title, "The Quakers in the Revolution." It includes a narrative of the period of Pennsylvania history from 1756 (at which time his previous volume closed) down to the close of the Revolution, and it deals particularly with the relation the Friends held to the war. This is a subject which has been many times debated, briefly or voluminously, and which has never been fairly opened to the light of truth. The present monograph is a valuable contribution and an intelligent study of the subject.

The Address by John William Graham at the Summer School at Birmingham, on "Isaac Penington," has been reprinted in a pamphlet, and issued by Morland and Henson, Birmingham. We shall do our readers a service which we think they will appreciate by reprinting liberally from it.

The Century announces a chapter of autobiography by Mark Twain, "My Debut as a Literary Person," and that the new serial story, by Dr. Weir Mitchell, to begin in the issue for the coming month, will be "The Autobiography of a Quack."

One of the latest additions to the series of "American Statesmen," published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., is Prof. Hart's biography of Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury under President Lincoln. The same publishers issue "A Dividend to Labor," by Prof. N. P. Gilman—an intelligent discussion of important phases of the labor problem. Prof. Gilman is one of the chief authorities on profit sharing.

Ellwood Roberts, of Norristown, author of "Lyrics of Quakerism," a volume of poems which has had a considerable circulation among Friends and others, and of "Old Richland Families," a genealogical work including the descendants of Edward Roberts, his ancestors and others, has in press a companion volume to the last named, entitled "Plymouth Meeting," which will give a history of the establishment of it; extracts from the early minutes of Friends' meetings concerning it, a complete list of marriages, deaths and burials of its members; biographical sketches of Ellis Pugh, Samuel Eivezey, Joel Lare, Dr. Hiram Corson, Thomas Hovenden and other prominent residents of the vicinity in the past two centuries.

The book will contain everything now accessible in reference to the early settlement and history of a very interesting locality, including much historical and other data never before published. The volume will be ready about New Year. It will contain 250 pages. The edition is limited to 150 copies. The price is $2. Orders should be sent to the author, who will furnish specimen pages on application.

Ellwood Roberts has also in preparation "Early Abington Friends," the third volume of the series, to be issued in 1900.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

CAMDEN, N. J.—The Young Friends' Association of Camden met Tenth month 3.

After our summer vacation most of our members were present, an earnest little band of workers, each and everyone ready to do his share of the winter's work. The president, William H. Ivins, opened the meeting. The minutes of the previous meeting, and also those of the Special Committee, were read.

The program of the evening was an excellent paper, prepared by Anna B. Sheppard, on the Peace Conference, which called forth much expression. One Friend felt the most important fact accomplished by the Conference was the system of Arbitration they had established, and also the permanent Court. Another Friend felt to abolish war we must abolish the causes; that we cannot see terrible wrongs committed at our very doors without trying to right them. Peace was one of the original principles of the Society of Friends, and now the greatest nations of the world recognize its wonderful influence. We feel we have much to be proud of.

The second paper of the evening was entitled, "Quakerism: Its Beliefs and Message," by William E. Turner, read by Emily W. Collings, Jr. It was much enjoyed.

Howard M. Cooper prepared a paper on the "Oldest and Youngest Young Friends' Associations," he being a member of both. He spoke of the formation of the first Young Friends' Association in 1888, when some half dozen Friends met in the parlor at 15th and Race streets, Philadelphia, to consider a way of studying the Bible so as to assist the teachers of our First-day schools. It was finally decided that not only Biblical knowledge was what was needed, but a more thorough, intelligent comprehension of Friends' beliefs, history, and work, with a more earnest and faithful zeal in the carrying forward of that work, and in the living up to the high standard set by the founders of our Society. The work has continued to grow until now, eleven years later, thirty-five Young Friends' Associations are established. If we remember that our purposes are serious and of high aim, we will accomplish something, and perhaps many of the purposes set forth in our preamble, and doing this the interest in our meetings will grow, not slacken, and our Quakerism will be strengthened.

After attending to the new business, roll was called and the meeting adjourned till Eleventh month 7.

Laura Collings, Secretary.

CORNWALL, N. Y.—Cornwall Friends' Association met at the home of J. Q. Brown, Tenth month 1, 1899. A paper was presented by Rowland Cocks, entitled "What constitutes a good time?" The author's opinion of the subject is summed up in the following: "I am fully persuaded that those have the best time who strive to live unselfish lives, and do as much good and as little harm in this world as they know how."

A selection from the INTELLIGENCER, entitled "Experience in a Mid-week Meeting," was read by Charles F. Seaman.

After the sentiments were given the meeting adjourned.
B. E. BROWN, Sec.

COMMUNICATIONS.

DESCENDANTS OF JOHN WOOLMAN.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

IN the INTELLIGENCER of Tenth month 7th, it is stated in the report of the Woodstown Friends' Association that but one descendant of John Woolman is now living. John Woolman had but one child to grow to maturity, a daughter, who married John Comfort. They had five sons and one daughter. All of them married and left children. One only of that generation is now living; but the others left numerous descendants. **

Fallsington, Bucks county, Pa.

AARON M. POWELL'S "REMINISCENCES."

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

The many friends of the late Aaron M. Powell will be glad to know that the book upon which he was engaged at the time of his death is in press, and will be issued early next month (about Eleventh month 10). The title is "Personal Reminiscences of Anti-Slavery and Other Reforms and Reformers," and, as this name indicates, the volume presents sketches of many of the most prominent Anti-Slavery advocates, as well as of the leaders in other branches of philanthropic work. Such men and women as William Lloyd Garrison, Lucretia Mott, Wendell Phillips, Lydia Maria Child, Charles Sumner, John G. Whittier, and others of the noble band of reformers, who did so much to overthrow the slave-power in our country, are presented as they appeared to one who was their trusted friend and co-worker.

At the time of his death the author had written about two-thirds of the book, his last chapter treating of his intercourse with Sumner, Whittier, and Lydia Maria Child. It seems remarkable that the last words he wrote in connection with the book were the words which Lydia Maria Child had written for the inscription on her gravestone,—words which, taken in connection with his own strong and abiding faith in the higher life beyond, into which he was so soon to enter, seem peculiarly fitting and proper: "Ye call us dead; but we are only truly living now."

This volume of "Personal Reminiscences" will have especial interest and value to all who knew and loved the writer, and who cherish the memory of his unselfish Christian character, and his life of consecration to great causes. It will be peculiarly valuable to the young, to whom it has been dedicated, for in addition to the personal reminiscences as presented by the author, the volume contains a completed sketch of his life written by his sister, Elizabeth Powell Bond, Dean of Swarthmore College, as well as an Introductory Chapter by Isaac H. Clothier, and tributes to the memory of the author, by Dr. Edward H. Magill and Canon Rawnsley, of Keswick, England. In writing the book the author had constantly before him the thought of preparing it for the young, and he referred to it several times as his "legacy to the young people."

Apart from its personal and historical interest this book is one that will surely accomplish good; the helpful, uplifting influence that always proceeded from its author will also go forth from it; and it is therefore a work that can be recommended to Friends for their own perusal, and as deserving the widest circulation they can give it.

The book will be published by Anna Rice Powell, Plainfield, N. J., and will contain about 300 pages; with cuts and illustrations. Price $2.00; by mail, $2.20.

R.
Conshohocken, Pa.

IN MEMORIAM.

ISAAC W. WILLETS.

[Died Tenth month 10, 1899.]

DEAR brother, lying here so still,
 With pale hands folded on thy breast,
 Naught know'st thou more of pain or ill,
 But peace divine and perfect rest.
 No hero thou of war and strife,
 Far from such scenes thy lot was cast,
 In daily duties' humble round
 Thy life in calm content was passed.
 Thou hadst an even-balanced mind,
 In judgment clear, in action just,
 So tender, generous, and sincere,
 A man in whom all men could trust.
 Thou kept the straight and narrow path
 Through all life's crooked, devious ways,
 With feeling heart for others' griefs
 And sins. Could there be higher praise?
 May all our memories of thee
 Spring like sweet blossoms from the sod,
 And twine about our stricken hearts,
 Lifting them upward to their God.

C.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

OH, autumn leaves!
 Summer's bright roses one by one have past;
 Gone is the beauty of the golden sheaves;
 Ye come at last,
 Prophets of winter hours approaching fast!

Oh, autumn leaves!
 Why look ye thus so brilliant in decay?
 Why, for the dying year, when nature grieves,
 Are ye so gay
 With richer hues than graced her opening day?

Oh, autumn leaves!
 Ye, as ye don your crimson robes of mirth,
 While dull decay a moment scarce reprieves
 Your forms from earth—
 Ye tell us, happier far is death than birth!

Oh, autumn leaves!
 Like you the dying saint in splendor grows;
 With each faint pulse of life that feebly heaves
 At evening's close,
 His every grace with added glory grows.

Oh, autumn leaves!
 Like you he casts aside all hues of gloom,
 And of his bright'ning hopes a chaplet weaves,
 That o'er his tomb,
 Throws the glad promise of eternal bloom.

—Selected.

THE SURRENDER OF CONSCIENCE.

"CAPTAIN, what do you think," I asked,
 "Of the part your soldiers play?"
 The captain answered, "I do not think—
 I do not think—I obey."
 "Do you think you should shoot a patriot down,
 And help a tyrant slay?"
 The captain answered, "I do not think—
 I do not think—I obey."
 "Do you think that your conscience was meant to die,
 And your brains to rot away?"
 The captain answered, "I do not think—
 I do not think—I obey."

—Ernest H. Crosby.

UNITED STATES CONSUL TOURGEE reports from Bordeaux, France, that on account of the high price of wine, many French people now use a drink made out of raisins and American dried apples. It is called piquette, and it is said to be wholesome, palatable, and non-intoxicating.

WHITES AND BLACKS IN THE SOUTH.

Address of Rev. Dr. R. F. Campbell, of Asheville, N. C., at the Third Annual Negro Conference, at Hampton School, Va., in seventh month, 1899. (Dr. Campbell was asked by Dr. H. B. Frissell, President of the School, to speak in place of a speaker who was absent.)

I CAME to Hampton to hear, not to speak. I am a southern white man, and like a great host of white men in the South, I have been interested from boyhood in the advancement of the Negro race. When I was a lad of thirteen I opened a little night school for colored men, in which were enrolled from ten to fifteen dusky pupils, fanning in age from twenty to sixty. No special credit is due me for this. I got more, far more, than I gave. Those men paid me seventy cents apiece per month, and the aggregate sum made a good deal of money for a small boy in the pinching years that followed soon after the civil war. But I got something else which in later years I have learned to value far above the money, however it may have been at the time. I got a knowledge of the Negro's character and a sympathy with him in his needs and struggles.

As a life-long friend to your race I wish to say some things to-day of which perhaps you have not thought, and the first is this: race prejudice is a double thing; it faces both ways. It has doubtless led the white man to do many things unkind and unjust to his brother in black, but has it not led the black man also to be suspicious of efforts to do him good by his southern brother in white? Booker T. Washington said a few months ago, in Boston, "It was unfortunate that the Negro got the idea that every southern white man was opposed by nature to his highest interest and advancement, and that he could only find a friend in the white man who was removed from him by a distance of thousands of miles." Now let me show you, by way of example, how this prejudice of the blacks against the whites has worked in small matters. There are some of us who keep up the good old custom of family prayers. In many cases our sincere and earnest efforts to induce the servants to unite with the other members of the household in these acts of worship have been in vain. The Negro has thought and said, "White folks don't know anything about religion."

Another thing that I wish to say plainly, but kindly, is that the prejudice of the whites against the blacks is not confined to the South. It is more extensive in the South simply because the contact of the two races is more extensive. But it is just as intensive at the North. I venture to say off-hand that, in proportion to the population, the number of lynchings has been just as great in the North as in the South. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am opposed to mob violence wherever it may occur. Lawlessness begets lawlessness.

But it is not of this violent manifestation of race prejudice that I wish to speak now. I live in a town whose population is somewhat equally divided between northern and southern people, and I have a rare opportunity to study the attitude of each towards the Negro. The northern immigrant comes with his bristles out on the subject of "southern outrages," but he soon discovers that the white men do not spend most of their leisure time in hunting down Negroes with shot-guns and blood-hounds, but on the contrary that the ordinary relation of the two races is one of mutual friendliness and dependence. Moreover he has not been long in the South before he finds that in spite of preconceived theories and sympathies there is rising in his own breast an irresistible antipathy toward the black man, which has been overcome in the southerner by more than a century of contact. It isn't long before this northern man has a white coachman, a white cook, and a white housemaid. I want it understood that I do not say these things unkindly. I am giving a calm statement of facts that ought to be known. Especially would I avoid any misunderstanding of what I say on the part of the noble band of philanthropists who come South themselves to help, or send teachers to help, uplift the Negro. God bless them every one! God bless the great work that is being done at Hampton! But the average northerner who comes South soon tires of the Negro and does not want to come any nearer to him than is absolutely necessary. The southern whites, on the contrary, prefer the Negro in domestic service, and the relation is generally one of friendliness and frequently of affection.

I wish you, then, to remember this second plain fact to which I have called your attention: that race prejudice is not peculiar to the people of the South, but is manifested much more generally by white people of the North when brought into contact with the masses of your race. But I must not talk too long, and I will close with two bits of advice:

1. Cultivate friendly relations with the white people of the South among whom you are to live. I have spoken of the adjustment that has taken place between the two races here. In my opinion the conservation of this adjustment is fundamental in the race problem. If this adjustment, established by many years of contact, is violently disturbed, we cannot live together in the South. One race or the other must go down.

The best way to overcome an evil or disagreeable tendency in any one is to recognize and emphasize every manifestation of the opposite virtue. If I have a selfish child, I am not forever reminding him of his selfishness, but if I am wise I watch for every opportunity to commend any acts of generosity on his part. Thus I overcome evil with good.

Now, my friends, try this on us. Instead of looking out for wrongs inflicted upon your race by the southern whites, instead of complaining incessantly of these wrongs, begin to watch for manifestations of benevolence and good-will and show your appreciation of them. By pursuing this course you will multiply and increase these kindly acts.

(From the audience Dr. Francis J. Grimké, of Washington, asked the speaker if he would give the southern white man the same advice.)

Dr. Campbell: Certainly. Certainly. It's a poor rule that doesn't work both ways. But I would remind you now of the story told by one of the speakers of this conference about the man who was advised to speak against the sins of the Jews because there were none in the congregation to take offence. The Jews are not here to-day. I prefer to talk to them when they are present. I do not spare my own people. I speak to them as plainly as I do to you, when I have them before me. But it would do you no good for me to tell you their duty.

Now, in illustration of the principle I have stated, let me give you a fact which you will find stated in the Report of the Commissioner of Education, 1896-97, vol. 2., p. 2296. Since 1870 the Southern States have expended one hundred million dollars for the education of the Negroes, while northern philanthropists and the national government have expended twenty-five millions. Did you know that? (Answers from the audience, "No, we didn't know it.")

Mr. Wheeler, of Connecticut, asked the speaker whether this money was contributed by individual philanthropists of the South, or collected in the form of taxes.

Dr. Campbell: It has come in the form of taxes voluntarily imposed upon the southern people by themselves.

Now, the point I wish to make is this: When facts like this come to your knowledge, do the white people of the South justice by taking notice of them. Make the most of the good they do for the colored race, and you will get more good of the same kind.

2. My second suggestion is, that the best way to counteract race prejudice, or any other kind of prejudice, is to cease trying to talk it down and begin to live it down. One of your own race, Miss Lucy Laney, said to you the other day, "Get culture, character, and cash, and the problem will solve itself." That is good advice. Act upon it.

Don't be ashamed of your black skin. Don't be ashamed of being a Negro. Work out your destiny under God along the line of your race characteristics. As was said in the discussion this morning, let your literature grow out of your own life. Build on your own foundation. Though clouds and darkness veil the final issue of the new race problem, we may trust that in pursuing "the right, as God gives us to see the right," clouds and darkness will flee before us.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

THE NARRAGANSETT FRIENDS' MEETING IN THE XVIII. CENTURY. With a chapter on Quaker Beginnings in Rhode Island. By Caroline Hazard. Pp. vi. and 197. $1.50. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.)

THE LORD'S SUPPER. A historical study from the standpoint of the Society of Friends. By John William Graham, M. A. (Manchester, England). Pp. 64. Paper, 10 cents. London: James Clarke & Co. (For sale by Friends' Book Association, 1500 Race street, Philadelphia.)

THE QUAKERS IN THE REVOLUTION. By Isaac Sharpless, President of Haverford College. Pp. 259. $1.50. Philadelphia: T. S. Leach & Co.

STILL Thy love, O Christ, arisen,
Yearns to reach those souls in prison;
Through all depths of sin and loss,
Drops the plummet of Thy cross;
Never yet abyss was found
Deeper than that cross could sound.

—John G. Whittier.

WASHINGTON'S HOUSE IN NEW YORK.

WHEN Washington was inaugurated President (on the 30th of April, 1789), at New York, a house was provided for his residence. It was that on the corner of Cherry and Franklin streets, near Franklin Square, referred to variously as No. 10 and as No. 3 Cherry street, and known as the Franklin House. It was the property of Mrs. Samuel Osgood, wife of one of the two members of Congress deputed to select a Presidential residence. It came into her possession through her first husband, Walter Franklin, the builder, a deceased "merchant prince" of New York. Describing the place, Leila Herbert says, in Harper's Magazine:

The house was of brick, of three stories, amply lighted by many well-sized, small-paned windows. There was a heavy brass knocker on the single-panelled door in Cherry street, the main entrance reached by short flights of steps, one at each side of a tiny porch. A vestibule projecting from the house formed the entrance on Franklin street. It was, for a private citizen, a large house, though simple, substantial. It was well fitted up. For repairs and refurnishing, Congress paid Mr. Osgood $8,000.

A Quakeress, Mrs. Sarah Robinson, niece of Walter Franklin, the builder of the house, wrote to a friend or relative:

"April 30th of the fourth month, 1789.

Great rejoicing in New York on the arrival of General Washington. . . . Previous to his coming Uncle Walter's house in Cherry street was taken for him, and every room furnished in the most elegant manner. Aunt Osgood and Lady Duer had the whole management of it. I went the morning before the General's arrival to look at it. The best of furniture in every room, and the greatest quantity of plate and china I ever saw; the whole of the first and second stories is papered, and the floors covered with the richest kind of Turkey and Wilton carpets. The house did honor to my aunts and Lady Kitty; they spared no pains nor expense on it. Thou must know that Uncle Osgood and Duer were appointed to procure a house and furnish it. Accordingly they pitched on their wives as being likely to do it better. I have not yet done, my dear. Is thee not almost tired? . . . There is scarcely anything talked about now but General Washington and the Palace."

In addition to the complete furniture, including china and plate selected by "my aunts and Lady Kitty," the President brought on by sea from Mount Vernon a quantity of pictures, vases, ornaments, Sévres china, and silver. Chancellor Livingston's handsome residence, containing many works of art, costly ornaments, and Gobelin tapestries, was one of the few more elegantly fitted out than that of the President.

Arizona's Masked Quicksands.

CURIOUS but dangerous freaks of nature frequently found in the deserts of Arizona are called sumideros by the Mexicans and Indians. They are masked pitfalls of quicksand that occur in the dry plains and are covered with a treacherous crust of clay that has been spread over them in fine particles by the wind and baked dry by the sun.

The peculiar properties of the soil retain all the moisture drained into them after the infrequent rains and allow it to be filtered to unknown depths, so that a man or a horse or a cow or a sheep that once steps upon that deceptive crust instantly sinks out of sight beyond the hope of rescue. The sumideros are on a level with the surface of the desert. There is no danger signal to mark them, and their surface cannot be distinguished by the ordinary eye from the hard clay that surrounds them. They occur most frequently in the alkali-covered flats and are often fifteen or twenty feet in diameter. Sometimes they are only little pockets or wells that a man can leap across, but the longest pole has never found their bottoms. A stone thrown through the crust sinks to unknown depths, and no man who ever fell into one of them was rescued. They account for the mysterious disappearance of many men and cattle. [Chicago Record.]

The Oldest Town in the United States.

WE often speak, says George A. Dorsey, in the Popular Science Monthly, writing of the Hopi Indians of Arizona, of this or of that town as the oldest on the continent. But here we are in the streets of a town which antedates all other cities of the United States—a pueblo which occupied this very spot when, in 1540, Coronado halted in Cibola and sent Don Pedro de Tobar on to the west to explore the then unknown desert. Imagine seven rather irregularly parallel streets about two hundred yards long, with here and there a more open spot or plaza, lined on each side with mud-plastered, rough-laid stone houses, and you have Oraibi. The houses rise in the form of terraces to a height of two or three stories. As a rule there is no opening to the ground-floor dwellings save through a small, square hatch in the roof. Leading up to this roof are rude ladders, which in a few rare instances are simply steps cut in a solid log, differing in no wise from those found leading into the chambers of the old cliff ruins of southern Colorado. The roof of the first row or terrace of houses forms a kind of balcony or porch for the second terrace, and so the roof of the second-story houses serves a similar useful purpose for the third-story houses.

White and Black in South Africa.

THE latest available statistics show the relative white and black populations in the principal British and Dutch States of South Africa to be approximately as follows:—

	Whites.	Blacks.
Cape Colony	76,812 . . .	1,148,926
Natal	44,415 . . .	459,288
Rhodesia	13,000 . . .	500,000
Bechuanaland	5,254 . . .	7,471
Basutoland	578 . . .	218,326
Transvaal	300,000 . . .	649,560
Orange Free State	77,716 . . .	129,787
Swaziland	— . . .	60,000
	817,835	3,178,358

CURRENT EVENTS.

WAR between the Transvaal Republic and Great Britain was begun last week. The former sent an "ultimatum" to the latter demanding the withdrawal by 5 p. m., on the 11th instant, of the British troops on the Transvaal border. This demand not being complied with, the Boer troops have crossed the line at different points into Rhodesia and Natal, and several minor engagements have occurred. At this writing it is said that Kimberley, where the diamond mines are, is besieged by the Boer troops, and may be captured before the British can send relief. Cecil Rhodes, the South African capitalist and political leader, who, as many believe, has promoted the controversy with the Transvaal, is at Kimberley, and in danger of capture.

THE rupture of the existing situation by the Boers has caused criticism from some who had been friendly to them.

It is defended on the ground that England was steadily preparing for war, and that the Government at London was only waiting until its preparations were more advanced. It seems unlikely that in a contest so unequal the Boers can escape overwhelming defeat in the end.

GENERAL JAMES H. WILSON has sent to the Government at Washington a report on the two provinces of Cuba—Matanzas and Santa Clara—of which he is in military command. He says: "So far as I can discover, the Cuban people in the provinces of this department are now as ready for self-government as they are likely to be at any time in the near future. It is my deliberate judgment that any other course will involve unnecessary delay, and will be accompanied by a further decrease of that feeling of friendship and gratitude which the Cuban people now entertain toward the United States, as well as by a lack of confidence in the business future, and by a continuance of the depression in the agricultural and commercial interests of the island, if not, indeed, by an actual increase of local disorder."

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY continues his trip in the Western States, making speeches to the crowds that gather. He reached Milwaukee on the 16th inst., having spoken at various points in Iowa and Wisconsin. The salient point in his speeches is a justification of his policy in the Philippines.

THE operations in the Philippine Islands continue, but there appears to be no material change in the situation. A Washington dispatch states that "the combined military and naval forces of the United States in the Philippines, when all the troops and ships now under orders reach their destination, will aggregate more than seventy thousand men and forty-five war vessels."

It is pointed out that this army is more than double the size of our entire army before the war with Spain, and three times the force employed last year in Cuba and Porto Rico.

THE Venezuela Commission, which has been sitting at Paris for several months, and which included two members of the United States Supreme Court, Fuller and Brewer, has rendered the decision concerning the boundary between Venezuela and British Guiana. The decision defines the line precisely. It gives England part of her claims, but not all, and gives to Venezuela part of what she claimed. The judgment was agreed to by all five judges, and was the outcome of a compromise. Ex-President Benjamin Harrison delivered the chief argument for Venezuela, speaking for several days, and is to have a fee for this of $250,000.

If some men were as great as they think themselves to be, others would gladly pay an admission price to see them.

No man is rich whose expenditures exceed his means, and no one is poor whose incomings exceed his outgoings.

CHARLOTTE comes from the old English word charlyt, meaning a dish of custard, and charlotte russe is simply Russian custard.

GOLD, silver, steel, aluminium, and lead, when immersed in tauric acid, a new chemical discovery, become pliable and ductile as putty.

A CURIOUS fishing wheel is used on the Columbia river, near Portland, Ore. It is fixed near the bank of the river, a place being selected where the river is most rapid. The wheel consists of three receivers. These are enclosed on three sides by wire netting, and, as the wheel revolves by means of the current, each receiver is submerged beneath the water, and scoops up the salmon as they jump in the rapids.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVEY Pittsburgh.
 EYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
 DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
 FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
 ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
 ECKSTEIN }
 ATLANTIC }
 BRADLEY } New York.
 BROOKLYN }
 JEWETT }
 ULSTER }
 UNION }
 SOUTHERN } Chicago.
 SHIPMAN }
 COLLIER }
 MISSOURI } St. Louis.
 RED SEAL }
 SOUTHERN }
 JOHN F. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
 MORLEY Cleveland.
 SALEM Salem, Mass.
 CORNWELL Buffalo.
 KENTUCKY Louisville.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

It is announced that Stanford Newel, the United States Minister to the Netherlands, will sign on behalf of this country the protocol embodying the agreements reached by the representatives of the Powers participating in the recent Peace Conference at The Hague.

—The steamer Gaelic from the Orient, brought to San Francisco, on the 16th inst., 3,000 bales of silk valued at $2,000,000 and $337,000 in specie.

—The discovery has been made that the smokeless powder for the seacoast fortifications has deteriorated to such an extent as to be useless. The loss to the Government is $500,000. It will take from six months to a year to replace the supply. In one experiment, recently, with the powder, a gun that cost $30,000 was bursted.

—Fifteen new cases of yellow fever were reported at Key West on the 16th inst., and no deaths. The situation is rapidly improving.

—The Gazette, Pa., says there are men to be found in that town who belong to so many secret societies and beneficial organizations that it takes nearly all the money they earn to keep clear of the debt to their societies, and that the living expenses of their families are supplied by the labor of their wives and children.

—The Navy Department explains the great number of desertions in the navy by asserting that many of the men think they enlisted for the war only and are entitled to their discharge. Failing in this, they desert.

—The project of establishing a mammoth warehouse at Shanghai, for the benefit of American manufacturers and exporters, now seems assured of success. The enterprise has been promoted by the American Manufacturers' Association.

—There was a sale of orchids at the American art galleries in New York recently, the plants sold being a part of the collection of the late Prof. O. C. Marsh of Yale University. Out of 1337 lots, 670 were sold. The sale demonstrated anew that the prices of orchids depend to a very large extent upon their scarcity. Some plants that Prof. Marsh paid large prices for a few years ago sold for fifty cents. They are just as beautiful now as formerly, but they are not so scarce.

—General Davis in command in Porto Rico, says that he needs 1,000 tons of provisions every week to relieve the distress, which in many places comes nigh to starvation. Rice, beans and codfish are needed. The people do not know how to use flour.

UGAR is not improved by the addition of sand; neither is White

Lead improved by the addition of Zinc and Barytes, yet there are hundreds of such mixtures branded and sold as "White Lead," "Pure White Lead," etc.

You can avoid these by making sure that the brand is right. Those named in the margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH 28, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 43.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLIII.

THE value of peace and harmony, when they proceed from the spirit of Peace, or the Spirit of God in man, without which no peace can be permanent, cannot be computed.

BENJAMIN HALLOWELL.

From his Autobiography, p. 334.

ALL'S WELL.

THE clouds, which rise with thunder, slake
Our thirsty souls with rain ;
The blow most dreaded falls to break
From off our limbs a chain ;
And wrongs of man to man but make
The love of God more plain.
As through the shadowy lens of even
The eye looks farthest into heaven
On gleams of star and depths of blue,
The glaring sunshine never knew. —Whittier.

FRIENDS IN ENGLAND.

V.

THE numbers of the English Friends, as I have already said, have been increasing in the latter half of the present century. Care is taken by London Yearly Meeting to secure definite and trustworthy returns, year by year, and these are carefully tabulated and printed in the annual reports.

In 1862 the Yearly Meeting had its first return of statistics of membership. It showed that on the 31st of Twelfth month, 1861, there were 13,844 members, and 3,190 habitual or frequent attenders. On the same date, 1898, there were 17,031 members and 7,904 attenders. These figures do not include Ireland.

The increase has been entirely by conviction. The death-rate is greater than the birth-rate. There have been, in the thirty-eight years between 1861 and 1899, an addition of 7,107 members by conviction, and the increase in this way has grown from 73 per year in the five-year period beginning 1862 to 275 per year in the six-year period ending with 1897. (The number of convictions in 1898 was 294.)

It will be seen from this that new members are being brought in. Some of these come from the working-people, others from what in England are called the "middle-class." Many of them, no doubt, are brought in by the Adult School work,—and of this influence I will say a word presently. Five of the quarterly meetings, Cumberland in the far north, Devon and Cornwall in the south-western corner, Essex and Suffolk in the East, and Lancashire and Bedfordshire, were somewhat smaller in 1897 than in 1861, but the other quarterly meetings had all increased.

Returning now to the subject of the mission work, which includes of course the adult schools and the other First-day schools, it may be said that the most perplexing questions among the English Friends at the present time, and in recent years, have grown out of these home missions. The most prominent of these questions has been that connected with the "Home Mission" Committee. This committee was formed by the yearly meeting a number of years ago, for systematic and persistent evangelistic labor ; to help meetings that were weak, to revive meetings that had been given up, and to endeavor to gather new meetings. Its operations have come to be, in recent time, carried on largely by mission workers, who go to a particular place, remain there for some time or indefinitely, and who must be in part, or entirely, provided with a stated money support.

I have not the report of the committee before me, but I think I am safe in saying that during last year about twenty such "mission workers" were under engagement with the committee, mostly in the southern and south central counties of England, and that the committee expended for them and on other accounts about £4,000, or $20,000. (This fund is raised by subscription ; it is not drawn from the yearly meeting treasury.)

Two views have been taken of this mission work : one, that it is the only practical way to spread the views and usages of Friends among the mass of the people, and so gather new meetings or add to weak ones, and that the patient and systematic labor of a Friend who feels called to such engagement is perfectly consistent with the principles of the Society. The other view has been that such mission workers are in reality "pastors," that their partial or complete maintenance makes them practically an employed and professional class, and that the system opens the way directly to a paid pastorate, pre-arranged and ritual services, and the suppression of individuality in the meeting.

The earnestness with which the two views have been held has caused some concessions and adjustments in methods, and also the exercise of sharp caution and scrutiny in relation to the committee's work. A few years ago a special setting of the Yearly Meeting was given to the subject ; the several aspects of it were carefully reviewed, and some stricter rules for the committee were adopted. One of these rules provided for the appointment of some members of the committee in the quarterly meetings, besides those named in the yearly meeting,—the operation of this being to bring into service some who are disposed to guard strictly against any tendency to the pastoral system or other destructive innovations. At present it may safely be said that there is little likelihood that the operations of the Home Mission Committee will carry the body of English Friends over to a church-like system of any sort; and, it seems also true that the earnest agitation of the questions involved has had the result of bringing more sharply into view the necessity for individual devotion and congregational energy. If a religious body will live, it must work; if it will not have a "pastor" to take charge of the work it must have something instead—the united activity of the membership.

The other interesting feature of the mission work has been the question, What shall be done with those who have come under Friendly influence, and who have imbibed Friendly ideas in the adult schools or otherwise? This has been a question of several years' standing. There has been, for a long time, a large body of the scholars in the schools, many of them "converted," in a reasonable and fit sense of the word, to ways of right living, and convinced of many of the great principles of action which underlie not merely Quakerism but the religious life, by whatever name it may be called. The adult schools, as has been said, are undenominational; they are not established as training-ground for Friends' converts; nevertheless it does very naturally result that continually some of them gravitate to the Society. The large body of "attenders,"—non-members who habitually come to the meetings for worship,—is in a considerable degree formed from the adult scholars.

The whole subject of the attitude of the Society toward these sympathetic but detached bodies was reported upon at length in the Yearly Meeting, this year, by the Home Mission Committee, and action was taken upon it. This action, briefly stated, was to authorize monthly meetings to establish preparative meetings, in which "attenders" and others inclined to the Society might be received, to take part in the minor business, as probationary or preliminary members, who later, if they desired, might apply for full membership in the monthly meeting. It is probable that under this system there will be an increased rate of additions of members in many quarters, after a few years.

In Birmingham there has been for over twenty years an organization called the Christian Society, composed of those in the adult schools who felt the need of a definitely religious connection, and who were not disposed to join any of the existing bodies. Beginning about 1876 "with one meeting and 120 members, there are now eleven meetings and over 1,000 members, and an attendance of quite double that number. The large number of these members find their resting places in the Christian Society, but about 100 have joined Friends" within a few years, and the number of those so inclined is probably increasing. Organizations like the Christian Society, but under other names, exist in many other places.

H. M. J.

I BELIEVE that a family lives but a half-life until it has sent its forerunners into the heavenly world, until those who linger here in thought can cross the river, and fold transfigured a glorious form in the embrace of their human love.—Rev. Dr. Bridgman.

EDUCATION AND RELIGION.¹

BY JOHN WM. GRAHAM (MANCHESTER, ENGLAND).

WE know that of late years both Education and Religion have developed on lines unexpected by our forefathers, and that in consequence harmony between them has not been always and everywhere recognized. College education has been roundly and extensively accused of being, with all her fair promises, a subtle foe to that religion which is the most cherished possession of men, and I have heard a prayer offered in meeting deploring to the Lord the fact that the Higher Education "too often leads away from Thee." On hearing an expression like that one feels that there is something wrong somewhere, if these two great experiences, among the noblest and most universal objects of our desire, are really antagonistic.

Education and religion are words often on our lips, yet it is probably not an easy task to define what we mean by either. Perhaps when we have done that the rest will be clear.

Education (without straining at a too difficult brief definition) has in practice three distinct functions:

- 1st. The giving of knowledge.
- 2d. The training of faculty.
- 3d. The development of character.

And it has two easily distinguishable departments: that whose object is to fit the pupil to earn his living, and that which we may call the Higher Education, which has no such direct object, but exists for its own sake. And both the practical, bread-and-butter education and the Higher Education have the above three duties: to impart facts or knowledge, to train the faculties of the mind, and to build up character.

In the region of lower or practical business education, for instance, a boy learns his multiplication table and some rules of arithmetic, and some spelling; he learns also, later, his medical or legal facts, his engineering formulæ, or his chemical reactions.

But principally he acquires faculty. He learns how to read, to write, to calculate, to diagnose, and to prescribe, to sift evidence, to use instruments, to draw plans.

And, thirdly, he learns on the way certain ethical lessons: to be obedient, to be industrious, to be careful, to be punctual, to be polite, to be alert, to be clean and tidy.

All these things all men agree about. The imperative needs of business or profession will always govern that part of education; it will never in the long run be neglected—at any rate so long as we have to compete with the Germans.

It is the Higher Education which we are really concerned to put in its proper place, to do justice to, and to connect with religion. The facts of this department of education are learnt partly at school and partly at college, just as the others are. The division I make is not a division between school and college.

These "facts" of the Higher Education include all our knowledge of history and most of that of geography; the great deeds and great sufferings of the race in the past, and the lives of men in other lands; the beauty and wonder of forest and cataract, of the land-locked lagoons of the Coral Islands, of the Polar Ice-world, and the Arabian Desert, the Canon and the Alpine Peak. Here comes in, too, the knowledge of the great Arts, of Architecture from the Pyramids, through Classic and Gothic, down to the modern railway station; of Art in Landscape, and in the great pictures which express Thoughts as well as Figures. To this must be added what knowledge we have of birds and flowers and butterflies; and that large part of Science which is at present of no value to Company promotion; all Philosophy, and nearly all Mathematics; which is after all chiefly an amusement. Here comes in, too, the study of Latin and Greek and the Latin and Greek Literatures.

¹A Paper read at the meeting of Young Friends' Association, Philadelphia, Tenth month 9, 1899.

Now the chief value of all these facts is to add interest and charm to existence; the lower education aims at sustaining life, this aims at beautifying it when it is sustained. At the same time facts of this kind are constantly discovered to have unexpected, practical utility, and so become transferred to the sphere of business education. The facts of electricity have just undergone this transformation, and those of chemistry are constantly doing so, as our butter, our beef, and our sugar come to be produced in the laboratory.

The mental faculties developed by the Higher Education are of the same nature as those given by the lower, but with very great additions; inasmuch as here often the intellect is used for the sake of using it and teaching it, as is the case preëminently with Mathematics.

Psychologists tell us that the whole function of the intellect, apart from memory, may be summed up in the power to discriminate between things that differ and to recognize in consequence the likeness in things alike. We shall easily see that any fresh knowledge leads to an extension of this faculty. The man learned in agriculture knows the difference between a wheat-field and a barley-field; while there are folks who don't know the difference between wheat and oats, or how to discriminate either from a fox-glove. So that all intellectual training leaves behind it a wider range of nice discrimination, and an increase of the faculty in general.

This wider range also produces a better sense of proportion, a capacity for picking out great issues among small ones, of not frittering away strength on trifles, not doing a little good at the cost of great harm, or standing in the way of substantial reform because our dearly-loved private fads are not included in it. It may incidentally be noted that some educational subjects are apt to produce the men of minutiae, and not the men who estimate great and small; Classics have this peculiarity and need to be balanced by some Mathematics or Science.

Education also gives a broader basis on which to erect general theories; broader statements (such as that "all men are equal"). Educated and uneducated, we are all prone to generalize, from the nursery upwards. Now wrong general theories are the most terrible engines of destruction known. The theory of the Divine Right of Kings, of the One Holy

Catholic Church; the theory that you may sin so as to be a greater monument of Divine forgiveness; the theory that we are arbitrarily predestined to Heaven or Hell at birth; the theory that there is one God whose prophet is Mahomet; all these are theories which have desolated cities, and count their slain by hundreds of thousands. It might be supposed that educated men were more prone to advance general theories than others; but it is really just the other way. Education produces extreme caution in uttering them—a caution which has often gone to excess, and in the minds of doubting students makes conviction in general difficult. Hesitation, rather than dogmatism, is the besetment of the student. He has or ought to have acquired the faculty of suspending judgment, a habit hard to attain, and as uncomfortable when attained as sitting on a fence usually is. To practice this exercise is often a necessary virtue, but like other virtues, it may become a habit as mechanical as the opposite error of dogmatism.

These, then, are the intellectual faculties which the Higher Education tends to give: a fine discrimination in a large number of subjects, and in matters generally; a sense of proportion; a broader basis for, and a greater caution in, launching general truths; the habit of suspending judgment with, as a set-off, the danger of losing in intellectual hesitation virility of direct and intense conviction.

In speaking of suspense of judgment, we are already partly over the border which separates the intellectual from the moral duties of a man. What, finally, are the moral characteristics which we may expect the Higher Education to give us? We now reach the heart of our subject.

First, it should increase our sympathy for the motives and characters of men different from ourselves, in far countries and past ages, and therefore also for those round about us of a different type from ourselves. To live with an ancient Greek is something; to know his satisfaction with his ideal, the narrow ideal of bodily comfort and physical beauty, with a full life only for the few, and Death blocking all as the incomprehensible enemy at the end, destroying his limited though lovely harmony between what is and what ought to be; and to contrast him with the Hindoo, who has given up the world as a hopeless affair, and falls back on his inner life with a welcome for death and change and a new life. The patient piety of the Russian peasant, and the patient sordidness of the French, and the restless Irishman's rebellion against facts;—to understand all these helps us to understand, if we cannot share in, many widely differing points of view.

Secondly, the student ought to possess a greater sense than other men of wonder and awe in presence of the vaster extent of his known Universe. The astronomer and the microscopist are the men who have the best chance of understanding the mind of the Creator of Nature; and even by merely following the researches of the Chemist and the Physicist we enter into new realms of God. The joy of a new discovery remains, but the pride of it is immediately abashed by the awakening which the discovery itself brings, to new regions of ignorance and mystery. Nobody knows what electricity really is, except that it is something in the ether, and the same with gravitation.

Thirdly, the student should attain a kind of horror of inaccuracy, of lack of truth. The actual facts learnt at a University are often soon forgotten, but the love of truth and truthfulness ought to remain as an ingrained habit. Just as the pursuit of foxes makes a man boil in a peculiar kind of wrath if he hears of a fox dying by a gun, so the pursuit of truth should cover her also with a peculiar sacredness. An inaccurate statement affects one like eating dinner with dirty hands.

Fourthly, scholars ought to be, and generally are, modest. There is nothing like the large University competitions for showing those who have done well in narrower circles and been at the top of small schools, their true place in the hierarchy of intellect. Though some of the qualifications I have named may be more what ought to be than what exists; I think that this quality is actually realized. Nothing struck me at Cambridge when I first went up more than the men's reticence about their own achievements or their own work. Putting on "side" is the worst of sins there. A superficial observer might fancy the place was devoted to tennis and afternoon tea, whereas it is in truth a place where souls wrestle for mankind.

As the moral qualities, then, which the Higher Education may be expected to produce, we have an extended sympathy, a deeper veneration, a shining love of truth and a habit of personal modesty.

But in making this great claim, let me not be misunderstood. I do not say that scholars always, or educated men generally, have reached all these great qualities. You cannot make a silk purse out of everything, and human nature's weaker side does not die on attaining the B. A. Degree. I mean that a scholar has these helps, and if he does not become by their aid sympathetic and reverent and truthful and modest, the greater is his weakness or his blame.

Now let us look to the other side of our subject, to the great word, Religion, and see what that means.

(Conclusion to follow.)

A HABIT OF LIFE.—Quakerism is not a creed to be learnt by rote, but it is a habit of life—a habit that even in the most trivial concerns of life should tend towards uprightness of character. It should be remembered that the strength of the Quaker character on the past was the recognition of the closest communion with God. It must now be seen that he is ready to help at every turn. John Bright was alluded to as an example of Quaker straightforwardness and conscientiousness; principle was at the back of his success. The simplicity of this statesman was remarkable, and more than once in the House of Commons he won his adversaries over by his unconventional manner. John Bright was one of the few men who could quote Scripture in Parliament, because it was recognized that his character was consistent with the words he was using.—[Frederick Andrews, in American Friend.]

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS.

1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 45.—ELEVENTH MONTH 5.

THE TIME OF ELISHA.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord . . . will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children.—Exodus xxxiv., 7.

Scripture Reading, II. Kings, iii., 1–27.

THE eldest son of King Ahab, of Israel, was injured by an accident (II. Kings i., 2), and occupied the throne for only a short period. He was succeeded by his brother, Jehoram (or Joram), having no son. This occurred during the reign of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah (II. Kings iii., 1; see, however, II. Kings i., 17). It would seem that Judah had been reduced by the house of Omri to the condition of a vassal state (I. Kings xxii., 4, and 2 Kings iii., 7); when, therefore, the king of Moab threw off his allegiance to Israel and refused the usual tribute, the king of Judah was summoned to assist in putting down the rebellion. It was decided to invade Moab from the south by the way of Edom, which was at this time subject to Judah. The Moabites were defeated and driven into one of their walled cities, where they were closely besieged. At last, in despair, Mesha, king of Moab, slew his own eldest son on the city wall, in sight of the besieging army, and offered his body as a sacrifice to Chemosh, the god of Moab. The superstitious fears of the Israelites were awakened by this desperate deed and the siege was abandoned. This ancient tale of war finds a commentary, as welcome as unexpected, in the famous Mesha stone, already referred to in these lessons. The Moabite king caused a victory-stone to be raised in thanksgiving for the salvation of his people, on which were recorded the events of the war with Israel. This stone was discovered in 1868 by a German missionary, and is now deposited, after many vicissitudes, in the Louvre Museum in Paris. From it we learn that, after years of oppression under Omri, the Moabites revolted in the reign of his son (Ahab). The Bible historians tell us nothing of the earlier campaigns, while the stone does not give the account of the last unsuccessful invasion under Jehoram. The two accounts are, therefore, supplementary, and their general agreement gives confirmation to the accuracy of the Bible narrative.

During this reign in Israel the war with Damascus was resumed, and at one time Samaria, the capital, was besieged and reduced to such straits that women devoured their own children. A sudden panic caused the Syrian army to retreat in the very moment of victory (II. Kings vii., 6–7), and Samaria was saved. The cities of Gilead, however, remained in the hands of the Syrians, and the war went on. Meantime, Jehoshaphat, of Judah, was succeeded by his son, Jehoram (or Joram). The two contemporary reigns are both denounced as evil ones by the historian. Jehoram, of Israel, "wrought evil in the sight of the Lord; but not like his father and like his mother, for he put away the image of Baal that his father had made." His sins were those of Jeroboam—that he worshipped images of Jehovah, allowed a multitude of shrines, and made priests of "mean" people. Jehoram, of Judah, "walked in the ways of the kings of Israel," and shared their sins. He contracted a marriage with Athaliah, a sister of the king of Israel (II. Kings viii., 18).

Meantime Elijah had disappeared from among men with the same dramatic suddenness which was characteristic of his appearances. He was succeeded by a very different and much weaker character in Elisha, who had followed and served him during the latter part of his life. His call to the prophet's office is the only one recorded which came from another prophet, and the scene of it is characteristic of the elder man. Striding across the field, clad in his wild array, Elijah cast his mantle over Elisha, a boy at the plow, and strode on without a word. The boy left all and followed him. In almost every way he is a contrast to his master. He is of the cultivated field, while Elijah was of the wilderness. The one is a courtier and a welcome counsellor of kings, the other is their fear and the scourge of their sins. As in the case of the elder prophet, a great many miracle stories gathered about the name of Elisha; some of them are very similar in the two cases. We see less of the seer and more of the kindly soothsayer in Elisha. He has less to do with general policies and more with special cases. Thus he accompanied the expedition against Moab (II. Kings, chapter 3), and suggested a plan for obtaining water when the supply failed; he exposed to the king of Israel the plans of his enemy of Syria (chapter 6), and again predicted the favorable issue of the siege of Samaria (chapter 7).

The great event of the life of Elisha, however, was his part in the overthrow of the house of Omri. A new dynasty was on the throne of Damascus, and the war was again carried into the country east of Jordan, where Ahab was slain. Jehoram, of Judah, slept with his fathers, and his son, Ahaziah, a nephew of Jehoram, of Israel, reigned in his stead. The king of Israel had been wounded in battle and had retired to his palace in Jezreel, where he was visited by his kinsman of Judah. It was now that Elisha sent his attendant, whom tradition identifies as the prophet Jonah, to anoint Jehu, the commanding general of the army, king in the stead of Jehoram, of Israel. The other officers of the army entered into the conspiracy. Jehu took chariot and, driving at the highest speed, reached the king in advance of any news of the treachery and slew him, as well as his guest, the young king of Judah. Remembering the curse pronounced by Elijah on Ahab, the king's father, the dead body of Jehoram was cast into the field which had been acquired by the murder of Naboth.

Jezebel, the mother of the king, who was hated as the chief source of the apostasy of Israel, was thrown from a palace window by her own servants. Not content with this, Jehu slaughtered all the household of his former master, and all connected with the worship of Baal; ye he "departed not from the sins of Jeroboam"—namely, the golden calves of Bethel and Dan.

RELIGION AND PUBLIC SPIRIT.

From an address on this subject by Rev. Charles F. Dole, of Jamaica Plain, Mass., at the meeting of the Connecticut Valley Conference of Unitarian ministers, Ninth month 26.

THE greatest mistake that we in America can make is to think that we are a civilized, and much less a Christian people. We are only on the way to civilization; we have made a beginning with Christianity. Note some of the tremendous needs of our times; for example the low tone of morals in many of our country towns and among the native-born Anglo-Saxon population. The selfishness and indifference of well-to-do people in regard to important matters of public and social welfare, in regard to the quality of the education of their children; the crude standards of business which satisfy millions of church members; the stupid mismanagement of small cities, as well as great, and in the contest of professional politicians; the bad example set our youth by an easy acceptance of selfish and partisan rule; the ugly attitude in many quarters of employers and the employed as they confront each other; the dangerous race antagonisms of the South; the abuse of the Indians; the extraordinary willingness of people who profess the name of Jesus to rush into war—yes, and even now to continue in a war which could never have been begun if the representatives of our nation had conducted themselves like Christians towards the Filipinos. I am no alarmist about these things. But they demonstrate a need and lack in our American people. We badly lack high, generous, devoted public spirit. The cure of our social, economic, and political evils and abuses can only come through a large, fresh access of genuine patriotism, which is another name for public spirit, or humanity.

How shall we get this public spirit which we lack? We cannot get it by firing rockets on the Fourth of July, or shouting huzzas for Admiral Dewey. It is doubtful if the real devotion of our people to the public welfare is at all increased by such gala days. Public spirit such as I speak of is identical with religion and grows out of it. Religion in the deeper sense in which all religious men of every name are at one, in the sense that our lives are not our own to do what we please with; that our time is not our own, merely to enjoy ourselves; that we are not here to get things and make money, but that our lives belong to a divine order; that we are here to be servants of our children of God; that we owe the world of mankind for our living; that our success is wholly measured by the amount and quality of our social service; that what we give, achieve, and accomplish is more important than anything that we can get.

No one is civilized who is not become a friend and helper of men. No one is a Christian, or even a just Jew, who does not live after the fashion and in the spirit of the great teacher of Galilee. Religion then is not something apart from politics and business and the public and social welfare. Religion is that which makes and insures the public welfare. America in the twentieth century will have no use for churches which let the public welfare suffer. The call is for genuine religion, which, possessing men's hearts, will fill them with a noble and chivalrous public spirit.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, TENTH MONTH 28, 1899.

REMOVAL: NOTICE.

THE offices of FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER will be removed, within a few days, to rooms in the new Building of the Young Friends' Association, 15th and Cherry streets.

The entrance is the large (upper) doorway, on 15th street.

Business office at the head of the stairway, second floor; right hand.

We expect to be in the new offices not later than Tenth month 31, next Third-day.

Please address all letters, etc., mailed after the 28th to the new place, 15th and Cherry streets.

"NATIONAL GREATNESS" AND "PATRIOTISM."

EXCEPT in times when men's—and women's—minds have been confused by unusual sounds and startling events, there has never been a doubt of importance among the American people that the greatness of their nation, as the greatness of any nation, was moral, and not material.

That is to say, the value of the national organization to its own people and to other peoples, its influence, its power, rested upon its character, just as the usefulness and influence of men and women depend upon their characters.

What, then, has been the greatness of the American nation? Clearly, that it has stood for humane and beneficent things. No one doubts that it has so stood. Its colonies were the refuge of the persecuted, the resort of the hopeful, the field of the energetic. In them the organization of free government began, and in the formation of the national Union this freedom was developed and established. For more than a century, the nation has been a growing and increasing power in the world, because it has stood as an example to all nations of the practicability of what Abraham Lincoln described as government of the people by the people and for the people, and because also, in spite of shortcomings, faults, and blemishes, this government exerted upon others an influence in behalf of human rights.

This is what has made the United States great. It makes every nation great to be honest, and just, and generous,—to show courage in behalf of the Right. The ideal is not new; it was not new in 1776. It had been conceived long before Jefferson sat down to formulate the Declaration. Older writers than he had perceived, as Aristides said, that neither walls, nor buildings make a city, but those who live in it, and as Sir William Jones wrote—in Jefferson's time —that it is men who make a State, who know their duties and their rights, and whose "collected will" crowns what is good, and represses that which is evil.

If all this be true—and certainly to state it is to show its truth, unless we be mere materialists and pagans—then patriotism, the love of country, is signified in the highest degree by those who help to maintain the national character. They are the patriots who restrain the nation from wrong-doing, and who encourage it to the doing of justice and kindness. Contrariwise, they are the unpatriotic who would sully the national character, who would incite it to become an oppressor instead of a liberator. Such can have no claim to patriotism; they would destroy the greatness which the nation has attained.

We do not believe that facts so simple as these, so impossible of misconception when once perceived, can be long overlooked or greatly disregarded. We do not believe that the American people will at the close of the present century or during the next sell their great birthright of generous and humane and Christian liberty for the base pottage of material and oppressive power. But it behooves every good man and woman to stand and to speak courageously—there is abundant call and use for courage—in behalf of what is plainly the right. The flag they raise is the flag which honors what it waves over, and which is not to wave at all over what is sordid, or oppressive, or corrupt. This is the true flag of the United States.

IN another place notice is given of the immediate removal of the offices of the FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER to rooms on the second floor of the new building of the Young Friends' Association, on 15th street at the corner of Cherry. This is a change which has been in contemplation for some time,—since the erection of the building was planned,—and we think it will prove more comfortable to us, and more convenient for the great majority of those who call on us. The vicinity of the other centres of Friends' activities in and about the meeting-house, the schools, the book-store, and the new building, makes the place a peculiarly suitable one for the INTELLIGENCER.

The office of the INTELLIGENCER has been at 921 Arch street since 1885; the office of the JOURNAL was located there in the autumn of the preceding year.

THE steady and rapid increase in the size and the cost of the army and navy of the United States is probably not appreciated by many persons, or its full significance understood. The army is now one hundred thousand men—four times what it was less than two years ago. The navy numbers 244 ships and boats of all classes, and with the addition of those under construction, will presently be 304. This is as nearly as possible three times the number there were in 1890.

BIRTHS, Marriages, and Deaths of Friends and Friendly people are published without charge by the INTELLIGENCER. Friends are desired to forward them. Extended obituaries we are cautious of, and poetical tributes are discouraged. The editors reserve the right to edit (without change of any essential statement) obituary notices, and to put other announcements into Friendly form.

MARRIAGES.

JARRETT—SAUNDERS.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Huntingdon Valley, Montgomery county, Pa., under the care of Abington Monthly Meeting, Tenth month 18, 1899, Franklin H. Jarrett, son of Samuel M. and the late Sarah W. Jarrett, and Lilian T., daughter of Charles F. and Hannah P. Saunders.

JONES—JONES.—Tenth month 18, 1899, under the care of Gwynedd Monthly Meeting, at the residence of the bride's parents, Frank J. C. Jones, of Conshohocken, Pa., and Sarah Wood, daughter of John M. and Emma C. Jones, of Plymouth, Pa.

MERRYMAN—CORSE.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Gardenville, Md., Tenth month 18, 1899, under the care of Baltimore Monthly Meeting, Eugene Merryman and Ella Sutton, daughter of Dr. George F. and Sarah S. Corse.

MORGAN—WOOD.—At the home of the bride's parents, Horsham, Pa., Tenth month 4, 1899, under the care of Horsham Monthly Meeting of Friends, Clinton W. Morgan, of Willow Grove, son of William F. and Caroline W. Morgan, and Emma J., daughter of Wilmer A. and Annie C. Wood.

POWNALL—SMEDLEY.—At the residence of the bride's brother-in-law, Charles W. Chambers, Chatham, Pa., Tenth month 18, 1899, under the care of Bradford and Uwchlan Monthly Meeting, John G., son of Levi and Deborah Pownall, of Christiana, Pa., the former deceased, and Ella E., daughter of Ezra and Esther A. Smedley, former deceased.

ROBERTS—COATE.—Under the care of Chester Monthly Meeting, held at Moorestown, N. J., Tenth month 18, 1899, at the residence of the bride's parents, Samuel L. Roberts, son of Sarah W. and the late Samuel L. Roberts, and Laura V., daughter of Charles and Sarah A. Coate, all of Moorestown, N. J.

SCULL—SHEPPARD.—At Girard Avenue meeting-house, Philadelphia, under the care of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, Fifth-day evening, Tenth month 19, 1899, Joseph F. Scull, son of Paul and Josephine Folwell Scull, and Ella Flitcraft, daughter of Thomas S. and Alvanetha Flitcraft Sheppard, all of Philadelphia.

DEATHS.

BELLAH.—In Wilmington, Delaware, Tenth month 16, 1899, Edward Tatnall Bellah, aged 83 years; a valued member of Wilmington Monthly Meeting.

BREWER.—In Brooklyn, N. Y., Tenth month 2, 1899, Josephine Brewer, wife of William S. Brewer, and daughter of Ira and Caroline (Potts) Thomas, in the 36th year of her age.

The interment was at Springboro', Ohio, where she was born and grew up to womanhood.

BROWN.—At Washington, D. C., Tenth month 18, 1899, after three weeks' illness, Samuel N. Brown, Jr., in his 30th year, son of William and Lydia W. Brown, of Lincoln, Loudoun county, Va.

His gentle manner and careful consideration for the feelings of others won for him many friends. *

HAVILAND.—At her home in Hoosick Falls, N. Y., Seventh month 3, 1899, after months of suffering, Emily Haviland, aged 76 years lacking 8 days.

She was a life-long member of Pittstown Meeting of Friends, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Lawton, and widow of the late Caleb Haviland.

Beloved and esteemed by her relatives and friends for her upright, Christian character and peaceable, quiet spirit, we trust she is now at rest in our Heavenly Father's kingdom. *

LIVEZEY.—Tenth month 15, 1899, at her late residence, Catonsville, Md., Elizabeth Catharine, wife of Elias Livezey, aged 80 years.

MARSHALL.—At London Grove, Chester county, Pa., Ninth month 20, 1899, Sarah T., wife of Edward Marshall, in the 64th year of her age.

PYLE.—At Kennett Square, Pa., Tenth month 15, 1899, Isaac Pyle, aged 88 years; a member of Kennett Monthly Meeting.

REES.—Suddenly, in Mobile, Alabama, Ninth month 3, 1899, Samuel D. Rees, in the 52d year of his age.

He was the youngest son of Jacob and Tamzin Rees (both deceased), of Hopewell, Va. (The notice of the death of his wife, Orline M., Eighth month 10, 1899, appeared in the INTELLIGENCER, Ninth month 2.)

SHERWOOD.—At her home at Pomona, N. Y., Tenth month 14, 1899, Almira Sherwood, aged 67 years; an elder of Cornwall Monthly Meeting.

Her faithfulness to the Society which she so much loved will be remembered by many throughout the different yearly meetings. "Blessed are they who die in the Lord." They rest from their labors and their works do follow them. C.

TUCKER.—In loving but sad remembrance of our dear son, Alva J. Tucker, who departed this life Second month 8, 1899, aged 37 years, 8 months, and 2 days, son of Ellis J. and Melissa Ella Tucker, and member of Deer Creek Meeting of Friends, Harford county, Maryland.

Fondly loved and sadly missed. *

THE DOUKHOBORS.

We have some further contributions to the Relief Fund. They are acknowledged below.

Joseph S. Elkinton, of Philadelphia, is intending another visit to the Doukhobor settlements.

THE "INTELLIGENCER" FUND.

M. L. H.,	$1.00
S. H.,	5.00
A. T. J.,	100.00
	<hr/>
	$106.00
Reported last week,	158.50
	<hr/>
	$264.50

The total amount received through the INTELLIGENCER Fund has been, including the above, $918.75, disposed of as follows:

Sent to London to English Friends, 1898, . .	$166.25
Sent to Winnipeg, summer of 1899, . . .	488.00
On hand, as above,	264.50
	<hr/>
	$918.75

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

I REGRET that no notice has appeared in your columns of the late Ohio Yearly Meeting, which convened at Salem the usual time, and was considered a favored season.

We had with us Isaac Wilson and Ruth his wife, of Canada, and Joel Borton, of New Jersey, whose company was pleasing and encouraging, and their ministry, we trust, found lodgment in the permanent upbuilding of Christian character, and in an increased dedication to the Master's service.

While we mingled from day to day in social and religious fellowship and transacted the business which came before us in much harmony, our hearts went out to the farthest limits of our membership with longing desire that all might be helpers with us, also partakers of the bountiful feast.

Having been duly informed that the sessions of our General Conference for 1900 will meet at Chautauqua at the time our yearly meeting has been held since the year 1828 we were brought into a deep exercise.

Though our time-honored customs are near to our best feelings, we desired that our members should have the opportunity of attending both, and that the way might be open for visiting Friends who might desire to be with us, for the one time, we agreed to adjourn to one week later than usual, and we trust the decision may meet the approval of our absent members.

S. C. F.

Short Creek, O., Tenth month 20, 1899.

There was a good meeting at Providence (Montgomery Co., Pa.), in the old unused meeting-house, on First-day afternoon, the 22d instant. Nearly two hundred persons were estimated to be present. Several Friends who had attended Schuylkill meeting (Phoenixville), in the morning were present, including Samuel S. Ash, Samuel Jones, Anna Smith, Samuel E. Griscom, Margaret P. Howard, and Hannah Linton. All of these spoke, and prayer was offered by two Friends.

The earliest meeting-house at Providence was built of logs about 1730, the land having been donated by David Hamer. Among the families of Friends who lived in the vicinity were those of Richardson, Taylor, Hopkins, Barnet, Tyson, Ambler, Rogers, Jacobs, Cox, Saylor, Hobson, Corson, and others. The present building, of stone, bears the date 1828. Regular meetings were discontinued thirty years ago, but the building is kept in repair by Gwynedd Monthly Meeting, to which it belongs, and occasional meetings are held there. Efforts are being made to have them held more frequently than for some time past.

Samuel S. Ash, of Philadelphia, has obtained a minute for religious service within Westbury and Purchase Quarterly Meetings, N. Y., and Shrewsbury and Plainfield Half-Year Meeting, N. J. His wife, Sarah J. Ash, will accompany him.

Baltimore Yearly Meeting will be held at the meeting-house on Park Avenue next week, the sessions for business beginning on Second-day morning next, the 30th instant. Meeting of Ministers and Elders on Seventh-day, 28th.

The annual Conference of Friends' Associations will be held this year at Woodstown, N. J., on the 18th of next month.

Richland Friends' Monthly Meeting, (Pa.), will be held at Stroudsburg, on Sixth-day, Eleventh month 3, at 2.30 p. m. Friends wishing to attend will please inform Anna W. Palmer, Stroudsburg, Pa.

WHAT is this, that we build?

It is Wealth's strong tower;

And when it is finished, the people shall throng to see;

And the kings of the earth shall cringe before it and cower—

Saith the master.

—Ay? But where, then, shall we be?

—William Young.

The First-Day Schools.

AN OBJECT LESSON.

[Prepared by Benjamin Hallowell for Concord First-day School Union, held at Concord Meeting-house, Tenth month 21.]

My little granddaughter, who spends much of her time with me, seems to have serious thoughts at times, and has often, while out under the trees, asked me over and over again about God, and thinks it strange that I cannot tell her all about him that she wants to know. Are there not many of you who have had the same experience as mine?

"Who is God?" He is the Heavenly Father, who made us, and also everything there is.

"Where is he?" He is everywhere—in the trees and flowers, in air and clouds, and in our hearts.

"If he is everywhere why can't I see him—what does he look like?" We cannot see him because he is a spirit—we see him only in his works.

"Well, if he is a spirit, how can he make trees and flowers, and the grass and clouds and everything?" And this last question brings me to the point of my lesson of the day.

How many of us have been brought to a stand just here? How can a spirit make the solid earth, the universe, and all the beautiful things within it? Many and deep have been the thoughts that I have had on that question, endeavoring to find a satisfactory solution, and one night some months ago it seemed to present itself clearly to me, illustrated by the wonderful power of that silent, unseen force, Electricity.

God is a Spirit, and therefore all the forces that he uses must be spirit forces.

We have no knowledge of the inherent or abstract nature of Matter,—we know it only by its properties.

Therefore we have no knowledge of the abstract nature of electricity; we know by the senses through which we have communication with the external world what it does and can do, and we know of its mighty power.

I have in my hand a piece of ordinary copper wire, which is a part of the trolley wire that has been used on the line from Angora to Media. We know the constituent parts of this wire, we can hold it in our hands—it is perfectly harmless, and can do nothing of itself. Yet when that unknown, invisible something, which we cannot see, is directed through it, what a mighty change of conditions—if we were to touch it then it would be our certain death—and under this changed condition it enables a car filled with passengers, a total weight of 20,000 pounds, to move up the steep hills of our country.

It is not the wire that does this—that is simply the vehicle of the power—the wonderful spirit force, about which we know no more than we do of the Spirit of God which made and controls it. If, then, one of these spirit forces can exert such power (and this illustration is feeble compared to the lightning bolt), how vast must be the power of all these forces combined, which are controlled by the Creator, and all emanate from him—and how plain to my mind is the answer to my thought.

And in this connection I wish to impress upon you my full belief that these spirit forces were not created and then left to work of themselves, but the Almighty Father, "who sleeps not, is not weary," is ever present in them. He is at work with them as unceasingly to-day as when he made them, and not one of them works by chance, but by his direction and with his power, for truly, as the good book says, his is the power and glory forever.

As an illustration of what I have read you, which might convey a part at least of my meaning to the little ones, I will cite the human body.

It is a net-work of nerves, which we will compare with the wires,—these nerves go from all parts of our body to the brain, which we will call the power-house. Now we will take the muscles of the foot and call them the motor under the car.

Then, as with the trolley, we have the wire and the motor, which have no power in themselves, but must wait for a something from the power-house; so we have the nerves and muscles, which have no power in themselves, but must wait for a something from the brain.

Then in both cases that invisible and unknown something—in the wire electricity, and in the nerves a thought—rushes with speed along the lines, and the car or the foot are easily moved.

And here I come to my final comparison: As in the trolley wire there is a spirit force, controlled and directed by the Heavenly Father, so with our bodies we have the thought force evolved by our brain. But above and beyond all we have a soul, which I believe to be one and inseparable from that same Spirit of God; which is ever watchful, which like him "sleeps not, is not weary," guarding and guiding us, awake or in slumber, directing our thoughts towards all that is good and away from all which is evil.

Being, then, as I believe, temples in which dwelleth the Spirit of God, let us be ever on the watch to keep our bodies pure and a fit dwelling-place for him.

Let us be true to our best nature, and we will be true to him, and amid the mighty forces which are ever working around us and in us, guided and directed by his love, we will be in a condition to join in the prayer of Thomas a' Kempis:

"Oh God! who art the Truth, make me one with Thee in everlasting love! I am often weary of reading and weary of hearing. In Thee alone is the sum of my desire. Let every teacher be silent! Let the whole creation be dumb before Thee; and do Thou only speak unto my soul!"

A NOBLE woman of our acquaintance once said to us: "I may be considered heartless in my behavior; but such have been my sorrows that I must seek the help of pleasant people and of pleasant scenes, or be good for nothing to myself and a burden to my friends. For their sakes I must be a 'pleasure-seeker' in all good and simple ways." And so it happened that, while the background of her life was always dark with clouds remembering sorrow and foreboding ill, it had a sunny foreground, in which her heart basked with serene content, and by which many others were made glad.—Exchange.

THOU, THEE, YOU, YE.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

AFTER reading what the Friend from Richmond (?) has to say about the use of "Thou does" I feel constrained to make a few remarks.

The trouble that lies at the bottom of all discussions of such questions is the misapprehension apparent in the statement that "As our Heavenly Father gave to us a language, it is our duty to preserve it in its dignity, beauty and purity." If our Heavenly Father ever gave us a language it was not English, for that has been evolved within historic times, and every stage of its growth is well known. What God has given us is the power to make language, and man is always and everywhere using that power. It is impossible for a language to be "preserved," until it becomes dead. A living tongue is continually changing. I object to the "Incorrect, sanctioned by usage" of the dictionaries, as does the "Friend;" but I object because it is self-contradictory. An expression that is sanctioned by usage cannot be incorrect, since usage is the only criterion of correctness in language. When usage differs the weight of authority depends upon the culture and literary ability of the user.

To use thee in both nominative and objective is no worse than to use you in both cases. When it was necessary to use ye it was necessary to use thou. Friends have the right to continue the use of the singular pronoun in the second person. To dogmatize upon case forms and agreement with verbs is hardly permissible when usage among the educated differs and the choice becomes solely a matter of taste. The tendency away from inflections that characterizes English and gives it the best chance of becoming the universal language, would bring us to "thee does" and hold us there until we are ready for the "you do" of the rest of the English speaking world. But we may resist the tendency, if we please, without being called to account for bad grammar.

E. B. RAWSON.

New York, Tenth month 18.

GOD'S WONDERS.—Go into the garden and ask the cherry tree how it is possible that from a dry, dead twig can spring a little, living eye, and from that eye can spring cherries? Go into the house and ask the matron how it is possible that from the lifeless egg can come the living bird? And since God does such wonders with cherries and with eggs, canst thou not give him the glory of believing that, if He suffers the winter to come over thee, if He suffers thee to die and be imprisoned in the earth, thee also, when his summer comes, will He bring forth again and awaken from the dead?—Luther.

WE must be childlike enough to trust our Father . . . as well with his refusals as with his gifts, his silence as his speech. What need to scrutinize or understand his ways? It suffices that they are his, and we are sure that all is well; that love is there, and the fruits of love not far away.—E. F. Russell.

Educational Department.

COURSES OF STUDY IN FRIENDS' SCHOOLS.

In the Atlantic Monthly for the current month, President Eliot presents the question of Courses of Study and Methods of Instruction in Secondary or High Schools. One conclusion which he reaches seems to me of great interest to the managers of our Friends' schools. It is that the instruction in high schools should be the same for those pupils who intend to go to college, and for those who do not. This does not necessarily imply that all pupils should pursue the same course, but only that every course of study which leads to graduation in the schools should be so arranged as to prepare for college.

My experience, covering a number of years in high school and college preparatory work, and a short time in college, leads me to agree with this conclusion; and I am thoroughly convinced that it will be good policy for our Friends' schools to so outline their courses of study that every one of their graduates shall find the college doors open to him.

The modern elective system adopted by almost all colleges admits to the Freshman Class any one who has a sound secondary education, including mathematics, some history, a good knowledge of English, and at least one other language. It seems to me plain that no one of these elements can properly be omitted from anything which can be called a good education, and no one of them is less valuable for the youth who goes into business than to him who pursues a higher course of study at college or university.

I think the managers of our Friends' schools have been wise in not limiting their instruction to the college preparatory work. In almost every instance they go further into science, usually further into mathematics, and frequently further in English than is required for college admission. The result is that if no essential element has been omitted, the graduate of the Friends' school enters college stronger and better prepared than one whose preparation has been confined to the prescribed limits.

The change from school to college is frequently very great. Methods of instruction are different. The student is thrown more upon his own responsibility. A smaller number of hours of recitation per week is usually required, but the preparation for these hours must be much more extended, and requires not only more time but more strenuous effort. The course in algebra given in our Friends' schools is frequently somewhat deficient either in quality or quantity, but the element of college preparation in which these schools most frequently fail is the department of Language. Excepting the Engineering courses in a few colleges, at least one language is universally required for admission, and for the course leading to the degree "Bachelor of Arts," and frequently to the degree "Bachelor of Science," two languages are required. Friends have frequently undervalued the intellectual growth and the wider outlook which comes from the study of a foreign language. All such study, and particularly the study of Latin, requires a method of application, and a kind of thinking which does not necessarily find a place in the preparation of any other lessons; and the languages, therefore, furnish a real instrument of mental development in some respects superior to any other branch of study.

The great point that I wish to make, however, in favor of the suggestion that every graduate of Friends' schools should be prepared to enter college, is that such a course keeps open all the doors which lead to the various opportunities of life until the time when the young man or woman is ready to make a selection. There is among educators a great awakening to the error of too early specialization. Few children of thirteen or fourteen, and comparatively few parents of such children are ready to determine the question of their future career. We have in Swarthmore this year a number of students who decided several years before completing their courses of study in school that they did not intend to go to college. They therefore omitted some of the branches required for college preparation and pursued others which they imagined were better adapted to their individual needs. After a year or two of absence from school, these young people have discovered that they needed the work of the college, and they have entered our classes at considerable disadvantage because of their choice, made before they were able really to discern what their needs were. An examination of the courses of study which they pursued in school fails to show that these studies did more to fit them for practical living than would have been done by the studies which would have prepared them to enter college regularly and without deficiencies to be made up. Had they included in their course all of the college preparatory studies, they would have lost nothing, and, as I have said, they would have kept the doors open until the time came for them really to enter. There is less difficulty in influencing the choice of young people than is sometimes imagined by teachers and school committees; and if the courses leading to graduation are laid out upon the plan which I have suggested, I think there will be few cases where it will lead to serious difficulty.

WM. W. BIRDSALL

Swarthmore College, Tenth month 21.

CANON RAWNSLEY AT SWARTHMORE.

On the evening of the 17th, Canon Rawnsley delivered in Parrish Hall, his promised lecture on "The Literary Associations of the Lake District." The lecture was, in itself very interesting and was given in pleasant, informal manner. Canon Rawnsley is especially delightful in his imitations of rural English dialect. The numerous illustrations, both portraits and scenery, which accompanied the lecture, were varied and beautiful, giving a vivid idea of the quiet beauty of the famous Lake Region.

Canon Rawnsley's visit to the College was greatly enjoyed, not only on account of the lecture, but also in a social way, as both students and instructors had the pleasure of meeting him personally. The Canon's special interest in coeducation made his visit at Swarthmore doubly pleasant.

Morning Collection on the 18th was made memorable by a most inspiring address to the students by Canon Rawnsley. He spoke very forcibly of the hurry and worry of American life, which had impressed him more than anything else in this country. He then talked of the lessons which we may draw from Nature. The "lilies of the field" attain their perfect beauty of form, color, and fragrance only by slow and steady development, and only in this same way can our lives reach their perfect flower. Let us love Nature, study her, and learn to follow her guidance into paths of peace and joy. The Canon illustrated his remarks by reading a number of beautiful passages from Wordsworth. His visit to the College, his kindly interest in Swarthmore, and his delightful lecture and talk will long be pleasantly remembered. M. S. H.

ADDRESS BY DEAN BOND.—Plymouth Friends' meeting-house (Montgomery county, Pa.), was well filled on the afternoon of the 22d inst., at the meeting of Plymouth Friends' Association. Dean Bond, of Swarthmore College, read a paper on "The Epistles of John," which was listened to with great interest. A recitation preceded the paper, and one followed it. Isaac Roberts, president of the Association, conducted the meeting.

It was announced that the Trustees of Friends' school have offered the use of a room for future meetings of the Association. The next will be held on the 17th of next month, at 7.30 in the evening.

EDUCATIONAL MEETING AT FLUSHING.—A meeting under care of the Educational Committee will be held in the meeting-house, Flushing, L. I., on the afternoon of quarterly meeting day, Tenth month 28, at 2.30 o'clock.

Elizabeth Powell Bond, Dean of Swarthmore College, is expected to be present and read a paper entitled "Learning to read — a Life-pursuit."

All are invited to attend.

LITERARY NOTES.

It would never do to disclose the story which is contained in Elizabeth Stuart Phelps's new little book, "Loveliness," for it would mar the effect when the book is read. Sufficient to say that the title refers to a dog, "a silver Yorkshire, blue of blood, and delicately reared," and that there is a little girl, "of between five and six years, but so small that one would scarcely have guessed her to be four," who sometimes, "on her weaker days, carried a small crutch." These are the chief characters; the story must be read. It is told in the best style of the gifted author. There are four illustrations by Sarah S. Stilwell. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.)

John Russell Hayes has in press for early issue a volume, to be entitled "Swarthmore Idylls," a collection of his verses portraying the varied aspects of life at the college, the influence of its teachings, and old Swarthmore memories and associations. The book will be illustrated with original sketches of the buildings and surrounding landscape, drawn by Robert Shaw.

The mosquito theory of malaria, about which there has been so much discussion recently, is treated of by Major Ronald Ross in the current number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly. Major Ross has been engaged for some time past in India in a study of this subject, and the present paper constitutes the report of his work to the British Government. Wireless telegraphy, about which we hear so much and we still know so little, is described and explained by Prof. John Trowbridge, of Harvard University, in the same magazine. A number of illustrations help very much in simplifying the text.

PROFESSOR CAMPBELL, through the great telescope at the Lick observatory, claims to have ascertained that Polaris, properly known as the North Star, is really a triple system. Two of the bodies in this system revolve around each other in a period of four days, and at the same time move in a much wider sweep around the third body. The separate bodies which compose the system cannot be seen with the telescope, nor is it likely that they ever will be seen with an instrument. Their existence is determined by the spectroscope.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

PHILADELPHIA.—The Young Friends' Association held its first meeting of the season Tenth month 9. In the absence of the president, Emma Waln, first vice-president, opened the meeting with a few words of welcome. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, after which the standing committees made their reports. The Building Committee's report was asked for; it stated that the committee hoped to have the new building in a week or two, and trusted the next Association meeting could be held there.

The Executive Committee announced the program for the evening, a paper, prepared by John William Graham, to be read by Isabel Chambers. The report also included recommendations for the government of the House Committee. These were six in number, and were acted upon separately, and were adopted with one exception, which was referred back to the Executive Committee for further consideration.

The paper by John William Graham very ably treated the subject, "The Connection Between Education and Religion." The writer classified learning into the "bread-and-butter" education and the "higher education"; the duties of both are to give knowledge, to train the faculties, and to make up character. It is, however, of "higher education" that the paper treats. The writer gives the intellectual faculties developed by it, also the moral characteristics, which are an "extended sympathy, a deeper veneration, a shining love for truth, and a habit of personal modesty." "These," he says, "help to make up religion," consequently the two great possessions of man, education and religion, are closely allied. To verify his idea of the humility of a scholar, he says, "subjecting everything to the tests of reason and conscience and to the light of history, leaves most scholars free from superstitious reverence for ceremonies, and the man is brought face to face with God with nothing between." The writer entreats us to "regard education as a training to enable us the better to read and to express the mind of God." The paper was well received, and the discussion general, and mostly confined strictly to the subject.

A novel and interesting feature of the evening was a short address by T. B. Pandian, a Christian Hindu, of Madras, India, who is laboring for the up-lifting of his race, and especially for the Pariah class.

The meeting gathered in the usual silence and adjourned.

ESTHER S. STACKHOUSE, Secretary.

NORRISTOWN, PA.—The Friends' Association met on the evening of the 17th instant at the home of Ellwood Roberts and wife.

Ellwood Roberts read an article on Robert G. Ingersoll from a recent magazine issue; Chas. S. Platt, from a work by Henry Tuke on the principles of Friends. Mary H. Forman gave a recitation.

Alice A. Roberts read a paper "The Testimony of Friends Against War," urging upon all that a stand be taken in favor of peace.

Emma B. Conrow, in the Current Topics report, referred to the recent installation of Caroline Hazard as president of Wellesley College, Mass.

Delegates were appointed to the Conference at Woodstown, and members of the Executive Committee. Next month's meeting will be held at the home of John W. Harry and wife.

TRENTON, N. J.—The Trenton Friends' Association was held Ninth month 25. The meeting was called to order by the president, W. Maxwell Marshall. The report of the executive committee was read.

The literary program was opened by A. V. Robinson, subject, "Can the interest in our association be increased and how?" He proposed a change in the by-laws in the order of business; it was thought well to try it and if satisfactory to be adopted.

Anna M. North read an interesting paper on the Life and Writings of Robert Barclay. "Above everything Robert Barclay esteemed a good life, and his endeavors in this direction brought to him reproaches, insults, and imprisonments, all borne with sweetness and lowliness of spirit."

A paper prepared by William Walton was next read: "What can the Overseers do for the general welfare of our Religious Society?" The writer said: "What need they do but try to carry out in their every-day lives, the teachings and example of Jesus." We should not keep our light hidden under a bushel, if it is as good as we believe it to be, but let others know of it, and our Overseers by thus doing would add much to the general welfare of our Religious Society.

Susan Waters answered the question, "What do we understand by the term Immediate Revelation?" Immediate Revelation, or inspiration, is an inherent possibility of the finite mind, and not a belief originating with Friends or with George Fox. Repetition is not revelation. Immediate revelation is a continuous flow of onward and upward thought. It is a higher inspiration, in response to a higher and more ardent aspiration; and comes as the harvest of, and in proportion to our higher attainment in knowledge, wisdom, and soul development.

After a few minutes' silence, meeting adjourned.

C. S. BAMFORD, Sec. pro tem.

MOORESTOWN, N. J.—A meeting of the Moorestown Young Friends' Association was held Tenth month 13.

Prof. Joseph S. Walton, of Friends' Central School, was introduced and spoke on the subject of Patriotism, which he defined as our allegiance to the home, school, church, State and nation. Our conception of Patriotism or loyalty has grown and broadened, it first commenced in the family, then extended to the clan, then to the strong and often intellectual leader of the clan or tribe, afterward to the soil they walked on, for localization and centralization were its characteristics, as it then had geographical and tribal limits.

As time advanced, our idea of Patriotism became wider than the State and extended throughout the nation until at the present time our conception of the word embraces the whole world. After a brief silence the meeting adjourned.

ADA M. LIPPINCOTT, Secretary.

MICKLETON, N. J.—At a meeting of the Young Friends' Association, held at the meeting-house, Tenth month 14, the president read the 30th chapter of Deuteronomy. In the absence of the secretary, Ruth W. Peaslee was appointed for the evening.

A communication from the Executive Committee was read, announcing that the next General Conference of Friends' Associations will be held at Woodstown, N. J., Eleventh month 18, to attend which as delegates Mary Owen, Ruth W. Peaslee, Benjamin C. Heritage, Elizabeth L. Duell, and C. Louise Heald were appointed.

In compliance with a request from the Executive Committee, M. Elma Livezey was appointed to act as secretary at the approaching General Conference.

The meeting expressed approval of the suggestion that its Executive members be empowered to send substitutes to the committee meetings, when they are unable to attend them.

Joseph B. Livezey opened the regular program for the evening by reviewing the 16th chapter of Janney's History. This was felt to be a very interesting and instructive chapter. Mabel B. Haines read "Hiawatha and the Pearl Feather."

A portion of the Discipline concerning Overseers was read by Ellen B. Haines. Milton Heritage recited a good piece called "The Conceited Coin." An interesting article on the "Life and Home of Audubon, the ornithologist," was given by Martha White. Benjamin Heritage sent an excellent collection of current items, which were read by J. Omar Heritage. Martha Engle read a piece entitled "Abraham Lincoln and the Quaker," which was much enjoyed by all. Announcements were made for next meeting and the roll called. Then adjourned until Eleventh month 11.

R. W. P.

ABINGTON FIRST-DAY SCHOOL UNION.—This was held on the 21st at Upper Dublin (Montgomery county, Pa.). There was an unusually large attendance, the meeting-house being filled to its utmost capacity.

Reports were received from most of the schools of the Quarterly Meeting. That at Stroudsburg has not been reopened, and its continuance appears to be uncertain.

Members of all the schools belonging to the Union took part in the program, which consisted of object lessons, class exercises, readings and recitations, etc. Walter Brinton, of Gwynedd school, presented an excellent essay, on "Success."

In the afternoon the subject for discussion: "Have the Results of the First-day School been what might be expected?" was opened by Jane K. Jarrett, of Horsham, and continued by Mary P. Buckman, Plymouth, and others spoke briefly, including Joel Borton, of Woodstown, N. J.

The next meeting of the Union will be held at Plymouth in Fourth month next.

HUNTINGTON, IND.—The Young Friends' Association met Tenth month 13. After the reading of the minutes, the chairman of the Executive Committee gave a report of the work of the committee and read the programs as prepared by them, for the following six months.

After the routine business, William Moore read a carefully-prepared paper entitled "Arguments against Expansion." The discussion brought out several new points that added much to the paper. Edith Spencer favored the Association with a beautiful and appropriate recitation.

The Association adjourned to meet Eleventh month 10, at the usual place of holding meeting. ELLA MOORE.

CONCORD FIRST-DAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE.—This was held at Concord (Delaware county, Pa.), on the 21st. There was a large attendance. Reports were presented by Birmingham, Chester, Chichester, Concord, Darby, Goshen, Middletown, Newtown, Providence, Stanton, Swarthmore, Romansville, West Chester, Willistown, Wilmington, and Lansdowne. All were regarded as good reports.

The question: "In what way shall the Bible be studied that we may attain therefrom the broadening influence that has been noted among English Friends?" was considered at the afternoon session. Sarah R. Paiste, of West Chester, read a paper on the subject, and others joined in the discussions. "A Bible Story" was given by Elizabeth W. Collins, of Swarthmore, and an object lesson by Benjamin Hallowell, Jr., of Lansdowne. It was decided to meet next time (Fourth month, 1900), at Darby.

PEACE CONFERENCE AT UPPER DUBLIN.—There was a good meeting, though not large, at Upper Dublin, on the afternoon of the 22d (First-day), under care of Abington Quarterly Meeting's committee on Philanthropic Labor. Peace and Arbitration was the subject. James Q. Atkinson, Lukens Webster, Joel Borton, Annie L. Croasdale, Alvin Haines, and others spoke. Arabella Carter, of Byberry, acted as secretary. The speakers strongly presented the views of Friends concerning Peace, and earnestly regretted the war in the Philippines. A good recitation by Shepherd Cleaver (a little boy), of Byberry, closed the proceedings.

COMMUNICATIONS.

GIVING TO FRIENDS' CHARITIES.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

I FEEL sorry when new charities are appealed for to Friends. Their strength and interest ought not to be dissipated. They do not give too liberally to their own charities, and if their money is scattered on new objects, what is to become of the worthy old ones?

The Doukhobors should appeal to Friends, as they are suffering for what we regard as a vital principle, and yet but about $200, I believe, has been sent them. I think the INTELLIGENCER should be an "organ" for Friends' interests. After our own charities are well provided for, then we may advocate the claims of others. J.

New York.

[We agree in the main with what our correspondent says. But we find that different people have their sympathies drawn to different objects. The amount of help for the Doukhobors, through the INTELLIGENCER, is four times that stated by our correspondent. We have forwarded to England $166.25, to Winnipeg $488, and have at this writing (Tenth month 18) $158.50 on hand, total $812.75.—EDS.]

MT. PLEASANT SCHOOL, S. C.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

ONCE again, the long and restful vacation ended, we find ourselves at our post of duty for the winter. School commenced Tenth month 2. The teachers have entered upon their work with new zeal and enthusiasm, and we have every prospect of a pleasant and prosperous season.

The weather has been very warm this month. This has brought the cotton out all at once, so picking is going rapidly forward. We have two hundred pupils enrolled, although the country children have not entered.

Another change, the greatest of all, has come to us : Anne Nicholas, who has had charge of the Industrial Department for ten years, resigned her position in the summer, and ten days after my return left for her home in Ohio, where she expects to stay and rest for a year at least. Of her ten years of faithful, efficient service, her aid in building up the work, in building the Industrial annex, and the Old Folks' Shelter, and in helping so many of the colored people in the acquirement of homes of their own, too much cannot be said ; she will not be soon forgotten.

We found the children at the Home, sixteen in number, well and hearty, they having remained so during the summer under the excellent care of the matron, Frances Attles. As these children are clothed from the barrels that are sent to us, I wish to remind our friends of the empty condition of our Dorcas room. Much for them, and much for the people generally, and much for ourselves, depends upon this part of our work. Coming with their little cotton money tied up in handkerchiefs, as they usually carry it, already these poor people are clamoring for "ol' close" for themselves and children, and for "warm tings, agin when de cole catch us." We cannot bear to see them turn away disappointed, to spend their little money for what will cost more and really be of less service to them.

For ourselves, we need many little repairs and changes to be made, and we need money for this, as we have no extra fund to draw from. Decay goes on rapidly in this climate, especially in summer, and none but those who have the care of property know how much care and vigilance it requires, how much of "here a little and there a little" labor and material continually to keep it in repairs. If you will only send the barrels we can do it all.

The first number of our little Visitor will soon be out. We have already received a number of subscriptions, and hope to receive many more, (25 cts.) Having no printing press of our own, the printing is our greatest item of expense, and for this we shall depend greatly upon our subscriptions. Our friends will please be as prompt as possible with their contributions. The long vacation generally leaves teachers with empty purses, and such is our condition. Everything is now in working order, and promises well. With an earnest, enthusiastic corps of Christian workers, well fitted for their places, we are looking forward to a happy, prosperous winter, feeling sure that the blessing of the Almighty will rest upon us.

ABBY D. MUNRO.

Mt. Pleasant, S. C.

THE Savannah, Ga., News says : "The trend in the direction of temperance is so marked in the South that the daily newspapers are beginning to take notice of it and discuss it editorially. In Savannah it is claimed that there has been a decrease of 25 per cent. in the whiskey trade during the past eight to ten years. In Atlanta the decrease is estimated at 20 per cent. In Mobile 20 per cent. less whiskey is sold now than formerly. It is said that, taking the South as a whole, there was a decrease of about 15 per cent. as compared with the previous years."

THE surgeon-in-chief of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad has issued a circular containing the following ruling : "Hereafter an Emergency Box must be carried in every passenger train, and the following instructions must be observed at all times. . . . The tablets marked 'stimulant' can be given in cases where great weakness and depression follow the injury. Use them instead of whisky."

For Friends' Intelligencer.

LIFE'S AFTERGLOW.

WHEN we behold the setting sun
Send forth its parting light,
Amid its glory-tinted clouds,
How beautiful the sight.
When interblending red and gold
Into each other flow,
The brilliant combination makes,
A lovely afterglow.

So when our lives have struggled through Much false, ambitious pride,
And selfish loves, once very sweet,
Have all been crucified,
God shows unto each loving heart
A shining path to go,
Which makes life's evening radiant with
A golden afterglow.

When three score years and ten are reached,
The fever heat of youth
Subsides into the quiet calm
Of trustful, restful truth.
We cannot thank our God enough
That we can come to know,
Through sweet communion with Himself,
This glorious afterglow ;

That we have learned how valueless
Earth's empty honors are,
How quickly they take wings and fly
Beyond our reach afar.
We then cling closer to our Lord,
Assured that he will show
Us how to keep the sunshine of This Heavenly afterglow.

Richmond, Indiana.

ANNA M. STARR.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

TO CANON RAWNSLEY.

After his Address on Wordsworth's Message, at Swarthmore College, Tenth month 18.

THOU gav'st us golden words that golden day,—
Thou spiritual scion of the Seer
Who made the English lakes forever dear,
The English mountains memorable for aye.
We seemed to hear from lonely summits gray,
From fell and murmurous tarn and tranquil mere,
Echoes of that great Voice, serene and clear,
Whose message is a solace and a stay !

The world hath need of calming words like those
In this her troubled hour of haste and heat ;
Childlike in their simplicity, and sweet,
They come with consolation and repose.
In grateful memory, then, we cherish thee,—
Apostle of Wordsworth's deep tranquility !

J. R. H.

THE latest information about the tribe of pigmies discovered by Henry M. Stanley, inhabiting a forest-covered region in Central Africa, comes from Albert B. Lloyd, the traveller. He traversed the forest, and saw many of the little men and women who inhabit it. He met none exceeding four feet in height. They are timid and cannot look a stranger in the face, their eyes constantly shifting as in the case of monkeys. Though perfectly formed and fairly intelligent, they never leave the forest, and have no settled habitations.

IN Union County, Ga., there is, it is said, not any bar room, and 75 per cent. of the people own their own homes. Only one head of a family in the country seat does not own his home. There is not a dollar of bonds on the county, and with the tax rate three times larger this year than usual, the total State and county tax amounts to only $1.15 on $100.

ARMS AND EDUCATION.

New York Evening Post.

THE unconquerable optimism of mankind is nowhere more wonderfully manifested than in the shortness of its memory of suffering. After the terrible four years of the civil war it might have been supposed that, for half a century at least, arms would have been odious and military glory held in low esteem. So many maidens had lost their lovers, so many wives their husbands, so many children their fathers, that the whole land was filled with wailing, and the blessings of peace were to all appearances thoroughly appreciated. But, as time passed, and the poignancy of the suffering abated, the invincible charm of bloodshed reasserted itself. The story of the war was told and retold, and with every narration the horrible features were softened and the fascinations of bold adventure exalted. Military leaders were sainted, and no one who should argue that the beneficial results of the war might have been attained by statesmanship could get an audience. . . . The martial spirit has grown so strong that, if the slightest pretext arose, we should fly to arms at once. The newspapers would call for war, the youth of the country would rejoice in it, and even the clergy and the women would regard it as having a sacred character.

The irrationality of all this is so plain that it occasionally strikes the military enthusiasts, and they are moved to invent some justification of their folly. One of the most curious of these attempts is that of Mr. Sidney Low, an English journalist, who writes in the Nineteenth Century of the future of the great armies. He derides the Peace Conference at The Hague. He says that the project of reducing armaments was a chimerical fantasy which could not be discussed without absurdity by practical men. The great armaments, he contends, so far from being a constant menace to peace, are its best guarantee. They have become so great that no one dares to use them. "The risks are too heavy for the nerves even of a Bismarck to face. Nations will not plunge into hostilities when they see that victory itself would involve something like industrial ruin and commercial collapse, owing to the withdrawal of practically the entire adult male population from the work of production. . . . As a rule, governments count the consequences before proceeding to extremities; and, the more costly war is made, the more national suffering and loss it involves, the larger the proportion of the civil population it touches, the less likely is it to be rashly adventured on. There is no argument in favor of arbitration and negotiation so forcible as a huge conscript army."

Hence the great armaments will remain as the permanent bulwark of peace. Though we may confidently hope that wars will become more and more uncommon, "warlike preparations will be pushed on with unceasing and unsleeping vigilance." The young men of most civilized countries must continue to spend several of the best years of their lives in acquiring the military art, which they will never be called on to exercise. The most direful consequences, according to Mr. Low, are to be apprehended from any change of these conditions. Reduce the armies and render the weapons less deadly, and "the grim phantoms of ruin, death, and massacre," which are the guardian angels of peace, will lose some of their terrors. "If we could get back to a state of things in which each European general staff had at its disposal a compact little professional army of 80,000 or 100,000 men, with no conscripts and no huge civilian reserve, there would be no fear of 'suicide' or famine, and it would be as easy for ambitious sovereigns and intriguing ministers to bring about hostilities as it used to be in the days of Frederick the Great and Kaunitz."

Such extensive assertion demands some proof, but Mr. Low offers none. It is enough to say that we have had instances of ambitious sovereigns and intriguing ministers in this generation, and until we get further away from Napoleon III. and Bismarck we cannot admit that the existence of great forces is a guarantee of peace. Bismarck would not have fought the Austrians unless he had a great army, nor would Napoleon have engaged in any of his wars without a similar reliance. Probably the strength of Frederick the Great's army was proportionally as great as that of the army of the present King of Prussia, and under Louis XIV. and Napoleon I. the burden of arms was greater than it is now. But the proper reply to Mr. Low's argument is to ask if the love of peace and detestation of war are promoted by great armaments, for these sentiments are the only possible foundation of enduring tranquillity. We need only look at France for the answer to this question.

With a very creditable inconsistency, Mr. Low does look at France, and finds that the French army is a most demoralizing affair. It is honeycombed now, as it was under Bazaine, "by brutality, license, disorder, and tyranny." In fact, Mr. Low continues, throughout the Latin countries army life is utterly degrading to the conscripts. But in Germany the results are better. There, at least, some physical and mental gain results from military discipline. It would be strange if it did not; but what of moral gain? Mr. Low can easily find statistics in the English War Office which will convince him that the barracks are not a good school of morals. No one in his senses can maintain that they are, or that they are likely to be. Military service develops certain traits and effaces others. The soldier may be civil, punctual, and obedient when he returns to civil life. He may also be drunken, unchaste, and altogether incapable of business enterprise or family direction. It cannot be conceded that the educational influence of the barracks is on the whole a desirable one for the citizen. Were that concession made, it would still remain true that far more valuable educational influences could be provided at infinitely smaller expense, and without the accompaniment of moral corruption.

THIS is the cruel cross of life, to be Full visioned only when the ministry
Has been fulfilled, and in the place
Of some dear presence is but empty space;
What recollected services then
Give consolation to the "might have been?"—Anon.

THE EARLY CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

PROF. J. RENDEL HARRIS, of Cambridge, England, the well-known Friend, in an article in the series of "Present Day Papers" (conducted by John Wilhelm Rowntree, at York), quotes from Dr. A. C. McGiffert's "History of the Christian Church in Apostolic Times" a very striking paragraph in relation to the system of the early Christians. Dr. Harris says, in making the quotation :

"The following very fine summary of what we learn concerning Christian worship from the directions for its regulation in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, might very well be printed, along with a similar passage in Neander's Church History, as a Friend's Tract for the Times."

The passage cited from Dr. McGiffert's book is as follows :

"Whoever had a psalm, or a teaching or a revelation, or a tongue, received it from the Spirit, and when he communicated it to his brethren, it was accepted as a Divine and not as a mere human utterance. It is in the light of this fact that the freedom which characterized the Corinthian services must be interpreted. That freedom seems at first to have been complete. The confinement of the right to participate to a certain class or certain regularly appointed individuals was evidently quite unknown. Every Christian had the right to take such part as he wished, and the woman's right was equal to the man's. But the recognition of that right was not due to the Corinthians' recognition of the equality of all believers ; it was due to their reverence for the Spirit of God. A disciple had the right to take part in the services, not because he was a Christian possessed of equal privileges with his brethren, but simply because he was an organ of the Spirit, and it was the Spirit's will that he should speak. Unless the Spirit prompted him he had no right whatever. And hence the freedom which is so characteristic a mark of the services as they appear in Paul's Epistle was, after all, decidedly limited. There was freedom for the Spirit, not for men as men."

Dr. McGiffert is said to have written the above without comprehending that there is a body of Christians in America to-day—the Friends—that holds the same principle in regard to worship that he has so vividly described as a feature of the early Church.

PRESSING NEEDS OF THE DOUKHOBORS.

From the Address by Charles Rhoads, at the meeting (on the Doukhobor subject) at Arch street Friends' meeting-house, Philadelphia, Tenth month 5, 1899.

THE call for the present assembly is occasioned by the conviction on the part of the committee of the Meeting for Sufferings of Friends of Philadelphia, who were charged some months ago with the care of raising funds to aid the Russian emigrants to Canada, known as the Doukhoborts, that the members of the Society have a peculiar duty to perform in assisting these people to tide over a critical period, following their introduction into North America, until they can become self-sustaining. There are about seven thousand of them now in the eastern part of the province of Assiniboia and the western district of the province of Manitoba, in the Dominion of Canada, where the Canadian Government has assigned them two hundred and seventy-six thousand four hundred and eighty acres of land, being one hundred and sixty acres to each adult. A part of them arrived there in the Sixth month last, but others not until a month or more later ; consequently there was not sufficient time left in that Northern climate (about fifty degrees) to plant and perfect crops or cereals ; and the potatoes planted by those who first came were injured by an untimely frost in the latter part of the Seventh month.

The contributions so liberally made heretofore by English Friends (about seventy-five thousand dollars), have been entirely consumed by the cost of transporting these people from the Black Sea to Canada, and feeding them on the voyage. The funds donated by Friends here and those given by the Mennonites, amounting to over ten thousand dollars, have been expended in sustaining them after their arrival, and providing oxen for farm labor, with wagons, tools, seeds, etc.

The situation that now confronts them is, that ten months more must elapse before their farming will result in ripened crops for their sustenance, during which but little profitable labor can be done for wages, owing to the sparsely settled country they occupy, and the severe weather with snow, which prevails in that region.

These facts form a strong appeal to Friends to make some sacrifices, to save them from starvation and suffering, meantime. Their religious principles and testimonies coincide remarkably with ours in regard to war, the spirituality of Divine worship, and avoidance of all ritual ceremonies in its performance ; patience under injuries, and love to mankind. They are industrious, frugal and temperate in their habits ; and if placed in favorable circumstances for prosperity in outward affairs, have proved themselves abundantly able to be independent and self-supporting.

A RHODE ISLAND MEETING.

From Caroline Hazard's "Narragansett."

THERE Narragansett lies before us, unchanged as to physical features, but more thickly peopled, with villages dotting the pleasant dales. Let us try to turn back the years to that summer day in 1743 when the first recorded meeting was held. Riding through the narrow lanes, from beyond Little Rest, and up from Westerly, came the representatives to that meeting. The old meeting-house—old in 1743—stood upon the southern spur of Tower Hill, a mile or more from the village. The first mention of this building occurs in Judge Sewall's diary, under an entry of Friday, September 20, 1706, when he went "into the Quaker meeting-house, about thirty-five feet long, thirty feet wide, on Hazard's ground, which was mine." The sale of this land to Thomas Hazard was made in 1698, so that it must have been a comparatively new building at the time of Sewall's visit. The South Kingstown Records have something further to say of this land. August 4, 1710, Thomas Hazard sold one acre to Ebenezer Slocum, of Jamestown, for forty shillings; and the next day it was conveyed by Slocum to Rowland Robinson, Samuel Perry, Henry Knowles, Jr., Thomas Rodman, and Jacob Mott, for the same consideration. The bounds are given, easterly and southerly by the road, the rest by Hazard's land, "being that parcel of land on which stands a certain meeting-house in which the people called Quakers usually meet."

It commanded a wide prospect of land and water. At the foot of the hill the chain of Point Judith ponds begins, which separate the Point from the mainland; and the perilous Point itself, called in the old deeds Point Juda, or Point Jude, stretches a warning finger far out into the white breakers. Block Island, the land of Manassees, lies in the distance to the southwest; while to the east the unbroken ocean stretches to the coast of Africa. Close at hand, the Pettaquamscutt winds through its marshes; the crescent of Little Neck beach is white with foam; and but a little farther the windows of Newport gleam in the sunshine. A lovely prospect those "weighty" Friends had to look upon.

KINDNESS GROWS SLOWLY.

From John Fiske's "Destiny of Man."

WE (the human family) have made more progress in intelligence than in kindness. For thousands of generations, and until very recent times, one of the chief occupations of men has been to plunder, bruise and kill one another. The selfish and ugly passions which are primordial, which have the incalculable strength of inheritance from the time when animal consciousness began, have had but little opportunity to grow weak from disuse. The tender and unselfish feelings, which are of later development, have too seldom been allowed to grow strong from exercise. The whims and prejudices of primeval, militant barbarism are slow in dying out from the midst of peaceful, industrious civilization. The coarser forms of cruelty are indeed disappearing, and the butchery of men has greatly diminished. But most people apply to industrial pursuits a notion of antagonism derived from ages of warfare, and seek in all manner of ways to cheat and overreach one another. As in more barbarous times, the hero was he who had slain his tens of thousands, so now the man who has made wealth by overreaching his neighbors is not uncommonly spoken of in terms which imply approval. Though gentlemen no longer assail one another with knives and clubs, they still inflict wounds with cruel words and sneers. Though the one who dares to think for himself is no longer chained to a stake and burned, people still tell lies about him and do their best to starve him by hurting his reputation. The virtues of forbearance and self-control are still in a very rudimentary state, and of mutual helpfulness there is far too little among men.

It is said that in Massachusetts, out of 1,100,000 engaged in gainful occupations, only 37,000 are employed on First-day. This number is made up mainly of persons employed on railroads and steamboats, and in hotels and restaurants.

At the Bottom of the Dreyfus Case.

Advocate of Peace, Boston.

IN all the outburst of amazement and moral indignation there has been scarcely an allusion to anything back of the personalities connected with the case. Race hatred has been mentioned, but nobody believes that to have played more than a subordinate part in the drama. Nor is the cause to be found in French weakness, fickleness of character, or corruptibility, on which foreign critics have harped. France is not worse than many other countries in these respects, and but little below the very best.

What then is it that lies at the root of this extraordinary bit of injustice? It is nothing less than that which in Germany leaves a civilian no redress in a contest with a soldier; which in all the great nations of continental Europe is riding rough shod, with its conscienceless conscription and taxation, over the heads of the common citizens, regardless of their personal and family rights to food, raiment, health, and comfort; which is, we fear, in these latter days, seriously threatening the foundations of Anglo-Saxon justice and respect for personal and State rights. The very nations themselves which have been loudest in their condemnation of France and the gross miscarriage of justice at Rennes are, in so far as they uphold and support the evil system out of which it has sprung, guilty in a measure of the crime against Dreyfus.

Remedies For Insomnia.

"INSOMNIA is a self-inflicted curse through the violation of Nature's laws," writes Edward B. Warman in the Ladies' Home Journal.

"The cause may be over-anxiety, planning for the morrow, thinking and worrying over the yesterdays and to-days, but no opiate can remove the cause, even though it may bring sleep. If the cause is merely mental overwork it may be quickly removed by relieving the brain of the excess of blood. Physical exercise is a panacea for about every ailment which human flesh is heir to. Therefore, stand erect, and rise slowly from the heels; descend slowly. Do this from forty to fifty times until you feel the congestion in the muscles of the leg. Almost instant relief follows, and sleep is soon induced. For those who are averse to a little work I would recommend, instead, a bowl of very hot milk (without so much as a wafer) immediately before retiring. The hotter the milk the better for the purpose. This will prove a better sleep-producer than all the opiates known to medical science. It brings about an increased activity of the blood vessels of the stomach, causing slight temporary congestion, which relieves the blood vessels of the brain. The hot milk is also quite strengthening to the stomach."

The Waste of War.

THE madness that war inevitably proves itself to be to those that engage in it and to the world—the awful waste and desolation it causes, lost sight of by the foolish and heedless under the glamour of its influence and becraving excitements—are well shown by certain statements of fact which have been gathered from the "History of Civilization," by Paul Courier, and have gained some circulation. They cannot be too widely set forth and pressed upon popular attention. He says:

"Algeria has cost France 1,560 times the net profit of its annual revenues. Madagascar, up to 1896, cost the same nation $85,000,000, and there is nothing really to show in return. Tonquin has produced mainly disease and constant slaughter. The effort to keep San Domingo," he says, "cost France more dearly than all the crimes of her great revolutions." And so, too, he sums up in a striking statement the effect marvellously ruinous of a recent well-remembered African war upon another European Power. "Abyssinia," he says, "has cost Italy $115,000,000 and thousands of lives, or more than enough to drain the Pontine marshes and cover the mother country's dry hills with fruit trees and forest trees, and fill that ancient, sunny land with prosperous, contented, and happy homes."

Lincoln's Mercifulness.

THE story is told that one day General Augur, who was the Major-General commanding the forces in and around Washington, went to the office of Charles A. Dana, assistant Secretary of War, and said: "Here is So-and-so, a spy; he has been tried by court-martial, and the facts are established; he has been sentenced to death, and here is the warrant for his execution, which is fixed for to-morrow morning at six o'clock." Dana replied: "The President is away. If he were here the man certainly would not be executed." "He is not here, and I think it essential to the safety of the service and the safety of everything that an example should be made of this spy. They do us great mischief and it is important that the law which all nations recognize in dealing with spies and the punishment which every nation assigns to them should be inflicted upon at least one of these wretches who haunt us around Washington. Do you know whether the President will be back before morning?" "I understand that he won't be back until to-morrow afternoon," Dana replied. "Well, as the President is not here, will you sign the death warrant?" "Go to Mr. Stanton," Dana replied; "he is the authority." "I have been to him and he said I should come to you." Well, said Dana, I signed the death warrant. At about eleven o'clock the next day I met the General. "The President got home at two o'clock this morning," he said, "and he stopped it all."

Unsuitable Month Names.

SEVERAL German papers, a London journal says, are expressing dissatisfaction with the names of the months. "These critics point out that it is absurd for Europeans and Americans of to-day to dedicate one-sixth of the year to the memory of Julius Cæsar and Augustus, to name a third after heathen gods and goddesses, to have two months of doubtful nomenclature, and to designate the remaining four by misleading numerals, September being obviously ninth and not seventh in order. There is, of course, nothing to say against this argument from the point of view of common sense, but unfortunately common sense is not always the ruling power in human affairs. Not only the months, but the days of the week too, and indeed most of us bear names which are either meaningless or inappropriate. Some of our Teutonic contemporaries suggest reverting to the old designations of their uncivilized ancestors, which resemble closely enough those of the French Revolutionary calendar. But one doubts whether the Kaiser even would venture on such an innovation."

Glasgow's Water Supply.

BENJAMIN TAYLOR writes in the Engineering Magazine for September regarding the Glasgow water supply. In Glasgow a £15 householder obtains for 71d. (say $3.50), per annum a continuous, unrestricted stream of the purest water in the world. It is calculated that 380 gallons of pure water are delivered to the citizens of Glasgow for every penny paid. It is water of such peculiar softness that the householders of Glasgow can pay their water rate out of what they save on soap. Loch Katrine water is not only soft—it is remarkably bright, clear, and free from vegetable matter. It is uniform in color, temperature, and quality, is absolutely free from pollution, and must remain so because the corporation of Glasgow have now bought up the building rights of the whole drainage area; it needs no filtration, and is practically unaffected by the change of seasons.

Covering Wounds in Trees.

PETER VAN VECHTEN, Milwaukee, Wis., agrees with Meehans' Monthly that the wounds made in the stems of trees, by pruning or otherwise, should have the wood preserved to keep it from decay till the new bark and wood extends over it, but he thinks gum shellac dissolved in alcohol far better than paint. He advises to put the shellac into a wide-mouthed bottle, cover it with alcohol, and let it stand twenty-four hours, when it may be applied with a swab or brush. It serves, as nearly as may be, as the substance of bark; is not affected by heat or cold or wet or dry weather; and retains the sap up to the cut, healing the wound without a scar. Any limbs cut off square on top will leave a dead end from six inches to a foot, which will eventually die and rot off. Limbs should be cut off slanting—never square on top—as is often done.

The Russian Calendar.

THE Russian government will take a far step forward at the beginning of the twentieth century. On January 1, 1901, it will adopt the Gregorian calendar, like the rest of the so-called Christian world, and no longer date everything eleven days behind other nations. It will still make 1900 a leap year, in accordance with the Julian reckoning, says the London Athenæum; but will afterward fall into line with other Christian nations by making their dates correspond with what they would have been had the Gregorian rule of dropping a leap year at the end of each century (except each fourth century) been observed since A. D. 325.

"Let us hope," adds the Athenæum, "that before another century is completed the more simple and accurate rule will be substituted of dropping a leap year at the end of each period of 128 years, without exception, so that the next dropped after 1900 will be in 2028."

Speaker Reed on French Justice.

EX-SPEAKER THOMAS B. REED has an article in one of the weekly journals on French justice, apropos of the Dreyfus trial. He agrees with the general verdict that French legal procedure does not suit our ideas of justice, yet he takes pains to say something pleasant about France. A bit of his own political philosophy, too, is presented when he says: "To a man who believes that suitable government is that government which any nation can furnish to itself, and that the people of a country are, in the long run, their own most capable governors, the experience of a republic in the heart of Europe, surrounded by monarchies and principalities and powers, itself tumultuous by nature and always yearning for strange gods, is the most interesting of all 'human problems.' That the French experiment in democracy may be successful 'is the good wish of all of us who love the liberties we have, and for which we would die.'"

O FAITH, the world to-day hath greater need
Of thee than of theology or creed.
'Tis faith alone that makes the timid brave,
And faith alone this world of ours can save;
Faith is the golden key that opens the door
And bids the soul behold fresh joys in store.

—W. E. Penney.

THE portrait of Ouray, the famous Ute chief, will be in the group of famous Coloradans in the dome window of the State capital at Denver. His will be the only Indian portrait in the dome.

SOME of the Indian names, said Dr. Gates at the Lake Mohonk Conference, are very pretty; others rather odd, some rather inconveniently long. There were mentioned Strike the Kettle, Sings by the Brook, Medicine Owl, Thunder Hawk, Standing Elk, Looks like a Mad Bull.

THE Irish Protestant Church has prospered, notwithstanding its disestablishment and disendowment. The Protestant Cathedral of Belfast, whose foundation stone was laid recently by the Countess of Shaftesbury, will be built at an estimated cost of £70,000, and will be the largest place of worship in Ireland, as it will provide accommodation for upward of 4,000 persons, whereas St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, has accommodation for only 2,000.

CURRENT EVENTS.

THERE has been severe fighting between the Dutch and English forces in South Africa, with long lists of killed and wounded on both sides. The Boer attacks at some points are said to have been repulsed. News received comes "through British sources," and is subject to censorship. In the English House of Commons there is practically no opposition made to the war measures, except by Irish members, about thirty in number. Queen Victoria has used expressions dwelling on "dearly-bought victories," and the losses of life, which are construed to mean that she is distressed by the war.

GREAT execution is said to have been done in the South African battles by the English "shrapnel artillery." These carry a projectile of "steel tubing filled with about 260 small lead balls," which bursts and scatters the balls. The guns will carry two miles, and are said to have been used at this range against the Boers. Dispatches from Washington represent the regret of military authorities there that not enough such guns have been secured by the United States army.

AMONG the recent dead in the Philippines is Major Guy Howard, son of General O. O. Howard. He was shot on the 22d, "by concealed insurgents," while he was engaged in some military operations. He leaves a wife and children in this country.

The losses of United States forces in the Philippines since August, 1898, are now stated to be: killed, 316; died of wounds and accidents, 156; died of disease, 586; wounded, 1,731; nursing, 28; grand total, 2,817.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Washington says that Admiral Dewey is not a Presidential possibility, and that "he would not consent to become a candidate if nominated by both political parties," but would decline on the ground that "his physical strength and mental temperament utterly unqualify him for the arduous labors of the high office."

By the advice of his physician he has declined invitations to make public visits to Philadelphia and Atlanta.

A WASHINGTON dispatch states that Captain Leary of the United States Navy, Governor of the Island of Guam, one of the Ladrone group, which was ceded by Spain to the United States, has sent to Washington an urgent request for reinforcements, "on account of the hostile attitude of the natives," and the Navy Department has ordered the garrison to be augmented by a battalion of marines.

THREE Filipino officers came to the United States military lines on the 20th, and applied for permission for a commission to visit General Otis. They wanted to "discuss peace terms, arrange for the delivery of more American prisoners, and to consider methods for the release of the Spanish prisoners." General Otis refused to receive them, or to permit them to come to Manila.

THE Canadian Minister in London has made a final proposition to United States Ambassador Choate for a permanent settlement of the Alaska dispute by arbitration similar to the Venezuelan arbitration. By this Canada hopes to receive Pyramid harbor by surrendering much of the disputed gold country.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY concluded his tour of speech-making in the West on the 18th instant, and returned to Washington on the following day. He had been away from Washington fifteen days, and had made 79 speeches in eleven States. Washington dispatches say that he returned confident that "the people" are in favor of the "retention" of the Philippine Islands.

—Mrs. Izetta George, secretary of the Charity Organization Society, is taking steps looking to the establishment of a soft soap factory in Denver, which will furnish employment to needy poor people. She believes that such an industry can be made a success.

—Reporting on the relief measures in Porto Rico, Gen. Davis says: "Hundreds of tons of flour have been sent down, the baking of which the people generally know nothing, and to utilize which has been found most difficult. People at home should be made to understand that the destitute here they are trying to save from starvation are a primitive race. They live in huts of bark and thatch, and eat the simplest food. I sincerely hope that your committee will bear in mind that food is the first requisite, and that people can live in Porto Rico without anything else, but that without food they must die."

—The French-American Historical Society has just been formed in Boston, whose object is declared to be to promote the careful and systematic study of the history of the United States, and especially to bring forth in its true light the part which belongs to the French race in the evolution and formation of the American people. The charter members number about fifty persons of French origin from many parts of the country.

—The Illinois Supreme Court has ruled that the shade trees in the street in front of a man's property belong to him, and cannot be cut down or mutilated without his consent. The suit was one in which a property owner sued a telephone company for cutting off the limbs of his trees in order to make room for its wires.

—Of the total population of 916,894 people in the island of Porto Rico, there are classed as indigents 291,020, which means that there are nearly 300,000 people in the island who have no property, and who live from hand to mouth, and whom the Government or private charity has to care for.

—The will of the late George W. Clayton, who bequeathed $1,000,000 to the city of Denver for an orphans' college, has been admitted to probate. Andrew Carnegie has offered to donate $50,000 to the city of Duluth to erect a building for a free public library.

—The United States Supreme Court has granted leave to the State of Louisiana to file a bill for an injunction against the State of Texas prohibiting the enforcement of a trade embargo in connection with the yellow fever quarantine of the latter State.

—The Dismal Swamp Canal was re-opened to traffic on the 14th inst., a special inspection fleet going from Norfolk to Elizabeth City. The new waterway enables all light draft shipping to take the inland channel and avoid the dreaded Diamond Shoals.

—A tornado at Sagua la Grande, Cuba, on the 20th inst., destroyed many buildings, including the hospital built by the Americans, and four of the patients were killed. Six other persons were killed and nineteen injured.

—Dorothy Bowman, a California woman now in Mexico, has recently climbed to the summit of the volcano of Popocatepetl. She is said to be the first woman to reach the actual summit overlooking the crater.

—It is expected that the requisition of Atlantic steamships for carrying English troops to South Africa, and the rush to the Paris Exposition, next year, will make higher rates for ocean travel than have prevailed in 1899.

—Differences have arisen between the American Tin Plate Company and their employes, which may result in a strike involving 25,000 men. The trouble is due to the employment of non-union men.

—The Select Council in Philadelphia has adopted resolutions by a vote of 26 to 8, condemning the principles underlying the civil service laws, and advocating their repeal or modification.

—Samuel Winner, of Warrington, who is in his 77th year, has worked at blacksmithing for 61 years and is even yet an expert horse-shoer.—Newtown (Pa.) Enterprise.

—"No one can grow up in constant contact with Nature," said Miss Collins, at the Lake Mohonk Conference, "and not have a pretty good education in some line."

—Chicago's population has been increased 15,000 by the decision of the Illinois Supreme Court ratifying the vote annexing part of Austin.

NOTICES.

* * A meeting of the Association for the Promotion of First day Schools within the limits of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting will be held in the meeting-house at 15th and Race streets, Philadelphia, Eleventh month 4, 1899, beginning at 10 o'clock.

The morning session will be devoted to important business. The afternoon session will consider the following program: (1) "Large Classes of Adults," by Charles Paxson. (2) Demonstration of one of the lessons in the present Quarterly, by a class from Girard Avenue First-day School. (3) "The building up of First-day schools and the strengthening of weak ones," by Cynthia S. Holcomb.

All interested are invited. It is especially desired that each school shall have its delegates in attendance. Will superintendents kindly make this a personal matter?

JOHN L. CARVER, } Clerks.
MARY H. FORMAN, }

* * The next Conference under the care of Concord Quarterly Meeting's Committee on Philanthropic Labor will be held in the meeting-house at Concord, Delaware county, on First-day, Tenth month 29, 1899, at 2.30 p. m. Joseph S. Walton is expected to be present to address the meeting.

A meeting of the committee will be held in the morning of Quarterly Meeting at Darby, the 31st inst., at 9 o'clock.

CHARLES PALMER, Clerk.

* * A Conference under the care of the Philanthropic Committee of the Yearly and Quarterly Meetings will be held in the meeting-house at Solebury, Bucks county, Pa., on First-day, Tenth month 29, 1899, at 2.30 p. m. The meeting will be addressed by Frances E. W. Harper. Subject, "Colored People of the South."

SUSANNA RICH, Clerk.

* * A Circular Meeting under the care of a committee of Concord Quarterly Meeting will be held at Chichester on First-day afternoon, Eleventh month 5, 1899, at 3 o'clock p. m.

MARY P. HARVEY, Clerk.

* * The evening meeting of Philadelphia Friends, to-morrow, 29th inst., will be at 35th street and Lancaster avenue, at 8 o'clock. It is hoped that Friends generally will bear it in mind.

* * Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting's Committee to visit the smaller branches as way may open will attend meetings as follows:

ELEVENTH MONTH:

- 5. Valley, 10 a. m.
- 19. Haverford, 10 a. m.
- 26. Reading, 10 a. m.

TWELFTH MONTH:

- 3. Germantown, 10.30 a. m.

AQUILA J. LINVILL, Clerk.

* * Any changes in the times of holding meetings, or other needed corrections, should be sent as soon as may be to Friends' Book Association, 1500 Race street, Philadelphia, to enable them to issue the Almanac for 1900 at an early date.

* * The Western First-day School Union will be held in the meeting-house at Londongrove, Pa., on Seventh-day, Tenth month 28, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. All interested are invited to be present.

HORACE L. DILWORTH, } Clerks.
ELLEN P. WAY, }

* * The Committee on Philanthropic Labor of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends will meet in the meeting-house, 15th and Race streets, Philadelphia, Seventh-day, Tenth month 28, 1899, at 1.30 o'clock p. m.

The Sub-Committees meeting as follows:

The Indian, in Room No. 2, at 10 a. m.
Peace and Arbitration, in Room No. 3, at 10 a. m.

Colored People, Race street meeting-house, at 9.30 a. m.

Improper Publications, in Room No. 4, at 10 a. m.

Purity, in Room No. 3, at 9 a. m.

Women and Children, in Room No. 5, at 9 a. m.

Temperance and Tobacco, in Room No. 1, at 11 a. m.

Educational and Publication Committee, in Room No. 1, at 9.30 a. m.

Legislation Committee, in Race street parlor, at 10 a. m.

JAMES H. ATKINSON, } Clerks.
ELEANOR K. RICHARDS, }

* * A meeting under care of the Educational Committee will be held in the meeting-house, Flushing, L. I., on the afternoon of quarterly meeting day, Tenth month 28, at 2.30 o'clock. All are invited to attend. * * *

MACBETH'S "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys are carefully made of clear tough glass; they fit, and get the utmost light from the lamp, and they last until some accident breaks them.

"Pearl top" and "pearl glass" are trade-marks. Look out for them and you needn't be an expert.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

SAVE 1/2 Your FUEL

wasted up chimney.

BY USING THE ROCHESTER RADIIATOR.

COST $2.00 AND UP.

Money refunded if not satisfactory. Write for booklet on economy in heating homes.

ROCHESTER RADIIATOR CO.,
45 Furnace Street, Rochester, N. Y.

Ellwood Heacock,

UNDERTAKER
and EMBALMER

ESTABLISHED 1860.

TELEPHONE 5807.

1313 Vine Street, Philad'a.

Calls outside of city answered promptly.

DR. T. J. BARNARDO, widely known for his work among the homeless children of England, recently said: "I have lived in the East End and worked there for thirty-two years. I did not begin my work on a temperance basis. My views, when I started, were not antagonistic to the influence of a public house. I thought them necessary, from at least a social standpoint, and I thought that to condemn working men who habitually resorted to the public house was unreasonable, until at least we could provide them with some satisfactory substitute. But soon I had to quit this ground. Indeed, I was compelled against my wish by the evidence of indisputable facts which presented themselves to my notice, every day of my life, to cast in my lot with the men who are opposed to the drink traffic."

"Five times as many girls as boys graduate from our high schools," says an exchange, "and when these educated girls marry the ignorant boys and want to know anything, they are supposed to 'ask their husbands at home.'"

ARMSTRONG & KELLY
Pittsburgh.
REYMER-BAUMAN
Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS
Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK
Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
ROCKSTEIN }
ATLANTIC }
BRADLEY }
BROOKLYN } New York.
JEWETT }
ULSTER }
UNION }
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL }
SOUTHERN }
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO
Philadelphia.
MORLEY } Cleveland.
SALEM } Salem, Mass.
CORNELL } Buffalo.
KENTUCKY } Louisville.

TN your experience with White Lead have you ever been troubled with cracked, pulled or alligatored surfaces, or have you ever heard of such trouble in the use of White Lead?

Never; and these conditions were never known until the introduction of zinc white, "combination lead," and ready-mixed paints, the two last composed largely of zinc, barytes, whiting, etc., very little lead, if any.

—Mr. E. P. Edwards, in "Painters' Magazine."
Mr. Edwards is the senior member of the firm of Messrs. Edwards & King, Painters and Decorators, Elizabeth, N. J.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of colors forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

Publisher's Department.

Club Rates for 1899.

OUR usual announcement of Club Rates with other Periodicals will be found in this issue.

We make the following notes of changes:

Harper's Round Table, juvenile, formerly issued weekly, but of late monthly, has been discontinued—with the issue for Tenth month.

Little Men and Women and Babyland, both monthlies, have been united, and the price reduced to 50 cents a year. Our Club Rate for united publication, with INTELLIGENCER, is $2.45.

Babyland (monthly) is a different publication from Babyland, (noted above.) Babyland's price is $1; Club Rate with INTELLIGENCER, $2.90.

Harper's Monthly magazine has been reduced from $4 to $3. Club Rate with INTELLIGENCER, $4.70.

Lippincott's Magazine, monthly, has been reduced from $3 to $2.50. Club Rate, with INTELLIGENCER, $3.80.

The price of The Independent was reduced in 1898 from $3 to $2. Club Rate, with INTELLIGENCER, $3.90.

We make Club Rate for Literary Digest for renewals, as well as new subscriptions. Regular price $3; with INTELLIGENCER $5.50.

Christian Register, (Unitarian, Boston), makes a special rate for new subscribers. See our Club Rate with it in the advertisement elsewhere.

A New Location.

THE offices of FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER will hereafter be on the second floor of the new Building of Young Friends' Association, on Fifteenth street, at the corner of Cherry.

We invite all our friends to call.

BOSTON BINDER

FOR

Friends' Intelligencer

Will hold a full year, by packing close. Better, if used for half year.

Price, 25 cents, including postage, if sent by mail.

By having your papers together, you have at the end of the year a valuable volume, of over 1000 pages of reading matter.

Baltimore Yearly Meeting.

RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.

Friends desiring to attend the approaching Baltimore Yearly Meeting, are informed that arrangements have been made with the railroad companies so that those near the following railroads can obtain excursion tickets to Baltimore and return at a special rate of two cents per mile fare.

By applying personally or by letter to the undersigned, or at the store of Friends' Book Association, southwest corner of Fifteenth and Race streets, Philadelphia, card orders on the ticket agents for tickets may be obtained of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, Pennsylvania Railroad Division, any point east of Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Erie Division, United Railroads of New Jersey Division, West Jersey Railroad, Philadelphia, Wilmington, & Baltimore Railroad, Philadelphia & Baltimore Central Railroad, Baltimore & Potomac Railroad, Northern Central Railway, and the Alexandria & Fredericksburg Railway. Also the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, east of the Ohio river and south of New York city, or other leased or affiliated lines within these limits.

Tickets may be purchased from the 24th of Tenth month to the 1st of Eleventh month, inclusive, with limit of expiration Eleventh month 7th, 1899, inclusive.

These orders are not valid if presented at any point where the excursion rate is less than twenty-five cents. When orders are to be forwarded by mail a two-cent stamp should be enclosed to pay postage. Applicants will state specifically what railroad or what system they wish to come over.

EDWARD STABLER, Jr.,
6 South St., Baltimore.

W. THOMAS STARR,
North and Centre Sts., Baltimore.

LODGING ARRANGEMENTS.

Friends desiring to avail themselves of the accommodation for lodging furnished at Park Avenue meeting house, Baltimore, are requested to forward their applications as promptly as possible. The rooms will be ready for occupancy on Sixth-day evening, 27th of Tenth month, for those who wish to attend the sessions of the meeting of ministers and elders, on Seventh-day.

For those who cannot be accommodated at the meeting-house, or who may prefer to lodge elsewhere, board or lodging, or both, can be obtained in the neighborhood, at a moderate cost. The Committee is prepared to furnish names and residences of those who offer such accommodations.

Applications may be addressed to any of the following Friends:

RACHEL R. HOLT, 817 W. North Ave., Balto.
SALLIE H. STARR, 308 E. LaFayette Ave., Balto.
Sub. Committee of the Committee on Entertainment, or to

BERTHA JANNEY, 1807 Bolton St., Balto.
Secretary of the General Committee.
N. B.—In making application, Friends will please name the day on which they expect to reach Baltimore.

CLUB RATES: OTHER PERIODICALS, 1900.

We announce our Club Rates for other Periodicals for 1900. Read the figures given, and also read the notes below.

We will send FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER one year, with any of the periodicals named below, for the amount stated "for both."

WEEKLIES.

Periodicals.	Price for both.
Harper's Weekly, ($4),	$5.30
Christian Register, ($3),	4.80
Christian Register, (new subscribers),	4.10
Scientific American, ($3),	4.60
Harper's Bazar, ($4),	5.30
Journal of Education, ($2.50),	4.35
The Living Age, ($6),	7.60
Literary Digest, ($3),	5.50
The Independent, ($2),	3.90
Springfield Republican, ($1),	2.90
The Nation, ($3),	4.80

MONTHLIES.

British Friend, (6s. 6d. and postage),	$3.75
Meehans' Monthly (Floral, Hort.), ($2),	3.85

MONTHLIES (Continued).

Periodicals.	Price for both.
Scribner's Magazine, ($3),	$4.60
The Century Magazine, ($4),	5.60
Harper's Magazine, ($3),	4.70
Atlantic Monthly, ($4),	5.30
The Forum, ($3),	4.60
North American Review, ($5),	6.10
St. Nicholas, ($3),	4.60
Lippincott's Magazine, ($2.50),	3.80
Scattered Seeds, ($0.50),	2.35
McClure's Magazine, ($1),	2.90
The Farm Journal, ($0.50),	2.20
Little Men and Women, ($0.50),	2.45

QUARTERLIES.

The New World, (Relig. Rev.), ($3),	$4.50
--------------------------------------	--------

Persons wishing other periodicals than those named above should write to us, and we will give prices.

Where several periodicals in the list are wanted, find the net price of each (if ordered through us), by subtracting $2.00 from the rate given under the heading "price for both."

THE PENNHURST, Open all the year
Michigan Ave., near the Beach, Atlantic City.
The house has every convenience, including electric elevator, running to level of pavement, steam heat, etc. Send for illustrated booklet. JAMES HOOD.

THE AQUARILLE, OPEN ALL THE YEAR
OCEAN END OF TENNESSEE AVE.
Atlantic City, N. J.
Enlarged, remodelled, steam heat, electric bells, heated sun parlor, home-like and comfortable.
M. E. and H. M. HUMPTON.

THE VIEWS OF FRIENDS.

Tracts and Leaflets for Circulation.

QUAKERISM: ITS BELIEFS AND MESSAGES. By William Edward Turner (Editor of the British Friend). 40 pp. 10 cents. 5 copies, 40 cents. By mail at these prices.

THE MEETING FOR WORSHIP. By Howard M. Jenkins. Small pamphlet. 12 pp. Single copies, 2 cents; 50 copies, 50 cents; 100 copies, $1.00. By mail at these prices.

RELIGIOUS VIEWS OF FRIENDS. By Howard M. Jenkins. (Chicago Congress Paper, 1893.) 24 pp. 2 cents; 50 copies, 75 cents; 100 copies, $1.00. By mail at these prices.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER ASSOCIATION,
Limited,
921 Arch Street, Phila

LITTLE three-year-old Bessie ran flying down the front steps with an agonizing cry of "Papa! Papa!" Her father had started down-town, but he stopped and waited. "What is it, Bessie?" he asked. "I want to kiss you good-by," she said. "Well, I'm waiting for the kiss," he said. "I'll give it to you," she replied, with trembling lips and quivering chin, "just as soon as I can make the pucker."—[Chicago Record.]

A LITTLE boy, with an interest in the meaning of familiar words, said to his mother, "What is the meaning of 'civil'?" "Kind and polite," answered the mother. A puzzled look brooded for a second on the boy's face. Then he said: "Was it a kind and polite war that was in this country once?"

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873.

PHILADELPHIA, ELEVENTH MONTH 4, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 44.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLIV.

I KNOW of no religion that destroys courtesy and kindness, which, rightly understood, are great indications of true men, if not of good Christians.

WILLIAM PENN.

WHAT DOTH IT MATTER, BROTHER?

WHAT doth it matter, brother, this our creed?
Thine may be centuries-built, word on word,
Obscured by superstitions, old, absurd,—
Mine be so simple that a fool might read
And understand. Each speaks our common need,
Each speaks for each the yearnings unappeased
Of his poor soul—forever tossed, diseased
By questions none can answer. Only heed
This thing, my brother; work thy righteous deed,
Follow thy conscience, leave the rest to God,
Who knoweth well how weak, how blind we be.
Who seeth our hands outreaching for the light;
And in compassion, tender, infinite,
He pitieth and accepteth thee and me.

—Howell S. England.

EDUCATION AND RELIGION.¹

BY JOHN WM. GRAHAM (MANCHESTER, ENGLAND).

(Concluded from Last Week.)

It will save much beating about the bush, if I rush in boldly at once, risk a general statement, and say that I am taking religion to mean a consciousness of the presence of God in daily life, and consequently the performance of the details of labor and pleasure, and the waging of the struggle with temptation, as in the Great Taskmaster's eye, in conscious obedience to a spiritual Power of whose great plan we and our trivial actions make a part. Since this Power is further revealed to us as a God of Love, it follows that we are the Ministers of His love on earth; and that means practical Christianity, philanthropy, and self-denial. That is to say, in brief, religion is a life of prayer and communion with God, in preparation for the service of Christ and the death of the "natural man."

Now for the connection or antagonism, if such there be, between Religion and Education. If Education indeed produces, as we saw that it did, a sympathetic consciousness of human brotherhood, a worshipful awe in presence of Nature and Nature's God, a love of truth, and humility of mind, then indeed it produces the very qualities which go to make religion, and these two friends of man are in triumphant alliance. As was said at the beginning, the matter needs but to be stated to be clear.

We remember that Paul's experience at Corinth was at first sight contrary to this. He found that not many noble and not many philosophers, but rather a company of women and slaves formed the Church. But there are many things to be remembered. Firstly, the education which was foolishness in presence of the Gospel was the worn-out philosophy of the time, not quite the same thing as modern education; further, the city was endlessly corrupt, and in a corrupt society the poor are always the least corrupted—being saved by labor. Moreover, the religion was then new, and we always find that those who are highly trained or highly placed in a society do not so easily leave it as working people do. The Society of Friends, adapted as I think it is to both classes, gathers most converts from among working men.

But (apart from the case of Corinth) the above comprehensive conclusion cannot be expected to carry complete conviction. There will be misgivings. What is it that has made some of our Friends think that Education leads away from God? No doubt it is because the growth of knowledge has shifted the centre of gravity of orthodoxy and has had to destroy some errors, closely, naturally, and inevitably interwoven with faith. The conception of the method of Creation, of the age of the world, of the creation of woman, of the origin and meaning of Hebrew sacrifice; our thought of the Hereafter and of the true meaning of salvation and of Reconciliation with God in Christ; these things have been freed from ancient error at the advent of knowledge, as the fanciful shadows of night depart in rapid silence before the unconscious sun.

In this way, nevertheless, and in this way only, has Religion continued to be possible for our generation. The science which seemed its critic and its enemy has proved only to be its teacher and its friend. Religion as restated to-day is stronger from being rid of what was outworn and ready to perish. We have done nothing but substitute, in the intellectual fabric which encloses faith, the modern thought of the nineteenth century for thought which was in its time modern, but is now mediæval.

It may be clearer if we expand at this point a little, and try to sketch in briefest manner what Science has to say about the Creator, about the Bible, and about Immortality. First, about the Creation. What is the conception of the Divine Working which it leaves in our minds?

The dominant view in Physics is that all matter is composed of vortex rings of ether; that the ether is in motion in swirling rings, like the india rubber rings on an umbrella, or like the rings which clever smokers watch rising from their pipes; that these rings cannot destroy one another, and hence that matter is indestructible, but are grouped together in endlessly complex ways, corresponding to the atoms of the various elements. The ether of which they are made occupies all space, is invisible, homogeneous, continuous, and frictionless, in other words it is the same all through, and causes of itself neither motion nor hindrance to motion. This is the dead, uniform, calm, raw material of matter. It is hopeless to try to get beyond it. But now, who or what was it that set going in that uniform, featureless world of calm ether, these millions of vortex rings, indestructible when made, and quite unable to make themselves? For chance could not have done it: where there is no motion nor change, there is no room for chance. There must have been, before matter existed, the Mind of God, and power in God to impress his Thought upon the Ether. That is, it was Thought, Omnipotent Spirit, which existed first, and which started those motions and combinations which have produced in æonian sequence the endless beauty of the material world, and has gone on to make a home for the mind and soul of Man, and finally has made man in his own Image. In all these things the Thought of God is realizing itself. Once more Science has given us the feeling we had been in some danger of losing: "Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, from everlasting to everlasting thou art God." How inconceivably great must have been that Mind, if it saw the end from the beginning. God, may we reverently say, has been thinking on and on, and is still the same. He made atoms, joined them into molecules, which made the primitive fire-mist, which when broken up into great masses and set moving and wheeling, made solar systems and globes; on which have come vegetable and animal life, and man and civilization, and saints and angels. Truly the Days of Creation opened out by Science are more awe-inspiring than those of Semitic legend.

¹A Paper read at the meeting of Young Friends' Association, Philadelphia, Tenth month 9, 1899.

Science, then, can no more do without a creative Mind than her sister Faith can. She cannot even begin without Him whom her sister holds by the hand and perceives without being told He is there.

We are still far from understanding, as indeed we should expect, the ways of the operation of the Divine Thought upon matter. We do not even know how our own bodily organs come to be the expression of our own minds, we do not know how we lift our little fingers, yet we know that we do this, and often we see a mind acting on a large scale, as the armies of France under the mind of Napoleon.

So that we may believe that Science has richly paid us back in a larger thought of the Spirit behind Creation, what she owed us by taking away Creation stories in Genesis. There was a time, indeed, when it seemed as though Materialism was going to be the creed of Science; that was in the sixties and seventies; it was a hasty forecast; but even the great men of that time, such as Huxley and Herbert Spencer speak of the need of ascribing all to a spiritual power behind phenomena. Your materialist of to-day is not the man of Science, but the blasé devotee of pleasure, the narrow type of man keen only on business; or the hopeless dullard who cannot taste beyond his mouth.

The work of historical and literary scholars upon the Bible has passed similarly through its destructive and its constructive stage. It is not too much to say that modern critics have saved the Bible; saved it from becoming an honored classic to be talked about rather than read, and restored it to our intelligent comprehension. The Bible is now more read than ever it was, and that is something.

Over the book a change has come comparable to the process of restoration of an ancient ecclesiastical edifice, covered formerly with a uniform coat of speckless and infallible whitewash, thickened and renewed by the devotion of generations, but totally obscuring the construction of the building and its features of real architectural interest, and hindering our comprehension of its past vicissitudes and of the thoughts of its builders. The earliest effect of a process of restoration is defacement, destruction, and plentiful dust. We cannot just then worship in the church at all. But that epoch is now over, the dust has cleared from our eyes, the defacement is so complete that it no longer defaces, and the destruction is found to be only of later accretion. The building, with all its rugged edges, its patched-up gaps, and its evident repairs, is before us now, composed of many styles of architecture, with the enemy's cannon balls still sticking here and there in its masonry, and with the gargoyles, past spirits of terror, gaping from its spouts. Its often pathetic humanness opens the treasures of our sympathy, and its lavish magnificence evokes our admiration. Knowledge of the Bible as it really is has become part of the durable stock of mankind. It will never be reversed or forgotten. The clergy know it, and their flocks soon will. George Fox and Robert Barclay would have rejoiced in it all, and except some rather modern whitewash of our own, Friends have nothing to modify or remove. The claim for the mechanical infallibility of the Scriptures rests on less than any other great intellectual position known to me. It rests indeed on nothing but the ill-informed dicta of the bishops of the early centuries, and from those bishops Friends are in revolt on every kind of question.

The Bible is inspired literature, and those who fear its comparison with other literature can hardly be those who appreciate most highly its unique value. As the sole record of the life of our Lord, if for no other reason, it can never be to us as other books are.

To the faith in immortality modern investigation has added an important contribution, in the Work of the Society for Psychical Research, whose five and twenty volumes of Proceedings and Journal constitute a body of organized knowledge not yet generally appreciated, but not wisely ignored. To my own mind the modern, first-hand, sober, tested evidence there accumulated testifies to the reality of immortality and of spiritual communication in various forms.

Thus, to the great centres of Religion, God, the Bible, and Immortality, the modern spirit has brought strength, stability, and renewal.

We now return to the faith of the educated man, towards which we saw that his education had provided him with help, and ask what kind of faith it is likely to be.

The process of sifting and pruning, of subjecting everything to the tests of reason and conscience, and to the light of history, leaves most scholars free from superstitious reverence for ceremonies, clergy, and institutions, except in so far as they are means to the end of personal spiritual illumination, to be changed or cast off when they are no longer potent for bracing the conscience or sweetening the soul. The man is left face to face with God, with nothing between. He is become a simple man in spite of all his scholarship. He knows that nothing but the surrender of the whole will to God will open up for him the gates of glory and peace, that nothing but the presence of the ever present One will give him any joy worth naming. He has been helped towards sainthood by being rid of all that is implied in bell, book, and candle. It seems to me that he has become very sympathetic towards the Quaker point of view, and a member of the unorganized scattered Church of the Light Within.

Once more let me say that I am not propounding the strange doctrine that a scholar is a saint, or has generally been such, any more than the uneducated. The great and the little sins are to be met and conquered by scholar and simple. Let us see, however, to what extent a scholar is fitted to meet or escape temptation.

He has, for one thing, a number of joys of a refined type in books and pictures, in conversation and study, which are counter-attractions, as we of the adult schools call it, to the public house, to gambling, and to the tendency to find pleasure in pomp and luxury, with all its thoughtless cruelty. For temptations of the nerves, for irritability of temper, for impatience at small annoyances, and a generally sensitive skin, I must confess that a scholar is perhaps more liable to err than other men. Here he has to pay toll. He has the defects of his qualities, and is probably prone to be cross. He may well envy those country gentlemen whom he sees at horse fairs, with their rounded rubicund faces, check knickers, and soft caps, breathing of the fields. Their gift of placid temper he wishes was his.

We have now done with our scholar as an individual, but before closing may I add a word on the obvious point that in the religious world, in the church, men of education are sorely needed. The great unsolved problem of poverty and wasted human material will have to be solved, if it ever is, by the study of the past, and in harmony with economic and psychological conclusions, and will need scholarship to guide it.

And the ministry of the Church of the Friends, performed by no separated class, depends for its intellectual quality, not on a specially trained body of men, but on the general intelligence of the whole membership. Quakerism can succeed not by numbers but by the excellence of the individual, and ministry, requiring as it does both intellectual and spiritual gifts, will not be effective unless there are trained minds offered as ready material for the operation of the Divine Spirit.

We will regard Education, not as a matter for personal vain-glory, not as a test to distinguish class from class, but as a training to enable us the better to read and to express the mind of God. It is in the abiding joys of thought, in its secret sense of power, in the world it builds which no man can take from us, that we follow most closely our Divine original, and in training that power by education we are but furthering "God's husbandry, God's building."

FRIENDS IN ENGLAND.

VI.

THERE remains, for this general discussion of Friends in England, already quite drawn out, only one feature which may seem of much importance, with some others that may have a minor interest.

The attitude of the English Friends toward the several bodies in America "claiming the name" will be better learned as time passes than prophesied of by a summer visitor; yet a few facts may be stated quite confidently. In the first place the disposition in England is not to let American diversities and divisions distract the English body. It is somewhat like the action of our friends of Arch Street Yearly Meeting, who when they found in 1857 that they could not agree which yearly meetings they would correspond with, decided not to correspond with any,—a resolution maintained for forty years. The English Friends are desirous to preserve their own strength unbroken and undivided; they have adopted, intuitively, the course of toleration among themselves, as a means of unity, and they very naturally feel averse to agitation over matters quite external in their character. They have realized, within the past fifteen years, how little control they are really able to exercise over the Western "orthodox" yearly meetings, and they therefore do not feel any great burden of responsibility either to check or to approve the tendencies in those bodies away from old-time Quakerism.

As a matter of fact, too, it may fairly be said that many English Friends know very little of the actual situation of Friends in America. Visitors like John Wilhelm Rowntree, who come to this country to learn something at first hand on the subject, and who devote themselves to it patiently and with an open mind, are few.

It is not my impression that any change of much importance will occur, at an early time, in the official relations of London Yearly Meeting to Friends in America. But I think English Friends must realize, and that all real Friends will do so, the great need there is for the principles and the usages which Quakerism embodies to be earnestly and effectively impressed upon the world, and the desirability, therefore, of a cordial unity of effort in that behalf by all who hold to those principles and usages. The wish not to divide and scatter forces lies indeed at the bottom of the reasons for the course which London Yearly Meeting has pursued toward American Friends. That meeting could not, as its decision in 1888 showed, agree with much of the procedure in the Western Yearly Meetings, but it has not been willing in its correspondence with them to do anything that would tend to estrangement and rupture.

The educational energy shown in America has impressed the English Friends, especially the large gifts and bequests of money made for our schools and colleges. They regard with interest the work carried on here by Friends, and the name of Swarthmore College is more familiar to them than any other connected with our body. They are anxious to have their own institutions better equipped and more liberally endowed, and I have no doubt the next twenty years will see a decided advance in these respects. The institutions they now have present many excellent features, and in some respects I should say they have nothing to learn of us. The instruction in the English schools is thorough, and the discipline (at Ackworth, at least) well enforced. The new dormitory building at Leighton Park, as I have already said in another place, is better than any I know of in our Friends' schools;—perhaps some of those at Bryn Mawr College may exceed it. It is, however, true that the endowments of the English Friends' schools are very inconsiderable, and that they much need better provision in that respect. Ackworth has very little, and some others practically nothing. The English Friends have given liberally, from time to time, to educational work in America, and some of them jokingly remarked to me that they might now send over here for help for their own institutions. However, I was able to remark upon this that as our body of Friends had not been down in their books for so many years, I supposed they would hardly find any balance against us on the school account.

In conclusion it may be said, from the impressions received during my visits, that the English Friends are a serious body, the great majority of them earnest and steadfast in their desire to maintain the essential principles of the Society, and to have it worthily fill its place in the religious and social life of England. They have a large percentage of members, of both sexes, who know and could readily state the grounds of their faith. The devotional feeling is given a large expression; the frequent vocal prayer in meetings is one form in which this appears, and the general usage in families of reading to the gathered household from the Scriptures, once if not twice a day, is another.

They have, of course, their own special difficulties and trials. Some of these I have referred to. One other is the pressure upon them by "the Church"—the Established Church of England. They lose to it, year by year, some members. It has, of course, a very great attractive power. It has the great cathedrals, the multitude of parish churches standing here and there in every city, town, and village,—both cathedral and church identified not merely with the religious life of each locality, but with its history and traditions far back into the past. The Church has also its showy and æsthetic ceremonial, and its overwhelming social importance. Add to these that it has many clergymen of high scholarship, refined culture, and generous Christian temper,—men, indeed, who have done a great part of the work of oversetting dogmatic narrowness, and exposing creedal error,—and it will easily be seen by how many means it may attract "dissenters" to its fold. The old days of the seventeenth century, for example, when the "parsons" were of the sort that George Fox describes in his Journal, coarse and careless pastors of their flocks, are altogether gone by, and in many neighborhoods the Friends realize, as others do, the good influence which the rector and his family exert, and appreciate the good works which they carry on.

It is because the Friends do understand the ground of their differences from the Church, and do hold convictions which forbid them to join in its forms and ceremonies, or to sustain its priesthood and hierarchy, that they effectively resist such powerful attractions as have been described, and suffer but a relatively small loss, year by year, on their account. The present tendency in the English Church towards extreme ritualism,—a tendency altogether natural, when the road of form and ceremony is once entered upon,—and beyond that to a cordial relation if not actual union with the Church of Rome,—this movement has illustrated to earnest Friends, within the last few years, the importance of the testimonies which they have in charge, and has helped them to see afresh the need there is for continued faithfulness. The contrast of a spiritual religion with a ceremonial one cannot but impress itself upon earnest and sincere seekers, and the greater the contrast the stronger the impression.

In the future, therefore, of the Society of Friends, the body in England must continue to be an important factor. There will be, I think, in the next twenty years, a nearer approach of all bodies and all individuals in every country, who are definitely and positively attached to the substance of Quakerism. That there will be any closer organic union than at present exists may be doubtful, but the tendency of those who think substantially alike, and who are engaged in similar endeavors, under circumstances of trial and difficulty, always is to draw nearer together, and to unite their strength. The field is wide, the Friends are few, their work is great; to weaken its performance by needless distraction would be blameworthy indeed.

H. M. J.

VISITS TO DOUKHOBOR VILLAGES.

Job S. Gidley, from the Friend, Phila. (See previous article on the subject, Tenth month 14.)

LEAVING the Swan River we rode a short distance up the hill to Oswobozdenie village; and while our drivers were pitching our tent for the night, E. H. V. [Eliza H. Varney], Alamanoffsky, with a few Doukhobors and myself, went a little further on up the hill, to see some grain and garden vegetables which were growing there, that the Doukhobors were anxious for us to inspect. We saw one field of barley and quite a large field of rye. Both were looking well, some of the grain in the latter standing nearly up to my shoulders.

Potatoes, beans, beets, carrots, onions, and a few other vegetables were seen, and all looked in a thrifty condition, save few of the tender plants, which had been nipped by frost. The small kind were all sown broad cast, and the carrots much too thick. It was explained to them through the interpreter that they would be likely to succeed far better another year if they would plant these in rows or drills, which suggestion was listened to attentively.

Here was the first experience in camping out to some of our party. We all enjoyed it, however, and after having a good night's rest, and partaken of our morning meal on the open prairie, we were refreshed and strengthened for the labors of the day. Having had a religious meeting, which brought us all into unity of spirit, and tendered our hearts, we bade them farewell, and many were the kind words spoken to us; and although in another language, we felt we could understand the spirit in which they were uttered.

A young Doukhobor went to show us the way to the next camp, estimated to be two or three miles away. But one finds the estimates are pretty sure to be less, rather than more than the exact distance, as there are a great many ins and outs that are not fully considered in judging of distances. This was found to be the case that morning, for in one place we found a plowed field across our trail which we had to go around, and there were many hills along the stream that had to be skirted, and it took some time to cover the estimated distance. Finally, we reached the top of a hill, a half mile or more from the river, and in sight of the long looked-for Doukhobor settlement located near the stream. Our drivers said, "Our horses can never go down this steep hill and get back again." It was then concluded that our interpreter and myself should proceed on foot to the village, while the rest waited with the teams upon the hill. We found that most of the people here landed in Halifax last winter, and we had an opportunity of renewing our acquaintance.

After spending a little time with them in a social way, and having a religious opportunity, we retraced our steps, feeling well paid for having made the effort to see them. Reaching the top of the hill we proceeded again on our way some six or seven miles farther down the river, being guided by another young man. We passed quite a number of Doukhobors, some mowing, some raking, and others heaping up the hay. (Prairie farmers call heaping "coiling.") Still others were picking strawberries and raspberries. Judging by observation one might say that the men do the mowing, the women the raking, and the young people the heaping up of the hay. We found on approaching the river, that the next village was located on the south side. We drove near to the stream on the north side, fed our horses, made a fire, prepared and ate our dinner, then crossed the stream and had a meeting.

We then moved onward toward the next stopping place, where we spent the night. It was this place where E. H. V. writes, that they were all ready to receive us, their dooryards being swept and made presentable.

There was quite a large number of Doukhobors gathered in groups awaiting our arrival, and the language arose as we entered their midst, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth, peace, good will to men."

This company seemed glad indeed to see two Friends among them, and especially glad to see a woman Friend, and it did appear that the hand of the Lord was in it. After having had a favored religious opportunity with this people, and eating our supper in the open air, with feelings of thanksgiving for the favors of the day, we repaired to our tents under the hillside.

The next morning, Eighth month 4, the ground was white with frost, and I felt a great deal of sympathy for the Doukhobors who had worked so hard in trying to raise something this year; their potatoes were planted a little too late to mature during the short season of this latitude, so I fear that this crop will avail them little or nothing; yet I trust a way will be made whereby they may have a supply of them for the coming winter.

Before leaving this place I felt like giving the children a little instruction in English. I had but one primer with me, but when I opened the book and tried to teach them, they all appeared eager and interested to try to repeat what was told them, and I soon had a very interesting class of little boys and girls around me. I counted forty children in the group. E. H. V. had them repeat a few lines of poetry after her, which they did very nicely. What a field is here for those who have the welfare of these people at heart, who would be not only interested in teaching book knowledge, but correct principles of life as well! When schools are established among them, may their instructors all be true Christian men and women!

The next village seemed to be in rather a poor location. The soil was light and sandy; one could see no land near that he could ever hope to till with success. Still there may be better ground not far away where one might plow with a better prospect of raising a crop.

Down under the hill is a large and excellent boiling spring, whose waters were welling forth pure and clear as crystal. The Doukhobors had a piece plowed and planted just below this spring, and had dammed up the little stream flowing from it, and had dug a trench eight or ten rods in length, leading the water from the stream into their garden. This locality for a camp may have been chosen partly on account of having good water near at hand. While we were looking over the land E. H. V. was dispensing medicine to the afflicted ones in the village.

After having had a religious meeting among them we started for the camp located southeast of Thunder Hill, the furthest point east reached upon Swan River, omitting two villages which we visited afterward on a journey back to Yorkton. Just before reaching this place we passed about half a mile south of the corners of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Assiniboia. We took our dinner at this camp, and heard of another settlement about three miles from the river on the south side. As there was no good trail for carriages to that place, Alamanoffsky and myself, with a guide, started off. We found some pretty steep hills to climb, but succeeded in reaching the settlement in about an hour.

The people told us that they were first located at the northeast of Thunder Hill, but not liking the place they had moved down where they then were; but added, that they were soon going to move again, about two miles further west. I thought it a great pity that after they had built their houses they should take them down again so soon.

One woman told us that her husband left them eight days before, to go to Yorkton with an ox team for provisions, and had not yet returned. One who can step into a corner grocery at almost any hour of the day for his supplies, can hardly understand the condition of those who have to go on a journey of eight or ten days for the same.

LABOR NOT A CURSE.

Christian Register, Boston.

ONE of the most discouraging features of the controversy concerning labor is the backsliding from the noble position occupied half a century ago by the friends of the laboring man. It was then held that labor was honorable and noble, that it was not a curse, but a blessing. This was the doctrine taught not only in all liberal churches concerning what had for centuries been called the primal curse, it was also the plea made by the laborer himself. He expected to work. He claimed that his calling was an honorable one, and he asked all men to accord to it place and privilege according to its merit. The doctrine was sound, the teaching was wholesome, the effect was good. The good results still survive everywhere. With the majority of good citizens manual labor is held in higher esteem than ever before. We have no fear that the world will go backward, and on any large scale reduce the rank of the laborer to that of the slave.

But there is a mischievous teaching abroad, which, while it will not subvert society, will bejuggle many young men and women, and temporarily work harm to small groups of workers just at the time when they need the bracing doctrine of a former generation. Many energetic and voluble speakers and writers are filling the air with their outcries against the degradation and the pitiable condition of men and women who are compelled to work with their hands. Labor is contrasted with leisure, as if leisure were the only source of health and blessedness. The cry is not merely that the laborer is not suitably rewarded, that the hand labor of the farmer and mechanic shall be made honorable in the sight of all men, but it is a glorification of leisure as contrasted with work.

Now the wholesome way of regarding labor—which, in spite of this outcry, is prevailing and will conquer—is that labor, and not leisure, is the condition of happiness. With the innumerable openings for the exercise of mental activity in the new trades and professions, educated young men and women are more and more coming to forget that there is any line marking off manual labor from mental toil, making the one shameful and the other honorable. Leisure is valuable only because it gives one a wider range of choice as to the work he will do. The most enviable condition is that in which one can freely choose whether he will do work of this kind or that.

He who chooses to do no work or to work a few hours as possible in every twenty-four, will count for little or nothing in the strenuous, happy days that are coming. Given the widest range of choice, and the meanest work finds its place and its honor. The surgeon, incited by love of his work, does work so disagreeable that an untrained laboring man, even looking on, turns sick with disgust. Scientific men, whether as explorers in unknown regions or adventurers in the interest of knowledge, perform the meanest tasks and count no service disgraceful if it comes in the line of their proper work.

Leisure, except for needed rest, for time to plan new work, or for an opportunity to aid others in doing their work, is not a blessing, but a curse. If nothing comes of it, if no work is done because of it, or if better work does not follow on account of it, then leisure has not been a blessing to him who enjoyed it and almost invariably works harm to him or to others who are affected by it. Among the practical evils coming from the desire to escape the drudgery of manual labor is the overcrowding of the places where the manual labor is light, the growth of the military spirit among men who think it more honorable to fight than to work, and the increase of that army of incapables who find no opportunity and prefer to be supported by others rather than to soil their hands or harden their muscles by doing the work which the world offers them to do. Carlyle was right when he said that all the happiness a true man asks is happiness enough to get his work done.

POVERTY.—The gospel accepts poverty as a practically permanent condition of a large part of the human race. But it does not condemn it as an unqualified evil. Nor, on the other hand, does it regard poverty as an unmixed good. It treats the state of being poor as it treats other conditions, that is, as largely depending upon circumstances for its character. It says to the poor man: "Do not be ashamed of honorable poverty. It is wholly consistent with self-respect and with the possession of the respect of others. Do not hate or envy those who are rich. Do not feel humiliated because you are poor, unless your poverty is the result of some conduct on your part for which you know you are to blame." The gospel is a blessing to the poor in this, its effort to promote their self-respect.—The Congregationalist.

✻

I HAVE never disguised my conviction that a comparative study of the religions of the world, so far from undermining our faith in our own religion, serves only to make us see more clearly what is the distinctive and essential character of Christ's teaching, and helps us to discover the strong rock on which the Christian as well as every other religion must be founded.—Professor Max Muller.

✻

WHAT is it that brings peace to the atmosphere of a room, of a whole house sometimes? It can only be something in the individuality of some person in it. We talk glibly of the comforts of being settled, of the peacefulness, the restfulness of it. Some people, it would appear, are always settled, of settled convictions, settled mind, settled purpose.—H. S. Merriman.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS.

1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 46.—ELEVENTH MONTH 12.

HOUSE OF JEHU.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I hate, I despise your feasts, and I will take no delight in your solemn assemblies. . . . But let judgment roll down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream.—Amos v., 21 and 24.

Scripture Reading, II. Kings, xiii., 1-25; xiv., 23-29.

WHILE Jehu was wading to the throne through the blood of the royal house of Israel, a somewhat similar, if less extensive, massacre was taking place in Judah. Athaliah, the mother of the murdered king of Judah, made herself queen by destroying all the heirs of the royal house. One only escaped, the youthful Jehoash, who was saved by the High Priest, and secreted in the Temple (II. Kings, xi., 3). After several years he was brought out and restored to the throne, the queen being executed. As the young king was wholly under the influence of the priests, the warfare against Baal-worship was carried on vigorously and successfully for a time. The Temple was repaired, and its service was honored; though side by side with it continued the worship on "high places," always condemned by the priests because it reduced their importance, and by the prophets because it gave easy opportunity for the insidious practices of the Canaanites. In the political field Judah was less fortunate. Hazael, king of Syria, having defeated her neighbors of Gath, threatened even Jerusalem and had to be bought off with the treasures of the Temple. For several succeeding reigns the general conditions remained almost unchanged in Judah, except that during part of the time she was forced to pay tribute to Israel.

In Israel, meantime, violence and bloodshed continued. The war with Syria dragged its slow length along, Israel falling lower and lower, until it was almost wholly overrun by its enemies. During the early part of the reign of the house of Jehu, Elisha continued to be chief counsellor to the king. After his death there was no one to take his place. Assyria again threatened the west countries. On the Assyrian monuments we find the name of Jehu as one who paid tribute to Shalmaneser II. (842 B. C.). It may be that he hoped for the help of Assyria against his enemy of Damascus. And, indeed, the Assyrian conqueror did attack Syria soon after and laid it waste. But his successors were kept at home by the revolts of subjects near at hand; and Hazael, of Damascus, was free to turn against Israel for vengeance. This he did with a remorseless cruelty hardly to be equalled even among the many cruelties of those savage and bitter times. Cities were demolished, and the inhabitants, men, women, and children, were slain with the grossest savagery. It is perhaps worthy of mention that the siege of Samaria told in connection with the reign of Jehoram (II. Kings, vi.), is by some students attributed to this later period. Much of the chronology of this period is inextricably tangled, and it may easily be that this tale is placed in the wrong setting. To make plain the extent of the errors in chronology, we may note that the period from the date of the division of the kingdom (probably about 937 B. C.), to the fall of Samaria (722 B. C.), sums up in terms of the reigns of Israel to 241½ years, and in terms of the reigns of Judah to 260 years, a difference of nearly twenty years. Self-contradictory statements are common. The invasion of Sennacherib occurred in 701 B. C. "According to II. Kings, xviii., 13, this was the fourteenth year of the reign Hezekiah, of Judah, while according to verse 10, of the same chapter, it is stated that the year 722 B. C. is the sixth year of Hezekiah's reign, so that 701 B. C. would be the twenty-eighth year of his reign." (Kittel.) This is only one case of many in which one statement must be in error. The object of the historian of the Bible was ethical; the exact dates were of no importance to him. "The study of scientific history has its advantages; but it is not quite certain that these advantages are greater than those which the study of prophetic history yields. Perhaps, after all, the one fact of history is God's work in it; in which case the scientific histories, with all their learning, with all their toil, will look rather small by the side of these imperfect compositions which at least saw vividly and recognized faithfully the one fact." (Gladden.)

Israel would, it seems probable, have been completely merged into the Syrian kingdom had it not been for another advance from the eastward on the part of Assyria. About 800 B. C., after repeated invasions, Damascus was captured and Syria was reduced to a vassal state of Assyria. Israel also made submission and was thereby saved for a time. Indeed, the destination of her old rival gave opportunity for new expansion. Under Jeroboam II., great-grandson of Jehu, Israel again extended her borders, conquering Syria, Judah, Moab, and even placing Assyria for a time on the defensive. Once more the kingdom extended from the Lebanons to the Red Sea; almost the whole of the kingdom of David had been reconquered by the Hebrews. But the show of strength was illusive. By the long and wasting wars the stable middle class of society had been destroyed or reduced to slavery, leaving the rich oppressors and the poor oppressed set over against each other. Luxury and vice ran riot everywhere. Justice was bought and sold without shame. We have a vivid picture of this time in the words of the prophets Amos and Hosea. War and despotism produced their legitimate fruits. Never had wealth been so abundant—never had poverty been so grinding and without remedy. Let those whose judgment of right policies is tested by its result in trade—who measure the righteousness of nations by commercial success—take warning "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon."

TIME, the inexorable taskmaster of poor humanity, drives us hard with whip and spur when we are struggling under the heavy burden of work, but stays his hand and prolongs the creeping hours when we are delivered over to that weariness of spirit which weighs each moment with lead.—A. Repplier.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, ELEVENTH MONTH 4, 1899.

REMOVAL: NOTICE.

THE offices of FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER have been removed to rooms in the new Building of the Young Friends' Association, 15th and Cherry streets.

The entrance is the large (upper) doorway, on 15th street.

Business office at the head of the stairway, second floor, right hand.

Please address all letters, etc., to the new place, 15th and Cherry streets. P. O. Box 924.

PREPARATION FOR OLD AGE.

THERE is one preparation for old age that does not often enough engage the attention that its importance deserves. The duty of providing the material substance wherewith to support the body receives—and very properly—a full share of time and thought in early and mature life, and most persons in what may be termed the middle rank of society find themselves reasonably well cared for when age overtakes them.

But the lack of preparation we refer to is a preparation for the enjoyments of old age in a religious sense. When the vigor of life is gone and the quiet autumn time is upon us, there is need, if our lives are to be perfected, of that solace that religion, or rather, religious service, gives. For Friends the quiet meeting, if one has been reverently trained to its enjoyment, is an inexpressible comfort. To gather once or twice a week with one's fellow worshippers, has been a source of restful enjoyment to great numbers of people, and will ever continue to be so to the spiritually minded. But there must be a preparation for it, a turning to religious things in youth and in manhood, when the physical is able to think and reason and adapt that which our spiritual natures crave. We must study good books, and put ourselves in the way of religious instruction. As Friends we should form the habit of attending our meetings as one of the duties that will bring its reward not only now, but prepare us for enjoying such service in old age, when time often hangs heavily.

As the money we have earned is to yield us value, so this cultivation of the love of sacred things will yield its value to the soul, when length of years causes loss of energy for work. Just as surely as wealth can command comforts for the physical, will this culture of the spiritual side of nature sustain the soul.

But how often in the full strength of manhood we turn aside from the feast, as did the man of old who when bidden excused himself with, "I have bought a field, and I must needs go out and see it," or "I have bought five yoke of oxen and I go to prove them." We put aside for "a more convenient season" this preparation to enjoy the things that are of the spirit, and when we cannot actively take part in the affairs of men we find to our sorrow that we have not learned to appreciate the services of a religious life.

Let us then hold fast the privilege of worship and observe it outwardly all through life, so that old age may find us in a condition to enjoy all the opportunities, individual and social, that a religious habit presents, and we may also realize that blessed promise of "well done," so precious to the departing spirit.

FRIENDS and others, interested in the work of T. B. Pandian, who has been for some time in Philadelphia exerting himself in behalf of the Pariahs of India, have issued a circular, "An Appeal." It is mainly written by William McGeorge, Jr., who signs it, but it is also signed by Isaac H. Clothier, Samuel Emlen, Dr. Joseph May, Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins, and others. These say that "having either some personal knowledge of the work of Mr. Pandian, or confidence in the representations of Mr. McGeorge, we do not hesitate to appeal to all manner of men and Christians to consider the direful needs of the suffering Pariahs of India, and then to act in such way and to such extent as their hearts and ability will prompt and permit, and to do this 'in His Name.'"

WE loudly call the attention of all our friends to the fact that we have removed our offices. We are no longer at 921 Arch street, but in rooms on the second floor of Young Friends' Association building, north-west corner 15th and Cherry streets. Please address us there.

BIRTHS.

SATTERTHWAITE.—Near Willow Grove, Montgomery county, Pa., Sixth month 24, 1899, to Pierson M. and Louise M. Satterthwaite, a son, who is named Norris.

STACKHOUSE.—At Oxford Valley, Bucks county, Pa., Ninth month 9, 1899, to Henry and Anna L. Stackhouse, a daughter, who is named Emily Anna.

MARRIAGES.

BONNER—SHOEMAKER.—At the home of the bride's parents, Byberry, Pa., Tenth month 18, 1899, under the care of Byberry Monthly Meeting of Friends, Arthur Bonner, son of James and Rebecca K. Bonner, and Irene T., daughter of Linford A. and Mary H. Shoemaker, all of Byberry.

ELLIS—JAMES.—In Philadelphia, Tenth month 18, 1899, William Shewell Ellis and Alice Meribah James, daughter of Edith C. and the late Joshua G. James, of Philadelphia, and granddaughter of the late Thomas and Elizabeth K. James, of Byberry, Pa.

SAVAGE—HUTCHINSON.—Tenth month 18, 1899, at Friends' meeting-house, 15th street and Rutherford Place, New York City, under the care of New York Monthly Meeting of Friends, José R. F. Savage, son of Edward and Teresa Fernandez Savage, and Mary E. Hutchinson, daughter of John W. and E. Eliza Hutchinson, all of New York City.

[CORRECTION.—By mistake, in a marriage notice last week (Jarrett—Saunders) the letter F was inserted in the name of Charles Saunders.]

DEATHS.

DAKIN.—At her home in New Burlington, Clinton county, Ohio, Tenth month 17, 1899, Nancy A. Dakin, aged 83 years, 6 months, and 11 days; an esteemed member of Miami Monthly Meeting.

She was the daughter of Samuel and Judith Rich, and the last survivor of their nine children; she was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, Fourth month 6, 1816, married James Dakin, Ninth month 2, 1836, and with him had ten children. The father and all the children but the youngest, preceded her beyond the bounds of this life, so she knew the sorrows of many bereavements. She knew also the trials of adversity in outward affairs. With all, she was a woman of patient and gentle spirit, and much beloved. One son and several grandchildren hold her in tender memory. C. B.

HENSZEY.—In West Philadelphia, Tenth month 28, 1899, Sarah A., widow of George P. Henszey.

MARSHALL.—On Ninth month 1, 1899, at her home in Westtown, Pa., Elma James, wife of John E. Marshall, and daughter of Abraham Hunt James.

Interment was made at Goshen Friends' burial-ground. Fitting testimonies were borne at the funeral by Lydia H. Price, Enoch Hannum, and Joseph Evans. One spoke of her childlike faith and lovely character, another of her faithfulness as a mother, and although suffering herself her thought was ever to minister to others' comfort and pleasure.

For nearly five years she suffered pain from paralysis, her left side being helpless. Compelled to exchange a busy and useful life for one of entire inactivity, her patience and cheerfulness were unflinching. She was a beautiful example, worthy of imitation, quiet in manner, and sympathetic, and those whose blessing it has been to know her will not forget the lesson her life has taught. She was truly one of the meek and lowly ones of earth, and the blessing for the pure in heart is now hers. "How radiantly beautiful she is," was the thought as her spirit was passing, and the close was so peaceful the desire was that our last moments might be as truly blessed. * * *

PAWLING.—In West Philadelphia, Tenth month 21, 1899, Elizabeth Harding, daughter of the late Benjamin H. and Sarah J. Pawling.

Interment at Haverford Friends' ground.

TOMLINSON.—Near Kirkwood, N. J., Tenth month 20, 1899, William I. Tomlinson, aged 61 years.

UNDERWOOD.—At her home, near Harveysburg, Warren county, Ohio, Ninth month 6, 1899, after much and unusual suffering, against which she made heroic efforts in vain, Hester (Kirk) Underwood, aged 60 years, 9 months, 13 days.

She was the beloved wife of our friend Elihu Underwood, —beloved by him, by their three daughters and one son, and by the many friends who knew and esteemed her. Though not a member of our branch of Friends, she was yet a friend indeed, mild and pleasant, painstaking and careful, and such a gracious dispenser of hospitality as put every one at ease who shared it.

Being dead, she yet speaketh—her memory is green, her life an example, her crown glorious. C. B.

WEBSTER.—At the residence of his son-in-law, John Janney, West Philadelphia, Tenth month 26, 1899, Daniel Webster, in his 68th year; a member of Sadsbury Monthly Meeting; a son of the late Jesse and Elizabeth Webster.

WINCH.—At the residence of her son-in-law, H. L. Alexander, Lansdowne, Pa., Tenth month 23, 1899, Sarah Roman, widow of Corydon Winch, and cousin of the late Caleb Marshall.

Though not a member, when in Philadelphia she was a regular attender of Girard Avenue Meeting, and manifested much interest in Friends. *

Who knows? God knows; and what he knows
Is well and best.

The darkness hideth not from Him, but glows
Clear as the morning or the evening rose
Of East or West. —Christina Rossetti.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

THE meeting of Ministers and Elders, held on Seventh-day, the 28th ult., was well attended. Minutes were read for Isaac Wilson, a minister of Westlake Monthly Meeting, held at Bloomfield, Ontario; for Margaretta Walton, a minister of Fallowfield Monthly Meeting, Pa., and for Elizabeth Lloyd, a minister of Buckingham Monthly Meeting, Pa. There was a general expression of thankfulness for the presence of these friends, and also for the presence of Isaiah Lightner and wife, of Nebraska Half-year Meeting, Nathaniel Richardson, of Byberry, Pa., and others who were in attendance without minutes.

After the reading and answering of the usual queries, the thought was expressed that it is not a cause for discouragement that some lives fall short of the high standard therein set before them; this life is a continued striving for something better than we have yet attained, and the very consciousness of our shortcomings leads to more earnest effort in the future.

The closing hour of the meeting was a season of spiritual refreshment which brought peace and hope to many seeking souls; the peace that always comes with the consciousness of the Divine Presence as the sustaining power of our lives, and the hope for a brighter life in ourselves and in those around us, which they must feel who have faith in the omnipotence of the All-Father.

Owing to the threatening weather on First-day morning, there was no overflow meeting, but the main room of the Park Avenue meeting-house was filled to its utmost capacity. Most of those assembled were punctual to the hour, and shortly after 10 o'clock a sweet silence rested upon the meeting, which led to the vocal utterance of these words: "The fire still burns upon the altar of the living God." After this came a prayer that all might be obedient, in their daily lives, to the Divine guidance.

Several sermons followed, none of which were of undue length, and all were pervaded by an earnest desire for the spiritual welfare of the Society and of the individuals of which it is composed. These are among the helpful thoughts that were uttered:

When there is life in a meeting it is best manifested not by long sermons, but by the giving forth of the little bubbleblings of truth that spring up in every heart. (Alice Robinson.)

The kingdom of heaven is within us, and obedience to the Father's will is the door by which we may enter in. (William Wood.)

He that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city. The power that enables us to control our passions and make them our servants instead of our masters comes from the Christ that is cradled in the heart; and the victory is given only to those who know this living Saviour. (Isaac Wilson.)

Those who are birthright members of the Society of Friends have a rich inheritance; if they allow it to become barren through neglect they are no wiser than Esau, who parted with his birthright for a mess of pottage.

We are all in the Lord's vineyard, under the Father's love and care. He can do no more for us than he has already done; it is for us to respond with grateful hearts, and strive to order our lives in conformity with his will as it is made manifest in us. (Margaretta Walton).

As a fitting close to this season of refreshing there arose a prayer of thanksgiving for the fullness of the Divine presence, and the assurance of the All-Father's love.

In the afternoon, at the young people's meeting, there were exercises by the various First-day Schools, and an address by Isaac Wilson. In the evening the house was again filled, and there were sermons by John J. Cornell and Jeremiah Starr. E. L.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF Y. F. A.

THE Annual Meeting of the General Conference of Young Friends' Associations will be held at Woodstown, N. J., Seventh-day, Eleventh month 18. Morning session 10.30 to 12. Afternoon, 2 to 4.

Morning program:—"Need of Increased Interest in Business Meetings," paper by Susan H. Jarrett. Discussion opened by two short talks from West Chester and Abington Associations.

Afternoon:—"The Friendly Renaissance," paper by Robert M. Reese. Discussion opened by members of Moorestown and Solebury Associations.

A general invitation is extended to all interested Friends. For the accommodation of those desiring to attend the Conference, a special train will leave Market St. wharf, Philadelphia, at 9.30 a. m., Camden, at 9.35, making no stops between Camden and Woodstown. Excursion tickets $1.05. Return trains leave Woodstown at 4.30 and 6.07 p. m.

A cordial invitation to remain over First-day is extended to visitors, by Woodstown Friends. Those who propose so doing are requested to forward their names to Elizabeth L. Davis or Jessie L. Colson, Woodstown, N. J., though failure to have done this need prevent none from accepting the invitation.

Helen G. Burton and S. Frances Moore, constituting a reception committee from Woodstown Association, will meet and direct strangers at Market St. wharf.

On behalf of the Executive Committee,

WILLIAM WALTON, Chairman,
ANNA S. ATKINSON, Secretary.

THE DOUKHOBORS.

SOME additions have been made to the Fund in our charge. They are acknowledged below.

Joseph S. Elkinton, of Philadelphia, accompanied by William B. Harvey, of West Grove, Pa., left on the 24th inst. for Canada, to make a visit to the Doukhobor settlements. They expected to oversee the actual delivery to the people of the supplies now going forward. It is hoped to get a sufficient quantity of them to the settlements before the weather gets too inclement for transportation by teams from the nearest railway stations.

The money subscribed in Philadelphia (to Arch Street Friends), has been mostly used for the purchase of food supplies, at convenient points, and car-loads of corn-meal, potatoes, oatmeal, etc., have been sent forward. There are now on the way (10th month 30), three carloads of corn-meal, one of rolled oats, one of onions, and about 4,500 bushels of potatoes, besides three carloads of assorted food and clothing.

A carload of supplies for the sick and for children has been made up in Philadelphia, in charge of Joseph Elkinton, of Media, and we have handed him $300 in aid of the payment for this, being nearly all the amount in hand of the INTELLIGENCER Fund.

We are assured by those best acquainted with the situation that at the lowest estimate $40,000 will be required to supply the Doukhobors with food during the next ten months, until their crops come in. The most pressing need is a sick diet fund, and for the present we propose to devote to this such money as comes in to the INTELLIGENCER.

Some of the Doukhobor men, it is stated, will be employed during the winter by the Canadian Government, in the construction of railroads, and a considerable sum, it is hoped, will be realized in this way.

The committee of Arch Street Friends have issued (Tenth month 16), an appeal to Friends and others on behalf of the Doukhobors. It is signed by Samuel Morris, Jonathan E. Rhoads, Joseph S. Elkinton, Ephraim Smith, George M. Comfort, Wm. L. Bailey, and William Evans. We make the following extracts from the appeal:

"The strange spectacle is now presented, at the close of the nineteenth century, of more than 7,000 innocent citizens of Russia being expatriated on account of their conscientious convictions. The Doukhobors or 'Spirit Wrestlers' have for more than a hundred years maintained in Southern Russia a religious community of perhaps 12,000 persons, whose distinguishing views have led them to live in and manifest the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ in love to each other and all their fellow-beings, and to worship the Almighty in spirit and sincerity, free from ceremonial rites. Their non-conformity to the ritual of the Greek Church seems to have been one of the first causes of jealousy against them, among the priesthood where they dwelt; and this, with their conscientious and firm refusal to perform military service under the Russian government, has of late years subjected them to severe persecution. Their chief men have been banished to Siberia; whole villages have been compelled to give up their homes and farms, and remove to cold, mountain districts, while the local authorities seemed determined to destroy the entire body of them, by various methods for preventing their obtaining a livelihood. Friends in England, hearing of their distressed condition, sent some of their number to investigate the facts, and this resulted in arousing a lively interest in their behalf among the Society of Friends in Great Britain, who raised large funds to aid in their emigration to other parts.

"The Canadian government now offered them 160 acres of land in its northwestern territory for each adult, free of cost, and they were relieved, as to their scruples against bearing arms, by a recent wise and beneficent Act of the Canadian Legislature, exempting from military demands all who, by their conscientious convictions, cannot perform military service. After due investigation the offer was accepted, and during last winter and early summer more than 7,000 of the Doukhobors embarked for North America, and are now located in the Districts of Western Manitoba, Eastern Assiniboia, and Saskatchewan, about 300 miles northwest from the city of Winnipeg. Arriving there with very scanty supplies, they found themselves in an open prairie country, nearly uninhabited. They were obliged forthwith to build such rude huts as they could construct with logs and mud to shelter them, while they were wanting in beasts of burden, wagons, farming implements, seeds, and nearly everything necessary to agriculture. Some of the latter have been partially supplied by benevolent persons, and a small amount of land was ploughed and planted in the early summer.

"A large part of the immigrants, however, arrived too late to raise crops, even if they had had the necessary equipment. Now, the cold weather of that northern region is imminent, and these people in their extremity and destitution must be generously helped by Christian sympathizers, to tide over the ensuing ten months with food and clothing, or many of them may perish. They are industrious, frugal, free from vices that demoralize so many in other communities, and it is believed by those who have visited them and become familiar with their character and what they have already accomplished, that, if fairly started in their new homes, they will be self-supporting and prosperous.

"Their situation and religious views appeal forcibly to Friends for sympathy and help. It may be safely said that our testimony against war has never been maintained under such suffering and with such constancy as has been exhibited by these innocent people for a long series of years."

Joseph Elkinton informs us (Tenth month 31), that he has just received a letter from his father (Jos. S. Elkinton), who at the time of writing was traveling from Winnipeg to Yorkton with a party of immigrants, his object being to help them to settle at Yorkton. This was a party who had not been permanently located on the government land. There are but two trains per week to Yorkton, and there has already been snow enough to block the road. The Government Commissioner, McCreary, had been detained for three days.

Joseph Elkinton is now collecting supplies to fill another car, to be forwarded as soon as possible. Friends are invited to contribute to this, and articles or goods should be sent to 817 Mifflin street, Philadelphia, care of Joseph S. and Thos. Elkinton. All packages should be marked with the name of the donor.

THE "INTELLIGENCER" FUND.

"Resurgam,"	$25.00
A. C.,	5.00
Collections by David Ferris, as per list below,	22.00
W. S.,	2.00
E. N. B.,	5.00
	<hr/>
	$ 59.00
Previously reported,	264.50
	<hr/>
Total,	$323.50
Paid for sick supplies,	300.00
	<hr/>
In hand,	23.50

DAVID FERRIS'S COLLECTIONS.

5 Collections from Friends of Wilmington Monthly Meeting, in aid of the Doukhobors:

A Friend (for the sick),	$10.00
Edw. Mendinghall,	5.00
J. and E. N.,	2.00
E. H.,	2.00
A Friend, L. S.,	1.00
A. G. Thatcher,	1.00
Ezra Fell,	1.00
	<hr/>
	$22.00

AN INVITATION: FRIENDS' NEIGHBORHOOD GUILD.

Editors' FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

THE Committee in charge of Beach Street Mission, (Philadelphia), are glad to be able to announce that the work, unavoidably laid down during last year, will be resumed on the 11th of this month, and henceforth carried on under improved conditions and on a larger scale.

A good sized house, situated at 151 Fairmount avenue, has been purchased for $4,300, $4,000 of which was furnished by an interested friend on a mortgage at 4 per cent. Some interior alterations were necessary, as well as painting and papering throughout, and general repairs. A statement of expenses, together with a list of contributions, is given below. The house will be open for inspection by contributors and others on Fourth-day, Eleventh month 8, from 4 to 9 p. m., and all interested are cordially invited to avail themselves of this opportunity.

The name "Friends' Neighborhood Guild" has been adopted to replace the old familiar one of Beach Street Mission, since we are now no longer located on Beach Street, and to many it has seemed desirable to substitute for the word Mission one more clearly indicating the idea of mutual helpfulness and neighborly kindness.

The large third-story front room is admirably suited for manual training, and we hope soon to be able to start this good and much needed work on the premises, but we have not yet sufficient funds for the equipment.

The Savings Fund has been kept up regularly during all these months of interrupted work in other departments, and a few weeks ago reached its high water mark, deposits aggregating $42.25 being received on one evening. This has been a valuable means of retaining our hold on the children, of whom we might otherwise have lost sight, and we look forward to a successful winter's work.

The running expenses will of course be heavier from this time on, and the Committee are desirous of securing an enlarged list of small year to year subscriptions, in addition to the larger ones on which we have so much depended in the past.

We are indebted to Nathaniel E. Janney and Alfred Moore for valuable professional services gratuitously rendered.

STATEMENT OF EXPENSES.

On purchase of building,	$300.00
Fire Insurance premium ($3,000),	67.50
Proportion of taxes and water rent for current year, less rent for one-third of a month,	21.85
Examination and insurance of title papers, recording, revenue stamps, transfer of insurance, etc., etc.,	74.50
Interior alterations on property, general repairs, fence, etc.,	183.33
Plastering,	36.64
Plumbing and gas-fitting,	45.00
10 incandescent lights,	5.50
Repairing furnace and range,	21.47
Repairing and painting roof and tinning exposed east wall,	45.85
Painting and papering,	250.00
White-washing cellar,	11.00
Shades (approximate),	20.00
Cleaning, moving, and sundries (approximate),	25.00

$1,107.64

LIST OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

Donation Yearly Meeting 1898,	$200.00
" " " 1899,	100.00
Anna T. Jeanes,	200.00
Emma S. Webster,	2.00
Wm. C. Smyth,	20.00
Robt. Biddle,	5.00
Kate H. Middleton,	1.00
Robt. M. Janney,	25.00
Hannah H. Woodnutt,	5.00
Richard H. Downing,	15.00
George Watson,	10.00
Alice P. Hadley,	30.00
Ida R. Buzby,	1.00
Alban T. Eavenson,	10.00
Edith N. Brutaker,	20.00
Thomas H. Speakman,	5.00
Fellowship Circle King's Daughters,	5.00
Boy's Reading Room Ass'n,	72.99
T. Robinson Coale,	5.00
Alfred Moore,	10.00
Joseph M. Truman, Jr.,	.80
Saving Fund Balance,	.20
Isaac H. Clothier,	50.00
Charles E. Hires,	25.00
Edmund Webster,	5.00
Charles M. Betts,	5.00
Edward M. Needles,	5.00
A Friend,	25.00
Elizabeth Y. Webb,	10.00
Lydia B. Paxson,	5.00
Mahlon B. Paxson,	5.00
M. B. P.,	4.00
Thomas Shourds,	10.00

891.99

Deficit, 215.65

$1,107.64

In addition to the above we have $25.00 from Alice P. Hadley, and a promise of $20.00 from Wm. C. Smyth and $10.00 from Lydia B. Paxson toward the manual training equipment, these last payable when the rest of the necessary amount, ($150.00 to $175.00) shall have been raised.

LITERARY NOTES.

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON has made a very interesting volume of a collection of biographical and other sketches, under the title "Contemporaries." (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.) The papers have appeared at different times in magazines, "often unsigned," and are quite entitled to preservation in the present form. There are sketches of Emerson, Alcott, Theodore Parker, Whittier, Walt Whitman, Sydney Lanier, Lydia Maria Child, Helen Jackson, ("H. H."), Garrison, Sumner, Grant, and others, and there are, besides, several captivating chapters of narrative and descriptive,—"An Evening with Mrs. Hawthorne," "A Visit to John Brown's Household in 1859," "Dr. Howe's Anti-Slavery Career," "The Eccentricities of Reformers," "The Road to England," etc.

The sketch of Whittier is brief; it relates in large part to his poetical work, and the critical remarks are often very just and apposite. "Whittier's muse," he says in one place, "probably gained in all ways from the strong tonic of the anti-slavery agitation. That gave a training in directness, simplicity, genuineness; it taught him to produce strong effects by common means. It made him permanently high minded, also; and placed him, as he himself always said, above the perils and temptations of a merely literary career."

The articles on Whitman and Sydney Lanier also are critical and suggestive; those on Garrison, Phillips, and Sumner are interesting and vigorous studies. The sketch of General Grant is very good, indeed. It deals however, only with his military career, and his Memoirs.

The autobiography of Kropotkin, the famous Russian exile, which has been running in the Atlantic Monthly for the past year, will appear in book form from the press of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., with the title "Memoirs of a Revolutionist." It is a record of a stormy life and a beautiful personality. Julia Ward Howe's "Reminiscences" are also to appear in book form from the same house soon. And a third item of interest in this connection is that a new book by Sarah Orne Jewett, "The Queen's Twin," a collection of short stories, will presently appear. It takes up the thread of narrative dropped at the close of "The Country of the Pointed Firs."

Dr. Frederick A. Cook contributes to the current number of McClure's Magazine the story of his adventures with the Belgian Antarctic expedition of last year. The members of this expedition were the first men to pass a winter in the Antarctic; they were in the south polar ice-pack continuously for thirteen months. Dr. Cook's article will be illustrated from photographs taken by himself. Another feature of the number is a description by A. H. Ford, who has lately returned from China, of the marvelous progress made in the construction of the eastern section of the great Russian Siberian railway.

A notable article in Scribner's, this month, is by Sylvester Baxter on "The Great November Storm of 1898." Everyone will remember it, and the article vividly describes its development and climax, giving many details of the damage that was done. There are numerous illustrations. President Hadley, of Yale University, writes on "The Formation and Control of Trusts." He thinks there are causes that already tend to limit their importance. The Robert Louis Stevenson letters are concluded. Alfred Stieglitz, who is regarded as one of the finest of amateur photographers, has a good article on "Pictorial Photography," with illustrations.

A story in St. Nicholas, this month, is by "Ian MacLaren," with the title, "For the Sake of a Horse." It is remarkable, by the way, how very few juvenile periodicals survive; St. Nicholas almost stands alone in its field.

Frederick W. Holls, of New York, who was secretary of the American delegation in the Hague Conference, and who came out of it with quite an enhanced reputation as a man of affairs, contributes to the Review of Reviews, this month, a carefully prepared paper on "The Results of the Peace Conference in their relation to the Monroe Doctrine." He shows that the declaration of the American commissioners at the sitting of the Conference on the 25th of Seventh month, was the most emphatic expression of "Monroe Doctrine" ever made before the representatives of the Great Powers. He also shows the groundlessness of the fears which some people pretend to feel as to the danger to American interests likely to result from our participation in the Conference.

The Century, this month, has a very striking cover. It shows a portrait of Cromwell redrawn on stone by Ernest Haskell, and printed in four tints. This is apropos of the biography of the Protector which is begun within the cover by the English statesman, John Morley,—now withdrawn from activity in Parliament because of his opposition to the "Imperialist" campaign now waging in South Africa. The frontispiece of the magazine, also in tints, is an engraving by T. Johnson from Cooper's portrait of Cromwell in Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Another notable contribution is that of President Eliot, of Harvard, in which he gives the life-story of a Maine farmer and 'longshore-man, one of "the forgotten millions." John Burroughs writes charmingly article on "The Golden Crown Sparrow of Alaska."

Announcement is made that Margaret E. Sangster, who for over ten years has been the editor of Harper's Bazar, has resigned that position and joined the editorial corps of the Ladies' Home Journal, in which magazine she will hereafter conduct a prominent department.

The Ladies' Home Journal announces that it will publish a number of letters of "Gail Hamilton," (Abigail A. Dodge), written to John G. Whittier, which have been secured from the poet's literary executor and biographer, S. T. Pickard.

The Historical and Genealogical Department of the Literary Era, (Philadelphia: H. T. Coates & Co., Monthly, 50 cents a year), in charge of Albert Cook Myers, B. L., is becoming quite an authority on genealogical subjects, and increases both in bulk and interest.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

LOVELINESS. A Story. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Pp. 49. With Illustrations. $1.00. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co.)

PLAIN TALK IN PSALM AND PARABLE. By Ernest Crosby. 8½x6. Pp. 188. $1.50. Boston: Small, Maynard & Company, 1899.

A PRIMER OF FORESTRY. Part I. The Forest. By Gifford Pinchot, Forester. Bulletin No. 24, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. Pp. 88. With numerous illustrations.

CONTEMPORARIES. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Pp. —. $2.00. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co.)

THUS grave these words upon thy soul—
Hope, faith, and love—and thou shalt find
Strength when life's surges maddest roll,
Light when thou else wert blind. —Schiller.

EVERY one who goes shopping, and that means everybody, must have observed the growing difficulty of making change. The scarcity of fractional currency has been a matter of complaint for many years, but now it has become something serious. The trouble is due to Congress, which puts arbitrary limit to the coinage of fractional silver, instead of adopting an elastic rule adaptable to the needs of the community. [Public Ledger.]

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.—A regular meeting of the Young Friends' Association of New York and Brooklyn was held in the library room of Friends' Seminary, New York, on the 22d of Tenth month.

After the usual business and reports of Current Topics, Albert A. Merritt read a paper entitled, "Religion of Everyday Life." He defined religion as the attending to the Inner Calls to duty, and accounted for the widely differing views of religious people as owing to misconceptions of its teachings. He said that peace within does not mean inactivity, nor does religion consist in observance of creeds, but in all good words and deeds prompted by the Inner Light.

In the discussion of the paper which followed the question was raised, Why do good people differ so widely in actions? For example, in the matter of war. One said that people do not always wait to be guided by conscience, but appeal to reason, and so overeagerness impedes the way to right action in large as well as small things. It was also suggested that, while the Light shines for all alike, yet some see but imperfectly. Others thought that we ask too much of the Inner Light; that we should not expect it to guide us in all the details of our activities, as it is not an exact revelation.

A. H. M.

HOPEWELL, VA.—The Young Friends' Association met at the usual place, Tenth month 22, a little after the appointed hour. The meeting was called to order by the president, who read a part of the fourth chapter of Luke. Roll call brought a response from twenty members, showing a pretty full attendance. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

The executive committee reported the names of the following persons for exercises at our next meeting: History, Sarah B. Hardesty; Literature, Allen B. Bond; Discipline, William E. Branson; Current Topics, Annie J. Reese, Jr.

The question, "Should we as a Society do more proselytizing?" had been asked once before but not answered, so it was referred to Lydia W. Irish.

The Membership Committee reported the name of J. Herald Doing, which was accepted, and he was welcomed as a member with us. Under the head of unfinished business, some expression was called for regarding the names selected to be sent to the executive committee of the General Conference of Friends' Association. Those selected by the committee, Susan T. Pidgeon and Jonathan W. Branson, are desired to be forwarded as soon as possible.

The member appointed to furnish history for the day was not present.

Tacy B. Doing, on Literature, read an excellent selection from J. H. Miller relating to every-day duties and cares of life, and their moulding influence upon our characters.

Susan T. Pidgeon read a part of an essay by James Freeman Clark, on Good Temper, which was both interesting and helpful.

D. Arthur Robinson presented a well selected and interesting list of Current Topics, and Jonah H. Reese gave an able and instructive answer to the question referred to him, "What are Friends' Views regarding the Lord's Supper?"

Miscellaneous business and voluntary exercises followed. Under the one it was suggested that we consider the importance of meeting promptly, in order to follow out our program fully in the allotted time. As we had already gone beyond the hour set, a voluntary offered by Cassandra Pidgeon had to be omitted. After a few moments silence the meeting adjourned.

M. S. L., Sec.

FLEMING, PA.—The Young Friends' Association met Fourth month 22, in the afternoon, with a small attendance, yet a good meeting followed.

The vice-president opened with reading a poem from Whittier entitled "Autumn." Sentiments were repeated by those present.

The minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Mary J. Fisher read from the book, "The Pathway of Safety," by Ashton Oxenden, a chapter on "Happiness, the Duty of all Christians." Eva W. Cleaver read from Whittier a poem entitled "The Light House." The secretary reviewed the book, "The Secret of Guidance," by F. B. Meyer, giving a few of his valuable sayings on each of the different subjects treated. Florence N. Cleaver reviewed the book, "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong," by Charles M. Sheldon. Philip Strong, in the story, by his ever exerting himself against the powers of evil, illustrates the statement of Paul, "that the spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak."

Owing to the absence of some of our members and the inability of others to attend, we find it necessary to discontinue our meetings as we have been accustomed to hold them, though we do it rather reluctantly. We decided to concentrate our efforts all on the First-day school lesson, and make special effort to prepare ourselves on the topics given.

Our First-day School meetings will be changed from 9 o'clock to 11, during the winter months.

Closed in silence, hoping to re-open next spring.

N. M. FISHER, Secretary.

MILLVILLE, PA.—The Young Friends' Association was called to order (Tenth month 8), and the president read parts of the eleventh and twelfth chapters of Ecclesiastes. Roll was called and responses given by most of the members present.

The secretary read the minutes of last meeting, and the Executive Committee made a report. Literary exercises included the following: "The Water and the Flower," a recitation by Sarah Rote; Jesse John read "Our Ships at Sea;" Reba E. Eves recited "Inasmuch," Louisa Eves gave Current Topics.

The question announced in the Eighth month was briefly discussed. The meeting then adjourned.

Association met Ninth month 10. After a brief period of silence, select reading by the president, H. W. Eves, and reading the minutes of preceding meeting by the secretary, Mary R. Eck, followed.

The program included a selection, read by George M. Henrie, "Purifying the Press." The fifteenth chapter of "Life and Letters of James and Lucretia Mott" was read by Araminta Kitchen. Bernice Eves read a poem, "The Indians' Burial-Place;" Curtis Eves, in a short but interesting talk, gave a description of work at the George School. The question, "What should be the principal aim in life?" was answered in an able paper by Harriet Eck, and discussed by other members; then adjourned.

F. M. E., Cor.

TRENTON, N. J.—A regular meeting of the Trenton Friends' Association was held Tenth month 23.

The meeting was called to order by the President, W. Maxwell Marshall. After the roll-call the minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The literary program was opened by Daniel Willets, who read a paper, "Is our Nation justified in its effort to compel the Philippines to accept its authority and government in the Philippine Islands?" "War being declared," he said, "and the Islands becoming the property of the United States, our duty is clearly to subdue the revolt, and restore tranquility, open up the avenues of trade, teach the natives proper methods of agriculture, exact educational laws, and in a few years we will elevate the people upon a higher plane of law and order, establish civil and religious liberty, which is the corner-stone of free government. If this country is able to accomplish this, who can say that the United States has not fulfilled its full measure of duty to a down-trodden race formerly ruled by tyrannical Spain."

"Give a historical sketch of the Free Quakers of Philadelphia, and how did they differ from other Friends of their time?" was answered by Mabel Potts. Very little could be found pertaining to these people. The old brick meeting-house at the corner of 5th and Arch streets was built by them in the year 1783. They were also known as the "Fighting Quakers," so-called because they took part during the war for Independence, 1776-83, and for this were disowned, though some were afterward taken back.

Samuel De Cou prepared a paper: "What effect will the so-called Expansion policy have on the moral and material interest of this country?" The blessings of our country, he said, are being scattered to the suffering millions who never knew true government before, where Christianity will soon take the place of heathenism in the far away lands of the setting sun.

Owing to a change in the program the business of the meeting was then transacted. After a few minutes, silence, the meeting adjourned to meet Eleventh month 27,

MARY D. BRANIN, Secretary.

EDUCATIONAL.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.

THE College has sustained a great loss in the resignation of William J. Hall, who for fifteen years has filled the office of Superintendent. The state of his health renders it necessary for him to give up his duties at the College, and he will remove with his family to New Mexico. He is expecting to go about the middle of the present month, and his family will join him later. He has, for so many years, been closely identified with Swarthmore that his resignation is felt as a very real sorrow by his many Friends here. The place has been filled by the appointment of Charles A. Bunting, a Swarthmore graduate of 1883, who has entered upon his duties.

The Senior Class in Psychology has, during the past week, concluded its study of the brain under Dr. Trotter. Having thus completed the study of the anatomical basis of Psychology, the class are now prepared to study the more abstract and purely psychological side of the subject under President Birdsall.

The gymnasium work for the young women, under Sarah Farquhar, began last Second-day.

The new water-filter has now been in operation for some weeks, and has proved exceedingly satisfactory. Even heavy rains no longer cloud the water, and it is felt that a long-standing source of annoyance has been effectively and permanently removed.

M. S. H.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

I HAVE just had a letter from a friend in England [our correspondent gives us the name, but we think, with her, it is best not to publish it.—EDS.] dated the 10th of this month, which I think should be shared with your readers. He speaks of the South African war in emphatic terms. So many Friends seem to be influenced by the war spirit in the daily newspapers they read that every opportunity should be employed to get the truth to them. My friend says:

"Just now I have been struggling against my country's going into this wanton, wicked war with the Transvaal (and in consequence with the Orange Free State, also). It is shocking; we are almost heart-broken,—and so are all those whom you knew and esteemed in this country.

"The newspapers, with a few noble exceptions, have been fomenting the war and the war spirit,—by falsehood, and by misrepresentation more mischievous than downright falsehood. I do not doubt that we shall conquer the Boers, and annex their country, and then have to hold them down, there, and in Cape Colony, also, by arms. Parliament is about to meet, not to decide about war, but to pay the butchery bill." What a sad story it is!

A. R. P.

Plainfield, N. J., Tenth month 28.

BEACH STREET MISSION, NO. 1.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

PLEASE acknowledge the following donations received towards the sea-shore outing for the children of the Beach Street Mission, No. 1:

Friends from Woodstown, $1.50, per Anna Emley; Mrs. Ryland Phillips, children's dresses, per Friends' Book Association; two Friends, $5.00.

Any Friends wishing to donate at any time towards continuing the work next summer, may leave their contributions at the Friends' Book store, Fifteenth and Race streets.

While the donations last summer were too limited to admit of all we desired in carrying out the intention at the commencement of the season, yet they were sufficient to encourage us to continue it next year, hoping we may be better prepared at the beginning, and will be able to give a larger number of children the benefit and pleasure which the others certainly received.

EMMA C. HENSZEY.

Ocean City, N. J., Tenth month 24.

CHARITABLE REPORTS.

WE have the forty-fourth annual report of the Home for Destitute Colored Children, located at Berks street and Old Lancaster road, West Philadelphia. This home was established in 1855. Its object is "to afford a home for destitute colored children of our own (Philadelphia) and neighboring counties, giving them the rudiments of a simple education, and training them to habits of industry. At a suitable age they are indentured to respectable families,—in the country if possible." The age of admission is from 3 to 12 years.

The officers of the institution include several Friends; the president is Hannah H. Woodnutt, and other officers are: vice-presidents, Ruth P. Decou, Sarah M. Carver; treasurer, Martha M. Eastwick; recording secretaries, Emily B. Smyth, Eva R. Vanderbeck; corresponding secretary, Frances Corson Day. The Treasurer's report to Sixth month 1, 1899, shows expenditures for the year for the expenses of the Home, $3,239, less a balance on hand of $149.92. This was chiefly derived from collections made by the Managers, $786.00, and from drafts on the treasurer of the Board of Trustees, $1,935, this latter sum being derived from invested funds. The report shows that there were 37 children in the Home, 25 out on indenture, 10 out on trial.

It is very much desired to increase the Endowment Fund to the extent of $20,000, which would relieve the Managers from the necessity of obtaining annual contributions.

METEOROLOGICAL SUMMARY FOR EIGHTH MONTH, 1899.

Mean barometer,	30.001
Highest barometer during the month, 30th,	30.280
Lowest barometer during the month, 10th,	29.785
Mean temperature,	74.5
Highest temperature during the month, 21st,	95.
Lowest temperature during the month, 17th,	57.
Mean of maximum temperatures,	82.7
Mean of minimum temperatures,	66.3
Greatest daily range of temperature, 17th,	24.
Least daily range of temperature, 27th,	7.
Mean daily range of temperature,	16.3
Mean relative humidity, per cent.,	73.7
Mean temperature of the Dew Point,	64.
Total precipitation in inches, rain,	5.79
Greatest precipitation in any 24 consecutive hours, 2.03 inches of rain, on the 10th and 11th.
Number of days on which .01 inch or more of rain fell, 9.
Number of clear days 7, fair days 11, cloudy days 13.
Prevailing direction of wind from the Northeast.
Thunder storms on the 2d, 9th, 10th, 13th, 21st, 26th.
Lunar Coronæ on 17th.
Solar halo on 17th.
Meteor on the 4th at 8.27 p. m.

SENSIBLE TEMPERATURE DATA.

Maximum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 76, on 5th, Minimum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 56, on 9th. Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 68.8. Maximum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 77, on 13th. Minimum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 58, on 16th and 17th.

Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 67.6. Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer for this month, 67.2.

NOTE.—The means of the daily maximum and minimum temperatures, 82.7° and 66.3° respectively, give a monthly mean of 74.5°, which is 0.5° below the normal for Eighth month, and 2° below the corresponding month of 1898.

The total amount of precipitation for the month is about 2 inches more than the normal.

JOHN COMLY, Observer.

Centennial Avenue, Philadelphia, Eighth month 31.

AUTUMN.

THE golden-rod is fading,
The blue-bird's note is still,
The leaves are turning golden-brown
And the asters going from the hill.

The red and gold are mingled
In the foliage everywhere,
And the season's burrs are popping
And the nuts drop, round and fair.

And life grows calm and peaceful
With these changing autumn days,
When the earth is full of gladness
And of beauty and of praise.

For hearts beat with glad thanksgiving
To the Father, wise, above,
For the blessing of all these beauties,
Bestowed by his gracious Love.
[Alice B. Comly, Philad'a, 1888.]

TIRE D MOTHERS.

A LITTLE elbow leans upon your knee,
Your tired knee that has so much to bear ;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair,
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers, folding yours so tight—
You do not prize this blessing overmuch :
You almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness ! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day—
We are so dull and thankless ; and too slow
To catch the sunshine till it slips away.
And now it seems surpassing strange to me
That, while I wore the badge of motherhood,
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.

And if, some night, when you sit down to rest,
You miss the elbow from your tired knee,
This restless, curling head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly ;
If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again ;
If the white feet into their grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your headache then !

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown,
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap, or jacket, on my chamber floor ;
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear a patter in my home once more ;

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky—
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I.
But ah ! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head ;
My singing birdling from its nest has flown
The little boy I used to kiss is dead !
—May Riley Smith.

GROW old along with me !
The best is yet to be,
The last of life for which the first was made ;
Our times are in His hand,
Who saith, "A whole I planned ;
Youth shows but half : trust God, see all, nor be afraid."
—Robert Browning.

THE COLORED PEOPLE IN THE SOUTH.

Booker T. Washington, in Atlantic Monthly.

ALL attempts to settle the question of the Negro in the South by his removal from this country have so far failed, and I think they are likely to fail. The next census will most likely show that we have about ten millions of black people in the United States. About eight millions of these are in the Southern States. We have almost a nation within a nation. The Negro population in the United States lacks but two millions of being as large as the whole population of Mexico. It is nearly twice as large as the population of the Dominion of Canada. Our black population is equal to the combined populations of Switzerland, Greece, Honduras, Nicaragua, Cuba, Uruguay, Santo Domingo, Paraguay, and Costa Rica. When we consider, in connection with these facts, that the race has doubled itself since its freedom, and is still increasing, it hardly seems possible for any one to consider seriously any scheme of emigration from America as a method of solution. At most, even if the government were to provide the means, but a few hundred thousand could be transported each year. The yearly increase in population would more than likely overbalance the number transported. Even if it did not, the time required to get rid of the Negro by this method would perhaps be fifty or seventy-five years.

Some have advised that the Negro leave the South, and take up his residence in the Northern States. I question whether this would leave him any better off than he is in the South, when all things are considered. It has been my privilege to study the condition of our people in nearly every part of America ; and I say without hesitation that, with some exceptional cases, the Negro is at his best in the Southern States. While he enjoys certain privileges in the North that he does not have in the South, when it comes to the matter of securing property, enjoying business opportunities and employment, the South presents a far better opportunity than the North. Few colored men from the South are as yet able to stand up against the severe and increasing competition that exists in the North, to say nothing of the unfriendly influence of labor organizations, which in some way prevents black men in the North from securing employment in the line of skilled labor.

The Negro in the South has it within his power, if he properly utilizes the forces at hand, to make of himself such a valuable factor in the life of the South that he will not in any large degree seek privileges, but they will be conferred upon him. Agriculture is or has been the basic industry of nearly every race or nation that has succeeded. The Negro got a knowledge of this during slavery, hence in a large measure he is in possession of this industry in the South to-day. Taking the whole South, I would say that eighty per cent. of the Negroes live by agriculture in some form, though it is often a very primitive and crude form. The Negro can buy land in the South, as a rule, wherever the white man can buy it, and at very low prices.

Now since the bulk of our people already have a foundation in agriculture, are at their best when living in the country engaged in agricultural pursuits, plainly, the best thing, the logical thing, is to turn the larger part of our strength in a direction that will make the Negro among the most skilled agricultural people in the world. The man who has learned to do something better than any one else, has learned to do a common thing in an uncommon manner, is the man who has a power and influence that no adverse surroundings can take from him. It is better to show a man how to make a place for himself than to put him in one that some one else has made for him. The Negro who can make himself so conspicuous as a successful farmer, a large taxpayer, a wise helper of his fellow men, as to be placed in a position of trust and honor, whether the position be political or otherwise, by natural selection, is a hundredfold more secure in that position than one placed there by mere outside force or pressure. Let us help the Negro by every means possible to acquire such an education in farming, dairying, stock-raising, horticulture, etc., as will enable him to become a model in these respects and place him near the top in these industries, and the race problem would in a large part be settled, or at least stripped of many of its most perplexing elements. This policy would also tend to keep the Negro in the country and smaller towns, where he succeeds best, and stop the influx into the large cities, where he does not succeed so well.

Heretofore, for reasons which were natural, and for which no one is especially to blame, the colored people have been too much like a foreign nation residing in the midst of another nation. If William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, or George L. Stearns were alive to-day, I feel sure that each one of them would advise the Negroes to identify their interests as fast as possible with those of the Southern white man,—always with the understanding that this should be done where no question of right and wrong is involved. In no other way, it seems to me, can we get a foundation for peace and progress. He who advises against this policy will advise the Negro to do that which no people in history, who have succeeded, have done. The white man, North or South, who advises the Negro against it advises him to do that which he himself has not done. The bed rock upon which every individual rests his chances for success in life is securing the friendship, the confidence, the respect, of his next-door neighbor of the little community in which he lives. Almost the whole problem of the Negro in the South rests itself upon the fact as to whether the Negro can make himself of such indispensable service to his neighbor and the community that no one can fill his place better in the body politic. If the Negro in the South has a friend in his white neighbor, and a still larger number of friends in his own community, he has a protection and a guarantee of his rights that will be more potent and more lasting than any our Federal Congress or any outside power can confer.

ONE of the Buffalo papers runs its entire plant by electricity furnished from Niagara Falls.

A GOOD MANY BIRDS LEFT.

THERE is a reassuring "Bird Talk" by John Burroughs in the current issue of St. Nicholas. One of the good signs of the times, he says, is the interest our young people are taking in the birds, and the numerous clubs and societies that are being formed throughout the country for bird protection and cultivation. In my youth but little was heard about the birds. They were looked upon as of little account. Many of them were treated as the farmer's natural enemies. Crows and all kinds of hawks and owls were destroyed whenever chance offered. I knew a farmer who every summer caught and killed all the red-tailed hawks he could. He stood up poles in his meadows, upon the tops of which he would set steel traps. The hawks, looking for meadow-mice, would alight upon them and be caught. The farmer was thus slaying his best friends, as these large hawks live almost entirely upon mice and vermin. The red-tail, or hen-hawk, is very wary of a man with a gun, but he has not yet learned of the danger that lurks in a steel trap on the top of a pole.

If a strict account could be kept with our crows and hawks for a year, it would be found at the end of that time that most of them had a balance to their credit. That is, they do us more good than injury. A few of them, like the fish-crow and the sharp-shinned hawk, Cooper's-hawk and the duck-hawk, are destructive to the birds and wild fowls; but the others live mainly upon insects and vermin.

I do not share the alarm expressed in some quarters over the seeming decrease in the number of our birds. People are always more or less gloomy in regard to the present time and present things. As we grow older the number of beautiful things in the world seems to be fewer. "The Indian summer is not what it used to be; the winters are not so bracing; the spring is more uncertain; and honest men are fewer." But there is not much change, after all. The change is mainly in us. I see no decrease in the great body of our common field, orchard, and wood birds. I do not see the cliff-swallows I used to see in my youth; they go farther north to northern New England and Canada. At Rangeley Lake, in Maine, I saw the eaves of barns as crowded with their mud nests as I used to see the eaves of my father's barns amid the Catskills. In the cliffs along the Yukon in Alaska they are said to swarm in great numbers. Nearly all our game-birds are decreasing in numbers, because sportsmen are more and more numerous and skilful, and their guns more and more deadly. The bobolinks are fewer than they were a decade or two ago, because they are slaughtered more and more in the marshes and rice-fields of the South. The blue-birds and hermit-thrushes were threatened with extinction by a cold wave and a severe storm in the Southern States, a few years ago. These birds appear to have been slain by the hundred thousand. But they are slowly recovering lost ground, and in ten or more years will no doubt be as numerous as ever. I see along the Hudson river fewer eagles than I used to see fifteen years ago. The collectors and the riflemen are no doubt responsible for this decrease.

But the robins, thrushes, finches, warblers, blackbirds, orioles, fly-catchers, vireos, and woodpeckers are quite as abundant as they were a quarter of a century ago, if not more so.

The English sparrows, no doubt, tend to run out our native birds in towns and smaller cities, but in the country their effect is not noticeable. They are town birds anyway, and naturally take their place with a thousand other town abominations.

AN OLD RHODE ISLAND PREACHER.

From Caroline Hazard's "Narragansett Friends' Meeting."

In the spring of 1747, Peter Davis set out on his travels and certificates as to his preaching were received by the home meeting. The first one is dated from Nine Partners, or, as it was often called, the Oblong, in the Province of New York. This is back of Poughkeepsie, on the Hudson, and for many years was the seat of a famous school under the government of Friends. Peter Davis preached there in May, 1747. The next month found him in the "purchase of Westchester." Woodbridge, in New Jersey, Maryland, Flushing, Long Island, and Philadelphia were visited in turn, and the certificates received, "Which was all Read in this meeting to Good satisfaction." One wonders what his special gift was, and what aspect of truth he loved to preach. The way opened before him, for after a sojourn in Philadelphia in the autumn of 1747, he sends a certificate from London, dated 22d of Third month, 1748. No comment is made upon this in the orderly records. There is an interval of six months between the Philadelphia certificate and the one from London. How long a time was he upon the water? one wonders, and what reception did a Rhode Island Friend meet with in London? The records give no indication, but the meeting must have been stirred and stimulated by the fact of its own approved minister carrying his testimony and his gifts so far. In 1751 he was evidently back again, for certificates from The Oblong, Westbury on Long Island, and from the Purchase in the Province of New York, were received. Again, in 1759, it is recorded that "our Ancient Friend, Peter Davis and John Collins hath a concern on their minds to visit Friends in the Western parts." He was evidently a man of influence in the Society, especially where any question of doctrine was involved, and was constantly on committees to deal with offenders against the simplicity of Friends. He lived to a great age, and was twice married. Content Davis was his first wife, a woman of much influence in the women's meeting. She died in 1781, and he married his second wife, Martha. She "departed this life the 12th day of the Fourth month, 1809, and was buried the 14th in Friends' burying-ground in Richmond, aged 88 years." A year before her death the meeting took charge of its aged minister, and a paper exists specifying the food and clothing the aged couple were to have. He lived three years longer, and died in 1812, "aged one hundred years, eleven months and five days," and was buried in the Richmond burying-ground.

A story is told of Peter Davis by the present clerk of the meeting, who in his youth knew an aged man who was his friend. He was vigorous in mind and body, enjoying life to the last. Upon one occasion he was riding along the Matunuck road, erect as usual, and a party of younger Friends followed. Thinking him out of hearing, they discussed his great age, saying they would not like to live so long. The old man turned in his saddle and said gently, "Boys, it is sweet to live; I love life." And surely he had had great experience of life. Not only had he more years than any other Friend who is mentioned, but his travels and his preaching had made them full years. He enforced the discipline of the meeting, and the meeting was stringent with him. On the occasion of one of his religious journeys, a committee was appointed to inquire into his conversation and report upon it. They "find things clear concerning Peter Davis. All except his Setting out on his Journey before he had a Certificate." Thus even so influential a Friend was kept to the letter of the law.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

Review of Reviews.

THE so-called Transvaal question has been purely trumped up. There has been no real ground of dispute on Great Britain's part with President Kruger's government. England has demanded a variety of things relating to the internal administration of a country which had the fullest right to order its internal affairs according to its own preferences. Without acknowledging the right of England to raise any questions as to internal taxation, naturalization, school administration, and the like, the Transvaal has nevertheless permitted itself to discuss such questions for several years, and has made very considerable concessions for the sake of avoiding, if possible, a conflict with an irresistibly powerful opponent. But Mr. Chamberlain, as British colonial secretary, has ingeniously changed his demands from time to time. Certain large stock market interests also have systematically maintained a propaganda for stirring up the English people. Their theme has been the suffering of British subjects in the gold-mining districts through the oppressive conduct of the Boer Government. We have repeatedly discussed these alleged grievances and have pointed out their absurdity and their falsity. The British subjects in the Transvaal are there temporarily for the most part. They have never had the slightest idea of giving up their British citizenship and becoming naturalized subjects of the Transvaal republic. Yet England for months had been preparing for war on a most elaborate scale, with no pretext that any one could give except that President Kruger was not willing to make the term of years requisite for naturalization quite as short as Mr. Chamberlain thought it ought to be. Never before has so preposterous an excuse been given for military preparations, so far as we have read history.

THOUSANDS of goats are killed and sold daily in Chicago. Many of the purchasers buy them as mutton. The records of the yards show that some weeks as high as 8,000 goats are received.—News Item.

ART IN PHOTOGRAPHY.

Alfred Stieglitz, in Scribner's Magazine.

IN the photographic world to-day there are recognized but three classes of photographers—the ignorant, the purely technical, and the artistic. To the pursuit, the first bring nothing but what is not desirable; the second, a purely technical education obtained after years of study; and the third bring the feeling and inspiration of the artist, to which is added afterwards the purely technical knowledge. This class devote the best part of their lives to the work, and it is only after an intimate acquaintance with them and their productions that the casual observer comes to realize the fact that the ability to make a truly artistic photograph is not acquired off-hand, but is the result of an artistic instinct coupled with years of labor. It will help to a better understanding of this point to quote the language of a great authority on pictorial photography, one to whom it owes more than to any other man, Dr. P. H. Emerson. In his work, "Naturalistic Photography," he says: "Photography has been called an irresponsible medium. This is much the same as calling it a mechanical process. A great paradox which has been combated is the assumption that because photography is not 'hand-work,' as the public say—though we find there is very much 'hand-work' and head-work in it—therefore it is not an art language. This is a fancy born of thoughtlessness. The painter learns his technique in order to speak, and he considers painting a mental process. So with photography, speaking artistically of it, it is a very severe mental process, and taxes all the artist's energies."

Let me call attention to one of the most universally popular mistakes that have to do with photography—that of classing supposedly excellent work as professional, and using the term amateur to convey the idea of immature productions and to excuse atrociously poor photographs. As a matter of fact, nearly all the greatest work is being, and has always been done, by those who are following photography for the love of it, and not merely for financial reasons. As the name implies, an amateur is one who works for love; and viewed in this light the incorrectness of the popular classification is readily apparent.

Great Salt Lake Drying Up.

It is prophesied that before the end of another century the Great Salt Lake will be utterly dried up. In the past year, we are told, its waters have receded a mile. "The cause for this," says The Irrigation Age, "is said to be the excessive drain made upon it by the irrigation enterprises of the Mormons. Contrary to the theory which was accepted for a time, this great lake is not fed by underground springs but by the Jordan, Weber, Ogden, and Bear rivers, and when the water of these streams is intercepted for irrigation purposes, it necessarily decreases the water-supply of Salt Lake, leaving it more to the mercy of the sun and the attendant evaporation which is constantly going on and which is slowly but surely drawing the water away until in time only a bed of dry salt will remain."

"The cause of the saltiness of this mysterious body of water has been a matter of conjecture to scientists for years. The most plausible theory is that the saltiness is due to the high altitude which causes excessive evaporation, while there is practically no outlet to the lake. A scientist, after a number of experiments, has expressed the conviction that if all the salt supply in the entire world were cut off except that found in the bed of the Great Salt Lake, there would still be enough to last the world for ages, so deep is this deposit.

"Regarding the decadence of the lake, a writer recently said: 'When the Great Salt Lake is gone it will be missed as a wonder and as a salt factory; for little else. Its waters destroy vegetation instead of nourishing it. Should the fresh waters of Utah Lake, however, be evaporated or disappear into the earth thousands of square miles would cease to be habitable. Some years ago the Utah Lake region was made a government reservation, an act which has kept irrigation companies from drawing water either directly from it or from its feeders.'"

Not For Daily Use.

C. H. SPURGEON once said that a youth was leaving his aunt's house after a visit, when, finding it beginning to rain, he caught up an umbrella which was snugly placed in a corner, and was proceeding to open it, when the old lady, who for the first time observed his movement, sprang toward him exclaiming, "No, no; that you never shall! I have had the umbrella twenty-three years, and it has never been wet yet; and I'm sure it sha'n't be wetted now."

Pointing the story with a moral, Spurgeon said that he feared some folks' religion is of the same quality—none the worse for wear. It is a respectable article to be looked at, but it must not be dampened in the showers of daily life. It stands in a corner, to be used in case of serious illness or death, but it is not meant for common occasions. We are suspicious that the twenty-three-year-old gingham was gone at the seams, and if it had been unfurled it would have looked like a sieve. At any rate, we are sure that this is the case with the hoarded-up religion which has answered no useful turn in a man's life.

Rest Necessary.

IF we will not rest in the beautiful, pleasant ways, we sometimes have to rest in the stern, painful ways. It was illness I was thinking of when I said that sometimes God "will not let us work." How often do you see that very thing? A man will not stop, will not rest; goes on and on; takes his cares and worries home with him, cannot find time for home, really; cannot find time for prayer; on Sunday is too tired for worship. But he will not stop. This "must be done." That "is absolutely necessary." His business "cannot spare him." Ah! but by and by his business has to spare him. Illness comes. Providence, with its far-reaching, quiet working-out of all things, seems to smile at our little notions of what is necessary. It is as if God laid his hand upon the eager, hurrying, forgetful life and said, "Be still, and know that I am God."—[Brooke Herford.]

The Hague Conference.

F. DE MARTENS, the distinguished Russian delegate to the Hague Conference, has an interesting article in the North American Review, in which he says:

"The session-hall of the Conference at The Hague, in the royal palace of the Huis ten Bosch, cannot be compared with the session-hall of the Congress of Paris, of Berlin, or of Vienna. In this session-hall the delegates of the twenty-six Powers were not seated about a table; there could have been no such table. They were separately grouped in a great hall, which represented, as has been said of it, a sort of 'International Parliament.' The consultations were not secret negotiations 'behind the scenes.' But great questions were elucidated by discourses and study, by reciprocal exchange of ideas in open session, before the representatives of three parts of the world."

"Finally, and it is a happy token to note, the longer the labors of the Conference at The Hague lasted, the more fully views were exchanged among the representatives of the different Powers, the more pronounced grew the mutual respect, the more friendly grew the personal relations, the more palpable became the desire to do something for the future."

CURRENT EVENTS.

THE war in South Africa continues in two parts of the country, both English. These are Natal, where, at this writing the English troops, under General White, are besieged at Ladysmith by a larger force of Boers, and in Rhodesia, on the west, where Mafeking and Kimberley, the latter the centre of the diamond mines, are also besieged. There has been severe fighting at different points, but no general battle. Prisoners have been taken on both sides. The reports through London of earlier operations were unduly favorable to the British side, and up to this writing, (31st ult.) the Boers have apparently rather the advantage.

THE latest news from the war, at this writing, is that in the operations at Ladysmith, on the 30th ult., after severe fighting, in which there were heavy losses, the Boers captured nearly 3,000 British troops.

MORE troops are being sent to South Africa by the English Government, and a very large fleet of warships is kept ready to sail. As the latter cannot be used against the Transvaal, the common supposition is that they are meant to prevent other European nations from intervening. Dr. Leyds, the Transvaal agent in Europe, in an interview at Brussels, on the 30th ult., charged that the English were "arming the colored races of South Africa against the Boers." "I make this accusation," he said, "with a due sense of its gravity, and an absolute knowledge of its accuracy."

MICHAEL DAVITT, one of the Irish members of the Parliament (sitting for South Mayo), announced in the House of Commons, on the 25th ult., that he would resign his seat as a protest against the Boer war. At Chicago, last week, United States Senator William E. Mason, of Illinois, (Rep.), announced that his opposition to the Philippine policy of the present national Administration was so strong that he would resign his seat in the Senate after the election of 1900, if he found the Republican conventions supported that policy, and would then make a contest for reelection.

THE total losses of the United States forces in the Philippines, up to the 28th ult., since Eighth month 6, 1898, have been 2,855. The Philadelphia Ledger remarks that "we have paid an enormous price in treasure and life for the possession of only 117 square miles of Luzon land, after a seven months' campaign."

A NUMBER of State elections take place next week, on the 7th instant. Massachusetts, Mississippi, Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky, and Iowa elect a governor, and certain other state officers. Nebraska elects a justice of the supreme court and two regents of the State University. South Dakota elects a supreme court judge; Pennsylvania a state treasurer and supreme court judge. In Virginia no state officers are to be elected, but a Legislature will be chosen. New York will elect assemblymen, and one congressman. The New Jersey election is for members of the Legislature only.

A COMMITTEE of nine of which Tunis G. Bergen, of New York city, president of the Holland Society, was chief spokesman, presented to President McKinley, on the 26th ult., a petition asking him "to offer the friendly services of the United States in mediation between Great Britain and the republics of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State." The petition called attention to the clauses of the Hague Conference agreement, especially clauses 1, 2, and 3, which make such offers the right of any friendly power, "even during the course of hostilities." The President, in reply, did not encourage the expectation that he take would the action asked for. He said that peace sentiments had his sympathy.

THE petition asking for mediation in the South African war was signed by 104 United States Senators and Representatives, 89 presidents of colleges and universities, 48 governors and State officials, 15 judges of the United States courts, 65 other judges, 18 bishops of the Episcopal church, 19 Roman Catholic archbishops and bishops, and by many other prominent persons. Alfred H. Love, of Philadelphia, president of the Universal Peace Union, was one of the committee who presented the petition.

THE Municipal League of Philadelphia has taken measures to cause some diminution of the frauds in elections in this city. It has engaged ex-Judge James Gay Gordon, and former District-Attorney George S. Graham, to prosecute offenders. The elections are so honey-combed by fraud that it is doubtful whether much can be done. The fraudulent vote is estimated as high as 80,000 by the Press (Rep.). The North American newspaper has been for several weeks publishing details of the fraudulent assessments made by the assessors, by which "repeaters" are enabled to vote on fictitious names. The whole business is systematic, and involves many persons.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

IN a proclamation issued last week, President McKinley designates the 30th of this month as Thanksgiving Day.

—Secretary Root's annual report, which is said to be completed and in the hands of the government printer, is understood to recommend the permanent increase of the regular standing army to 100,000 men. The President, in a recent speech in Minnesota, declared that a large standing army in the United States was not to be thought of. But there is no inconsistency between Secretary Root's recommendation and the President's statement in Minnesota. The President would say that a regular army of 100,000 men was a small one. If he should recommend one of 200,000, he would say that that was small, too. Thus do we aspire, step by step, to the old world ideals and burdens.—Springfield Republican.

—Isabella Beecher Hooker, of Hartford (sister of Henry Ward Beecher), is circulating petitions among Connecticut women, asking Congress to take measures to assist the Philippine people to form their own government. When the petition has been sufficiently signed, she proposes to take it herself to Washington and present it.

—The New York Tribune publishes an interview with Li Hung Chang, the veteran statesman of China, in which he condemns the procedure of the United States in the Philippine Islands. Among other things he said: "You seem to have cast aside your traditional policy of honor, riches, and safety, and entered upon the same land-grabbing plan as England, Germany, and Russia. If Grant had lived no such mistake would have been made, I am sure."

—Miss Julia Wilkins, of Atlanta, Ga., has withdrawn from the New York School of Applied Design for Women because of the presence there as a pupil of a colored woman, the superintendent of the institution having refused to ask the latter to withdraw from the school.

—The "bubonic plague," the terrible Asiatic pest, which has caused so many deaths in India, at Bombay, and elsewhere, appears to be planted at Oporto, in Portugal, and at Santos, Brazil, the seaport of Rio de Janeiro. At the latter place twelve cases were reported up to the 26th ult., and four new cases and one death, to the 28th.

—A news item, 28th ult., says: Announcement is made that all grades of furniture will be advanced 10 to 20 per cent. in price as a result of the efforts of the Grand Rapids Furniture Association. Similar action has been taken by the Western Parlor Manufacturers' Association.

—The Hutchinson and Southern Railroad has passed into the hands of the Santa Fé. The line is 148 miles long, extending from Hutchinson, Kansas, to Ponca, Oklahoma.

—Considerable damage has been done in eastern Cuba by a five-days' rainstorm, which culminated on the 29th ult. in a hurricane. Twelve houses in Santiago were wrecked and others badly damaged.

NOTICES.

* Quarterly meetings in Philadelphia Quarterly occur as follows :

ELEVENTH MONTH :

7. Philadelphia, Race Street, 10 a. m.
9. Abington, Byberry.
28. Burlington, Trenton, N. J.
29. Southern, Camden, Del.
30. Bucks, Langhorne, Pa.

* First-day evening meetings, in Philadelphia, in Eleventh month, are held at Race Street, at 7.30 o'clock. The full attendance of Friends is solicited.

* A meeting of the Association for the Promotion of First day Schools within the limits of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting will be held in the meeting-house at 15th and Race streets, Philadelphia, Eleventh month 4, 1899, beginning at 10 o'clock.

The morning session will be devoted to important business. The afternoon session will consider the following program : (1) "Large Classes of Adults," by Charles Paxson. (2) Demonstration of one of the lessons in the present Quarterly, by a class from Girard Avenue First-day School. (3) "The building up of First-day schools and the strengthening of weak ones," by Cynthia S. Holcomb.

All interested are invited. It is especially desired that each school shall have its delegates in attendance. Will superintendents kindly make this a personal matter?

JOHN L. CARVER, } Clerks.
MARY H. FORMAN, }

* A Circular Meeting under the care of a committee of Concord Quarterly Meeting will be held at Chichester on First-day afternoon, Eleventh month 5, 1899, at 3 o'clock p. m.

MARY P. HARVEY, Clerk.

* Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting's Committee to visit the smaller branches as way may open will attend meetings as follows :

ELEVENTH MONTH :

5. Valley, 10 a. m.
19. Haverford, 10 a. m.
26. Reading, 10 a. m.

TWELFTH MONTH :

3. Germantown, 10.30 a. m.
- AQUILA J. LINVILL, Clerk.

* Any changes in the times of holding meetings, or other needed corrections, should be sent as soon as may be to Friends' Book Association, 1500 Race street, Philadelphia, to enable them to issue the Almanac for 1900 at an early date.

WINTER EXCURSION TICKETS ON THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

Eleventh month 1 the Pennsylvania Railroad Company placed on sale at its principal ticket offices excursion tickets to all prominent Winter resorts in New Jersey, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Cuba. The tickets will be sold at the usual low rates, with the usual liberal return limits.

The magnificent facilities of the Pennsylvania Railroad, with its many connections and through train service, make this the favorite line for Winter travel.

An illustrated book, descriptive of Winter resorts, and giving routes of travel and rates for tickets, will be furnished free on application to ticket agents.

"FIGURES do not lie," but it must be admitted that liars sometimes figure.

A KIND of paper is made from seaweed which is so transparent that it may be used instead of glass for windows.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANGOR Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC New York.
BRADLEY New York.
BROOKLYN New York.
JK./ETT New York.
ULSTER New York.
UNION New York.
SOUTHERN Chicago.
SHIPMAN Chicago.
COLLIER St. Louis.
MISSOURI St. Louis.
RED SEAL St. Louis.
SOUTHERN Louisville.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

FRESH coat of paint and change of color will make your house look fresh and bright. If you want to sell it will enhance the value of your property, or enable you to rent it quicker, to better tenants and for more money; is therefore a good investment if properly painted. To paint it properly have Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil applied by a competent, practical painter.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

I HAVE heard it denied that small New England children have the New England conscience, but some things I have seen and heard incline me to think that they often have it. A story that was told me the other day points that way. One day the mother of a ten-year-old boy gave him two slices of buttered bread, telling him to give one of them to his little sister. He carried out the order. That night, when he went to bed, he was evidently disturbed in his mind and remorseful about something, and his mother questioned him in a way to bring out the truth. "I—I wasn't nice to Peggy about that bread and butter," he owned. "Why," asked his mother, "did you take the bigger piece?" "No," he answered, "hers was a little bigger than my piece was, but mine was a good deal butterier!"—[Boston Transcript.]

The Senate has always been controlled by lawyers, who are the aristocratic class in the United States, and Blaine was at a disadvantage because he did not belong to the profession.

The law lords were disposed to disparage and flout him, but he was disrespectful to the verge of irreverence.

"Does the Senator from Maine think I am a idiot (idiot)?" roared Thurman, in reply to an interrogatory Blaine put to him one day in the Pacific Railroad debate.

"Well," answered Blaine, "that depends entirely on the answer you make to my question."—[Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.]

WOMEN are the buyers. Men go semi-annually and get themselves inserted into a suit of clothes. The rest of the buying is done by their wives or their mothers, or some other woman who takes care of them.—[Shoe and Leather Facts.]

LESS than two per cent. of all the men in America own "full-dress suits," and fully seven-eighths of our American families have their dinners at noon.—[Edward Bok.]

BRASS and ENAMELED BEDSTEADS

There is a right way and a cheap way to make Mattresses; perhaps you have found it out. We do it the right way; try us. Furniture reupholstered. Shades, etc.

Josiah G. Williams, 13 N. 11th St

Fruen's Wheat Wafers

BEST

In two-pound Packages.

Made from the Best Selected Washington State White Wheat.

The largest, richest and finest flavored Wheat in the world.

After the defective and imperfect grains are separated, it has the outside woody hull, which is both indigestible and irritating, stripped off. It is then thoroughly cleaned, and finally rolled out into perfect and peerless wafers or flakes, the most perfect food for mankind known.

A great nerve, brain and muscle food, delicious and unequalled as a breakfast food or for puddings, omelets, griddle cakes, or mixed with any stewed fruit.

Gives children strong constitutions, rosy cheeks, good eyes, strong nerves, sound teeth, and to grown persons an active brain and strength of nerve and muscle.

Taking beef as a standard, at 18 cents per pound, Fruen Best Wheat Wafer's food value is over 50 cents per pound.

Superior to Oat-meal, as while it is more perfectly nourishing it does not over-heat the blood or irritate the stomach like oatmeal.

A. R. HILL, 21 S. Front St., Phila.

Wholesale Agt. for Fruen Cereal Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

Hanscoms'. Our prices are the lowest, our variety the most complete, and quality as near perfect as can be had. Shall we mail you a price catalogue for comparison? No liquors or other offensive goods or methods resorted to. 1311 Market St., Phila.

CLEMENT A. WOODNUTT,

Undertaker
and Embalmer,

1728 GIRARD AVENUE, PHILADELPHIA.

Telephone 2-28-25-A.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, ELEVENTH MONTH 11, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 45.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLV.

THE possibilities of inward silence can be but distantly referred to in words. The clearness of inward vision which sometimes results from it must be experienced to be fully understood.

CAROLINE E. STEPHEN.

From "Quaker Strongholds," the chapter on Worship.

THE LAND OF PROMISE.

ALTHOUGH the faiths to which we fearful clung
Fall from us or no more have might to save;
Although the past, recalling gifts it gave,
O'er lost delights a doleful knell have rung;
Although the present forth from ashes sprung,
Postpone from day to day what most we crave,
And, promising, beguile us to the grave,—
Yet toward the future we are always young!
It smiles upon us in last lingering hours,
If with less radiance, with a light as fair
As tender, pure, as in our childish years:
It is the fairy realm of springing flowers,
Of songs and ever-springing fountains, where
No heart-aches come, no vain regrets, no tears!
—Florence Earle Coates.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

(Report continued from last week.)

ON Second-day the Yearly Meeting opened its business sessions with a large attendance. Several of the epistles from other yearly meetings were read and much interest in them was manifested. A good deal of time was given to the discussion of the proposition continued from last year, to hold the meetings in joint session. The men were ready for this change a year ago, but several of the women expressed the feeling that the separate meetings gave a dignity to their sex which would be in a measure lost if they were no longer held responsible for the conduct of business. After a very full expression and a careful weighing of the sense of the meeting, it was decided to hold three sessions of this yearly meeting jointly and the other sessions separately.

In the men's meeting, after a thoughtful discussion of the meeting's ability to raise all needed money, $215 was appropriated toward the expenses of the Chautauqua Conferences; women Friends concurred in this action.

In the women's meeting the answers to the first three queries were read, and in connection therewith many Friends bore testimony to the inward peace that comes to them who are faithful in their attendance at meetings, and to the blessings that follow an adherence to the beautiful language of Friends among all people and under all circumstances.

In the evening there was a meeting of the First-day School Association. Three epistles were read, which were full of fruitful suggestions. Joseph S. Walton, of Philadelphia, gave an address, which called forth strong expressions of appreciation and gratitude; his theme was the preparation of the heart for the reception of the Heavenly guest, and the duty of the First-day school to make the necessity of this preparation clear to even the youngest pupils.

On Third-day morning the men and women Friends met in joint session. The more than usually impressive silence, which rested upon those assembled, was broken by earnest vocal prayer.

The first business was the reading of the report of the Standing Committee of women's meeting on the Purification of the Press. In response to letters sent out by this committee, resolutions in sympathy with its efforts have been adopted by international, national, and many State editorial associations, as well as by farmers' granges, women's clubs, and other influential bodies. Numerous letters of appreciation have been received from editors in all parts of the country, and the interest and coöperation of ministers of other denominations in the city of Baltimore has been secured.

The labors of the committee were warmly commended, and the meeting appropriated $100 for its use next year.

The report of the committee on First-day schools was very encouraging. During the past year circulating libraries have exerted a beneficent influence. The meeting showed its appreciation of the words of this committee by increasing the appropriation for its use from $300 to $350.

After the reading of the remaining epistles the session closed as it began, with solemn silence and vocal prayer.

In the afternoon the minutes of the Representative Committee were read. The committee on Indian Affairs presented a report of more than usual interest, showing that their work has been carried on at the minimum cost for maximum benefit. In addition to the kind of work done in previous years a helping hand has been extended to the Mission Indians in southern California, whose lands, given them by solemn treaty, were awarded to white claimants by the courts. The Indians Committee coöperated with the Indian Rights Association in an appeal to the Supreme Court of California; the decision in the court being against the Indians (though three of the seven judges were in their favor), an appeal has now been made to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Attorney-General has permitted the coöperation of his department in securing justice for the Indians; pending the decision of this court they will remain in possession of their lands.

Margaretta Walton expressed thanks that for this down-trodden people there are still those among Friends who have watchful eyes and feeling hearts.

The report of the Darlington Friends' Home, 1700 Bolton street, shows that there are now in the Home four permanent boarders, and that several of the teachers and pupils of the new Friends' School are there comfortably provided for. The committee on Philanthropic Labor is assisted by committees in each of the monthly meetings, which work under the charge of superintendents of the following departments: Peace and Arbitration, Temperance, Purity, Anti-Narcotics, Improper Literature, Mission Work for Women and Children, and Prison Reform. Among so much that was interesting and encouraging, we may note the allusion to the labors of the Women's Disarmament League of France; the efforts made to secure scientific temperance instruction in Virginia; the distribution of 1,600 copies of a leaflet entitled "The Danger Signal," to students of the medical schools and the university; and the helpful work done in mothers' classes and conferences.

In the Philanthropic meeting, on Third-day evening, the main feature was an address by Edward B. Rawson, of New York, who gave reasons why Friends should study the problems of Capital and Labor, Domestic Service, and Race Prejudice. The key to the solution of all these is—Love; they will be settled when each one makes an honest effort to look at the situation from the point of view of the one on the other side.

On Fourth-day morning the Visiting Committee reported that they had visited a number of meetings and many families; $150 was appropriated to the use of this committee, and the thought was emphasized that Friends are glad to be visited by those who have not, as well as by those who have, the gift of vocal ministry.

An interesting part of the report of the committee on Education was that referring to the new school building adjoining the meeting-house, which is a substantial stone structure 54 by 66 feet, four stories in height, erected and equipped at a total cost of $40,445. Of this amount $26,108 has been raised, and it is hoped that by another year the whole amount will be contributed. There are now in the school 168 pupils, twenty-five of whom are Friends and twelve that have one parent a member; these are under the care of seventeen teachers, twelve of whom are Friends.

A feeling tribute was paid to the beneficent influence among Friends and others of the school for so many years under the care of Eli M. Lamb.

At the close of the session, William Wood, a beloved minister more than eighty years of age, expressed his gratitude for the beautiful quiet that had prevailed during the three joint sessions, and for the dignity with which the business had been conducted. Isaiah Lightner gave thanks for the privilege of again mingling in the yearly meeting with the friends of his youth. Then, after a quiet waiting for the Divine benediction, the meeting adjourned.

Fourth-day afternoon the First-day School Association concluded its deliberations. The remaining epistles were read and a fitting reply to them approved. The lesson leaves, and the methods of using them, were discussed at some length, and the question was asked (but not answered), Why in the Old Testament series the Golden Text has no apparent connection with the rest of the lesson?

In the evening the public meeting for worship was well attended; there were sermons by Phineas J. Nichols, O. Edward Janney, Nathaniel Richardson, and Isaac Wilson. The latter spoke with especial power of the "greater things" that the followers of Christ are to do.

On Fifth-day morning the meetings were held in separate session, and were devoted to the answering of the queries. In connection with these Friends were cautioned to await the Divine guidance in deciding what diversions are harmful, and were enjoined to extend love and forbearance to erring ones. It was also queried whether, if each one had been obedient to the Inward Voice, there would not have been more than twenty new members added during the year by conviction.

Two letters prepared by the committee on Isolated Friends, one to adults and one to children, were approved by the meeting. A sub-committee of six was appointed to cooperate with similar committees from other yearly meetings, to consider the best interests of these isolated Friends.

In the afternoon the meeting again assembled in joint session. An epistle to the other yearly meetings, covering the labors of the week, was united with. The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $881.09, and $2,000 was directed to be raised the ensuing year. Elisha H. Walker was reappointed treasurer.

O. Edward Janney introduced a minute on the subject of temperance, which was adopted. It spoke of the growing influence of the saloon in politics, as manifested in the virtual nullification by one department of the government of a law of Congress, and urged Friends to teach the principles of total abstinence, to oppose license in every form, to urge the extension of local option legislation, and to impress upon representatives in Congress that the sobriety and morality of the people should be their first consideration.

A minute was adopted by the meeting expressing its appreciation of the presence of ministering Friends from other yearly meetings, and their words of counsel and encouragement. The visitors spoke with gratitude of the many kindnesses bestowed upon them, and gave thanks from the fullness of their hearts for the strength that had come to them through this spiritual contact with other lives, and the daily manifestation of the Divine Presence in the midst. Under the consciousness of this presence the meeting adjourned to convene next year, in joint session, if permitted by Infinite Wisdom.

A source of strength during the week was the devotional service held each morning from 9.15 to 9.45, and on Fifth-day evening. To these the young were specially invited, and were encouraged to give expression to helpful thoughts that might arise within them. With a few exceptions ministers old in the work restrained themselves from extended communications, and many brief but living testimonies were presented. On Fifth-day evening Margaretta Walton spoke beautifully to the young, urging them to dedicate themselves now to the Father's work, and assuring them of the strength that will be given to surmount all obstacles, and of the inward peace that is the sure reward of victory. E. L.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS.

1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 47.—ELEVENTH MONTH 19.

FALL OF ISRAEL.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Hear this, O ye that would swallow up the needy, and cause the poor of the land to fail. . . . Surely I will never forget any of their works.—

Amos, viii., 4, 7.

Scripture Reading, II. Kings, xvii., 1-41.

THE reign of Jeroboam II. in Israel was distinguished by the appearance of a new order of prophet. Those who had preceded this period had proclaimed the unity of their god, indeed; but it was simply that of their tribal god. Jehovah had been a Hebrew god; he had no special interest in Moabites or Ammonites, in Syrians or Assyrians, except as they were concerned in the affairs of the chosen people. The prophets of the earlier time had insisted on purity of ceremonial worship. The followers of Jehovah must not introduce the rites of Baal-worship, nor the sacrifices appropriate to Chemosh or Ammon; but the ceremonial was essential. The distinctively Hebrew forms must be lived up to, or Jehovah would not be content. Righteousness had been demanded by the prophets of every generation; but righteousness had been simply one of the means of winning favor with God; the moral life had been in large measure merely obedience to an outward law. Not that higher visions of the greatness of God, of the uselessness of mere form, of the beauty of holiness, had not appeared to many; but the total effect of the messages of the earlier prophets had not included the infinite nature of God, nor his universal fatherhood. In Amos and Hosea, and many who carried on their labors, this new note was sounded. "Unlike the earlier prophets, rejecting political intrigue and force, they depended entirely upon the truth of their words for their acceptance. At the same time they did not appeal to the fanaticism of the masses. . . . Their demands were so unfamiliar, and the principles which they annunciated so different from those generally accepted, that they were at first regarded only with suspicion." (Kent.) They preached the universal supremacy of God, the impossibility of purchasing his favor by formal worship, the necessity for personal righteousness from within.

Amos was a herdsman of Judah. His writings show that he had probably traveled and had wide acquaintance with social and political conditions in the nations surrounding Israel (Amos, chaps. 1 and 2). The facts that we gather concerning him indicate that a considerable degree of education and culture was common even among the peasantry. He was probably the first of the prophets to commit his message to writing—a practice probably due in part to the difficulties and dangers of oral presentation under the despotic sway of the later kings.

Although the house of Amos was in Judah, his message was associated wholly with the court of Israel. His words, skillfully introduced by condemnation of the sins of the enemies of Israel, constituted a stern rebuke to the luxury and vice of the court, the pollution of justice at its fountain-head, and a clear-cut demand for obedience to the fundamental laws of right written in men's hearts. He had little influence or following. He seems, indeed, to have been looked upon with contempt, so that the chief priest felt it necessary to do no more than to advise him to run away home and not trouble him any more (Amos vii., 12, 13). This advice the prophet seems to have followed, and it is probable that after his return to Judah he arranged and wrote down his prophecies for future generations.

Hosea was an Israelite who dwelt in one of the cities, if we may judge from his reference to city life. In general, his message was the same as that of Amos, though its form was influenced by his personal character and experience. Moreover, he added to a clear vision of the stern punishments sure to follow upon the wickedness of his people a strong and abiding sense of God's love. More than any other down to the time of Jesus was this characteristic of Hosea.

The Judean contemporary of Jeroboam II. during the most of his reign was Uzziah (or Azariah). We will return to the history of Judah, after noting the decline and fall of Israel. After the death of Jeroboam II. (740 B.C.), the great empire which he had built up fell to pieces with a promptness which showed the weakness of its foundations. Only his personal vigor had held it together. Of the six kings of Israel who followed him, four were assassinated. Zechariah, son of Jeroboam II., was slain by conspirators, and the chief of them, who seized the throne, was in turn slain by Menahem, military governor of Tirzah. His weakness is shown by the fact that he impoverished his country to pay a large sum for the favor of the Assyrian monarch, Tiglath-Pileser III. (Pul—II. Kings xv., 19, 20), in order to strengthen his authority. This great conqueror had already subdued the countries to the north of Israel, and had even threatened Judah. Menahem's son was dethroned by an uprising led by those opposed to the Assyrian alliance. A coalition was formed against Assyria by the new king, Pekah, which included King Rezon of Damascus and some of the Philistine cities. They attempted to force Judah to join them, besieging the king in his capital. But the Assyrian king, by a series of rapid campaigns, defeated and entirely subjugated the territory of the coalition. Pekah was slain, and Hoshea, a creature of the Assyrian king, replaced him. On the death of the Assyrian (727 B.C.), hope of help from Egypt brought about a last revolt. A change of dynasty placed the king of Ethiopia (Shabak, or "So"—II. Kings, xvii., 4) on the throne of Egypt, and he promised aid against Assyria. His promises proved of no avail. Shalmaneser IV., the new king of Assyria, was upon Israel before help could arrive, the country was overrun, and, after a long siege of three years, Samaria was captured (722 B. C.) by Sargon, successor to Shalmaneser. The city was plundered. Thousands of the leading inhabitants of Israel were carried away to Assyria, where they were made into colonies, while they were replaced by a mixed multitude from Assyria, Babylon, and Arabia. These in time adopted the god and the ceremony of Israel and became the Samaritans. But the kingdom of Israel was at an end.

VISITS TO DOUKHOBOR VILLAGES.

Job S. Gidley, in the Friend, Philadelphia.

ON Seventh-day morning, the 5th of the Eighth month, we visited the two villages on the Swan River, which we had passed by on the previous day. One of these was near to the ford, the other was a mile or more further up the stream, but on the same side. To save two or three miles' drive for our horses, we had sent word the day before to the people living at the latter place that we proposed, the next day, to pass over the trail on the south side of their village, and that we would be pleased to have them come and meet us if they desired to do so. Having made a satisfactory visit at the village near the ford, we proceeded on our way up the hills, through the "brush," for a mile or more, where we saw a few Doukhobor men and women on the trail who had come to meet us.

They turned and followed us. When we reached the top of the hill, in sight of the open prairie, which is at the south of the village referred to, we saw a fine company of Doukhobor men and women, standing together in the bright sunshine, all dressed in their best attire. When we got within hearing distance we found that they were chanting a plaintive melody. It was truly an impressive sight.

When we reached them they soon ceased singing, and a sweet, solemn silence ensued, which was broken by a supplication by E. H. V., this being followed by testimonies, which were listened to with close attention.

One must be void of feeling not to be touched by such a scene. Here was a meeting for worship held upon the prairie, under the canopy of heaven, where the Dispenser of our manifold blessings seemed near at hand. It brought to mind thoughts of the simple way in which the early Christians performed their worship.

After our meeting was over, a few of the women went to their village to get something for us, presenting a nice handkerchief to E. H. V. and another to myself. As we took leave of them they began again singing one of their Russian psalms.

We thought to stop on our way from this place to Fort Pelly, and feed our horses and partake of refreshments, but, it being very dry, there was no suitable place to get water for ourselves and horses, so we made no halt before reaching Pelly, about the middle of the afternoon, tired and hungry, having ridden about thirty miles, according to the driver's estimate, the longest continuous journey that we took.

We stopped this time at E. A. W. R. McKenzie's, whose daughter, about twelve years of age, soon had a bountiful luncheon prepared for us, by which we were greatly refreshed.

After resting a little we left for the Assiniboine River, about half a mile away, where we were so much delayed on our outward journey. The ford was soon reached and crossed in safety, and, after a drive of about two hours, we reached the village near White Sand River, visited on the 1st instant. Here we saw fields of rye, oats, and barley, all looking well. The next morning, after having had a religious opportunity with the people, we bade them an affectionate farewell, not knowing whether we would ever meet them again. Some of them, however, went with us to the next village, where we took our mid-day lunch, and had the second meeting of the day.

Here we saw Nastasia Verigin, who told us that she had three sons who have been exiles in Siberia for several years. She is eighty-three years of age. She pleaded with us to do all in our power to have these exiles liberated, that they might return to their people. Judging from their pictures, which were shown us, these looked as if they might be numbered among the best of this long-persecuted people. We saw the wife and two daughters of one of them, and fine-looking people they were. The daughters were nearly grown to womanhood. While sitting in their house, in silent waiting among them, just before leaving, E. H. V. appeared in supplication, craving that the Most High would soften the heart of the Czar to let these people go, for vain is the help of man. The Doukhobors were also encouraged to put their faith and hope in God, and to remember that if "ye have faith, even as a grain of mustard seed, ye may say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove."

Before leaving this house, while we were seated on the piazza in the sunlight, a half-dozen little Doukhobor boys, whose ages ranged from five to seven years, stood before us, and each in turn recited a Russian psalm, after which I showed each how to count ten in English, using his fingers as counters. A few minutes later each one came to me and counted in the same way without making a single mistake.

I hardly expected to see a piazza attached to a log house, but we saw quite a number of them in different places. This house, taken throughout, was the best arranged and best finished of any that we saw. It even had a good cellar under one end, about ten by fifteen feet, and six or seven feet in depth. This was the only cellar seen under any of their houses.

After visiting the next camp, a mile or a little more further towards the west, and holding a meeting with the people, we took a circuitous route towards the east and south, re-crossed White Sand River by the bridge, traveled a long distance, and reached the largest village of Doukhobors, north of Yorkton, which is sometimes called "Winter Quarters." Here we found about six hundred people.

A considerable number collected together on our arrival, in the west part of their camp, where we held a meeting that was felt to be a tendering season of Divine favor.

We then proceeded to the east side of their village, where we met the patriarch of the Doukhobors, John Machortoff, who told us that in his youth he saw two Friends in Russia. He took supper with us, in the nurse's tent.

In the evening there was another meeting, which was even larger than the one held in the afternoon, it being the fifth meeting held during the day. E. H. V., in her supplication at the last meeting, rendered thanksgiving for the manifold favors of the day.

After visiting all the other camps, save one, on White Sand River, and holding a meeting at each village, we reached Yorkton late Fifth-day evening, the 10th of the Eighth month.

On Seventh-day, the 12th, we left Yorkton for Good Spirit Lake, at the north and east of which are seven villages of Doukhobors; Herbert P. Archer, one of the committee appointed by the Canadian government, accompanying us. We reached the first village, some thirty miles or more from Yorkton, late in the afternoon, and spent the night there. The next day we visited and held meetings in four villages, then drove about a mile further north, where lived Robert Buchanan and his wife, who are much interested in the Doukhobors. One of our drivers had formerly lived here, and recommended it as an excellent place for us to spend the night, which we found to be true on accepting their kind invitation to remain with them. Learning of a village about a mile to the north of this place, as the sun was still above the western horizon, I wandered off toward the Doukhobor camp. As I passed alone around among their houses and tents, although I could not understand much of their language, yet by a few simple words and signs I found that they were in Halifax last winter, and that they recognized me.

One man invited me to stay all night with him. This he did by laying his head in his hand, inclining his body and pointing toward his tent. I thanked him, and replied that we would visit them on the morrow.

In the morning Robert Buchanan started for his hay field, but his wife went with us to the village already alluded to, and I noticed that she was gladly welcomed among the Doukhobors. After holding a meeting at this village we visited the other two, where we also held meetings, and returned to Robert Buchanan's.

On Third-day morning we turned our faces homeward, stopping at a farmer's by the name of Hutchinson, who formerly lived in England, and is a member of the Society of Friends. His family consists of a wife and three children, and a young Doukhobor woman in their employ.

This farmer has a nice garden, and succeeds in raising an early variety of sweet corn. We saw some nearly ready for the table. This was the only corn of any considerable size seen north of Yorkton.

We reached Yorkton before nightfall, having been away four days.

Although the Doukhobors have been seriously handicapped in having so little to do with, they have nevertheless made an excellent beginning, and one is greatly impressed by seeing what they have accomplished in building their houses, sawing their lumber (by hand), making bricks, plowing their lands, cutting and stacking their hay, and in attending to various other duties. They are a peculiar people, worthy of the favorable consideration of every lover of peace and goodwill in our land. Doubtless there will be suffering among them this winter, unless they receive assistance from those who are charitably inclined.

Their needs are many and various. Their houses were unfinished, most of them lacking windows. Very few families are supplied with any kind of artificial light. A supply of other food than bread would benefit them greatly.

I see no reason why they will not be able to succeed in the home of their adoption, if they are carried safely through one or two winters by the assistance of those who are interested in their welfare.

A RECENT observer has noted that as a religion (that is, a denomination) becomes older it tends to become more careful as to its orthodoxy, and less careful as to its morality. In other words, it becomes more careful to have a correct formula. A denomination like Friends, which is now well into its third century of existence, needs to consider this statement, and to see to it that it be careful on the one hand to have firm hold on Truth, and, on the other, to let the natural result of its faith show itself in right living. A distinction has been made between religion and morality; but either without the other is weak and ineffective.—[The Interchange, Dr. R. H. Thomas, Baltimore.]

36

SELF-CONTROL.—We know of a man who bought, at a low price, a blood horse, because the animal was so much in the habit of balking as to be useless. The buyer was noted for his great firmness and self-control, qualities whose temper the horse severely tried, as he was driven to the farm, some twenty-five miles distant. Horse and man were twenty-four hours traveling those twenty-five miles, but not a word of anger, not a stroke of the whip, did the horse receive. Hundreds of times he balked, and was met with a patient firmness, which at last, conquered. The horse never balked after that memorable drive. The man did not take a city, but he captured a horse by ruling his own spirit.—[People's Comrade.]

36

WHENEVER we yield ourselves obediently to the true law, a higher principle of order enters our life; we rise out of childish weakness, out of animalism and evil; we are renewed and transformed into children of light; we become conscious of a steady upward tendency, and of a godlike and immortal quality.—Charles G. Ames.

36

AFFECTION is a kind of moral gymnasium, in which the disciples of Christ are trained to robust exercise, hardy exertion, and severe conflict.—Hannah More.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, ELEVENTH MONTH 11, 1899.

REMEMBRANCE OF THE CIVIL WAR.

IN defense and attempted justification of wars in our own time the example of the Civil War of 1861-65 is not unseldom cited. The right and wrong of that conflict, the fact that the southern arms were identified with the institution of slavery, and that their triumph would have meant the destruction of the national unity, are earnestly brought forward.

Those who would desire to justify wars of aggression in the time in which we are living will admit, no doubt, that the conditions which existed in 1861 were very different indeed from those that existed in 1898. And they would be obliged to admit also, we should say, that the experience of the American people in 1861-65 was such as should have made them determine never to tolerate proposals of aggressive warfare. The Civil War was such a struggle as the world had not seen. It was bloody and destructive beyond all previous experience. It inflicted wounds that even yet are unhealed, and caused loss and waste which have never yet been made good. In 1865, when the flag of the United States was formally replaced on Fort Sumter, at Charleston, Henry Ward Beecher, in his oration, spoke of the war thus:

"The soil has drunk blood and is glutted. Millions mourn for myriads slain, or, envying the dead, pray for oblivion. Towns and villages have been razed. Fruitful fields have been turned back to wilderness. It came to pass as the prophet had said: 'The sun was turned to darkness and the moon to blood.' The course of the law was ended. The sword sat chief magistrate in half the nation; industry was paralyzed; morals corrupted; the public weal invaded by rapine and anarchy; whole States were ravaged by avenging armies. The world was amazed. The earth reeled."

These are terrible words. They are so terrible that they seem as if it were not possible they could be true. Nevertheless they are true. It is a just description. The language is exact. It is because many who saw the war are dead, or because the impression it made on them has become less vivid; it is because the generation that has grown up since 1865 cannot know as their fathers did the reality of the case; that now the Civil War is lightly looked back to, and its character and proportions are unappreciated. In 1865, the return of Peace was hailed with joy that cannot be described. Even in the South, where the cause for which the white people had contended was lost, there was a sense of relief that the frightful devastation had ended, and in the North, only the tragedy of the President's assassination tempered the universal gladness. Any one who would then have said that before the century was out the country would be taught that war was not an undesirable thing, and that it should be considered the first duty of the people to arm and drill as soldiers, would have been thought to have lost his senses.

Is it, then, that men learn nothing by experience? Have we in the United States not learned any lesson from the Civil War? Were its pains and wounds not a lesson to be remembered, but only to be forgotten?

THE articles by Howard M. Jenkins on English Friends are concluded, but pertinent questions relating to the subject will be cheerfully answered through the INTELLIGENCER, so far as we are able to do so.

H. M. Jenkins has in hand some half dozen articles on special visits or experiences in England which he did not find time to write of in detail, in his letters sent at the time. The first of these, "A Drive to Warwick," appears this week, and the others will follow. When they are completed, he thinks he will have exhausted the list of subjects which he has had in mind relating to his visit abroad.

THE "race" sympathies, of which we have had so much, have not prevented this abominable war in South Africa, where the so-called "Anglo-Saxons" are fighting another branch of the Teutonic stock. Something more than race sympathy is needed to civilize the world—the tie of Christian brotherhood.

BIRTHS.

TYSON.—In Philadelphia, Ninth month 6, 1899, to Charles B. and Marion B. Tyson, a son, who is named Charles Mortimer Tyson.

MARRIAGES.

PANCOAST—WHITEHEAD.—Tenth month 18, 1899, at the home of the bride's parents, in West Philadelphia, L. Bertha Whitehead, and Edwin A. Pancoast, of Mickleton, N. J.

DEATHS.

DAVIS.—Suddenly, Ninth month 11, 1899, Alice J. L., wife of Ellwood Davis, of Edgewater Park, N. J., aged 50 years; a member of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting. A beloved and loving wife and mother, whose loss is keenly felt. * * *

McALISTER.—Tenth month 10, 1899, Alfred S. McAlister, son of James and Elizabeth N. McAlister, and grandson of Elwood and Ann Eliza Borton, in the 31st year of his age; a valued member of Wilmington Meeting, Delaware, and much interested in First-day school work.

It is with a sense of great loss that we record the decease of this dear young Friend. After two years of declining health the Heavenly Father has seen fit to remove him from "works to reward," in the prime of his manhood and usefulness.

He was ever ready and willing to do what his hands found to do, and very early became interested in the work of the First-day school—later, and for several years, he was a faithful and conscientious superintendent.

He was equally interested in other lines of work in our Society, helping to share the labors of these with an earnestness of spirit that gave evidence his heart was in the work, and with a desire to be found serving in the Master's vineyard. "He hath done what he could." May others, by his example, be stimulated to greater service! With the assurance that he has passed to the better, holier life beyond, may we be able to say, "Thy will, O Lord, be done." F.

HEACOCK.—Tenth month 30, 1899, Roy Antrim, son of Barclay B. and the late Deborah S. Heacock, aged 23 years, 9 months, 6 days; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

KNIGHT.—In Carversville, Pa., Tenth month 29, 1899, Alfred Knight, aged 65 years, son of the late Charles and Mary Ann Cooper Knight, of Newtown, Pa.

PANCOAST.—In Camden, N. J., Eleventh month 4, 1899, Dillwyn Parrish Pancoast, M.D., aged 62 years. Interment at Mullica Hill Friends' ground.

SHOEMAKER.—Eleventh month 4, 1899, Charlotte W., widow of Benjamin A. Shoemaker, in her 86th year; a member of the Monthly Meeting held at Green Street, Philadelphia.

DOUKHOBOR REPORT.

WE have received some further contributions to the Fund; they are acknowledged below. In this connection we would mention that sums reaching us later in the week than Third-day morning cannot be acknowledged in the issue of that week.

We have handed over to the Philadelphia Friends who are forwarding supplies for the sick and children, $250 additional. As already said, the funds received will, for the present, be devoted to this object.

THE "INTELLIGENCER" FUND.

Abington Friend,	$100.00
Collections by David Ferris (see list below),	18.00
A Friend, Philadelphia,	100.00
"Leaflet Fund,"	12.00
R. H.,	2.50
A. E. A.,	2.00
Cash, "to assist Doukhobors,"	5.00
T. H. S., Philadelphia,	5.00
A. B., Philadelphia,	5.00

Total, $249.50
Reported previously, 323.50

Total, $573.00
Paid for supplies for sick and children, $550.00

In hand, $23.00

COLLECTIONS, WILMINGTON MONTHLY MEETING.

David Ferris desires to acknowledge the following collections in Wilmington Monthly Meeting for the Doukhobor Fund:

J. W. H. Watson,	$10.00
Eli Hilles,	2.00
Edw. Bringhurst,	5.00
J. N. Gawthrop,	1.00
Total,	$18.00

Wilson Sturge, of Birmingham, who had been very helpful in connection with the Friends' aid to those Doukhobors who settled last year in Cyprus (subsequently removing to Canada), died on shipboard, near Malta, on his way home, on the 4th of last month. He was the son of Charles Sturge, who was Mayor of Birmingham in 1862-3, and had been at one period in the British Consular service. He was in his 66th year. His labors in Cyprus were highly appreciated; the Doukhobors spoke of him, in the Russian style, as "little grandfather,"—"little" being with them a term of endearment.

Mary Ann Marriage-Allen says: "Wilson Sturge was greatly disappointed that the Doukhobors could not stay in Cyprus. Friends had done so much in procuring land for them, and he had superintended the house-building and farming operations, distribution of food, etc.; but their constant illness and great mortality convinced him that their stay was impossible."

EXCURSION DAYS IN ENGLAND.

I.

A DRIVE TO WARWICK.

WE had thought—my kind entertainer, Benjamin Gooch, of Ettington, and myself—that we should start at half-past ten, but it was more than an hour later, in fact 11.45, when we left the door of our friend William B. Gibbins—near by—and drove down the avenue, under the old trees, into the Warwick road. At Benjamin's insistence I had taken the place of honor on the trap, the seat beside Thomas the coachman, and my friend mounted on the seat behind. "Charley," the lively square-trotting bay horse, shook his head and set off with as much spirit as if he shared the anticipated pleasure of the trip.

It is just about eleven miles from Ettington to Warwick. You descend the range of low hills on which the village stands, and then you have nearly ten miles of almost level road through one of the finest sections of Warwickshire. So Charley never gave up or seriously slackened his steady trot, mile after mile, as we covered the ground at the rate of nearly nine miles an hour. The sun shone pleasantly, the fitful showers of the preceding few days seemed to be over, and we said to one another—all except Charley—"What a lovely day for the drive!" As for the horse, indeed, he was a good deal busied with the flies, for though there are practically no flies in England in-doors, (I nowhere saw a window- or door-screen), there are some in the open air, in summer, and Charley resented their attacks upon him most distinctly. His tail had been "banged," but not "docked"; "Mr. Gibbins won't have the 'orses docked," said Thomas. "He is right, very right," I replied; "excellent Mr. Gibbins!"

The wheat was in the stack, as we went by the fields and farm-steads. There are no barns in England of our sort, (I mean southeastern Pennsylvania), large enough to hold the crops of the year. The wheat is placed by the barn and stables in round stacks, and the hay mostly in long "ricks." These are covered with straw thatch—so well covered that I judge no one amongst us, now, has the art of placing the thatch so closely, neatly, and securely. There is a wide difference between English farming and ours, on account of the different climate. The winter in England is mild compared with ours. It is not necessary to house the stock so long or so closely. The careful provision for many weeks of frozen ground, and possibly severe storms, is scarcely needed at all. It is rather surprising to be told that even in the Lake Region, in north-western England, elevated and mountainous as it is, and so far north of our latitude, the coaching horses of the summer "season" are turned loose in the autumn (not fall; the word is considered quite odd in England), to run on the "fells"—mountains—till spring, very little attention being given them, or feed provided for them, other than the pasture they find. (The sheep also feed over the fells, continuously, and it is usual to consider a flock of a given size as being permanently attached to each tract of the mountain land.)

The road is good; it is stoned, of course, a

"turnpike," as we would say, but as the word turnpike originally meant the long swinging bar, or "pike," which is closed in order to make the traveler stop and pay his toll, it is evident that it would not apply to a road on which no toll is taken. This road to Warwick is well kept, though not so good as some I had seen. It is lined with hedges, some trim and neat, some rather irregular and broken, making the leap easier for the huntsmen. "Yes, it's a great country for hunting," said Thomas; "and they ride along the footpaths if they like, so the paths can't be kept nice." I cannot quite get a word to describe the face of the country; it is not flat, nor is it low; it is not meadows, and it can hardly be called rolling; but it is nearly level, and has the air of rural beauty and comfort to a degree that few parts of England that I have seen can equal. It is the country of the Avon (A-von, not Av-on) and as we approach Warwick we shall see the pretty river winding on our left, and shall cross it by a substantial stone bridge (there are no others than stone ones in England, unless it be that poor old swinging iron one over the Tweed, at Dryburgh Abbey), before we reach Warwick.

There are fine trees all along, many oaks, some poplars rising aloft, but especially tall and stately elms; these are so plentiful that there is a local name for them, "Warwickshire weeds." Except in the parks of the rich people, however, there are no woods, no forests, no "belts" of "timber"; the trees rise out of the hedgerows, stand beside the road, and gather about the houses. Sometimes there is an avenue of them, and Benjamin Gooch pointed out where a severe wind-storm,—almost one of our cyclones, on a small scale,—had leveled and ruined such a double row of splendid trees, a year or two ago.

The road on which we are driving is the great north and south road of the region, down—behind us—to Banbury, up—ahead of us—to Warwick, Kenilworth, and Coventry. We are in the midst of old battle-fields; on the right hand may be plainly seen Edgehill, and the place on it where the first battle of the Civil War was fought, in 1642. Backward, a few miles, is Evesham (Eve-sham), where Simon de Montfort, that giant figure in mediæval English history, was defeated and slain in the battle with Edward I., in 1265, and where, in the old abbey, he was buried. Over this road have marched the armies of the contending factions in the Wars of the Roses,—for the town we aim at was the home of Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick, "the Kingmaker," who fought first for Edward IV., the last Yorkist, and then for Henry VI., the last Lancastrian, and who fell in the fierce battle at Barnet, in 1471.

We pass through villages typically English. Here is Wellesbourne-Hastings, and in a little open space stands a spreading oak tree, under whose branches Joseph Arch, the agricultural laborers' leader, now a member of the House of Commons, called the men together a few years ago for consultation over their depressed condition. On the left hand, across the fields a little way, but not plainly in view, is Charlecote, the home of the Lucys, and of that Sir Thomas Lucy who is said (said, mind) to have judged Shakespeare on the charge of deer-killing. Farther on, in a loop of the Avon, and just before we reach the bridge over it, is Barford, where Joseph Arch, M.P., lives,—an old man, now, and perhaps not long to sit at Westminster. And a mile or so farther, the road from Stratford-on-Avon, a few miles south-west, comes up and joins ours.

The clocks struck one as Charley broke his square trot, at last, into a walk, and drew us bravely up the sharp hill by the West Gate, into Warwick. "I thought we'd do it in about an hour and a quarter," said Thomas. Over the arch of the West Gate sits the old chapel, now used in connection with the "Leycester Hospital," but a good deal older than that institution, though it dates from 1571, in the days of Queen Elizabeth, half a century before George Fox was born.

Would any one ask, "Why drive from Ettington to Warwick?" I hope not. But if they should, the answer is ready—for the drive itself and to see Warwick, and to call on Mary Radley. We got out at her house, and vainly rang the bell. Thomas went on to put up Charley and the trap at the Warwick Arms, and to be ready to return at 6.30. We vainly rang the bell, I say, for Mary Radley was out, but we inquired and left word for her in the little shop opposite, where the woman in charge showed her kindly interest in our visit.

Then we set off for the castle. It is one of the finest, in use as a residence, in all England, and, for a shilling, you may see the court-yards, etc., and the show-rooms. Benjamin and I paid the charge, got our tickets, entered the driveway hewn from solid rock, passed through the double gateway between the huge Cæsar's Tower and the almost-as-high Guy's Tower, and were in the inner court-yard. Then with others we were admitted to the state apartments, and shown through—very intelligently and civilly—by the person appointed to that service. We saw the pictures,—there are some by Rubens, and some by Van Dyck, and a Rembrandt,—the family relics, Cromwell's helmet, arms and armor without number, rare old tapestry, the splendid inlaid table of the gilt drawing-room, and the fine Venetian mirror of the cedar drawing-room. The rooms, en suite, extend 330 feet, and the windows look out on the Avon peacefully flowing sixty feet below. Into the great hall we went last, and as we passed out could not but remember the ruined fortunes of the present Earl of Warwick, for his old castle and other property is now administered as a bankrupt estate for the protection of the inheritance rights of his son. The Countess of Warwick is a brilliant and conspicuous "London Society" woman; there is a fine full-length portrait of her by Carolus Duran, the great French portrait painter, in one of the rooms, and the countenance did not seem, I thought, to contradict the stories of her social ambition.

We went down to the great bridge over the Avon. A loaded coach from Leamington drove by, the guard sounding his horn. From the bridge, a fine view of the Castle, with its lofty wall and great towers, is had ; this is the usual photograph of it. Then we walked along the river bank, by quaint old houses, to the site of the old mill, which stood here directly under the Castle walls, and which furnished bread, we may be sure, to Warwick the King-maker, and to many others within the Castle, before and after, for "glory," after all, is dependent upon bread.

And from the old mill we went to the old church of St. Mary's. It crowns the hill in the centre of the town, and its tower may be seen from all the country round. Benjamin went up into the tower for the view ; I went into the church itself, and the chapels, especially the Beauchamp Chapel, where Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, who died 1499,—seven years after the first American voyage of Columbus,—has a famous tomb, and where Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, Queen Elizabeth's favorite, also has a splendid tomb, and on top of it he and his last wife, Lettice, lie side by side in effigy. Who would think, seeing the reposeful marble figures, that he is believed to have connived at the death of his first wife, Amy Robsart, over at Cumnor Hall, in Berkshire (in hope to marry the Queen), and that Lettice, who lies here so sweetly beside him, is believed to have poisoned him, because of her infatuation for Christopher Blount ?

But we must get on. Night approaches, and we have eleven miles back to Ettington. We went to the Leicester Hospital (which is not a hospital, in our sense of the word, but a home for twelve old soldiers), and then we crossed the street to Mary Radley's. Tea was spread for us, and we sat and chatted with her, and with other callers. Her house is in front of the Friends' meeting-house, and of the old burying-ground, in which lies the dust of William Dewsbury, who was imprisoned at Warwick, for conscience' sake, for eighteen years, in the time of the early Friends, part of the time in a horrid dungeon.

Our call was quite too short ; our dear friend is most hospitable to visiting Friends ; scores of them come to her door, from America, every year, and she receives them all with a welcome not to be forgotten. She is interested in the history of the Society, and very familiar with it ; she is interested also in genealogy, and knows the relationships of most of the Friends in England. Benjamin and I were obliged, presently, to say that we must go, and Thomas came with the trap, Charley as eager to get home as he had been eager to get to Warwick. And we drove back at the same gait we went, except that we had to go more slowly in mounting the Ettington hills, so that it was a little past eight when we drove up under the trees to William Gibbins's door. Dinner was on the table, and William is a host not to be denied—though I must say Benjamin did excuse himself. So we cheerfully chatted at the table, with our host and his other guests, young cousins from London, and gave them our tale of the pleasures of the day's drive to Warwick.

H. M. J.

COMMISSIONER William A. Jones, of the United States Indian Bureau, after careful study, announces that a full-blooded Indian has never developed insanity.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

EASTON AND GRANVILLE HALF-YEAR MEETING.

As we are always interested in hearing accounts of the various quarterly and half-year meetings, through the columns of the INTELLIGENCER, I thought it might be of interest to some to have a brief account of Easton and Granville Half-Year Meeting. It opened on the afternoon of Third-day, the 24th of Tenth month, with meeting of Ministers and Elders, held at North Easton. Only a few of the members were present, owing to illness of themselves or families.

We were made glad by the presence of our friend, Isaac Wilson, whose encouraging testimony we trust may long remain with us.

Fourth-day, the 25th, meeting assembled at Easton in the old-time meeting-house, where was held the one-hundredth anniversary of its erection, 25th of Twelfth month, 1887. (An account of which may be found in INTELLIGENCER, Second month, 1888.) Meeting somewhat larger than usual in recent times, many coming from other meetings, and many interested ones from outside our own fold. We were again refreshed by an hour's loving counsel from I. W., after which we proceeded with the business coming from our four monthly meetings, Saratoga, Pittstown, Granville, and Easton. A few Friends left timely remarks for our consideration, upon topics which had claimed our attention ; then adjourned.

The next hour was spent in social mingling, and in serving and partaking of refreshments. Our Young Friends' Association had arranged for a meeting at this time, the subject to be considered, Peace and Arbitration, as befitting these troublous times. An original paper, by Phebe A. Hoag, opened the order of exercises. It was highly approved, and a lively discussion followed, evincing a depth of thought and feeling that comes from true conviction.

Interesting and appropriate selections were read, one by Lucy P. Allen, taken from a lecture by Carl Schurz, and two from the Peacemaker, by Abby Thomas and Martha A. Wilbur. The general feeling, as expressed, was that the day had been profitably spent.

Fifth-day, the 26th, we had our usual religious meeting, well attended, where living testimony was given forth from concerned minds, which cannot fail to leave an impress upon the hearts of those convened, thus making us all feel that it was good to have been there.

E. B. W.

The following is a paragraph from the report of the Philanthropic Labor Committee to Baltimore Yearly Meeting :

"For the two greatest English-speaking nations, with their claims to high civilization and Christian enlightenment, to be engaged in mortal combat with weaker or inferior nations, instead of being to all governments and all nations bright examples of toleration, justice, and right, especially at this time in the world's history, is a dark commentary on human reason, revelation, and religion. And this, too, while the representative powers of the nations were engaged upon the grandest plan for the peaceable settlement of national differences that the world of mankind has ever known—that of universal peace, arbitration, and disarmament.”

Richland Monthly Meeting (Pa.), which was held at Stroudsburg on the 3d instant, was a satisfactory occasion. About thirty-five attended, among them Friends from other monthly meetings in Abington Quarter, and Joel Borton, of Woodstown. Joel remained over First-day. The attendance on First-day morning included nearly a hundred persons, and encouragement was felt.

It should have been stated in connection with the report of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, that at the opening of the afternoon session on Second-day, Edward Stabler, Jr., and Elizabeth M. Koser were reappointed clerks, and A. Haviland Hull and Rebecca J. Broomell assistant clerks.

All the quarterly meetings, and Fishing Creek Half-Year Meeting, in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are now drawing the quotas assigned them of the fund for the support of Homes. Caln, Southern, and Fishing Creek have made temporary arrangements for the care of such members as they may have needing Home accommodation.

Friends' Book Association sends us the following correction, received too late for "Friends' Almanac" for 1900:

Flushing Monthly Meeting is now held on the first First-day of the month, after meeting for worship.

At Baltimore Yearly Meeting many Friends noted with pleasure the presence in their midst, at several sessions (even on rainy days), of a faithful member of the meeting, Mary Moore Dixon, now in her ninety-sixth year.

PELHAM M. M. CENTENNIAL.

THE Apostle Paul tenderly entreats, "Let us every one please his neighbor for his good to edification," inciting, by reminding that even Christ "pleased not himself." So we as followers of Christ, have remembered that we have those abroad, who would be interested to hear tidings of our welfare—to glean something more about us, than a knowledge that we live, move, and have a being.

Of late we have been exercised by a time of remembrance, on occasion of our centennial anniversary. In consideration of the adjustment of our allotment, and lack of ability for public entertainment, we have not been able to do otherwise than originate a simple way of our own to commemorate the event.

Pelham Monthly Meeting sends greetings and salutations of Love, in manifestation of Christian fellowship to all whom it may concern; informing, that our Ebenezer has taken the form of a memorial minute upon the pages of Pelham Monthly Meeting Book, which is as follows:

"Being reminded of the fact that Pelham

Monthly Meeting met, as such, for the first time on these grounds, just one hundred years ago, upon fourth-day of Tenth month, 1799, unity of expression was given to record the memory, and thus commemorate our centennial anniversary.

"Through all the vicissitudes of the lights and shadows overcasting our pathway adown the years, we feel to acknowledge the mercy and faithfulness of God. Though in our retrospection we are humbled as we are painfully reminded that the mistakes of our life have been many; and that our zeal has not always been characterized by that all-around wisdom which is best for Society. Still we feel to record the loving kindnesses of our Heavenly Father toward us,—who hath led us all the way—and as we keep close to him, his presence is ever felt to be loving and compassionate; so that we do realize that "Underneath are the everlasting arms." AMELIA R. PAGE.

Ridgeville, Ontario, Canada, Eleventh mo. 1, 1899.

AMBITION EXPRESSED IN WAR.

Address of Professor W. N. Trueblood, Earlham College, Richmond, Ind.

I AM, of course, aware that some hold that ambition is a good and noble passion. But "a tree is known by its fruits," and I call their attention to the fruits of ambition. I point them to the wars of Darius, Cyrus, Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne, Philip, Rollo, Napoleon,—to the ruin of them, to the labor of men's hands destroyed by them, the sustenance of men's lives wasted by them, to the stacks and stacks of human bones that marked their battlefields, till they rotted in the elements—and say to them, these are the fruits of ambition. And they must answer, yes. But they will say it was this same ambition that made these men great; and I will say yes, and their million victims dust. They will say that this ambition is always attended with a rise, and I will say, yes—a rise and a fall; a rise in one direction and a fall in another; a rise in that when it entered men they, indeed, began to rise above the brutes, as well as above one another; a rise in that their huts and caves grew into domed and spired palaces, as we see them to-day; a rise in that their rude tribes and clans expanded into nations and empires, and in that their simple barter developed into a commerce complex as desire and wide as the seas.

But it was attended with a fall, also; a fall from innocence, a fall from rest, a fall into a torment of egoism that brooks no superior and smites everything that stands in its way; a fall into a thirsty, appetitive, jealous, haughty life, that spreads war all around it, pushing everything else down that itself may rise. This ambition, the source of war; an unholy thing instead of a holy; a malicious thing instead of a just; an insubordinate thing instead of an orderly. It would, indeed, clothe the earth with beauty and wealth and power as it does, and it would destroy it all, as it does, the moment it is claimed by another.

THE London authorities have decided upon the novel municipal step of devoting £10,000 to the erection of a building to shelter families whose houses are in progress of disinfection after outbreaks of infectious disease.

LITERARY NOTES.

MANY Philadelphians, as well as a wide circle of others, will be glad to learn that Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will bring out at once Susan I. Lesley's faithful and delightful transcript of New England life, "Recollections of my Mother." The book first saw the light some twenty years ago, being then printed for private circulation only, and has been since twice reprinted, but is now for the first time formally published.

The Life of Charles Francis Adams, Minister to England during the Civil War, has been written by his son, Charles Francis Adams, for the "American Statesmen" series, and will appear soon.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican is a weekly of twelve pages per week. It is an exceptionally "clean" paper—we mean as to sensational news, details of crime, etc. It is one of the most earnest opponents of the war against the Filipino people we know of,—a real advocate of peace and good will among all men. We know of a good many persons to whom its weekly visits have come to be like the old-time visits of the New York Tribune, in Horace Greeley's day, or the Anti-Slavery Standard, in Oliver Johnson's and Aaron Powell's.

The books of Ralph Waldo Trine (New York: T. Y. Crowell & Co.), are having a large sale. "What All the World's A-Seeking" is in its fifteenth thousand; "In Tune with the Infinite," in its sixteenth thousand; "The Greatest Thing Ever Known," in its tenth thousand. The author has written an additional chapter, "Character-Building Thought Power," to be added to "In Tune with the Infinite." He has also published a booklet of forty pages, "Every Living Creature; or, Heart-Training Through the Animal World," in which he urges the importance of the humane instruction of children.

The Enterprise Publishing Company, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has published a sixteen-page pamphlet on the schools and school books of Jacob and Deborah Willetts, who successfully taught for more than forty years at the Nine Partners School, in the town of Washington, Dutchess county, N. Y. There are many persons who recall the work of these two famous teachers, and among the Society of Friends their names are very familiar. The pamphlet is from the pen of Joel Benton, and a copy will be mailed by the publishers upon the receipt of ten cents in two-cent stamps. It has portraits of Jacob and Deborah Willetts.

As evidence pointing to the conclusion that the "war craze" is a real mental disease, a "poem" was published in England a fortnight ago by A. C. Swinburne, dealing with the Transvaal troubles, in which the language was so gross and so violent that it caused a general feeling of shame. William Watson, the poet (English) has written a sort of apology for it, to one of the London journals, in which he says that Swinburne did not have a good theme—that "the assassination of a state, and the strangling of a people, are not heroic themes, and never while the world endures shall they evoke one note of noble song."

The Atlantic Monthly, this month, opens with an article by Booker T. Washington, on "The Case of the Negro," from which we make extracts. His leadership in the affairs of his race is hardly questioned, now, and he speaks therefore as "one having authority." Rollin Lynde Hartt, whose papers on Montana and New England Hill Towns have caused such lively discussions, treats of "The Ohioans" in a similar style. Bradford Torrey furnishes an appreciative tribute to The Attitude of Thoreau toward Nature; how he loved the swamps, the desert, and the wilderness; how true he was to his ideals, and how his work has enriched the world and benefited it.

The agitation in the Church of England over Ritualism is the occasion for two articles in the North American Review, this month. Arthur J. Balfour, the Government leader in the House of Commons, argues against the Ritualists, saying that they injure the standing of the Church, and that the disputes among churchmen over mere details of ceremonial are unseemly; the Earl of Portsmouth argues that the headship of the Church by the Crown, (instead of the Pope), is a most desirable arrangement.

Other notable articles in this number include those by M. de Martens and Seth Low, on the Hague Conference, and a very earnest one by Bernard Lazare, a French publicist, entitled "France at the Parting of the Ways," in which he urges that the supreme lesson of the Dreyfus trial is that liberty is incompatible with the continuance of the "clerico-military oligarchy called the army."

Educational Department.

GEORGE SCHOOL NOTES.

THE regular meeting of the Whittier Society, on the evening of the 21st, was called to order by the president, Maurice Griest, and the minutes were read by the secretary, Bessie K. Johnson. Gilbert Underwood gave a good oration on "The Permanence of our Nation;" recitation, Alice Jarrett. Malcolm Farquhar read an essay on "Independence Day." The paper, containing a number of interesting articles, was read by Horace Way. Scenes from "David Copperfield" were presented by Grace Woodman, James Gilyson, Wallace Sharpless, Maurice Griest, Anna Tyler, and Marguerite Allen.

Young Friends' Association met on the 28th, Mildred Eves president, William Smith secretary. An interesting account of the Doukhobors, prepared by Carrie Atkinson, was read in her absence by Lydia Walton. Ralph Jackson gave some account of the sect called Mennonites. The prominent idea of the meeting was Friends' opposition to war. The question, "Resolved, That the Spanish War was Unnecessary," was very earnestly discussed by Howard Carpenter, Herbert Henrie, Curtis Eves, Ella Gillingham, Thomas Eyre, and Willet Stover. Marian Watson read "A True Story," by Bayard Taylor.

Alfred Crewitt presided at the meeting of the Penn Society, on the 4th, with Bernice Eves as secretary. Cordelia Wilson recited "Bertha's Debut." In an essay, Robert Brown told of the various prominent Industrial Expositions that have been held in the United States. A good edition of the Society paper was well read by Bertha Stover. An oration showing considerable thought was delivered by Russell Hibbs, subject, "Has McKinley's Policy Failed?" Meeting closed with an amusing dialogue, called "An Economical Boomerang"; participants, Emma Sheppard, Willet Stover, Esther Watson, Helen Thomas, Russell Hibbs, and Alfred Crewitt.

Principal Maris was one of the instructors at the Teachers' Institute, Doylestown, on Fifth-day, 2d instant.

George School was represented at the First-day School Association, held at Race street meeting-house, on the 4th, by Professor George H. Nutt and Ella Gillingham.

"Founder's Day," Eleventh month 6th (the anniversary of the opening of the school in 1893), was celebrated by games in the gymnasium and on the grounds, a half-holiday being given for the occasion. * *

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.

On Second-day, the 30th of last month, after morning collection, a brief address was given by Mr. Chamberlain, who for some years has been laboring among the natives of Brazil. His aim has been the introduction of the Bible into that country, and on this subject he spoke with much feeling.

A most instructive and inspiring lecture was given on the 3d instant by Dr. Richard G. Moulton, of the University of Chicago, the well-known editor of "The Modern Reader's Bible." The lecturer took as his subject, "The Literary Study of the Bible," and proceeded to show how such literary study is essential to a real understanding of the Scriptures. Neither devotional reading nor the so-called "Higher Criticism" can reach its greatest value without a thorough knowledge of the literary form of the Bible.

The lecture was thoroughly enjoyed, especially by those who have been studying the New Testament in Pres. Bird-sall's First-day morning Bible Class.

Dr. Day's classes have been especially interested in his recent discovery of a coagulant for the purification of water, by which water before unfit for drink has been rendered perfectly pure and clear. The process is described as wonderful in its simplicity and effectiveness. M. S. H.

ABINGTON SCHOOL NOTES.—The reorganization of the Atlee Literary Society was effected on Tenth month 13. This Society has held no regular meetings since the early part of the year 1896. The officers elected for the ensuing three months were: President, James Young; Vice-President, Eleanor Reese; Secretary, Ruth Styer; Assistant Secretary, Alice Griscom; Treasurer, Elwood Shoemaker; Editor, Anna Hampersoomian. The Society meets every two weeks.

The Seniors have begun the preparation of their theses. This early beginning ensures the early completion of the theses, and the work will therefore in no way interfere with the other preparations for graduation.

The girls residing in the school gave a Hallow E'en sociable to the other students and to the graduates and friends of the institution, on Seventh-day evening last.

A course in stenography and typewriting has been established to meet a demand on the part of a number of pupils. It is under the direction of Frank D. Clifford, formerly with the publishing house of J. B. Lippincott Company, of Philadelphia.

Dr. Emily G. Hunt gave an instructive and interesting lecture here on the afternoon of Tenth month 11. Her subject was "Our Birds."

The number of pupils enrolled to date is 102. There are more who intend to enter later. Before the school year is over it is expected that the enrollment will reach its usual size. This is encouraging, considering the substantial change made in the teaching force of the school last spring.

The Shakespearean entertainment, which is to begin as in past years, just before the Christmas vacation, is in course of preparation.

TEACHERS AT AIKEN.—All our old teachers have returned, the Schofield School Bulletin says, with the exception of Isaac Fisher, a graduate of the Tuskegee School, who is replaced by Walter S. Buchanan, from the same institution.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

HORSHAM, PA.—Horsham Friends' Association met Tenth month 29. The meeting was called to order by the president, William F. Morgan. Anna D. Hallowell opened the exercises by reading an excellent essay entitled "Friends." She gave a short history of Friends, and in closing expressed her sincere desire that something be done to increase our numbers, and also that many of our members be more regular in the attendance of our religious meetings.

"Who Shall Roll the Stone Away?" was the title of a beautiful poem, recited by Mary Webster, which was followed by the reading of a selection, "Plainness of Speech, Behavior, and Apparel," by Hannah M. Parry. The keynote to the article was simplicity. She said, "the dress does not regulate the heart, but the heart the dress."

Silas C. Morris read an interesting paper, in which he compared our Discipline with that of the Baltimore Yearly Meeting. He found the essential points to be very similar, but the Baltimore Discipline treats its different subjects a little more definitely than does our own. In closing he said: "God has given to us the most important principle that was ever given to any people and that is the principle of the guidance of light in the soul. To make these principles known and felt is an obligation resting upon us, and one of the means of attaining to this, letting our light shine, as it were, is through our Young Friends' Association."

Comly Walton, Macre Walton, Jane K. Jarrett, Susan H. Jarrett, and Carrie W. Morgan were appointed to attend the Friends' Association Conference, at Woodstown. Many beautiful sentiments were given, and after a short silence the meeting adjourned. MARTHA M. PARRY, Sec.

NEWTOWN, PA.—The regular meeting of Newtown Friends' Association was held on Fourth-day evening, Eleventh month 1, at the home of Silas and Sarah F. Cary. After a period of silence, the exercises were opened by the president reading the 37th Psalm. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

There being no further business the literary program of the evening was opened by Thomas W. Stapler reading an article on "The Origin and History of the Discipline," written by Joseph Elkinton for The Friend. Friends had no discipline until 1735, or seventy years after the founding of the Society. Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, founded in 1682, appointed a committee in 1703 to collect advices received from George Fox and London Yearly Meeting into a code which was adopted the following year, and enough manuscript copies ordered to supply each quarterly meeting.

The next paper, giving a short "History of the Main Facts of the Pentateuch," prepared by Laura White, was read by Elizabeth S. Kenderdine. The paper gave a brief review of the part of the Bible known as the Pentateuch, also noticing how some of the legendary matter recorded therein resembles the traditions of other peoples. As an appropriate sequel to the paper R. Anna Reeder recited a poem committed in her school-days, whose hero was the great Hebrew leader.

The question, "Give the origin, history, and object of Friends' Association," was answered by Elizabeth G. Stapler. Before answering the question the writer had written to Wm. W. Birdsall, Anna Jenkins Ferris, and Isaac Roberts for information, and received prompt and very satisfactory replies, which were read. All agreed with the writer that the object for which the Association was formed was a serious one, and that the history, discipline, and literature of the Society was sufficient material to form an interesting program, though they did not desire to exclude a live, modern topic from which good lessons may be derived.

Robert Kenderdine next read an article from the American Friend relating the manner in which Friends were connected with the origin of four American universities.

The report of the Executive Committee was next read, giving the program for the next meeting. Delegates appointed to attend the Association conference to be held at Woodstown, N. J., were T. S. Kenderdine, Elizabeth Kenderdine, Thomas W. Stapler, Elizabeth Stapler, and John Stapler. Roll was called for sentiments, and the meeting adjourned to meet Twelfth month 6, at the home of T. S. Kenderdine. A. W.

WESTERN FIRST-DAY SCHOOL UNION.—This was held at London Grove meeting-house, Seventh-day, Tenth month 28, with a large attendance.

Encouraging reports came from eight of the eleven schools in the Union: Hockessin, Horneville, Centre, Mill Creek, West Grove, New Garden, Kennett Square, Doe Run, and London Grove. By invitation, Dr. Joseph S. Walton addressed the afternoon session on "The purposes of First-day School work." He said it is wise to study Bible History in a very considerable way, that we may have a knowledge of the Oriental customs of the people of which the Bible tells; but there is something better than that study; we are getting ready to receive the Great Guest, and should teach the boy and girl in the First-day School all the way up, that this intellectual part is the abode when this Great Guest may appear, and if we "keep our lamps trimmed and burning," we shall be ready to receive Him when He does come.

Interesting and well-rendered exercises, consisting of readings and recitations, were presented by the members of London Grove First-day School.

A discussion upon the "Lesson Leaves" in present use, was a profitable feature.

The next Union will be held the fourth Seventh-day in Fourth month, 1900, at Centre, Delaware. E. P. W.

THIRD HAVEN, MD.—Third Haven Young Friends' Association met on Fourth-day evening, Ninth month 20, at the residence of Henry Shreve. The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and adopted, there followed the reading of an interesting paper, with Matilda J. Bartlett editor; Pauline de W. Bartlett contributing current events.

Elizabeth N. Tylor and Frank A. White, affirmative; Samuel S. Yeo and Anna P. Kemp, negative, composed the two sides for a debate: Resolved—that Friends should proselyte. "Where would the Society of Friends be to-day?" said one of the affirmative, "if George Fox had not proselyted?" "We should give forth the light that is given to us." The other side stated that "George Fox sought to make men good, not Quakers." "We can not proselyte and maintain our dignity."

The question of having the constitution of the Association re-written in a book apart from the minutes was discussed, and when it was agreed that this plan be adopted, a committee, consisting of Matilda Bartlett, Henry Shreve, and Keturah Yeo, was appointed to revise the constitution.

A new departure in the closing exercises proved very interesting. Each member named and located some place—town, city or country—giving an item of interest in connection with the same. After a brief silence the meeting adjourned.

ANNA WHITE, Secretary.

MANSFIELD, N. J.—A meeting of Young Friends' Association was held at the home of Charles Hancock, Tenth month 18, with 27 members present. A committee of five was appointed to nominate new officers, and five persons to serve on the Executive Committee for the ensuing year.

The following were appointed delegates to attend the General Conference at Woodstown on the 18th: G. Frank Harvey Thomas S. Gibbs, Martha E. Gibbs, Ethel Zellely, Amy H. Bowne.

Thomas B. Harvey answered the following question: "Has any other Society suffered persecution as much as Friends for their religious principles?" He could find no record of any other society having been so persecuted. Quite a number of interesting comments were brought forth. The Biography of John Woolman was next given by Ethel Zellely, which was interesting and instructive, encouraging us to lead pure, helpful lives. He visited Mansfield in the year 1764. "The Quaker Widow," by Bayard Taylor, was recited by Mattie and Bertha Taylor, in costumes of Friends.

After a brief silence, we adjourned to meet at George Bowne's, Eleventh month 16. M. E. GIBBS, Sec.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A NOTABLE EPITAPH.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

SOME weeks ago, the INTELLIGENCER published a short article referring to epitaphs, and invited its readers to send copies of any specially beautiful or noteworthy specimens. It also presented at the same time an epitaph copied from the tomb of a young minister of Dublin, Ireland, which was unusually fine in thought and expression.

As an instance of this kind of writing, worthy of remembrance, I send herewith a copy of the inscription on the tombstone of Col. Frederick Taylor, at Longwood, Chester county, Pa. It was written by his brother, Bayard Taylor, and has an especial interest for Friends, because of the connection of the Taylor family with the Society of Friends. Frederick Taylor fell at Gettysburg, and there is a stone on the battle-field, marking the spot where he fell.

To those who remember the sacrifices made by the loyal families of the North to sustain "government by the people," and free the slave,—many of which sacrifices were made by families of Friends—it will no doubt seem as it does to the writer, that in beauty, and pathos, and fidelity to truth, these lines of Bayard Taylor cannot be excelled. They are as follows:

"Youth, with purest promise crowned;
Love, that held him fondly bound;
Pride of soul, untaught to bow;
Noble heart, and fearless brow;
Hand to help, and will to bless;
Old, heroic, tenderness;
Richest life in brain and limb;—
All, he gave, and we gave him."

R.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN ON WAR.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

I notice the saying, attributed to Benjamin Franklin, and printed as a "Memory Gem," in the Old Testament Lessons: "There never was a good war or a bad peace."

Can you tell me where I may find this in his writings?
Tenth month 31. H. S.

[It occurs in a letter from Franklin to Josiah Quincy, dated at Passy (Paris) September 11, 1783,—just after the close of the Revolutionary War. Franklin says in conclusion of the letter:

"But enough of these petty personalities. I quit them to rejoice with you in the peace God has blest us with. . . . We are now friends with England and with all mankind. May we never see another war, for in my opinion there never was a good war or a bad peace."

The letter will be found in Bigelow's Life of Franklin, volume 3, page 235.—EDS.]

FRIENDS' MINISTERS IN ENGLAND.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

I did not observe that H. M. J., in his articles describing the Society in England, stated the number of ministers there were. Can you give me the figures, also the number of Elders and Overseers? B. O. S.

[The number of recorded ministers, as reported to the yearly meeting this year, is 352—209 men, 143 women. This was an increase of 14 over the preceding year. There were 512 Elders,—254 men, 258 women; and 1,164 Overseers,—578 men, 586 women.—EDS.]

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I. MUSEUM AND LIBRARY.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

In the issue of Ninth month 9 there was a "correction" of my letter from the Shinnecock Hills in the issue of the previous week. So far as the name is concerned the correction was right, but where it said that Samuel L. Parrish "was the donor of both" the Art Museum and Library to Southampton, it was a mistake.

Believing as I do that honor should be given to whom honor is due, especially where women are concerned, I wrote to the Librarian for a correct statement, and received from Edward H. Foster, Treasurer of the Rogers Memorial Library Company, the following:

"In reply to your letter in reference to the Rogers Memorial Library in this village, I would state that Miss Harriet J. Rogers gave the sum of $10,000 and valuable real estate to found the same. After the purchase of the site of the building, our summer residents contributed quite a sum, that was put into the structure. About this time the mother of Samuel L. Parrish died, and he and his two sisters gave $5,000 in memory of her, as an endowment fund. Other sums have been given to be invested, and the interest of these, donations that are made each year, and $200 from the Regents' Fund, keep it moving. To Miss Rogers belongs the full credit of laying the foundation of the scheme."

My absence from home and not seeing either the letter or correction until recently accounts for this delay.

ELISA H. SCHOFIELD.

Philadelphia, Eleventh month 1.

THE following letter reached us after school closed and was written on receipt of a set of harness shipped to Colorado: "I can hardly tell you how well pleased I am with the harness. The stock and trimmings, the workmanship and style, leaving nothing to be desired. If that stitching, or the greater part of it, is the work of the Schofield School boys, you are turning out first-class harness-makers. When in need of another harness, you will undoubtedly hear from this part of Colorado again."—[Schofield School Bulletin.]

THE "weather cracks" at the top of the Egyptian obelisk in Central Park, New York city, are becoming more noticeable, and it is said that steps must soon be taken to place it indoors if it is to be preserved in anything like its present good condition.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION LECTURES.

THE University Extension lectures in Philadelphia present an attractive program for the winter. The first lecture was given this week (the 7th instant) by Professor Richard G. Moulton, now of the University of Chicago, at Association Hall. Prof. Moulton was one of the pioneers in this work, and his ability in it has rarely been equalled.

Other courses of lectures to be given include: A course of six, illustrated, by Dr. Frederick H. Sykes, on "English Writers of the Present Era." They will be on Third-day evenings, from Eleventh month 14 to Twelfth month 19, at Griffith Hall, 1420 Chestnut street, at 8 p. m.

An illustrated lecture by Dr. William B. Hale, on "William Morris: Poet and Craftsman," at Association Hall, on the evening of First month 2.

A course of six lectures, illustrated, by Garrett P. Serviss, on "Great Men," at Association Hall, in First and Second months.

A course of six lectures by Professor Edward Howard Griggs, on "The Divine Comedy of Dante," at Griffith Hall, in Second and Third months.

A lecture by Professor Bliss Perry, on "Robert Louis Stevenson," at Association Hall, Fourth month 3.

PHILA. F. D. S. ASSOCIATION.

THE effort to increase the interest in the semi-annual gatherings of this body resulted in a somewhat increased attendance at the meeting on the 4th, at 15th and Race Sts., though there were still many representatives that failed to respond to the roll call. One union, that of Concord, it was observed recorded nearly all of its delegates as being present. The proceedings were full of interest and well repaid those who made the effort to be there.

The morning session was occupied by briefly written reports from all of the Unions, and a verbal one from Fishing Creek, indicating much earnest work being done in most of the schools; a few however need not only fostering care but vigorous help. To the latter class the school at Stroudsburg belongs, where Friendly laborers are so few.

The Lesson Quarterlies came in for a full share of attention, and it is gratifying to note that there seems to be an awakened interest in Bible study.

In the afternoon session was presented an admirable program, which was too full, however, to permit time for the discussion of the many points that should have been emphasized or objected to. The first was an excellent presentation of Lesson No. 48 of our present Quarterly, Old Testament series, and all who witnessed the conduct of the class (volunteers from Girard Avenue School), by Isaac H. Hillborn, and the intelligent replies by the pupils, could not fail to be impressed with the value of these Lessons, when well studied.

Second on the program was the reading, by Cynthia S. Holcomb, of a paper from the Ladies' Home Journal, which treated the subject of the want of success in Sabbath Schools in a manner calculated to arouse thought perhaps, but certainly from a standpoint of inexperience. The reader, however, often introduced bright thoughts of her own, which were suggestive.

The third paper—or rather talk, for the time was very limited,—by Charles Paxson, on "Large Classes of Adults," gave in a general way an illustration of the conduct of the Conference Class at 15th and Race streets, which has been successful for many years in interesting a large number of persons in Scripture Readings and kindred subjects.

The feeling at the close of the meeting was one of encouragement. One Friend observed that "the Association now seems to be taking an upward start," a conclusion which it is hoped will be warranted by its future sessions.

THE prevailing use of electricity has brought about a large increase in fires, owing to crossed wires. Ten years ago there were only sixty-five such fires, and last year there were 958.

SLAG left after the making of steel by the Bessemer process is now being conveted into phsphate for land fertilization.

METEOROLOGICAL SUMMARY FOR NINTH MONTH, 1899.

Mean barometer,	30.081
Highest barometer during the month, 16th,	30.449
Lowest barometer during the month, 12th,	29.7
Mean temperature,	67.2
Highest temperature during the month, 8th,	89.
Lowest temperature during the month, 27th,	45.
Mean of maximum temperatures,	76.2
Mean of minimum temperatures,	58.1
Greatest daily range of temperature, 15th, 16th, 18th,	25.
Least daily range of temperature, 11th,	7.
Mean daily range of temperature,	18.
Mean relative humidity, per cent.,	73.3
Mean temperature of the Dew Point,	56.2
Total precipitation in inches, rain,	3.94
Greatest precipitation in any 24 consecutive hours, 1.38 inches of rain, on the 25th and 26th.
Number of days on which .01 inch or more of rain fell, 9.
Number of clear days 15, fair days 9, cloudy days 6.
Prevailing direction of wind from the South.
Thunder storms on the 3d, 8th, 26th.
Light frost on the 15th in suburban districts.

SENSIBLE TEMPERATURE DATA.

Maximum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 71.5, on 6th.
Minimum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 45, on 27th and 30th.

Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 58.8.

Maximum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 74.5 on 3d.

Minimum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 41 on 30th.

Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 60.8.

Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer for this month, 59.8.

NOTE.—The means of the daily maximum and minimum temperatures, 76.2° and 58.1° respectively, give a monthly mean of 67.2°, which is 2° below the normal for Ninth month, and 4° below the corresponding month of 1898.

The total amount of precipitation for the month is about 1 inch more than the normal. JOHN COMLY, Observer.
Centennial Avenue, Philadelphia, Ninth month 30.

GRANDMA KNITTING.

WHILE she sits beside the window
With her bonny, silver hair,
As a child I watch her needles,
How they clash and glisten there;
Cool the maple swings its shadows,
And the balsam branches croon
Soft and low and sweet and tender,
In the drowsy afternoon—
And Grandma knitting.

When the busy cares are over
And the fret and tumult cease,
And the lull that follows after
Brings a little spell of peace;
In the restful evening shadows
Growing deeper more and more,
In the quiet of the gloaming,
Oft some sweet tune humming o'er,
Sits Grandma knitting.

Round the hearthstone in the winter
While the frosty voices call,
And the firelight's fickle dancing
Weaves its shadows on the wall;
With the old clock ticking ever
To the flicker of the flame,
There's the music of the needles,
And the smile of love the same,—
And Grandma knitting.

This was in the happy years of childhood,
Happy years of long ago;
And the restless feet have wandered
Swift and farther than we know;
Ah! the visions that have vanished
As the sunshine from the hill,
Since I stood there in the twilight
With the voices now so still,—
With Grandma knitting!

Yet I see her still in vision,
 All the sweetness of her smile,
 Looking out across the shadows,
 Creeping eastward all the while;
 See her in her cushioned rocker,
 Sitting by the open door,
 While a band of sunshine slumbers
 In the silence on the floor,—
 And Grandma knitting.

—Benjamin F. Leggett, in Christian Endeavor World.

A CYCLE TOUR IN GERMANY.

B. F. and E. W. Battin (lately teachers in George School, now studying in Germany) contribute the following to the Doylestown (Pa.) Intelligencer, from Jena, Ninth month 8.

A FIVE week's cycling and tramping tour through parts of Germany, Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland has given us a much clearer idea of the administration of the public roads of those countries; and, without our having made any systematic inquiries as to the methods of building and repairing and the cost of maintenance, the impression gained from superficial observation is a satisfactory one.

From Jena our course at first lay northward to Eisleben. We wheeled through Thuringen, at first along the banks of the Saale river; after an hour's ride we went across country from Camburg to Naumburg, another point on the river which in the meantime makes quite a bend. The road was typical of the main Thuringian highway; a well kept, smooth stone roadbed about nine feet in width, so rounded that no water remains in the road; on either side a foot-path of dirt more or less trodden according to the nearness of villiages; then the sodded ditches out side of the foot-paths and finally a row of trees. Throughout Central and Western Germany the roads were built on this plan; they differed in width, state of repair, and grading, and in some places the shade trees were lacking on one or both sides.

These trees are either for shade purposes or are fruit trees, carefully tended, which produce a good revenue for the maintenance of the road. The Lombardy poplar is the most striking of the first class and perhaps the most common; as these poplars are so very slender they are planted close together and consequently with their great height furnish a fair shade except when the sun is directly over the road. Others of the shade trees are the elm, linden, beech, and horse chestnut. One can ride for miles on the sunniest days and be constantly in total or partial shade; and this feature makes touring in the summer months quite pleasant.

The fruit trees, however, presented even greater features of interest, for they furnish not only an excellent shade, but also a fairly regular source of revenue. They belong to the "Kreis," or township, as we would say, and are as carefully tended as the trees in the best kept orchard. One's first thought on seeing them is—Will not the fruit be stolen by those going along? The loss thus is, however, no greater than from private orchards along the roads; and there is, of course, a fine or imprisonment ready for the trespasser here as there is in so many instances in this land of the "Verboten." When the fruit is well advanced towards ripeness an auction is held and the different sections of the roads are knocked down to the highest bidder. Thus the township receives a definite amount and the purchaser picks the fruit and markets it for what he can get. The fruits we observed were cherries, black, red, and ox-hearts, pears, plums of several varieties, and apples. In this latitude, 51 degrees and 52 degrees North, the fruits are later in maturing than in Pennsylvania; and the cherries being picked as we passed. The purchaser erects a cabin or camp in the middle of his section and remains on the spot with his family and force of pickers. The fruit ripens not only slowly but unevenly and it takes six or more weeks to gather in the cherry crop. Although there seemed to be an abundance of fruit it did not prove to be cheap, as we found when we would stop to buy some.

On leaving the Saale river at Camburg we ascended a steep hill, at first not rideable. After an hour of walking and wheeling we reached the plateau, when we had comparatively level ground until within five miles of the river at Naumburg. Then we had a coast down a section of road literally as smooth as a billiard table—five miles of such a grade that friction and gravity balanced each other, and we went speeding along as fast as we could wish and as smoothly as on a toboggan.

But when you strike the towns the roseate hues banish. As much as the country road surpasses ours, so does the average street of the small German town eclipse the worst of wagon-breaking, horse-laming cobblestone pavements of old Philadelphia or New York. The cobbles are more cobbly, and the Belgian blocks more blocky, than anything we can exhibit. It is quite safe to count upon walking through all the towns; but this is no great disadvantage for the tourist, since one needs plenty of time to appreciate the interesting street scenes.

From Naumburg to Eisleben we crossed a small watershed; but both the up and down grades were easy riding. The excellent road continued in the same condition, and the only drawback was that a long period of draught had made the roads dusty. Considering that we were passing over important thoroughfares, we seemed to pass or meet but few vehicles. This may have been due to the busy season of year; and certainly one important reason is this, that easy grades and fine roadbeds permit two to four times as heavy loads as we would make. Not so many trips are made nor so many horses or so much rolling gear required.

THE RIGHT WAY OUT.

New York Evening Post.

"WELL, what else would you do?" we are asked. "Granted that we ought not to have held the Philippines and that we ought not to be at war with our late allies, the fact remains that we are so. Would you back out now? Would you suffer humiliation in the eyes of the world by surrendering to Aguinaldo? Would you haul down the American flag?" The only humiliation in this case lies in the fact that the American republic, with its heritage of devotion to freedom and its grand example of the past, is now engaged in imposing a government upon another people against their consent and is pleading its own wrongful act as its excuse for continuing to do so.

Because we began with a crime against liberty must we go on? Why so?

The people we are fighting are poor and weak. They are but a handful. They are colored men. Even if they were fighting in a bad cause, there would be no glory in conquering them, and therefore no disgrace in ceasing to fight them. But when they are fighting for the right to govern themselves, we are told that we shall be humiliated if we do not go on and kill, burn, and ravage as long as they resist.

What would we do under the present circumstances? We would say to the Filipinos exactly what we said to the Cubans. Our Cuban policy was defined by a joint resolution of Congress in these words:

"That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island [Cuba], except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people."

The resolution was passed by the Senate and House and signed by the President on the 19th of April, 1898. It declared the nation's policy in plain terms as to all the territory involved in the war with Spain. The only reason why the Philippines and Porto Rico were not embraced in its terms was that nobody then contemplated the possession of those islands. If we were not to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over the territory and people that we went to war for, then, a fortiori, we must have intended the same disclaimer to apply to territories and peoples which were only incidentally brought within the range and scope of the war. Any other conclusion is either foolish or dishonest. Any different interpretation would be ruled out of any impartial court in Christendom.

The answer to the question what we would do with the Filipinos under present circumstances, is therefore very easy. We would say to them exactly what we have said to the Cubans from the beginning: "We will help you to form a government for yourselves, and then we will leave the control of the islands to the people thereof, and with this end in view we will stop shooting if you will do the same." Does anybody doubt that the war would come to an end immediately?

When the advocates of the war policy in the Philippines are confronted with the Cuban resolution, they say that the two cases are entirely different; that the Filipinos are "savages," and that they cannot be trusted to form a stable and orderly government. This argument had a good deal of force in the beginning, because we were accustomed to think of all the Malays as barbarians. During the past six months, however, and largely through the information collected by the Philippine Commission, our ideas have undergone a change. We have discovered that the people against whom we are fighting are civilized, enlightened, and also a Christian people.

Driven from this ground, the advocates of the war policy say that Aguinaldo and his followers represent only a small fraction of the inhabitants of the islands, and that the others would submit to our rule peacefully if he would stop fighting. Well, why not test that assertion by stopping ourselves? We see no objection to allowing all the inhabitants to choose the kind of government they want. Admiral Dewey has declared officially that they are better fitted for self-government than the Cubans. Let Aguinaldo and his followers begin with their government under our protection and with our cooperation. Then let the others choose whichever they prefer—our government or his. Nothing worse can come of it than our treaty with the polygamous and slave-holding Sultan of Sulu. This treaty puts the seal of hypocrisy on our assertion that we are striving to save the islands from barbarous rule. Nothing can be more barbarous than a Mohammedan autocrat, and yet we come to terms with him in order to save his people from the possible tyranny of Aguinaldo.

To sum up the situation there is no insuperable or serious obstacle to peace in the Philippines. The only thing wanting to that end is the honest application of the same principles that we promised to Cuba when we first declared war against Spain.

Doukhobor Notes.

THE following notes have been forwarded us by Joseph Elkinton, (of Media, Pa., son of J. S. E.):

Joseph S. Elkinton and William B. Harvey are now in Prince Albert, Canada, settling some of the Kars Doukhobors, who came by the last ship from Batoum, Russia. They had satisfactory interviews with the Government and railroad officials in Montreal, Ottawa, and Winnipeg. The Deputy Minister of the Interior had been west, and had been snow-bound in a train for three days, without sufficient food. The Commissioner of Immigration, Wm. F. McCreary, (whose letters from Winnipeg have been published in the INTELLIGENCER), had visited some of the Doukhobor settlements, and was personally much interested in them. He accompanied J. S. E. and W. B. H. to Prince Albert.

Some help has been sent the Doukhobors, but nothing at all adequate, as yet, to prevent suffering from lack of food. Another car-load of assorted groceries and clothing is being made up, and will be forwarded in ten days. All goods should be marked, "For Doukhobors, care of Joseph S. and Thomas Elkinton, 817 Mifflin St., Philadelphia."

A car of corn meal had arrived in Winnipeg, on Tenth month 31, and one of sour-kraut. The Commissioner of Immigration had also purchased a car-load of potatoes and one of onions.

Joseph Elkinton adds, in a personal note, (7th instant): "It is my desire to get the carload now being collected here off within two weeks, so it will reach Winnipeg or Yorkton, before father comes home. He thinks it desirable to have some one interested to see personally to the distribution of the goods. English Friends have sent $1,500, a Russian, who came with the last ship loaned them $2,000, and as much was sent from Russia, but $50,000 will not be more than enough to see them through the winter and spring, and put them in shape to help themselves afterward."

Dog Goes With Foxes.

CASCADE township, Lycoming county, Pa., a current newspaper item says, has a dog that was stolen by foxes, and which now lives in the woods with the sly animals that stole it. N. J. Maloney, a farmer of the township, has had several chickens stolen by the foxes. Mr. Maloney was not the only person why missed some of his chickens. There were others. Some of the neighbors waited with shotguns for the thieves, and four or five foxes were killed. Instead of doing that Mr. Maloney put a six month's old pup in a kennel near the chicken coop. He thought the dog would frighten the foxes away; but he was mistaken. The first night that the pup was put on guard the foxes made a raid, and, besides one or two chickens, stole the dog. It was thought that the foxes had killed the dog; but several nights ago he was seen going along the edge of the mountains with two foxes. The dog has assumed the slyness of a fox and can run nearly as fast as the foxes.

Jump in Prices.

THERE has been a great advance in hardware, the Wilmington, Del., Morning News says: "Various reasons are given. One is the giant Trusts formed among members of the iron grade." Copper wire, retailed some time ago at 24 cents a pound, is now 44. Ordinary nails, which were sold by the carload at 70 cents a keg, are now $3.40 a keg. Agricultural tools have advanced nearly 40 per cent., and screws are 20 per cent. higher than six months ago. A dealer said that many articles were sold some time ago at unreasonably low rates, in which there was no profit for any one. "I do not believe that prices of what is called shelf hardware, such as locks and their correlatives, have advanced to an abnormal rate. The great advance in the case of wire and cut nails and plain and barbed wire has been effected by the manipulation of controlled interests, whose stock has lately been put on the market and sold. There is no reason for this but artificial control. I do not think it wise, either for consumers or dealers, to encourage these formations of combinations, enabling them to advance prices at one big jump."

The News adds: "Most of the local hardware stores sell glass, wire, twine, rope, and turpentine, and there has been a rise in the prices of these products. Panes of glass which some time ago were selling at 12 and 13 cents, are now retailed at 30 cents. Manila twine and tar rope, which has been retailing for 6 cents a pound is now wholesaling at 10 cents and retailing at 12 cents a pound. Binding twine cannot be bought for less than 14 cents a pound, about twice what it formerly cost. Turpentine, which is used largely in paints, has jumped to twice its former value, thus making paint higher."

The Meteoric Showers.

Scientific American.

THE predicted time of the coming showers of meteors is November 15, 1899, in the first hour of the morning of the 16th. Observers should be on the watch forty-eight hours earlier. One unfortunate circumstance is the fact that this wonderful display comes at the time of full moon. In 1866 this display was imposing, but was exceeded in 1833. There may be a hundred or a few hundred in an hour, or there may be many thousands. Begin the watch for them at midnight on the 13th and continue it until the morning of the 17th. The vigil will be shared all over the civilized world by thousands of bright people.

White Control in the Philippines.

SOME months ago I had a long talk with the Sultan of the Sulu Islands, says Hugh Clifford in the Atlantic Monthly, "and learned his view of the position of the Spaniards with regard to his territories. He laughed at any pretensions they might make that the land was a Spanish possession, and pointed out that they had never attempted to win a surer foothold on the islands than was afforded them by the land ceded for the erection of their forts. With the internal administration of the group, he declared that they had neither the right nor the power to interfere, and further inquiries on the subject bear out the Sultan's contention. Also a closer examination will show us that in many of the outlying portions of the archipelago the white men's control was purely nominal."

The Sulu Islands are part of the Philippine group, The Sultan is the ruler, a slaveholder, and polygamist, who is subsidized by the United States Government.

Protestants Killing One Another.

Christian Register.

WHILE certain zealous Protestants are hailing the Philippine War as "opening one more door for Christ in the Orient," the organ of the Papal Court, the Osservatore Romano, is looking with similar faith and hope to the conflict between two heretical powers in South Africa. "Can it be that this war is providential?" it asks. "Will Protestantism be exhausted by it? Has the period of the great transformation of the world begun, when the Church will accomplish a new conversion of the Gentiles? Let us have courage, determination, and faith in God, who is ever the God of armies." The same clerical journal, having expressed satisfaction over the verdict of the court-martial against Dreyfus, complains of those who find fault with Catholics "for not espousing the cause of a Semite accused of treason." This brings out from the London Times a rather direct question: "Who founded the Catholic Church but a Semite accused of treason?"

CURRENT EVENTS.

THERE have been no decisive operations in the South African war. The Boer forces have cut the telegraph and railway lines south of Ladysmith, so that little news has been received from there for several days, except one message sent, it is stated, by a carrier pigeon. The Boers have practically surrounded the place, but their inferiority in artillery makes it doubtful whether they can capture it. There have been many rumors of its capture, all of them, it would appear, unfounded. Additional troops continue to be dispatched from England.

IN the elections held on the 7th instant, the results at this writing appear to be: Ohio elects Nash, Rep., Governor; Maryland elects Smith, Dem.; Nebraska elects Holcomb, Fusion; Kentucky elects the Republican candidate, owing to the division of the Democratic vote. Other States voted about as usual. Jones, Mayor of Toledo, who ran independently for Governor of Ohio, is said to have received about 100,000 votes.

OFFICIAL denial is given to the idea that the Filipinos are "savages" by the holding of an election in the island of Negros, October 2, under direction of the United States military officers. The officials elected in the town of Bacolor were "installed" on the 6th instant. General Smith, the U. S. Military Governor, swore in the Judge of the Supreme Court, and he in turn swore in the civil officers. They are all natives. "Great importance" is attached to such elections, a dispatch states.

Military movements continue in the Philippine Islands very much as for the past six months. There are repeated announcements that some decisive successes by the United States troops may be expected soon.

ENERGETIC efforts have been made in Holland to send money to the Red Cross work in South Africa, and surgeons and hospital supplies to the aid of the Boer wounded. The Emperor of Germany and the Czar of Russia have appointed a meeting at Potsdam (near Berlin) on the 8th instant. It is commonly believed that the subject of mediation is to be considered. The general feeling of European nations is hostile to England. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Cologne Gazette asserts that "the Russian hatred of England is fanatical."

JOUBERT, the commander of the Boer forces in Natal, is said to have protested to General White, the British commander at Ladysmith, against the use of the terrible explosive called lyddite, in battle. It is used to fill the shells thrown by the heavy guns; in bursting it breaks up the shells into minute fragments and is much more destructive than ordinary gunpowder. A recent description says: "Lyddite is the most destructive explosive that can be handled with safety by its user. Ounce for ounce it is from five to seven times more destructive than nitro-glycerine and from forty to fifty-six times more powerful than the best gunpowder. A shell full of lyddite thrown into a regiment produces the same effect as dynamite exploded in a stream full of fish—plus blood and mangling and the sounds of creatures in anguish."

THE Ladysmith correspondent of the London daily Mail, speaking of a recent engagement at Nicholson's Nek, says that after it "the Boers showed great kindness both to the wounded and the prisoners. This elicited the highest praise. They collected water for the British wounded and gave the blankets off the captured mules for hospital panniers. Some of them asked the soldiers for their embroidered belts as mementos of their great victory, but were told that many of them contained money, the pay of the men. In many cases they then refrained from making their requests. Some of the wounded dropped their money, but the Boers would not take it."

THE payments from the United States Treasury for four months (to Eleventh month 1), have been nearly 184 millions of dollars ($183,851,152). Of this only about forty millions was for ordinary peace uses. The War Department took over fifty-seven millions, the Navy over nineteen millions, and pensions and interest on the old war debt about sixty-six millions more.

In the Portland district of Maine, on the 6th inst., Amos T. Allen, Rep., was elected to Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Speaker Thomas B. Reed. He advocated the "expansion" policy, and his opponent, McKinney, Dem., opposed it. Allen's majority, 4,650, is about 1,000 less than Reed had in 1898, and 6,000 less than he had in 1896. The three leading Republican newspapers in the district, the Portland Press, Portland Express, and Bridgeton News, oppose the imperialist policy but supported Allen.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

THE Schofield School Bulletin, Tenth month, says: "We are cutting the last of our hay (on the School farm), and have already under cover twice the quantity ever made before. Our cotton is the best in the neighborhood; we expect to pick a bale from each acre planted. The average of South Carolina last year was about one-third of this."

—The night schools of Philadelphia do an important work. One of the largest is the Meredith School, on Fifth street above German. The pupils, 730 in number, men, women, boys, and girls—are nearly all of foreign birth. The best of order is observed, and all the pupils apply themselves diligently to their work. A large majority of the pupils work during the day. Some of the girls, who are employed in Kensington mills, daily walk to and from their work, and their time is so limited that they go direct from their work to the night school.

—A Massachusetts man writes to the Springfield Republican: "I have just returned from a journey to the West through Oregon and California, and from such conversation as I had I think the feeling against the war is very strong. San Francisco is making a great deal of money and the newspapers support the war; but outside, among the ordinary voters, the opposition is very strong, and the returning soldiers have spread the opposition."

—The death is announced in England of Jane Arnold Forster, widow of the late William Edward Forster, M. P., who was Chief Secretary for Ireland in the Cabinet of W. E. Gladstone. She was the eldest child of Dr. Thomas Arnold, of Rugby, and sister therefore of Matthew Arnold. She was born in 1821. She and her husband had no children, but they adopted the four children of her brother William D. Arnold, who took the surname of Arnold-Forster.

—The committee appointed by the New York Presbytery at its June meeting to confer with Prof. Arthur C. McGiffert, of Union Theological Seminary, has failed in the attempt to induce him to withdraw from the Presbyterian ministry. At the final meeting, recently held, it was decided to abandon the attempt, and so to report to the Presbytery. A "trial for heresy" is likely to follow.

—Some incredibly silly person in authority, some time ago, had a flag stuck in the top of William Penn's hat on the statue on top of the City Hall tower. A recent storm blew it down. The Ledger says truly, "it was incongruous and undignified. Now that it has blown away, it should never be replaced."

—The report of the Auditor of the United States Post-office Department shows that there was a deficit for the year of over $6,000,000. The money order business was conducted at a loss.

—The Pullman Palace Car Company has absorbed by purchase the Wagner Company, paying therefor 200,000 shares of Pullman stock. This agreement has yet to be ratified by the stockholders of the two corporations.

—The Chicago School Board has appointed fifty medical inspectors in an effort to prevent the spread of infectious diseases among the children.

—A Washington despatch says it has practically been decided to establish a Colonial Bureau in the War Department, to take charge of "all matters pertaining to the outlying dependencies of the United States."

FOUR million women of the United States work. In this number are teachers, professors, lawyers, clergymen, journalists, chemists, assayers, detectives, postmen, guides, and veterinary surgeons.

MORE than 40 per cent. of the people of Great Britain could not write their names when Queen Victoria ascended the throne. At the present time only 7 per cent. of the population are in that condition.

JAPANESE newspapers are published in Brooklyn, San Francisco, and Honolulu, and Japanese magazines at Los Angeles, and Sacramento. They are either lithographed or produced by some manifold process.

A NEW YORK woman has patented a bicycle attachment for repelling the attacks of dogs, consisting of a perforated box containing pepper or other substance, with a bulb on the handle bar to force air through a tube into the box to discharge the pepper.

MORE than 12,000,000 acres of the Sahara have been converted into fertile soil with the aid of artesian wells.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY
Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN
Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS
Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK
Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR
Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN
SHIPMAN
COLLIER
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO
Philadelphia.
MORLEY
Cleveland.
SALEM
Salem, Mass.
CORNELL
Buffalo.
KENTUCKY
Louisville.

HY is it that the brands of White Lead made by quick or patent process are almost invariably sold below the price of standard brands?

Because practical painters and consumers generally know that they are inferior to the brands made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion. The brands named in margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles of combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

NOTICES.

* * The Annual Meeting of the General Conference of Young Friends' Associations will be held at Woodstown, N. J., Seventh-day, Eleventh month 18. Morning session 10.30 to 12. Afternoon, 2 to 4.

Morning program: "Need of Increased Interest in Business Meetings," paper by Susan H. Jarrett. Discussion opened by J. Hibberd Taylor West Chester, and Alvin Haines, Abington Association.

Afternoon: "The Friendly Renaissance," paper by Robert M. Reese. Discussion opened by Mar. R. W. Thorne, Moorestown, and Ely J. Smith, Solebury Association.

A general invitation is extended to all interested Friends.

A special train will leave Market street wharf, Philadelphia, at 9.30 a. m., Camden, at 9.35, making no stops between Camden and Woodstown. Excursion tickets $1.05. Return trains leave Woodstown at 4.30 and 6.07 p. m.

A cordial invitation to remain over First-day is extended to visitors, by Woodstown Friends. On behalf of the Executive Committee.

WILLIAM WALTON, Chairman.
ANNA S. ATKINSON, Secretary.

* * Donation Day of Friends' Home for Children, 4011 Aspen street, West Philadelphia, will be Third-day, Eleventh month 21.

The good work has continued during the past year, although a smaller number of general contributions has been received. Money and clothing will be very acceptable, but we shall also be very glad to receive donations of produce. Many farmers have potatoes, apples, turnips, etc., that are not good enough for market, but which would be very acceptable to us. Contributions, in kind, may be sent to A. T. Eavenson, 318 North 20th street, Philadelphia, or Edward C. Dixon, Secretary, 1420 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

* * A Conference will be held at Byberry Friends' meeting house, on First-day afternoon, the 18th inst., at 2.30 o'clock. Subject, "Peace and Arbitration." Under the care of Abington Quarterly Meeting's Philanthropic Committee.

J. Q. ATKINSON, } Clerks.
ARABELLA CARTER, }

* * The Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, held at Race Street, will take place on Fourth-day next, the 15th, in the evening, at 7.30 o'clock.

* * Friends Visiting Committee of Salem Quarterly Meeting have made the following appointments for Eleventh month:

26 Salem, 10 a. m.

* * T. B. Pandian, of Madras, India, will give an illustrated lecture on "Rural Life in India" in the lecture-room of Friends' Central School, 15th and Race Streets. Third-day, Eleventh month 14, at 8 p. m. T. B. Pandian's lectures are very interesting as well as instructive, and it is hoped there will be a large attendance. EMMA WALN, Clerk Committee on Best Interests.

* * A Circular Meeting under the care of the Western Quarterly Meeting, will be held at Mill Creek, on First-day, Eleventh month 12, 1899. To convene at 2 o'clock p. m.

OSCAR F. PASSMORE, Clerk.

* * Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting's Committee to visit the smaller branches as way may open will attend meetings as follows:

ELEVENTH MONTH:

19. Haverford, 10 a. m.

26. Reading, 10 a. m.

TWELFTH MONTH:

3. Germantown, 10.30 a. m.

AQUILA J. LINVILL, Clerk.

* * Quarterly meetings in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting occur as follows:

ELEVENTH MONTH:

- 9. Abington, Byberry.
- 28. Burlington, Trenton, N. J.
- 29. Southern, Camden, Del.
- 30. Bucks, Langhorne, Pa.

* * First-day evening meetings, in Philadelphia, in Eleventh month, are held at Race Street, at 7.30 o'clock. The full attendance of Friends is solicited.

Young Friends' Association.

The Young Friends' Association Office is now open in the Association Building, 15th and Cherry streets, where those wishing information may apply between the hours of 8.30 a. m. and 5.30 p. m. Address all communications to

YOUNG FRIENDS' ASSOCIATION,
15th and Cherry Sts., Philadelphia.

Young Friends' Association.

The Young Friends' Association of Philadelphia will hold a regular meeting in the Lecture-room, Fifteenth and Race streets, on Second-day evening, Eleventh month 13th, at 8 o'clock. All are invited.

PROGRAM

A Talk by Howard M. Jenkins on A Visit to English Friends.

ESTHER S. STACKHOUSE, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA & READING RAILWAY.

ANTHRACITE COAL. NO SMOKE.
NO CINDERS. DOUBLE TRACKED.
HEAVY STEEL RAILS. STONE
BALLASTED.

Royal Blue Line to New York.

SWIFTEST AND SAFEST TRAINS
IN THE WORLD.

Scenic Reading Route to

READING, HARRISBURG, GETTYSBURG, CHAMBERSBURG, SHAMOKIN, WILLIAMSPORT, AND POINTS
IN INTERIOR PENNSYLVANIA.

Royal Reading Route to

ATLANTIC CITY. CLEANLINESS
AND COMFORT. SAFETY AND SPEED.

Richards & Shourds, Jobbing attended to.

CARPENTERS, BUILDERS, AND CONTRACTORS.
1225 Spring St. (first street above Race), Philad'a., Pa.
Thompson Shourds, 2212 Wallace Street.
Charles W. Richards, 1220 Angle St., Tioga.

CHARLES BURTON,

Practical House and Sign Painter,
Office, 907 N. Thirteenth Street,
Residence, 1714 Woodstock Street, } Philadelphia, Pa.

BRASS and ENAMELED BEDSTEADS

There is a right way and a cheap way to make Mattresses; perhaps you have found it out. We do it the right way; try us. Furniture reupholstered. Shades, etc.

Josiah G. Williams, 13 N. 11th St

Merchants' Trust Company,

611-613 CHESTNUT STREET.

CAPITAL (subscribed), $500,000.00
CAPITAL (paid in), 250,000.00
SURPLUS, 50,000.00
UNDIVIDED PROFITS, 30,094.49

Interest allowed on Deposits. Titles to Real Estate insured, and conveyancing done. Loans made on Mortgage and Approved Collateral. Surety entered for Administrators and others. The Company also acts as Administrator, Guardian, Trustee, etc. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent from $2 and upwards, per annum.

JOSEPH R. RHOADS, President.

JOHN F. LEWIS, Vice-President.

ROBERT MORRIS EARLY, Sec. and Treas.

WM. B. LANE, Title and Trust Officer.

DIRECTORS

NICHOLAS BRICE,	EDWARD S. SAYRES,
SPENCER M. JANNEY,	I. BOLTON WINPENNY,
S. DAVIS PAGE,	ELLWOOD BECKER,
JOSEPH R. RHOADS,	EDWIN S. DIXON,
JOHN F. LEWIS,	WARREN G. GRIFFITH,
THOMAS R. GILL,	SAMUEL BANCROFT, JR.,
CHAS. S. HINCHMAN,	EDWARD G. MCCOLLIN,
ALFRED I. PHILLIPS.

IN PRESS.—Ready about 11th mo. 10th.

"Personal Reminiscences of Anti-Slavery and Other Reforms and Reformers,"

By AARON M. POWELL.

THIS volume, which was left unfinished by the author at the time of his death, has been completed by his sister, Elizabeth Powell Bond, and is published by his widow, Anna Rice Powell. It contains reminiscences of the leading Anti-Slavery Advocate, William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Lucretia Mott, Lydia Maria Child, John G. Whittier, and other reformers. It will have special interest for Friends, and all interested in Philanthropic Work, and will be of peculiar value to the young. The author had repeatedly said that he intended this book to be his "legacy to the young people." The volume contains several portraits and cuts of letters not heretofore published.

Price, $2.00; by Mail, $2.20.

Orders will be received by Marv Travilla, West Chester, Pa.; Prof. W. I. Hull, Swarthmore, Pa.; Isaac Roberts, Conshohocken, Pa. and by the Publisher, Anna Rice Powell, Plainfield, N. J.

FOR SALE BY Friends' Book Association, Philadelphia.

Fruen's Wheat Wafers

BEST

In two-pound Packages.

Made from the Best Selected
Washington State White Wheat.

The largest, richest and finest flavored Wheat
in the world.

After the defective and imperfect grains are separated, it has the outside woody hull, which is both indigestible and irritating, stripped off. It is then thoroughly cleaned, and finally rolled out into perfect and peerless wafers or flakes, the most perfect food for mankind known.

A great nerve, brain and muscle food, delicious and unequalled as a breakfast food or for puddings, omelets, griddle cakes, or mixed with any stewed fruit.

Gives children strong constitutions, rosy cheeks, good eyes, strong nerves, sound teeth and to grown persons an active brain and strength of nerve and muscle.

Taking beef as a standard, at 18 cents per pound, Fruen Best Wheat Wafer's food value is over 50 cents per pound.

Superior to Oat-meal, as while it is more perfectly nourishing it does not over-heat the blood or irritate the stomach like oatmeal.

A. R. HILL, 21 S. Front St., Phila.

Wholesale Agt. for Fruen Cereal Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

CLEMENT A. WOODNUTT,

Undertaker
and Embalmer,

1728 GIRARD AVENUE, PHILADELPHIA.

Telephone 2-28-25-A.

GIRARD TRUST COMPANY

N. E. Cor. Broad and Chestnut Sts.

Capital, $1,000,000. Chartered 1836 Surplus, $2,000,000.

ACTS AS EXECUTOR, ADMINISTRATOR, TRUSTEE, ASSIGNEE, AND RECEIVER.

FINANCIAL AGENT FOR INDIVIDUALS OR CORPORATIONS.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON INDIVIDUAL AND CORPORATION ACCOUNTS.

SAFES TO RENT IN BURGLAR-PROOF VAULTS.

ACTS AS TRUSTEE OF CORPORATION MORTGAGES.

DEPOSITORY UNDER PLANS OF REORGANIZATION.

REGISTRAR AND TRANSFER AGENT.

ASSUMES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL ESTATE.

SAFES TO RENT IN BURGLAR-PROOF VAULTS.

E. B. MORRIS, President.The Provident Life and Trust Company of Philadelphia

409 Chestnut Street.

Capital, $1,000,000, Fully Paid.

Insures Lives, Grants Annuities, Receives Money on Deposit, Acts as Executor, Administrator, Guardian, Trustee, Assignee, Committee, Receiver, Agent, Etc.

All Trust Funds and Investments are kept separate and apart from the assets of the Company.

President, SAMUEL R. SHIPLEY; Vice President, T. WISTAR BROWN; Vice President and Actuary, ASA S. WING; Manager of Insurance Department, JOSEPH ASHBROOKE; Trust Officer, J. ROBERTS FOULKE; Assistant Trust Officer, J. BARTON TOWNSEND; Assistant Actuary, DAVID G. ALSOP; Treasurer, SAMUEL H. TRUTH; Secretary, C. WALTER BORTON.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA.

This Company furnishes ALL DESIRABLE FORMS OF LIFE AND ENDOWMENT INSURANCE at actual NET COST. It is PURELY MUTUAL; has ASSETS OF THIRTY MILLIONS, and a SURPLUS of over 3½ MILLIONS. ITS POLICIES ARE NON-FORFEITABLE AND INCONTESTABLE.

President,
HARRY F. WEST.Vice-President,
GEORGE K. JOHNSON.Secretary and Treasurer,
HENRY C. BROWN.Friends' Book Association,

OF PHILADELPHIA

Publishers, Booksellers, Stationers,
Blank Book Manufacturers,
Engravers, and Printers,
Artists' Materials,
Kindergarten, School Supplies.
Everything relating to the Kindergarten and School.

S. W. corner Fifteenth and Race Streets.

M. L. PHILIBERT,
French Steam Dyer, Scourer,
AND DRY CLEANER.Cleaning of Blankets and Lace Curtains
a specialty.210 S. EIGHTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA
Branch Office, 727 South Second Street.F. GUTEKUNST, FINE ART IN PHOTOGRAPHY

712 Arch St., Philad'a, Pa.

Branch, 1700 N. Broad St.

CLUB RATES: OTHER PERIODICALS, 1900.

We announce our Club Rates for other Periodicals for 1900. Read the figures given, and also read the notes below.

We will send FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER one year, with any of the periodicals named below, for the amount stated "for both."

WEEKLIES.

Periodicals.	Price for both.
Harper's Weekly, ($4),	$5.30
Christian Register, ($3),	4.80
Christian Register, (new subscribers),	4.10
Scientific American, ($3),	4.60
Harper's Bazar, ($4),	5.30
Journal of Education, ($2.50),	4.35
The Living Age, ($6),	7.60
Literary Digest, ($3),	5.50
The Independent, ($2),	3.90
Springfield Republican, ($1),	2.90
The Nation, ($3),	4.80

MONTHLIES.British Friend, (6s. 6d. and postage), $3.75
Meehans' Monthly (Floral, Hort.), ($2), 3.85MONTHLIES (Continued).

Periodicals.	Price for both.
Scribner's Magazine, ($3),	$4.60
The Century Magazine, ($4),	5.60
Harper's Magazine, ($3),	4.70
Atlantic Monthly, ($4),	5.30
The Forum, ($3),	4.60
North American Review, ($5),	6.10
St. Nicholas, ($3),	4.60
Lippincott's Magazine, ($2.50),	3.80
Scattered Seeds, ($0.50),	2.35
McClure's Magazine, ($1),	2.90
The Farm Journal, ($0.50),	2.20
Little Men and Women, ($0.50),	2.45

QUARTERLIES.

The New World, (Relig. Rev.), ($3), $4.50

Persons wishing other periodicals than those named above should write to us, and we will give prices.

Where several periodicals in the list are wanted, find the net price of each (if ordered through us), by subtracting $2.00 from the rate given under the heading "price for both."

J. T. JACKSON & CO.,
Real Estate Brokers,

No. 711 WALNUT ST., PHILA.

Rents, Sales, Mortgages, etc., etc.

PETER WRIGHT & SONS

305-307 WALNUT ST., PHILAD'A.

LETTERS OF CREDIT for Travelers.
FOREIGN EXCHANGE bought and sold.

The purchase and sale of Prime Investment Securities a Specialty.

Loans negotiated on Real Estate. Interest allowed on deposits.

SPECIAL THERMOMETERS.

With porcelain scale.

Forty-five cents.

H. C. Boden & Co.

Manufacturing Opticians.

S. E. Cor. 13th & Walnut Streets.

THE PENNHURST, Open all the year

Michigan Ave., near the Beach, Atlantic City.

The house has every convenience, including electric elevator, running to level of pavement, steam heat, etc. Send for illustrated booklet. JAMES HOOD.

THE AQUARILLE, OPEN ALL THE YEAR

OCEAN END OF TENNESSEE AVE.

Atlantic City, N. J.

Enlarged, remodelled, steam heat, electric bells, hand sun parlor, home-like and comfortable.

M. E. and H. M. HUMPTON.

Women's Petticoats

We offer values in Petticoats that will appeal to all economical women. Not enough space to discuss all the styles, but the following items give an idea of the completeness of our stock:

At 95 cents—Petticoats with Metallic striped satine; umbrella shape, corded ruffle, faced with canvas.

At $1.00—Satine Petticoats; umbrella shape, corded ruffle, lined throughout.

At $1.75—Petticoats of Satine, three small ruffles with two cords above each ruffle; lined throughout.

At $1.75—Petticoats of Fine Satine in pretty metallic stripes; umbrella shape, corded ruffle, faced with canvas.

At $1.75—Petticoats of Mercerised Italian Cloth, in popular colors; umbrella ruffle, with cluster of cords.

At $5.00—Petticoats of Taffetas Silk, in black and colors; 11-inch corded ruffle, satine-faced and velveteen-bound.

At $5.00—Petticoats of Taffetas Silk, in pretty striped effects; umbrella shape, with two ruffles two inches wide.

At $7.50—Petticoats of Taffetas Silk, in black and colors; umbrella shape, finished with cluster of cords and two three-inch ruffles and dust ruffle.

Orders by mail receive prompt and accurate attention. Address orders "Department C."

Strawbridge & Clothier,

PHILADELPHIA.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, ELEVENTH MONTH 18, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 46.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLVI.

THE rest is at noonday ; but the travels begin at the breaking of day, wherein are but glimmerings, or little light, wherein the discovery of good and evil are not so manifest and certain ; yet there must the traveler begin and travel ; and in his travels (in much fear and trembling lest he should err), the light will break in upon him more and more.

ISAAC PENINGTON.

THE STILL HOUR.

THE quiet of a shadow-haunted pool,
Where light breaks through in glorious tenderness,
Where the tranced pilgrim in the shelter cool
Forgets the way's distress,—

Such is this hour, this silent hour with Thee !
The trouble of the restless heart is still,
And every swaying wish breathes reverently
The whisper of thy will.

Fountain of Life, in thee alone is Light !
Shine through our being, cleansing us of sin,
Till we grow lucid with thy presence bright,—
The peace of God within.

If, in our thoughts, by thee made calm and clear,
The brightening image of thy face we see,
What hour of all our lives can be so dear
As this still hour with thee ! —Lucy Larcom.

BUILDING BEFORE OUR OWN DOORS.

Read to students of Swarthmore College by Dean Elizabeth Powell Bond, Eleventh month 5, 1899.

LET me recall to your minds the story of the rebuilding of the walls about Jerusalem. Nehemiah, cup-bearer to the Persian king, Artaxerxes, learned of the desolation that had come upon Jerusalem, the city of his fathers, and he felt himself called of the Lord to undertake the restoration of the walls. He acknowledged in deep humility that his people had dealt very corruptly, that they had not regarded the commandments and statutes received at the hands of Moses ; but he remembered, too, a promise given to them through Moses : " If ye return unto me, and keep my commandments, and do them, though your outcasts were in the uttermost part of the heaven, yet will I gather them from thence, and will bring them unto the place that I have chosen to set my name there." In a spirit of complete self-forgetfulness he set himself the task of making Jerusalem the secure city of his people, renewed in their faithfulness to the laws of Moses. He obtained permission for absence from the king's court and went to Jerusalem. At night he secretly inspected the ruined wall. Having viewed the devastation, he said unto the Jews, the priests, and the nobles and rulers : " Ye in the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire : come and let us build up the walls of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach." The earnest, sincere appeal reached their hearts, and they said : " Let us rise up and build." The record gives in detail the order of the builders, and it is interesting to observe that of many it is recorded that they built against their own house. " Eliashib, the high priest, rose up with his brethren the priests, and they builded the sheep gate." " Next unto him builded the men of Jerieho." " From above the horse gate repaired the priests, every one over against his house." " After them repaired Zadock, the son of Immer, over against his house." " After him repaired Benjamin and Hashub over against their house."

The secret of their quiet, expeditious building—an undertaking which Sanballat and Tohiah would laugh to scorn, was this : that each man rose up at his own place, and there where he stood, put his hand to the work. If, like children, Malchiah had striven for the place of Shallum at the fountain gate ; or Ezur had sought a less difficult post than his place over against the armory at the turning of the wall, alas for their building ! Their time would have been lost in aimless running to and fro, their strength would have been dissipated ; and the restored wall could not have gladdened their eyes. But each man, loyal, faithful in his own place, went to make up the great army of builders under whose hands grew the protecting wall about their beloved city.

This reminiscence of Jerusalem has turned our thought backward more than twenty centuries. Now, let us call home our thought from that far-away time in far-away Jerusalem, quickened by the impressive lesson of that history—that the waste places of the earth are best restored when each man builds over against his own door, joining his work to his neighbor's. If Jerusalem had need of well-built walls to resist the assaults of aggressive barbarians, not less does every city or town, every college or home of this day, need the invisible walls of a righteous public sentiment to protect it from the deadly assaults of human selfishness. See if there is not an echo from that long-ago appeal of Nehemiah in behalf of Jerusalem, in this recent appeal of a Philadelphia editor :

" Politically and morally, the city must go from better to better or from worse to worse. All the efforts of the Municipal League, the Business Men's League, and kindred organizations, supplemented by all the help the newspapers can give them, have been insufficient in the past to keep it from drifting the wrong way. It will take a strong and long continued pull to turn it in the other direction, but it can be done if every citizen who desires better things will take hold and pull to the extent of his ability, if that ability shall extend no further than the casting of his vote."

The dangers of the present are not those of long ago, but they are dangers none the less. Philadelphia has no fear that an armed force will arrive to take possession of city offices. It is the fraudulent election that is feared; it is the concentrated power of wealth threatening the liberty of the citizen that is feared; it is the debauching influence of the drink-habit and of vice that threatens the safety of the city. It is the indifference of good men and women that leaves the conduct of city affairs to the unprincipled. Nor can an armed force be arrayed against these dangers. The world has moved on and upward from that lower plane of life in which the armed force was the sole measure of strength, and the final appeal for all causes. But having come to higher standards of judgment and justice, if these are not maintained by individual loyalty and faithfulness, there can be but one final result, a fatal fall downward to the barbarism of past centuries.

How is it, that this is a theme for this hour of worshipful thought? I would say that in the hour set apart for worship; for dwelling in our thought upon our highest ideals; for the conscious reaching out of our souls toward our Heavenly Father we cannot separate worship from service. God has need of us—for our brain, for our willing hands and feet. Just as he uses sunshine and rain, even winds and frost to work the wondrous transformation from the little brown seed to the field of golden grain, so does he need us each and all to work out his infinite plans for the progress of the human race. I have to believe that our whispered adoration and our hymns of praise are sweet to the Infinite Heart of love only as they are the accompaniment of our appeal, "Here am I, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do! Let my voice serve to bear thy message to some waiting soul. Use such honesty as I have attained to, such steadfastness as I am capable of, such gentleness as I can be gentle with, such wisdom as has been given me to be a help in thy infinite work." Therefore it is, that into these hours of highest thought and most earnest seeking we must bring the problems of the world, and thus begin the building of the walls before our own door.

There is a special fitness, it seems to me, in bringing this thought to the minds of the young. The world never outgrows its need for men and women trained to steadfastness and integrity. Engineering steadfastness and integrity are indispensable to the development of the physical resources of the earth. Steadfastness and integrity of soul, the stamp of relationship between the human soul and the Divine, these are the immovable foundation upon which all building for the Lord, must rest. College life fails of its highest purpose if its young men and women do not go back to the world from their temporary seclusion, trained to serve the needs of the world,—God's world, let us remember. Let us name our college life the thing that it is—a training school for the world. In very truth it is the world in miniature, it has all the public and all the purely personal interests of the great world beyond our walls. There are presidents and secretaries to be elected; there is the college paper to be supported; there is the college settlement work to interest us in one part of the world's claims upon us; there are college athletic interests to be maintained; there is that subtle, invisible thing which we name college spirit, really the exponent of our high-water mark in thinking and doing. All these factors of college life, not less than the individual records in scholarship, have to depend upon the steadfastness and integrity of the individual student,—have to depend upon the wall he is building before his own door. How could there be better training for the world!

And there is another name which our college life should bear; it should be worthy to be called "a School of Applied Christianity," founded upon the two commandments which Jesus declared the summing up of "all the law and the prophets"—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind,"—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Schools of applied science train students in the practical uses of electricity, and the workings of the law of gravity. The school of applied Christianity must train its young in the applications of Christ's law of love. He himself makes the measure of our love for God whom we have not seen, the love which we show to our fellows hour by hour and day by day. It might be a helpful exercise for us as a school of applied Christianity to try to test the spirit of our daily life by our conception of what Christ's life among us would be if he were visibly with us, sharing our various absorbing interests. Would he give himself up to any impulse for play that chanced to seize him in working time, and then, availing himself of other students' labors make pretence that his work was done, or would he do the work assigned him sincerely and honestly? Would he move about our halls or sit at our tables as if he were their sole occupant; or would he remember that as one of many, he had to control some personal desires, and fit his personal indulgences to the welfare of all the rest? Would he sit in judgment and spread broadcast his harsh comments upon his neighbors to poison the spiritual atmosphere of our halls; would he give wings to his words to send them stinging and blighting wherever they should touch? Or would he quietly build a wall of conduct before his own door so strong and protecting and beautiful withal, that his neighbors would wish to build in harmony with his own and join their work to his?

I plead that we may join together to make our college life a "School of Applied Christianity," so filled with the spirit of Christ that when we make mistakes they may be over-ruled for good; when we falter by the way our strength may be renewed; when we go out into the world we may be centers of wholesome, uplifting influence.

Don't always search for the serious side of things. The man who has no eye or ear for the ludicrous is an unhappy mortal. Next to virtue, the fun in the world is what we can least spare.—Anon.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOL SCRIPTURE LESSONS.
1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 48.—ELEVENTH MONTH 26.

THE KINGDOM OF JUDAH.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Fret not thyself because of evil doers. Neither be thou envious against them that work unrighteousness. For they shall soon be cut down like the grass. And wither as the green herb.—Psalm, xxxvii., 1, 2.

Scripture Reading, II. Kings, xvi., 1-20.

THE tragic end of the kingdom of Israel left the whole burden of the special mission of the Hebrews upon the southern kingdom. Up to this time most of their religious activity had been found in the north. In the south the orderly sequence of rulers and the regular service of the Temple served to stifle in a measure those manifestations which at once indicate and produce strong feeling. The conflict between good and evil stimulated the former as well as the latter. If in Israel were found the greatest depths of degradation, there also were the heights of exaltation. If it produced the oppressor Ahab and the bloody-minded Jehu, it produced also Elijah and Hosea. Where the deep valleys are there also are the mountain tops.

It must be understood that the whole population of Israel was not transported into Assyria; on the contrary, almost all of the working classes remained. The "lost tribes" of Israel are a myth; there never were any "lost tribes." But the few thousands who were taken away were men whose force of character had made them leaders of the people, both in church and in state; so that when they were removed national existence was no longer possible. As already indicated, the foreigners who were settled among those who remained in Israel were gradually assimilated to the native population and adopted its worship. They survive to this day in a hundred or two of Samaritans who still continue their form of worship in northern Palestine; but they have never been recognized by their neighbors of Judah.

We return a little to follow the fortunes of the southern kingdom. The long reign of Azariah-Uzziah (II. Kings, xv., 1 and 32; also II. Chronicles, Chap. 26) is in large measure parallel with that of Jeroboam II. in Israel. We have seen that Judah became subject to Israel during the reign of Amaziah, the predecessor to Azariah. This condition probably continued throughout the following reign, though it may have amounted to no more than nominal suzerainty and a small tribute. Edom continued subject to Judah, and several of the Philistine cities were captured. Hebrew colonies were settled in the new possessions. Commerce was carried on with the far east by the way of the Red Sea. In spite of the subordinate position of the southern kingdom, therefore it was a time of great prosperity and internal peace. During a great part of his reign the king was a leper (II. Kings, xv., 5; and II. Chronicles, chapter 26). The priestly author of Chronicles attributes his affliction to an attempt on the part of Azariah to personally perform the offices of priest. (II. Chronicles, xxvi., 16-21.) It is not improbable that some quarrel with the priests is the basis of this story. The right of a king to serve as a priest was not disputed in the early days of the monarchy except in the case of Saul. (II. Samuel, xxiv., 25; I. Kings, iii., 3, 4; I. Kings, viii., 22 and 62; I. Kings, xii., 32, 33.) The author of Kings says of Azariah that "he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." (II. Kings, xv., 3.) Even in Chronicles, David and Solomon are recorded as having offered sacrifice and that without criticism. (I. Chronicles, xxi., 26; II. Chronicles, vii., 7.) The writer, however, condemns the same act on the part of Azariah.

"In accordance with the inexorable Hebrew custom (concerning lepers) which made no exception even for a king, Azariah was obliged to dwell in a separate palace. His son, Jotham, assumed charge of the court and discharged the public duties of the king as judge of the realm. (Kent.)

Jotham became king in name as well as in fact on the death of his father, but lived only two years thereafter, leaving to his son, Ahaz, a heritage of impending danger. It was at this time that the coalition of Syrian estates with Israel against Assyria was formed, and an attempt was made to force the king of Judah to join them. Jerusalem was besieged, and a strong party, even within the city, favored submission. This crisis brought to the front Isaiah, the greatest of Hebrew prophets. With the unfailing instinct of the whole series of prophets he pronounced against all intermeddling in foreign affairs. There should be no submission to the allies on the one hand, no appeal to Assyria on the other. And his policy was that of common sense also, as seen from the vantage ground of later generations. For a small, weak state like Judah there could be no safety except in isolation and insignificance. But the Jewish king was deaf to the voice of the prophet and to reason alike. Once more the Temple was despoiled, and its riches were sent to the Assyrian king to buy his interference. Tiglath-Pileser came promptly and the immediate danger was at an end. But Judah was now subject to Assyria. Even the ceremonial of the Temple was altered to conform to the manner of the new master; and even worse things than this are to be laid at the door of king Ahaz. "He walked in the ways of the king of Israel, yea, and made his son to pass through the fire according to the abominations of the heathen." (II. Kings, xvi., 3.) This is the formula for the sacrifice of children, and shows us that we are still dealing with an undeveloped state of society in which the ideal of God is so degraded that men hoped to buy his favor by the slaughter even of their children.

It is strange to note such barbarous rites in the same land and time that produced Isaiah, that master-prophet, who so unsparingly condemned the merely ceremonial worship, and who proclaimed righteousness as the sole necessity (Isaiah, chapter one). But such contrasts are not rare in history. It is to the straying sheep that the shepherd is sent. It is in the midst of evil that the voice of the prophet is clearest. It is a part of the mystery of the world that God's truth, spoken in the multitudes, reaches so few; that the multitude tramples upon their message and despises the messenger. Remembering this, let us not turn aside from messages which men deride. Among the despised we are most likely to find gods, prophets. That any message meets the ready applause of the crowd, is of itself a proof that it is no much-needed message. "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you; for so did their fathers to the false prophets." (Luke, vi., 26.)

EXCUSE-MAKING.

Sunday School Times.

A FRENCH woman, Madame De Stael, showed more wit than wisdom in saying, "If we knew everything, we should excuse everything." Madame De Stael believed in God, and that he knows everything, but she hardly would have dared to speak of him as excusing everything. The Scriptures represent him as condemning no less than justifying, and they represent the fact as one of the grounds of our faith and hope in him.

The disposition to seek excuses and "make allowances" for everything is the mischievous exaggeration of that spirit of humanity and sympathy which laudably characterizes our time. As in so many other instances, the pendulum which once was swung too far towards severity in judgment, is in danger of swinging as much too far towards a maudlin pity for great offenders against right. We set ourselves to right the harsh judgments of the past, and end in obliterating all lines of moral distinction. Even Judas Iscariot finds an apologist in De Quincey. The Borgias have been defended by some over-zealous champions of the papacy, although wiser scholars of that communion decline the undertaking. Benedict Arnold has found an apologist in an American citizen. Every bad king of England, except John, has found some one to wield the whitewash brush. Judge Jeffries has been held up to our admiration as a fairly just and upright interpreter of the law. And there seems no limit to the amount of sympathy that has been available for the authors of the Reign of Terror.

The outcome of such writing of history is to obscure all moral standards, and to make a study which should be truly ethical in its influence exactly the reverse. History sorely needs a return to the model set by the prophets and prophetic historians of Israel, who never feared to give a scoundrel his right name. The spirit of moral judgment which pervades these Hebrew annals is that of the Ten Words of Sinai. Good men are rebuked for their faithlessness, and bad men are pilloried for their iniquity, in a way which satisfies the conscience. Lord Acton says that the revival of such a spirit is the crying need of modern historical literature.

Worse even than this reduction of the villains of the past to a tolerable and neutral gray by whitewash is the habit of excusing ourselves for our moral delinquencies. "They all with one consent began to make excuse," the Gospel says. Their excuse-making is emphasized as the index of a spiritual condition utterly alien from that of the kingdom of God.

They had such excellent, solid, and grave reasons for not heeding the summons. They were serious people, those of the parable, with a sense of life's responsibilities and an eye on its important affairs. It was, in truth, no wonder they could not come, when they had so many things of greater importance than feasting to give attention to. But their excuses shut them out, and not one of them is to be allowed a place in the kingdom. For the spirit of the kingdom is to lay stress on the claims of others upon us, while excuse making does exactly the opposite. It puts forward the comfort, the convenience, or the whim of the individual, as a reason for counting him exempt from some duty he does not like. It gives to such reasons for neglect of duty a force we never would give them for a neglect of pleasure. It keeps a man from church because of slight indispositions and disturbances of the weather, which would not detain him from business. On a plea of needful economy it shuts purses against claims of benevolence or religion which open quickly enough to outlay on social follies. It finds much fault in teachers and preachers, and little but what is admirable in actors and singers. In fact, it is a mental habit, which amounts to seeing with one set of eyes the pleasures which draw us, and with quite another the duties which disturb or weary us.

The worst of all habits is the making excuses for ourselves to ourselves. We resolve our faults, and even our sins, into the effect of bad influences on us, or a bad heredity from our forefathers. Or we set them over against the virtues we credit ourselves with possessing, and find a comfortable balance in our favor. Or we regard our evil act or our neglect as an isolated fact, which stands in no real relation to our character. Or we compare ourselves with our neighbors, and find we are "no worse than other people," but perhaps a trifle better.

Blessed is the man who has not acquired the excuse habit! He must be one who has learned to live in the presence of the divine holiness, and to feel its constant summons to come nearer perfection. He must be one who realizes that a single cherished and unconquered evil keeps us in touch with the whole body of evil, so that he "who stumbles on one point is become guilty of all." And he must have learned that the whole energy of divine grace is at his service, to overcome his innate or acquired disposition to evil, and to remake him in the image of the Son of God. The humility that comes of self-knowledge and the hope that comes of experience will keep us from the excuse-making habit!

THE beauty of work depends on how we meet it, —whether we arm ourselves each morning to attack it as an enemy that must be vanquished before night-fall, or whether we open our eyes with the sunrise to welcome it as an approaching friend, who will keep us delightful company all day, and who will make us feel at evening that the day was well worth its fatigues. —Lucy Larcom.

"LIVE not for selfish aims. Live to shed joy on others, for no joy is ever given freely forth that does not have quick echo in the giver's own heart."

LIFE'S CLOSING YEARS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

I WOULD invite all to a perusal or reperusal of your editorial of Eleventh month 4, and I add a kindly greeting to those near my own age. Dear comrades in life's closing voyage, may we be favored to feel the abiding presence of a holy, calming Power, making the entrance to the harbor the best part of our voyage. Life has its compensations. As the outward sight dims, the Father wills that the spirit's sight may grow clearer, beholding loftier heights and views of expanding beauty. As the outward ear grows dull, the inward ear may hear finer and more harmonious strains. The soul need never grow old, but live on and on in perpetual youth, its steps never tottering, but moving always in fullness of strength and rejoicing. Then we would be helping to confirm the faith of the dear youth in the Life Eternal. JEREMIAH J. STARR.

Fawn Grove, Pa.

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

"SPIRITUAL life" is that which distinguishes man from the lower animals, and that which man has in likeness with God. All the lower animals have physical life, the life of the body. All the lower animals have intelligent life, the life of the intellect or the mind. We may call this, on the one hand, reason, on the other hand, instinct; but we cannot define the line between the two, so that a child or the wisest of men can distinguish it. Man alone, while having physical and intellectual life, has also spiritual life (not the religious sense merely, but spiritual life), that which enables him to conceive of spirit, to think of spirit, to commune with spirit, to reach out after union with spirit. This is the one sure line which separates the lowest and most primitive, or most degraded, of men from the best and most highly trained of the lower animals. In the possession of "spiritual life" man is formed in the image or likeness of God.

In the recognition and cultivation of his spiritual life man employs and develops his God-like nature. A man may train and develop his physical nature so as to be the champion athlete of the city or country or universe, and yet be only on the plane of the bull or lion or elephant. A man may train and develop his intellectual nature, even on the religious side, and yet be nothing more than an intellectual animal, informed about the Bible as a book, and at the very front in all questions of higher or lower criticism, and ready to discuss the world's religions as the world's religions, yet without having exercised or brought into play his spiritual life or nature. The man who wants to cultivate his spiritual life, to be dominated by it, to manifest it to others, to be in closer fellowship with God, and to be more like God, can do so, will do so, and others will be aware of that fact. There are men who have cared for and developed their bodies so that their physical power manifests itself, who have trained and exercised their minds until their intellects are superior, yet whose spiritual life is prominent above all because it is most valued and most exercised. We ought to be that sort of persons, and yet more so. That should be our direction of aspiration and of striving.—[Sunday School Times.]

"ADVANCED CIVILIZATION!"

New York Letter to Philadelphia Ledger, Eleventh month 6.

IT needs no sworn testimony to prove that this is a "wide open town." All that one needs is to walk through the city, and his eyes will give him all the evidence he requires. In fact, there is little or no effort at concealment. Liquor can be obtained at all hours, and on all days pool rooms are in full blast. As was reported on Friday, the Grand Jury has presented a list of eighty-four of them, and nobody is surprised. Vice walks openly through the principal streets of the city. Moreover, New York has become the home of prize fighting. Two champion fights have been held here this year, besides a large number of minor contests. At the fight on Friday night the Deputy Chief of Police was present throughout, and saw one of the contestants have two of his ribs broken, and the other so damaged that the blood flowed freely, but let the affair go on to a finish, while high officials of the city received the bulletins of the fight, round by round, at the Democratic Club. The boss of the city, Richard Croker, made no concealment of his interest in the encounter.

Now there are many good people who say that these things have to be in a great cosmopolitan city like New York. They argue that a big city cannot be governed like a small town, and that a liberal policy must be allowed. Even vice, they say, should be assigned a district, and as for prohibiting the sale of liquor even for one day, that is worse than useless. People will fight and gamble, they declare, and there must be a place even for prize fights and gambling. The most that can be done is to regulate and restrict these evils. This is what Tammany means by "personal liberty." That organization publicly champions not exactly a "wide open" town, but a town that is at least open. It abhors nothing so much as Puritanism. While there may be something in that view of the case—I am not arguing the matter, but merely stating facts—there is one thing that is utterly abhorrent to all good people, and that is, laying tribute on these evils of a great city, forcing them to pay liberally for their privileges to the political parties and bosses. That is the greatest evil of all, as wherever it exists it degrades politics to the lowest level.

NOT to murmur and complain at the mysteries of God's providence, but the more diligently to perform known duties, is the will of God concerning us. We may the more reasonably expect him to clear up mysteries when He sees us careful, whatsoever He saith unto us, to do it.—Ford.

YOUR cheerfulness and courage will add warmth to your manners. You will grow more winning unawares. A gracious manner, full of hospitality and cheerful composure, suggests self-poise, self-respect, and self-command, qualities that we all admire.—Dorothy Quigley.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, ELEVENTH MONTH 18, 1899.

Please address business letters to "Friends' Intelligencer, N. W. Cor. 15th and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia, Box 924."

Communications and contributions to "Editors Friends' Intelligencer," same address. Please add "Box 924"—as above.

"STRENUOUSNESS" IN LIFE.

It is a feature in our modern life that power, strength, the expression of force, and the exercise of control seem to be above all things desired. This is one explanation of the absorbing effort to get rich. Riches mean power. Money gives the ability to do what one wishes. With it, one may say to the mountain be thou removed, and to the river flow thou in a new place. With it, indeed, one may dominate his neighborhood, his town, his city, his state.

The expression of strength, however, is sought by other means than money. If one is not rich, he may be physically energetic, active, and dominant. The desire for this is seen, no doubt, in the "sportsmen" who go to shoot "game," and in the soldiers who go to war. Such trials of physical strength and endurance as may thus be obtained answer the demand for what is called by one of the governors of our American commonwealths "the strenuous life."

That life should be strenuous, in a proper sense, has long been declared. It is no new thing to preach the doctrine of a real and an earnest life, as opposed to a careless and an indifferent, or an indolent and sensuous one.

But what is it to be "strenuous"? The governor whom we have referred to regards fighting as the most effectual expression of strenuousness, and counsels mothers to teach their children to fight. Is it possible that earnestness is to be expressed in no other way than this, or at least in no way so fit and appropriate?

There are many strenuous people, undoubtedly, who do not fight, either with their fists, or with guns and swords. The earnestness of life, certainly, is not monopolized by those who wish to maim or to kill their fellow-men. There are, beyond question, men and women who are strenuous beyond the measure even of the soldier who turns the handle of the machine gun, or the captain who swims a river with his sword in his teeth. No one will find it difficult, if the task is essayed, to recall those in our own experience whose life has been strenuous indeed, though it did not include a share in wars and fightings. To assume that these only afford a field for a real and earnest life is an assumption wholly unjustified and absurd.

Nor do we need, for the present purpose, to speak of those men and women who have displayed in the field of morals, or of social redemption and elevation, a sublime self-sacrifice and a noble devotion. The name of these is legion, their place in history secure, and our estimate of them not to be altered. No one can make Charles the Fifth, with all his armies, greater than Luther, or the militant dukes of Florence greater than Savonarola. If we turn from these altogether, and consider only those who have distinguished themselves by toil, by hardship, through dangers incurred on sea or land, it is evident that the physical strenuous life itself may be displayed by others than those who ride over and trample down other men in battle. The lives of the sailors, the light-house keepers, the coast life-guards, the firemen, the explorers, even the men whose unrelaxed vigilance carry the great trains of people over the iron rails,—all these show examples where earnestness of purpose is expressed to the full, and where high endeavor and brave perseverance unite.

Why, then, should any one teach the children of 1899—who will be the men and women of the opening years of the new century—that to be strenuous means to fight? Why should any one listen patiently to such abominable teaching?

[In some Notes published in the Friend (Philadelphia), from William B. Harvey, who is in company with Joseph S. Elkinton visiting the Doukhobors, he says: "There seems to be strong pressure brought against the party in power [Liberals] by their opponents, for the bringing of the Doukhobors into the country; much is said against them, in various ways, the object being for political effect."

What a vile thing that is which "for political effect" will traduce a poor, persecuted people, who are "void of offense" against all men, and who, indeed, are persecuted on that very account!

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON, speaking recently of colored ministers in the South, described one "not far from Tuskegee," who preached "plain doctrine,"—that is, he was candid as well as earnest in his exhortations to his people to lead a better life. He was raising corn and potatoes, and so was quite independent. And so, said B. T. W., "he had the advantage that he could preach what he believed, for he could support himself if the people did not like his plain doctrine."

What a volume in that piece of description! The minister who can give his message candidly is he who, like Paul, ministers to his own wants.

BIRTHS.

CARTER.—In Byberry, Pa., Tenth month 14, 1899, to William Henry and Elmina M. Carter, a daughter, who is named Helen S.

MARRIAGES.

COLES—COLLINS.—At the home of the bride, Eleventh month 1, 1899, under the care of Chester Monthly Meeting of Friends, N. J., Samuel R. Coles, son of the late William and Susanna R. Coles, of Colestown, N. J., and Lydia L., daughter of Charles and Elizabeth L. Collins, of Moorestown, N. J.

COLLINS—BRADDOCK.—Fourth-day, Eleventh month 8, 1899, at the residence of the bride's parents, Medford, N. J., by Friends' ceremony, under the care of Medford Monthly Meeting, Mary A. Braddock, daughter of Edmund and Hannah L. Braddock, and Wilmer Collins, son of Charles and Elizabeth L. Collins, of Moorestown, N. J.

DEATHS.

BEAN.—At College Park, California, Tenth month 31, 1899, Elizabeth Bean, in her 98th year.

She was the mother of Joel Bean, of College Park, well known to many Friends. She was born in New Hampshire, Tenth month 3, 1802.

BENJAMIN.—Of paralysis, at his home in Benjaminville, Ill., Tenth month 18, 1899, John R. Benjamin, aged 75 years.

He was the founder of Friends' meeting, and the pioneer settler, at Benjaminville, a consistent Friend and a good man, coming into the Society by conviction, when quite young.

BETTLES.—At Morgan Park, Chicago, Eleventh month 10, 1899, William Bettles, aged 70 years; a member of the other body of Friends, an upright man, and of strict integrity, who adhered to the ancient customs and principles of Friends. Many of our members have found a kind welcome at his home.

CLIFT.—On Fourth-day, Tenth month 25, 1899, after a few hours' illness, at the home of Barclay J. Smith, in San Francisco, Cal., Mary A. Clift, in the 67th year of her age; a member with Friends in San Francisco, and a native of New York State.

HAINES.—In Media, Pa., Eleventh month 6, 1899, Amos W. Haines, in his 61st year; a member of Chester Monthly Meeting, Pa. Interment at Plymouth Friends' ground.

PARRISH.—Eleventh month 7, 1899, at his home, Colorado Springs, Col., Thomas Clarkson Parrish, aged 52 years, (less 10 days) eldest son of the late Edward and Margaret Hunt Parrish, of Philadelphia; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

For some years he was a member of the Colorado Legislature. His first wife was a granddaughter of the late James and Lucretia Mott.

SHOEMAKER.—Near Silcott's Springs, Loudoun county, Va., Eleventh month 12, 1899, after an illness of several weeks, Caroline T. Shoemaker, wife of the late Basil W. Shoemaker, in her 76th year.

She was the daughter of Spencer and Hephziba Thomas, of Upper Dublin, Montgomery county, Pa., both long since deceased; her home had been in Loudoun county, since her marriage, over fifty years ago. Of her children, ten in number, four sons and three daughters survive her.

DOUKHOBOR REPORT.

A FRIEND who sends us a contribution for the Doukhobor Fund, writes:

"Friends in particular should be interested in these worthy people, suffering as they do for their opposition to the war spirit, so prevalent at this time. If they (Friends) could be made to realize what it is to winter in this Northwest, short of food and clothing, I think they would feel like contributing liberally, according to their means."

A telegram from Joseph S. Elkinton, on the 12th, from the "North Colony" of the Doukhobors, eighty miles north of Yorkton, the nearest railway point, stated that he and his companion, William B. Harvey, were pursuing their journey to the different villages, and were well. (There are forty-five villages.) It had been a week since they left Yorkton.

It is intended to send in the car now loading at Philadelphia, a grist mill, with "burr" stones, and a small steam engine. Wm. B. Harvey writes that wheat can be had, at moderate cost, but they have not mills to grind it.

Russian-American dictionaries are called for. They are to be had in New York City, at about one dollar each, and Joseph Elkinton desires to forward a number in this car.

THE "INTELLIGENCER" FUND.

A. C. P., (per F. B. Ass'n),	$1.00
E. C., " " "	1.00
C. L., " " "	5.00
C., " " "	25.00
A. F., Chester, Pa.,	5.00
T. C., St. Thomas,	5.00
J. M. F.,	10.00

$52.00

Acknowledged last week 573.00

$625.00

Paid for supplies for sick and children, 550.

Balance in hand $75.00

A friend who was uncertain to whose order a check for the Fund should be drawn suggests that specific instructions be given. Please draw checks or the Doukhobors to the order of Howard M. Jenkins.

Acknowledgments above closed on Third-day morning, the 14th.

VACATION DAYS IN ENGLAND.

II.

DAYS ON ULLSWATER.

As I climbed down upon the guard's ladder from the top of the char-a-banc, in front of the Ullswater Hotel, I found my friend, the Principal of Dalton Hall, there to greet me. I had parted with him at Manchester in the middle of the Seventh month; it was now the 8th of the Eighth month. Meantime he and his family had come to spend a few weeks at Patterdale, on Ullswater.

However, it is true that Patterdale is not exactly on the Lake. It is southward a mile or more. My friend had rooms in a country house near a stream, the Goldrill, which flows northward into Ullswater. Near by is the post-office at Patterdale, on the coach-road which runs southward, over the Kirkston pass, to Ambleside, and northward—partly on the west shore of the Lake—to Troutbeck station, on the railway that passes east and west across the northern border of the Lake Country.

We walked, therefore, out of the pretty flower-gardens of the Hotel, up the road to Patterdale, and my luggage was sent presently to the lodging which my friend had secured for me at the post-office,—quite clean and pleasant it was, with the high fell rising steeply beside my chamber window, and where one felt especially safe, since the authority of the Queen, "V. R.," ruled the place.

Ullswater is a beautiful lake; some think it finer than Windermere or Derwentwater. The fells rise from the lake-edge at many places, and at others leave a modest margin of meadow or wood. It is seven and a half miles long. The water is dark and deep. There are a few islets, mere lumps of rock, with a stunted tree or two, and in some cases flowers or heather. A little steamboat plies back and forth from Pooley Bridge at the north end (whence there is a coach to Penrith on the railway already mentioned) to the little wharf in the grounds of the Ullswater Hotel, several times a day.

Now the pleasures of Ullswater, apart from that of congenial company—the greatest of all sublunary pleasures, in any place—are chiefly those to be found upon its surface. There is a little fleet of boats to be hired, and if one knows how to use an oar the course is plain. So on the very day of my arrival, after we had had luncheon, we set off for the lake, and were soon floating and rowing down to the northward. The little folks from Manchester enjoy the boats, and Olive and Richard each pulled resolutely at an oar, as often and as long as they could be prudently allowed. We landed on one of the islets, and the visitor amused them—mildly no doubt—by suggesting that possibly it might be the very one where Robinson Crusoe and Friday had their home, and that perhaps as we approached they had hastened to hide and draw in their rope-ladder.

Next day, though the weather had been so fine on the day of my arrival, it was again serene and beautiful, creating a gentle surprise as well as satisfaction, for rain is common in the Lake Region. There are places in it where the annual fall is over a hundred inches, nearly three times as much as in southern Pennsylvania. We were glad of the good weather, for it had been appointed that on this day our friends the Swarthmore professor of history and his wife should come over from Grasmere to Ullswater for the day. They had been enjoying the Wordsworth country to the full, and now were to come by the coach through Ambleside, and over the long, and high, and steep Kirkston Pass. It is so high that it is "said"—but probably not truly—that the rude little stone house at the top is the most elevated dwelling in England; it is so steep that, as is common whenever there is a climb on the coach-road, the coachman intimates how pleased he would be if the passengers should insist on getting down to walk awhile; and it is so long that the passengers begin to wonder when they have walked to the top whether an abatement should not be made in their fares.

So, when the sun was about as high as he would get that day, we all set off from the Goldrill house to walk southward up the slopes towards Brotherswater, to meet the coach and greet our visitors. To the right, but not the nearest of the fells, Helvellyn reared his head—mighty Helvellyn, with the dark brow, tallest of all these mountains but one, where the traveler (a Manchester man, a Friend), perished in the snow and fog, years ago, and the dog watched beside him, giving themes to Walter Scott, and to Wordsworth, and doubtless to many more. To the left there were slopes that descended into the valley, and there were haymakers busy at their work, for hay is cut on the farm lands in the vales among the fells, and this was just the time of its gathering.

The coaches presently began to appear, first one and then another, driving gaily by. We drew to one side and scanned their passengers—modestly yet firmly—looking for our visitors, and at last, when we had begun to fear they had failed us, here they were! The driver drew up, and alighting they walked with us back to luncheon. What a day! The air was pure and fresh, the sun shone, the sound of the mowers sharpening their scythes came from the hayfields, the mountains were all about, the little Goldrill flowed beside us on its way to the Lake, and here we were without anxiety at the moment for the progress of students or the production of newspapers.

The afternoon could not be long, for our friends must leave at four for their return, so we set off promptly after luncheon for a boat-ride, and rowing as far down as the time permitted, brought them back to the hotel grounds to take their coach back over the Kirkston Pass. They joined with us in saying how pleasant it had been. And why not?

Now the third day was to be my last on Ullswater. On Sixth-day morning (the 11th), early I must leave for Edinburgh. It was hardly likely that in the Scottish capital, or elsewhere, one would find Nature more kind. The sun again rose clear and beautiful on the 10th. No rain even yet! So we set out in the morning for a full day on the Lake. We would eat luncheon on its banks,—aye, and drink tea on them, as well. With such plans did we embark,—our friend, the Principal, and Margaret, and the little folks. We rowed—at least they did—down the Lake, we passed all the islets, getting no glimpse of Crusoe or of Friday, passed the place on the east shore, where on previous days there had been a tent or two of campers out, and pulled still on and away down to the west shore, almost midway of the Lake. Here we landed, and presently ate our luncheon, then rested and enjoyed a noon nap. There were haymakers in the meadows near by, women and men raking up the mildly-wilted grass,—for it dries only with hesitation, if not reluctance, in this moist, cool air,—and there were other boats out on the lake. We had, however, certain schemes in mind. We were to walk to Aira Force, and so see one of the beauties of Ullswater. And what is Aira Force, do you ask? A waterfall in a glen. It falls about eighty feet. The glen reminds you of Watkins. There was water coming over very finely,—a sufficient stream making the leap and dashing on the rocks below. And this is no mean thing in a waterfall, for plenty of people have gone to see "how the waters come down at Lodore," over by Derwentwater, filled with Southey's reiterations of their dashing, and splashing, and all that, and found hardly a drop sneaking over the brink. Aira Force is a beautiful fall with real water, and we did not begrudge the walk to it, though the sun beamed warmly down upon the road.

Resuming our voyage, we went on down the Lake. I could not help considering that we were going with the current, and that every mile we went away from home—from Goldrill House and Her Majesty's post-office—we must row back again against the current, but the Principal is a resolute commander, of the northern blood, whose ancestors it may well be were real Vikings, and we went on and on, passing new beauties of the fell side, seeing more and more lovely shadows and patches of sunlight on the heights, and saying again and again that it was delightful. A finer day, they—who know Ullswater well—said they had never seen on the lake, and of course I could say the same. We passed to the eastern shore, rounded a promontory, entered a little bay—perhaps

I should say a sound—at the head of which is Howtown, where the steamboat calls, and landed on a bold, wooded bank, to boil the water, make the tea, and so sustain nature until we could get home for supper. It was now coming on toward evening, the sun was behind the fell, the air was cooler, and we were glad to have the tea and the bread and butter. Once more we embarked, and clinging to the oars—two at a time, the editor trying to do a decent share—we pulled for the head of the lake. The sun was set, evening was come, but the long, soft twilight of latitude sixty-two north served us for tying up the boat, carrying the oars and cushions to the boat-house, and trudging back to supper. “What a day!” we all said again. H. M. J.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

MARY A. CLIFT, a member of the little colony of Friends who meet at Swarthmore Hall, on Harrison street, died quite suddenly at her temporary home in that city on Fourth-day, Tenth month 25. Hers had been an active, earnest life for the welfare of others. She had spent several years in missionary work on the West coast of Africa; also been engaged in the same work on the West coast of South America, as well as in Europe, and in many states of our own land. Her strong point was laboring among men in prisons, in charity homes, on the water front, and wherever sin and sorrow were most apparent. Her ministry and her work among Friends were very helpful and much appreciated.

She was laid away in Laurel Hill Cemetery on the 27th, a large concourse of Friends and friendly people gathering in Swarthmore Hall to pay respect to her memory. Many earnest testimonies were borne to her worth. She was careful to maintain the plainness of Friends in dress and language, and to encourage those around her to do the same. As she lay in her coffin, carefully dressed by loving hands, in her gray dress, with plain cap and kerchief, it brought back many home memories to old and young who seldom see the Quaker garb in this Western city.

She was in her sixty-seventh year; was well known to Friends of Ohio and Indiana, where she labored long and earnestly as a minister and faithful worker for the Master. Her life, if written, would make an interesting chapter in the history and work of Friends. She leaves one son, Clifford, who is an engineer on a deep water vessel, but was in port at the time of his mother's death.

The Semi-Annual Conference of Friends was held at College Park, near San José, (sometimes called “Joel Bean's Meeting”), on Seventh-day, the 4th instant. It is something like our quarterly meetings: the forenoon session is devoted to worship; a warm lunch, or dinner, is served under the trees in the yard, and then a business session is held. Many interesting subjects were discussed and advanced, outside of the routine meeting business. Several of the professors and teachers of Leland Stanford University are members of this meeting, and take part in its conferences. R. Esther Smith, who is engaged with “The Silent Workers” of San Francisco, in the work among mothers and children, was present by invitation, and to present the character of this work, which she did with much ability, interesting all present, and receiving many words of sympathy and encouragement and some material aid for the work.

This Company (the Silent Workers) has largely increased its room in Sunshine District during the past month, adding to the work already begun a “Day Home,” or “Baby Farm,” where 100 infants and little children can be nicely cared for during the day, while the mothers go to work; also a reading room for girls and boys; an office or headquarters, and lodgings for the workers.

Six young women are constantly employed in this work and about forty volunteers give an afternoon once a week. If any young woman Friend among the readers of the INTELLIGENCER, who is a trained kindergartner, or capable of teaching physical culture, and assisting in other helpful branches of educational work among the needy ones of the earth, desires for any reason to spend a year or more in California, she will meet a welcome response by addressing The Silent Workers, Sunshine Hall, 936 Harrison street, San Francisco, Cal.

Friends are much interested in the prospective visit of Isaac and Ruth Wilson, of Bloomfield, Canada, to the Pacific Coast. A warm welcome awaits them among all branches of Friends.

Arthur H. Dowe, who has mingled somewhat with Friends in the West, started East a few days ago. He feels an urgent call to the mission field in India, but expects to remain on the Atlantic Coast for the winter, and become better acquainted with the various bodies of Friends. He is a strong advocate of the George Fox doctrine, and was first drawn to Friends by reading his life. B. J. S.

An inquiry has been made of us concerning the location of Friends' meeting-house in San Francisco. It is held at Swarthmore Hall, on Harrison street, between First and Second streets, four blocks from the corner of Second and Market streets, First-day morning at 11 o'clock. A Union Sabbath School (non-sectarian) is held at Sunshine Hall, 934 Harrison street, on First-day afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Abington Quarterly Meeting was held at Byberry, Pa., on the 9th instant. The day was pleasant, and the attendance about as usual. In the meeting for worship, Joseph B. Livezey, of Mt. Royal, N. J., spoke at some length, and Samuel S. Ash, Nathaniel Richardson, and others, rather briefly. In the meeting for business the chief item was the reporting of names proposed for the Committee in charge of the Quarterly Meeting Home, at Norristown; they were approved.

Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting was held at Race Street on the 7th instant. The attendance was about as usual. Men's meeting, after separation for business, was small. Samuel B. Haines, of New York, and Joel Borton spoke. In men's meeting Isaac H. Hillborn was reappointed Clerk, and Harrison Streeter

Assistant Clerk. The committee on the provision of lunch at Valley meeting-house, at the time the Quarterly Meeting meets there (once a year, in the Eighth month), reported that Valley Friends did not desire to make any change at present. The Philanthropic Committee reported on the work undertaken at 151 Fairmount avenue, Philadelphia (described in the INTELLIGENCER, Eleventh month 4), and the meeting granted $200 in aid of it.

John Orr Green, an Elder, with a minute from Belfast Monthly Meeting, Ireland, was acceptably in attendance at Race Street meeting, Philadelphia, last First-day evening, also at Green Street in the morning.

It was agreed by both branches of the Yearly Meeting at Baltimore that in future the meetings will be held in joint session, the trial of the new system in the three sessions this year having been satisfactory.

WILLIAM SAUNDERS' DOUKHOBOR VISIT.

Dr. William Saunders, an intimate friend of James T. Shinn, of Philadelphia, is in charge of the Central Experimental Farm, at Ottawa, Canada, as head of the Agricultural Department of the Dominion. He has recently visited the Doukhobors in their new settlements, and as his testimony is impartial and reliable, we quote at some length from a letter to James T. Shinn, dated Tenth month 8, 1899.

I WANTED you also to know how greatly these long-suffering people appreciate the kindness shown them, by not only the Canadian Government and people, but also by the generous aid sent by the good Friends in Philadelphia, and in England.

I went to this district partly to see the country, and partly to see how far I could make our own agricultural work beneficial to these people, and I can now see many ways in which I can help them, and shall be glad to do all that is in my power to further their interests, and I know that the Canadian people will be willing to sanction any reasonable expenditure sufficient to keep these worthy people from suffering. They do not, however, ask for help, and in the pleasure they feel in being free from persecution they seem happy and contented with the most frugal diet. I feel sure that in a very few years they will become a prosperous community, and henceforth live happily in the enjoyment of freedom.

On Sunday I made the necessary arrangements for a start northward; on Monday morning we took provisions for ourselves and the horses for three days, a large fur robe, and a pair of heavy blankets, so that we might be able to sleep out if necessary. I also got an order for an interpreter, who lives fifteen miles out on the trail, and is employed by the Government, to go with us to the first two villages, and after that we were to be our own interpreters and get along as best we might with words and pantomime. The first village we (that is my driver Jack and myself, with the interpreter) stopped at was about thirty miles from Yorkton, and the second about forty miles. As it was now getting dusk when we reached the second village, I thought at first we would spend the night with the Doukhobors, but after seeing the conditions of this village, I reconsidered the matter.

This camp has as yet but few houses, and each house is a single room used for all purposes—eating, cooking, and sleeping. In the first one visited we found about forty people in all, mostly women and children. In the next house they were less numerous, about twenty-five in all. In the third there were five horses at one end, and about a dozen, more or less, of children at the other. The larger building would be, I think, about 25 by 35 feet, the smaller ones about 20 by 30. The furniture in all the Doukhobor houses is home-made, and consists of a few stools and one or two benches. The beds are made with a continuous row of poplar poles arranged along both sides of the room, about two feet from the floor. On these some hay is laid, and on the hay a thick piece of coarse felt, and on this felt such bed-clothes as are available. In the buildings densely populated, a second tier of beds is built, and the people lie with their heads to the wall and their feet out.

I thought the prospects poor of either a quiet or comfortable night at either of these places, so I talked the matter over with Jack the driver, and we finally concluded to push on to Fort Pelley, which was eleven miles distant, leaving our interpreter with the Doukhobors. It was cloudy and very dark, so that we were often unable to see the horses' heads, but we kept the trail without any mishap, and about 11 we approached the Assiniboine river. I never liked fording a river in the dark, but Jack had been over this trail a number of times, and so we started, and in a few minutes we were over, and in ten or fifteen more we were at the Fort. The Factor, Mr. McBeth, had gone to bed, but we roused him up and got him to take us in. We had driven 60 miles that day, much of it over rough trail, and being tired I was soon asleep. At 8.30 next morning we were ready for a fresh start. About 11 we passed through one or two other Doukhobor camps but did not find any one with whom we could communicate, so we pushed further on and forded the Swan river, over the roughest ford I ever saw, the bottom being made up of a succession of big boulders which threatened every moment to upset our rig, and tumble us into the very rapid stream. We got safely over, after which a drive of two or three miles brought us to another village where we knew there lived a Doukhobor boy who could speak some English, Fred Ivan by name. His father was Ivan Ivan, who left Russia some months before the general exodus took place, and resided at Purleigh, near London: there he learned some English and in part adopted their ways of living. I found Fred to be a very bright boy about (I should think) 14 or 15 years of age. He was two months in Winnipeg last winter, and learnt what English he knows while there. His sister, some two or three years younger, also spoke some English. The father and mother are very nice people, and very hospitable, as far as it is possible for them to show hospitality. Before I had quite exhausted Fred Ivan's stock of English, a Russian young lady appeared on the scene, Miss Welastchikina, who is a physician, a graduate of the University at Berne, in Switzerland; she spoke English fairly well, and from her I learned much of the condition of the people.

They are all vegetarians and as far as I could learn none of them will eat meat. Their fare at present is very meager; dry bread made from the cheapest grade of flour, soup made with flour and water, with cabbage, beets, and onions, was as far as I could find out, the fare of most of the people; but in some instances they had potatoes. I did not find butter, cheese, or eggs in any of the settlements, but I did not hear a word of complaint. I think Ivan Ivan's settlement is perhaps about as well off as most of the villages, and there I got fuller particulars from the nice little lady, the Russian Doctor, than I could get elsewhere. In that community there were 90 souls, seventeen of the men were away working on the railways and among farmers, earning from $1.25 to $1.50 per day; these men have remitted to their several villages from $20 to $25 a month each, and from the money thus earned a stock of flour is being laid in, sufficient for winter. They also buy such supplies as they need in building their houses, such as windows, hinges for doors, and more or less lumber. In Ivan Ivan's village there are four horses and a colt, and one cow,—I think horses enough to furnish one for each family there. I inquired from the wife of Ivan Ivan as to the share of their family of the milk of this cow, and was told it was a small cow, not giving much milk, and for their family of seven, five children and themselves, they had a teacupful night and morning! Of fowls they had one hen and one cock, so I did not inquire further as to the supply of fresh eggs. They seemed very careful of such animals as they have, but they must have more before long.

They have got a good deal of land broken, about 100 acres at Ivan Ivan's village, but the men were most of them were absent, [in the spring, at the time of arrival] and the horses were engaged in bringing in supplies most of the time, and about one journey to Yorkton, 90 miles and return 90 miles, is all they can do in a week. The women undertook to do most of the plowing. It took (to use the language in which it was given me) seven pairs of women to each plow. I inquired how much of the 100 acres I saw had been plowed by the women, and was told that they had done the larger part of it. The land is good, but it will not be in very good shape for seeding next spring; still I have no doubt they will get a fair crop from it.

The houses they are building are warm and comfortable, and they have plenty of wood for fuel on their lands. They will also, I think, get in a fair supply of potatoes. The women are going out to work, to help settlers, wherever there are any, within twenty miles of the villages, and while it will take a good deal of food to supply 5,000 people,—which is about the number of Doukhobors in that part of the country,—they seemed very contented, and I did not hear a word of complaint and all seemed busy doing something.

I left that settlement on Tuesday afternoon and went north and east, which led us near some of the other villages, but having no interpreter I did not think I could gain much further information; besides

Dr. Welastchkina had promised to write me and give me particulars regarding the other villages. I learnt from her that she was much in need of medical supplies, and on reaching Winnipeg yesterday I reported this need to the proper authorities, and made arrangements to have the necessary supplies sent on without delay. It seems much more difficult to help a community of vegetarians in this country than a community of meat-eaters, but I think they would prefer to starve than eat meat. They are just the sort of stuff of which martyrs are made.

It would take too long to tell the story of our adventures after leaving Ivan Ivan's, but early Wednesday afternoon we reached a little frontier town in the Dauphin district, tired and hungry, as we had left everything we could leave behind us with the Doukhobors. The latter part of the journey was very rough, over new trails through a wooded country, where the trees were not cut very close to the ground, the stumps being left a foot or more high, and so thick that it was not possible in driving to avoid more than a part of them. Although pitched about in every direction, I escaped without injury, except to one of my fingers, which in driving over an extra high stump got jammed between the wheel and the vehicle. Fortunately I had a handkerchief convenient, which I tore up and bound the protruding flesh and staunched the blood. It was very painful for about an hour, but afterwards the pain subsided, and it has given me very little trouble since.

I had something over fifty miles of driving in the Dauphin country, then took train at the town of Dauphin on Friday morning, and reached Winnipeg that night. Next morning I reported to the Government officers the condition in which I found these people and Mr. McCreary, the chief officer, promised to have the medical supplies sent on at once. He also told me that ten or twelve more cows were on their way to the settlements, and he had that morning received a telegram from some of the Friends in Philadelphia to buy a car-load of potatoes, and a car of onions, and forward them to the settlements. I did not know until I visited the district that the Friends in Philadelphia and in England had done so much to help these worthy and persecuted people. But there I learnt of the kind visits of Joseph S. Elkinton, William Evans, [Job S. Gidley], and Eliza H. Varney, and of the very substantial help which has been received, for all which these poor people feel truly grateful. The Canadian Government has, I learn, much exceeded the sum which was placed in the estimates, and which was then thought to be sufficient, but considerably more yet must be done before these good people can be quite independent.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says: "The publisher of a local trade paper has just received an inquiry from Smyrna, Turkey, for ready-made frame houses or cottages of two stories, with veranda on the first floor, shingle roof, either painted or white, complete in every detail, excepting the window panes. They must have from three to five rooms, not counting the servants' quarters and range in price from $200 to $1,000 and upward. They must be shipped 'knocked down.' From 1,000 to 2,000 houses a year will be ordered."

THE REVIVAL OF POLYGAMY.

ATTENTION has been sharply called by the election of Brigham H. Roberts as member of Congress from Utah, to the revival of polygamy. He has, it is stated, "at least three wives," all of whom he has married "since the Edmunds anti-polygamy law of 1882, or since the Congressional anti-polygamy law of 1862." He was convicted of living with plural wives, and was imprisoned upon sentence pronounced Fifth month 1, 1889.

Petitions against the seating of Roberts, on account of this, are being widely distributed and signed. They will be presented to the House, when it meets on the 4th of next month.

The League for Social Service, whose offices are in New York City, (105 East 22d street), and of which Josiah Strong is president, has interested itself in this subject very earnestly, and has prepared and circulated a series of Anti-Mormon leaflets, seven in print herewith, (by courtesy of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society), showing those portions of the West in which the Mormon power is strongest. The centre, of course, is at Salt Lake City; Wyoming, Idaho, Nevada, Arizona, and New Mexico are largely under control; and Oregon, California, and Colorado are to some extent influenced.

AN AGED FRIEND'S REVERIE.

SOME of us can still enjoy the feast of reason; our nerves still tingle with pleasure, still respond to the beautiful in nature; the noble aspiration and the kindly thought still charm as in youth. The soul never grows old. As time progresses we expand our wings, and rise into the clearer atmosphere of Faith and Love that emanate from the throne of Divine Majesty.

Jesus Christ met his disciples not with cruel condescension that swept their self-respect away, but lifted them to his own level, imbuing their minds with his own elevated ideals, increasing their confidence in the good and true, encouraging them to be like himself, at one with the Father—his Father and our Father. He recognized their aptitude for the work required; in the ability of each to be his messenger to promulgate the Truth revealed by the All-Father, the glad tidings that the prodigal should return to be received with joy, and in my Father's house are many mansions.

How blessed it is when, with love richly freighted, we can go down the stream of time and meet Eternity unappalled!

M. J. G.

West Chester, Pa.

CONSIDERING all the blundering, all the suffering of our brave soldiers, all the loss of precious lives, all the vast expenditure of treasure in efforts to maintain the dubious title which Spain gave the United States, on paper, to the Philippines, would it not be more decorous and seemly to forego all future reference to "Providential interference," and to regard the entire Philippine business as one directed by a merely human agency? That would seem to be, at least, more reverent and more in harmony with demonstrable facts.—[Philadelphia Ledger.]

HOBSON CITY, the new town in Alabama founded by and for the use of the colored race, has its charter, its Mayor, its Council, and city officers, but it lacks the wherewithal to make it go. It has no money, and as no taxes can be assessed until next year, the Mayor has asked for voluntary contributions to meet absolute expenses.

ALTHOUGH more wells have been drilled in the Indiana district this year than in any previous twelve months, the State Gas Inspector reports that there still remain 250 square miles of untouched territory, and that scarcely one-third of the available gas-field has been thoroughly drilled over.

THE MORMON "OCTOPUS."

number, in which the whole question is discussed, and the methods of the Mormon missionaries, the present attitude of Mormonism, its political power, its "articles of faith," its history, etc., are all set concisely forth for popular reading.

One of those who have given special attention to the subject is Dr. John Eaton, formerly United States Commissioner of Education, and later president of Marietta College, Ohio. General Eaton has reprinted in a pamphlet a series of articles which he recently wrote for the Christian Herald, in which he sets forth the evidence which compels him to believe that Mormonism, including polygamy, is a most serious menace to the country.

The number and the activity of the missionaries sent out by the Mormon church are certainly very remarkable. From Brooklyn as a centre it is stated that as many as 140 have been operating, and from Chattanooga, Tenn., as a centre as high as 600. For the year 1897 the claim was made that 63,370 adherents had been added to the church.

Regarding it as an "octopus" in society and in politics, an illustration has been made, which we

LITERARY NOTES.

HEADLEY BROS., London, have just issued new editions of the two books by Edward Backhouse and Charles Tylor, "Early Church History" and "Witnesses for Christ." These books originated with the late Edward Backhouse, a Friend, of Sunderland, England, who died in 1879. The materials for them were mostly collected by him, and then were arranged and edited by Charles Tylor, whose historical writings are well known.

The present edition of "Early Church History" is the fourth, the others having been issued in 1884, 1885, and 1892. The book treats of the rise of the Christian church in the period beginning with the Christian era, down to the death of Constantine. There is a Biographical Preface by Thomas Hodgkin, in which he explains the scope of the work, and points out its necessary limitations.

Of the other book, "Witnesses for Christ," this is the third edition, the others having been issued in 1887 and 1894. It treats of the history of the Christian church from the 4th to the 13th Century.

The design of Edward Backhouse was to examine the early history of Christianity from the view-point of a Friend. Practically all we have concerning it is the work of writers of the Roman church, and their treatment of the subject is that of religious partisans. They deal largely with "heresy" and "heretics," but who were those heretics? Some perhaps, as Thomas Hodgkin remarks, may have been wild and licentious doctrinaires, some Judaical reactionaries, some logical philosophers, oppressed with the world's troubles (as now), and longing to bring its affairs into harmony with God's laws, and some, again, were probably "honest assertors of the freedom and spirituality of the Gospel against the innovations which were turning the servants of the Church into a pretentious priesthood, and its armies into a tawdry pageant." All alike they were opposed and overcome by what finally hardened into the Papal system, and out of which the Protestant bodies have emerged.

These two books are sold at an almost nominal price—in England 1 shilling (25 cents), each, net. They would be of much use to students and First-day schools who are at work on the period referred to—down to the 13th Century.

A special edition of some of Whittier's poems has been made by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., those chosen being the "Tent on the Beach" collection, eleven in number, with "The Exiles," "Barclay of Ury," "The King's Missive," and "How the Women went from Dover," added. A dozen fine illustrations in photogravure has been made by Charles H. and Marcia O. Woodbury. The list of contents will convey to any one familiar with Whittier's poetry how much of a Friends' book this is.

After all, one of the best things in the whole book is the figure of Robert Pike, of Salisbury, who refused to obey the order of Major Waldron, of Dover, to whip the three Quaker women, "from town to town." What a good thing it is to have, in time of trial, a really brave man—or woman!

One of the noblest of Americans in public life—now, or at any time—is Senator George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts. Really, it seems surprising that his honorable and patriotic position is not the daily object of general honor. In last week's Independent he has a fine article on "Our duty to the Philippines." That journal has not in a good while used six of its pages so well. Would that the article might be everywhere read and regarded!

The books of Adeline D. T. Whitney have been well known and popular for many years. Beginning with "Faith Gartney's Girlhood," she has written quite an extended list, many of which have become standards on the shelves of family and library readers. Her latest work, "Square Pegs," is a story of much interest. (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.)

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

DOROTHY AND HER FRIENDS. By Ellen Olney Kirk. Pp. 351. $1.25. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co.)

THE TENT ON THE BEACH AND DRAMATIC LYRICS. By John Greenleaf Whittier. Pp. 110. Illustrated. $1.50. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co.)

THE LITTLE FIG-TREE STORIES. By Mary Hallock Foote. With illustrations by the Author. Pp. 183. $1.00. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co.)

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

CINCINNATI, O.—The Friends' Association of Cincinnati met at the home of W. H. McDowell, First-day afternoon, Tenth month 29. The meeting began with a few moments' silence; the minutes of the last meeting were read; and then the program for the afternoon was taken up.

Edna Hopkins read Whittier's beautiful poem, "First-day Thoughts," and Professor E. H. Foster gave an interesting talk on the subject, "If George Fox should come to Cincinnati." He followed the life of George Fox from the serious, sober-minded boy to the man of marked characteristics and strong personality; he told how he taught religious toleration and the equality of men, and then spoke of the good he could do for the world if he were here to-day in the midst of existing social and political conditions.

The discussion which followed Professor Foster's talk was led by E. H. Griest, and was participated in by several of the members. The reading of an article from FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER completed the program, and the meeting adjourned.

GRACE D. HALL, Secretary.

WOODSTOWN, N. J.—At a meeting of the Young Friends' Association, held at Woodstown, Eleventh month 21, the president read the 1st Psalm. Officers were elected to serve the coming year. Delegates were appointed to attend the General Conference of the 18th. We are looking forward to the holding of this meeting at Woodstown with pleasure.

The paper of the evening was read by Ellen M. Coles. It consisted of some history of our early Friends; of those who came to this country in the ship Welcome with William Penn, to escape persecution; of the many privations and hardships which they were willing to endure for the sake of religious freedom. It told also of some of the earliest meetings held in New Jersey and their distance one from another, and in conclusion queried whether we of the present day appreciated sufficiently our many privileges.

E. L. D., Secretary.

WRIGHTSTOWN, PA.—The Wrightstown Young Friends' Association held its first fall meeting at Wrightstown, [Bucks county, Pa.] on First-day afternoon, Eleventh month 5. The opening chapter was read by the president, Marion H. Scarborough, and Elizabeth Brooks Balderston, secretary, read the minutes of last meeting, giving a summary of a beautiful paper written by Mary Scarborough.

Reports and other business took up much of the time, but the young people present took an active part in the discussion that followed the reading of Discipline by Anna Merrick, and some of their questions were answered by older members.

The meetings held last year were very small, but the young people who took part seemed to be earnest. This year new interest seems to have been awakened, and new members are coming to the front, eager to learn about Friends' principles and doctrines.

The program was not long, as many changes come about in a season, and some who had been appointed are not in the neighborhood, but every one seemed to be willing to talk and the hour for adjournment came only too soon.

M. A. J., Correspondent.

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.—The Young Friends' Association of New York and Brooklyn was invited by the members of Flushing Meeting to hold a special meeting there. About fifty young Friends and a dozen older ones went out to Flushing on the afternoon of First-day, the 5th instant, in two parlor trolley-cars, which took them within ten minutes' walk of the historic old meeting-house. The usual business was transacted, with many interesting references, under the head of Current Topics, to the peculiar people called Roicrafters, who do beautiful work in binding books by hand.

Then followed an address by Mary A. Nichols, on the "Proper Use of First-day," or Sunday, as she preferred to call it. She said that she had reached no definite conclusion on the subject, and had done all on Sunday that she had done on other days of the week. Her feeling of right or wrong depended upon her motive. Sunday through history has been a day for devotion and moral training, and there is no need of change. The summing up of religion is found in the text, "Add to your faith virtue; and add to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness love." (II. Peter, v., 6, 7.) Love is a foundation of what our religion should be. We cannot get into this state unless we are in the best condition of mind and body. We must do on Sunday what will make us stronger and better and recreate mind and body. It is better to be known as a conscientious person than as an observer of certain forms and customs. It is not what we do, but how we do it.

In the discussion which followed, many agreed with the speaker, but a few expressed the view that the old customs of regularly attending meetings for worship and social mingling were best. This was not contrary to the spirit of the address, for Mary's central thought was a plea for "spiritual liberty to do as we think right, not moral license to do as we please."

ANNA H. McCORD, Correspondent.

SOLEBURY, PA.—Young Friends' Association of Solebury [Bucks county, Pa.], met on the 12th inst., at Solebury meeting-house. Florence R. Kenderdine reported on Discipline, Martha C. Ely on Current Topics, Edith Michener on Literature, and Ely J. Smith on History. Hugh Michener gave the report of the Executive Committee as follows: Paper, "Our little Worries," Annie M. Smith. "What justification is there for the war in the Transvaal at the present time?" John S. Williams. Reading, Martha Simpson.

A very excellent paper followed, written by Martha B. White. It was in answer to the question, "Against what customs of the present time should Friends bear testimony?" A recitation was given by Mary D. Ely. "What are the essentials to a useful life?" was answered by Mabel Haddock, in a paper read by Laura Haddock. Hugh Michener gave a reading. Emma L. Rice was appointed to report on History, Florence R. Kenderdine on Literature, Eastburn Reeder on Discipline, and Edith Michener on Current Topics.

The meeting adjourned until the second First-day in Twelfth month.

F. R. K., Correspondent.

CORNWALL, N. Y.—A meeting of Cornwall Friends' Association was held at the home of Rowland Cocks, Eleventh month 5. After the adopting of the minutes, delegates were appointed to attend the Conference of Friends' Associations, at Woodstown, N. J.

It was decided to resume the Socials, which were discontinued during the summer months. A paper, entitled "Our Small Meetings," was read by James Seaman. In this paper it was shown how the responsibility rests upon each individual, and the belief was expressed that our meetings would no longer be small if each one would accept this responsibility. Theodore K. Barton read an article on First-day Schools, and Rowland Cocks a selection from the INTELLIGENCER, "Christian Ideas on Business Affairs."

Many appropriate sentiments were given, and the meeting adjourned to meet at the home of Theodore Ketcham, Eleventh month 26th.

BLANCHE E. BROWN, Sec.

EDUCATIONAL.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.

ON the evening of the 6th instant, Science Hall was the scene of a lecture,—or rather of an informal talk,—by Professor Hodge, of Clarke University, Mass. The subject was "Brain Fatigue," and the lecturer illustrated his remarks by the use of charts. The lecture was especially designed for the classes in Psychology and Anatomy, but was very interesting to all who had the privilege of hearing it. By his original research in relation to neural activity, Professor Hodge has won a wide reputation, and has become an authority on the subject of which he treated in his lecture.

The contests in extemporaneous speaking aroused much enthusiasm and interest last year. President Birdsall's announcement that prizes for such contests would be again offered this winter was, therefore, received with pleasure. The prizes of twenty-five dollars each are two in number, one for the young men and one for the young women.

There are an unusually large number of students in the Latin department this year.

A meeting of the Young Friends' Association was held in the College parlor, on the evening of the 12th inst. A graphic and interesting account of the Birmingham Summer School, at Birmingham, England, was given by Mary Travilla, of West Chester. Katherine Pfeiffer, of the Class of 1900, then read an excellent paper on the Observance of the Sabbath at College. The discussion was opened by Ernest Taylor, 1902.

M. S. H.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE USE MADE OF THE "INTELLIGENCER."

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

FOR several years past I have been a subscriber to the INTELLIGENCER, and welcome its arrival each week, finding in it much valuable reading. After perusing its contents I send it to a friend in Rhode Island, and I think you will read with pleasure the following extract from a letter I just received from her, as it shows how the paper is appreciated, and it might be an encouragement to others who subscribe to pass their copy on to others when they have read it. My friend writes, after thanking me and expressing her own enjoyment of the paper:

"After reading it I have taken it to an inmate of the 'Old Ladies' Home,' a bright old lady of eighty-five years, who is particular as regards her reading, and who values it very much. After reading and committing some of the texts to memory, she passes it along to another friend of hers, an aged woman who, after reading it, gives it to a friend to be taken to the Soldiers' Home; so you see it has quite a history and I trust has done much good, as such reading as that could not fail to do, it seems to me."

A. M. P.

South Orange, N. J.

W. C. T. U. RESOLUTIONS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

I think many of your readers would like to see the two resolutions adopted at the recent National Convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, at Seattle, referring to imperialism and the canteen. The one on the canteen was adopted almost unanimously, the other with small opposition:

"We deeply deplore the attitude taken by our nation with respect to the Philippine Islands, and since governments can derive their just powers only from the consent of the governed, we protest both against the policy which would compel a foreign power to submit to the rule of the United States and against the war through which the Administration is striving to enforce its policy."

"We protest against the manifestly forced and unjust interpretation of the anti-canteen law as rendered by Attorney-General of the United States Griggs, and upheld by ex-Secretary of War Alger and we urge upon the chief executive of our nation, William McKinley, as commander-in-chief of our army and navy, an immediate consideration of the case which will result in such action as shall be in accord with the expressed will of the people and his own high oath of office."

West Chester, Pa.

S.

BOOKS RECOMMENDED.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER :

There are three books I should like to recommend to readers of the INTELLIGENCER. These are :

1. Young's Bible Concordance, with Index to the Hebrew and Greek of the Scriptures. This learned work can be had of the New York Book Exchange, 764 Broadway, N. Y., at the low price of $2.50.

2. Dr. Andrew D. White's History of the Warfare between Science and Theology. This can be had at most libraries by those who do not care to buy it themselves. So, also, can—

3. Dr. Charles A. Briggs's Study of the Scriptures. Like No. 2, this last displays great research and learning. The 678 pages which it contains give a succinct history of each book of the Bible. No one can read it without obtaining a clearer and better understanding of them. Dr. Briggs, as is well known, is a recognized "divine" of the Episcopal Church.

Abington, Pa.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

WHAT is called the "Cambridge Conferences," held at Cambridge, Mass., under the direction of Lewis G. Janes, will be continued for the fourth year, this season, from Eleventh month to Sixth month next. They are held at the home of Mrs. Ole Bull, in Battle street. The leading idea is "to afford opportunity for comparative study in Ethics, Philosophy, Sociology, and Religion." The speakers announced include Frank H. Sanborn, Prof. Crawford H. Toy, of Harvard; Edwin D. Mead, T. W. Higginson, Prof. Royce, and others.

On the 18th of Third month, President Birdsall, of Swarthmore College, has engaged to present a paper on "George Fox and the Society of Friends."

H. D. Cranor, of Conshohocken, Pa., will be glad to correspond with some of the descendants of William Jones (son of David, of Plymouth, Philadelphia county), who married Rebecca Yarnall, First month 20, 1739-40, daughter of Philip and Dorothy (Baker) Yarnall, of Chester county.

CONCORD Q. M. BOARDING HOME.

[Report to Concord Quarterly Meeting, Darby, Tenth month 31, 1899.]

IN this, our ninth Annual Report we have to record more deaths than during any previous year, but when we consider the age of some of our people, and the feeble health of others, it is not a matter of surprise that such is the case.

On Eleventh month 8, 1898, our oldest boarder (Betty J. Reed), passed quietly onward in her 99th year, having spent the last seven years of her long life in the Home household, receiving every needful attention.

On Twelfth month 31, 1898, Ruthanna M. Kendall suddenly departed in her 78th year, and in less than a week (First month 6, 1899), another (Sarah Wolf) was summoned in her 84th year, dying, as she had so earnestly desired, without causing trouble or care to any one. On Second month 16, 1899, Edith H. Green left us, aged 77, after an illness of some weeks. All were buried from the Home, as well as a transient boarder, Jennie L. Reedy, aged 44 years, whose last days of a suffering life were made comfortable by her connection with the Home, as her expressions of gratitude for the privilege amply testified.

A more recent death was that of A. Elizabeth Darlington, on Ninth month 20, 1899; she was an invalid for many years, tenderly cared for by a devoted sister, aided near the last by others. This detailed account is given to show that the Home fulfills its intended mission in providing for the aged or infirm at a time when a resting place and care are needed.

At the present time the permanent boarders number fifteen, with frequent transients, and other permanents in prospect.

The Home has been kindly remembered during the year by generous donations of money, furnishings, and provisions, and one bequest.

We have been enabled to reduce our debt of $1,350, reported last year, to $500, as well as to add to our endowment fund, also to make improvements by additional light and heat, more toilet accommodations, with needful papering and carpets; the funds for some of these being provided for that especial purpose by interested friends of the Home.

The Managers feel grateful for all such substantial aid, yet they earnestly desire that our Friends continue their interest and manifest it by their annual subscriptions and other donations, from time to time.

The increased size of our buildings and the constant wear and tear therein, always necessitate expenditures, more than the low rate of board and low rate of interest from the endowment fund can meet.

To those who have not seen our Home in its present enlarged capacity, we would suggest a visit, as its pleasant location and homelike surroundings can but commend it to their favor.

In conclusion, it seems fitting to speak of the cheerfulness and content of many of our family. This beautiful spirit of contentment is by no means the least of the encouragements to carry on our work.

LYDIA H. HALL, President.

MARY McALLISTER, Secretary.

METEOROLOGICAL SUMMARY FOR TENTH MONTH, 1899.

Mean barometer,	30.226
Highest barometer during the month, 22d,	30.572
Lowest barometer during the month, 31st,	29.633
Mean temperature,	59.
Highest temperature during the month, 12th, 18th,	80.
Lowest temperature during the month, 22d,	33.
Mean of maximum temperatures,	66.9
Mean of minimum temperatures,	51.
Greatest daily range of temperature, 10th,	26.
Least daily range of temperature, 6th,	5.
Mean daily range of temperature,	15.9
Mean relative humidity, per cent.,	77.5
Mean temperature of the Dew Point,	49.2
Total precipitation in inches, rain,	2.06
Greatest precipitation in any 24 consecutive hours, 0.76 of an inch of rain, on the 6th.
Number of days on which .01 inch or more of rain fell, 7.
Number of clear days 13, fair days 7, cloudy days 11.
Prevailing direction of wind from the Southwest.
Lunar Coronæ on evening of 17th.
Solar halo on 30th.
Meteor on the 17th.

SENSIBLE TEMPERATURE DATA.

Maximum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 66, on 18th.
Minimum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 31.5, on 22d.
Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 a. m., 51.7.
Maximum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 66.5, on 17th.
Minimum temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 35, on 21st.
Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer at 8 p. m., 54.
Mean temperature of wet bulb thermometer for this month, 52.8.

NOTE.—The mean temperature of this month 59, is 2.7 above the normal for Tenth month, and one-half degree above the corresponding month in 1898.

The total amount of precipitation during the month is about one and one-quarter inches less than the normal. There was much fog and the percentage of humidity was high.

Heavy white frost occurred on the 2d, and killing frost, with ice, on the 3d and 22d.

The Lunar Coronæ on the evening of the 17th was unusually bright, the colors well defined.

A beautiful Lunar Rainbow, of rare occurrence, was seen on the 18th at 4 50 a. m.; the moon, nearly at its full, was in the west, and the rainbow to the eastward.

JOHN COMLY, Observer.
Centennial Avenue, Philadelphia, Tenth month 31.

THE Mississippi State Board of Health is pronounced in favor of the policy of isolation and disinfection of first cases of yellow fever, rejecting the old plan of local shotgun quarantine against infected towns as barbarous, inefficient, and destructive to the best interests of the State.

THE Compania General of Manila, the largest cigar-making concern in the world, employs 10,000 hands, and turns out every year 80,000,000 cigars, 40,000,000 cigarettes and nearly 3,000 tons of cut tobacco.

SONNET.

[In commemoration of the first landing of William Penn, in 1682.
Read at the meeting of the Colonial Society of Pennsylvania, November 8, 1899.]

How beautiful she looked in that far day
With all her canvas flying in the breeze,—
The stately "Welcome," from the stormy seas,
Wafted on dove-like wings along the bay!
"Peace on the Earth," her fluttering pennons say,
And from her deck a voice: "Good-will to men!"
For he had come, the courtly Quaker, Penn,
Full of his dream of philanthropic sway.

And must the feet of Progress ever be Incarnadined by still recurring wars,
While from her path is swept each barbarous horde?
Oh, may this Land, now under thrall of Mars,
End her red slaughter by the Asian sea,
And sheathe her once inviolable sword!

Columbia, Pa.

LLOYD MIFFLIN.

"MANNERS."

Edward E. Hale, in Christian Register.

AT the inauguration of Miss Hazard, President Eliot, in a most courteous address to Miss Hazard, congratulated her on the position she is to occupy as president of Wellesley College. With his own clear-sighted wisdom, and in that prophetic habit in which perhaps he most distinguishes himself, he said, in substance, that the presidents of the women's colleges have white paper to write upon: they are not tied up in the tangles of mediæval traditions. And, among other hopes with which he illustrated this remark, he said that he thought they might be able to inculcate manners with more success than the old colleges had done.

The remark has challenged some indignant comment among teachers, and I am told that it has called out some protests which I have not seen.

It seems to me that this must be from a misapprehension of what he meant by manners, or, perhaps, from that narrow view which should confine "manners" in the little realm of the etiquettes or decorums of ordinary social life. In truth, however, the evils and dangers which Dr. Eliot had in mind are much deeper than those which are discussed in a handbook of etiquette. They are not to be ranked among the infelicities which can be corrected by three lines in a ladies' newspaper addressed to Pollie or Maggie, who write for information.

For instance, I happen to know a gentleman who has taken pleasure for many years past in sending through the women's colleges young women selected from the public schools by their teachers as being specially fit for the "Higher Education." My friend has paid the whole expenses of these young women through their college courses, at a charge of I do not know how many thousands of dollars. This year a dozen of them, more or less, graduated at different colleges. Of that number one wrote to him to thank him for his generosity, and to invite him to her Commencement. All the others took their diplomas without one word to him or any expression in any form of gratitude.

Again, a distinguished leader of this community, who died a few years since, cautioned me with the caution which his father had given him when he came to manhood. The father said: "I think you will like to help young men in their education. Take care never to accept from them any written obligation. Here are two or three thick files of such obligations which I have taken, and which the writers have forgotten. It always makes me cynical to look at them."

Once more, the treasurer of a large educational fund, who had for many years sent annually a dozen or twenty checks to students who received benefits of that fund, told me that in ten years' time he had never once had a receipt in acknowledgment of his payment. In the annual audit of his accounts, he always had to present the checks which these young men had been obliged to endorse.

I put in print these three disagreeable anecdotes because I think they illustrate a remark which I heard made by the late Mr. Memminger, of Jefferson Davis's cabinet. It was at a club in Charleston, S. C., in 1848, that Mr. Memminger uttered a remarkable protest against public education. He said, virtually, that it cut the tap-root of gratitude. He said that, if the children received this priceless gift from the State, it would wean them from the love of their fathers and mothers. He said that public education was destructive to the tenderness of home. What was pathetic in this was that it was said that he himself had been brought up in an orphan asylum, and knew nothing of that tenderness for whose defence he was contending.

May it not be fairly asked if some of our children do not grow up with an impudent self-conceit, nursed and bred by our declamations about public education? Fools, speaking to them on anniversaries, tell them that they are the most important beings in the world. They know that the State taxes itself for their training, as it does not for armies and navies. And the danger is that these little gentlemen and ladies shall come to think that they belong at the head of the board, and that these unfortunates who teach them, who feed them, who clothe them, are a sort of Helots, quite unworthy of any respect beyond what a supercilious patronage may express.

The whole discussion of manners, if it is to be of any use, will bring us back to the central truth,—that these colleges and these schools exist for education, and not simply for the petty details of instruction. To make of them mere information bureaus is to degrade them. We have no use for them unless they can make men out of boys and women out of girls. This means character. It means that, first of all, boys and girls, young men and young women, shall know who they are, why they are, and what they are to live for. They are to know that they are in a world where each lives for all and all for each.

If they can grow to this knowledge under the contagion of the teachers to whom such training is intrusted or by the dignified and noble spirit of the body of the young people among whom they live, good manners are secured. It may be, though it will probably not be, that a girl may direct a letter upside down; but the letter will say the right thing. It may be that she will use the wrong fork at the dinner table, but she will be sure to thank God for the dinner.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

The Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening prints a letter from Sarah Allmond Smalley (a daughter of ex-Mayor John P. Allmond, of Wilmington), who with her husband, Dr. Charles F. Smalley, is engaged in missionary work in Girgaon, Bombay. She gives sad details of the terrible famine in India.

Two years ago, just before we started for India, the Provinces of Berar and Central were just recovering from a famine. In this portion of India the monsoons cover a period of four months, June and September included; during the other months of the year, no rain. This year, the monsoons have again failed in Berar and Central provinces. It is safe to say that during the past five years, there has been but one heavy fall of rain in Berar. On that account the water level has sunk considerably over ten feet,—that was the distance some time back,—during the past five years. In many places there is an entire dearth of water; in others the water is dipped from the wells by means of cups. Cattle are dying by the hundreds, and the outlook is frightful. (Berar is northeast of Bombay.)

This year there has been no rainfall in Guyerat, a province north of Bombay. Government has already declared famine and is doing much for the people, in starting relief work. But famine wages are very low; there are many aged, infirm, and children who cannot work, and grain is fabulously high. There is sufficient grain in the country for two years, but it is in the hands of the money-lenders, who have run the prices up to about three times the usual prices already, and are gathering the grain from all parts of India, and will still increase prices as much more as they can, unless their control of the market is broken. I say they already have run it up to three times its price. You will remember that the time of monsoons is just over, and there are yet eight months before any prospects of rain.

Mr. and Mrs. Tuller, the superintendent and wife of our mission, have just returned from Guyerat, where we have a number of mission stations. The people, natives, are denying themselves for food for their cattle; men getting eight annas use five annas for the cattle and three for themselves. (An anna is equivalent to two cents.) Famine wages are: For men, from three to five cents a day; women from two and a-half to four cents a day. Nearly all the men have large families.

They have stripped the trees of leaves for cattle, and in many places cut large limbs from trees. For this reason there is no shade for miles.

We heard the other day that some of the people from Guyerat are bringing their women to Bombay and selling them for wives to the Mohammedans for 15 rupees. In our money that would amount to $5.

Mr. Tuller has written to the Christian Herald, suggesting that companies might be formed of Christian capitalists to send shiploads of grain to Bombay to be sold at the actual cost to missionaries and others who would agree to sell it to the people at the same price, the cost of distributing it, the railway carriage, and wages of trustworthy men to attend the shops, and other charges, to be paid out of the money sent for famine relief. In this way both money and grain can be used.

A Railway Train Incident.

A GENTLEMAN prominent in legal circles in Boston was recently riding in a train, and in the seat before him was a young and gayly dressed damsel. The car was pretty full, and presently an elderly woman entered, and finding no seat vacant but the one beside the young woman mentioned, sat down beside her. She was a decently-dressed woman, but apparently of humble station, and she carried several clumsy bundles, which were evidently a serious annoyance to her seatmate. The young woman made no effort to conceal her vexation, but in the most conspicuous manner showed the passengers around that she considered it an impertinent intrusion for the new-comer to presume to sit down beside her. In a few moments the old woman, depositing her packages upon the seat, went across the car to speak to an acquaintance she discovered on the opposite side of the aisle. The lawyer leaned forward to the offended young lady and courteously asked if she would change seats with him. A smile of gratified vanity showed how pleased she was to have attracted the notice of so distinguished looking a gentleman. "Oh, thank you ever so much," she said effusively, "I should like to, but it would be as bad for you as for me to sit beside such an old woman." "I beg your pardon," he responded with undiminished deference of manner, "it was not your comfort I was thinking of, but the old lady's."—[Boston Record.]

Sense Preferred to Sound.

IN the record of the Franklin (Mass.) Public Library there is a notable incident incorporated. When Benjamin Franklin, in 1785, then being minister to France, learned that a new town in his native State had been named in his honor, it was with an intimation from a nephew that the gift of a bell would be very acceptable for the new meeting-house. In a characteristic letter to a friend in England, asking him to select and forward a library that might cost $125, he said: "A new town in the State of Massachusetts, having done me the honor of naming itself after me, and proposing to build a steeple to their meeting-house if I would give them a bell, I have advised the sparing themselves the expense of a steeple for the present, and that they would accept of books instead of a bell, sense being preferred to sound." About 90 of the 116 volumes that formed this collection are now in the Franklin library.

CURRENT EVENTS.

THE "cruiser" Charleston, of the United States Navy, was wrecked on a reef on the north coast of Luzon, in the Philippine Islands, on the 7th instant. The officers and crew escaped in boats to the land. "The natives are friendly." In an action with the Filipinos, near San Jacinto, on the 12th, John A. Logan, a major, was killed. He was the son of the late General John A. Logan, of Illinois, Congressman and Senator from that State, and was thirty-four years old. He leaves a wife and children in Youngstown, Ohio.

THE operations in South Africa have continued, without definite result. The reinforcements from England are arriving, several troop ships having reached Durban, the port of Natal, whence the men are pushed forward to the north to join or relieve General White at Ladysmith.

THE British officials at Cape Town are stated, now, to be stopping all telegrams, even those of foreign governments. This is causing complaint in France and Belgium. The bombardment of Ladysmith by the Boers has continued, and Mafeking and Kimberly are still besieged. The English expect that the advance of the new troops will presently relieve all these places, before they shall be obliged to surrender. The English troops now in South Africa, on the way out, and under sailing orders, number 78,000. A number of the gold mines at Johannesburg are in operation, and the gold mined is immediately coined by the mints there.

THE returns of the election for Governor of Kentucky are very close between Taylor, Rep., and Goebel, Dem., and the result is likely to remain in dispute for some time. Violent measures are feared. William J. Bryan has expressed himself as satisfied with the elections of 1899 in their indications of the vote for President in 1900. Many Democratic papers insist that with Bryan as their candidate again, the reelection of President McKinley will be a foregone conclusion. It is now generally conceded that McKinley will be renominated without opposition.

GENERAL Fitzhugh Lee says there are many difficulties in the way of a withdrawal of the American troops from Cuba. The people of the island are divided in opinion, and until the experiment of local self-government is made, no one can tell what should be done. General Leonard Wood, who has been in command at Santiago, is proposed for "Civil Governor" of the island. The right of the President, under the United States Constitution to appoint such civil governors, is questioned.

THE Czar and Czarina of Russia paid a visit by railroad to the German Emperor and Empress, at Potsdam, near Berlin, on the 8th inst., and were received with distinguished honors. The nature of the interview between the two monarchs has not been disclosed. It was perhaps without special result, as the present policy of the German Emperor is to court England.

It was officially stated in Berlin, on the 8th inst., that an arrangement, subject to the approval of the United States, had been reached between Great Britain and Germany, according to which the Samoan Islands, with the exception of Tutuila and the adjacent islands, will become German territory. Germany cedes to Great Britain the Tonga Islands, Savage Island, and two easterly islands of the Solomon group. Tutuila, of the Samoan group, will be given to the United States. This arrangement, it is understood, is the price for Germany giving England a "free hand" in the crushing of the Boers.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail says he has learned that the Samoan agreement contains secret clauses relating to South Africa, whereby the plans of Cecil Rhodes are advanced a step toward realization.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

A DISPATCH from London, 8th instant, announces the death of Jacob Bright, of Rochdale, brother of John Bright. He was born in 1821, and was educated at the Friends' School, at York. He represented different divisions of Manchester in Parliament for nearly thirty years, and was deeply interested in measures for the amelioration of the lot of women, and the extension of their privileges as regards property and legal and civil rights. All through his career he was a consistent Radical, and he was a devoted supporter of Mr. Gladstone and home rule. It was largely through his efforts that the right of municipal voting was extended to women in 1869, and he advocated giving them the Parliamentary vote also.

—Frederick Weyerhaeuser of Chippewa Falls, Wis., has closed a deal for 1,000,000 acres of timber lands from the North Pacific company. This timber is located on the Pacific coast, and the price paid is $6,000,000. This is said to be the greatest timber deal ever closed by a single individual in the history of the lumbering and logging industry.

—A dispatch from Montreal, November 14, announces the safe passage of the new steel steamship Porto Rico (American), bound from Toledo to New York, through the Soulangier Canal, the first large boat to pass through the canal, which is the completing link in Canada's 14 foot waterway from the Great Lakes to the ocean.

—The Presbytery of New York, on the 13th instant, decided to refer back to the General Assembly the case of Professor Arthur C. McGiffert, of Union Theological Seminary, accused of doctrinal unsoundness. The ministers of New York are about to engage in a general "revival," and fear that a "heresy trial" would be injurious.

—A La Crosse, Wisconsin, despatch says that the white pine lumber manufacturers have agreed upon a uniform mark-up in prices, taking effect at once. The advance is 50 cents per thousand in some grades of dimensions, and $1 a thousand on some grades of uppers.

The Vice President of the United States, Garrett A. Hobart, who has been critically ill at his home at Paterson, N. J., and who was given up a few days ago, is at this writing somewhat better, though perhaps only temporarily.

—The Shanghai correspondent of the London Times says there is every indication of increased friction between Russia and Japan, owing to the latter's activity in Corea and the northeastern provinces of China.

—Signor Marconi, who sailed for Europe on the 8th, says that he has sold the American rights for his wireless telegraph system. He will not disclose the name of the purchasing company or the amount of royalty.

—An elaborate reception for the Emperor of Germany is being arranged in England under royal auspices, and the coming visit is of special political significance.

ONE of the oldest practitioners in Dauphin county, a retired physician, states that the young doctors of the present age are not as energetic as they were in his time. "When I first hung out my shingle," said the venerable M. D., "I found my services in no demand, but all the same I daily rushed out of the house with my medicine case and rode post haste into the country for several miles. The chances were that I loafed about the woods while absent, but it served to create the impression that I was doing business, and eventually my practice grew. Once my neighbors became suspicious, and they followed me so persistently on one of these wild dashes that I thought I was at last 'up a stump.' But all things come to the good man that I am," added the old physician, "and as luck would have it, I came across a woodsman who sat along the roadside with a cut foot. I dressed the wound and my fame spread." — [Philadelphia Press.]

THERE are four large rabbit farms in Indiana. The largest one is located at Wabash, and covers sixty acres.

ARMSTRONG & McKEELY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
ROCKSTEIN }
ATLANTIC }
BRADLEY } New York.
BROOKLYN }
JEWETT }
ULSTER }
UNION }
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL }
SOUTHERN }
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
OERNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

YOU cannot afford to take chances in painting when, by exercising a little care and common sense, the use of mixtures of unknown composition and questionable value can be avoided and the best materials (and, as you will find, by far the cheapest) can be obtained.

The best materials are Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil. The brands named in margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

NOTICES.

* * The Annual Meeting of the General Conference of Young Friends' Associations will be held at Woodstown, N. J., Seventh-day, Eleventh month 18. Morning session 10.30 to 12. Afternoon, 2 to 4.

Morning program: "Need of Increased Interest in Business Meetings," paper by Susan H. Jarrett. Discussion opened by J. Hibberd Taylor, West Chester, and Alvin Haines, Abington Association.

Afternoon: "The Friendly Renaissance," paper by Robert M. Reese. Discussion opened by Mary R. W. Thorne, Moorestown, and Ely J. Smith, Solebury Association.

A general invitation is extended to all interested Friends.

A special train will leave Market street wharf, Philadelphia, at 9.30 a. m., Camden, at 9.35, making no stops between Camden and Woodstown. Excursion tickets $1.05. Return trains leave Woodstown at 4.30 and 6.07 p. m.

A cordial invitation to remain over First-day is extended to visitors, by Woodstown Friends. On behalf of the Executive Committee.

WILLIAM WALTON, Chairman.
ANNA S. ATKINSON, Secretary.

* * Donation Day of Friends' Home for Children, 4011 Aspen street, West Philadelphia, will be Third-day, Eleventh month 21.

The good work has continued during the past year, although a smaller number of general contributions has been received. Money and clothing will be very acceptable, but we shall also be very glad to receive donations of produce. Many farmers have potatoes, apples, turnips, etc., that are not good enough for market, but which would be very acceptable to us. Contributions, in kind, may be sent to A. T. Eavenson, 318 North 20th street, Philadelphia, or Edward C. Dixon, Secretary, 1420 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

* * The next Conference under the care of Concord Quarterly Meeting's Committee on Philanthropic Labor will be held in the meeting-house at Swarthmore, on First-day, Eleventh month 19, 1899, at 2.30 p. m.

CHARLES PALMER, Clerk.

* * Acknowledgment.—List of Contributions to Friends' Neighborhood Guild (formerly Beach Street Mission), from Eleventh month 2, to Eleventh month 11, 1899:

Jane Jackson,	$2.00
Emily T. Longstreth,	5.00
Penn Sewing School,	75.00
E. B. S., for Manual Training	2.00
Marie C. Jenkins,	5.00
Anna C. Shoemaker,	1.00
Beulah L. Mitchell,	1.00
Two Friends,	1.50
E. C. and A. P.,	2.00
Henrietta D. E. Walter,	2.00
George B. Cock,	1.00
Fellowship Circle, King's Daughters	10.00
Henry George Ormsby,	5.00
William S. Emley,	25.00
Annie K. Taylor,	1.00
Lydia B. Paxson, for Manual Training,	10.00
Wm. P. Walter's Sons,	20.00

$168.50

CASSANDRA T. CARR, Treasurer.
1719 North 18th St., Phila.

* * Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting's Committee to visit the smaller branches as way may open will attend meetings as follows:

ELEVENTH MONTH:

19. Haverford, 10 a. m.

26. Reading, 10 a. m.

TWELFTH MONTH:

3. Germantown, 10.30 a. m.

AQUILA J. LINVILL, Clerk.

* * The Friends' Temperance Workers will hold a meeting at Girard Avenue and 17th streets, Philadelphia, Eleventh month 18, 1899, at 8 p. m. Lowell exercises are on the program. WALKER E. LINVILL, President.

* * Friends Visiting Committee of Salem Quarterly Meeting have made the following appointments for Eleventh month:

26. Salem, 10 a. m.

* * A Conference will be held at Byberry Friends' meeting-house, on First-day afternoon, the 19th inst., at 2.30 o'clock. Subject, "Peace and Arbitration." Under the care of Abington Quarterly Meeting's Philanthropic Committee.

J. Q. ATKINSON,
ARABELLA CARTER, } Clerks.

* * Quarterly meetings in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting occur as follows:

ELEVENTH MONTH:

28. Burlington, Trenton, N. J.

29. Southern, Camden, Del.

30. Bucks, Langhorne, Pa.

* * First-day evening meetings, in Philadelphia, in Eleventh month, are held at Race Street, at 7.30 o'clock. The full attendance of Friends is solicited.

PERSONALLY-CONDUCTED TOURS VIA PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

SEASON OF 1899-1900.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company announces the following Personally Conducted Tours for the season of 1899 and 1900:

Mexico and California—A forty five day tour will leave New York, Philadelphia, and Harrisburg, February 13. Fourteen days will be spent in Mexico and eighteen in California. The party will travel over the entire route by the "Mexico and California Special," the finest train that crosses the continent.

Florida—Four tours to Jacksonville will leave New York and Philadelphia, January 23, February 6 and 20 and March 6. The first three admit of a stay of two weeks in the "Flowery State." Tickets for the fourth tour will be good to return by regular trains until May 31, 1900.

Old Point Comfort, Richmond, and Washington—Five tours will leave New York and Philadelphia February 3, March 3 and 31, April 14 and 28.

Old Point Comfort—Six tours will leave New York and Philadelphia December 28, February 3, March 3 and 31, April 14 and 28.

Washington—Six tours will leave New York and Philadelphia December 28, January 18, February 15, March 15, April 10, and May 3.

For detailed information apply to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York; 860 Fulton street, 4 Court street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad street, Newark, N. J.; or Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Philadelphia.

Ellwood Heacock,

UNDERTAKER
and EMBALMER

ESTABLISHED 1860.

TELEPHONE 5807.

1313 Vine Street, Philad'a.

Calls outside of city answered promptly.

Publisher's Department.

* * In ordering Club List periodicals through us, we must have the money with the order. It is strictly a cash business. We must forward the money with our orders to publishers.

* * Will our friends when addressing letters to us please add BOX 924? Since our removal we find it difficult to get our letters placed in the Box.

* * Those who think that a "Thanksgiving" dinner (or any other good one) without mince pie would lack something as essential as the turkey or the cranberry sauce, may find an interest in the announcement of Atmore's Mince Meat, a preparation which we are assured is of the best meat, citron, raisins, and all the other ingredients of good mince meat. "It is always fresh, and is sold ready to put right in the pie. It contains no chemicals to preserve it, nothing enters into it but the purest, most wholesome ingredients."

* * The INTELLIGENCER at the present time, has a larger circulation and a wider influence than ever, and is better than at any previous time in its long and useful history, covering a period of nearly fifty-six years.—Norristown (Pa.) Herald.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the STOCKHOLDERS OF SWARTHMORE COLLEGE will be held at Friends' Meeting-house, Race and Fifteenth Streets, Philadelphia, Penna., on Third-day, Twelfth month 5, at 2 o'clock, p. m.

ROBERT M. JANNEY,
ABBY W. MILLER, } Clerks.

Donation Day

Friends' Home for Children, 4011 Aspen Street, Philadelphia, on Third-day, Eleventh month 21, 1899.

Donations of Money, Dry Goods, Provisions, etc., will be gratefully received.

Young Friends' Association.

The Young Friends' Association Office is now open in the Association Building, 15th and Cherry streets, where those wishing information may apply between the hours of 8.30 a. m. and 5.30 p. m. Address all communications to

YOUNG FRIENDS' ASSOCIATION,
15th and Cherry Sts., Philadelphia.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL,

Manufacturing Optician.

118 South Fifteenth St. (4th door bel. Chestnut St.)
PHILADELPHIA.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

We will continue the manufacture of Custom Shoes and carry a SELECT STOCK of our own reliable work.

SAMUEL DUTCHER.

(SECOND FLOOR.) 45 North 13th Street.

AQUILA J. LINVILL,

Dealer in Choice Lehigh Coal,
1827 North 10th Street, Philadelphia.

ATMORE'S

MINCE MEAT

Juicy,
Delicious,
Appetizing.
Good, pure and wholesome. Always the same. Ask for it. Try

ATMORE'S
Genuine English
Plum
Pudding.

Many MOTHERS can testify to the VALUE of DELAU'S REMEDY

AS A CURE FOR

WHOOPIING COUGH and CROUP, also for BRONCHITIS, BRONCHIAL CATARRH, and ORDINARY COUGHS.

AT DRUGGISTS.

Fruen's Whole Wheat Flour

10 lb. Bags, 35 cents.

Cases of 9 Bags, $2.75.

Contains all the valuable nourishing properties of the two finest and richest wheats grown, without any of the indigestible, woody hull, which is removed.

In ordinary flour 80 per cent. of that part of the grain that nourishes and builds up nerve, bone, and muscle is bolted out, and what principally remains produces heat and fat, but not strength and force. Weak bones, flabby muscles, and defective teeth and eyesight may often be caused by want of these elements bolted out of white flour.

Fruen's Whole Wheat Flour contains all this valuable part of the grain without any of the indigestible woody fibre.

Makes a delicious, sweet, light brown bread.
A postal card will bring it.

A. R. HILL, 21 S. Front St., Phila.

Carpetings, Linoleum,

Window Shades, etc.

Benjamin Green,

33 N. Second St., Philad'a.

S. F. Balderston's Son,
WALL PAPERS.

All Grades. Estimates Given.
Window Shades Made to Order.

902 Spring Garden St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WALL PAPER of Attractive Styles

Popular Prices
Samples Free to any Address

A. L. Diamant & Co.,

1624 Chestnut St. Philadelphia, Pa.

CLEMENT A. WOODNUTT,

Undertaker
and Embalmer,

1728 GIRARD AVENUE, PHILADELPHIA.

Telephone 2-28-25-A.

A JUDGE of the old school is said to have once summed up a very complicated case in the following terms :

"Gentlemen of the Jury—You have all heard the evidence, you have also heard what the learned counsel have said. If you believe what the counsel for the plaintiff has told you, your verdict will be for the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, you believe what the defendant's counsel has told you, then you will give a verdict for the defendant. But if you are like me, and don't believe what either of them has said, then I don't know what you will do."—[Household Words.]

THERE are fifteen hundred submarine cables in the world, over which six million messages are sent every year. Eighteen lines cross the Atlantic ocean; but the Pacific has never been crossed, for the reason that no one nation has ever owned or controlled a chain of landing-places across it, and lengths of cable over three thousand miles long are impracticable.

BOBBY was spending the afternoon at his aunt's, and for some moments had been gazing out of the window in a painfully thoughtful sort of way. "What makes you so serious, Bobby?" asked his aunt. "Why, ma told me that I must remember not to ask for anything to eat;
and I am trying to remember it."—
Union Signal.

IF you desire the

BEST PRINTING

at moderate prices, try us.
Fine Job Work a specialty.

The Leeds & Biddle Co.

1019-21 Market St.,

Telephone PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA & READING RAILWAY.

ANTHRACITE COAL. NO SMOKE.
NO CINDERS. DOUBLE TRACKED.
HEAVY STEEL RAILS. STONE
BALLASTED.

Royal Blue Line to New York.

SWIFTEST AND SAFEST TRAINS
IN THE WORLD.

Scenic Reading Route to

READING, HARRISBURG, GETTYS-BURG, CHAMBERSBURG, SHAMO-
KIN, WILLIAMSPORT, AND POINTS
IN INTERIOR PENNSYLVANIA.

Royal Reading Route to

ATLANTIC CITY. CLEANLINESS
AND COMFORT. SAFETY AND SPEED.

Stylish Golf Capes.

The extraordinary sales of Golf Capes here this season show that the public has appreciated the exceptional opportunities we have so frequently afforded. The demand for Golf Capes of worthy quality—and none other is permitted to enter our stock—continues unabated. We make another offering that is exceedingly attractive as to both styles and prices :

Golf Capes—handsomely made, with wide inside facing and pretty hood, in assorted colors—an unmatchable value at $5.00.

Golf Capes—in attractive black-and-white and colored plaids, finished with inside revers and straps—$10.00.

Golf Capes—in a large variety of handsome plaid cloths; perfectly made, assorted colors, with inside revers and straps—$15.00.

Imported Golf Capes—grays, tans, and black, in beautiful plaid-back and Montagnac-cloths; a large assortment of styles; 36 inches long—$25.00.

Orders by mail receive prompt and accurate attention. Address orders "Department C."

Strawbridge & Clothier,
PHILADELPHIA.

BRASS and ENAMELED BEDSTEADS

There is a right way and a cheap way to make Mattresses; perhaps you have found it out. We do it the right way; try us. Furniture reupholstered.
Shades, etc.

Josiah G. Williams, 13 N. 11th St

Why Not ?

Yes, why not look into it? You are ill, perhaps. If so, we affirm that our treatment has cured cases as bad as your own.
We bring testimony of those who have been cured. They describe their diseases and testify that they are cured by the use of Compound Oxygen Treatment of Drs. Starkey and Palen. They are ready to reiterate and confirm these statements at any time, and we are permitted to refer to them.
You have tried other means without success. You know where to find the remedy, or to learn all about it. Why not look into it?

To assist you, send for our book of 200 pages, in which you will find a history of Compound Oxygen, with numerous testimonials and record of surprising cures in chronic cases. An investigation of this treatment, by leading you to try it, may save your life. Home or office Treatment.
Consultation free.

Drs. Starkey & Palen,

1112 Girard St., Philadelphia, Pa.
San Francisco, Cal. Toronto, Can.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873.

PHILADELPHIA, ELEVENTH MONTH 25, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 47.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLVII.

No man knoweth justification but as he knoweth it wrought within from Christ. . . None sees Christ the one offering but with the light which cometh from him.

GEORGE FOX.

Citation from his doctrinal writings. See Janney's Fox, p. 433.

HE WHO FOR LOVE.

HE who for love has undergone
The worst that can befall,
Is happier thousandfold than one
Who never loved at all.
A grace within his soul has reigned
Which nothing else can bring ;—
Thank God for all that I have gained
By that high suffering !

—Richard Monckton Milnes.

EXCURSION DAYS IN ENGLAND.

III.

STOKE POGES AND JORDANS.

MANY Americans go every year to Stoke Poges and Jordans—to the former because it is identified with the Penn family, and with Gray and his immortal Elegy ; to the latter because it is the burial-place of the Founder of Pennsylvania.

Very near the close of the Sixth month, namely on the 26th thereof, nine of us from Philadelphia and its neighborhood made the visit to these places. We went out from London to Slough, on the Great Western road, eighteen miles from Paddington station, and we got a conveyance there for the day's sight-seeing. This is the ordinary plan, but I would say at this point that for those who desire to see Jordans and the several places of interest in its neighborhood connected with William Penn, Milton, Isaac Penington, and Thomas Ellwood, it would be better to visit these from Rickmansworth, on the Metropolitan railway, leaving Stoke Poges and its neighborhood for a separate excursion, from Slough.

However, we tried to see both neighborhoods in one trip, and partly succeeded. Leaving Slough about 1 p. m., after a luncheon of the most unconventional character, we drove to Stoke Poges church. Here Gray is buried, and his mother. Her epitaph was composed by the poet himself, but there is nothing whatever referring to him. There is a large, oblong brick tomb, outside the east end of the church, covered by a flat stone, upon which may be traced this epitaph :

Beside her friend and sister
Here sleep the remains of

DOROTHY GRAY,

Widow,

The careful, tender mother
Of many children, one of whom alone
Had the misfortune to survive her.

She died March 11, 1753,

Aged 72.

Eighteen years later than his mother Gray himself was buried under this stone. "The friend and sister" was his aunt, Mrs. Rogers, who made the home for him when he came to Stoke Poges ; her house is near by, as we approach Stoke Common, its red walls almost hidden by thick laurels behind a high hedge.

We went into the little church, of course. It is itself very quaint and simple. Its "ivy-mantled tower" stands out against the "rugged elms" and "the yew-tree shade." At one side, within, is a brass tablet, giving the names of the Penn Family who are buried in the vault beneath : Thomas Penn (son of our Founder), his wife, Lady Juliana, and their children and grand children. Near the tablet is the large pew, really a railed-off apartment, devoted to the family of the "lords of the manor"—the Penn family in their time, until they sold Stoke Park, about 1849, and at present Wilberforce Bryant, of the great watch manufacturing firm of Bryant and May, of London, who has been for some years the owner of Stoke Park.

Dr. Hull read the Elegy for us, under the shade of the old yew tree. We had been inside the church, had stood by Gray's tomb, had filled ourselves with the spirit of the place ; then we went for a hasty walk around the old manor-house near by. It was partly pulled down a century ago, but a portion remains, heavily draped with ivy. This portion was built by Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, in 1555, and you may see the date cut in the stone over the arched doorway. Here Sir Edward Coke, the great lawyer and judge, lived many years, here he entertained Queen Elizabeth, here, in the troublous times of the Civil War, Cromwell's soldiers had Charles the First in confinement for a while. Gray refers to the house in his humorous, but rather tedious poem—never intended to be made much of ; nothing comparable to the "Elegy,"—called "A Long Story." Thomas Penn bought the place, with the manor-land that belonged to it, in 1760, and lived here (when not at his town house), until his death in 1775. It was his son John, the bachelor, the poet, the rather odd fish, but kindly man (who built "Solitude," the little house in Fairmount Park), that tore down most of the old manor-house, about 1790, and built the mansion at Stoke Park, near by. He erected, too, the monumental pillar to Sir Edward Coke, and the cenotaph to Gray, which stand in the Park near the church.

We looked across the beautiful grounds toward the great house. The pretty arched bridge over the little stream showed under the trees. A flock of deer, very tame, were feeding. I had a letter in my pocket from W. Bryant, permitting me and friends to inspect Stoke Park, but we dared not tarry longer. The afternoon was passing and we had much to do. We resumed our places in the wagonette and set off. The day was very pleasant. The sun beamed down,—just a little more ardently than we cared for, but not too much so for the hay that lay in the fields. Flowers were everywhere in bloom; in the wheat-fields were thousands of scarlet poppies. This part of Bucks is famed for its rural beauty. Around London in many miles you could not take a trip more charming than through the region between Slough and Rickmansworth,—about eighteen miles.

We drove somewhat out of our way in order to pass through the great grove, Burnham Beeches. It is now owned, I believe, by the city of London, and so will remain a public possession. The trees are curious,—nay, they are wonderful,—so old, so large, so gnarled, so wide-spreading. We drove slowly through, and picked out the road to Beaconsfield, reaching that village at last; it had seemed for a time to elude us.

From Beaconsfield you go north by east to seek the quiet, retired spot where Penn is buried. The road becomes more hilly; though indeed there had already been one or two hills south of Beaconsfield, where, with the driver's approval, we got down and walked. We asked the way repeatedly, and now to some effect, for we found persons who knew where Jordans was. Its location was unknown to our driver, and indeed is unfamiliar to dwellers generally, only a few miles away. I met many English Friends who confessed they had never been there. The fact is that in England William Penn is not so tall a figure as his father; an admiral there overtops a Quaker, any day, even if he was not a first-class admiral, and the Quaker was the founder of a great state.

The afternoon was drawing on when we reached the place where two wooded lanes fork, and in the point lies the old meeting-house and its burial ground. If we confine our thought to the idea that the dead are sleeping, here is indeed a fit place for slumber. The lanes are narrow, and lined with hedges, there are fine old trees, there are birds and squirrels, in patches of meadow land there was a gentle and silent mower pensively at work at the grass. We drove up to the gate and alighted. Pictures of the old house have made it familiar to most Friends. Part of it is the meeting-house, part the dwelling of the care-takers. A little gate opens into the graveyard, and there, in a group are the stones that mark the remains of William Penn, his two wives, and ten of his fourteen children. Near by is gentle Thomas Ellwood and his Mary. The enclosure is grassy, not neglected, and yet not so well kept as one would like. Hundreds of Friends, notable in their day, left here their earthly frame and garment, now reposing without stone or mark.

We went into the meeting-house and sat on the old benches. We gathered, by permission, a flower or two from the borders which the woman caretaker had planted and watched,—and about which she had a just pride, for she assured us that there were few when she came. It was quite time, now, for England's five o'clock tea, and we hunted out from baskets and pockets everything eatable, saying, however, that we should stop at Beaconsfield for refreshment as we went back. We had written our names in the register,—you do that over and over again, in England, commonly with a sixpence in company,—had taken a parting glance at the quaint, interesting, charming, old place, then said farewell to our friendly caretaker, and near the time for an American tea we drove off southward toward Slough, abandoning the visit to Chalfont St. Giles and Milton's Cottage. We did stop at the inn in Beaconsfield, and some of us drank there, which we had no sooner done than we regretted, for though the drink was strictly non-alcoholic, it had practically no other merit, and was warm beside. There is very little ice in England, in summer.

H. M. J.

THE summer vanishes, but soon shall come
The glad, young days of yet another year.
So do not mourn the passing of a joy,
But rather wait the coming of a good,
And know God never takes a gift away
But he sends other gifts to take its place.

—Marianne Farningham.

LET us set our affection on things above, not on things on the earth; for, you see, a life spent in brushing clothes and washing crockery and sweeping floors,—a life which the proud of earth would have treated as the dust under their feet; a life spent at the clerk's desk; a life spent in the narrow shop; a life spent in the laborer's hut,—may yet be a life so ennobled by God's loving mercy that for the sake of it a king might gladly yield his crown.—Canon Farrar.

"STOKE PARK," BUILT BY JOHN PENN, 1790.

RELIGION OF THE SOUTHERN NEGROES.

From an address by Booker T. Washington, at Washington, D. C., Tenth month, 1899. Report in Christian Register, Boston.

A FEW days ago I was in Montgomery, Ala., and I found an organization composed of the colored ministers of that city; and it was exerting such an influence that it was impossible for a minister who was immoral in his daily life to get recognition in that city. It was impossible for any of those miserable men to pass as ministers. I found public sentiment in favor of a better ministry. I went to Birmingham, and I found an organization of a similar character. These ministers' unions are not only leading the colored people into more practical and higher religious life, but in many cases they are encouraging the people to go into business and to teach their children trades.

The negro is also beginning to apply his religion to the solution of the race problem which has so long vexed and tried our souls. He is becoming more liberal,—to look at things from a Christian standpoint. He is not only becoming more liberal in church creeds, but he is becoming more liberal toward the Southern white man; and the negro ministers in a large measure are leading off in efforts that are tending more and more to bring the two races together in all matters that pertain to their mutual welfare. The negro minister who once had a hold upon the people by merely abusing the Southern white man is now fast losing ground; and throughout the South an educated, liberal, high-toned set of ministers are fast appearing, who are willing to disregard race, color, and previous condition, in order that they may honestly and bravely do the thing which will bring peace and prosperity to the whole people, regardless of race and color.

We are learning to apply our religion in a way that we have never done before. A few days before I left Tuskegee I saw a colored man going to camp-meeting; and he had his whole family in a wagon which was drawn by two mules. I said to him, "Going to camp-meeting?" "Yes," he answered, "I belong to that camp-meeting. I knows you think I'se too poor to go, but I'm going. I tell you what, I've bought a house and I've paid for it; and I'm going to camp-meeting. I've got no mortgage on my crop, and I've got a right to go to camp-meeting. I've paid for this wagon that I'm going to camp-meeting in; and these dresses that the women have got on, I've paid for them, and I'm going to camp-meeting, Mr. Washington. You see them two mules; no white man owns them. I done buy them myself. I've got the right to go to camp-meeting, Mr. Washington. Get up, June, get up, Joe, we are going to camp-meeting." That is the way we are learning to apply religion; and when a man gets to that point, he has a right to go to camp-meeting and enjoy his religion. But it is mighty hard to enjoy it in a wretched house, when it is cold in winter and when it is hot in summer. It is hard to be a Christian under such circumstances.

At Tuskegee, in connection with our other training, we have a Bible training school, where we recognize no sects. We have representatives of at least eleven different denominations, and the question of sect never comes in discussion. We not only teach the Bible, but, what is equally important, we have an understanding that each individual who comes must work, not only with his brains, but with his hands. He must learn to work, so that when he goes out into the rural districts, where they can pay him only from five to ten dollars a month, he can help himself. We teach them that they must buy their land and plant it, and keep out of debt, and lay a foundation for improving the moral condition of the South.

THE GRAVESTONES AT JORDANS BURIAL-GROUND.

We make a great deal of the gospel of the tooth-brush, as Gen. Armstrong used to call it. We require every student to provide a tooth-brush, and, when we inspect the rooms, we look after these; and, when we get to the point where the student is willing to buy a second and a third brush of his own motion, we feel safe about the salvation of that individual, for we have never seen it fail.

A few weeks ago I was in a district not far from Tuskegee, and I visited one of these colored pastors. He had a church, a Sunday-school, fifty acres of land, and a comfortable house. He was raising corn and potatoes, and quite independent, so far as material circumstances were concerned. I went to the church, and heard him preach what is called in the South "plain doctrine." He had the advantage that he could preach what he believed, for he could support himself if the people did not like his plain doctrine.

In Birmingham I found another, a graduate from this Bible school; and I saw him doing missionary work. I went into a cabin where I saw him take a scrubbing-brush and a bucket of water, and show them how to clean the floor. When a man can put his religion into scrubbing a floor, I think we are getting on pretty well, don't you?

Naturally, during the days of slavery, by reason of circumstances, the next world was emphasized. In his religious meetings the negro was prevented from discussing many points of practical religion which pertained to this world. Those who were his spiritual guides in those days found it more convenient to talk about heaven than earth, so that we need not be surprised if to-day, in his meetings, it is the negro's feelings which are worked upon largely, and it is the description of the glories of heaven that occupy most of the time in his religious exercises.

I was in a church where for an hour the burden of the minister's talk was to get religion and give up the world. I happened to be familiar with the circumstances of most of the people in that church; and I called him aside, and said: "When you told those people to get religion, I agreed with you; but I hardly agreed when you said give up the world. There aren't two of them who own any land, not more than five or six who own their mules. They are all in debt. Most of them mortgage their crops and get on without fit food or clothing. My good friend, it seems to me that your congregation has given up about everything that it could give up. So why do you tell them to give up the world? That is not what our people need to learn. They need to get religion and get the world, and mix religion in with the world; and, in proportion as they do that, their religion will help them in the every-day affairs of life." And, wherever strong, educated ministers have gone into the South, they preach a gospel good not only for the next world, but one good for this world.

We are learning in the South to use our religion in a way that it has never been used there before, and the white man is also beginning to use his religion in working out affairs in the South. A few days ago I attended a most interesting convention; and I saw there white men born in the South, former slaveholders, put themselves on record to the effect that henceforth they would give a larger proportion of their money, time, and strength to the lifting up of the black men at their doors. Of the $544,000 which had been contributed by the churches to educate men and women in Africa and Japan and China, only $23,000 was given to educate the black men at their door. They were frank enough to say that they had made a mistake, and to promise that more should be done for the negroes of the South.

It is the negroes' faith in religion that has made him patient and God-fearing through all the trials in which we have been compelled to live, especially since we got our freedom. He has faith in God and in the justice of his cause, and this faith will never forsake us.

My first wish is to see this plague to mankind [war] banished from the earth, and the sons and daughters of this world employed in more pleasing and innocent amusements than in preparing implements and exercising them for the destruction of mankind.—George Washington.

NO FREEDOM WITHOUT CONSTRAINT.

Sunday School Times.

LIBERTY is impossible without limitations. Order cannot exist unless under regulations, although chaos and confusion can. This is a truth alike applicable in the realm of matter and of mind. It is true of all mechanical forces on the one hand, and of the most formal and conventional, or the most natural and unstudied intellectual processes on the other hand. In no sphere is there freedom without constraint.

In so simple a matter as having the current of a brook or a river run down hill, or of letting its waters be dashed or sprayed against the upright wall of a burning building, the guiding banks must keep the stream within bounds as its waters go, lest they wander off in an aimless search; and the constraining hose or pipe must confine the waters as they rise to their destination, or they will fail to do their best work, or any other. Not even a pile of dirt or a heap of sand can be raised many feet without a careful regard to the law of gravitation, and to the principles of mathematical proportion, as their substance rises above the base. There is no freedom in any such sphere without constraint.

However independent or original an artist of any kind may be, as musician, poet, painter, or sculptor, he must conform his work to the basal laws of his art, the laws of tone and sound, of measure, harmony, and rhythm, of color and form, or fail of securing true beauty and symmetry, with their power over the human eye and ear. He who indulges most felicitously and daringly in spontaneity of artistic creation is always one who most positively recognizes and is bound—instinctively, as it were—by the permanent and never-varying laws which underlie all good work in the realm in which he labors. In his sphere, as in every other, there is no freedom without constraint.

In affections, morals, and daily conduct, the best disposed man must recognize the binding force of fundamental laws, however he may be free in an absolute freedom over and beyond their bounds. No man can love his brother man on earth as he ought to, unless he first loves his Father in heaven as above his brother man. A man cannot keep the Second Commandment properly without recognizing the First Commandment as preceding the Second. Even the love which is the fulfilling of all law must first extend to the utmost bounds of the law itself in order to overflow those bounds and go beyond.

A man must love at least one person more than others,—love parent or child, wife, husband, or friend, with a unique and distinctive love—before there is any meaning or reality in his claim to love everybody as he should. There is no such thing as counting every day and all times alike for God, for country, for family, for worship, for business, for recreation, unless a man has some special time for each and every one of those interests, which for the present has predominance over all others. No man could be free to give more than the lowest proper demand of duty on his time or possessions, according as God had prospered him if he had no well-defined idea of what was the lowest proper demand of duty in proportion to his prosperity.

Freedom to eat, to sleep, to work aright, is never in utter disregard of times and seasons and rules and regulations. On the contrary, it has to be such hearty and spontaneous regard to them all as to conform to them without an effort, and without even a conscious thought that they are a bound or a limit. Freedom within proper constraints is the freedom in which the true athlete, or artist, or saint does his best work, and does it without any sense of being held in bondage or limitations.

One of Dr. Bushnell's great sermons is entitled "Routine Service Indispensable." It is from the text, "Give us this day our daily bread." In that sermon he lays down as a "great law of practical Christian living that we need to keep fixed times, or appointed rounds of observance, as truly as to be in holy impulse; to have prescribed periods in duty as truly as to have a spirit of duty; to be in the drill of observance as well as in the liberty of faith."

He reminds us that the very world we live in is a world of routine; that "the days and years, the moons and tides, the mornings and evenings, the eclipses and wandering comets, have their times exactly set and their rounds exactly measured. We can even make up their almanac for the most distant ages and cycles." And he suggests the question to those who undervalue routine in religion, that, "if the world itself, apart from its fixed rounds, or prescribed times, were only an uninhabitable chaos, what greater value is there likely to be, in their own acts and doings, when there is no fixed time in doing anything?"

Because liberty is under law, and not without law; because there is no freedom without constraint; because there is no spontaneity except within the bounds of necessity; because God has ordained routine as a privilege and a duty in every realm of his universe of which we have either knowledge or suggestion,—let us rejoice in the privilege of being ever under the law of love, and under love as a law, in the love of Christ, which constrains all who have freedom in him.

PASSING OF FRIENDLY INTERCOURSE.

The Friend, Philadelphia.

A NEW ENGLAND correspondent regrets the transferring of a Meeting on Ministry and Oversight from the day before the Quarterly Meeting to the morning of the Quarterly Meeting itself. This arrangement is for the sake of allowing attenders of both meetings to go and come by railway train on the same day. The regret expressed was for the loss of "the social part, the mingling together which we enjoyed as we went with our parents to the homes. This meant a great deal, and was a privilege this generation cannot realize. It kept our meetings on a higher plane than the conferences of other churches to which we are coming."

The modern curtailment of time for attending our monthly and quarterly meetings is accompanied by a lessening of interest in membership and of the virtue of hospitality. The former practice of parents of taking children with them in their carriages on a day's or a half-day's drive to monthly or quarterly meetings, lodging one or two nights at a Friend's house, enlarging our social acquaintance in various neighborhoods of Friends, broadening and deepening our interest in the whole Society and mankind in general, opening up ways of our reciprocating hospitalities when our turn should come for entertaining Friends, was something of a liberal education in itself. But when there was added to this intercourse and enlarging of heart and mind, an attendance upon the solemnities and business of the Church which brought us together, an interest in the affairs of Truth was slowly but surely built up in the youthful mind, and a regular habit of attending our meetings for Discipline confirmed, which, in mature life, we would not, if we could, depart from. So a succession of those who love the right order of the affairs of our goodly heritage was trained for the service of their day. It is now growing harder and harder to find such a succession from the ranks of those who have not been brought up to join their parents in the attendance of all their Meetings for Discipline. We know of none who did not accompany their parents on these monthly and quarterly meeting excursions from home who have turned out to be helpers, to say nothing of members, of our Religious Society. But the privileges of extended intercourse of neighborhood with neighborhood in mutual visiting on account of these meetings was one of the most winning inducements to our early interest in Friends and what they stood for, and a gracious preparation for that deeper interest which, later on, needs not such entertainment.

Where are the helpers to conduct the affairs of our Meetings for Discipline to come from, except from among the attenders of those meetings? And who are likely to be the attenders, except such as are habituated to it from their youth? Our schools seem to bind our children away from Meetings for Discipline and to be raising up a generation unacquainted with them, and likely to be as absent during business life as we have trained them to be during school life. The present writer now thanks his parents for taking their children out of school to attend, during the proper hours, our mid-week Meetings for Worship and Discipline. The places of the schoolmates who laughed at them for this have long since been unknown in our Religious Society.

A departure from former simplicity, and an entering upon the slavery to modern standards of living, seem to keep the faces of heads of families too close to the grindstone of daily toil, or to place the control of their time too much in employers' hands, to maintain their ancient liberties and privileges incident to well-rounded membership. And the multiplication of modern conveniences for hospitality seems to leave all the less room for hospitality itself. So that a Society with the spirit of Society, or of being "members one of another," starved out by the world, would have only to blame every beginning of leaving its first love, who has so clearly prescribed his remedy in these words, "If ye walk in the light as He is in the light, ye have fellowship one with another."

FAITH is all too ready to fix itself in form.—Dr. W. T. Davison.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, ELEVENTH MONTH 25, 1899.

Please address business letters to "Friends' Intelligencer, N. W. Cor. 15th and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia, Box 924."

Communications and contributions to "Editors Friends' Intelligencer," same address. Please add "Box 924"—as above.

ONLY ONE RIGHT STANDPOINT.

UPON questions which involve right and wrong there is not permitted to the conscientious man a freedom of opinion. There may be two sides to such questions, but there is only one right side. It is not allowable to plead that the wrong side is seen from our point of view, for only that stand-point which brings the right into view can properly be taken.

Perhaps this seems like commonplace, the stating of what no one denies. But it must be easily seen by any careful observer that strict adherence to the right is not very common,—that, on the contrary, most of those who profess truth in the abstract are apt, after laying down their principles, to begin a qualifying clause with a "but." Every one should be strictly honest—but it is found very difficult. No one should wander from the straight path—but the straight path, being narrow, is tiresome walking. In the abstract, it is right, no doubt, to live in peace—but, of course, there are times when you cannot.

There is one view-point for a consistent Friend, and only one. The fathers and mothers of the Society long ago defined it. They did not "balk their testimony." The principles which they laid down they adhered to, in fair weather and in bad weather, in good times, and in evil times. Many of them suffered loss of liberty, of property, and even of life, because they were steadfast and resolute in looking at things from the standpoint of the Christian, and because having so looked at them they would not depart from the course which they saw plainly opened. They were not people to hold a principle, and yet adopt an inconsistent line of action. They regarded honesty and justice as meaning honesty and justice,—no more, no less. To the pleader for something different, who proposed in general terms to do right, and then weakened his proposal with a but, they would have answered in the words of the old writer, "But me no buts."

The inheritance which Friends have from the olden time is expressed, and on the whole well expressed, in the codes of Discipline which survive as our rules of action, and which are measurably, but less fully than they deserve to be, remembered and regarded. The Discipline touches life at many points. It embodies the strivings of many years, by many conscientious men and women, to define a righteous course. As we have it now, though it may not always employ the quaint language of directness that was used a century and a half ago, it still does not fail to make clear that of those who claim to be Friends there is required a simple, plain, and persevering adhesion to the path of truth.

As a matter of fact, the Discipline of Friends, if the majority of the world would join in its support, would practically cure the ills under which the children of men suffer. The simple adoption of the principles of truth, and justice, and honesty, and temperance, and moderation, as these are laid down and defined in the codes of the Friends, would eradicate evils that now seem imbedded in the social structure, and for which all sorts of ineffective remedies are continually proposed. It may be asked, why does not the world see this? why is it that instead of persistency in wrong, instead of "looking at things" from a standpoint which brings nothing but evil into view, mankind will not adopt the simple methods of the Golden Rule, the reasonable and straightforward road of right action? But these are old questions. Why is it that men, professing Christianity, do not follow Christ?—this has been asked for almost two thousand years, and remains unanswered.

WHAT is religion? In one of his lectures at the Birmingham Summer School, Dr. W. T. Davison (Wesleyan Methodist), said: "The pith and core of religion lies in the relation of the soul of man to the living God."

In his paper, "Education and Religion," recently published in the INTELLIGENCER, John William Graham says: "I am taking religion to mean a consciousness of the presence of God in daily life, and consequently the performance of the details of labor and pleasure, and the waging of the struggle with temptation, as in the Great Taskmaster's eye."

In an essay, "The Meeting for Worship," published in 1897, the writer, one of the editors of this paper, says: "Religion is individual. In the last analysis, divested of outward and unessential things, religion is the aspiration and the endeavor of the individual soul to grow toward God."

ONE chief object of the "Summer School" movement, observes the British Friend, "is to substitute reverent inquiry for dogmatic assertion." This is an excellent description of such Scripture study, and one well worthy of respect. The world has been largely ruled by dogmatic assertion, each new generation taking up and emphasizing, without further evidence, what a previous one had declared. And when we recall that dogmatic conclusions were in many cases the outcome originally, not so much of spiritual illumination as of civil policy, or diplomatic demand, the case is all the more plain. Reverent inquiry is much needed; add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, is the advice in the epistle of Peter.

BIRTHS.

HUTCHINSON.—At Plainfield, N. J., Eleventh month 4, 1899, to Edward D. and Sadie Conrow Hutchinson, a son, who is named Arthur.

STUBBS.—Ninth month 13, 1899, at Delta, Pa., to Lewis Kirk and Sophia Hodgson Stubbs, a son, who is named Thomas Hodgson.

WALTON.—In Philadelphia, Eleventh month 5, 1899, to Benjamin and Emma T. Walton, twin children, who have been named Jane Kirkbride Walton and Brewer Gehly Walton.

MARRIAGES.

HODGKIN—WILSON.—At Bull street Friends' meeting-house, Birmingham, England, Eighth month 29, 1899, Thomas Edward Hodgkin, eldest son of Thomas Hodgkin, of Barmoor, Northumberland, and Catharine, eldest daughter of John Edward Wilson, of Wyddrington, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

DEATHS.

ABBOTT.—At Gainesville, Fla., Eleventh month 12, 1899, Samuel Abbott, in his 49th year, of Salem, N. J.

BEAN.—On Tenth month 31, 1899, at College Park, San José, Cal., Elizabeth Bean, aged 97 years. She was born in New Hampshire, Tenth month 3, 1802.

With an unusual retention of bodily and mental vigor, she continued her daily round of duty, and of loving service to those around her, and her constant attendance of meetings for worship, until her last illness, in Sixth month last.

Since then the months of weary waiting, and the many days and nights of suffering have been borne with meek submission and patience, while longing to be taken to her Heavenly home. Her convictions had long been strongly grounded in the spiritual verities of the Gospel of Christ, and her faith and hope wavered not in the last conflicts.

When she heard the words of the Psalmist repeated: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me," she at once added, "Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me."

In a full age, rounded to completeness, she is gathered "as a shock of corn cometh in, in his season." "Her children rise up and call her blessed." J. B.

BEDELL.—At Manhasset, Long Island, Eleventh month 8, 1899, Jay Sands Bedell, of Clinton Corners, N. Y., in his 30th year, son of William and the late Mary E. Bedell.

Interment at Manhasset, Long Island.

DUTTON.—At the residence of her brother, Rowland J. Dutton, Burlington, N. J., Eleventh month 17, 1899, Sarah J. Dutton, aged 70 years.

HALLOWELL.—In Philadelphia, Eleventh month 15, 1899, Hannah Penrose, widow of Morris Longstreth Hallowell, in her 88th year; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

HAWKINS.—On Second-day, Eleventh month 13, 1899, Mary Lamb, wife of Edwin R. Hawkins, and daughter of the late Isaac Pierson Mein; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

HILLES.—At his residence, Wilmington, Del., Eleventh month 15, 1899, Eli Hilles, aged 73 years.

LIPPINCOTT.—In Philadelphia, suddenly, Eleventh month 13, 1899, Edward W. Lippincott, aged 52 years, son of Aaron and Ann W. Lippincott, of Pilesgrove Monthly Meeting, N. J.

Interment at Woodstown, N. J.

LEAR.—Eleventh month 13, 1899, at the home of George and Isabella P. Russell, Merchantville, N. J., Harvey P. Lear, in his 24th year. Interment at Malvern, Pa.

LONDON.—At Camden, Delaware, Eighth month 8, 1899, Sarah Lonton, aged 94 years; a member of Camden Monthly Meeting.

She was the daughter of John and Jane Nock Woodall, of Kent county, Delaware, and wife of Joseph Lonton. She possessed a cheerful and contented mind, and "loved her neighbor." She retained her intellectual faculties until the close of her long life, and was ready and willing to answer the summons to come up higher. *

MARTIN.—Eleventh month 14, 1899, H. Fairlamb, son of Howard S. and Ida H. Martin, Kimbleville, Chester county, Pa., aged 8 months and 1 week.

MARTIN.—At Bristol Pa., of lockjaw, Eleventh month 14, 1899, Alice D., wife of Dr. William Martin, and daughter of John C. Maule, in her 29th year.

MATLACK.—In West Philadelphia, Eleventh month 14, 1899, George W. Matlack, son of the late Nathan and Lydia Matlack, in his 73d year.

SMITH.—At the residence of her son-in-law, Charles E. Hires, Merion, Pa., Eleventh month 17, 1899, Rebecca J., widow of Charles Sheppard Smith, aged 77 years, 3 days; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

She was the mother of the late Edgar K. Smith, whose early death cut short a life of much promise, and daughter of the late Andrew D. and Rebecca D. Keyser. *

SMITH.—Eleventh month 16, 1899, Ann J. Smith, late of 725 North Seventh street, Philadelphia; a granddaughter of Nathan Allen Smith, an esteemed minister among Friends, long since deceased.

Interment at Fair Hill Friends' ground, Philadelphia.

THOMPSON.—At her home in Coudersport, Potter county, Pa., Eleventh month 8, 1899, Cora Mann Thompson, wife of M. S. Thompson, and daughter of the late John S. and Mary W. Mann, the latter of whom died in First month last.

WEBSTER.—In West Chester, Pa., Third-day, Eleventh month 14, 1899, Catharine S., widow of William Webster, in her 79th year. Interment at Oakland Friends' ground.

WORTHINGTON.—At Mozart, the home of her brother, Eleventh month 2, 1899, Abbie L. Worthington, of Buckingham, Pa. Interment at Wrightstown Friends' ground.

DOUKHOBOR REPORT.

A FRIEND, S. J. P., of Landenberg, Pa., forwarding a collection made among members of Mill Creek Monthly Meeting, Del., says: "This contribution has been collected through the efforts of an aged invalid, who has been confined to her room for many months."

We have sent $100 more to help pay for the supplies which are being sent from Philadelphia for the children and sick account.

At the meeting of the London committee ("Meeting for Sufferings"), on the 3d instant, John Bellows quoted a letter from Joseph Storrs Fry, who said it was "the purpose of our Heavenly Father to cast this burden upon Friends, not only to be a blessing to the Doukhobors, but also to be a great blessing to Friends."

THE "INTELLIGENCER" FUND.

J. C., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.,	$5.00
L. K. S.,	2.00
S. C. F.,	10.00
Members of Mill Creek, M. M., Del., . .	16.25
Anna T. Jeanes,	200.00

$233.25

Reported last week, 625.00

$858.25

Paid for sick, and children, 650.00

Balance, $208.25

This list of acknowledgments closes Third-day morning, 21st instant.

Please draw checks to the order of Howard M. Jenkins.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT

No. 49.—TWELFTH MONTH 3.

ISAIAH AND HEZEKIAH.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strong rock, in Him will I trust.—Psalm xviii., 2.

Scripture Reading, II. Kings, xix., 1–37.

IN the early days of his ministry Isaiah confined himself to denunciation of the social and religious evils among his countrymen. But the national crisis of about 734 B. C., the time of the invasion of Judah by the northern alliance against Assyria, drew him irresistably into political life (Isaiah, Chapt. 7), and therefore he continued to take active part in public affairs. Though his efforts to prevent submission to Assyria had failed, and though the Jewish king had shown himself weak and unworthy, yet Isaiah turned to the future with that strong hopefulness especially characteristic of the Hebrew prophets. The near future should justify his policy and condemn that of the king. "A young woman shall bear a son and . . . before the boy knows how to refuse the evil and choose the good, the land of whose two kings thou art sore afraid, shall be unpeopled" (Isaiah, vii., 14 and 16—Polychrome Bible trans.). The Assyrians called in for help shall deal out destruction: "they will all come and settle in the ravines between the steep heights, and in the clefts of the rocks, and on all thorn hedges, and on all pastures" (Isaiah, vii., 19). Moreover, "the River, mighty and great (Assyria), shall overflow all its banks, and shall sweep onward into Judah, shall flow over it, and pass over it, reaching even to the neck" (Isaiah, viii., 7, 8). The disobedience of his people Jehovah would punish; yet he would not forsake them utterly: "His outspread wings shall cover the full breadth of the land." In the end they shall be preserved: "At eventide, behold terror! Before morning they are gone!" (Isaiah, xvii., 14). Many shall be destroyed, but a remnant shall remain. The kingdom may fail, but the Lord can raise up a new kingdom, and his purposes shall be accomplished. All will be well, since all is in the hands of Jehovah. But as for Israel, as for Damascus, they are condemned and shall perish.

The long look ahead, the trusting faith in the future, the hope in a king and a kingdom to come which shall truly stand for righteousness—these are most distinctly shown in the writings of Isaiah. But they are to be found in the words of all the great prophets. "It was the distinguishing mark of the Jewish people that their golden age was not in the past, but in the future . . . Their traditions, their fancies, their glories, gathered round the head, not of a chief or a warrior or sage that had been, but of a King, a Deliverer, a Prophet, who was to come" (Stanley).

The immediate results of the policy of King Ahaz seemed to justify his course. The invasion from Israel and Damascus was rolled back, and the lash of Assyria was upon their backs. Judah was subject, indeed, but this only implied a yearly tribute, which does not seem to have weighed heavily. Ahaz was enabled to pass on his throne to his son, Hezekiah—not unimpaired, indeed, since it was no longer independent, but with all the appearance of strength and stability, Hezekiah became king about 715 B. C., while still but a youth. It was his good fortune to be largely influenced by Isaiah, and by his contemporary prophet, Micah. It was probably because of their influence that sweeping reforms were instituted in the religion of Judah. The time was ripe for such reform. The destruction of Israel made a strong impression on the people of the sister nation, and this feeling was no doubt utilized by the priests and prophets of Jehovah to strengthen the faith of Judah in their God. Under Hezekiah the "high places," whose altars had always been centres of idolatry, were "removed." "He brake the images and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces the brazen serpent" (II. Kings, xviii., 4). He trusted in the Lord God of Israel: so that after him was none like him among the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him" (II. Kings, xviii., 5). The foreign policy continued to be one of submission to Assyria, and we need not be surprised to find that Isaiah now approves this. For his fundamental idea was security in political insignificance. When Judah was protected from Assyria by the bulwarks of Israel and Syria, her best plan was to avoid notice by taking no part in their resistance to the conquerors. But since those countries had been swept away and Assyria was at her border—since her wealth had been displayed in the tribute sent by Ahaz—the same kind of reasoning would dictate a continuance of tribute. But unfortunately the policy of quiet submission was not continued. Hezekiah gathered together by degrees great treasure and abundant stores of munitions of war. It was probably at this time that the aqueduct was built (II. Kings, xx., 20), by which the water system of Jerusalem was improved. This accumulated strength encouraged the king to hope for success in an effort to throw off the foreign yoke. About 705 B. C. conditions seemed to be favorable for revolt. The conqueror, Sargon, had just fallen by the hand of an assassin, and was succeeded by his unknown and untried son, Sennacherib. In Egypt the Ethiopian dynasty had been overthrown, and the new king was anxious to strengthen his hand by alliance with the States of Syria. A new danger to Assyria had also arisen in the east. The Chaldean, Merodach-Baladan, who had contested the kingship of Babylon with Sargon, returned from exile on Sargon's death, and once more seized the throne of Babylon. He sent an embassy to Hezekiah (II. Kings, xx., 12, 13), ostensibly to congratulate him on his recovery from severe illness, but really, as Isaiah clearly saw, to spy out the land for alliance against Sennacherib. The new king of Assyria showed himself, however, a worthy son or his warlike father. By 702 B. C. he had put down the eastern rebel and was free to turn to the west, where the king of Judah, in spite of the protests of Isaiah, had cast his fortunes with Egypt and the other States of Syria. Sennacherib acted promptly. He reduced the Phœnician cities and placed over them an officer of his own choosing. Thence he moved on to the Philistine cities of Ekron and Ashkelon. Here he met the armies of Egypt and overcame them in a great battle. Most of the other rebels now submitted, but Hezekiah still held out, while the Egyptians rallied for another attempt. The Assyrians now seized the fortified towns of Judah, and Hezekiah was induced to ask for terms. The tribute demanded was paid, and then the Assyrian broke faith by demanding the surrender also of Jerusalem. Encouraged by Isaiah, the Jewish king refused this command, and preparations were made for a siege. But before it was undertaken, Sennacherib's army was suddenly withdrawn from the west (II. Kings, xix., 35).

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

NEBRASKA HALF-YEAR MEETING.

FIRST-DAY morning, Ninth month 30, a company of Friends from Iowa, and different parts of Nebraska, gathered at our little meeting-house near Genoa. After a short silence our attention was called to the words of Jesus, "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do he shall do also; and greater works than these shall he do." Christ, the fountain from which we gain daily strength, prepares us for the work which he desires us to do. As we grow strong we must faithfully perform the little duties which we will surely find if we are only watchful, for these are an inheritance from our fathers, they are individual responsibilities which we have no right to leave to others until we have done our part; thus we shall become ready for the mantle when it shall fall upon our shoulders; and if we labor not to attain, how can we expect to receive the heavenly treasure, and be able to do those greater things that Jesus spoke of. We were also urged to be faithful lest the people of Nineveh should rise up against this generation, and condemn them, for one greater than Jonah is among us, even the Christ, whom the woman of Samaria proclaimed, and to whom we are lovingly called. We were reminded of his great kindness and love, which he gives to all freely and upbraideth none.

First-day afternoon the necessary business of the First-day School Conference was transacted and a short program rendered. The story of "The Bare-foot Boy" was read, making prominent the thought that man can do nothing to uplift his fellows without being raised to a higher plane himself. This was followed by an account of the wonderful impression made upon a hardened inmate of a reformed school by the reading of Whittier's poem, "The Eternal Goodness." A well-rendered recitation entitled the "Song of the Dying Swan," made us feel that we are in a measure "our brother's keeper," and that God is indeed a helper in every time of trouble. A short time was devoted to the discussion of the following question: "How may isolated Friends work most efficiently?" Many helpful suggestions were offered. We were counseled to be ready to do at all times what our hands find to do, with hearts full of love to our fellow-creatures, and faith in God, remembering that the harvest is white on every hand. One of the younger members thought that it might be well to strive against isolation. When we are making changes in location, or seeking employment, we often would do well to consider just those places where Friends are already located.

Second-day the meeting for business convened at 11 a. m. The reading of the minute presented by Nathan Edsall called forth expressions of gratitude that this Friend and his daughter, Della Cory, were permitted to mingle with us at this time. After the reading of the first query an exercise was presented as to how we might reach those who habitually absent themselves from meetings for worship and discipline. It was thought that the continuance of our meetings depends largely upon the faithful performance of this duty.

After the reading of the answer to the epistle from Prairie Grove Quarterly Meeting, a Friend expressed the thought that there was need of greater unity among all good people working in the Philanthropic fields, especially along the lines of temperance a special desire was felt that each should do his individual duty.

A very acceptable greeting was read from Isaiah Lightner and wife, the former having never before been absent from Nebraska Half-Year Meeting. We missed these, and other Friends who are usually in attendance, but were prevented this year by sickness and other unavoidable circumstances.

Remembering that we pass this way but once and should leave no generous word unsaid, no kind deed undone, and feeling that our gathering together had been pleasant and helpful, our meeting drew to a close.

Norris S. Fifield, Katie E. Shotwell, Committee.

SHREWSBURY AND PLAINFIELD H. Y. M.

Shrewsbury and Plainfield Half-Year Meeting was held Eleventh month 16, at Plainfield, N. J. Samuel S. Ash and Sarah were in attendance, with a minute from the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, and quite a number of Friends from New York and other meetings were also present. The meeting was well attended and of interest.

A memorial of Rahway and Plainfield Monthly Meeting of our friend Aaron M. Powell was read and adopted, and directed to the Yearly Meeting. A loving greeting was directed to be prepared by the clerks and forwarded to the meeting of Young Friends' Associations, to be held at Woodstown on the 18th instant.

After the adjournment an excellent lunch was served in the upper room of the meeting-house, and greatly enjoyed, with the pleasant social mingling of Friends which this makes possible.

At 3 p. m., a meeting of the Philanthropic Committee's Association was held. A paper had been promised on "Dependent Children," but a telegram had announced that the reader was unable to be present, and a spirited and interesting discussion was engaged in by many Friends, and the merits of the ancient proverb—"Spare the rod and spoil the child" were contrasted with the modern one of—"Spoil the rod and spare the child." The necessity of separating the pauper children from the adults in almshouses was fully discussed, as well as the most approved methods of discipline and correction in the Homes for these children. Our Friend informed us that whipping had been entirely abolished in th

Colored Orphan Asylum in New York, with excellent results, and that they had substituted depriving insubordinate children of some enjoyment or luxury provided for good ones—that they had watermelon parties which the bad children were not allowed to attend. This raised the question whether this was not a severe form of corporal punishment, and the statement was made that the colored children would rather take the whipping any time and have plenty of watermelon!

Quite a company of Friends had supper at the meeting-house; others were entertained at Friends' homes in the city. A temperance meeting was held at 8 p. m., ably addressed by Henry W. Wilbur of New York. On Fifth-day morning, the 17th instant, the usual Youths' Meeting was held, and was felt to be a favored season, although not so large as that on the previous day. Altogether, it was felt to be an occasion of pleasure and profit; the words of counsel extended and the spiritual uplift experienced will be for the growth and strengthening of Christian character to those who were privileged to attend.

R. S. H.

[From another correspondent.]

The Meeting of Ministers and Elders convened on the afternoon of the 15th, and was a favored season, with more than the usual number present. Samuel S. Ash, of Philadelphia, was with us, and his spoken words, with the silent ministry of other visiting Friends, were strengthening and helpful.

Fifth-day, the 16th, was a beautiful day and many gathered to the Half-Year Meeting. In the Meeting for Worship, Samuel S. Ash and Frances J. Williams ministered to the spiritual needs of those present. We were urged to be faithful to the Divine Guide, and trusting in the Father's strength, go forth prepared to do whatever He might require of us. In the business meeting the usual subjects were considered; besides which a proposition was received from the Shrewsbury Monthly Meeting that the time for holding the Half-Year Meeting of Ministers and Elders be changed from Fourth-day afternoon to Sixth-day morning at 9.30 o'clock. The proposition met with approval, and will be carried out in the future. The Rahway and Plainfield Monthly Meeting presented "A memorial of our beloved friend, Aaron Macy Powell." This, on being read, called forth many touching tributes to his memory, and expressions of the loss we have sustained by his death. The memorial was approved, and will be forwarded to the Representative Committee of the Yearly Meeting.

The Sixth-day morning meeting was one to be remembered. Earnest words were spoken by Robert S. Haviland, Samuel S. Ash, and Frances J. Williams. It was the close of what had seemed a spiritual feast, and we were filled with thankfulness that so many earnest, loving hearts had been drawn to meet with us, and that they had given forth so freely and cheerfully the good things entrusted to them for our counsel and encouragement; not only the messages from the ministers in the gallery, but the kindly suggestion, the helpful words, and loving sympathy of all.

M. F. V.

At the meeting of the Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting, on the 3d instant, the subject of Peace was brought up by reading the minutes of last month, recording efforts made by the Meeting to prevent war in South Africa.

Ellen Robinson (Liverpool), expressed the hope that Friends would be faithful in their testimony against all war as contrary to the spirit of Christ. We are told that now all should keep silent. On the contrary, it is the time to make our voice heard, dwelling on the un-Christian nature of war. It is a duty to try to counteract the flood of misrepresentation overwhelming the judgment of the nation.

Several Friends united in encouraging faithfulness in unmistakable testimony against war at this juncture.

GLIMPSES OF FRIENDLY NEIGHBORHOODS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

On the First-day following Baltimore Yearly Meeting I attended the Friends' meeting in Washington. There are a number of Friends living in or near this city, but some of them are not always faithful in their attendance at meeting. The number present each First-day ranges from twenty to seventy. For several years past the vocal ministry has been irregular as the attendance, but Sarah R. Matthews, a recommended minister of Baltimore Monthly Meeting, has recently removed to the Capital. The seats formerly in use almost made meeting-going a penance; these have been replaced by substantial benches that are as pleasing to the eye as they are grateful to the sitter; the new seats, with their neat cushions, add much to the comfort of the worshippers.

At the close of the meeting most of those assembled remained to the First-day school, which consists of a large adult class and a small children's class. The former, which used the Old Testament lesson leaves, was very interesting, because the one appointed to have charge of it for the day had made careful preparation. There is a Young Friends' Association connected with this meeting which meets monthly, and also holds a joint meeting four times a year, with similar associations of other churches. This is a practical step in the direction of religious unity, without any giving up of individual convictions.

After bidding adieu to the kind friends in Washington I next visited the Sandy Spring neighborhood, where I attended the mid-week meeting and enjoyed the hospitality of three delightful homes. Perhaps there is no other farming community in the United States, ten miles from a railroad, where there are more enlightened citizens than here. It is one of the oldest and best-known Friends' settlements; the meeting and First-day school are well attended, and there is a flourishing day school of about seventy pupils, with three regular teachers and a pupil assistant.

In this enterprising community there are three farmers' clubs, a "grange," a W. C. T. U., a Home Interests Association, a benevolent society, a young folks' literary society with a Greek name, and several other organizations whose objects have escaped my memory, all of which meet monthly. And with them all the large houses are well kept, and the ladies find time to sew carpet rags, and do other "fancy work."

There is however reason to believe that some of these favored people are fallible like other mortals. It is related that at one of the farmers' gatherings, a guest of an inquisitive turn spied a horse-rake in the barn with several pounds of snow adhering to it, and the omnipresent small boy volunteered the information, "Papa brought that in this morning, because the Farmers' Club was going to meet here to-day."

One of the notable things here is the book club, which numbers fifty families, and has been in successful operation for twenty years. A committee selects and buys enough books to give one to each family. In each book is the list of families as they come in turn, and whoever fails to send the book on at the end of two weeks must pay a fine. When the books have made their rounds they are sold at auction to the highest bidder, many of them finding their way into the neighborhood library. The money thus received forms the nucleus of a new fund, and the total expense is not over fifty cents a year for each family.

I returned to Baltimore in time for Baltimore Monthly Meeting, which is held in the evening, and in which the young people take an active interest. The Young Friends' Association was held on Sixth-day evening; two interesting papers were read and discussed, and some time was devoted to social com-mingling. The Association met in the library of the meeting-house and was a very enjoyable occasion.

The quarterly meeting of which Baltimore Monthly Meeting is a branch, was held at Little Falls meeting-house, in Harford county, on the 11th, 12th, and 13th of this month. Seventh-day was devoted to the meeting of ministers and elders, First-day to a public meeting, and Second-day to the business meeting, preceded by the usual meeting for worship. All of these were well attended, the weather being very favorable, and in all of them there was evidence that the Christ-power was in the midst. Joel and Mary Borton from Woodstown, New Jersey, as well as the writer of this letter, were present with minutes. Several of the ministers belonging to the quarter also spoke acceptably. One of the concerns expressed in the meeting was that some way might be devised, perhaps by the appointment of a committee, to distribute the guests more evenly at quarterly meeting times, but no definite action was taken. The First-day School Conference on First-day afternoon was an interesting occasion. It was very encouraging to hear so many young people give expression to the thoughts that arose in their hearts.

The community around Fallston is also an old and prosperous Friends' settlement. The Amoss family has lived on the same land for six generations, and the graves of the early ancestors may be seen near the house. William Amoss, who belonged, I think, to the second generation, was the founder of Little Falls meeting. He was a member of the Church of England, but on First-day morning he went off by himself and sat for an hour on a log in silent meditation. He did this for several successive Sabbaths and soon others joined him and a meeting was established.

It was also at this meeting that a woman Friend who had a concern to visit men's meeting, found when she had risen to her feet that words failed her; after standing for a few moments she simply said, "And the oil gave out!" and then went back to the women's meeting.

In all of the meetings and families visited there was evidence of a living interest in the Society of Friends and its testimonies; and I felt throughout the full force of the inspired words, "Give and it shall be given unto you; full measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over." E. L.

MILITARY GAMBLERS IN GERMANY.

Berlin Letter to N. Y. Evening Post.

IN a certain sense the trial of a number of officers of the gaming club, Der Harmlosen, was of even greater interest to the student of public events in Germany. That this is no longer the pious, God-fearing, simple-minded Germany of yore, the land of thinkers, the country "of high thinking and low living," this trial strikingly proved. True, such men as were here arraigned or heard in evidence are to be found in every large and luxurious town, and "sports" of more or less hardihood and recklessness may be met with as frequently in New York or Chicago as here. But there were several peculiar features. One of them was the fact that the members of this club and those introduced by the latter belonged, with few exceptions, to the circles of the highest German aristocracy and of the army, and represented not exceptions, but types. The other was the fact that the morality, the tone, of these men was proven by themselves to be surprisingly low and debased. Proof was produced that they had not scrupled to despoil comrades and friends of their entire fortunes, driving them into ruin and suicide, and exacting these gambling debts pitilessly to the uttermost farthing, under an unwritten but powerful law of their own making. One man they fleeced of 400,000 marks within a single night, and left him to a shameless death.

There were many instances sworn to in court showing beyond any doubt that the code of morals of these young and middle-aged men, though by birth the very flower of the nation, is worse than that of many a professional thief of low extraction. And another and perhaps even more startling feature of the case was that the court itself seemed to have no adequate realization of the iniquity, but treated these high-born offenders with a degree of consideration and forbearance which it certainly would not have shown to them if they had happened to be of plebeian birth. This demonstrated very glaringly that Prussian justice is no longer what it once was—even-handed and impartial. Altogether, the trial, which monopolized public attention for several weeks, uncovered many undesirable conditions in Germany. Several previous sensational trials of a similar character, such as the one in Hanover, six years ago, are not yet forgotten, but this one is worse than any before.

Literature.

RECENT ISSUES OF VERSE.

"PLAIN TALK IN PSALM AND PARABLE," by Ernest Crosby, is the passionate outcry of a refined socialist against the hollowness and hypocrisy of much of our modern life. The author dedicate his book to—

"Tolstoy, bold, archaic shape,
Rude pattern of the man to be,
From 'neath whose rugged traits escape
Hints of a manhood fair and free."

Fashionable church-going, organized charities, "the old serpent with his three heads—rent, interest, and profit," and various of the imperfect devices and poor conventions of our so-called modern civilization, come in turn under the lash of this reformer. One of the strongest pieces is a celebration of William Lloyd Garrison. For the workers in the slums, and for the noblemen of Russia who are learning the new sense of brotherhood, the writer has warm sympathy.

The verses are notable as being nearly all cast in amorphous metres, free and rambling like the lines of Whitman and Stephen Crane. A few of the pieces follow the regular forms, and from one of these, "Dear Old England," we quote two typical stanzas:—

"There the cottage, calm and still,
Nestles down beside the hill,
And lane and hedge and ancient beech
Seem just created each for each.

Wherefore flee from fields and downs
Crowding into ugly towns?
Wherefore plough the distant main?
What, have you sold your souls to gain?"

(Boston: Small, Maynard & Co.)

"Glasgow born, Berwickshire bred, and of Midlothian and Fife extraction," is what Horace Deluscar tells us of himself in the preface to "Songs to Merris." The nearly 300 pages of the volume prove this new Celtic poet to be eloquent and melodious, and not ungifted with a broad Scotch humor and caninness. His best work lies in his eight score sonnets. In spite of their regrettable errors in taste here and there, these little poems contain lines that seem like beautiful echoes from the sonnets of Shakespeare.

The new note of universal brotherhood, which is forcing itself into the songs of the better poets of our time, is present here; and indignant sympathy for the poor of cities,—

"Slummed in close factory garrets, where they moan, Steeped to the lips in want that breedeth sin."

It speaks for the sustaining poetic joy of this author that he can turn from picturing the sorrow of life in smoke-dimmed cities to sing so clear and sweet a lyric as this:—

"I hear the plash of distant waves
Along the sounding shore,
As each one high and higher laves,
Then sinks to rise no more.
The birds are calling wildly sweet
Across the ferny lea,
The butterflies and bees are fleet,
And lonely is the sea.

But high above the blended noise
Of wave and bird and bee,
The haunting cadence of thy voice
Comes ever home to me.
This glorious earth and sea and sky
Once unto me so dear,
I care not for them now, not I,
Unless thou too art near!"

(London: Gay and Bird.) JOHN RUSSELL HAYES.

Caroline H. Pemberton, of Philadelphia, whose literary power was expressed in a little volume, "Your Little Brother James," which was widely read and appreciated, some time since, has produced a new book, "Stephen the Black," that will hardly be overlooked, we think, even in these days of floods of printing. It is a compact powerful story, pathetic, but lighted by humor.

The story relates to present day affairs,—conditions, indeed, that may well engage the serious attention of every thoughtful person. The action turns upon the figure of Theresa, a negro girl in a skin almost white, the child of that widespread and even now hardly reduced system of racial intercourse which the South has for centuries presented, and which yet is accompanied by intense race repulsion. The events are all graphically narrated; there is no dull page. The period is the present. The place is Alabama. Social and economic conditions in the South are lighted up by the events of the story.

(Philadelphia: Geo. W. Jacobs & Co.)

It is announced that Henry M. Alden is not to retire from the editorship of Harper's Monthly. It had been suggested that he would do so, as a consequence of recent reorganizations. He has been editor of Harper's for many years.

Sir Walter Besant begins in the Century, the coming month, a series of papers illustrating life in East London as it is to-day. His manner of treating the subject is that of the novelist, rather than the essayist, for he takes as his point of departure the birth of a typical girl of the East End—"One of Two Millions in East London,"—and traces her career to the time of her marriage at seventeen to a young countryman who has come up to town to make his living as a porter. Liz is a "Board school" girl, and Sir Walter holds that what the average East Londoner learns from books at school he afterwards forgets; but that the civilizing influence of the schools is incalculable, and has marvellously transformed the East End within the past thirty years. No one knows more of the life of the poor in London than the author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men."

The illustrations are by Phil May, who collaborates with Joseph Pennell in illustrating Sir Walter's article.

The suggestion by Thomas Ellwood to John Milton, "Thou hast said here much of 'Paradise Lost,' but what hast thou to say of 'Paradise Found'?" out of which suggestion Milton's poem "Paradise Regained" sprang, is well known. Afterward, in London, Ellwood says, the poet "showed me his second poem, and in a pleasant tone said to me, 'This is owing to you, for you put it into my head by the question you put to me at Chalfont, which before I had not thought of!'"

A passage in "Paradise Regained," Book IV., ascribes to Jesus, answering Satan, in the Temptation, words which Hepworth Dixon (in his Life of William Penn), thinks are due to Ellwood and the Friends. Jesus is described as saying:

"He who receives
Light from above, the fountain of all light,
No other doctrine needs."

The Atlantic Monthly for December might in some senses almost be called a Chicago number, for three of the most striking and salient articles are by Chicago authors. Harrie Monroe's "The Grand Canon of the Colorado" is a brilliant and effective sketch of nature and natural scenery; Ella W. Peattie's lively "The Artistic Side of Chicago" pictures the æsthetic, artistic, educational, and literary features of the great city, while the short story, "The Detectives," by Will Payne, is an example of Chicago writers in romantic fiction.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

A DIVIDEND TO LABOR. A Study of Employers' Welfare Institutions. By Nicholas Paine Gilman. Pp. viii. and 400. $1.50. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Received through H. T. Coates & Co.)

SOME PAPERS AND ADDRESSES from the Friends' Summer School, Birmingham, September, 1899. Pp. 152. Cloth, 3 shillings; paper, 2 shillings. Birmingham: Morland and Henson; London: Headley Bros.

STEPHEN THE BLACK. By Caroline H. Pemberton. Pp. 282. $1.00. Philadelphia: George W. Jacobs & Co.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

CONFERENCE OF FRIENDS' ASSOCIATIONS.

THE usual autumn general conference of Friends' Associations was held in the Friends' meeting-house at Woodstown, N. J., on Seventh-day, the 18th instant. There were two sessions, one beginning at 10.45 and closing at 12, the other from 2 until 4. Luncheon was served by Woodstown Friends most hospitably in the lecture-room of Friends' School, a short distance from the meeting-house. The day was pleasant, and there was a good attendance, nearly four hundred persons being present, something less than half coming on the special train which left Market street, Philadelphia, at 9.30 a. m.

Joel Borton, of Woodstown, acted as chairman, and at the opening of the morning session extended a cordial greeting to all. M. Elma Livezey served as secretary. Of 125 delegates appointed, 86 were present, among them being several from New York city, and Robert S. Haviland, of Chappaqua.

A greeting from Rahway and Plainfield Half-Year Meeting, New Jersey, in session a day or two before the Conference, was read, and a response directed to be sent.

The program included two general topics, one for each session: "The Need of Increased Interest in our Business Meetings," and "The Friendly Renaissance." Upon the former, Susan H. Jarrett, of the Horsham Association, presented a paper, and on the latter a paper by Robert Reese, of Baltimore, was read by Helen G. Borton. There was an animated discussion of each subject, many Friends speaking. The first reader was followed by J. Hibberd Taylor, of West Chester, Pa., and by Alvin Haines, of Abington, these two having been appointed, and then there were remarks by Robert S. Haviland, Edward B. Rawson, Howard M. Jenkins, Samuel S. Ash, Dr. Sarah T. R. Evenson, David Ferris, Charles M. Stabler, Anna Janney Lippincott, Ezra Lippincott, and John R. Satterthwaite.

Upon "The Friends' Renaissance" brief addresses following the paper were made by Mary Wilson Thorne, of Moorestown, N. J., and Ely J. Smith, of Solebury, Pa., and there were further remarks by several of those who discussed the previous paper, and by Mary Ann Burrough, Elizabeth Lloyd, Jennie Waddington, William Walton, Grace L. Wright, John Cox, Jr., Samuel C. De Cou, Ellis W. Bacon, Paul Williams, Wm. S. Epperson, and Emma Gillingham Holloway.

A brief statement was made by Anna Jenkins Ferris, upon request, concerning Friends' Associations. They began in 1888 with that of Philadelphia. There are now nearly forty of them, and a membership of nearly 4,000.

The New York and Brooklyn Association has adopted the plan of interesting younger members, not yet ready to join its ranks, by the formation of a "Junior" Association. It meets at the same time with the senior one, in a different room. It has begun with sixteen members.

CAMDEN, N. J.—Camden Young Friends' Association held its second meeting for the winter in the meeting-house, Eleventh month 7. Minutes being read and adopted, the report of the special committee to nominate officers to serve for the ensuing year was then presented.

The work prepared for the evening was a paper on the Life of Mary S. Lippincott, by Lucy S. Cooper; the paper was very instructive and interesting. Chester Monthly Meeting, to which Mary S. Lippincott belonged, early recognizing her gift for the ministry, acknowledged her a minister in 1830. Fifteen years later she was made clerk of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Women Friends, which position she held for nearly a quarter of a century. The clear judgment of the clerk and her quiet waiting upon the Power which she had known to be able to direct in all things, would quiet the troubled waters, and the meeting under such influence often returned to that quietness and confidence in which is its strength.

"Should Friends engage actively in Politics?" was the second paper for the evening, and was ably handled by William H. Ivins. It showed much thought and study. The writer contended that Friends should not engage actively in politics in the sense of becoming active 'politicians,' such as we usually class under that name, but that they should become active and intelligent men in public affairs, using the same judicious forethought that would be exercised in their private business, having for their motto, "The greatest good for the greatest number." The question then arose of how Friends could take part in politics?

The article on Quakerism, begun in the last meeting, was continued and finished. Friends to serve as delegates for the Woodstown Conference were appointed: Anna B. Sheppard, Edward Roberts, Jr., Marianna Burrough, Howard M. Cooper, and Laura Collings. The meeting then coming to quietness adjourned till next month. LAURA COLLINGS, Secretary.

MICKLETON, N. J.—At a meeting of the Young Friends' Association, Eleventh month 11, the president read the 102nd Psalm as opening exercise. The minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Elizabeth L. Engle read a part of the 17th chapter of Janney's History, containing many interesting accounts of early Friends. Hannah L. Peaslee read "Hiawatha's Wooing." A portion of the Discipline concerning "Membership," was read by Priscilla Crispin.

Hannah A. Heritage read an interesting paper which she had prepared on the Life of John G. Whittier, followed by the reading of one of his poems, entitled "At Last." James G. Engle also recited one of his beautiful poems, entitled "The Brother of Mercy." An article on Meteoric Showers was read by Benjamin C. Heritage.

A Nominating Committee was appointed to bring forward names of persons to serve the Association as officers for the coming year, and report at next meeting. Remarks from visitors were given, which we all appreciated. Announcements were made for the next meeting, and the roll called, nearly all answering to their names by repeating a sentiment from Whittier.

Adjourned to meet Twelfth month 9. E. L. D., Sec'y.

PHILADELPHIA.—The Young Friends' Association met 13th of Eleventh month, 1899. The standing committees were called on for reports. The Literature Committee had received four pictures from Emma S. Webster, which she desired to have presented to the Association. The Current Topics and History Committee had no special reports to make. The Executive Committee announced a change in the rule governing the treasurer of the House Committee. A. Maria Jones, 1020 Green street, had been elected a member.

The program of the evening was a talk by Howard M. Jenkins, on a Visit to Friends in England. He alluded to the fact that there had been no official intercourse between the English body and our own for over seventy years—since 1827. There are in England, including Wales and Scotland, about 17,000 members, and in Ireland about 2,500. There are but nine meetings in Scotland, mostly small, those at Glasgow and Edinburgh being the most important. There are thirty-six meetings in Ireland, the largest being those in the cities Belfast, Dublin, and Cork, and at Bessbrook, the great linen-manufacturing town of the Richardsons. Dublin Yearly Meeting is the head of the meetings in Ireland, but is subordinate in authority to London.

The speaker said one was impressed with the generally substantial and well-arranged meeting-houses, many having reading-rooms and accommodations for visitors; he mentioned particularly Devonshire House, in London, and Manchester, Liverpool, York, and Scarborough. So far as he had seen, in the business meetings the clerks appeared exceptionally capable and fair, confining discussions to the subjects under consideration, and directing the business well. He spoke of the devotional character of the Friends in England, so far as he had opportunity to observe,—of the number of prayers in the religious meetings, and the reading of the Scriptures in families at breakfast time, and in the evening. He thought the monthly meetings were careful in "keeping account" of their members, knowing when and where any removed, etc. Speaking of those prominent in the Society, he mentioned several men Friends, and said the women were now coming to an equality in Society affairs with the brethren.

After the close of the talk, which occupied an hour, several questions were asked and answered, and John Orr Green, a Friend from Ireland, spoke briefly, exhorting Friends present to prayer.

Delegates were appointed to the Conference at Woodstown, and the Association adjourned.

ESTHER S. STACKHOUSE, Secretary.

LITTLE BRITAIN, PA.—Penn Hill Young Friends' Association held a regular meeting Eleventh month 12, 1899. The chairman opened it by reading from one of Drummond's essays.

The central thought for the evening being "Opportunities of Friends," the following papers were presented: "Friends in the Community," by Howard Coates; "Opportunities among Children," by Cora Wood; "Opportunities in the Young Friends' Associations," by Harry Bicknell.

The work of such schools and colleges as Race Street, George School, Swarthmore, and others, where our youth are taught the strengthening influence of the "quiet hour," was treated by the essayist in a clear and forcible manner. In our Young Friends' Associations we have opportunities for public speaking which will the better prepare us to take up the work of the Society when our elders lay it aside. Let us remember that the lives we live, the paths we tread, are opportunities for leading others toward the Light. It was not by creed, nor belief, neither by expressions, nor faith, but by good works, that Jesus said that others seeing, "should be led to glorify our Father who is in Heaven."

Walter Wood read "Labor not Accursed," Edith O'Reen recited "God's Promises." "If Christ Were Here" was also recited.

The routine business finished, many good sentiments were given, and after customary silence, we adjourned to meet in two weeks.

PHEBE L. COATES.

BROOKLYN AND NEW YORK.—At a regular meeting of the Young Friends' Association in Brooklyn on the 12th instant, Edward B. Rawson announced that the Young Friends' Review would have to be given up for lack of funds, as it was feared might be the case. In answer to the question, he stated that the Review stands in the same relation to the INTELLIGENCER as the Young Friends' Association does to the meeting. [We learn that the Review will be continued.—EDS.]

Henry M. Haviland, in presenting Current Topics, said that although several wars are in progress in different parts of the world, peace principles seem to be gaining ground among people of England and America.

Franklin Noble reported for the Literature Section, mentioning John Fiske's new book, "Dutch and Quaker Colonies in America," which gives a creditable account of Friends, and a noble portrait of William Penn. He also spoke of a book, "Narragansett Friends' Meetings," by Caroline Hazard, and of an old book by Anthony Benezet, to whom, in a large degree, the Society owed its prominence in early anti-slavery times.

The topic of the evening was "A Visit to the Shakers." Harriett Cox McDowell gave a brief account of her visit last summer with Dr. McDowell to the Shaker settlement, near Mt. Lebanon, N. Y. She described the usages of the Shakers at length. They have well-kept farms, and large barns. They are divided into four "families," occupying four large houses, with two Elders at the head of each. Eldress Anna White welcomed the visitors at the "North Home," where all strangers are received.

The Shakers are vegetarians, consuming milk and eggs, however, very largely. They make butter and fatten cattle, selling to those who have no scruples about eating meat. At meals, no one speaks; visitors are given a separate table. They are thrifty people, making close bargains, but fair ones. They do not vote, but pay their taxes without controversy. Many articles are made for sale, including chairs, cloaks, candied orange peel, simple medicines, etc. Nurses find little work there, for there is little sickness. They never marry, because Jesus did not.

Many children are adopted by the Shakers, who come to them from all parts of the country, and at the age of twenty-one years they are allowed to choose whether they will remain in the settlement or "go out into the world." The Shakers are strict in peace principles, and live in harmony with each other. "Yea" and "nay" are used in conversation, though they do not use "thee" and "thine," as Friends do. They believe in confession, and in a dual divinity, the Fatherhood and Motherhood of God. In their religious service they shake their hands as an expression of hatred to all evil. They have many curious customs and interesting opinions, and it is well worth one's while to pay them a visit.

A. H. M.

HUNTINGTON, INDIANA.—Young Friends' Association met Eleventh month 17, at Huntington. The chairman opened the meeting, after which the minutes were read and approved.

The routine business being completed, the question was discussed as to whether it would not be more profitable for the Association to meet more frequently. It was decided that the meetings be held every two weeks instead of once every four weeks, and that these meetings be held alternately at the homes of the different members, where it is thought that more freedom and sociability will be enjoyed.

Nehemiah Brown then read a well-written paper, entitled "Prohibition versus Moral Suasion." The paper was ably discussed, after which meeting adjourned to meet Twelfth month 3, at the home of Vincent Moore.

ELLA MOORE, Secretary.

PLYMOUTH, PA.—The Friends' Association met at the school-room, on the evening of the 17th instant, Isaac Roberts presiding.

Professor Benjamin Smith read an excellent paper on "Mid-Week Meetings." A paper on "Immortality" was read by William P. Livezey, and another by Annie M. Ambler. Each was followed by discussion.

The next meeting will be held at the same place on the 15th of next month.

PEACE CONFERENCE AT BYBERRY.—Despite the threatening weather, a fairly large audience gathered at Byberry meeting-house on the afternoon of the 19th instant, to discuss Peace and Arbitration. Sarah C. James presided, and opened the meeting by reading the 12th chapter of Romans.

Shepherd Cleaver recited "The Brown Man's Burden," and Sarah Knight read "The Falling of Thrones." Lukens Webster spoke briefly, saying he believed these meetings are just as important in their way as were those of one hundred years ago, when the people resolved to be free and independent. The proposed increase of army and navy appropriation, making in all $200,000,000 for military purposes, is appalling.

Amanda Deyo then delivered an address of power and interest. In beginning she quoted the platform of the Peace Union, "Peace of God which passeth all understanding." She said, in part, that if we confine ourselves to seeing only what armies are doing, we might be discouraged, but she meant to present what is being done in many countries to bring about the reign of Peace. The front pages of our daily press show woe and evil of many kinds, but on the editorial page we can find much that is encouraging. Never such an age as this—the power of mind over matter is in a higher stage of development than ever before. She believes if we were liable to be imprisoned for holding such meetings as these, there would be a rapid development of character, and if we could feel the infowing of Divine Spirit in our hearts, now as in those earlier days, as great things would be accomplished. We are seeking the rights of human-kind to-day, and all God desires of us is an upright life—to “deal justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God.” She spoke of the influence of the good French Quaker (Stephen Grellet), who went to Russia and preached so powerfully that it left an impression on Russian minds, and the indirect result was the Czar's call which resulted in the Peace Conference at The Hague, where twenty-six nations met to consider how to avoid war. There was never a time when women were so much concerned in public life as now, and when the Women's Council met in London at the same time as the Hague Conference, the most important subject claiming their attention was Arbitration, and twenty nations were represented. Next year when the same Council meets in Paris, they, 12,000,000 strong, are going to ask the world for disarmament.

James Q. Atkinson felt that as we in this body (and in the Nation largely) profess Christianity, and to be followers of Jesus, and if his teachings taught anything they taught, and still teach, that it is wrong to kill, it is strange that any nation professing Christ can deny practically the sanctity of human life.

Mary Richardson voiced the appreciation felt by many of the views expressed, and desired to particularly emphasize the thought of parents' influence. Here she felt the seeds of Peace and Temperance must be sown in order to bring forth good fruit in later years. After a short silence, the meeting adjourned, under a feeling of deep thought and earnestness.

Byberry, Pa.

ARABELLA CARTER.

EDUCATIONAL.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.—The close of the first term, on the 25th instant, marks a change in the work of several of the classes. The Senior class in Sociology under Dr. Hull has thus far been engaged in a brief survey of History. This course has consisted entirely of lectures upon early Colonial, and Revolutionary times. The remainder of the year will be devoted to the study of Sociology proper.

Dr. Appleton's classes in the “World Literature” course have completed a thorough and detailed study of Pope's translation of the “Iliad.” For the study of the “Odyssey,” which will next be considered, Butcher and Lang's literal prose translation will be employed.

On the morning of the 17th instant, ex-superintendent Hall left for the West, followed by the regrets and good wishes of the entire College, both Faculty and students.

The Thanksgiving vacation will begin on Fourth-day, the 29th instant, and work will be resumed on the 4th of next month.

M. S. H.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

A FRIEND, B. J. S., writing from San Francisco, says:

“There are seemingly no divisions among Friends here; in our work all are as one. While we may entertain different views on various subjects, they are no more made of in our work or worship than if we held different views on civil affairs.

“I notice your removal from No. 921, and am glad of it. You are forming a common center in the new place for the Friends' work. When you hear of any among you coming our way, encourage them by words to make Sunshine Hall their headquarters for receiving letters or making appointments for Friends or others where address is not known. We shall be glad to welcome all such at all times, and expect to be able in a short time to furnish guides or companions to those who have but a brief time to stop in the city and want to see as much as they can while here.”

William J. Hall, who has resigned his position as Superintendent at Swarthmore College, to make his home in the mountain States, left Swarthmore on the 17th inst., for Trinidad, Colorado. He had not fixed positively on a place of residence. His family will join him a little later.

Quite a large party of Friends have arranged to go on an excursion trip to Palestine, by the steamship New England, of the Dominion Line, to leave Boston on the 1st of Second month next, and return in Fourth month. Among those who intend going are Robert S. Haviland and wife, and Jane C. Washburn, of Chappaqua, N. Y., Phebe C. Wright and Mary Willets, of Sea Girt, N. J., Emily P. Yeo and Frances M. and Eleonora Robinson, of Richmond, Indiana. Altogether, there are some thirty-seven Friends (of both bodies) booked for the trip.

Our friends R. S. Haviland and wife will probably leave the steamer, on its return through the Mediterranean, and go north to England for a brief visit, returning from Liverpool or Queenstown (by another ship), about the end of Fourth month.

Matilda Garrigues, in a private note, on the 14th instant, from Pasadena, Cal., says: “Sister Mary [McAllister] and I arrived in this pleasant place on the 12th. We left home [Philadelphia] on the 1st of the month.” They expect to remain for the winter in California.

Albert B. Bayes, an English Friend, an elder in Brighthouse Monthly Meeting, has, we learn from him, been attending the Friends' meeting (not of our body) in Denver, and on the evening of the 12th instant gave an address on the Distinctive Doctrines of the Society of Friends. He has been about six months in Canada and the United States, and may remain about six months longer; he expects to come east in the spring.

COMMUNICATIONS.

HOW CHARITABLE BEQUESTS SUFFER.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

REFERRING to recent comment on the “war taxes” and other taxation placed on charitable bequests, I am acquainted with the experience of an educational institution in the South, which recently was given by the will of a very wealthy deceased person a bequest of $50,000. The Faculty of the institution had the subject sharply brought to their attention when they found that the State tax and the war tax amounted to 20 per cent. of the whole sum, taking $10,000 of the bequest, and leaving $40,000.

J. A. T.

Eleventh month 16.

AN INQUIRY ABOUT NEWSPAPERS.

Editors FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER:

Please tell me if there are any daily newspapers published in Philadelphia that are not issued on the first day of the week,—and if there are any what is their character.

Washington, D. C.

S. T.

[There are two daily—morning—newspapers that do not issue a “Sunday” edition, the Public Ledger and the North American. The former is well known as a conservative and unsensational paper; its price is two cents. The other is one cent; it has recently been sold by the family who long owned and conducted it, the McMichaels, and is now quite an enterprising newspaper, particularly devoted to the purification of politics.—EDS.]

CHARITABLE REPORTS.

YOUNG FRIENDS' AID ASSOCIATION, New York City, has sent out its twenty-sixth annual report. The Association was organized in 1873, and incorporated in 1890. It is specially devoted to the aid of poor families in New York. The report states that one feature of its work is the direct application of funds entrusted to it, without the employment of salaried agents. “The service of its members is freely given, but the constitutional provisions of the Society exercise a guardianship over these services, which insures careful examination of cases taken up.”

“During the year the Society has had oversight of forty cases, each ‘case’ representing a family or part of a family. Of these, twenty-five have been upon the books previously. Fourteen have been discharged as not needing further care, and three have been released by death. One of the latter has had assistance for many years. He had been a soldier in the Civil War and was consumptive.

"Two families under care were enabled to go to the country, where they are able to maintain themselves comfortably.

"A young man and wife, driven to the wall by the march of progress in their trade and reduced to absolute destitution by sickness and hostility of landlords were reestablished by purchasing for them a modern attachment for their machine, which enabled them to again enter the field of competition. One helpless old woman, by the payment of her tuition, was secured admission to a Home; but another case, which needs similar care, is yet unprovided for. The hopelessly long waiting lists on the books of all the worthy institutions for aged people are a discouraging feature of the work, and a subject which needs investigation and agitation."

The receipts for the year amounted to $1,706.05, (including a balance of $10.36 from the previous year), and the expenses to $1,685.26. The receipts were in part interest on invested funds, ($2,000), and $538.48 received at the annual fair.

The Fair for the present year, it is announced will be held next week, Eleventh month 24 and 25.

The officers of the Association are Anna M. Jackson, president; James Foulke, vice president; Wilmer A. Briggs, treasurer; John Cox, Jr., recording secretary; Cornelia J. Shoemaker, corresponding secretary; with a Board of Directors.

It is desired that contributions for the Fair, except of a perishable nature, be sent to Friends' Seminary, No. 226 East 16th street, on or before Eleventh month 23.

FELLOWSHIP FOR ALL THE WORLD.

[DAVID FERRIS writes us: In 1862 Julia Ward Howe stirred the Nation with her "Battle Hymn of the Republic." And now at eighty years of age she throws her influence as strongly for Peace as in former days she made it count for war. She has spoken publicly in Boston in behalf of Universal Peace, and now addresses a still larger audience in this new poem, written for the Sunday School Times.]

THE MESSAGE OF PEACE.

Bid the din of battle cease;
Folded be the wing of fire;
Let your courage conquer peace,
Every gentle heart's desire.

Let the crimson flood retreat,
Blended in the arc of love,
Let the flags of nations meet;
Bind the raven, loose the dove.

At the altar that we raise
King and kaiser may bow down;
Warrior knights above their bays
Wear the sacred olive crown.

Blinding passion is subdued,
Men discern their common birth,
God hath made of kindred blood
All the peoples of the earth.

High and holy are the gifts
He has lavished on the race:
Hope that quickens, prayer that lifts;
Honor's meed and beauty's grace.

As in Heaven's bright face we look,
Let our kindling souls expand;
Let us pledge on Nature's book
Heart to heart, and hand to hand.

For the glory that we saw
In the battle-flag unfurled,
Let us read Christ's better law,
Fellowship for all the world.

SWITZERLAND produces annually more books than any other country, in proportion to the number of inhabitants, one Swiss in every 3,000 being an author.

CURRENT RELIGIOUS COMMENT.

INCENSE AND CANDLES.

"It is a great strain upon our natural optimism," says the Interior (Pres.) of Chicago, "to read just now our English exchanges. We lay them down with a dazed sort of feeling and invariably glance at the calendar upon the wall to make sure where we 'are at.' It must be 1899 years since the birth of Christ, according to that tablet, but is that possible when, as we find, a kingdom is torn up over the question of candles and incense and priestly processions? Is it possible that Jesus talked with the woman at the well so long ago, and told her that any worship 'in spirit and in truth' was acceptable to God, and that no other was, and still men weep and lament because they cannot kneel before candles and disinfect their prayers with aromatic gums? And after all the efforts of our Lord and his disciples to banish 'bodily exercise' and 'the washing of pots and of kettles' and the observance of 'days and seasons,' here they are all back again as the very substance and fundamentals for Christianity, and yet, God be thanked, there are some even in the Church of England who understand that 'the fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace in the Holy Ghost.' But we could wish there were more to whom the simplest truths of the Christian religion were not hidden."

CHARACTER ABOVE ENVIRONMENT.

"One of the most popular fallacies of our day," says the Watchman (Bapt.) of Boston, "is that character is the product of environment; that if you put people into the right surroundings they will be righteous. The entire drift of the New Testament is against this theory. Its teaching is that the right soul does far more to change external conditions than the right external conditions do to change the soul. No sensible man overlooks the influence of circumstances upon character, but he sees that however influential they may be, they are not finally determinative. It is upon that fact that the Christian theory of how human life and society are to be purified and ennobled rests. Christianity makes its primary appeal to the human conscience; it brings a message to the intelligent personality; it aims to reconstruct life and society and institutions by transforming the personal conscious life of the individual. Just in proportion as it does this it succeeds, and just in proportion as it leaves the citadel of the human personality defiant to divine influences it fails. Let us do everything that we can towards ameliorating the external conditions of human life, but the moment the church substitutes service to the external requirements of man for her distinctively spiritual ministry, she misses the essential feature of her vocation; she fails to avail herself of her principal resource. Not only is God a spirit, man is a spirit. Not only must they who worship God worship Him in spirit and in truth, but they who serve man must serve him in spirit and in truth."

It is announced that the great trans-Siberian railway will be finished within about a year, and before the end of the century trains will be running over an unbroken roadbed from St. Petersburg to Port Arthur.

Anna W. Longstreth.

IN the Christian Register, Boston, Eleventh month 9, appeared a tribute to the late Anna W. Longstreth, of Philadelphia (deceased Ninth month 18), from which the following is taken :

"She was not tempted by wealth and the opportunity to enjoy a selfish leisure. The more she received, the stronger was the impulse within her to give, and to give not only her money, but herself, her intelligence, her sympathy, her active interest in all good things, and her personal presence and service where they were needed.

"Her husband, Mr. Edward Longstreth, had long since retired from business ; and in their beautiful home he and his wife extended a warm welcome to all wayfaring men and women who were doing the King's business. We would not speak of Mrs. Longstreth's unselfish devotion as if it were peculiar, marking a distinction between her and other women who have the opportunities which wealth brings. It would be more just to present her character and service as representing a type, happily increasing among us, of those who regard all opportunities of leisure and culture as opportunities for noble service to their fellow-men. Among all the new social phenomena which are attracting the attention of the deepest thinkers, nothing is more cheering than the growth of a class of men and women who use money, honestly made, as if it were a treasure which by wise administration might be transformed into intelligence, virtue, and social blessing. It is all the more a pleasure to Mrs. Longstreth's associates to praise her good works, because they know that she belonged to a goodly and increasing fellowship of blessed women who make the world happier while they are in it, and better after they leave it, for the good works they leave behind them."

Civilized Vocabularies.

IF the English language is soon to be the universal tongue, one is inclined to feel rather sorry for those who have to acquire it. For, according to a German statistician who has made a study concerning the comparative wealth of all the languages of modern civilization, ours is the one which heads the list with the enormous vocabulary of 260,000 words. Germany comes next, after a great drop, with 80,000 words ; then follow Italy with 75,000, France with only 30,000, Turkey with 22,500, and Spain with 20,000 words. Fortunately, the literature of a nation does not depend on the number of words in its vocabulary, for did not the French masters of the pen in the seventeenth century work with the small capital of 5,000 words?—[Westminster Gazette.]

Intemperance Among Women.

THE London Lancet, in referring to the British death rate from intemperance, directs attention to one of its most painful features—the increase of alcoholism among women. The deaths from chronic alcoholism in the year 1897, as compared with the year 1878, in men show an increase of 82½ per cent., those of females of 145½ per cent. ; and the deaths from cirrhosis of the liver in men an increase of 12 per cent., and those from cirrhosis in females of 26 per cent. The amount of disease caused by liquor, which falls short of a fatal termination, is necessarily a matter beyond all power of calculation.

Chatham's Boldness.

DURING one of the exciting discussions held in the British Parliament at the breaking out of the American Revolution, William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, the famous English Premier and friend of the American Colonies, said :

"America, my lords, cannot be reconciled ; she ought not to be reconciled, to this country till the troops of Great Britain are withdrawn from the continent ; they are a bar to all confidence ; they are a source of perpetual irritation ; they threaten a fatal catastrophe. How can America trust you with the bayonet at her breast? How can she suppose that you mean less than bondage or death?"

An Earthquake Register.

Swarthmore (College) Phoenix.

PROFESSOR CUNNINGHAM reports that the seismograph registered a very remarkable earthquake on Ninth month 10 ; a very slight one, Ninth month 20, and a considerable one, Ninth month 23. About Tenth month 12, a great earthquake, destroying more than 4,000 people, was reported from the Malay Islands. Professor Cunningham found a very peculiar registration on Tenth month 4, and thinks it may have been the same earthquake.

This seismograph is the only one in the United States. It was invented by Professor Milne, of the Isle of Wight (England), with whom Professor Cunningham exchanges reports.

Teachers' Salaries in Philadelphia.

IN the public schools of Philadelphia there are 109 men teachers and 3,050 women. The salaries of the 109 men teachers are as follows: Forty-four supervising principals, each $2,065 ; seven principals, each $1,865 ; one supervising principal, $1,845 ; other principals—one, $1,645 ; one $1,600 ; one $1,520 ; one, $1,445 ; one, $1,430 ; one, $1,415 ; one, $1,350 ; two, each $1,295 ; one, $1,265 ; one $1,220 ; one former principal receives a special salary of $1,200 ; assistant teachers—eleven, each $1,100 ; eight, $1,070 ; three, $1,040 ; one, $1,010 ; five, $980 ; the salaries of the other men teachers are, one, $1,045 ; one, $1,000 ; two, each $970 ; seven, $845 ; one, $815 ; one, $785 ; one, $765 ; two, each $725 ; one, $720, and one, $590.

The salaries of the 3,050 women teachers are as follows: Two, $2,065 each ; two, $1,865 each, two, $1,845 each ; thirteen supervising principals, $1,450 each ; two principals, $1,350 each ; fifteen principals, $1,250 each ; one principal, $1,220 ; one vice-principal, $1,100 ; eleven supervising principals, $1,045 each ; fifty-six supervising principals, $1,000 each ; three principals, $950 each ; one principal, $845 ; sixty-seven first assistants, $820 each ; four principals, $795 each ; ninety-three principals, $750 each ; one principal, $725 ; thirty first assistants, $720 each ; 125 principals, $700 each ; eleven first assistants, $695 each ; 499 assistant teachers, $670 each ; thirty-five, $640 each ; one, $635 ; 1,243, $620 each ; twenty-three, $610 each ; 136, $590 each ; twenty-five, $580 each ; 136, $560 each ; eleven, $550 each ; 140, $530 each ; 153, $500 each ; ten, $470 each ; fifty-three kindergarten principals, $475 each ; eighty-one, $450 each ; seven, $425 each ; assistants, forty-five, $400 each ; ten, $375 each.

CURRENT EVENTS.

GARRET A. HOBART, the Vice-President of the United States, died at his home at Paterson, N. J., at 8.30 a. m., on the 21st instant. His death was due to disease of the heart, angina pectoris. He was in his 56th year. He was chosen vice-president in 1896, on the Republican ticket with President McKinley. His wife survives him, and a son, Garret A. Hobart, Jr., fourteen years old. A daughter, Fanny, died in 1895, aged twenty-two, while the family were traveling in Italy.

THE war in South Africa continues. There have been many rumors and reports, but hardly any information of a definite character is given out from English sources, and as the telegraph cables are entirely in English hands, no other news is available. In an engagement last week, Winston Churchill, son of the late Lord Randolph Churchill, was wounded and captured by the Boers. (His mother was an American woman, the daughter of Leonard Jerome, of New York.) There have been reports of "hard fighting" around Ladysmith on the 15th and 16th instant, and of "heavy Boer losses." The English reinforcements are probably pushing forward from Durban. The Boers, according to one account, have destroyed the important railroad bridge at Colenso, south of Ladysmith.

THE German Emperor, William, arrived in England, on the visit of which so much has been said, on the 20th. He came in an "imperial yacht," escorted by two war-ships, and landed at Portsmouth. He was accompanied by the Empress, and two of their sons, and a large staff of officials, including Count von Bulow, the German "Chancellor," or chief civil executive officer of the Empire. They proceeded immediately to Windsor Castle, where the Queen received them.

The object of this visit has occasioned much discussion, but no real doubt is entertained that it is part of the program by which England, Germany and the United States join in a virtual alliance, for the present, as against other nations, in reference to such affairs as the seizure of the Samoan Islands, the "partition" of China, and the wars in South Africa and the Philippines. The German Emperor considers it his best policy, at present, to cultivate England, though the feeling of the German people is generally hostile to her, and friendly to the Boers.

THE Secretary of the Treasury, Gage, on the 15th instant, directed that purchases of United States bonds, to the amount of 25 millions of dollars, be authorized. This was done, it is understood, because the rate for money had been high in New York City, for some time. The result was to advance the price of stocks. Considerable purchases of bonds have been made, amounting up to the close of the 20th, to about 7 millions. They are of the issues at 5 per cent., due in 1904, and at 4 per cent., due in 1907. The market price of the 15th is paid. There was much difference of opinion among bankers and financiers concerning the step, some saying that it was not necessary, and that it was only "speculators" who demanded it.

THE reports from Gen. Otis, at Manila, continue to be that his operations against the Filipinos are very successful. Several different towns are reported as taken. What these really amount to there is no way of judging. It is only plain that the war continues.

THE National Export Exposition, which has been open in West Philadelphia, on grounds near the University of Pennsylvania, since the 14th of Ninth month, is about to close, having been very successful. The attendance has been large. The admission charge on Seventh-days has been 25 cents, and the number of visitors, on several of these days has been nearly 50,000. (It was 40,960 on the 18th, the weather being somewhat threatening.) The 20th was "Philadelphia Day," and the attendance was again quite large.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

THE corruption of the elections in Philadelphia, known for years past to be gross, is attracting some public attention, and may possibly now be somewhat checked. The Philadelphia Record says: "We have statues of William Penn, George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and other worthies of the past erected in various parts of Philadelphia. These statues should be draped in black and their faces masked in order that they may not look with their eyes of stone and bronze upon the shame of the City of the Declaration, where Fraud stalks unhindered and the people refuse to govern themselves." And the Ledger, copying the paragraph, says, "That is the truth."

—The leading newspaper at Manila, printed in English, is called Freedom. "The advertising columns present one significant feature. The greatest space and by far the greatest display are given to advertisements of intoxicating liquors, whiskey seeming to lead. There are seventeen such advertisements, two of them occupying half a page each. There are also eleven advertisements of hotels and restaurants."

—The Philadelphia North American says: "Recently the Standard Oil Company advanced the price of coal oil. This is the third advance in price within a short time, and the company is now getting an increase of a dollar a barrel over the price that prevailed six months ago. In that time there has been no corresponding increase in the cost of production, and, therefore, the Standard has added several millions to its wealth, not by an expansion of its business, but by the simple process of squeezing the consumers."

—The report of the British Consul in Venezuela, Mr. Haggard, on bird hunting, indicates that the slaughter of birds goes on unchecked. As to aigrettes, he says that the number of birds killed in 1898 for this purpose was 1,538,738. No less than 870 birds have to be killed to produce less than 2½ pounds of the smaller feathers.

—The United States Navy, last year, cost about 30½ millions of dollars,—14 millions for the maintenance of the ships which were already in service, 10 millions for new or purchased ones, and 6½ millions for repairs.

Delicious Hot Biscuit are made with Royal Baking Powder, and are the most appetizing, healthful and nutritious of foods.

Hot biscuit made with impure and adulterated baking powder are neither appetizing nor wholesome.

It all depends upon the baking powder.

Take every care to have your biscuit made with Royal, which is a pure cream of tartar baking powder, if you would avoid indigestion.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

—A dispatch from London, on the 10th inst., says a heavy "siege train" is to be shipped at Woolwich and Devonsport, "which it is supposed is intended for the purpose of shelling Pretoria,"—the capital of the Transvaal Republic. The dispatch adds: "This will be the first employment of a modernized siege train by any European army. The progress of the reduction of the forts by lyddite shell fire, a preliminary to storming by infantry, will be watched with interest and curiosity by all professional soldiers."

—The Texas Attorney General has given an opinion in support of the practice of assessing corporation franchises for taxation, and the corporations will now carry the question into the courts. In Dallas county the total tax assessment is $97,290,000, of which $64,000,000 represents the assessed value of franchises.

—Andrew Carnegie, who returned to this country on the 6th instant, denied the reports that he intended to become a British subject. Of the two pending wars he said: "The war against the Boers is most infamous and unjust. It was brought about by England's lust for domain, and is on a par with our attack on the poor Filipinos. These two attacks are a disgrace to both branches of our race."

—Prof. George D. Herron, who has been professor of Applied Christianity in Iowa College, and who is widely known by his writings, has resigned his chair, on the ground that as the College was in need of financial support, and "men of means" would not give, while he remained he felt it his duty to disembarass the trustees. He reasserts his belief that the existing "system of private ownership of natural resources is a crime." He says he expects always to teach "the common and equal right of all men to the earth and its resources."

—The City Council of Americus, Georgia, by a majority of two upheld the Mayor in the case of the Christian Scientists sentenced for refusing to be vaccinated, and the cases have been taken to the Superior Court.

—A representative of the National W. C. T. U. presented to President McKinley, on the 18th, a petition for the prohibition of the sale of liquor and opium and the practice of gaming in Hawaii.

THERE is scarcely a family in the land into whose home a newspaper of some description does not find its way. The members of that family may never look inside the covers of a magazine, but they experience a sensation of loss if their newspaper fails to reach them.—Newspaper Ink.

THOUSANDS of persons in Germany live literally "on straw," making it up into blankets, panniers, boxes, knickknacks, hats, bonnets, etc. Professional schools have even been founded, where the trade is taught in all its varieties.

THE fact that one kind of advertising has failed is no indication that another kind would not win.

NOTICES.

 A Conference under the care of the Philanthropic Committee of the Yearly and Quarterly Meetings will be held in the meeting-house at Buckingham, Bucks county, Pa., on First-day, Eleventh month 26, 1899, at 2.30 p. m. Subject, "Improper Publications." All are respectfully invited to attend.

On behalf of Committee.

SUSANNA RICH, Clerk.

 The Visiting Committee of Baltimore Yearly Meeting have arranged for meetings up to First month as follows:

ELEVENTH MONTH:

26. Gunpowder.

TWELFTH MONTH:

3. Washington, D. C.

10. Pipe Creek.

17. Forest Hill.

24. Aisquith Street, Baltimore.

31. Woodlawn.

JOHN J. CORNELL, Chairman.

 The Home Influence Association, under the care of Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting's Philanthropic Committee, invites all interested in the care and training of children, to hold an informal meeting on Third-day, Eleventh month 28, 1899, at 8 p. m., in the meeting-house, 17th street and Girard avenue, Philadelphia.

ANNA K. WAY, Clerk of Committee.

 Acknowledgment.—List of Contributions to Friends' Neighborhood Guild (formerly Beach Street Mission), from Eleventh month 11 to Eleventh month 18, 1899:

Anna C. Shoemaker, $1.00

William C. Smyth, for Manual Training, 20.00

Lukens Bros, for Sewing School, 10.00

$31.00

Richard French and Charles E. Hires kindly furnished wagons and men for hauling, moving, etc.

CASSANDRA T. CARR, Treasurer,
1719 North 18th St., Phila.

 Friends Visiting Committee of Salem Quarterly Meeting have made the following appointments for Eleventh month:

26 Salem, 10 a. m.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY

Pittsburgh.

DEYMER-BAUMAN

Pittsburgh.

DAVIS-CHAMBERS

Pittsburgh.

FAHNESTOCK

Pittsburgh.

ANCHOR } Cincinnati.

ROSESTEIN }

ATLANTIC }

BRADLEY }

BROOKLYN } New York.

JEWETT }

ULSTER }

UNION }

SOUTHERN } Chicago.

SHIPMAN }

COLLIER }

MISSOURI }

RED SEAL } St. Louis.

SOUTHERN }

JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO

Philadelphia.

MORLEY

Cleveland.

SALEM

Salem, Mass.

CORNELL

Buffalo.

KENTUCKY

Louisville.

THE truth of the matter is, there are so many mixtures of Zinc, Barytes, Whiting, etc., sold under misleading brands of "White Lead" and "Pure White Lead," that in order to obtain Pure White Lead it is absolutely necessary to make sure that the brand is right.

Those named in the margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package.
GLUTEN FLOUR For DYSPEPSIA.
SPECIAL DIABETIC FLOUR.
K. C. WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR.
 Unlike all other goods. Ask Grocers.
 For book or sample write
 Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

Young Friends' Association.

The Young Friends' Association Office is now open in the Association Building, 15th and Cherry streets, where those wishing information may apply between the hours of 8.30 a. m. and 5.30 p. m. Address all communications to

YOUNG FRIENDS' ASSOCIATION,
 15th and Cherry Sts., Philadelphia.

VAIN REGRET.—"Did you step on one of those weighing machines when you were down town, Johnny?" "Yes'm. Weighed myself on two of 'em." "What did you do that for?" "Wanted to be sure about it." "Did you weigh the same on both?" "Nome. Fifty-nine pounds on one, and sixty-one on the other." "You foolish boy! You've wasted a cent on one of the machines, and you don't know which one."—[Chicago Tribune.]

"YOUNG man," asked the proprietor of the store, who was making the rounds of the various departments, "how can you afford to dress so elaborately and expensively on the salary we pay you?" "I can't," gloomily answered the salesman, "I ought to have more salary."—[Chicago Tribune.]

A LITTLE girl ran into a chemist's shop, and asked for a penny's worth of pills. "Anti-bilious?" asked the chemist. "No," said the child: "uncle's bilious!"—[Selected.]

LADY of the House (to peddler): "If you do not go away, I'll whistle for the dog."

Pushing peddler: "Then let me sell you a whistle, mum."—[Tit-Bits.]

THE disposition of the Japanese is apparently to look almost exclusively to the United States in educational matters, as the total number of Japanese students residing abroad, as shown by the census figures, was 2,465, and of this number 2,178 were in the United States.

NUMEROUS complaints had come before a certain public official in regard to the quality of food served to the inmates of one of the public institutions, and he determined to investigate. Making his way to the building just about dinner-time, he encountered two men carrying a huge, steaming boiler. "Put that kettle down!" he ordered brusquely; and the men at once obeyed. "Get me a spoon!" he next commanded. The man that brought the spoon was about to say something, but was ordered to keep silent. "Take off the lid!" was the next command. "I'm going to taste it." The two men, cowed by the official's brusqueness, watched him gulp down a good mouthful. "Do you mean to say that you call this soup?" the official demanded. "Why, it tastes to me more like dirty water." "So it is, sir," replied one of the men, respectfully. "We were scrubbing the floors."—[Exchange.]

ONE of the most marvellous features of astronomical photography is the way that a camera will register the images of stars invisible to the human eye. The same instrument which shows to the human eye stars of fourteenth magnitude, which in the entire heavens would register about forty-four million stars, shows to "the photographic eye" no less than one hundred and thirty-four millions! After an exposure of one hour and twenty minutes a photographic negative of the whole firmament would display to the astonished gaze of the beholder a luminous dust of four hundred millions of stars.—[Exchange.]

A NOVEL poster was seen by a recent sojourner in Nova Scotia. It was printed on rough paper with red paint, in a childish hand, and was tacked to a telegraph-pole in a conspicuous position: "There will be a concert and fair in Mrs. Parson's sitting-room to-day, July twenty, at two o'clock sharp. Admission: adults, five cents; children, two cents; babies, two for a cent."—[Exchange.]

A SHIPMENT of American black bass was made to France, and they have flourished so marvelously that to-day they are common articles of diet in the hotels and restaurants. When the bass were introduced the French streams were practically deserted.

ONE of the largest forests in the world stands on ice. It is situated between Ural and the Irkoutsk Sea. A well was recently dug in that region, when it was found that at a depth of 300 feet the ground was still frozen.

A LITTLE girl drew a dog and cat on her slate, and said to her mother, "A cat oughtn't to have but four legs; but I drew her with six, so she could run away from the dog."

THE total value of the lumber annually manufactured in the Northwest, including Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, is $80,000,000.

IN Harrodsburg, Ky., there is a man who has a private coal mine that he uses as his fuel supply and will sell none.

THE plague of lamps is the breaking of chimneys; but that can be avoided. Get Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass."

The funnel-shaped tops are beaded or "pearled"—a trade-mark. Cylinder tops are etched in the glass—"MACBETH PEARL GLASS"—another trade-mark.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Address MACBETH, Pittsburg, Pa.

SAVE 1/2 Your FUEL
 wasted up chimney.
 BY USING THE ROCHESTER RADIATOR.
 COST $2.00 AND UP.
 Money refunded if not satisfactory.
 Write for booklet on economy in heating homes.
ROCHESTER RADIATOR CO.,
 45 Furnace Street, Rochester, N. Y.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

We will continue the manufacture of Custom Shoes and carry a SELECT STOCK of our own reliable work.

SAMUEL DUTCHER.

(SECOND FLOOR.) 45 North 13th Street.

Blankets and Comfortables.

We have bought a manufacturer's entire remaining stock at discounts that enable us to quote the following very low prices:

White Blankets—11-4, double-bed size, with red or blue borders—$2.00 a pair.

White Blankets—11-4, double-bed size, slightly soiled; regularly worth $3.75—now $2.75 a pair.

White Wool Blankets—11-4, double-bed size, of excellent quality, with broad silk binding and handsome border colorings—specially priced at $4.00 a pair.

Gray Blankets—heavy weight, brown mixed; made to sell at $2.00 a pair—now $1.50.

Silver Gray Cotton and Wool Mixed Blankets—generous size and weight—under value at $2.00 a pair.

Winter-weight Comfortables—diamond stitched, cotton-filled, with coverings in neat designs—$1.00 each.

Orders by mail receive prompt and accurate attention. Address orders "Department C."

Strawbridge & Clothier,
 PHILADELPHIA.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, TWELFTH MONTH 2, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 48.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLVIII.

THE example of the wise and good of every age proves conclusively that they who attain to the highest advancement in the spiritual life are least disposed to claim any merit of their own; for being admitted to a nearer view of the divine perfections they are led to think more humbly of themselves.

SAMUEL M. JANNEY.

From his Life of George Fox.

TWO VOICES.

ARE there not, then, two musics unto men?
One loud and bold and coarse
And overpowering still perforce
All tone and tune beside;
Yet in despite its pride
Only of fumes of foolish fancy bred,
And sounding solely in the sounding head:

The other, soft and low,
Stealing whence we do not know,
Painfully heard and easily forgot,
With pauses oft and many silence strange
(And silent oft it seems when silent it is not),
Revivals too of unexpected change:
Haply thou think'st 'twill never be begun,
Or that 't has come, and been, and passed away:
Yet turn to other none,—
Turn not, oh turn not thou!
But listen, listen, listen,—if haply be heard it may Listen, listen, listen,—is it not sounding now?
—Arthur Hugh Clough.

THE NEED OF INCREASED INTEREST IN OUR BUSINESS MEETINGS.¹

BY SUSAN H. JARRETT, HORSHAM, PA.

THAT there is need of increased interest in our business meetings no one can doubt. That there has been an increase of interest in some particular meetings is a cause of rejoicing. Where it has been possible to make the time for holding the business meetings at an hour more convenient to busy workers, the additional attendance and consequent increased interest have been noticeable. There is inspiration in numbers, and there are members of our meetings who absent themselves from the business sessions not so much because of pressing cares, as because so few go, and they are quite willing to allow these few to bear the burden. There is a tendency among many to attend the larger meetings, while the primary business meetings are allowed to dwindle away and lose their strength.

Channing says: "The sense of duty is the greatest gift of God to the human mind, and all outward revelations are founded on and addressed to it. All mysteries of science and theology fade away before the grandeur of the simple perception of duty which dawns on the mind of a man and brings him into the moral kingdom of God. He to whom a conviction of duty is unfolded becomes subject from that moment to a law which no power in the Universe can abrogate."

¹ Read at the Conference of Friends' Associations, Woodstown, N. J., Eleventh month 18, 1899.

To me this seems the keynote to our actions both with regard to our religious and secular obligations. No amount of convenient arrangements or attractive methods will take the place of that underlying sense of duty which alone will induce each individual to give his time and thoughts and strength to the affairs of the meeting. There must be a consciousness of need before there is a seeking after that which will supply the want, and it is only as a person becomes convinced of a duty or obligation that there arises the willingness to perform it. It seems right and proper, however, to make the time of holding the business meetings as convenient as possible for members to attend. I have learned that in the early days it was the custom for Friends in business to employ members of meetings wherever possible, so that arrangements could be made that both employers and employes might attend mid-week meetings. No doubt in the busy rush of these present times this plan is no longer possible, but it shows us how much the privilege of attending the meetings was prized at that time. The plan of having the business sessions in the evening, seems a very good one where it is suitable. But in country places where Friends live several miles from meeting it is quite out of the question, as older Friends could scarcely go after night. I have sometimes thought that were country mid-week meetings held in the afternoon there would be a larger attendance. The morning hours are very precious to the busy farmer and his equally busy wife, and while they may be very anxious to see the meeting kept up, yet they cannot feel their way clear to leave their work in the early part of the day, while possibly they might make arrangements to do so at a later hour.

The holding of our business meetings in joint session has seemed to me one of the most sensible changes that could be made. In the smaller meetings, especially when often there are scarcely enough members attend to constitute committees to transact the business, the separation of men and women, is attended with inconvenience, while the object of each gathering is the same. As a child I remember sitting near the partition in monthly and quarterly meetings, and having my attention gently distracted by half over-hearing communications in the other end, which I greatly desired to hear, and I even remember when the women were obliged to suspend business while some man with a loud voice spoke on the other side of the partition, making it quite impossible to go on for a time. This always seemed to me undignified, and I have rejoiced that so many of our business meetings are being held in joint session. It is one of the fundamental rules of our Society that there is no difference in the relation we bear to our Heavenly Father; whether male or female, each is alike accountable. Such being the case, it seems to me the time has come when the partitions should all be taken down and the business transacted in one body. There is little doubt that most of our younger members see matters in this light, and they certainly "need to be fed with the manna of to-day, and not with that of two hundred years ago," and we surely may with profit let go some of the forms which have become unsuited to the minds of to-day rather than lose the growth and life we need so much.

The Young Friends' Associations are doing much to awaken interest in the business meetings. No longer, we trust, can it be truthfully said that the children of Friends can not tell what they believe, as was perhaps the case before the days of First-day schools and Young Friends' Associations. The custom of reading parts of our discipline and commenting upon them is I think excellent. Indeed at one of the Association meetings at Horsham I was more impressed with the reading of an extract from the discipline, and the reader's comments upon it, than anything I had ever heard.

We all know how much depends on the president of an Association, whether the meeting be lively or dull, and I believe the clerk of a business meeting has a great deal to do with the life of the meeting. So much meaning can be put into the reading of a query, by a cultivated voice and an earnest manner. The time has certainly come when these things should be thought of in appointing a clerk. One whose personal influence is thus exerted can scarcely fail to draw out the sentiments of the meeting. There is great need of more expression in our business meetings, and I think the lack of it comes from a want of freedom with each other, a fear of not saying the right thing in the right way. Could we only put aside this hesitation, and speak out what is in our minds and hearts, what a change would come over our meetings of business.

The habit of speaking in a low tone takes away very much from the interest of a meeting, and adds greatly to the difficulty of the clerk in gathering the sentiments of that meeting. Clear and distinct speaking is a thing we most of us can cultivate if we will.

It seems to me a decided mistake to continue an appointment for a great length of time, while of course change should not be made hastily or inadvisedly. For instance, why should one person be clerk year after year, when there are others who could fill the position equally well? We want more interest, and the only way to get it is to make the members work. These appointments should be made very carefully, but the abilities of the members should be found out by putting them on committees and in various other ways. A judicious mingling of elderly and young members on the various nominating committees is very important, that a sufficient degree of responsibility be felt in selecting those who are to serve the meeting in any capacity.

The reading of the queries! How different from a few years ago; the same words, it is true, but a different intonation seems to bring a new meaning. I have heard these queries called lifeless and monotonous and perhaps I once thought them so myself; but some time ago my attention was called to a series of articles on the History of the Queries taken from Friends' Quarterly Examiner, which was most interesting. In their two centuries of existence and the several changes which have been made in them by different yearly meetings, we may trace a great deal of the history of the Society. It was not until the year 1677 that representations from the various quarterly meetings were sent up to the yearly meetings, and in 1682, or eight years before the death of George Fox, these deputies from the provinces decided that the three following questions should be answered annually to them by the quarterly meetings.

"I. What Friends in the ministry in their respective counties departed this life since last Yearly Meeting?

"II. What Friends imprisoned for their testimony have died since last Yearly Meeting?

"III. How the Truth has prospered among them since the last Yearly Meeting and how Friends are in peace and unity."

I quote these first queries to show the difference between the questions asked then and those asked to-day. It would be an error to suppose that these queries which run through the history of our Society are an evidence of strength or soundness; on the contrary they are each of them an evidence of decline, for their number increased in proportion as the vitality of the Society decreased, and the subjects embraced in them became wider as Friends fell away from their early faithfulness. In those days there was no occasion to ask about due attendance of meetings for worship and discipline, or unbecoming behavior, when life and property were in constant danger. Will the time ever come, I wonder, when some of our present queries may be dropped out because no longer needed? We hope so, indeed; but in the meantime let us as earnest members of the Society of Friends try to live in such a manner that the answers to the queries may not need so many moderating adverbs.

Whatever we are willing to make sacrifices for, that we love. By this test do we love our gatherings for worship and discipline as we should? Are we willing to sacrifice our time, or money, or even our social engagements for the sake of our meetings? It is certainly a great mistake for Friends, especially women, to give so little financial support to the meeting, and that little is frequently given grudgingly. I heard a member of our own meeting say, "If we were taxed more, perhaps we would go to the business meetings to find out what was done with the money."

As to social engagements, I have always felt that many Friends abused the beautiful principle that all days are alike holy, by filling their First-days with visiting and pleasure taking, especially in the country, and such neglect of religious meetings cannot fail to affect the business meetings. Not only this, but social gatherings, on First-day have done much to bring criticism on the Society of Friends and deservedly so.

When I was appointed to write this paper, I felt that I knew nothing about any business meetings except my own, not having had the opportunity of visiting others, on account of home duties. I have asked members of a number of other meetings how it was with them, and in every case they have acknowledged a need of increased interest. The thought naturally comes that there must be a prime cause for this neglect, something more than the hindrances of every-day life, and after deep thought on the subject I have come to the conclusion that we do not appreciate our privilege of birthright membership. It is indeed a blessed birthright that has come to us, but it has come without any work or sacrifice of our own and consequently is not valued as it should be.

I have long thought that young members after reaching the age of serious thought and judgment should be required to answer as to their belief in the principles of Friends, and their willingness to work for the best interests of the Society, before being admitted to all the privileges of membership. Indeed, I have known of several cases among young members who never attended any of the sessions of their monthly meeting until they wished to get married and desired the sanction and oversight of the meeting. Here is the weakness of our Religious Society. "The tie that binds" is held too loosely, and too few who profess its principles feel its pressure and respond to its touch. It is true in the physical world that every unit must do its work if we would have a perfect whole. Also in the mechanism for our comfort and convenience every part must be in good order, each rod and wheel must be able to bear the proportion of the strain. If a single part fails, the whole may be thrown into confusion. It is just so in the religious world; each individual must do his or her part, or the whole structure will suffer from the omission.

WISELY USING SILENCE.—While the Scriptures put the sins of omission among the worst and most damning, they also hint to us that our best services may be those of omission as well. This is true especially of our omitting the use of our tongues when it is wise and magnanimous to keep silence. Every man can recall instances in which he said what made him bite his tongue afterwards. But how seldom have we needed to be ashamed of silence under provocation! "I have observed many," says Ambrose, "who by speaking have fallen into sin, scarcely one who has by silence." We never fall by being silent for ourselves and our rights, but we must avoid silence when God and the truth require speech.—Sunday School Times.

THE secret of being loved is in being lovely; and the secret of being lovely is in being unselfish.—J. G. Holland.

"SWARTHMORE IDYLLS."¹

WHEN, four years ago, a volume of poems of John Russell Hayes appeared, it was my pleasing duty to commend this first volume of our young poet, and to express the belief that it would prove a prelude to many more charming works by the same pen. That belief has been encouraged by various fugitive pieces from the same source, and now more than ever by a charming little collection of pieces, containing sixty pages, in which he honors his Alma Mater by calling them "Swarthmore Idylls." As the renowned King Arthur was made even more renowned by the lines of Tennyson, so may Swarthmore's name gain additional honor as the days go by from these Idylls of one whom she ventures to crown as her youthful Poet Laureate!

Of the sixteen idylls and sonnets which the volume contains, nearly all refer directly or indirectly to the author's Alma Mater, its happy uplifting and ennobling influences, and its bright surroundings. The first of these is appropriately addressed to Swarthmore; and the following lines referring to the foundation of the college under the guidance of the Light Within, the Divine Immanence, deserves especial notice,—

"In thee, Swarthmore, are centered noblest hopes;—
Not without spiritual light they planned
And built, those Quakers of the olden school,
Here in the sweet and wholesome countryside,
Free from the city's tumult and its stain,—
Erecting here by Penn's primeval woods
An edifice to learning dedicate,
To science and the high humanities,
And beauteous arts that nourish mind and soul;
Their fair foundation gifting with the name
Of that old House in ancient Lancashire
Where Fox, the high-souled Founder of his sect,
Oft sought retirement from the world's loud noise
And steeled his godly heart for fresh crusades.
—And not a few with pilgrim feet have fared
From this new Swarthmore in the western world
To that old home and cradle of their faith;
And on these walls, 'etched with memorial green,'
An English ivy grows, fair living link
Binding our younger Swarthmore to the old."

From these opening lines and those that follow, I am tempted to quote many passages, but I feel that in attempting to select I am in danger of selecting all. I must, however, give my readers a foretaste of the riches in store for them. The Alumni will welcome, I am sure, such words as these,—

"To these calm precincts age can never come,
Save as the ivy comes on yonder walls
To clothe with fadeless green;—here Youth abides,
Here bright Enthusiasm hath her home,
And Faith and clear-eyed Hope are sisters here!
—Then, Swarthmore, we thy daughters and thy sons
Still turn to thee and feel the rosy touch
Of youthful days, the glamour and the glow
Of golden years and memorable hours."

And in the "Anniversary Ode," on the occasion of the 25th Annual Commencement, not forgetting the Founders who labored and sacrificed for what the present generation now enjoys, and who, we trust, "builded better than they knew," our poet says,—

¹ Swarthmore Idylls, by John Russell Hayes, with Illustrations by Robert Shaw. Wilmington, Delaware. The John M. Rogers Press.

"Wisely and well the seed was sown ;
O wisely be the gleanings done and well !
Be not unheeded or unheard the spell
Of memoried names, or of the memoried faces
From whose still station on thy walls
A sweet and silent consecration falls."

And in the lines read at the unveiling of a tablet at the birth-place of Benjamin West, P. R. A.,—full of fragrant memories of other days,—we read words like these, showing the poet's keen eye for all the beauties of nature,—

"He loved the silence of these woodland alleys,
He loved the colors of this peaceful sky,
He loved these sleeping hills and grassy valleys ;
Their tranquil beauty pleased his artist eye.
For many a summer hour
Delighted would he pore
On each dear native flower
Beside his father's door."

With a never-failing love for Learning's cloistered shades, in the lines expressing the happiness which they bring, the poet whom we so proudly call Swarthmore's, closes as follows,—

"O blest the peace that falls
In cloistered shades serene,
Where ivied college walls
Rise o'er the silent green ;
And happy is the youth
Who climbs the hills of Truth
And basks awhile in Wisdom's fair demesne !"

And take these beautiful retrospective lines which close the sweet idyll entitled "In College Days,"—

"In college days,—
Ah, comrades, when
Come those golden hours again ?
Come they e'er save through the haze
Of our dreams of yesterdays,
Récollections sweet and old
On the inmost heart enrolled ?"

In considering the other interests, attractions, and associations of Swarthmore, the silent and impressive influence of the Swarthmore meeting on First-day mornings, in—

"The quiet Meeting-house beside The grove on Swarthmore's peaceful hill," is not forgotten. Let me quote a few lines which especially impress me, for it is well to call to mind such words in these times when music is properly more highly esteemed among us than in the past, although many of us hope never to see it introduced as a part of our regular religious meeting,—

"No ritual these precincts know,
Unless it be when yonder trees,
Responding to soft winds that blow,
Chant forth their leafy litanies.
And though no organ shake the air,
No hymns uplift melodious words,
Yet wandering breezes hither bear
The anthems of the happy birds."

In a recent address to Swarthmore students, Lyman Abbott took for the text of his brief but most impressive discourse, the words, "Hope, trust, believe." Our poet closes a sonnet on this subject as follows,—

"O valiant hearts and young, the rosy dawn
Is yours to-day, and your life's beauty vernal ;
Nor shall their primal radiance be withdrawn,
If in sweet consecration you receive

And cherish as a talisman eternal,
The message of that morn, 'Hope, trust, believe' !"

I will not mar the touching sonnet entitled "We Who Dwell in Sight of Thee," by any partial quotation, but give it entire,—

"Happy are we who dwell in sight of thee,
Dear Swarthmore,—with thy stately domes that rise
Serene as the encircling summer skies,
Thy storied ivies and each memoried tree,
Thy green that fades into the far-off lea,
Those woods that golden autumn glorifies,
And yon deep western vale where softly dies
The winter sun in lingering majesty !
Thy joyous children we, for whom the years
Are bounteous of the things that perish not,— Friendships, sweet ministries, and true content.
Close linked together by the sentiment
Of love for thee, we share our joys and tears,
Nor ask the Father for a happier lot."

The eight illustrations have been carefully prepared for this volume by Robert Shaw, whose name will be a guarantee to all who know him and his work, of their beauty and fidelity to nature. These vivid representations of scenes so familiar to all Swarthmoreans will, with the well-chosen words of the author, bring back to them all, precious memories of many happy days.

That this volume comes from the John M. Rogers Press is also a guarantee of its excellence in all points which involve the more advanced processes of book-making of the present day.

I may here remark that the volume is most appropriately dedicated to the author's cherished professor, and my own former student and warm friend of many years,—"W. H. A., Duci docto et dilecto."

The book is introduced, upon the title page, by the inspiring and uplifting words of our beloved Dean, with which I feel that this inadequate notice is most fittingly drawn to a close,—

"These Swarthmore walls that rise toward heaven's blue,
Etched with memorial green, the ages long
Will in the dust lay low. But human hearts
Pure, sweet and strong, are walls invisible,
Growing more deep and broad in years that touch
The granite to decay—foundation sure
For building of the Architect Divine !"

EDWARD H. MAGILL.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT.

No. 50.—TWELFTH MONTH 10.

JOSIAH'S REFORMATION.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Because thine heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before the Lord . . . I also have heard thee, saith the Lord.—II. Kings, xxii., 19.

Scripture Reading, II. Kings, xxii., 1-20.

THE cause of the retreat of the Assyrian army after its victorious career in the west has been a matter of much speculation. The Greek traveler, Heroditus, gives the Egyptian account of the same event about as follows: The Egyptian king was promised protection by the gods, and marched against Sennacherib with a small army. While they awaited the attack an army of field mice "fairly inundated the enemy, gnawing apart their quivers, their bows, and their shield straps, so that being deprived of their weapons they were put to flight." It is worthy of note that the mouse is the symbol of pestilence among the Semites. The Bible record says (II. Kings, xix., 35) that "the angel of the Lord went out and smote the camp of the Assyrians." (See also Isaiah, xxxvii., 36.) We may suppose that a combination of circumstances, including disease, such as often attacks large bodies of men in foreign climate, a partial repulse in the battle with the Egyptians, and complications in the east induced Sennacherib to withdraw. However this may be, Isaiah's promise of safety to the city of Jerusalem was fulfilled, and his authority over the king was thereby so strengthened that his influence was supreme, from this time, while Hezekiah lived.

With the death of Hezekiah our information concerning Isaiah comes to an end. There is a tradition to the effect that he was sawn asunder in the persecution of the Jehovah-worshippers which took place in the next reign. For the reign of Hezekiah was followed by reaction. The long reign of his son was an evil one. "He built up again the high places; he reared up altars for Baal, and made a grove, as did Ahab, king of Israel; and worshipped all the hosts of heaven and served them. . . . And made his son to pass through the fire, and observed times, and used enchantments, and dealt with familiar spirits and wizards." (II. Kings, xxi., 3-7.) The successor of Manasseh was like unto him in evil so that his servants "conspired against him and slew the king in his own house." Josiah, his son, revived again the days of Hezekiah. Once more the king did right in the sight of the Lord, and "turned not aside to the right hand or to the left." Moreover a great event came to pass during his reign. By order of the king the Temple, which had been desecrated with foreign altars and idolatrous worship during the reigns of Manasseh and Amon, was to be renovated and purified for the renewed worship of Jehovah. In the course of these labors the priests discovered "the book of the law in the house of the Lord." (II. Kings, xxii., 8.) This is the first definite mention of written law in the story of the Hebrew kings. Moreover, it was evidently a matter of great surprise to the king and enjoined observances not familiar to him. For "when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, he rent his clothes" (II. Kings, xxii., 11), and he said "great is the wrath of the Lord that is kindled against us because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book." (II. Kings, xxii., 13.)

What then was this "book of the law." "It is clear from the narrative of II. Kings, xxvii., xxiii., that book must have contained Deuteronomy; for although the bare description of its contents, and of the effect produced by it upon those who heard it read (II. Kings, xxii., 11, 13, 19) might suit Leviticus xxvi., equally with Deuteronomy xxiii., yet the allusions to the covenant contained in it (II. Kings, xxiii., 2, 3), which refer evidently to Deuteronomy (Deut., xxix., 1, 9, 21, 25), and the fact that in the reformation based upon it Josiah carries out (II. Kings, xxii., 13-19; xxiii., 3-5, 7, 9-11, 24, etc.) the principles of Deuteronomy, leave no doubt upon the matter." (Canon Driver of Christ Church, Oxford). The discovery must have been made about the year 621 B. C. Exactly how long before this time the book was written can only be a matter for speculation. The whole tone of the book, however, indicates that it was an attempt "to provide a spiritual rallying-point round which, when circumstances favored, the disorganized forces of the national religion might arrange themselves again. It was emphatic reaffirmation of the fundamental principles which Moses had long ago insisted on, loyalty to Jehovah and repudiation of false gods." (Driver.) The various references to laws and usages, the forms of idolatry mentioned, the language all point to the latter part of the period of Kings as the time of its composition. When we find, moreover, that Amos, Hosea, and Isaiah (in those portions of the book of Isaiah admitted to have been written by him) make no reference to the law, and show no certain traces of its influence, while Jeremiah and the latter prophets show constant evidence of familiarity with it, we are forced to conclude that the essential portions of the book of Deuteronomy were written in the periods between the reigns of Hezekiah and Josiah. It was probably in the discouraging and evil time of Manasseh that some faithful prophet made this effort to supply a basis for reformation. And we see that it did serve under Josiah as the foundation for a great revival of power in the Jewish church. The law itself we will take up more in detail in the lessons of a later series. For the present it is enough to note that it demanded a high personal morality (the ten commandments being included); that it prescribed modes of legal procedure for securing public justice; gave detailed directions concerning methods of sacrifice and concerning the ceremonial worship in general, and condemned all common forms of idolatry.

As already indicated the discovery of the law in the Temple was followed at once by efforts to teach and enforce it throughout the kingdom. (II. Kings, chapter 23.) We learn also from the account of the reformation how much there was to reform—worship of Baal and of the sun and stars, licentious and immoral rites to Ashtoreth, recognition of Milcom, god of Ammon and Chemosh, god of Moab, side by side with Jehovah, god of Righteousness, the sacrifice of children—all this strange medley of observances, together with injustice, oppression, and general insecurity.

The appearance of the book of the law at such a time showed that the followers of the great prophets, of Amos, Hosea, and Isaiah, had not disappeared in the reaction following the reign of Hezekiah, though they had no influence with those in authority. The leaven of the truth was working from the small body, which accepted in good faith the words of prophecy to all those who were subjected to their influence. Without such a basis for reform among the people the efforts of king Josiah would have been vain; with such a body of the faithful among them the degradation of the reign of Manasseh could not be fatal to the nation.

A TRUE Christian, one who is deep enough in the godly life to have his affinities with God, will infallibly become a separated being. The instinct of holiness will draw him apart into a singular, superior, hidden life with God.—H. Bushnell.

Friends' Intelligencer and Journal.

EDITORS:

HOWARD M. JENKINS. LYDIA H. HALL. RACHEL W. HILLBORN.

PHILADELPHIA, TWELFTH MONTH 2, 1899.

Please address business letters to "Friends' Intelligencer, N. W. Cor. 15th and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia, Box 924."

Communications and contributions to "Editors Friends' Intelligencer," same address. Please add "Box 924"—as above.

NINETEENTH CENTURY AFFLICTIONS.

BESIDES the wars whose smoke arises east and west, the Nineteenth Century's close has other afflictions, and the near relation of every part of the world to every other part permits the knowledge of these to travel far and wide. Help is asked on this side of the world for needs existing on the other side, and the remotest country comes to us, hoping to find sympathy and succor.

Two classes of persons, it may be confidently said, have a keen sense of these conditions. One of these classes are the help-givers, the benevolent, whose habit it is to try to alleviate human misery. They are appealed to daily and hourly. And another class are the conductors of the newspaper press, to whom there come, the year round, the pleas of those who have charitable undertakings which they want brought to public notice.

We have felt, and do feel, a near sympathy for the Doukhobors, whose troubles have come upon them solely because they cherish ideals like those of Friends. They seem to be especially wards of those who hold the Friendly convictions, and to have a claim upon us that cannot be disregarded. The schools for the colored children in the South appeal to us, also, and must be maintained. Our many local benevolences and charities, especially in the great cities, where benevolent effort can never afford slackening, are always on the lists of earnest concerns.

But how much more there is, how many other needs are disclosed! The famine in India becomes more and more acute. Details like those which we have recently printed from the missions in Berar and the Central Provinces we find in many newspapers, and piteous appeals for help are made. The Indian visitor who has been among us for some time describes vividly the hard fate of the Pariah class. We have restated to us, by those who have been engaged in helping the Armenians, the continued distress of many of the poor victims, widows and orphans, of the bloody work of four years ago in their country. And we have scarcely laid down the appeal made for them until we are asked to read and consider the story of the "reconcentrados" in Cuba, and the dire necessity for help to re-establish them in productive labor.

To see these miseries we pause but a moment, and look only through one or two windows out upon the world. The record of them is not the whole story of the day, nor even a chapter of the story. And yet with this much known, how much of pain and misery the human family must endure! Does it not seem plain that men should tax themselves for good, instead of evil, for relief rather than injury, for repair and relief rather than rapine and destruction? Is not the world's claim for aid enough to absorb all the energies of those who have strength to spare?

THOMAS VAN NESS, a minister of the Unitarian body, has been writing in the Christian Register, Boston, a series of articles on a visit paid to the Russian Molokains, a sect not unlike the Doukhobors in many particulars. He found some of them in the Trans-Caucasus region of Russia. They are harshly treated, as are all other "sects"—dissenters from the Orthodox Greek church—and continual pressure is brought to compel them to conform. An elder, an intelligent though unlettered man, with whom T. Van Ness had an interview, said they wanted to leave Russia. "Inspired by the success which attended the Doukhobor emigration to Canada, there are now some 7,000 Molokains who would like to go to America." But, he adds, "the Russian authorities are averse to this exodus. If there is to be any movement of population, they wish to influence it toward Siberia and the near lands across the Caspian, and not towards the United States."

We have thought, from the beginning of the Doukhobor movement, that their success in leaving Russia would affect the other Russian sectaries, and make them seek a similar way of relief from their present troubles. When Aylmer Maude was here, a year ago, he spoke of the large numbers of dissenting religious people in Russia, who would be anxious to emigrate if that course appeared possible. No doubt more will be heard on this line.

THE minutes of Baltimore Yearly Meeting present the report of the Committee on the Purification of the Press, and the details given in it of the Committee's work are impressive. The responses to its efforts from editorial associations, press clubs, etc., and the similar or coöperative movements begun by various organizations, mostly of women, are encouraging to the hope that some corrective influence will presently be exerted upon the sensationalism and impurity which are poured out through the daily press. The work of Baltimore Friends in this direction deserves high praise.

BIRTHS.

JONES.—In Philadelphia, Tenth month 27, 1899, to David T. and Marion R. Jones, a daughter, who is named Elizabeth.

THORPE.—At Green Plain, Ohio, Eighth month 14, 1899, to William R. and Anna M. Thorpe, a son, who is named William Donald.

WILLITS.—At Glen Cove, Nassau county, New York, Eleventh month 5, 1899, to Charles F. and Grace O. Willits, a daughter, who is named Dorothy Jane.

MARRIAGES.

WHITELEY—MORRIS.—At the home of the bride's mother, Rhoda A. Morris, Eleventh month 9, 1899, by Friends' ceremony, Isaac L. Whiteley, of Cambridge City, Indiana, and Elmira J. Morris, of Milton, Indiana.

DEATHS.

BUNTING.—At her residence, 44 East 73d street, New York, on Sixth-day, Eleventh month 24, 1899, Ella Francis, daughter of the late Charles T. and Phebe M. Bunting.

A life full of works, and work well done. *

GRAHAME.—At his home, Germantown, Philadelphia, Eleventh month 25, 1899, suddenly, Israel Janney Grahame, aged 80 years; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

This dear Friend has for many years been paralyzed, and unable to converse, but was cheerful and glad to receive the visits of his friends. He carried on pharmacy in Baltimore, for some years; after the death of John Jackson, Israel and his wife Jane P. Grahame conducted Sharon Boarding School, and later they had the Academy at Attleboro', Bucks county, Pa., (now Langhorne), but about 1876 he removed to Philadelphia, and again engaged in pharmacy, in which he was successful till incapacitated by ill health.

Being thoroughly convinced of the principles of Friends, his life was consistent with true Christianity. He was an active worker in the monthly meeting, for a number of years an overseer, and at the time of his prostration, clerk of that body.

He was cordial in his friendship, polite and gentlemanly to all, giving evidence that the love of Christ prevailed in his heart, and that he was endeavoring to live the life of the righteous, and though the closing was sudden, yet quiet and peaceful, doubtless he has received the welcome of the righteous, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." T.

NICHOLSON.—Eleventh month 20, 1899, Augustin Nicholson, aged 65 years. Funeral at Springfield meeting-house.

SMYTH.—Eleventh month 22, 1899, Elizabeth F., widow of Lindley Smyth, in her 81st year, daughter of the late Ziba Ferris; a member of Spruce Street Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia.

SPENCER.—At the home of her daughter, Viola Griffith, Dayton, Ohio, Eleventh month 15, 1899, Louisa Spencer, widow of Nathan Spencer, near the 77th year of her age.

She was a member of Milford Monthly Meeting of Friends. Her Christian cheerfulness, and forgetfulness of self, and thoughtfulness for others, were an inspiration to those with whom she mingled.

Interment at Milton, Ind. *

TAYLOR.—Suddenly, in West Goshen, Pa., Eleventh month 22, 1899, Jesse J. Taylor, son of the late Joseph L. Taylor, in his 71st year; a member of Birmingham Monthly Meeting of Friends.

WEAVER.—At the residence of her son, Dr. Chandler Weaver, Fox Chase, Pa., Eleventh month 21, 1899, Rebecca Chandler Weaver, in her 67th year.

OH, do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men! Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks. Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life which has come in you by the grace of God.—Phillips Brooks.

INQUIRIES after happiness and rules for attaining it, are not so necessary and useful to mankind as the arts of consolation, and supporting one's self under affliction. The utmost we can hope for in this world is contentment; if we aim at anything higher we shall meet with nothing but grief and disappointment.—Addison.

DOUKHOBOR REPORT.

WE have a short list of additional subscriptions. We have paid over $200 more to the aid fund, leaving a small balance in hand.

Joseph S. Elkinton and William B. Harvey have returned, it is presumed, from Prince Albert to Winnipeg. They went to Prince Albert to see the colonists now settled there, whom they picked up on their trip outward, at Winnipeg and Selkirk. Prince Albert is in Saskatchewan, at the end of a branch, from Regina, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and is about 200 miles west of the main body of Doukhobors, the "North" and "South" colonies.

J. S. E. and W. B. H., in coming from Fort Pelly to Yorkton, about forty miles, had a severe experience on the 16th ult. They faced a severe snow-storm all the way. It is now light there no earlier than 8 a. m., and dark by 3. They were very fearful of losing their way, and the road was very rough, but they reached Yorkton in safety, for which preservation they are deeply grateful.

The first car-load of supplies for the children and sick, left Philadelphia on the 27th of Tenth month, and arrived safely at Yorkton. Joseph S. Elkinton was there, very opportunely, and gave oversight to the distribution. Representatives of the Doukhobors from several villages came down, and explained their several needs, so that the supplies could be intelligently distributed. Some villages are worse off than others.

Three carloads of corn-meal arrived and were very acceptable, the people seeming to understand very well how to use the meal.

A second carload of special supplies goes from Philadelphia this week. It includes 500 gallons of cottonseed oil and 150 sides of leather. A full carload of sugar, 75 barrels, was started on the 28th. Sugar was selected for its heat-making value, as the Doukhobors do not use meat.

Joseph Elkinton informs us that supplies of clothing and other goods (heretofore asked for, to be sent to 817 Mifflin street, Philadelphia), are not further desired, as it is not designed to forward more at present.

THE "INTELLIGENCER" FUND.

A. H., N. Y.,	$ 10.00
A. L., Pittstown, N. Y.,	10 00
	<hr/>
	$ 20.00
Acknowledged last week,	858.25
	<hr/>
	$878.25
Paid over for relief,	850.00
	<hr/>

Balance, $28.25

These acknowledgments are closed Third-day morning, Eleventh month 28.

Please draw checks or money orders to the order of Howard M. Jenkins.

No shattered box of ointment

We ever can regret,

For out of disappointment

Flow sweetest odors yet.

The discord that involveth

Some startling change of key

The master's hand resolveth

In richest harmony.

—F. R. Havergal.

REMARKING upon the absence of any inspiring poetry about the wars of 1899, the Minneapolis Tribune says: "If Mr. Kipling's latest brutal war ballad is a fair example of the martial poetry to be evolved from present military conditions, our leading poets will do well to persist in their silence—a silence that has prevailed since Lowell's sublime 'Commoration Ode' sounded the last and highest note called forth by the heroic struggle of our civil war. It may be, after all, that our poets have reached a stage of refinement when they do not find in the savagery of wars of conquest any true poetic inspiration."

EXCURSION DAYS IN ENGLAND.

IV.

OVER HEREFORD HILLS.

WHEN I said to Theodore Neild that I supposed there was not much fruit raised in that part of England, he was plainly enough rather saddened by my ignorance. It was much as if he had said to me in Pennsylvania, "I suppose you haven't much coal in these parts." For in Herefordshire, as I presently learned, not only do fine cattle grow and pasture, but apples and pears thrive in many orchards, and the county is rather proud of the fact. So, to see more of the fields and the fruit trees was one reason why we drove down from Leominster to Hereford—the city.

We ate our luncheon first, and made an afternoon trip. (Perhaps the critical reader may remark that luncheons and other meals are often mentioned in these papers, but I hardly think I need apologize for this; I found no one in England, resident or tourist, who was indifferent to these matters.) We drove out from "The Vista," the pleasant cottage home of our friend and his family, through the gardens, and orchards, and vegetable plots, with which it is surrounded. The cottage stands upon a hill west of the town of Leominster, and its "vista" is north-westward over descending slopes toward Wales. By narrow lanes, which made a near way, we sought the great road which runs south toward Hereford. We descended from the high ground, left Leominster away to the left hand, and presently were on the broad highway.

My friend drove. For the first hour the air was warm. We sat in a low-hung cart, one of those substantial vehicles beside which our American light carriages appear as mere cobwebs. He and I, ensconced in the deep, wide cart, appeared—neither of us being large persons, it is true—as mere trivial objects deposited within its ample space. The sleek and well-fed pony signified plainly that he felt the heat. "Come along! come along!" many times said my friend, in the gentlest and most amiable of tones. And then he confided to me, more than once, his grave wonder whether at that rate we should cover the thirteen miles and back by a reasonable bedtime. Endeavoring to encourage him, I said that the secret of making a long journey in good time was to keep in motion, at a steady rate—not driving "by fits and starts"; which my friend chose to interpret, jocosely, as a statement that, granted a continual motion toward a fixed point, the point must ultimately be reached,—and this he assured me was quite past denial! Thus did we beguile the way.

The road we were on follows the general direction of a stream, the Lug, which flows south to join the Wye near Hereford. Nearly midway is a long hill—long on both sides—Dinmore. We ascended slowly. Part way up, we met a gypsy cart, and the man, driving, shouted to us, in his language, which I cannot now recall, that it was a long, hard climb. The railway passes through Dinmore by a long tunnel, and over this we passed. Over to the right, a few miles distant, lies Radnorshire; to the left, farther off, is Worcestershire. But the hill is wooded, and there is little opportunity for distant views. Squirrels ran across the road; it was a truly rural spot.

Reaching the summit of Dinmore at last, we set the pony in motion somewhat more rapidly down its southern slope, and as we counted off the milestones, even Theodore began to concede that we should probably get to Hereford; perhaps the pony had made up his mind that it was to Hereford we were bound, and he must make the best of it. We drove into the cathedral town at last, and it was but about two hours and a half since we left The Vista.

Hereford is an "episcopal city." Like Wells, and Lichfield, and Winchester, its cathedral is its main feature, the attraction for visitors, the centre of life for residents. I felt more interest in the cathedral because of its bishop, who is one of those who regard Christianity as demanding Christian qualities of character, and who, though he may think church forms and ecclesiastical paraphernalia of value, does not regard them as the substance of religion. I had heard his noble sermon at The Hague—as good a plea for peace as if David Ferris or Dr. Rogers-Eavenson had composed it for him—and so I was, as I have already said, the more interested in his city.

The cathedral, it may be said in a few words, is of red sandstone, and the walls, exteriorly, have been chipped off, to get rid of the weather-worn surface, a process whose wisdom is more than doubtful. It is an old building, begun in 1079, finished in 1530, and has thus several different styles of English cathedral architecture. The nave, the south transept, the choir, and piers of the tower, are Norman; the "lady chapel," (dedicated to Mary, the mother of Jesus), is Early English; the northwest transept is Early Decorated. The great central tower, 165 feet high, has a curious lantern, in which the stone-work resembles a great cage with massive bars.

From the cathedral we walked about the town. There is an interesting old half-timbered house, once a dwelling, now used as a bank, which stands in the square called the High Town. It was built perhaps in Queen Elizabeth's time, and has been well kept. From the High Town we wandered down to the riverside,—for we are here in the valley of the Wye, which, flowing eastward from its Welsh springs, and fed by many affluents, bends southward about Hereford, and passes down through one of the most romantic and beautiful regions of England, to join the Severn by Chepstow. There was a castle here at Hereford in old times, one of the two-score or so built by the Normans, "to hold the Welsh in check," but even its ruins have practically disappeared; its memory survives, however, in the name, Castle Green, given to the grounds and promenade beside the river. My friend and I walked about in the Green, and contemplated with some interest the column in honor of Admiral Nelson,—rather the more interesting perhaps because we were not sure to what fighting man it was erected, and were obliged to consult the always-valued pages of Baedeker, in order to learn.

There is an interesting museum, and we looked at that, then we sought a refreshment-room and drank some tea. As we walked near the gates of the bishop's "palace," the bishop came driving in, drawn by a sober pair, at a moderate and dignified ecclesiastical pace. It seemed hardly decorous to stop him in the street merely to tell him I had heard his sermon in Holland, so we let him pass, and in all probability he does not even know that we were there to see him. We hastened to the hotel, mounted into the cart, and set off toward Leominster again. The sun was low in the sky—it sets late, however, in that latitude in mid-summer,—the air was cool and pleasant, the horse knew what he had to do, and we sped on our way. For several miles the road lies in the Wye valley, before the formidable Dinmore Hill is reached, but even up its slopes our nag stepped cheerfully on, and I counted off the milestones again to Theodore in evidence of our good progress. It was not so very late, after all, when we passed again up through the cut-off lanes to the grounds at The Vista, and alighted, to find good cheer and warm welcome awaiting us. H. M. J.

NEWS OF FRIENDS.

ILLINOIS Yearly Meeting, at its last sitting, decided to abandon, for the present, at least, its effort to secure a location where Friends intending removal could settle together. The committee appointed on the subject some years ago made the following report, which was approved:

To Illinois Yearly Meeting:

Soon after our last Yearly Meeting, one of your committee, together with a few others, visited one of the sections (favored as shown in our report made two years ago) on the western line of Idaho, and extending a few miles through government land in Oregon. We found much dissatisfaction among those who had purchased this land from the Government about the time of our visit three months before. Having had a promise previous to that visit, by the owners, that the canal and laterals would be begun by the first of Ninth month last, yet at that time it appeared to us they would not be begun until a sufficient number would occupy this land to warrant them in such expenditure, the land being practically worthless without irrigation. Although after that visit we felt more encouraged, judging by our correspondence, in gathering our Friends to settle near together than we had at any time before, yet in view of the facts existing have discouraged all from going to that locality. Yet we regret that our Friends who are looking for homes in the Far West cannot centralize, and thus be a benefit to each other as well as a strength to our Society.

MORRIS A. WILSON, Chairman of Committee.

DURING the year ending Sixth month 30, 1898, the army of railroad employes in the United States had 1,958 men killed and 31,761 wounded. This army consisted of 874,554 men. One employe out of every 446 was killed, and one out of every 27 was injured. Considering the fact that many of the employes are not exposed to special danger, this is a frightful record. The number of passengers killed was only one in every 2,222,126.

FREIGHT cars loaded with merchandise for the American exhibit at the Paris Exposition are arriving in Washington every day. They will be assembled there and put on board Government transports.

WILLIAM JONES.

WE give herewith a portrait of the late William Jones, of Sunderland, England, whose death at Balla Wray, on Lake Windermere, Seventh month 28th, last, was noted in the INTELLIGENCER of Eighth month 18.

He was the author of the interesting book, "Quaker Campaigns in Peace and War," which was reviewed in our columns in the issue of Sixth month 17. He was for several years Secretary of the English Peace Society, whose offices are in London, and whose present secretary is Dr. W. Evans Darby, who has recently visited Philadelphia. William Jones visited the United States in 1887 and in 1889 to promote the cause of International Arbitration.

He was a native Welshman, born at Ruthin, in Denbighshire, in 1826. His father was a convinced Friend, and brought up his children strictly according to Friends' principles, after the order of seventy years ago. Many interesting details of his early experiences are given in William Jones's book.

THE LATE WILLIAM JONES.

Put off, put off your mail, O kings,
And beat your brands to dust!
Your hands must learn a surer grasp,
Your hearts a better trust.

Upon the grassy mountain paths
The glittering hosts increase—
They come! They come! How fair their feet
They come who publish peace.

—John Ruskin.

A CHICAGO despatch says that with the completion of negotiations now pending the Union Broom Supply Company will own 95 per cent. of the broom corn now in the market. It is said also that the trust proposes to begin the manufacture of brooms.

THE municipality of Birmingham, England, erected four thousand dwellings for artisans. Occupants and the city are satisfied with the new scheme, rents being cheaper, houses better, and the town's treasury has been fattened.

SOUTH of Ava, in Southern Illinois, is the banner corn-field of the world. It will give this year 600,000 bushels of corn, an average of 100 bushels to the acre.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE expected volume of "Reminiscences," by Aaron M. Powell, was issued last week, and is now on sale. It makes a book of 300 pages, and there are fifteen illustrations. The Introduction is contributed by Isaac H. Clothier, and is dated at Harbour Entrance, R. I., on the 1st of Ninth month last.

Aaron's work, at the time of his death, was not, as is known, complete, but he had finished seven chapters.

Notes of the outline of those which he further intended are given in the book, and it must remain a matter of deep regret that he did not survive to complete them. The chapters given mostly refer to his Anti-Slavery work, and give comparatively little later than the period of the Civil War; his later work for Temperance and for Purity, remained to be described. At the close of the volume his wife and his sister have placed in an Appendix, "In Memoriam," a brief memoir, and many loving tributes from friends, one of these from the pen of Dr. Edward H. Magill.

As a literary work, and a contribution to history, we find much value in Aaron's recollections of the Anti-Slavery movement in the State of New York. This region has not been so fully written of, heretofore, as some other parts of the country have been. A particularly interesting sketch is that of Joseph Carpenter, of Mamaroneck, N. Y., a Friend of the original stamp, a man of principle and power. His picture is given, and what a character it shows! When the colored people's dead at Mamaroneck were excluded from burial in other grounds, he gave a plot on his farm for them, and there—like Thaddeus Stevens—he directed his own remains to be interred.

There are interesting recollections of many persons of note—Garrison, Phillips, Joshua R. Giddings, James and Lucretia Mott, Susan B. Anthony, Whittier, Sumner, Lydia Maria Child, and many others, with whom Aaron was intimately associated, and of whom he preserved very interesting recollections.

The Friends' Quarterly Examiner (London), for Tenth month, has articles by prominent Friends, among them Caroline E. Stephen, John Stephenson Rowntree, and Wm. C. Braithwaite. The contribution of the last named is some "Gleanings from the Birmingham Summer School." He speaks of the lectures at that gathering, and dwells upon the remarkable ones by Prof. McGiffert, of New York, on "The Spiritual Conception of the Church." In these Prof. McGiffert described graphically the views and usages of the early Christians, and described also,—without being conscious of it, probably,—the status of Friends themselves. "To many," says W. C. Braithwaite, these lectures "were the crowning interest of the Summer School."

The paper by John S. Rowntree is a review of the "Catechism" adopted by the organized "Evangelical Free Churches" of Great Britain. He especially discusses the question in relation to the so-called "Sacraments," baptism and the Supper, and his remarks upon this subject are of special interest and value. The want of authority for these observances becomes apparent the moment there is any candid examination into them.

The Century announces that it will soon begin the publication of copious extracts from the journal kept by Dr. O'Meara, author of the famous volumes, "Napoleon at St. Helena." Less than half the journal was drawn on for that work, and the original, containing upwards of 160,000 words, was bequeathed by Dr. O'Meara to a friend, by whose heirs it has been placed in the hands of the editors of the Century.

McClure's Magazine, this month, contains the introductory chapters of "The Life of the Master," by Dr. John Watson ("Ian Maclaren"), which is to be a leading feature of the magazine for some months to come. It has also a poem by Edwin Markham, the California poet, author of "The Man with the Hoe." A sketch of Edwin Markham, by the way, is promised the INTELLIGENCER for an early issue by an English friend and correspondent.

Ellen Olney Kirk, well known by her books for years past, and in late time especially by her stories for young people, has a new volume, "Dorothy and her Friends." It is, like all her work, earnest and wholesome; moreover, it is full of life, and with many touches of "nature" and of humor. The story relates to children and their out-of-door, open-air experiences and adventures, their fun and their troubles, their right doings and wrong doings, in summer time by the sea. It has several illustrations. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.)

Caroline Leslie Field, who is the daughter, we believe, of Adeline D. T. Whitney, has a new book for children, "Nannie Happy Girlhood." It is a story of quite a little girl, and is very pleasantly told. There are four pictures, and the book has a charming cover. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.)

A number of short stories—nine of them, to be exact—by Mary Hallock Foote, have been collected in an attractive volume, with the title, "The Little Fig-Tree Stories." They are mostly Western in their locale, and in their tone,—stories of the Rocky Mountains, of the Sierra Nevadas, of Idaho and California, of canyons and "camps." One, however, "The Garret at Grandfather's," belongs, no doubt, to the East. We do not need to say how popular a writer Mary Hallock Foote has long been. The stories originally appeared in St. Nicholas; they are collected, now, and the profits of the volume dedicated to Children's Hospital, San Francisco. There is a frontispiece illustration. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.)

The "Self and Sex Series" of books by Sylvanus Stall, D. D., published by the Vir Publishing Company of Philadelphia, have had a very favorable reception and a large sale. The latest issue is "What a Young Husband Ought to Know." Like its two predecessors, it is intended to be "not a treatise upon impurity, but upon purity." Many prominent persons, in whose judgment we confide, recommend Dr. Stall's previous books,—among them Aaron M. Powell. ($1.00.)

Several of the lectures and addresses at the Birmingham Summer School have been gathered into a neat volume by Morland & Henson, Birmingham. They include Canon Rawnsley's delightful lecture on Francis of Assisi, "A Visit to La Verna;" John William Graham's essay on Isaac Penington, Sir Edward Fry's address on the "Prevention of Corruption" bill, Pastor Cremer's account of Protestantism in France, Joan Mary Fry's paper on Tauler and Böhme, and the papers by Mary Anne Wallis, Horace E. Govan, Edward Grubb, and W. C. Braithwaite.

There are two editions: one in cloth at three shillings, and one in paper, at two shillings.

It will be conceded by all that Scribner's magazine accomplishes very striking results in its illustrations. The issue for this month has the fourth of Maxfield Parrish's cover designs,—a shepherd and his flock. Walter Appleton Clark has a remarkable series of pictures illustrating a ballad by Harrison S. Morris on the "Three Kings"—Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar. There is a picture story by Charles Dana Gibson, "Seven Ages of American Women," which, after the manner of that artist, shows humor as well as spirit.

In the literary contents, among other interesting things, Augustine Birrell, the English essayist and member of Parliament, contributes a review of John Wesley as a force in the development of British national life in the 18th century.

The identification of the spots where the "Northmen" landed and founded their settlements during their voyages to America of nearly a thousand years ago is an ever-living question. In the current issue of the Popular Science Monthly Miss Cornelia Horsford presents, in an illustrated article, entitled "Vinland and Its Ruins," the proofs from geographical, topographical, and archæological data, in favor of her father's (Prof. E. N. Horsford) theory that one of their principal settlements was on Charles River, Massachusetts.

The Atlantic Monthly, we regret to say, gives its leading place, this month, to a long article by a writer who argues the rightfulness of the English side of the Transvaal case. Hamilton W. Mabie discusses Edgar A. Poe's place in our literature, and assigns him a place with Hawthorne—one of those curious estimates that are hard to explain, for what is it of Poe's that survives to be put alongside Hawthorne's work? Henry D. Lloyd has an enthusiastic article on New Zealand, its paradoxical attractions, its solid advantages, its claims to be the most desirable and "the least bad" country in the world.

But perhaps the most interesting article of all is one entitled, "Wanted, a Chair of Tent-making," in which a writer who signs "Alfred Brown Layman," discusses the trials and troubles of the pastoral system in modern churches. His explanations are so striking that we must quote elsewhere from the article, more than the sentence or two which we might give here.

Conferences, Associations, Etc.

MOORESTOWN, N. J.—The Young Friends' Association met on the 10th of Eleventh month, at the Friends' meeting-house, which had been recently lighted by electricity.

T. B. Pandian, of Madras, India, lectured to a large and appreciative audience on the subject "Inner Life in India," portraying the condition of the outcasts of his country called Pariahs, who have been suffering for the last two thousand years from the system of caste. They are denied all social rights and education, and although liberated by England seventy years ago, are still practically slaves. They are not permitted to build their huts in or near the towns where the caste inhabitants reside, nor are they allowed to drink from the public wells. On account of the restriction, these Pariahs are often obliged to journey several miles for water and even then drink from stagnant pools. The condition of affairs can be better understood when we learn that the rain falls only during three months of the year, while during the remaining months the temperature is very high, and most of the wells are either dry or stagnant.

Mr. Pandian made an appeal in behalf of his poor countrymen, and hopes to return with funds sufficient to provide wells to alleviate the distress of the Pariahs, who although insufficiently fed and clothed, have to work for a whole month for the paltry sum of one dollar, while a woman is obliged to accept less than half.

That this charitable work may be accomplished is our earnest desire.

After a brief silence the meeting adjourned.

ADA M. LIPPINCOTT, Secretary.

MANSFIELD, N. J.—The Young Friends' Association of Mansfield met at the home of George Bowne, Eleventh month 16, with 29 members in attendance, who responded to their names with appropriate sentiments.

The committee appointed to nominate officers to serve the ensuing year offered the following names, which were approved: President, Robert Taylor; Vice-President, G. Frank Harvey; Secretary, Ethel Zelle; Treasurer, Charles Hancock. A portion of the Discipline was read by Charles Hancock.

"How does the Belief of Friends differ from that of other churches?" was answered by Thomas Bunting. He said in part: "Friends believe in the Inner Light, in the Divine Spirit in the soul of man. They believe there is but 'one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism.' They believe in a free Gospel ministry. Let us keep in remembrance that it is under the immediate teaching and influence of the Holy Spirit that all acceptable worship is performed." After giving a synopsis of the beliefs of the various churches, he concluded by saying that Friends generally accept the life, the teaching of Jesus, but do not take the "orthodox" view of the sacrifice.

"What Effect has the Sunday Newspaper upon the Home?" Paper by Anna B. Taylor, read by Mattie Taylor. How can we keep the commandment, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy," if we read such unprofitable literature as is contained in our Sunday papers? A man is what he reads. The thoughts he gets from reading enter into his intellectual make-up, and become a part of his very being. We are influenced by our surroundings, and the Sunday paper has a demoralizing, rather than an uplifting effect upon the soul. One of our esteemed ministers remarked upon a certain occasion, "It is right to read the papers in order to know what is going on in this progressive world, but O, do not forget the Bible." Remarks were made by Franklin S. Zelle and Thomas B. Harvey, and others.

The biography of Aaron M. Powell was given by Elizabeth Bowne. After an account of his life, and the many spheres of usefulness which he filled, she said, "While in thought and conviction truly a Friend, holding our great central truth of the Divine Immanence in every soul as the great and saving truth of Christianity, he was still ever a lover of truth wherever found, and being led by his life work as a reformer into intimate relations with members of all churches, he knew that truth was to be found in all, and deserved honor. If quiet contentment, peace, and full soul communion in the home life, if silent communion with the Holy Spirit, both in work and worship, constitute blessedness, how blessed his life has been!"

Amy H. Bowne gave a recitation, "The First Settler's Story." After the usual silence, we adjourned to meet at the home of G. Frank Harvey, Twelfth month 28, 1899.

MARTHA E. GIBBS, Secretary.

KENNETT SQUARE, PA.—The Young Friends' Association met Eleventh month 5, at 2 p. m. Isaac H. Hillborn gave an interesting account of the Jewish Tabernacle, using an instructive model. The entire time of the meeting was given up to his talk. A large number were present.

The time of holding our Association has been changed to the afternoon of the first First-day in the month.

The Association seems to have new life this year, and much interest is being manifested.

The topic to be discussed at next meeting is, "Friends' Literature and Its Influence upon Society."

GRACE L. WRIGHT.

FIRST-DAY SCHOOLS IN BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.—The report of the First-day School Committee of Baltimore Yearly Meeting gives statistics of 25 schools, 3—West Nottingham, Ridge, and Washington City—not reporting.

There are 108 teachers, and an enrolment of 1,409 scholars. All the schools use the Friends' Lesson Leaves. Eleven of them are open all the year, eight take a winter vacation, and six a summer vacation.

Educational Department.

SWARTHMORE COLLEGE NOTES.

THE examinations upon the work of the first term are now concluded in all the departments, and the second term's work is fairly begun. A number of students will, as usual, remain at College during the Thanksgiving vacation, which begins with the afternoon of Eleventh month 29, students returning for early lessons on Twelfth month 4.

On the evening of Eleventh month 24, a delightful exhibition was given by the Camera Club of the college. Stereopticon views were shown from photographs taken by the club members. All of the pictures were excellent from an artistic point of view, and they were characterized by great variety, some being from across the ocean, and many from familiar and much-loved haunts at home. Some of the most interesting and valuable photographs showed the "trails" made by the movements of stars across the photographic field.

On the 25th of Eleventh month occurred the annual Sophomore reception to the Freshmen. The members of the receiving class provided an exceedingly creditable program, and a very pleasant social evening was enjoyed by everyone.

M. S. H.

ABINGTON SCHOOL NOTES.

Regular meetings of the Atlee Literary Society were held on the 4th and 18th ult. The interest in these meetings is increasing, and there is every indication that they will be well attended and successful during this winter.

Great interest was shown by the pupils in the meteoric showers, which occurred about the middle of last month. On the night of the 15th ult., the Principal and Matron watched for the displays, and called the pupils at 4.30 in the morning, at which hour the "shooting stars" were falling every few minutes. The greatest number seen by any one person was seventeen.

A party of girls under care of the Principal and Mary B. Kirk visited the Exposition on the 18th ult. Two hours were spent in looking over the exhibits.

A sub-committee of the Yearly Meeting Committee on Education visited the school on the 24th ult. Those who were present were Joel Borton, Elizabeth Comly, Jane J. Haines, Nathaniel Richardson, Samuel Wickersham, and Sarah R. Sullivan. Before the close of the school, addresses were delivered by Nathaniel Richardson and Joel Borton. The school derived much encouragement from the visit of the committee.

Those members of the Senior Class who are interested in the study of Geology made an excursion to the railroad cut below Jenkintown Station, for the purpose of making an examination of the rock-formation at that point. The party also saw objects of interest which were not of a geological character, chief among which was the old sun-dial at the home of Isaac Mather.

The lecture delivered by Dr. Emily G. Hunt on the 8th ult., was very interesting to pupils, teachers, and parents. Her subject was "A Stroll on the Beach." The next lecture will take place at 1.30 on the afternoon of the 6th inst.; the subject will be "Ferns." Parents and friends of the school are invited to attend. D.

GEORGE SCHOOL.

Professor Charles M. Stabler, Grace Woodman, Alice Borton, Chester Pyle, and Herbert Henrie represented the school at the meeting of the Young Friends' Association at Woodstown, N. J., on the 18th.

Belle Vansant of the Biological Department lately received from the University of Pennsylvania a large box containing plants of various kinds to be placed in the Botanical Garden which the school has begun.

The Whittier Society held its monthly meeting on the 18th. Participants in the program were Mary Blackburn, Maurice Greist, Bessie Johnson, Horace Way, Maud Rice.

The hour of the Young Friends' Association on the 18th was occupied by Howard M. Jenkins in an interesting talk on the "Friends in England." At the close of the meeting teachers and students adjourned to the parlors and spent the remainder of the evening socially.

A special committee appointed to decide on a location for class trees, selected the high ground near the station and south of the stonewalk leading to the School building. A grove will be ultimately formed there. **

SWARTHMORE PREPARATORY SCHOOL.—The Principal reports, 10th month 24, that the Boys' Department was over full, and two waiting for vacancies; capacity of Girls' Department, double what it was in 1897-8, and only two vacancies. There were 62 boarding pupils and 80 day pupils, 84 boys, and 58 girls.

PUBLIC opinion does not exist for the great mass of blacks in the South. Want of morality does not carry any penalties to them, except when it takes the form of lynching. Now, no people can make progress in the world without virtue. Nor can they become virtuous without cultivation, intellectual, social, and religious. This refining influence must go hand in hand with industrial training in order to secure any lasting results to the race.—New York Evening Post.

THE difficulties in the way of general pacification are great, but, as has been well said, "more difficulties are in the way of its proving a failure."—Charles G. Ames.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

DR. JESSE H. HOLMES writes from Oxford, England, that he has been cordially received there, and that the opportunities for study in the University have been kindly extended. He now proposes to use the Christmas vacation, about five weeks, for his trip to Palestine. Though he may take more time than that, it will nearly serve the purpose.

Martha Schofield writes from Aiken, South Carolina :

"We do very much need men's pantaloons, boys' clothing, and children's. People come many miles, and have to go away empty-handed. Women's shirt-waists will not do now, but will sell next summer. Knives and forks and plates will be welcomed. We have upwards of 90 boarders. Are getting ready for cold weather. We do hope for a supply of things in time for our Fair, Twelfth month 23."

William J. Hall writes from Trinidad, Colorado, that he has taken a house there for the rest of the winter.

Mary Hutchinson Savage, daughter of John Wm. Hutchinson, of New York City, has gone with her husband to San Juan, Porto Rico, for residence there. They sailed from New York City on the 23d ult.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

TO ENGLAND.

OH, England, where is thy honor?

Thy honor as of old,—

In the days so brave when the pledge thou gave

Was more in thy sight than gold!

How is thy greatness fallen!

How is thy faith foresworn!

Since thy children stood, as brave men should,

For the honor by true hearts won!

Even the cry of suffering Christians,

Betrayed by the brutal Turk,

Reached thy ear unheard, though thy plighted word

Was pledged to prevent his work.

Was there danger then that thy treasure

Might disappear in the fight?

Is a nation's word to be all unheard

When danger comes with the right?

Is thy faith held faintly by cowards,

With glance behind, before?

Is the voice so late with peace elate

The same that now shouts for war?

Is thy faith now based on thy cannon?

Has all faith in God been lost?

Are the weak alone to be overthrown,

And the will of the strong ne'er crossed?

Oh, England! Remember thy honor!

Return to the God of thy youth!

He can crown thee with greatness and power,—

With justice, and goodness, and truth.

Forsake thy low faith in thy cannon,

Thy lust for base power and gold;—

For these can but lead to the hour of thy need,—

To sorrow and ruin untold.

When the voice of the weak pleads for justice,

And appeals more to reason than rage,—

Do not thou forget, lest thou shouldst regret,

That thy voice is the voice of the age.

Oh, England! be true to thy vision!

Let thy voice bear the message of peace!

In the Name of thy God, tread the path yet untrod;

In the Name of the Lord, bid war cease!

R.

FIRST-class passengers on railways in England have increased only 10 per cent. in ten years, while the number of the third-class passengers has increased 41 per cent.

THE SPARROW'S CREED.

THREE little sparrows in the snow,
Just on the sill,
Who came almost an hour ago,
And wait there still.

They look inside and peck the pane ;
The sparrow's prayer ;
They wait and look and peck again—
What do I care ?

Have I not prayed and been denied,
Met no reply ?
Why should the birds be satisfied
Sooner than I ?

Why should I heed their hungry plea
For crumb or crust ?
I will give when God gives me,
And that is just.

But not a sparrow leaves its place
Upon the snow ;
They look inside with eager face
And will not go.

They feel so sure that I will hear
Who heard before ;
Having received, they have no fear
In asking more.

My hungry heart and selfish will
Are brought to bay
By sparrows on the window sill—
More wise than they.

I ask, then murmur, then despair ;
They ask and wait,
Sure of an answer to their prayer,
Early or late.

The clouds and doubting shadows flee,
My eyes grow dim ;
Shall sparrows have more faith in me
Than I in Him ?

Whose loving kindness made me whole
In all the past ?
Whose bounty has endowed my soul
From first to last ?

I scatter out the food they ask,
With lavish hand ;
Their creed, it is any easy thing
To understand.

Pray and wait ; and wait and pray,
Sure of reply !
Then faith comes back to its old-time sway
Though happy sparrows fly away
Fuller than I. —Selected.

STORIES of wonderful corn crops are told in all the Western States. Stalks from twelve to fifteen feet high are common, but in Kay county, Oklahoma, one stalk has been found that measures over twenty feet, beating the record made by a Texas stalk in 1896, which measured nineteen feet and four inches. This stalk has been sent to Washington to compete for a place at the Paris Exposition.

THE special expert sent abroad by the Agricultural Department in search of new seeds and edible plants has brought back an "overbearing strawberry," which it recommends highly. It is said to produce fruit for months on the same plants, and a small patch will supply a family table a whole season.

SEÑOR Capote's report gives 137 municipalities existing in Cuba. He finds that 282 towns and hamlets were destroyed during the war and that the approximate population of Cuba is 1,317,082, less by 314,065 than it was in 1887.

CLARA BARTON ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

A LETTER from Clara Barton on the right of women to the suffrage has recently been given to the press, and may be of interest to many. She says :

"I believe I must have been born believing in the full right of women to all the privileges and positions which nature and justice accord to her in common with other human beings. Perfectly equal rights—human rights. There was never any question in my mind in regard to this. I did not purchase my freedom with a price ; I was born free ; and when, as a younger woman, I heard the subject discussed, it seemed simply ridiculous that any sensible, sane person should question it. And when, later, the phase of woman's right to suffrage came up, it was to me only a part of the whole, just as natural, just as right, and just as certain to take place.

"And whenever I have been urged, as a petitioner, to ask for this privilege for woman, a kind of dazed, bewildered feeling has come over me.

"Of whom should I ask this privilege ? Who possessed the right to confer it ? Who had greater right than woman herself ? Was it man, and if so, where did he get it ? Who conferred it upon him ? He depended upon woman for his being, his very existence, nurture, and rearing. More fitting that she should have conferred it upon him.

"Was it governments ? What were they but the voice of the people ? What gave them their power ? Was it divinely conferred ? Alas ! no ; or they would have been better, purer, more just and stable.

"Was it force of arms—war ? Who furnished the warriors ? Who but the mothers ? Who reared their sons and taught them that liberty and their country were worth their blood ? Who gave them up, wept their fall, nursed them in suffering and mourned them dead ?

"Was it labor ? Women have always, as a rule, worked harder than men.

"Was it capital ? Woman has furnished her share up to the present hour. Who then, can give the right, and on what basis ? Who can withhold it ?

"In regard to my nationality, I was born in the old Huguenot town of Oxford, Mass. My father and mother were born there. My grandfathers and grandmothers, with two exceptions, were born, lived, died, and were buried there.

"There is, once in a while, a monarch who denies the right of man to place a crown upon his head. Only the great Jehovah can crown and anoint him for his work, and he reaches out, takes the crown, and places it upon his head with his own hand. I suspect that this is in effect what woman is doing to-day. Virtually there is no one to give her the right to govern herself, as men govern themselves by self-made and self-approved laws of the land. But in one way or another, sooner or later, she is coming to it. And the number of thoughtful and right-minded men who will oppose, will be much smaller than we think ; and when it is really an accomplished fact, all will wonder, as I have done, what the objection ever was."

THE DISASTER AT DARJEELING.

Our readers will recall the disaster in India, at Darjeeling, when the side of the mountain slipped, after heavy rains, and houses containing children were overwhelmed. This was at the close of Ninth month last, and the event was recorded in the INTELLIGENCER, Tenth month 7. From the Christian Advocate, New York, we extract part of a letter from a missionary (Methodist) Mrs. D. H. Lee, of Calcutta, whose six children were swept away, and all killed or fatally hurt. The letter says:

You will have heard ere this of the terrible landslide in Darjeeling, and how buried by it is all the earthly light and joy of our home. Our six children—four girls and two boys—were living in a beautiful two-storied stone building on the side of the mountain, just near our Methodist school, where they attended as day scholars.

We were buying property here in Calcutta, and repairing and altering the house to suit our work. Vida, our eldest daughter, aged seventeen years, was taking care of her brothers and sisters in that beautiful hill station until we could get settled.

On Sunday night, September 25, the house and all our darlings were buried under the mountain, and we would never have known the story of their triumph had not our boy Wilbur [13 years old] been miraculously spared to tell us. He had been thrown 100 feet down the mountain side, and knew nothing until toward morning he came to himself, and in the awful darkness saw a light in a house not far away. He tried to reach it, but sank back fainting. In the morning some kind friends discovered him, and after much difficulty reached and rescued him, and everything possible was done to warm and save him. After a two days' terrible journey of walking, riding, and climbing we reached him in time to clasp him again in our arms.

He then told us about that night. There had been a terrible storm and downpour of rain, lasting two days. They had spent Sunday indoors, a few slips taking place during the day. About ten o'clock in the night the storm increased, and the earth and great boulders began to roll down the hill, and the children felt they were not safe. They tried to escape, but found the road destroyed and the ways cut off on both sides—water rushing down the mountain side like the Ohio River, as Wilbur described it.

Vida led the children out, but was met with falling earth and stone and insurmountable debris. In the pitch darkness and the pouring rain and through the sound of the cyclone she felt she could not keep the children together. "I cannot let you get separated. I promised papa I would take care of Esther," she said; "so we will go back to the house, and if God wishes to save us, he can save us together; if not, he will take us together."

They returned, and made a fire in the upper room, where they dried their clothes and prayed, asking God to deliver them, if it was his will, and if not, to make them ready for whatever might come. While praying the corner of the room gave way, and they felt the house was going. Vida stood up and said, "Children, the house is going to fall, and we will all soon be in heaven." Wilbur said: "O mamma, if you could only have seen Vida's face—how it shone, and how beautiful she looked as she talked to us! All fear was taken away. We just felt like we were all on the train coming into Calcutta to to you. We were so happy. We all said, 'Now, if papa, mamma, and baby Frank were only here, to go with us to heaven, how nice it would be!'" Vida took them into the room at the other end of the house, and again they knelt in prayer, our little Bengali girl with the rest. While praying there came a great crash. Wilbur sprang to his feet, with the lamp in his hand, just in time to see the wall fall in, and he knew nothing more until he came to himself in the darkness. Our hope is that the others knew nothing more until they found themselves sweeping through the pearly gates. Wilbur had four terrible wounds on his head, which caused lockjaw. He seemed to have been sent back to tell us of their triumph in that awful hour, and to assure us, in words most wonderful for a child of his age, of his own preparation for heaven, and then, after a week of much suffering, he joined his brother and sisters in the better home, and left us alone with only our baby, nine months old.

THE PRICE OF WHEAT.

Springfield Republican.

THE Government's final report on the wheat crop will not be given out until next month. Meantime the actual conditions of the market favor lower prices, and the Chicago quotation for December wheat has been gradually declining for some days until it now stands at about 67 cents. The price a year ago was about 66 cents. The advance to between 70 and 80 cents, which began last winter and was well maintained until within a few weeks, has thus been nearly wiped out, and the tendency of the market is still downward, notwithstanding the prevalence of a foreign war, which was expected to enhance the value of all foodstuffs.

It is becoming apparent that the world's great wheat harvest of 1898, and the smaller, but still large, crop of the present year, have sufficed to meet all current needs and restore the reserves to nearly normal figures after the extensive depletion of 1897. Visible stocks in Europe and America, according to Bradstreet's, now amount to 174,180,000 bushels, or 67,000,000 bushels more than at this time in 1898 and 43,000,000 bushels more than in 1897. Indeed, they are now only about 8,000,000 bushels below the supplies in view on November 1, 1896, and 24,000,000 below those of the same date in 1895, when wheat at Chicago was fluctuating not far above half a dollar a bushel.

An important factor in the present decline is Argentine shipments and outlook for the growing crop. It is now early summer there and the wheat crop of 1900 is approaching maturity. The promise of a larger harvest than ever is said to be excellent. But the immediate depressing factor is the continued outgo of the old wheat from that country long after the surplus from the harvest of the past season, should have been marketed. Last week's shipments of old wheat from Argentine amount to 1,752,000 bushels,—a weekly quantity rarely exceeded in the height of the marketing season; and they bring the total shipments since January 1 up to 57,866,000 bushels. This compares with total shipments in 1898 of only about 23,000,000 bushels, and with a record total of some 59,000,000 bushels in 1894. These continued large exports out of season from the southern republic prove not only that the last Argentine wheat harvest was greatly underestimated, but that the growing crop is in such condition as to warrant the clearing away of the old grain to the unusual extent indicated.

It would appear that we are entering upon a normal period of cereal abundance and very low prices compared with what they have been in the past two or three years of world scarcity. American agriculture has profited vastly from the recent situation, as it did in 1879-81, and again in 1891-2, but those times of harvest failure abroad and plenty at home are unusual and come only about once in ten years.

JUSTICE BREWER'S VIEW.

From an address at Buffalo, New York, by David J. Brewer, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I HAVE had no military education; I do not know how to conduct a war; I do not edit a "yellow" journal; and so I yield unquestioning assent to the claims made by army and navy gentlemen, that, in case of war, coaling-stations in different parts of the globe are desirable. And yet, with the incredulity and questioning spirit of a Yankee, I cannot but notice that we have gotten along safely for a hundred years without any coaling-stations outside of our own territory. And, further, it is clear that for a coaling-station territory as large as New England is not essential. But, beyond that, is there not such a thing as overdoing this getting ready for war? I have noticed that a man who goes about with a chip on his shoulder is very apt to have many quarrels, but the gentleman who minds his own business is ordinarily let alone and goes through life without a fight.

We have lived and prospered for 123 years with a handful of regular troops. We have preserved peace at home and have been respected abroad. Government by consent of the governed has little need of the soldier. So the world has come to believe, and so it is. Are we ready to forfeit this high position? Do we not endanger the very foundation principles of this government when we make the blare of the bugles and the tramp of the armed battalion the music which is heard on every side and the inspiration which attracts the ambition of our youth?

May God save the United States of America and keep them from the road so often traveled by nations, of increasing territory, accumulating dominion, rapidly and easily acquired wealth, luxurious splendor, a growing separation between the poor and the rich, decay and death; and may we always hear the solemn prayer of Abraham Lincoln, borne upward to Heaven from the consecrated field of Gettysburg, that government of and by and for the people may never perish from the earth!

AN OLD COLORED WOMAN'S HOME.

Anna M. Nicholas, in Laing School Visitor.

THE friends who read our little Visitor will remember the item in the May number calling attention to Nancy Green's request for some of "de good people up nort" to aid her in paying the few dollars yet due upon her little two-roomed cabin.

Several kind hearted ladies and one gentleman responded with one or two dollars apiece, and interested some of their friends and relatives until the amount was nearly reached. Then it was made up by Abby Munro, so that she could hold in her own hand the coveted "paper" [deed for the property] before my departure.

As the little amounts came to me and she received the money, she dictated letters of gratitude to the donors, which were duly copied and sent. Had we retained the originals we would be glad to publish extracts from them, to show the extreme delight of the old creature in the possession of her humble domicile. In one, she said, "I wisht Ise clost enough to rake you yard ebery day." In another, "If I nebber sees you yere, I shake hans wid you in glory." In another, "I like to hab my little house in your back yard in Heaben." In another, "Though I want a mansion in de sky, I want my little home here first, befo, I go."

When the last dollar was added to her little account book, and she was assured that the place was now hers, the old woman seemed to realize for the first time what "De ownin' ob de house" really meant.

We took her over to the city to see the deed executed. She had not been across on the new ferry, and her appreciation of the trip was extravagant. Even the old lawyer was touched when she showed him the book in which for four years her small payments had been recorded, "I'se made it all workin' in de field, at de wash tub, out a cookin', or a nussin'," said she, and he made out his bill at half price. By his advice we had her will made, leaving her little property to her favorite nephew "Jeames," whom she had raised "from a little mudderless boy, so high," and who has now a family of eight children of his own. The next morning, before we had had our breakfast, Nancy was announced. She was in a high state of exaltation, having been unable to sleep all night, "just a tinkin' what de Lawd hab done fur me. In what a wonderful manner de Lawd hab led me on, and I gits so happy I can't sleep," said she, and would have gone off into a camp-meeting shout had we not calmed her, and put a cup of hot coffee and some breakfast into her hands.

All will join us in wishing the persevering old woman a peaceful life during her few remaining years here, and an entrance into a Heavenly mansion when her Lord shall come.

REFERRING to the statements sent out from Manila and Washington that the Filipino forces have been—or soon will be—scattered and destroyed, the Springfield Republican remarks that the Americans are thus "sweeping away to exile or death those among the Filipino people who were best fitted to build up a native government. If our purpose were to wipe out every vestige of native possibility in this direction we could not proceed on better lines than we have done."

The Children Question.

To have a family and no means of support is a serious predicament, and it is not bettered by the fact that the family is large. A family with a bad physical or mental inheritance, or in the hands of incompetent parents, is not likely to be a blessing or a valuable asset in the world. But a family of well-born children, committed to parents who appreciate their charge and are equal to it, is one of the very best things going. The very best and most important thing in the world is folks.

Great is prudence; but it is worth remembering that there are chances of raising too few children, as well as too many, and while it is an embarrassment to have a young family on one's hands and run out of funds, it is also an embarrassment to find one's self past middle life and fairly in funds but short of children.—[E. S. Martin, in Harper's Magazine.]

The Evidence of Ice.

Thomas A. Edison.

WHY, after years of watching the processes of nature, I can no more doubt the existence of an Intelligence that is running things than I do of the existence of myself. Take, for example, the substance, water, that forms the crystal known as ice. Now, there are hundreds of combinations that form crystals, and every one of them save that of ice sinks in water. Ice, I say, doesn't. And it is rather lucky for us mortals, for if it had done so we would all be dead. Why? Simply because if ice sank to the bottom of rivers, lakes, and oceans as fast as it froze, those places would be frozen up and there would be no water left. That is only one example out of thousands that to me prove beyond the possibility of a doubt that some vast Intelligence is governing this and other planets.

What a Boy Costs.

A SCHOOL BOY sends us the following which is a plain statement of the cost of raising a boy or girl from the standpoint of a lad of thirteen years.

It does not take as much money to live in the country, or a small town, as it does to live in the city.

I read the other day that it costs $5,000 to bring up a city boy and educate him and dress him well.

I said to myself, "That is because everything in the city has to be bought and living is high."

But I began to study the thing, and I found out that even a country boy costs his parents a good deal.

When you count what a boy eats and what he wears, and the school-books he has to have, and the doctor bills that have to be paid when we gets the measles or the scarlet fever, he will cost his folks at least $100 a year.

I guess if a boy is pretty bad to smash things or to kick his shoes right out he costs more than that.

So when I am 21 and old enough to do for myself I shall have cost father more than $2,000.

Mother cooked my vittals, made my clothes and patched them, washed and ironed for me, took care of me, when I was a little fellow and whenever I was sick, and she never charged anything for that.

If she were dead and father had to hire all that done, it would cost him another $100 a year more and that's $2,000 worth of work mother will have done for me by the time I am a man.

Four thousand dollars for a boy! What do you think of that? These are hard times.

When parents put $4,000 on a boy, what have they a right to expect of him?

Is it fair for a boy to play truant at school?

Is it fair for him to play ball, go in swimming, or hang around town all the time, when maybe his father's potatoes are not dug nor the wood brought in for his mother?

Is it fair for him to disappoint them by swearing and drinking?

Some of our parents have put about all the property they have into us boys and girls.

If we make spittoons and whiskey jugs of ourselves, they will be poor indeed.

But if we make good citizens and substantial men they will feel as if they had good pay for bringing us up.

Let's make up our minds now to pay the debt we owe to our parents and we shall be happy and make them happy also.—[Exchange.]

A Wordsworth that is Wanted.

IT is often said that we lack glamour in America; that our perspective is limited; that we have no picturesque past. But all these things lie more in the eye of the beholder than in external objects. Natural beauty is as beautiful in New England as in Old. We have no Tintern Abbey it is true, but our greater lack is a Wordsworth to celebrate it. It is the mind, the love, the life of man which must reveal beauty to us who have our turn at living now.—[Caroline Hazard.]

Sun and Stars as Time-Keepers.

PROBABLY the majority of people suppose that the observatories obtain the correct time from the sun. When the average man wishes to give his watch the highest praise he says, "It regulates the sun," not being aware that a watch which would keep with the sun around the year would have to be nearly as bad as Sam Weller's. The farmer may safely decide when to go into dinner by the sun, but if the mariner was as confident that the sun marked always the correct time as the farmer is, he would be sure to be at times two or three hundred miles from where he thought he was. In other words, the sun—that is, a sundial—is only correct on a few days in each year, and during the intervening times gets as far as a whole quarter hour fast or slow.

These variations of the sun from uniform time caused no end of trouble between the astronomers and the fine clock-makers before it was discovered that sun time is subject to such irregularities. The better the clock, the worse it often seemed to go.

But as the variations in sun time are now accurately known, correct time might be obtained from the sun by making proper allowance, were it not for the difficulty of observing its position with sufficient exactness. The large disk of the sun cannot be located so perfectly as can the single point which a star makes. For this reason astronomers depend almost wholly upon the stars for obtaining accurate time.

There are several hundred stars whose positions have been established with the greatest accuracy by the most careful observations at a number of the principal observatories of the world. If a star's exact position is known, it can readily be calculated when it will pass the meridian of any given place—that is, the instant it will cross a north-and-south line through the place. The data regarding these stars are all published in the nautical almanacs, which are got out by several different observatories for the use of navigators and all others who have uses for them. These stars are known as "clock stars."—[T. B. Wilson, in Popular Science Monthly.]

Americans and the Boer War.

REMARKING upon the professions made by prominent American newspapers of sympathy with England in the war with the Transvaal farmers, the Springfield Republican says:

"The English are being deceived. America has not suddenly been transformed into a great hotbed of Anglomaniacs. . . . Our American imperialists would desert England in a moment if they thought that the interests of America, and particularly of American imperialism, were not benefited by a close English connection. It follows, too, that they are the most treacherous of friends. The real friends of England in this country are not those who cringe before her, or bespatter her moral sense with fulsome praise, or offer hypocritical apologies for her shortcomings, or cynically profess friendships for ulterior ends, but those who tell truth about her and who never feared to admire her greatness and her virtues when there was precious little 'sympathy' being passed between London and Washington."

CURRENT EVENTS.

CONGRESS will assemble for the "long session," at Washington on Second-day next, the 4th instant. It is understood that D. B. Henderson, of Iowa (Rep.), will be chosen Speaker with only the formal opposition of the Democratic minority. The message of the President is expected to deal largely with the serious questions arising out of the relations of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines to the United States.

SOME reports from South Africa speak of the kindness of the Boers to the English wounded. G. W. Stevens, war correspondent of the London Mail, in a letter which reached London by post on the 27th, describes a battle at Nicholson's Nek, and gives details of the humanity of the Dutch farmers, after the fighting ended. He says: "They gave whole men the water out of their own bottles; they gave the wounded the blankets off their own saddles and slept themselves on the naked veld. They were short of transport, but they were mostly armed with Martinis, yet they gave the captured mules for hospital panniers and the captured Lee-Metfords for splints."

Stevens also says that when the British officers hoisted a white flag to surrender, in one case the men "refused to see it, but kept on firing." This is of interest in connection with the charges made by both sides that flags of truce have not been respected.

THERE is reason to fear, despite the reports of Boer humanity, that the war in South Africa will soon become very embittered. Knight, a correspondent of the New York World, is reported as saying that at Belmont (where there has been a battle), the Boers displayed a white flag, and then fired on the English. On the other side, a letter is published in Paris addressed by the Transvaal Government to the foreign consuls at Pretoria (the capital) protesting against the use of the Kaffirs by the English, and charging under six different heads, upon information furnished by General Joubert, inhumanity, and the disregard of the so-called "laws of war." It must be kept in mind that all dispatches are "censored" by the English authorities.

THE reports from General Otis, for a fortnight past, have been mostly of one sort, announcing the "complete success" of the military operations against the Filipinos. Numerous towns have been captured, prisoners taken, war supplies secured, etc. The "government" established under Aguinaldo is said to be broken up, and Aguinaldo himself almost certain of capture. His mother and his son are in the hands of the Americans. Buen Camino, who was "Secretary of State," is a prisoner at Manila.

THE war operations in South Africa have continued, and there is no present prospect of anything but further severe and deadly conflict. The English Government, through Sir Julian Pauncefote, at Washington, has notified the United States that a "state of war" exists between England and the two republics,—the Transvaal, and the Orange Free State. Numerous engagements have occurred in Natal, on the east, where Gen. Buller and Gen. Joubert are the opposing commanders, and in Cape Colony, where the English forces under Gen. Lord Methuen are operating, and are opposed by Gen. Cronje. The general result of the fighting seems to be that the English columns are pressing northward and forcing the Boers back, but only by hard fighting, and with severe losses on both sides.

IT was announced from Washington, on the 28th ult., that the bill framed by the Republican caucus committee, at Atlantic City, last summer, establishing the single gold standard, would be introduced promptly "as a Republican party measure," as soon as Congress assembles next week. It defines the standard unit of value in the United States to be the dollar of 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine, or 23.02 grains of pure gold; provides for the coinage of the silver bullion now in the Treasury into subsidiary coin, and for the recoinage of worn and uncurrent subsidiary silver coin; makes provision for the issue of notes of small denomination; permits the issue of national bank circulation to the par value of bonds deposited; substitutes a franchise tax for the tax on bank circulation; and provides for the organization of national banks of $25,000 capital in communities of 2,000 inhabitants.

REPORTS have been coming from Cuba for some days past that there is much unrest among the people on account of the proposal at Washington to appoint a "civil governor" of the island, this being interpreted to mean the retention of the

THE distances over which birds migrate varies between wide limits, and are often surprisingly great. The bobolinks, which rear their young on the shores of Lake Winnipeg, Canada, and go to Cuba and Porto Rico to spend the winter, twice traverse a distance exceeding 2,800 miles, or more than a fifth of the circumference of our earth, each year. The kingbird lays its eggs as far north as the fifty-seventh degree of latitude, and is found in the winter in South America. The biennial pilgrimages of the little redstart exceed three thousand miles and the tiny humming bird two thousand.

WE hear of happy families of animals. A novel case of this kind is now told. A gentleman in Maryland has succeeded in taming a hawk, and in teaching it to live on the most amicable terms in a henry, enjoying the companionship of the hens and turkeys, and apparently not knowing that they ought to be enemies, not friends. —[Exchange.]

"WHERE'S your papa, Nellie?" asked a mother of her little daughter. "He's out on the back porch," was the reply. "What's he doing there?" queried the mother. "His bicycle's all out of breath, and he's putting some more in," answered the small observer.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness, and flavor noticed in the finest cake, short cake, biscuit, rolls, crusts, etc., which expert pastry cooks declare is unobtainable by the use of any other leavening agent.

Made from pure, grape cream of tartar.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

island by the United States. A dispatch from Havana, on the 28th, to the New York Herald, says the cry "Independence or death!" was started last week, and "has spread like wildfire over the entire island. Among the lower classes of Cubans the condition is such to-day that only a leader, fearless and determined, is needed to cause a genuine uprising."

Various answers to this statement have been given out. One, from Washington, is that opposition to "civil governors" will only prolong the military occupation. From Havana it is announced that General Brooke has his troops throughout the island "in readiness," and that he is prepared "to stamp out indications of banditism by cavalry."

THE question of the seating of Roberts, the alleged polygamous Representative from Utah, is likely to be one of the most prominent matters for consideration in the House, at Washington, when it assembles. There is a strong effort making to exclude him entirely, not allowing him to take his seat. Whether this course should be taken, or he should be seated and then expelled, is under discussion. To expel him will require a two thirds' vote.

NEWS AND OTHER GLEANINGS.

CANADA, says Meehans' Monthly, seems to be very favorable to the growth of trees and shrubs, for all the supposed severity of its winters. In the catalogue of the Arboretum of the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, of which Dr. William Saunders is Director, 3,071 species, that have been tested, are enumerated, the greater number of which are found to be quite at home there.

—The latest addition to the long list of city parks comes from St. Paul, Minnesota. A patch of some 100 acres is to be condemned for park purposes. It fronts on Lake Phalen, whence the city derives much of its water, and will be called Phalen Park.

—"If it were possible," says Bishop Spalding (Catholic), of Peoria, Ill., "though I do not see how it ever can be, it would be right, it would be a duty, to prevent half the marriages that take place. People enter into these relations in the same spirit that they would purchase a horse, a house, or a suit of clothes. They have no regard for the sacredness of the relations upon which they enter. Education cannot be a preventive of the necessity for charity, a preventive of pauperism and crime, unless it be an education of love."

—A Toronto despatch says that the suit of the Michigan lumbermen against the Ontario Government has been dismissed on all points, with costs. The proceeding was to test the validity of the act of the Ontario Legislature compelling timber licencees to manufacture into lumber all logs cut within the Province.

—A verdict for $2,500 was given on the 25th instant in the United States Circuit Court, at Chicago, in favor of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in its suit against the city for damages done during the railroad strike of 1894. The company asked for $25,000.

NOTICES.

 A meeting under the care of the Committee on Philanthropic Labor of New York Monthly Meeting will be held in the Library Room, 16th and Rutherford Place, Twelfth month 9, at 7.30 p. m. An address will be delivered by Ernest H. Crosby, the subject being, "Count Tolstoy: his Philosophy of Life."

HENRY M. HAVILAND, Chairman.

 A Circular Meeting, under the care of a Committee of Concord Quarterly Meeting, will be held at Stanton, Del., on First-day, Twelfth month 3, at 3 p. m.

A train leaves Philadelphia on the Pennsylvania road, on First-day morning at 9.12, Chester at 9.45, and Wilmington at 10.18, and reaches Stanton at 10.30. It stops at nearly all way stations, and will be met at Stanton Station.

MARY P. HARVEY, Clerk.

 Quarterly Meetings during Twelfth month occur as follows:

- 7. Salem, Woodbury, N. J.
- 14. Haddonfield, Haddonfield, N. J.
- 21. Fishing Creek H. Y. M., Millville, Pa.

 Circular Meetings during Twelfth month will occur as follows:

- 10. Unity and Waln streets, Frankford, 3.30 p. m.

The attendance of Friends and others is solicited.

 Burlington First-day School Union will be held at Crosswicks, N. J., Twelfth month 9, at 10 o'clock a. m. A general invitation is extended.

DANIEL WILLETS, } Clerks.
ANNA R. WALN, }

 A meeting of the Friends' Temperance Workers will be held at Girard Avenue and 17th street, Philadelphia, Twelfth month 2, at 8 p. m.

A very entertaining program is prepared.

WALKER E. LINVILL, President.

 Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting's Committee to visit the smaller branches as way may open will attend meetings as follows:

TWELFTH MONTH:

- 3. Germantown, 10.30 a. m.

AQUILA J. LINVILL, Clerk.

 For the benefit of Friends' School Associations or First day Schools, I have a line of pictures for Magic Lantern display,—a tour of the United States and Europe. This exhibit and talks upon it are given for just the actual expenses needed in connection with such an affair. I make no charge for my services. For further information inquire of or address

R. B. NICHOLSON.

523 Cooper street, Camden, N. J.

 A regular monthly meeting of the Home Influence Association (under the care of Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting's Philanthropic Committee), will be held in Girard Avenue meeting-house, on Third-day, Twelfth month 5, 1899, at 8 p. m.

All interested in questions relating to the home and to children are invited to be present.

ANNA K. WAY, Clerk of Phil. Com.

 The Young Friends' Association extends an invitation to Friends and others to be present at the opening of its new building, 140 N. 15th street, Philadelphia, Seventh-day, 9th inst., from 4 until 9 p. m.

 A religious meeting will be held at Friends' Home for Children, 4011 Aspen street, West Philadelphia, First-day, Twelfth month 3, 1899, at 3 p. m.

All persons interested in the welfare of the destitute children are cordially invited to meet with us on this occasion.

S T. R. EAVENSON, M D.

 The Visiting Committee of Baltimore Yearly Meeting have arranged for meetings up to First month as follows:

TWELFTH MONTH:

- 3. Washington, D. C.
- 10. Pipe Creek.
- 17. Forest Hill.
- 24. Aisquith Street, Baltimore.
- 31. Woodlawn.

JOHN J. CORNELL, Chairman.

"OPENER and closer" is a new feminine vocation. She is sent for when a family departs from home temporarily, putting things to rights then, and repeating the operation just before the return.

Fill a pie with
ATMORE'S
MINCE MEAT
if you want your guests to praise it. Delicate in flavor, rich in substance, clean, pure and fresh. Ask for it. Try
ATMORE'S
Genuine
English
Plum Pudding.

Why Not ?

Yes, why not look into it? You are ill, perhaps. If so, we affirm that our treatment has cured cases as bad as your own. We bring testimony of those who have been cured. They describe their diseases and testify that they are cured by the use of Compound Oxygen Treatment of Drs. Starkey and Palen. They are ready to reiterate and confirm these statements at any time, and we are permitted to refer to them.

You have tried other means without success. You know where to find the remedy, or to learn all about it. Why not look into it?

To assist you, send for our book of 200 pages, in which you will find a history of Compound Oxygen, with numerous testimonials and record of surprising cures in chronic cases. An investigation of this treatment, by leading you to try it, may save your life. Home or office Treatment. Consultation free.

Drs. Starkey & Palen,

1112 Girard St., Philadelphia, Pa.
San Francisco, Cal. Toronto, Can.

J. T. JACKSON & CO., Real Estate Brokers,

No. 711 WALNUT ST., PHILA.

Rents, Sales, Mortgages, etc., etc.

PETER WRIGHT & SONS

305-307 WALNUT ST., PHILAD'A.

LETTERS OF CREDIT for Travelers.
FOREIGN EXCHANGE bought and sold.

The purchase and sale of Prime Investment Securities
a Specialty.

Loans negotiated on Real Estate. Interest allowed on deposits.

SPECIAL THERMOMETERS.

With porcelain scale.

Forty-five cents.

H. C. Boden & Co.

Manufacturing Opticians.

S. E. Cor. 13th & Walnut Streets.

M. L. PHILIBERT, French Steam Dyer, Scourer, AND DRY CLEANER.

Cleaning of Blankets and Lace Curtains
a specialty.

210 S. EIGHTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.
Branch Office, 727 South Second Street.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL, Manufacturing Optician.

118 South Fifteenth St. (4th door bel. Chestnut St.)
PHILADELPHIA.

Established 1870 at 824 North Second Street.

WATCHES.

As one of the oldest houses in the watch trade—established three generations ago—and up to date in every feature of the business, we are able to offer the best and most serviceable watches for the least money. Give us a call.

GEO. C. CHILD,

11 S. 9th St., (below Market, opposite Post Office.)

BRASS and ENAMELED BEDSTEADS

There is a right way and a cheap way to make Mattresses; perhaps you have found it out. We do it the right way; try us. Furniture reupholstered.
Shades, etc.

Josiah G. Williams, 13 N. 11th St

Ellwood Heacock,

UNDERTAKER
and EMBALMER

ESTABLISHED 1860.

TELEPHONE 5807.

1313 Vine Street, Philad'a.

Calls outside of city answered promptly.

The Provident Life and Trust Company of Philadelphia

409 Chestnut Street.

Capital, $1,000,000, Fully Paid.

Insures Lives, Grants Annuities, Receives Money on Deposit, Acts as Executor, Administrator, Guardian, Trustee, Assignee, Committee, Receiver, Agent, Etc.

All Trust Funds and Investments are kept separate and apart from the assets of the Company.

President, SAMUEL R. SHIPLEY; Vice President, T. WISTAR BROWN; Vice President and Actuary,
ASA S. WING; Manager of Insurance Department, JOSEPH ASHBROOKE; Trust Officer, J. ROBERTS
FOULKE; Assistant Trust Officer, J. BARTON TOWNSEND; Assistant Actuary, DAVID
G. ALSOP; Treasurer, SAMUEL H. TROTH; Secretary, C. WALTER BORTON.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA.

This Company furnishes ALL DESIRABLE FORMS OF LIFE AND ENDOWMENT INSURANCE at actual NET COST. It is PURELY MUTUAL; has ASSETS OF THIRTY MILLIONS, and a SUR-PLUS of over 3½ MILLIONS. ITS POLICIES ARE NON-FORFEITABLE AND INCONTESTABLE.

President,
HARRY F. WEST,

Vice-President,
GEORGE K. JOHNSON.

Secretary and Treasurer,
HENRY C. BROWN.

GIRARD TRUST COMPANY

N. E. Cor. Broad and Chestnut Sts.

Capital, $1,000,000.

Chartered 1836

Surplus, $2,000,000.

ACTS AS EXECUTOR, ADMINISTRATOR, TRUS-TEE, ASSIGNEE, AND RECEIVER.

FINANCIAL AGENT FOR INDIVIDUALS OR CORPORATIONS.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON INDIVIDUAL AND CORPORATION ACCOUNTS.

ACTS AS TRUSTEE OF CORPORATION MORT-GAGES.

DEPOSITARY UNDER PLANS OF REORGAN-IZATION.

REGISTRAR AND TRANSFER AGENT.

ASSUMES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL ESTATE.
SAFES TO RENT IN BURGLAR-PROOF VAULTS.

E. B. MORRIS, President.

We have sold our Real Estate Mortgages for 21 years without loss to any investor.

We now offer carefully selected first mortgages from the rich black-waxy belt of Texas and Oklahoma.

Principal and 6% interest guaranteed. Send for pamphlet.

THE BUNNELL & ENO INVESTMENT CO.

Bullitt Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

Address the Company, or

S. E. MORSE, 1st Vice-Pres., 140 Nassau St., N. Y.

ZEBULON RUDD, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

C. S. HUTCHINSON, Syracuse, N. Y.

M. S. WAY, West Chester, Pa.

CLUB RATES: OTHER PERIODICALS, 1900.

We announce our Club Rates for other Periodicals for 1900. Read the figures given, and also read the notes below.

We will send FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER one year, with any of the periodicals named below, for the amount stated "for both."

WEEKLIES.

Periodicals.	Price for both.
Harper's Weekly, ($4),	$5.30
Christian Register, ($3),	4.80
Christian Register, (new subscribers),	4.10
Scientific American, ($3),	4.60
Harper's Bazar, ($4),	5.30
Journal of Education, ($2.50), . .	4.35
The Living Age, ($6),	7.60
Literary Digest, ($3),	4.50
The Independent, ($2),	3.90
Springfield Republican, ($1), . .	2.90
The Nation, ($3),	4.80

MONTHLIES.

British Friend, (6s. 6d. and postage),	$3.75
Meehans' Monthly (Floral, Hort.), ($2),	3.85

MONTHLIES (Continued).

Periodicals.	Price for both.
Scribner's Magazine, ($3),	$4.60
The Century Magazine, ($4),	5.60
Harper's Magazine, ($3),	4.70
Atlantic Monthly, ($4),	5.30
The Forum, ($3),	4.60
North American Review, ($5), . .	6.10
St. Nicholas, ($3),	4.60
Lippincott's Magazine, ($2.50), . .	3.80
Scattered Seeds, ($0.50),	2.35
McClure's Magazine, ($1),	2.90
The Farm Journal, ($0.50),	2.20
Little Men and Women, ($0.50), .	2.45

QUARTERLIES.

The New World, (Relig. Rev.), ($3),	$4.50
--------------------------------------	--------

Persons wishing other periodicals than those named above should write to us, and we will give prices. Money must accompany the order.

Where several periodicals in the list are wanted, find the net price of each (if ordered through us), by subtracting $2.00 from the rate given under the heading "price for both."

Offices Removed.

The offices of FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER have been removed to rooms on the second floor of the new Building of Young Friends' Association, at N. W. Cor. 15th and Cherry Sts.,
PHILADELPHIA.

Swarthmore College,

SWARTHMORE, PENNA.

WM. W. BIRDSALL, President.

Under care of Friends. Send for Catalogue.

George School,

NEAR NEWTOWN, BUCKS COUNTY, PA.

Under the care of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends.

Course of study extended and thorough, preparing students either for business or for College.

For catalogue, apply to

GEORGE L. MARIS, Principal,
George School, Penna.

SWARTHMORE PREPARATORY SCHOOL,

(Formerly SWARTHMORE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.)

New stone buildings; cottage plan; light, heat, ventilation, and drainage the best; combined advantages of individual attention and class enthusiasm.

For circulars address

ARTHUR H. TOMLINSON, Principal,
Swarthmore, Pa.

Friends' Central School,

FIFTEENTH AND RACE STS.,
PHILADELPHIA.

Under care of the Monthly Meetings of Philadelphia; furnishes a practical, guarded education, and prepares for college.

JOSEPH S. WALTON, } Principals.
ANNA W. SPEAKMAN, }

Circulars on application.

Abington Friends' School,

FOR BOARDING AND DAY PUPILS OF BOTH SEXES.
Near Jenkintown, Penna., 10 miles from Philadelphia.

Under the care of Abington Monthly Meeting. Liberal course of study. Students prepared for college or business. The home-like surroundings make it especially attractive to boarding pupils. Students admitted whenever there are vacancies. Send for circulars to

GEORGE M. DOWNING, M.S., Principal, Or,
CYNTHIA G. BOSLER, Sec'y, Ogontz, Pa.

Friends' Academy,

LOCUST VALLEY, LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

A Boarding and Day School for Boys and Girls, under the care of Friends. Thorough instruction to fit or business or to enter college.

Terms are moderate by reason of endowment.

For particulars address,

FRIENDS' ACADEMY, Locust Valley, N. Y.

Chappaqua Mountain Institute,

A FRIENDS' BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

The building is modern, and the location is the hill country thirty-two miles north of New York City.
For Circulars, address

CHAPPAQUA MOUNTAIN INSTITUTE,
Chappaqua, New York.

Hanscoms'. Our prices are the lowest, our variety the most complete, and quality as near perfect as can be had. Shall we mail you a price catalogue for comparison?
No liquors or other offensive goods or methods resorted to.
1311 Market St., Phila.

CAROLINE RAU, 736 Spring Garden St.,
Philadelphia.

Plain Millinery

MEDIUM FELTS AND STRAW BONNETS.

REMOVED.

LIZZIE J. LAMBERT, Millinery,

Successor to E. SHOEMAKER,
To 1020 GREEN STREET.

THE PENNHURST, Open all the year

Michigan Ave., near the Beach, Atlantic City.
The house has every convenience, including electric elevator, running to level of pavement, steam heat, etc. Send for illustrated booklet. JAMES HOOD.

THE AQUARILLE, OPEN ALL THE YEAR

OCEAN END OF TENNESSEE AVE.
Atlantic City, N. J.
Enlarged, remodelled, steam heat, electric bells, heated sun parlor, home-like and comfortable.
M. E. and H. M. HUMPTON.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

We will continue the manufacture of Custom Shoes and carry a SELECT STOCK of our own reliable work.

SAMUEL DUTCHER.

(SECOND FLOOR.) 45 North 13th Street.

Handkerchiefs.

Our handkerchief stock is the greatest ever shown in Philadelphia, and values are better than can be found elsewhere. Now is the time to make selections, while assortments are unbroken:

Women's Plain Linen Handkerchiefs—hemstitched, with hems of different widths—good qualities at 45, 50, 60, and 75 cents a half-dozen; finer qualities at 90c., $1.00, $1.20, $1.50, and $2.25 a half-dozen.

Men's Plain Linen Handkerchiefs—hemstitched, with hems of various widths—good qualities at 75c., 90c., and $1.00 a half-dozen; finer qualities at $1.20, $1.50, and $2.25 a half-dozen.

Men's Unlaundered Linen Handkerchiefs—hemstitched, with initials—75 cents a half-dozen.

Men's Full Laundered Linen Handkerchiefs—hemstitched, with initials—$1.50 and $2.25 a half-dozen.

Women's Full Laundered Linen Handkerchiefs—hemstitched, with initials—75c., $1.50, and $2.25 a half-dozen.

Men's Silk Handkerchiefs—with fine initials; unusual values—38c., 50c., 75c., and $1.00 each.

Men's Plain Japanese Silk Handkerchiefs—hemstitched—25c., 38c., 50c., 75c., and $1.00 each.

Silk Mufflers—a large variety of new patterns, in cream, black, and colors—50c. to $2.50 each.

Children's Linen Handkerchiefs—fine quality, full laundered, with initials—75 cents a half-dozen.

Children's Linen Handkerchiefs—hemstitched, with neat colored borders—2 in box for 25 cents; 4 in box for 50 cents.

Orders by mail receive prompt and accurate attention. Address orders "Department C."

Strawbridge & Clothier,

PHILADELPHIA.

Fruen's Whole Wheat Flour

10 lb. Bags, 35 cents.
Cases of 9 Bags, $2.75.

Contains all the valuable nourishing properties of the two finest and richest wheats grown, without any of the indigestible, woody hull, which is removed.

In ordinary flour 80 per cent. of that part of the grain that nourishes and builds up nerve, bone, and muscle is bolted out, and what principally remains produces heat and fat, but not strength and force. Weak bones, flabby muscles, and defective teeth and eyesight may often be caused by want of these elements bolted out of white flour.

Fruen's Whole Wheat Flour contains all this valuable part of the grain without any of the indigestible woody fibre.

Makes a delicious, sweet, light brown bread.

A postal card will bring it.

A. R. HILL, 21 S. Front St., Phila.

Carpetings, Linoleum,

Window Shades, etc.

Benjamin Green,

33 N. Second St., Philad'a.

S. F. Balderston's Son,
WALL PAPERS.

All Grades. Estimates Given.
Window Shades Made to Order.

902 Spring Garden St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WALL PAPER of Attractive Styles

Popular Prices
Samples Free to any Address

A. L. Diamant & Co.,
1624 Chestnut St. Philadelphia, Pa.

CLEMENT A. WOODNUTT,

Undertaker

and Embalmer,

1728 GIRARD AVENUE, PHILADELPHIA.

Telephone 2-29-38-D.

Brick's Mince Meat.

A Christmas Luxury.

Makes a fitting climax to a good dinner.

Flavor Delicious.

Absolutely Pure and Wholesome.

No Seeds. No Dirt.

CLEAN.

EDGAR BRICK.

CROSSWICKS, N. J.

FRIENDS' INTELLIGENCER

Established 1844.
The Journal, 1873. }

PHILADELPHIA, TWELFTH MONTH 9, 1899.

{ Volume LVI.
Number 49.

A GOOD WORD EACH WEEK.

XLIX.

THE chief theological problem of the inner life among thoughtful men to-day is how to possess a thought of God not unworthy of his myriad universe . . . and yet a thought not too vague and vast to appeal to heart and conscience..

JOHN WM. GRAHAM.

From his recent booklet, "The Lord's Supper,"

IN EARNEST.

I THINK the immortal servants of mankind
Who from their home watch by how slow degrees
The World-Soul greatens with centuries,
Mourn most Man's barren levity of mind—
The ear to no grave harmonies inclined,
The witless thirst for false wit's worthless lees,
The laugh mistimed in tragic presences,
The eye to all majestic meanings blind.

O prophets, martyrs, saviours! ye were great,
All truth being great to you: ye deemed Man more

Than a dull jest, God's ennui to amuse:
The world for you held purport: Life you wore
Proudly, as Kings their solemn robes of state;
And humbly as the mightiest monarchs use.

—William Watson, in The Spectator.

THE GROWTH OF THE CHURCH.

Written for and read to Fairfax Quarterly Meeting of Friends, at its session at Woodlawn, Va., Eleventh month 20, 1899.

THE reports sent in to our late Yearly Meeting from its several constituent quarterly meetings showed a small net loss of membership. What is the cause of this discouraging showing? Nearly all other branches of the Christian Church are fast gaining in numbers. Why is ours losing? Is there no longer need of our branch of the Church? Are our principles wrong? Will not their further dissemination benefit the world? We are not willing to admit that the days of usefulness of Quakerism are ended, nor that our principles are wrong, nor that their further dissemination will not benefit the world. Then why are we not increasing in numbers? There must be some cause, or causes, for not so doing, and we as professed Christians should try to find what the trouble is and see if we are not ourselves responsible. To my mind there are, and have for years been, several causes that have tended to thus deplete our ranks. Chief among which, in my opinion, is our aversion to what is generally called proselyting. Why this feeling ever entered into an organization as enlightened as ours, I cannot see; for is it not contrary to the acts and teachings of the blessed Founder of the Christian Church? Is it not contrary to the practice of every other branch of that Church? And is it not contrary to the practice of every organization designed to advance the intellectual or temporal interests of man? Jesus not only called the people collectively to follow him, but he took time in his busy life to so often press the invitation by making it a personal matter. "Come thou and follow me." We claim to be his disciples, and yet many of us think that we are not authorized to ask our fellow-men to come into his church. We claim that our principles are good, that our church organization does us good, and yet we have been so selfish or so negligent as to keep these blessings all to ourselves, instead of going out into the highways and byways and pressingly inviting at least, if not constraining, others to come in and enjoy them with us. Yes, even worse than this,—we, in many cases, have not even invited those in who are, as it were, lingering at our very doors, and who perhaps have a dear friend, it may be a husband or wife, within the fold, and who would so gladly enter if assured of a welcome. But, oh no;—some of us think we must not ask anyone to come in—that that is God's work and, if he wants them in, he will compel them to ask to be let in. Ah, friends, this has been the great difficulty with us—we have depended on God to do it all. What are we for? Has not God given us something to do? I well know that he is able to do it all; but I bless his holy name that he has given us something to do; that he makes us his stewards, his ambassadors; that he works now, and always has worked very largely through human instruments. He could have penned his Holy Scriptures himself, but he gave to men the blessed privilege of preparing them for the uplifting of their fellow-men. He could have worked only directly on the soul of each of his creatures, but in his infinite wisdom and goodness he sent his beloved son to reveal himself to us. We as dutiful children should be so thankful that he has given us something that we can do to his honor and glory, and try to put ourselves in accord with his plans.

To-day there would be many more on the rolls of this Quarterly Meeting, if even the present generation had realized that they are stewards in God's hands to bring laborers into his vineyard. There is many a family outside our Religious Society that would now be with us had our members fully impressed them of a hearty welcome awaiting them within.

Many a husband or wife has grown old in our ranks with his or her life's partner and the children God has given them, not with us simply because we have not assured them that they are wanted. Just think of this, Friends. Think of how much happier and more useful such persons would have been throughout their lives if all had been within the church, and all blessed with the protecting, uplifting influences of the same church home. Let each and every one of us ask ourselves have we been faithful stewards in this matter? Let us resolve that hereafter no brother or sister shall be deprived of the blessing of having his or her companion and children within the fold by any fault of ours. Let us go at once to see such families, even if we never have done so before, and try with God's help to convince them that we are interested in their welfare and that it will do them good, their companions and families good, and do us also good to have them enroll their names with us, and thus publicly show that they are on the Lord's side. If they are old in years it is none the less important that they have their names so enrolled, for although we are admonished to "remember our Creator in the days of our youth," we are also taught that it is much better to enter the vineyard at the "eleventh hour," than not to enter it at all.

Whilst I regard our aversion to proselyting as the chief cause of our not growing, it is not the only cause. But I will not tax your time to call attention to another. If we earnestly and prayerfully desire to come to the help of the Lord, and of his church, we will be made to see clearly our short-comings in all ways and how to amend them. Let us each remember in our every act that "thou God seest us," and in every case where a doubt arises, ask "what would Jesus do?" and do as his precepts and examples assure us he would do, and we will no longer be depressed by hearing of abandoned meetings or of depleted ranks.

"God's will is done on earth
By the help of his children true;
Thou knowest not the worth
Of the service thou may'st do,
When'er we do the best we can
We help to perfect God's great plan."

CHARLES E. CLEVINGER.

Stephenson, Va., Eleventh month 20, 1899.

FRIENDS' LESSONS IN OLD TESTAMENT

NO. 51.—TWELFTH MONTH 17.

THE END OF JUDAH.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I will put my law in their inward parts, and in their hearts will I write it; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.—Jeremiah, xxxi., 33.

Scripture Reading, II. Kings, xxiv., 1-20; xxv., 1-12.

UNTIL the middle of the reign of Manasseh, Judah remained true to her Assyrian overload. The withdrawal of Sennacherib did not involve the freedom of the western countries, since it was due to no weakness of Assyrian arms. Indeed, Judah's chief cities had been ravaged and thousands of her people had been deported into captivity. Many years of quiet were necessary before the normal life of the people could be fully resumed. Meantime Esar-haddon had mounted the throne of Nineveh and was pushing his victorious arms far into Egypt, which was at last fully subjected to him. During his reign the power of Assyria reached its height. Not only Egypt, but the tribes of Arabia, as well as the warlike nations of the north and the cities of the Mediterranean coast, acknowledged his sway. But the gigantic power was not to last. The general discontent of a score of subject nations was already a menace to the stability of Assyria. The son of Esar-haddon, the Sardinapolis of the Greeks, Assurbanipal, was the heir to a dissolving empire. About 640 B. C. Egypt won her independence under Psammeti I. Other revolts, especially those of Babylonia, Elam, and Chaldea, were put down with a strong hand, but they left a heritage of hate behind them. Other enemies also appeared on the northern border, in the hordes of Kimmerians and Scythians from the steppes of Asia and Europe.

In the midst of all this commotion Judah did not remain quiescent. We have no details, but it would seem that Manasseh was guilty, at least, of intrigue against his eastern masters, for we find him (II. Chron., xxxiii., 11) bound and carried a prisoner to Nineveh. He was released, however, and restored to his kingdom; and it would seem that he was moved to some reforms by his escape (II. Chron., xxxiii., 15, 16). The Assyrian sovereignty now continued uninterrupted to the reign of Josiah, the reformer, though some think it was no more than nominal in the latter part of this period. Meantime Babylon was again preparing for revolt. Under the successor of Assurbanipal, a Chaldean, Nabopolassar was appointed viceroy of Babylon. He soon formed an alliance with the king of the Medes, which was destined to overthrow the monarchy of the Tigris. Just before this culmination, however, the Egyptian king, Necho II., seized the time of a change of ruler in Nineveh to march against the States of Syria (B. C. 608). Whether in his loyalty to his Assyrian master or in resentment against the invasion of his territory, king Josiah threw his small force across the path of the Egyptian in the great battle-plain of Megiddo. His force was overwhelmed and the Jewish king was slain. The Egyptian army moved on, only to be finally defeated at Carchemish (605 B.C.) by the forces of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. Nineveh had fallen, and this new master reigned in the stead of the Assyrian king. The great city was reduced to a heap of ruins in the midst of which her great halls, libraries, and works of art have been preserved even unto this day. Once more Babylon ruled the valley of the great rivers, as well as the possessions of the fallen empire to the westward.

The fall of Nineveh made a great impression on the world of that day. After a period of quiet, following Isaiah and Micah, the voice of the prophets was heard again in Judah, in the reign of Josiah. Zephaniah, like the men of the earlier group of prophets, speaks of God's judgments against Judah for her sins of idolatry, luxury, and violence (Zeph., ch. i.). These judgments he illustrates by the fate of the nations round about, but especially by that of Nineveh (Zeph., chs. ii., iii.). The prophecy of Nahum is based wholly on the destruction of Nineveh, though, like those of the prophets generally, his words are especially intended to influence his own nation. The greatest of the prophets brought to the front by these times of stress was Jeremiah.

Unlike most of the prophets, Jeremiah was of the priestly class. His call to prophecy came just before the discovery of the book of the law (621 B.C.), which was the starting-point of the reforms of Josiah. There is no evidence, however, that either he or his contemporary prophets, Zephaniah and Nahum, took any very active part in these reforms. Indeed, the prophets had probably come to see that there was no great hope in formal observance of law. Though a man's every act is regulated by law, if his heart is not filled with love for his fellows, his righteousness will be barren of great results in character. Only government from within leads to the highest development. And this was the special message of Jeremiah: "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts . . . and they shall teach no more every man his neighbor . . . for they shall all know me from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord." Feeling this, it is not surprising if Jeremiah stood aloof from the promulgation of a formal law which so far regulated the lives of men that but little was left to be determined by the law within. Yet he himself shows the effect of the new law, quoting from it on almost every page; striving, no doubt, to write its high teaching on the hearts of the people, so that it should be no outer law, but should be obeyed in spirit and in truth.

Jeremiah's personal character seems to have been gloomy and discouraged. We do not find the keynote of hope which is so prominent in Isaiah and others of the prophets. Yet he was faithful to his high calling even in times of despair—forcing himself, even in face of persecution, to deliver his unwelcome message of the necessity for righteousness, of the uselessness of a merely superficial reverence.

The times were indeed times of despair. The death of Josiah, who had given himself up to the renewal of Jehovah-worship in its purity—who seemed to the reformers the ideal king—was a sad blow to the faith of Judah. Could not the Lord protect his own? Josiah's death was practically the end of the Jewish nation. For a short time the nation was subject to Egypt. After the defeat of Necho II. at Carchemish, Babylon became her master, Jehoiakim, brother of Josiah, being placed on the throne. But repeated revolts and intrigues with Egypt brought speedy punishment. In 602 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem and carried the king into captivity, together with thousands of his fellow-countrymen. Under Zedekiah, who succeeded to the throne of Judah, another intrigue resulted in another siege and in the final destruction of Jerusalem (586 B.C.). In these troubled times Jeremiah, following the uniform policy of the prophets, urged the policy of quiet submission to the suzerain, and worked untiringly against alliance with Egypt. He was persecuted and imprisoned, but never faltered. As a reward, the Babylonian conqueror gave him his choice of residence after the surrender. He elected to remain in Judah, but afterward went to Egypt, where he died. As in the preceding conquest, the chief inhabitants of Judah were carried into captivity in Babylon, where the work of the prophets was carried on by new messengers of the Lord of Hosts.

THE "MOLOKAINS" IN THE TRANS-Caucasus.

Seeking the Molokains, a sect in Russia, somewhat like the Doukhobors, Thomas Van Ness, a Unitarian minister of Boston, had an interview with one of their elders, at night, very privately, in a little room in a village. He thus describes it in the Christian Register. We have condensed his article materially.

It was a close, hot night. Not a breath of air seemed stirring without, and the low room into which I was ushered appeared to me like a dry furnace. The heavy wooden shutters had been thrown open by Mr. H. (for hereafter I will call him so) on entering the room. At the same time he had taken the precaution to pull the curtains, so that no one without on the street could see the occupants of the room. His extreme care and the quietness with which he did everything—for I followed all his motions—did not add any to my assurance.

There was a gentle knock on the front door. Mr. H. arose quickly, and passed out of the room. I could hear some low conversation; and then he re-entered, followed by a large, heavy-set man, dressed in an ordinary suit of clothes and wearing high boots. His hair was long, though not disagreeably so, and parted in the middle. His beard and mustache were iron-gray, and underneath his abundant eyebrows there twinkled the kindest of blue eyes. The whole face was unmistakably Russian and of the peasant type, though far more intellectual than is usually seen among the peasantry of Middle and Northern Russia. Mr. H. simply said, "This is the Molokain elder," and then addressed a few words to the stranger, who shook hands with me heartily and commenced to inspect me from head to foot, as I did him. Somehow I had thought of this elder as a slight man with perhaps rather a fanatical, or at least a resolute, kind of face; and instead here was what looked to be a pleasant-faced, well-fed farmer.

At length I said to Mr. H.: "I wish you would ask him one or other of those ten questions. We'll then get down to something of value."

"All right," he returned; and with that he commenced a Russian conversation, I listening all the time to see whether I could catch its drift. Turning once again to me, Mr. H. said: "He tells me there are, all told, some 30,000 Molokains in this Trans-Caucasus region. How many more there are in Russia proper, he does not know. Further, he wishes you to know that, inspired by the success which attended the Doukhobor migration to Canada, there are now some 7,000 Molokains who would like to go to America. The Russian authorities are averse to this exodus. If there is to be any movement of population, they wish to influence it toward Siberia and the new lands across the Caspian, and not towards the United States. For that reason they are suspicious of all Englishmen or Americans who come among us. If it were known, he is saying, that I, a Molokain, am here with a Protestant minister who has no official right to be in our country, the authorities might send me into exile. However, I am so old now that I do not fear; and I am glad to give you hearty greetings for myself and my co-religionists."

"Is this true?" I asked in English of Mr. H.

"Possibly," he replied. "We are living under military rule here, and there is no telling what might be done."

The Molokain elder beginning again to speak, Mr. H. listened to him, and then interpreted as follows: "In the Russian villages no more than two Molokain families to every 500 inhabitants are allowed. The consequence is that, though the parents will not go over to the orthodox (Greek) faith, yet a number of their children do. We are not growing in strength, he says, for that reason. We are not persecuted, but are subjected to many petty annoyances. In the Caucasus country there are now 5,000 Molokains and Baptists, who were banished in Alexander III.'s time. These people are very, very poor. Most of them are in the district of Kars. We hold it a sin to beg. Help is given only in extreme cases. Even then great difficulty is experienced in getting a Molokain to accept charity."

"Where do you get your money?" I asked through Mr. H.

"We get it by voluntary contributions, though in the poorer places the sum collected is distributed to the needy. The calls upon our communal safes have been so large and so continuous, owing to bad crops, famine, and the help we have rendered to the banished ones, and there is now no commune having over £12 in its safe."

"The Molokains are known from their neighbors because they still continue to wear their hair long. They do not shave, nor smoke, nor drink spirituous liquors. Even at weddings they are not allowed to drink. They place the emphasis on character,—life. Recently a number of the Molokains have been going over to the Stundists because they believe it necessary to be baptized."

"Put the sixth question to him" I said, when Mr. H. had finished with his interpretation. "I am particularly anxious to know if the Molokains are still believers in the spiritual essence of Deity."

The elder became quite animated when this question of the religious basis was asked, and I was more than ever sorry that my slight knowledge of the Russian language made it impossible to know exactly what he was saying.

"Yes," interjected Mr. H., nodding his head at the same time affirmatively, "he says the Molokains do not believe in images, shrines, icons, or any representation whatsoever of Deity. They hold that Jesus possessed the spirit of God, but we may all partake of that spirit." The elder was talking all the time in Russian while the interpreter was stating this to me in English, and it was no easy matter for Mr. H. to listen and explain at one and the same time. "I understand, I understand," he kept saying, for that particular Russian word I knew. Then, putting up his hand for silence, he again turned to me, and said: "They do not worship Jesus, nor Mary, nor any of the saints. Worship should be paid to God alone." "What is the form of their service?" I asked. "Interpretations from the Bible, Psalms, chants, sermons, texts, prayers from the heart," was the answer.

"Have you regular ministers or preachers?"

"No, the Doukhobors have. Their leaders preach. We read chiefly from the New Testament. There are the Sabbatarians among us. When the spirit moves, they get up and speak or pray. However, we do not suffer because of the absence of regular preachers; for we have men among us who are able to interpret passages from the New Testament understandingly and intellectually. You misunderstand, when I say we do not pray. We do not have formal prayers. Yes, we sing the Psalms. Our service is very simple. At its conclusion the men kiss one another, then the women kiss one another; though this practice is objected to by some of us."

To my next question, "Have you any written literature?" the elder sadly replied: "No, nothing. We are not allowed to print, so that all we know of our past is from tradition and hearsay. Some of us came from along the shores of the Volga. Our chief colony was the Molochnaia, on the Molokai River, north-west from the Sea of Azov. Yes. Just back of the Crimea land. I told you," he continued, "that some of us believe in baptism, though I do not. It is merely an outer sign. The church (orthodox Greek) christens in childhood; but what can a child know of this rite and its value? Baptism, I hold, is the renewing of man by the teachings of Jesus. The word 'water' is used in a symbolic sense in the New Testament, just as is the word 'fire.'"

"In what way can we in America best help you?" I asked.

He sat silent, and pondered. By and by he answered, "Through helping us—those of us who wish—to emigrate, but particularly through literature, literature. Give us books, books, books."

"What particularly do you want?" I inquired.

"First of all, the Bible; i. e., the Protestant version of the Scriptures, which is not allowed us by the authorities."

"Is this so?" I said in English to Mr. H.

"I think it is," he answered. "The ecclesiastical authorities do not allow these people to have in their possession other than the regular authorized (orthodox Greek) version of the Bible."

"What else do you want?" I inquired.

"Some liberal Biblical exegeses, the history of the ancient Christian Church in the time of the apostles, some Unitarian statement of faith, the orthodox Greek catechism, the Roman Catholic catechism, and some Protestant catechism."

The remainder of our conversation was devoted to ways and means of obtaining this literature and getting it into Russia. It will not be prudent to publish this part of our talk. I had just promised to send the elder a Protestant (Russian) Bible from London, and had written my name and Boston address upon a card which I was passing across the table, when suddenly there came a bang, which made me jump to my feet in nervous terror, while the other two were also alarmed as they turned to look back of them. The unexpected noise proved, however, to be nothing more than the heavy wooden shutter flying back to its place from the force of wind that had now begun to blow, and which threatened a heavy downpour of rain. The hour was now so late it seemed best for us to break up our meeting. The elder promised to write out, in a more logical way, his beliefs, and have them forwarded to me by our prearranged "underground" railway. They could then be translated, and printed in England and America.

I shall not soon forget my parting on that memorable night with the Molokain elder. "Your visit has brought us light and hope," he said: then almost sadly, "but you will soon forget us." "No," I solemnly answered, "I will not forget you; and, as much as lies in my power, I will help you and our common brothers in the faith."

"Take my greetings and my blessing to your Boston. Ah! in your free land, you do not know how happy you ought to be. We are in darkness." I tried through Mr. H. to say some last words of cheer and courage.

He held me by the hand as we spoke, and then lifted his hands to heaven as in blessing. It was a solemn moment. Bending down, he kissed me first on one cheek, and then on the other, and almost instantly, without further word, passed out through the doorway.

During the rest of the night, or rather morning,—for it was past midnight before I left the house of Mr. H.,—I thought of that parting and the kiss of benediction. It seemed as though I had passed down and back along the ages. I could understand now the condition of the early Christians as never before. Something of the courage and resolution of those first days came to my soul through this Molokain. It is, therefore, with sincere thankfulness and gratitude that I pen these words of acknowledgment to him.

For Friends' Intelligencer.

THE LOOM OF LIFE.

WITH earnest thought, I from the past
Draw threads of varied hues;
But memory's shuttle flying fast,
Weaves not the pattern I would choose;
The colors fail in perfect blending;
Brightest ones have quickest ending.

But yet the loom moves swiftly on,
Nor heeds my efforts to control;
'Til the supply of threads is gone,
And discontent has filled my soul;
With tear-dim'd eyes I view the weaving,
Half with doubting, half believing.

Then through the mists I see a thread,
Unlike in texture from the rest;
Woven unbroken through the web,
And strong to bear severest test;
Then spake a voice: "'Tis Love Divine
Which doth thy human life entwine."

The vision of the loom has flown,
But 'mid the years of busy life,
The depth of Love I thus was shown
Remains to bless, thro' storm and strife,
And when for time the weaving's ended,
I'll view the work as God intended.

Delta, Pa.

SETH L. KINSEY.

ONE thing we must never forget, namely: that the infinitely most important work for us is the humane education of the millions who are soon to come on the stage of action.—Geo. T. Angell.

A PATHETIC DOUKHOBOR INCIDENT.

Eliza H. Varney, relating her experiences among the Doukhobors in the Eighth month last, writes as follows in a private letter to a friend in Philadelphia, from Bloomfield, Ontario, under date of Eleventh month 15, 1899.

I WAS most mercifully cared for. I feel I have every cause for thankfulness to my Heavenly Father for his care and protection; for his giving ability to labor in their midst, as he alone can, I humbly trust, not only to their comfort but edification. I must say I love them; and that love of the Truth was largely reciprocated by us all. Our interpreter seemed to be brought into deep and tender feelings at times by what he was interpreting. His name is ———. He is a Russian, but not a Doukhobor, unless he has joined them since.

