mitigation of a sentence have not been defined exhaustively by the Statute or the Rules, and a Trial Chamber has considerable discretion in deciding how these factors are applied in a particular case.[1448]

(i) Aggravating circumstances[1449]

686. Aggravating circumstances must be proved by the Prosecution beyond reasonable doubt[1450] and include the following: (i) the position of the accused, that is, his position of leadership, his level in the command structure, or his role in the broader context of the conflict of the former Yugoslavia;[1451] (ii) the discriminatory intent[1452] or the discriminatory state of mind for crimes for which such a state of mind is not an element or ingredient of the crime;[1453] (iii) the length of time during which the crime continued;[1454] (iv) active and direct criminal participation, if linked to a high-rank position of command,[1455] the accused's role as fellow perpetrator,[1456] and the active participation of a superior in the criminal acts of subordinates;[1457] (v) the informed, willing or enthusiastic participation in crime;[1458] (vi) premeditation and motive;[1459] (vii) the sexual, violent, and humiliating nature of the acts and the vulnerability of the victims;[1460] (viii) the status of the victims, their youthful age and number, and the effect of the crimes on them;[1461] (ix) civilian detainees;[1462] (x) the character of the accused;[1463] and (xi) the circumstances of the offences generally.[1464]

687. Not included as an aggravating circumstance is the decision of an accused to make use of his right to remain silent.[1465] In this way, the consideration of aggravating circumstances differs from that of mitigating circumstances and reflects the different burden of proof for each.[1466] Furthermore, the absence of a mitigating factor can never serve as an aggravating factor.[1467] indirect intent, it is necessary to prove his direct or indirect intent, the latter corresponding to the notion of recklessness in common law and the notion of dolus eventualis in civil law[493].

268. The Prosecution submits that "ordering" implies a superior-subordinate relationship between the person who orders and the one who carries it out. In other words, the person in authority uses that authority to cause another to commit an offence. This may be proved by circumstantial or direct evidence. There is no requirement as to the form of the order, which may be implied or express. Moreover, an order does not need to be issued by the accused directly to the person(s) who perform(s) the actus reus of the crime. Nor is it necessary that the order explicitly required the commission of the crime[494].

269. "Planning" implies that one or several persons plan, design or organise the commission of the actus reus of a crime. This may be proved by circumstantial evidence. It is not required that the planners intervene in the execution of the crime[495].

270. The essence of instigating is that the accused causes another person to commit a crime. Although it must be proved that the instigation was a clear contributing factor to the commission of the crime, it need not be a conditio sine qua non. Instigation can take many different forms; it can be express or implied, and entail both acts and omissions[496].

271. The Prosecution contended that although aiding and abetting both constitute acts of complicity, they are two different concepts. "Aiding" means giving assistance to someone whereas "abetting" assumes facilitating the commission of an offence. The conduct of the person who aids or abets (hereinafter "the aider and abettor"[497]) must have a "direct and substantial" effect on the commission of the crime, although the adjective "direct" adds little to the definition. The aiding and abetting need not have been a conditio sine qua non for the actual perpetration of the offence. Nor is a pre-existing plan between the aider and abettor and the perpetrator required. The assistance may be provided before, after (even without prior agreement) or during the commission of the crime. Proof is not required that the aider and abettor actually participated in or that he was present during the physical perpetration of the crime. Both acts and omissions may constitute a form of aiding and abetting, at least in circumstances where the omission is in breach of a duty to act. The aiding and abetting need

DECISION ON THE STANDING OBJECTION OF THE DEFENCE TO THE ADMISSION OF HEARSAY WITH NO INQUIRY AS TO ITS RELIABILITY

Judge Stephen, in particular, affirmed:

> "The fact that evidence is hearsay does not, of course, affect its relevance nor will it necessarily deprive it of probative value". (Separate Opinion of Judge Stephen on the Defence Motion on Hearsay, p.2*).*

10. This Trial Chamber agrees with those conclusions and emphasises that the two criteria for admissibility - relevance and probative value - pursuant to Sub-rule 89(C) of the Rules, apply whether the testimony is direct or hearsay. In fact, direct testimony may also not be relevant or have the required probative value and thus be declared inadmissible. The direct or hearsay nature of the testimony is but one of the many factors which the Trial Chamber will consider when evaluating the relevance and probative value of such testimony. The Trial Chamber therefore considers that the admissibility of hearsay evidence may not be subject to any prohibition in principle since the proceedings are conducted before professional Judges who possess the necessary ability to begin by hearing hearsay evidence and then to evaluate it so that they may make a ruling as to its relevance and probative value. The Trial Chamber notes, finally, that the principle of the inadmissibility of hearsay evidence, as enshrined in the common law countries, has, in those very countries today, become "riddled with judicial and even legal exceptions" (Jean Pradel, Droit pénal comparé, Précis Dalloz, 1995, p. 406).

B. The question of the limits to the admissibility of hearsay evidence

11. As regards the limits to the admissibility of hearsay evidence, the Defence is seeking both that a general limit be placed on recourse to hearsay evidence and that the evidence be identified so that the Judges may evaluate its reliability. The principal argument in support of such limits is the absence of any cross-examination of the initial declarant. However, since the principle making hearsay evidence admissible has been accepted, the objection in respect of the absence of cross-examination is not related to admissibility but to the weight given to the evidence.

12. The right to cross-examination guaranteed by Article 21(4)(e) of the Statute applies to the witness testifying before the Trial Chamber and not to the initial declarant whose statement has been transmitted to this Trial Chamber by the witness.

The Trial Chamber does, however, note that the right to cross-examine the witness in court may be used to challenge the importance to be given to the hearsay testimony, for example, by clearly indicating the number of intermediaries who transmitted the testimony and by seeking to learn the identity and other characteristics of the initial declarant as well as the possibilities for that declarant to have learned the relevant elements or even by bringing out the other facts or circumstances which might assist the Trial Chamber in its evaluation of such evidence.

13. In the opinion of the Trial Chamber, the Judges are the ones who will, in due course and in each case, determine the reliability to be accorded to a testimony, according to the circumstances in which it was obtained and to its content. For this purpose, the Judges, if necessary, will not hesitate to ask the witness questions relating to the hearsay evidence. The proceedings of the International Tribunal are not conducted before a jury, but before professional Judges who rule on both fact and law. Thanks to their training and experience, the Judges can give the appropriate weight to testimony declared admissible in light of its reliability. Such an evaluation can logically be made only a posteriori once the Parties have presented all their claims.

C. The need to ensure a fair trial

14. The Trial Chamber would recall that testimony initially admitted because it satisfies the two-fold criteria of relevance and probative value may subsequently be rejected, pursuant to Sub-rule 89(D) of the Rules should the Judges deem that, within the context of the trial, such testimony no longer meets the need to ensure a fair trial. Sub-rule 89(D), in fact, states that

> "A Chamber may exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a faire trial".

In its Decision on hearsay, Trial Chamber II already considered the real guarantee for the Defence in respect of the unconditional admission of evidence. It noted that

> "Moreover, Sub-rule 89(D) provides further protection against prejudice to the Defence, for if evidence has been admitted as relevant and having probative value, it may later be excluded" (para. 18).

15. The same standard of reasonableness and the same deference to factual findings applies when the Prosecution appeals against an acquittal.[47] Thus, when considering an appeal by the Prosecution, the Appeals Chamber will only hold that an error of fact was committed when it determines that no reasonable trier of fact could have made the impugned finding.[48] Considering that it is the Prosecution that bears the burden at trial of proving the guilt of an accused beyond reasonable doubt, the significance of an error of fact occasioning a miscarriage of justice is somewhat different for a Prosecution appeal against acquittal from a defence appeal against conviction.[49] An accused must show that the Trial Chamber's factual errors create a reasonable doubt as to his guilt.[50] The Prosecution must show that, when account is taken of the errors of fact committed by the Trial Chamber, all reasonable doubt of the accused's guilt has been eliminated.[51]

16. A party may not merely repeat on appeal arguments that did not succeed at trial, unless the party can demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's rejection of those arguments constituted an error warranting the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.[52] Arguments which do not have the potential to cause the impugned decision to be reversed or revised need not be considered on the merits and may be immediately dismissed by the Appeals Chamber.[53]

17. The Appeals Chamber's mandate cannot be effectively and efficiently carried out without focused contributions by the parties.[54] In a primarily adversarial system, like that of the Tribunal, the deciding body considers its case on the basis of the arguments advanced by the parties.[55] It thus falls to the parties appearing before the Appeals Chamber to present their case clearly, logically and exhaustively so that the Appeals Chamber may fulfil its mandate in an efficient and expeditious manner.[56] In order for the Appeals Chamber to assess a party's arguments on appeal, the appealing party is expected to provide precise references to relevant transcript pages or paragraphs in the decision or judgement to which the challenges are being made.[57] Further, the Appeals Chamber will not consider a party's submissions when they are obscure, contradictory, vague, or suffer from other formal and obvious insufficiencies.[58] Finally, the Appeals Chamber exercises its inherent discretion in selecting which submissions merit a detailed reasoned opinion in writing, and may dismiss arguments which are evidently unfounded without providing detailed reasoning.[59]

18. When applying these principles, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has identified the types of deficient submissions on appeal which are bound to be summarily dismissed.[60] In particular, the Appeals Chamber will dismiss without detailed analysis (i) arguments that fail to identify the challenged factual findings, that misrepresent the factual findings or the evidence, or that ignore other relevant factual findings; (ii) mere assertions that the Trial Chamber must have failed to consider relevant evidence, without showing that no reasonable trier of fact, based on the evidence could have reached the same conclusion as the Trial Chamber did; (iii) challenges to factual findings on which a conviction does not rely, and arguments that are clearly irrelevant, that lend support to, or that are not inconsistent with the challenged finding; (iv) arguments that challenge a Trial Chamber's reliance or failure to rely on one piece of evidence, without explaining why the conviction should not stand on the basis of the remaining evidence; (v) arguments contrary to common sense; (vi) challenges to factual findings where the relevance of the factual finding is unclear and has not been explained by the appealing party; (vii) mere repetition of arguments that were unsuccessful at trial without any demonstration that their rejection by the Trial Chamber constituted an error warranting the intervention of the Appeal Chamber; (viii) allegations based on material not on record; (ix) mere assertions unsupported by any evidence, undeveloped assertions, failure to articulate error; and (x) mere assertions that the Trial Chamber failed to give sufficient weight to evidence or failed to interpret evidence in a particular manner.[61]

Boris Trajkovski, it failed to make a reasonable and favourable inference from this evidence, thereby violating the principle of in dubio pro reo.[451]

166. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber's finding that Tarčulovski was in charge of the operation on the ground is consistent with the finding that he was not the person who initiated it.[452] The Prosecution further argues that the fact that an accused has acted pursuant to an order of a Government or a superior does not relieve him of criminal responsibility.[453]

167. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that Tarčulovski had been ordered to lead the police in the operation in Ljuboten without making a positive finding as to who gave the order.[454] This is, however, irrelevant: the fact that Tarčulovski was ordered to lead the operation does not exonerate him from criminal responsibility if in the execution of the order he in turn instructed other persons to commit a crime.[455] Moreover, the fact that someone else ordered Tarčulovski to lead the operation does not mean that he did not order the operation to be carried out. Tarčulovski fails to show that the Trial Chamber's findings in this respect were unreasonable,[456] and that the in dubio pro reo principle was violated. His arguments in this regard are therefore dismissed.

E. Alleged improper expansion of actus reus and mens rea of planning, ordering and instigating

168. Tarčulovski contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that an accused is criminally responsible for planning, instigating or ordering an operation with a legitimate goal, if he did so with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that crimes would be committed in the execution of the operation.[457]

1. Alleged expansion of the actus reus

169. First, Tarčulovski argues that the Trial Chamber misapplied the Appeals Chamber's jurisprudence and erroneously expanded the actus reus of planning, instigating and ordering by criminally liable although it could not even determine whether the President was directly involved (citing Trial Judgement, para. 563); AT. 35 and 51.

finding that it can encompass the planning, instigating or ordering of conduct that does not constitute a crime.[458]

170. The Prosecution responds that this argument ignores and misrepresents the Trial Chamber's findings that the predominant object of the operation was to commit the crimes and that "ordering, planning or instigating an operation primarily designed to commit crimes is the same as ordering planning or instigating the crimes themselves."[459] The Prosecution further contends that "the plan, instigation or order need not be explicitly to commit crimes" and that an accused can be held responsible when planning, instigating or ordering an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that it will result in a crime.[460]

171. The Trial Chamber reasonably found that the predominant purpose of the operation in Ljuboten was to indiscriminately attack Albanian villagers and their property and that the evidence established that Tarčulovski planned, instigated and ordered this operation.[461] In other words, the Trial Chamber found that Tarčulovski planned, instigated and ordered conduct which constituted crimes.[462] In so doing, the Trial Chamber did not expand the actus reus of planning, instigating and ordering. Tarčulovski's arguments misinterpret the Trial Chamber's findings and are thus dismissed.[463]

172. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber notes that the legitimate character of an operation does not exclude an accused's criminal responsibility for planning, instigating and ordering crimes committed in the course of this operation. In other words, even if the goal of an operation is to root Tarčulovski further argues that requiring that an accused solely planned, instigated or ordered an act or omission, including a legitimate operation, with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that it will result in a crime, effectively turns into criminals "commanding officers of any country whose troops have gone to war, especially against terrorists who hide among civilians". According to Tarčulovski, "in wartime, there is a substantial likelihood – if not a near certainty – that some soldiers will behave improperly and engage in behaviour that IHL law proscribes" (Tarčulovski Reply Brief, para. 46). See also AT. 95-96.

[463] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Tarčulovski's arguments that even if the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber had expanded the actus reus of ordering, planning or instigating, their holdings must not be applied "retroactively" to the charged crimes in August 2001 (Tarčulovski Appeal Brief, paras 134-135; Prosecution Response Brief, paras 100-101).

out "terrorists", this must not be achieved by an act that constitutes a crime.[464] In addition, the Appeals Chamber recalls "that motive is generally not an element of criminal liability".[465]

2. Alleged expansion of the mens rea

173. Tarčulovski also submits that the Trial Chamber erroneously expanded the mens rea of planning, instigating and ordering when it held that an accused must only know of the possibility that a crime will be committed, although the correct standard is that an accused must be aware of a "substantial likelihood" that a crime will occur.[466] Tarčulovski further asserts that the Trial Chamber failed to address whether the risk of crimes being committed under the "perceived threat" by the NLA was unjustifiable or unreasonable.[467]

174. The Appeals Chamber recalls the Trial Chamber's finding that the crimes "were foreseen [...] to be a substantial likelihood of the execution of the operation."[468] This finding is consistent with the established mens rea standard of planning, instigating and ordering.[469] The jurisprudence does not require the risk of crimes to be committed to be "reasonable" or "justified"; therefore the Trial Chamber did not err when it did not address this issue.[470] Tarčulovski's arguments in this regard are therefore dismissed.

As regards Tarčulovski's argument that too broad an interpretation of the legal requirements for planning, instigating and ordering would effectively turn into criminals commanding officers of any country whose troops have gone to war, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that he has shown that the Trial Chamber erred in the definition of these modes of liability.

It is not clear from Tarčulovski's submissions whether he considers this notion of mens rea different from, or akin to, "recklessness" in common law.

The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably applied the Tribunal's jurisprudence that in order to hold a person criminally responsible for planning, instigating and ordering a crime, that person must have acted at least with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that the crime will occur (Prosecution Response Brief, paras 98-99 (citing Trial Judgement, para. 576)).

general practice of the FYROM courts in its determination of Tarčulovski's sentence.[528] The Prosecution asserts that the Trial Chamber did not make a determination of what his sentence would be under FYROM law; it merely noted that Article 404 of the 1996 FYROM Criminal Code indicated that violations of international law would warrant a minimum sentence of ten years' imprisonment.[529] The Prosecution also submits that the fact that the Trial Chamber did not expressly refer to Article 40 of the 1996 FYROM Criminal Code does not constitute an error.[530]

2. Discussion

210. In its determination of the appropriate sentence for Tarčulovski, the Trial Chamber considered the general practice regarding prison sentences in the courts of the FYROM.[531] The Trial Chamber also summarised the legal provisions that are relevant to sentencing in the FYROM, as well as any relevant definitions of offences included in the relevant laws.[532] The Trial Chamber noted that relevant factors in sentencing were set out in Articles 39(1) and 39(2) of the 1996 FYROM Criminal Code, which was in force at the time of the commission of the crimes alleged in the Indictment.[533] The Trial Chamber further noted that Article 404 of the 1996 FYROM Criminal Code, which codified laws related to violations of the rules of international law, prohibited "ordering or committing 'murder', 'inhumane acts' and 'inflicting grave suffering or injury to the body integrity or the health' and 'illegal and self-willed destruction or usurpation of a larger extent of properties which is not justified by the military needs'", prescribing a sentence of between ten years to life imprisonment.[534] The Trial Chamber also noted that Article 35(1) of the 1996 FYROM Criminal Code limited fixed-term imprisonment to a maximum of fifteen years, which was amended to allow for a sentence up to twenty years in 2004.[535] The Trial Chamber held that the maximum sentence that could be imposed by FYROM courts for "crimes committed in 2001 of the nature of those charged [...] in the Indictment"[536] was fifteen years to life imprisonment.[537]

211. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber made no explicit findings as to the minimum sentence required by the 1996 FYROM Criminal Code.[538] Rather, it merely referred to Article 404 of the 1996 FYROM Criminal Code which prescribes a sentence of at least ten years for

397. The perpetrators carrying out the actus reus of the crimes set out in the indictment do not have to be members of the JCE. What matters in such cases is whether the crime in question forms part of the common purpose[1577] and whether at least one member of the JCE used the perpetrator acting in accordance with the common plan.[1578] In this respect, when a member of the JCE uses a person outside the JCE to carry out the actus reus of a crime, the fact that this person knows of the existence of the JCE, i.e. of the common purpose, may be a factor taken into consideration when determining whether the crime forms part of the common criminal purpose.[1579] When the direct perpetrator commits a crime beyond the common purpose of the JCE, but which is its natural and foreseeable consequence[1580] the accused may be found responsible if he participated in the common criminal purpose with the requisite intent and if, in the circumstances of the case, (i) it was foreseeable that such a crime might be perpetrated by one or more of the persons used by him (or by any other member of the JCE) in order to carry out the actus reus of the crimes forming part of the common purpose; and (ii) the accused willingly took that risk – that is the accused, with the awareness that such a crime was a possible consequence of the implementation of that enterprise, decided to participate in that enterprise.[1581]

(b) Planning

398. The actus reus of "planning" requires that one or more persons plan or design, at both the preparatory and execution phases, the criminal conduct constituting one or more crimes, provided for in the Statute, which are later perpetrated.[1582] Such planning need only be a feature which contributes substantially to the criminal conduct.[1583] As regards the mens rea, the accused must have acted with an intent that the crime be committed, or with an awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that plan.[1584]

(c) Instigating

399. The term "instigating" has been defined to mean "prompting another to commit an offence."[1585] Both acts and omissions may constitute instigating, which covers express and implied conduct.[1586] There must be proof of a nexus between the instigation and the perpetration of the crime, which is satisfied where the particular conduct substantially contributes to the commission of the crime. It need not be proven that the crime would not have occurred without the instigation.[1587] As regards the mens rea, it must be shown that the accused intended to provoke or induce the commission of the crime, or was aware of the substantial likelihood that a crime would be committed as a result of that instigation.[1588]

(d) Ordering

400. The actus reus of "ordering" requires that a person in a position of authority instructs another person to commit an offence.[1589] Closely related to "instigating", this form of liability additionally requires that the accused possess the authority, either de jure or de facto, to order the commission of an offence.[1590] That authority may reasonably be implied from the circumstances.[1591] Further, there is no requirement that the order be given in writing, or in any particular form, and the existence of the order may be proven through circumstantial evidence.[1592] With regard to the mens rea, the accused must have intended to bring about the commission of the crime, or have been aware of the substantial likelihood that a crime would be committed as a consequence of the execution or implementation of the order.[1593]

(e) Aiding and abetting

401. "Aiding and abetting" is a form of accomplice liability[1594] which has been defined as the act of rendering practical assistance, encouragement or moral support, which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of a certain crime.[1595]

402. With respect to the actus reus, a cause-effect relationship between the conduct of the aider or abettor and the commission of the crime, or proof that such conduct was a condition precedent to the commission of the crime need not be established.[1596] However, it needs to be shown that the assistance provided by the accused had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime,[1597] which requires a fact-based inquiry.[1598] Such assistance may occur before, during or after the principal crime has been perpetrated.[1599] Further, an omission may, in the particular circumstances of a case, constitute the actus reus of aiding and abetting.[1600] While it has been found that the mere presence at the scene of a crime will not usually constitute aiding and abetting, the presence of a superior, for example, may operate as an encouragement to the actual perpetrator and may bestow legitimacy on the crime.[1601] Such encouragement may consist of tacit approval of a person in a position of authority and physically present at the crime scene, even where he had no duty to act.[1602]

403. The mens rea required is knowledge that, by his or her conduct, the aider and abettor is assisting or facilitating the commission of the offence,[1603] a knowledge which need not have been explicitly expressed and may be inferred from all the relevant circumstances.[1604] The aider and abettor need not share the mens rea of the principal; he must, however, be aware of the essential elements of the crime ultimately committed by the principal, including of his state of mind.[1605] While it has been held that it need not be shown that the aider and abettor was aware of the specific crime that was intended or committed, provided that he was aware that one of a number of crimes would probably be committed, and one of those crimes is in fact committed,[1606] the Appeals Chamber recently confirmed that this ruling does not extend the definition of mens rea of aiding and abetting.[1607]

2. Responsibility under Article 7(3) of the Statute

404. Article 7(3) of the Statute provides:

> The fact that any of the acts referred to in Article 2 to 5 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superior of criminal responsibility if he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to support.[726] An accused may be convicted for having aided and abetted a crime which requires specific intent even where the principal offender has not been tried or identified.[727]

272. The mens rea of aiding and abetting consists of knowledge – in the sense of awareness – that the acts performed by the aider and abettor assist in the commission of a crime by the principal offender.[728] It is not necessary that the aider and abettor has knowledge of the precise crime that was intended or that was actually committed, as long as he was aware that one of a number of crimes would probably be committed, including the one actually perpetrated.[729]

273. In addition, the aider and abettor must be aware of the essential elements of the crime committed by the principal offender, including the principal offender's state of mind. However, the aider and abettor need not share the intent of the principal offender.[730]

274. The fact that the aider and abettor does not share the intent of the principal offender generally lessens his criminal culpability vis-à-vis that of an accused acting pursuant to a JCE who does share the intent of the principal offender.[731]

B. Superior Criminal Responsibility under Article 7(3) of the Statute[732]

1. Responsibility pursuant to Article 7(3) in general

275. The Appeals Chamber has held that "[t]he principle that military and other superiors may be held criminally responsible for the acts of their subordinates is well-established in conventional and customary law."[733] This applies both in the context of international as well as internal armed [732] The Trial Chamber uses the term 'superior criminal responsibility' instead of 'command responsibility' so as to make clear that the doctrine applies to civilian as well as to military superiors.

[733] Čelebići Appeal Judgement, para. 195. In the present case, it is not alleged that the Accused was a military superior, but a civilian superior. Consequently, the Trial Chamber views the statement of law in the Čelebići Appeal Judgement, para. 195, in the context of Article 86(2) of Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, rather than Article 87(3), which refers to military superiors. In addition, the Trial Chamber notes that it is Article 86(2) that deals with the requirement of the failure to act.

war crimes."[642] In the Trial of Josef Altstötter and Others (The Justice Trial), the tribunal found numerous defendants guilty of war crimes as well as crimes against humanity based on exactly the same acts,[643] thus appearing to uphold the possibility of cumulative convictions, at least when war crimes and crimes against humanity are involved.

412. Having considered the different approaches expressed on this issue both within this Tribunal and other jurisdictions, this Appeals Chamber holds that reasons of fairness to the accused and the consideration that only distinct crimes may justify multiple convictions, lead to the conclusion that multiple criminal convictions entered under different statutory provisions but based on the same conduct are permissible only if each statutory provision involved has a materially distinct element not contained in the other. An element is materially distinct from another if it requires proof of a fact not required by the other.

413. Where this test is not met, the Chamber must decide in relation to which offence it will enter a conviction. This should be done on the basis of the principle that the conviction under the more specific provision should be upheld. Thus, if a set of facts is regulated by two provisions, one of which contains an additional materially distinct element, then a conviction should be entered only under that provision.

414. In this case, defendants Mucic and Delic have been convicted of numerous crimes under Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute, which crimes arise out of the same acts. The chart below summarises their convictions.

Article 2 (Grave Breaches of Geneva Convention No. IV	Article 3 (Violations of the Laws or Customs of War—Common Article 3)

2. wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health	2. cruel treatment

conclusion that Babic was a completely unreliable witness who could not be believed in all circumstances.[706]

456. In the circumstances of this case, the Appeals Chamber does not accept the "fine distinction" which the Prosecution sought to draw between not being satisfied beyond reasonable doubt as to the reliability of a witness's evidence and a finding that the witness was lying.[707] The nature of the evidence which Babic gave in support of the torture and cruel treatment charges was of such a nature that, if true, it established those charges beyond reasonable doubt. It was not just the absence of supporting evidence which led to the acquittal on those charges. There was a wealth of evidence which demonstrated that Babic was lying in relation to them, including evidence that the injuries which he alleged had resulted from the mistreatment (which included having his leg doused in petrol and set alight) had occurred sometime prior to his detention at the Célebici prison camp.[708]

457. But this debate concerning the evidence of Babic does not need to be resolved in this appeal, as it is apparent from the judgement itself that the Trial Chamber did not rely upon it. As already stated, the Trial Chamber did not include in the circumstantial case upon which it relied in finding beyond reasonable doubt that Delic participated in the second beating any direct evidence that Delic was present in the area when the second beating took place. If the evidence of Babic that Delic was present had been accepted, it was of such a vital nature that it would inevitably have been included in the statement of the circumstances relied on. Its absence from that statement demonstrates that the Trial Chamber did not accept that evidence, and that it did not interpret the evidence of either Witness B or Rajko Dragonic as demonstrating that Delic was present on the occasion of the second beating.

458. A circumstantial case consists of evidence of a number of different circumstances which, taken in combination, point to the guilt of the accused person because they would usually exist in combination only because the accused did what is alleged against him – here that he participated in the second beating of Gotovac. Such a conclusion must be established beyond reasonable doubt. It is not sufficient that it is a reasonable conclusion available from that evidence. It must be the only reasonable conclusion available. If there is another conclusion which is also reasonably open from that evidence, and which is consistent with the innocence of the accused, he must be acquitted.

610. As observed by the Prosecution, the test relied on by Landžo in United States of America v Armstrong, puts a heavy burden on an appellant.[1027] To satisfy this test, Landžo must demonstrate clear evidence of the intent of the Prosecutor to discriminate on improper motives, and that other similarly situated persons were not prosecuted. Other jurisdictions which recognise an ability for judicial review of a prosecutorial discretion also indicate that the threshhold is a very high one.[1028]

611. It is unnecessary to select between such domestic standards, as it is not appropriate for the Appeals Chamber simply to rely on the jurisprudence of any one jurisdiction in determining the applicable legal principles. The provisions of the Statute referred to above and the relevant principles of international law provide adequate guidance in the present case. The breadth of the discretion of the Prosecutor, and the fact of her statutory independence, imply a presumption that the prosecutorial functions under the Statute are exercised regularly. This presumption may be rebutted by an appellant who can bring evidence to establish that the discretion has in fact not been exercised in accordance with the Statute; here, for example, in contravention of the principle of equality before the law in Article 21. This would require evidence from which a clear inference can be drawn that the Prosecutor was motivated in that case by a factor inconsistent with that principle. Because the principle is one of equality of persons before the law, it involves a comparison with the legal treatment of other persons who must be similarly situated for such a comparison to be a meaningful one. This essentially reflects the two-pronged test advocated by Landžo and by the Prosecution of (i) establishing an unlawful or improper (including discriminatory) motive for the prosecution and (ii) establishing that other similarly situated persons were not prosecuted.

612. Landžo argues that he was the only Bosnian Muslim accused without military rank or command responsibility held by the Tribunal, and he contends that he was singled out for prosecution "simply because he was the only person the Prosecutor's office could find to 'represent' the Bosnian Muslims". He was, it is said, prosecuted to give an appearance of "evenhandedness" to the Prosecutor's policy.[1029] Landžo alleges that the Prosecutor's decision to seek the withdrawal of indictments against the accused identified in the Press Release, without seeking the discontinuation of the proceedings against Landžo, was evidence of a discriminatory purpose. Landžo rejects the justification given by the Prosecutor in the Press Release of a revaluation of indictments according to changed strategies "in light of the decision

The Prosecution does not, however, identify any passages which contain any findings that Mucic specifically was responsible for such unspecified acts. The Appeals Chamber cannot find any indication from the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber had found beyond reasonable doubt that Mucic had committed any criminal acts additional to those specifically identified in the Indictment.

763. Mucic submits that the Prosecution's argument is in effect an appeal against acquittal under the mantle of an appeal against sentence because, if the Trial Chamber had not found the relevant matters proved beyond reasonable doubt against Mucic, there was no basis on which it could take those matters into account in sentencing.[1287] The Appeals Chamber agrees that only those matters which are proved beyond reasonable doubt against an accused may be the subject of an accused's sentence or taken into account in aggravation of that sentence. As was made clear during the hearing of oral submissions on appeal,[1288] the issue is primarily one of whether the Prosecution actually sought findings in relation to the other acts referred to in the Indictment. The Trial Chamber could not be expected to make findings in respect of matters which had not been specifically put before it, whether in the Indictment or during the trial. Another issue is whether the accused, in view of the very general wording used in the Indictment, had been sufficiently put on notice during the proceedings that such additional offences were alleged and of the nature of those offences so that he could meet the allegations in his own defence case.[1289]

764. As to the first issue, the Prosecution in its submissions on appeal was not able to direct the Appeals Chamber to any record of the Prosecution having sought, at trial, findings by the Trial Chamber in relation to other offences by Mucic not specifically alleged in the Indictment. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in its final written submission before the Trial Chamber, the Prosecution submitted that > fabrication of evidence to be given at the trial. There have also been allegations that Mr. Mucic participated in the threatening of a witness in the courtroom. Such efforts to influence and/or intimidate witnesses are particularly relevant aggravating conduct, which the Trial Chamber is entitled to take into account in the determination of the appropriate sentence.[1317]

> [...] the specific incidents referred to in the Indictment are not exhaustive but rather illustrative [...]. Thus for the purposes of superior responsibility, the Judges may consider other incidents not specifically described in the indictment but proved at trial.[1290]

[1289] Statute of the Tribunal, Article 21(4)(a) refers to the right of an accused "to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him".
[1290] Closing Statement of the Prosecution, filed 25 August 1998, para 3.71.

It also found:

> The general attitude of Mr. Mucic during the trial proceedings in and outside the courtroom would seem to be a repetition of his casual and perfunctory attitude to his duties in the Celebici prison-camp. He made concerted and sustained efforts where he could to intimidate witnesses and to suborn favourable evidence from them. His demeanour throughout the proceedings suggests that he appears to have regarded this trial as a farce and an expensive joke. Zdravko Mucic has declined to give any oral evidence, notwithstanding the dominant position he played in the facts giving rise to the prosecution of the accused persons.[1318]

780. It has already been stated that the Statute and the Rules do not define exhaustively the factors which may be taken into account by a Trial Chamber in mitigation or aggravation of sentence, and Trial Chambers are therefore endowed with a considerable degree of discretion in deciding on the factors which may be taken into account. Nevertheless, it must be queried whether the Trial Chamber erred in taking these particular factors into account. A Trial Chamber's decision may be disturbed on appeal if an appellant shows that the Trial Chamber either took into account what it ought not to have, or failed to take into account what it ought to have taken into account, in the weighing process involved in this exercise of the discretion.

781. It is alleged that the Trial Chamber erred in taking into account in aggravation of sentence the fact that Mucic failed to give oral testimony. In accordance with the position in many national jurisdictions, an accused before the Tribunal is not obliged to give oral testimony during the trial on his or her own behalf. Rule 85(C) of the Rules provides

> If the accused so desires, the accused may appear as a witness in his or her own defence.[1319]

Article 21(4)(g) of the Statute provides further guidance and provides that an accused shall be entitled to the right "not to be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt".[1320] This, however, does not explicitly identify the consequences of failure to testify at

DECISION OF THE BUREAU ON MOTION TO DISQUALIFY JUDGES PURSUANT TO RULE 15 OR IN THE ALTERNATIVE THAT CERTAIN JUDGES RECUSE THEMSELVES

THE BUREAU of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, comprising President McDonald, Vice-President Shahabuddeen, Judge Cassese, Presiding Judge of Trial Chamber II, Judge Jorda, Presiding Judge of Trial Chamber I and Judge May, Presiding Judge of Trial Chamber III, DECIDES as follows:

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

1. On 30 July 1999, a motion entitled "Motion to Disqualify Judges Pursuant to Rule 15 or in the Alternative that Certain Judges Recuse Themselves" ("the Motion") was filed before the Appeals Chamber by all the accused except Zejnil Delalic in the matter of the Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalic, Zdravko Mucic, Hazim Delic and Esad Landzo (IT-96-21-T, hereinafter referred to as "the Celebici case").

2. In this Motion, the appellants requested, pursuant to Rule 15 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, that all judges of the Tribunal who either participated in the plenary session which found that Judge Odio Benito's nomination as Vice-President of Costa Rica would not be incompatible with service as a judge of the Tribunal or who took part in the plenary session after her election which approved her taking the oath of office as Vice-President of Costa Rica while remaining a judge of the Tribunal be disqualified from sitting on the Appeals Chamber in Celebici on the appeal against conviction or, in the alternative, that these judges recuse themselves. This request was set out by the appellants on the following grounds:

i. That Judge Odio Benito was not qualified to sit as a judge of the Tribunal after her inauguration as Vice-President of Costa Rica on the basis, inter alia, that Article 13(1) of the Statute requires that judges be eligible to serve on their nation's highest court and Article 161 of the Constitution of Costa Rica disqualified her from sitting on her nation's highest court;

ii. That although some doubt existed as to which of the other judges took part in the plenary sessions, all judges who were serving before November 1998 had already taken part in a decision related to the issue and consequently ought to be disqualified;

iii. That taken together, Rules 15(A), 15(C) and 15(D) suggest that a judge who has already expressed an opinion on a case or who has taken part in a portion of a case cannot sit on a subsequent part, on the grounds that his or her fairness and impartiality could otherwise reasonably be questioned;

iv. That the judges in plenary twice considered the issue of whether Judge Odio Benito could be a judge of the Tribunal while she was Vice-President of Costa Rica without giving notice to the appellants or giving them an opportunity to be heard on the matter; and

v. That there is nothing to indicate that the plenary was informed or that it gave due consideration to the issue of the interaction between Article 161 of the Constitution of Costa Rica and Article 13(1) of the Statute of the Tribunal.

3. On 10 August 1999, the Office of the Prosecutor filed a response entitled "Prosecution Response to Motion to Disqualify Judges Pursuant to Rule 15 or in the Alternative that Certain Judges Recuse Themselves" ("Prosecution Response") whereupon the Prosecution submitted that the Motion should be rejected on the following grounds;

i. That the appellants had not made a sufficient showing to satisfy any of the grounds for disqualification of judges as provided for in Rule 15, as none of these exclusionary rules refer to plenary sessions or prevent the judges who sit in plenary sessions from sitting on any Trial Chambers or the Appeals Chamber;

ii. That the appellant's claim that the fact that judges had previously considered an issue of law in a plenary session without notice to the affected appellants and giving them an opportunity to be heard cannot logically constitute grounds for dismissal, as it would mean that any judges who make substantive changes to the Rules of Procedure in plenary sessions could not preside in the cases which decide upon the implementation of these Rules and in any event, the appellants have no standing to be heard on issues considered during plenary sessions, which are intended to provide a forum for the judges to meet to perform particular functions in accordance with Rule 24;

iii. That there is nothing to suggest that the judges comprising the present Appeals Chamber who attended the plenary sessions concerning Judge Odio Benito's nomination and appointment as Vice-President of Costa Rica might not be able to impartially consider this matter as part of appellate proceedings in the light of the submissions of the parties, as the judges in plenary dealt with this matter in accordance with their duties under Rule 24 and not in relation to any particular case;

iv. That even if plenary proceedings are considered to be previous "decisions" on the ability of Judge Odio-Benito to sit in cases, the matter can be re-considered by the Judges, as issues of fact and law are routinely considered by judges who, in their professionalism, are presumed to be able to objectively reconsider prior decisions; and

v. That the motion was not raised in a timely fashion.

4. On the 15th and 17th September 1999 respectively, the Appeals Chamber issued two decisions pertaining to the correct procedure for disposing of the Motion. On 15 September 1999, the Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber, Judge Hunt, issued a decision entitled "Referral of Application to the Bureau under Rule 15(B)" ("Referral"), in which the appellant's application was remitted to the Bureau for consideration. On 17 September 1999, the Appeals Chamber issued a "Decision on Motion to Disqualify Judges Pursuant to Rule 15 or in the Alternative that Certain Judges Recuse Themselves" ("Decision") in which it disposed of the Motion on grounds of incompetence, holding that the subject matter of the Motion was not a matter for the consideration of the Appeals Chamber, that it was instead to be regarded as an application to the Presiding Judge pursuant to Rule 15(B) and noting in this regard the Appeals Chamber's referral of the matter to the Bureau of 15 September 1999.

5. In memoranda accompanying the Referral, Judge Hunt set forth his view that there was no necessity for the judges in question to disqualify themselves or for them to be disqualified from hearing the Celebici appeal, on the following grounds:

i. That the deliberations of the Plenary were not, and were never intended to be, a determination of the rights of any party in the Celebici case as the determination of the rights of any party to proceedings before the Tribunal is not the function of a Plenary meeting of the judges of the Tribunal. In any event, views expressed at such a meeting could not bind the judges should the issue discussed arise later for determination in proceedings before the Tribunal, in the same way that it could not reasonably be argued that all the judges who discuss amendments to be made to the Rules of Procedure and Evidence at a Plenary meeting are thereby disqualified from subsequently determining the meaning of those rules when such an issue arises in proceedings before the Tribunal.

ii. That conferral with each of the judges in question in accordance with Rule 15(B) merely served to confirm that no factual basis existed to demonstrate that the judges should disqualify themselves on this matter.

II. DISCUSSION

(A) THE APPLICABLE LAW

6. The Bureau holds the view that a distinction must be drawn between two different issues: (i) that of the requirements for a person to serve as a Judge of the ICTY and the connected question of what conduct or situations are incompatible with the discharge of judicial functions, and (ii) the issue of the grounds of disqualification of a Judge from sitting in a particular case.

7. The first issue is regulated by Article 13 of the Statute of the International Tribunal. In paragraph 1, this Article provides, inter alia, that Judges must be persons "of high moral character, impartiality and integrity who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices". Paragraph 4 of the same provision provides inter alia that the "terms and conditions of service shall be those of the judges of the International Court of Justice". This provision thus indirectly refers to Article 16 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, which provides that "(1) No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature. (2) Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court". Thus, to serve as a judge of the ICTY a person elected by the General Assembly pursuant to Article 13(2) of the Statute must both possess the requirements set out in Article 13(1) and not exercise any political or administrative function or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature. In other words, both positive and negative requirements are prescribed by the relevant rules. That this is the regulation applicable to the issue in question has been confirmed both by a decision of the Fourth Plenary Meeting of the Judges of the ICTY and by the practice of the Tribunal.
In case of doubt or dispute on the question whether a Judge meets the requirements at issue, in particular the negative requirements just mentioned, it is for the President to seek to resolve the matter in conference with the Judge. Either at the request of the Judge concerned or proprio motu, the President may submit the question to the plenary assembly of the Judges, which, in the exercise of its administrative functions, passes on the matter.

8. The issue of disqualification of Judges is different. A Judge may recuse himself or herself or be disqualified from hearing a particular case when, pursuant to Rule 15(A), he or she "has a personal interest [in] [...] or has or has had any association" with the case "which might affect his or her impartiality". Pursuant to Rule 15(B), decisions on this matter, at the request of any party to the case, are made by the Presiding Judge of a Chamber or, at the request of the Presiding Judge, by the Bureau.

9. The two issues set out so far are different. The first issue relates to the question of whether or not a Judge possesses all the necessary requirements for serving as a Judge of the Tribunal. This is a matter of an administrative nature, internal to the Tribunal. It can only be settled by the relevant bodies of the Tribunal. If these bodies are satisfied that the Judge does not fulfil one of the requisite conditions, for instance because he or she has engaged in political or administrative functions incompatible with the judicial function, the Judge is duty bound either to abandon those incompatible functions or to resign from the position of Judge.

By contrast, the other issue is a judicial matter, which may be raised not only by the Judge concerned but also by any party to the proceedings before a Trial Chamber or the Appeals Chamber. It relates to the right of a Judge to sit in a specific case. If the Judge does not fulfil the requirements referred to in Rule 15(B), he or she is disqualified from hearing that particular case, although he or she is fully entitled to continue to exercise the functions of a Judge of the Tribunal and sit in other cases.

10. Of course, there may be some overlap between the two issues. This may happen when a party to a trial or appellate proceedings claims that the fact that a Judge sitting in that case has engaged in political, administrative or professional activities entails the consequence that this Judge has a "personal interest" in the case or has some "association" with the case causing the Judge to be biased and hence to lack the required impartiality. Clearly, in this case the party raising the issue of disqualification must show that the alleged incompatibilities with the judicial function are such as to bring about a lack of impartiality in the case at issue. In other words, that party must show a link between the activity allegedly incompatible with the judicial function and the particular case at issue. It would not be sufficient for that party to claim merely that the Judge in question is exercising a political, administrative or professional activity incompatible with his or her judicial functions. This is an administrative matter reserved to the Judges for any decision. As stated above, it is only for the President or the Plenary assembly of Judges to pass on this matter. If, instead, it can be shown that the activity incompatible with the discharge of judicial functions has a direct and specific impact upon the impartiality of a Judge in a particular case before a Chamber, then the matter comes within the purview of the disqualification procedure. In that case, it is to be settled pursuant to Sub-Rule 15(B).

(B) THE CASE AT ISSUE

11. In this case, as stated above, the three appellants against conviction claim that Judges Riad, Wang and Nieto-Navia should be disqualified from hearing the appeal against conviction. The basis for their disqualification is said to be as follows: One of the grounds of appeal relates to the proper constitution of the Trial Chamber in Celebici; in the appellants' view the Chamber was not properly constituted because Judge Odio Benito, by her election as Vice-President of Costa Rica, became disqualified from serving as a Judge and sitting in Celebici and her impartiality could be apprehended as having been compromised. As in Plenary meetings of the Tribunal the three aforementioned Judges pronounced on the question of whether Judge Odio Benito could serve as a Judge after her election to the position of Vice-President of Costa Rica, they have allegedly formed a prejudgement upon one of the issues to be determined in the appeal.

12. It must be noted that the question of whether the position of Vice-President of Costa Rica was compatible with the discharge of the judicial functions by Judge Odio Benito was raised, at the administrative level, by the then President Cassese on 23 May 1997, in a meeting with Judge Odio Benito, when it became known that she was running as a candidate for that position. Judge Odio Benito responded to President Cassese in a letter of 16 October 1997 in which she specified that, if elected, she would not take office before the end of her functions as a Judge sitting in Celebici and in addition undertook, if elected, to fulfil her judicial functions on a full time basis. In the light of this commitment, the then President Cassese decided that Judge Odio Benito was entitled to run as a candidate for the position of Vice-President. Nevertheless, he felt that it was advisable to submit the matter to the Plenary. This was done in October 1997. The Fourteenth Plenary assembly of all Judges, in the discharge of administrative functions, endorsed the decision of the President. The matter arose again in March 1998, after the election, on 1 February 1998, of Judge Odio Benito to the position of Second Vice-President of Costa Rica. President McDonald noted the renewed commitment of Judge Odio Benito not to assume the functions of Second Vice-President nor, in case of permanent or temporary absence of the President or the First Vice-President, the functions of President of Costa Rica, prior to the termination of her tenure as a Judge. Judge Odio Benito further undertook not to be diverted by anything from the fulfilment of her mandate as a Judge until November 1998. In light of these commitments, President McDonald decided that there was no incompatibility between Judge Odio Benito's judicial duties and her new status of Second Vice-President of Costa Rica. President McDonald too felt it was advisable to submit the matter to the Seventeenth Plenary. This was done on 11 March 1998. The Plenary assembly of Judges, again exercising its administrative functions, unanimously endorsed President McDonald's decision.

13. It should be emphasised that (i) the Judges assembled at the Fourteenth and Seventeenth Plenary Meetings only passed on the administrative issue of whether or not the election of Judge Odio Benito to the position of Second Vice-President of Costa Rica amounted to a circumstance incompatible with her judicial functions and (ii) this decision was not made with reference to any specific question as to whether Judge Odio Benito was disqualified from sitting in Celebici. Actually, it was only on 25 May 1998, namely more than two months after the administrative decision by the Seventeenth Plenary, that a motion was filed by defence counsel in Celebici asking that Judge Odio Benito take no further part in the proceedings in that case.

14. It follows from the above that the three Judges concerned by the Motion for disqualification currently under discussion took part only in the administrative decision made on 11 March 1998 concerning the general question of whether, pursuant to Article 13 of the Statute of the ICTY and Article 16 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, Judge Odio Benito was entitled to continue to exercise her functions as a Judge of the International Tribunal. They did not pronounce upon, nor did they contribute to the taking of, any judicial decision on a specific judicial matter that at the time had not yet arisen: the question of whether Judge Odio Benito should be disqualified from sitting in Celebici on the basis that her election to the position of Second Vice-President of Costa Rica entailed an interest in or an association with that case, thus creating a lack of impartiality. This question, raised in the Defence Motion of 25 May 1998, was decided by the Bureau, on which none of the three aforementioned Judges was serving, in its decision of 4 September 1998.

15. In light of the above, the Bureau holds the view that the fulfilment by a Judge of his or her duty to take part in a collegiate decision of an administrative nature on the administrative issue discussed so far cannot amount to a ground for subsequently disqualifying such a judge, sitting in the Appeals Chamber, from discharging a judicial function (i.e., pronouncing upon the question, raised by the three appellants in their appeal against conviction, of whether Judge Odio Benito, by her election as Second Vice-President of Costa Rica, became disqualified from sitting in Celebici and whether her impartiality could in any event be perceived as having been compromised).

16. The Bureau therefore considers that the appellants have failed to satisfy the requirements set out in Sub-Rule 15(A). In particular, they have failed to show that Judges Riad, Wang and Nieto-Navia have a personal interest in the question of whether Judge Odio Benito was entitled to sit in Celebici or have any association with this question which might affect their impartiality.

17. For these reasons, the Bureau unanimously decides that Judges Riad, Wang and Nieto-Navia are not disqualified under Sub-Rule 15(A) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence from sitting on the appellate proceedings in Celebici.

III. DISPOSITION

18. The Bureau unanimously decides, under Sub-Rule 15(B) of the Rules, that Judges Riad, Wang and Nieto-Navia are not disqualified from serving on the Appeals Chamber to hear the appeal against conviction in Celebici.

Ms. Cynthia McMurrey, Ms. Nancy Boler, for Esad Landžo

(e) Unlawful Confinement of Civilians

27. Zejnil Delalić and Zdravko Mucić, along with Hazim Delić are charged under count 48 of the Indictment (paragraph 36) with the unlawful confinement of civilians, a grave breach punishable under Article 2(g) of the Statute, for their alleged acts and omissions as superiors with respect to the unlawful confinement of numerous civilians in the Čelebići prison-camp between May and October 1992. Zdravko Mucić and Zejnil Delalić are also charged with direct responsibility in relation to the foregoing charge.

(f) Plunder of Private Property

28. Zdravko Mucić, along with Hazim Delić, is charged under count 49 of the Indictment with plunder, a violation of the laws or customs of war punishable under Article 3(e) of the Statute, for their alleged acts and omissions as superiors with respect to the following events alleged to have been perpetrated by themselves and their subordinates in the Čelebići prison-camp:

> The plunder of money, watches and other valuable property belonging to persons detained at the Čelebići camp between May and September 1992. (Indictment at paragraph 37 paraphrased.)

Zdravko Mucić is also charged with direct responsibility in relation to the foregoing charge.

29. Having outlined the offences charged in the Indictment and the alleged role of the accused therein, it is appropriate to set out the procedural history of the present case, both prior to trial and during the trial itself.

C. Procedural History

30. Towards the close of investigations into the events which occurred in the Čelebići prison-camp during the recent conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Prosecutor, acting on information regarding the whereabouts of several individuals deemed to be suspects in relation to these events, made two separate requests to Germany and Austria for the provisional arrest of Zejnil Delalić and Zdravko Mucić, respectively, under Rule 40 of the Rules. Pursuant to these requests, both suspects

760. The Trial Chamber has further been presented with testimony relating to the status of Zdravko Mucić from Risto Vukalo,[804] whose testimony is rejected by the Defence on the ground that the witness allegedly claimed at trial that his prior statement to the Prosecution was procured by duress, Witness T,[805] whose testimony is viewed by the Defence with considerable suspicion, Milovan Kuljanin,[806] Witness J,[807] Witness R[808] and Petko Grubač,[809] all of whom knew Mr. Mucić as the commander of the Čelebići prison-camp. The Defence also submits that General Divjak did not know the function of Mr. Mucić in the prison-camp. It is difficult to appreciate the criticism of these various witnesses on this issue.

761. The Trial Chamber is concerned with evidence of the actual exercise of authority by Mr. Mucić as commander in the Čelebići prison-camp. The more complex issue of the precise scope of duties which attached to this status is clearly irrelevant to this question. There is, however, sufficient concrete evidence that Mr. Mucić was, before the end of May 1992, present in the Čelebići prison-camp and was exercising de facto authority over the prison-camp and its personnel. The Trial Chamber has critically analysed the evidence and has come to the view that the only issue which concerns us in the testimony is whether Mr. Mucić was the commander of the Čelebići prison-camp during the relevant period.

762. Reliable evidence in this respect was given by Witness D. There is nothing in the personal circumstances of this witness which would render acknowledging the fact that Mr. Mucić was the commander of Čelebići prison-camp advantageous to him. Witness D worked closely with Mr. Mucić in relation to the classification of the detainees. He is thus in a position to know the exact status of Mr. Mucić. The Trial Chamber is completely satisfied that his testimony is credible and not in any sense tainted with self-serving disclosures.

763. The actual exercise of de facto authority by Zdravko Mucić was not confined to the areas considered above. Mr. Mucić extended his authority to the control of the Čelebići prison-camp and its personnel. It is a cardinal requirement of the exercise of command authority that there must also be exercise of superior authority over the institution and its personnel.

764. There is evidence before the Trial Chamber of the control by Zdravko Mucić of the detainees who would leave or be transferred from the Čelebići prison-camp to another detention facility.[810] Mr. Mucić had the authority to release detainees. Exhibit 75, signed by him, is a release document in respect of the detention of Branko Gotovac.[811] There is also Exhibit 84, signed by Mr. Mucić for Mirko Kuljanin and Exhibit 91, signed by Mr. Mucić which is the release document for Milojka Antić.[812] Mr. Mucić also signed Exhibit 158, a release document for Witness B,[813] and Exhibit 159 which is the release document for Zoran Ninković.

765. Similarly, Zdravko Mucić had authority over the guards. This has been established through the testimony of Dragan Kuljanin[814] and Witness B.[815] Mr. Mucić also had control over visits to the detainees, which were only allowed by his permission.[816] In her testimony before the Trial Chamber, Milojka Antić described the authority of Mr. Mucić as total: "[i]n the camp he was in charge. He was asked about everything".[817]

766. Witness P also testified to the exercise of the authority by Mr. Mucić over the guards. This witness further testified to hearing Mr. Mucić speaking to Major Kevrić as commander of the prison-camp, requesting that additional food be brought to the detainees.[818]

767. Zdravko Mucić had all the powers of a commander to discipline camp guards and to take every appropriate measure to ensure the maintenance of order. Mr. Mucić himself admits he had all such necessary disciplinary powers. He could confine guards to barracks as a form of punishment and for serious offences he could make official reports to his superior authority at military headquarters.[819] Further, he could remove guards, as evidenced by his removal of Esad Landžo in October 1992.[820]

B. Discussion

172. Before proceeding to consider this matter further, the Appeals Chamber makes two observations.

173. First, the Appellant states that he first discovered Judge Mumba's associations and personal interest in the case after judgement was rendered, and for this reason, only then raised the matter before the Bureau.[234] Although the Appeals Chamber has decided to consider this matter further, given its general importance,[235] it would point out that information was available to the Appellant at trial level, which should have enabled him to discover Judge Mumba's past activities and involvement with the UNCSW. The Appeals Chamber notes, in this context, public documentation issued by the International Tribunal, including, for example, its published yearbooks which contain sections devoted to biographies of the Judges elected to serve at the International Tribunal.[236] In addition, Public Information Service of the Tribunal, which is responsible for ensuring public awareness of the International Tribunal's activities, regularly publishes Bulletins and releases information on the International Tribunal's web-site. Both the Yearbook and the Public Information Service of the Tribunal provide official information to the public regarding such issues as the election of new Judges to the International Tribunal and details of a Judge's legal background. The information was freely available for the Appellant to discover.

174. The Appeals Chamber considers that it would not be unduly burdensome for the Appellant to find out the qualifications of the Presiding Judge of his trial. He could have raised the matter, if he considered it relevant, before the Trial Chamber, either pre-trial or during trial. On this basis, the Appeals Chamber could find that the Appellant has waived his right to raise the matter now and could dismiss this ground of appeal.

175. These observations however, should not be construed as relieving an individual Judge of his or her duty to withdraw from a particular case if he or she believes that his or her impartiality is in question. This is in fact what Rule 15(A) of the Rules calls for when it says that the Judge shall in any such circumstance withdraw. The Appeals Chamber finds that Judge Mumba had no such duty for the reason that she had no potentially disqualifying personal interest or associations.

as a spectator in civilian dress, a SA (Stürmabteilung) "parade" in which two political opponents of the NSDAP (Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiterpartei) were exposed to public humiliation. P had followed the "parade" without taking any active part. The court found that P, > followed the parade only as a spectator in civilian clothes, although he was following a service order by the SA for a purpose yet unknown . . . His conduct cannot even with certainty be evaluated as objective or subjective approval. Furthermore, silent approval that does not contribute to causing the offence in no way meets the requirements for criminal liability.[230]

P was found not guilty. He may have lacked the necessary mens rea. But in any event, his insignificant status brought the effect of his "silent approval" below the threshold necessary for the actus reus.

209. It appears from the Synagogue and Pig-cart parade cases that presence, when combined with authority, can constitute assistance in the form of moral support, that is, the actus reus of the offence. The supporter must be of a certain status for this to be sufficient for criminal responsibility. This emphasis on the accused's authority was also affirmed in Akayesu. Jean-Paul Akayesu was the bourgmestre, or mayor, of the Commune in which atrocities, including rape and sexual violence, occurred. That Trial Chamber considered this position of authority highly significant for his criminal liability for aiding and abetting: "The Tribunal finds, under Article 6(1) of its Statute, that the Accused, having had reason to know that sexual violence was occurring, aided and abetted the following acts of sexual violence, by allowing them to take place on or near the premises of the bureau communal and by facilitating the commission of such sexual violence through his words of encouragement in other acts of sexual violence which, by virtue of his authority, sent a clear signal of official tolerance for sexual violence, without which these acts would not have taken place: [. . .]".[231] Furthermore, it can be inferred from this finding that assistance need not be tangible. In addition, assistance need not

Chamber held that the accused "intentionally assisted directly and substantially in the common purpose of the group" to commit the offence.[253]

(b) International Instruments

227. The two international instruments useful for these purposes are the 1996 Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind adopted by the International Law Commission, and the Rome Statute. Neither instrument is legally binding internationally. The Draft Code was adopted in 1996 by the United Nations International Law Commission, a body consisting of outstanding experts in international law, including governmental legal advisers, elected by the United Nations General Assembly. The Draft Code was taken into account by the General Assembly: in its resolution 51 (160) of 30 January 1997 it expressed its "appreciation" for the completion of the Draft Code and among other things drew the attention of the States participating in the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court to the relevance of the Draft Code to their work.[254] In the light of the above the Trial Chamber considers that the Draft Code is an authoritative international instrument which, depending upon the specific question at issue, may (i) constitute evidence of customary law, or (ii) shed light on customary rules which are of uncertain contents or are in the process of formation, or, at the very least, (iii) be indicative of the legal views of eminently qualified publicists representing the major legal systems of the world. As for the Rome Statute, at present it is still a non-binding international treaty (it has not yet entered into force). It was adopted by an overwhelming majority of the States attending the Rome Diplomatic Conference and was substantially endorsed by the General Assembly's Sixth Committee on 26 November 1998.[255] In many areas the Statute may be regarded as indicative of the legal views, i.e. opinio juris of a great number of States. Notwithstanding article 10 of the Statute, the purpose of which is to ensure that existing

[254] See operative para. 2 of the resolution.
[255] The significance of the Rome Statute has also been acknowledged by the Sixth Committee of the United Nations in a resolution entitled "Establishment of an international criminal court", dated 18 Nov. 1998 (A/C. 6/53/L. 9/Rev. 1), in which it "note[s] that a significant number of States have signed the Rome Statute"; "acknowledges the historic significance of the adoption of the Rome Statute", and; "calls upon or developing law is not "limited" or "prejudiced" by the Statute's provisions, resort may be had cum grano salis to these provisions to help elucidate customary international law. Depending on the matter at issue, the Rome Statute may be taken to restate, reflect or clarify customary rules or crystallise them, whereas in some areas it creates new law or modifies existing law. At any event, the Rome Statute by and large may be taken as constituting an authoritative expression of the legal views of a great number of States.

228. The Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind deals with aiding and abetting in article 2(3)(d), which would impose criminal responsibility upon an individual who "knowingly aids, abets or otherwise assists, directly and substantially, in the commission of such a crime, including providing the means for its commission".[256]

229. In the absence of specification, it appears that assistance can be either physical or in the form of moral support. Encouragement given to the perpetrators may be punishable, even if the abettor did not take any tangible action, provided it "directly and substantially" assists in the commission of a crime. This proposition is also supported by a passage from the International Law Commission's Commentary concerning ex post facto assistance:

> The Commission concluded that complicity could include aiding, abetting or assisting ex post facto, if this assistance had been agreed upon by the perpetrator and the accomplice prior to the perpetration of the crime.[257]

230. This conclusion implies that action which decisively encourages the perpetrator is sufficient to amount to assistance: the knowledge that he will receive assistance during or after the event encourages the perpetrator in the commission of the crime. From this perspective, willingness to provide assistance, when made known to the perpetrator, would also suffice, if the offer of help in fact encouraged or facilitated the commission of the crime by the main perpetrator.[258]

(c) Conclusion

232. On the issue of the nature of assistance rendered, the German cases suggest that the assistance given by an accomplice need not be tangible and can consist of moral support in certain circumstances. While any spectator can be said to be encouraging a spectacle - an audience being a necessary element of a spectacle - the spectator in these cases was only found to be complicit if his status was such that his presence had a significant legitimising or encouraging effect on the principals. This is supported by the provisions of the International Law Commission Draft Code. In view of this, the Trial Chamber believes the use of the term "direct" in qualifying the proximity of the assistance and the principal act to be misleading as it may imply that assistance needs to be tangible, or to have a causal effect on the crime. This may explain why the word "direct" was not used in the Rome Statute's provision on aiding and abetting.

233. On the effect of the assistance given to the principal, none of the cases above suggests that the acts of the accomplice need bear a causal relationship to, or be a conditio sine qua non for, those of the principal. The suggestion made in the Einsatzgruppen and Zyklon B cases is that the relationship between the acts of the accomplice and of the principal must be such that the acts of the accomplice make a significant difference to the commission of the criminal act by the principal. Having a role in a system without influence would not be enough to attract criminal responsibility, as demonstrated by the case of the defendant Ruehl in the Einsatzgruppen case. This interpretation is supported by the German cases cited.

234. The position under customary international law seems therefore to be best reflected in the proposition that the assistance must have a substantial effect on the commission of the crime. This is the position adopted by the Trial Chamber.

235. In sum, the Trial Chamber holds that the actus reus of aiding and abetting in international criminal law requires practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime.

3. Mens Rea

(a) International Case Law

236. With regard to mens rea, the Trial Chamber must determine whether it is necessary for the accomplice to share the mens rea of the principal or whether mere knowledge that his actions assist the perpetrator in the commission of the crime is sufficient to constitute mens rea in aiding and abetting the crime. The case law indicates that the latter will suffice.

237. For example in the Einsatzgruppen case,[260] knowledge, rather than intent, was held to be the requisite mental element.

238. The same position was taken in Zyklon B where the prosecution did not attempt to prove that the accused acted with the intention of assisting the killing of the internees. It was accepted that their purpose was to sell insecticide to the SS (for profit, that is a lawful goal pursued by lawful means). The charge as accepted by the court was that they knew what the buyer in fact intended to do with the product they were supplying.

239. Two of the not guilty verdicts in Schonfeld also provide an indication of the mens rea necessary to amount to being "concerned in the killing". Both concerned drivers who claimed to have followed instructions without knowing the purpose of the mission, and were therefore found not guilty. Despite having made a physical contribution to the commission of the offence, they had no knowledge that they were doing so.

240. In the Hechingen Deportation case, the court of first instance considered the mens rea required for aiding and abetting and concluded that this mental element encompassed both the knowledge of the crime being committed by the principals and the awareness of supporting, by aiding and abetting, the criminal conduct of the principals.[261] As

[260] This is reflected in passages quoted from the Einsatzgruppen case in relation to Klingelhoefer and Fendler, pp. 568-573.

[261] "As far as the mens rea is concerned, whether the accused's conduct is punishable or not depends on whether he intentionally acted as an aider and abettor. The aider and abettor's intent (Gehilfenvorsatz) requires in the first place, that he knew the conduct he was supporting by his participation; he must have been aware that the action requested of him by the Gestapo served a persecution on racial grounds. As a > crime would not be held accountable under the present sub-paragraph.[265]

243. Therefore, it is not necessary for an aider and abettor to meet all the requirements of mens rea for a principal perpetrator. In particular, it is not necessary that he shares and identifies with the principal 's criminal will and purpose, provided that his own conduct was with knowledge. That conduct may in itself be perfectly lawful; it becomes criminal only when combined with the principal 's unlawful conduct.

244. Reference should also be made to article 30 of the Rome Statute, which provides that, "[u]nless otherwise provided, a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court only if the material elements are committed with intent and knowledge".[266]

(c) Conclusions

245. The above analysis leads the Trial Chamber to the conclusion that it is not necessary for the accomplice to share the mens rea of the perpetrator, in the sense of positive intention to commit the crime. Instead, the clear requirement in the vast majority of the cases is for the accomplice to have knowledge that his actions will assist the perpetrator in the commission of the crime. This is particularly apparent from all the cases in which persons were convicted for having driven victims and perpetrators to the site of an execution. In those cases the prosecution did not prove that the driver drove for the purpose of assisting in the killing, that is, with an intention to kill. It was the knowledge of the criminal purpose of the executioners that rendered the driver liable as an aider and abettor. Consequently, if it were not proven that a driver would reasonably

[265] Report of the I.L.C., p. 24.

[266] Emphasis added. Art. 30, reads:
"1. Unless otherwise provided, a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court only if the material elements are committed with intent and knowledge.
2. For the purposes of this article, a person has intent where:
(a) In relation to conduct, that person means to engage in the conduct;
(b) In relation to a consequence, that person means to cause that consequence or is aware that it will occur in the ordinary course of events.

have known that the purpose of the trip was an unlawful execution, he would be acquitted.

246. Moreover, it is not necessary that the aider and abettor should know the precise crime that was intended and which in the event was committed. If he is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed, and one of those crimes is in fact committed, he has intended to facilitate the commission of that crime, and is guilty as an aider and abettor.

247. Knowledge is also the requirement in the International Law Commission Draft Code, which may well reflect the requirement of mens rea in customary international law. This is the standard adopted by this Tribunal in the Tadi} Judgement, although sometimes somewhat misleadingly expressed as "intent".[267]

248. One exception to this requirement of knowledge is the Rohde case, which appears to require no mens rea at all. However, this case is based on English law and procedure under the Royal Warrant. Furthermore, it is out of line with the other British cases, which do require knowledge. At the other end of the scale is the appeal court decision in the Hechingen Deportation case, which required that the accomplice share the mens rea of the perpetrator. However, the high standard proposed by this case is not reflected in the other cases.

249. In sum, the Trial Chamber holds the legal ingredients of aiding and abetting in international criminal law to be the following: the actus reus consists of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime. The mens rea required is the knowledge that these acts assist the commission of the offence. This notion of aiding and abetting is to be distinguished from the notion of common design, where the actus reus consists of participation in a joint criminal enterprise and the mens rea required is intent to participate.

3. For the purposes of this article, "knowledge" means awareness that a circumstance exists or a consequence will occur in the ordinary course of events. "Know" and "knowingly" shall be construed accordingly."

49. This is the Trial Chamber's position with regard to a number of exhibits.

50. Exhibit P2402 is a report entitled "Military Operation Storm and its Aftermath," published by the Croatian Helsinki Committee and edited by Žarko Puhovski.[110] The report contains un-sourced statements and double entries.[111] Furthermore, during examination of Puhovski in court it became apparent that there were errors in the book.[112] For these reasons, the Trial Chamber decided not to rely on exhibit P2402 in relation to information described therein if uncorroborated by other evidence.

51. Exhibit P744 is a human rights report listing various events which was compiled by Robert Williams from a variety of sources, including Philip Berikoff.[113] The report contains un-sourced hearsay information, and neither Berikoff nor Williams specified the sources in their testimonies. The report was furthermore inconsistent with other evidence from Berikoff, notably with regard to timing.[114] For these reasons, the Trial Chamber decided not to rely on the report in relation to information described therein if uncorroborated by other evidence.

52. Exhibit P541 is a list of alleged human rights violations from UNMO Team Gračac. Steenbergen had no knowledge of its preparation or the information contained therein.[115] The Gotovina Defence objected to its admission, and urged the Chamber to give it the appropriate weight considering that Steenbergen did not establish its origins.[116] For these reasons, the Trial Chamber decided not to rely on the report in relation to information described therein if uncorroborated by other evidence.

53. Exhibit P2417 is a map allegedly signed by Gotovina, apparently depicting troop movements between 4 and 8 August 1995. The Defence did not object to its admission into evidence.[117] It is unclear whether the map depicts actual or planned troop movements, nor are all parts of the map legible. Considering this, the Trial Chamber decided not to rely on exhibit P2417 on its own to establish presence of troops.

courtroom and in detention.[3619] In sum, the Trial Chamber does not find that Mladen Markač's comportment in the courtroom and in detention amounts to a mitigating circumstance. The Markač Defence has pointed to testimonies by several witnesses, as evidence of Mladen Markač's good character, inter alia lending assistance to "victims".[3620] Even taken on a balance of probabilities, this evidence is not sufficient for the Trial Chamber to assess whether Mladen Markač has a good character which it could consider as a mitigating factor.

8.3.3 General practice regarding the prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia

2611. The Trial Chamber is required to consider "the general practice regarding prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia" in determining the appropriate penalty. This does not mean that the Trial Chamber is obliged to conform to that practice.[3621] The Tribunal may impose a sentence in excess of that which would be applicable under the relevant law in the former Yugoslavia, and the Appeals Chamber has held that this sentencing practice does not violate the principle of nulla poena sine lege because a defendant would have been aware that the crimes for which he or she is indicted constitute serious violations of international humanitarian law, punishable by the most severe of penalties.[3622] Moreover, the Trial Chamber may diverge from the sentencing practice of the former Yugoslavia if this practice is inadequate in light of international law.[3623]

2612. Article 24 (1) of the Statute and Rule 101 (B) (iii) of the Rules refer to actual practice in courts of the former Yugoslavia. It is however settled practice within the to activities of plunder and the need to prevent them [but] does not mention acts of destruction".[863] The Appeals Chamber concurs with the Trial Chamber that, given the evidence taken as a whole, the inference that the 7th Brigade "must have received" orders from the 3rd Corps Command on 4 November 1993 does not establish, by itself, Kubura's knowledge of his subordinates' acts of wanton destruction.

295. Second, the Appeals Chamber considers that Kubura's knowledge of the acts of wanton destruction cannot automatically be inferred from his awareness of the plunder in Vareš on 4 November 1993. Indeed, the Trial Chamber's finding regarding Kubura's knowledge of the plunder in Vareš on 4 November 1993 rests on a much broader evidentiary basis. The Trial Chamber reached this conclusion on the basis of the aforementioned 4 November 1993 Order from the OG Istok, which specifically referred to acts of plunder but not of wanton destruction being committed in Vareš.[864] The Trial Chamber also relied on a 7th Brigade 2nd Battalion 11 November 1993 Report, which noted the 7th Brigade's collection of war booty in Vareš but did not mention acts of wanton destruction.[865] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber relied on Kubura's knowledge of and failure to punish his subordinates' past acts of plunder.[866] The Trial Chamber made no such findings with respect to any past acts of wanton destruction by Kubura's subordinates. Thus, while there was a sufficient evidentiary basis for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Kubura had knowledge of the acts of plunder in Vareš, it was reasonable for it to conclude that his knowledge as regards the acts of wanton destruction was not established beyond reasonable doubt.

296. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to establish that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded, on the basis of all the admitted evidence, that Kubura's knowledge of wanton destruction in Vareš on 4 November 1993 was not established beyond reasonable doubt. The Prosecution's second ground of appeal is dismissed and Kubura's acquittal under Count 5 of the Indictment is confirmed.

III. EVIDENCE

270. The Chamber considers it appropriate to explain the approach it adopted to assess evidence and determine its probative value, whether such evidence was supported by documentary or visual aids, or if it came in the form of testimony of witnesses called by the Prosecution, Defence, or even the Chamber.

A. Scope of Direct and Cross-Examination

1. Broad Scope of Cross-Examination

271. From the day the trial began, the Chamber adopted a broad approach with regard to the scope of direct examinations and especially cross-examinations. Accordingly, in its Decision on the Defence Motion for Clarification of the Oral Decision of 17 December [...], the Chamber recalled that, pursuant to Rule 90(H), cross-examinations are not limited to issues raised in direct examination, and that questions going to the credibility of witnesses and to the case of the cross-examining party are permitted.[443] On that basis, the Chamber exercised its control and admitted questions intended to establish the historical, political, and military context at the time of the events, provided that the cross-examining party explain the objective and relevance of such questions to the Chamber before putting them to the witness.[444]

272. Mindful that these contextual questions could result in testimony being described as "hearsay" or "indirect", the Chamber recalled that Rule 89(C) applies equally to direct and indirect evidence. In cases where testimony was based on hearsay, the Chamber noted that to assess its probative value, it wished to know the source of the information, that is, insofar as possible, the identity of the initial source, how he might have learned of the facts, and the number of intermediaries through which the testimony had passed.

2. Restrictions

(a) Decision on Defence Motion regarding Cross-Examination of Witnesses by the Prosecution

273. The Chamber placed some restrictions on its flexible approach to questions that could be raised in cross-examination, in view of the stage of the trial and the content of the Indictment. Accordingly, in its Decision on Defence Motion regarding Cross-Examination of Witnesses by the that the evidence proved Mr. Balaj had the requisite mens rea for aiding and abetting."[176] He argues that the Trial Chamber applied the correct legal standard of "knowledge or awareness that his or her conduct assisted or facilitated the commission of the crime",[177] and properly concluded that this standard could not be met where there was no evidence that Idriz Balaj was aware that these murders were "even contemplated" at the time that he acted.[178]

57. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in relation to the mens rea element of aiding and abetting, the Trial Chamber articulated the legal standard as follows:

> The aider and abettor must have knowledge that his or her acts assist in the commission of the crime of the principal perpetrator. The aider and abettor must also be aware of the principal perpetrator's criminal acts, although not their legal characterization, and his or her criminal state of mind. The aider and abettor does not, however, need to know either the precise crime that was intended or the one that was actually committed; it is sufficient that he or she be aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed, if one of those crimes is in fact committed.[179]

The Appeals Chamber further notes that the Trial Chamber, by majority, found that "there is no evidence that Idriz Balaj knowingly contributed to or facilitated the commission of any of these murders, especially as there is no evidence that Idriz Balaj was aware at that time that these murders were or would be committed."[180]

58. The Appeals Chamber considers it firmly established that, to satisfy the mens rea requirement for aiding and abetting, "[i]t must be shown that the aider and abettor knew that his own acts assisted the commission of that specific crime by the principal" (for example, murder, extermination, rape, torture)[181] and that the aider and abettor was "aware of the essential elements of the crime which was ultimately committed by the principal".[182] Where the mens rea of the principal perpetrator is an element of the principal crime, the aider and abettor need not share the intent of the principal perpetrator,[183] but he or she must be aware of the intent of the principal perpetrator.[184] Mens rea can be established if the aider and abettor is not certain which of a number of crimes will ultimately be committed.[185] In this regard, where an accused "is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed, and one of those crimes is in fact committed, he has intended to facilitate the commission of that crime, and is guilty as an aider and abettor."[186] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber correctly set out the legal standard for the mens rea of aiding and abetting.[187]

59. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber can identify no error on the part of the Trial Chamber in its application of the legal standard for the mens rea of aiding and abetting.[188] The requirement of knowledge that a crime would be committed by the principal perpetrator is in line with the jurisprudence of the Tribunal as set forth above. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber did not reach its conclusion because Idriz Balaj "lacked certainty" that a crime would be committed but rather because it found that there was no evidence at all to establish that he was aware to any standard that by his actions he was assisting in the commission of a crime against the sisters.[189]

60. The Appeals Chamber considers that the evidence referred to by the Prosecution, at best, shows that Idriz Balaj put vulnerable women in contact with KLA soldiers who had a reputation for violence. The Prosecution does not point to any evidence as to what happened to the women between the time that they were last seen alive and the time that they were killed, in particular which KLA soldiers killed them or under what circumstances they were killed. As the Trial Chamber correctly noted, none of the evidence shows that Idriz Balaj was aware that a crime would be committed against the women at the relevant time.[190]

61. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that Idriz Balaj lacked the requisite mens rea for aiding and abetting the murder of sister "S", sister "M", and the mother of Witness 4. In view of this conclusion, the Appeals Chamber will not consider the Prosecution's contention in relation to the actus reus requirement.

62. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this ground of appeal and the Trial Chamber's acquittal of Idriz Balaj for Count 14 stands.

(a) Whether the Trial Chamber "presumed" that Witness 3 was beaten

198. Lahi Brahimaj notes the Trial Chamber's holding that "[t]he evidence does not indicate that Witness 6 saw the initial beating of Witness 3". Lahi Brahimaj asserts that, in drawing this conclusion, the Trial Chamber presumed that Witness 3 was beaten upon his arrival to Jablanica/Jabllanicë even though, according to Lahi Brahimaj and the evidence of Witness 6, Witness 3 was not beaten. According to Lahi Brahimaj, the evidence is equally consistent with a finding that the beating did not occur. Lahi Brahimaj further points out that neither the Prosecution nor the Trial Chamber questioned Witness 6 on whether Witness 3 could have been beaten without Witness 6's knowledge.[462]

199. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber's consideration of Witness 6 and Witness 3's evidence was reasonable with regard to Witness 3's torture at the Jablanica/Jabllanicë compound.[463]

200. The Appeals Chamber does not agree with Lahi Brahimaj that the Trial Chamber presumed that Witness 3 was beaten and then proceeded to ignore contrary evidence. Rather, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber clearly considered the evidence of both Witness 6 and Witness 3 with regard to this issue and provided a reasoned opinion, which explicitly addressed the conflict between their testimony and why it preferred the latter's testimony over that of the former. Specifically, the Trial Chamber observed that Witness 6's testimony that Witness 3 was not beaten contradicts the evidence of Witness 3, but nevertheless accepted the evidence of Witness 3 on the basis that: (a) Witness 6 appeared to have little or no direct contact with Witness 3;[464] and (b) it was not clear from the evidence that Witness 6 saw Witness 3 as he escaped from the room. The Trial Chamber accordingly considered "that Witness 6 was not in a position to ascertain whether or not Witness 3 was beaten" and interpreted his testimony "to mean that he was not aware of Witness 3 being beaten."[465]

201. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a Trial Chamber may accept some parts of a witness's testimony and reject others.[466] The Trial Chamber therefore was not obliged to accept every aspect of Witness 6's evidence. The Trial Chamber had the advantage of observing both witnesses in person and was better positioned than the Appeals Chamber to assess the reliability and credibility of the evidence on this issue.[467]

202. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds that Lahi Brahimaj's suggestion that the Prosecution or Trial Chamber should have questioned Witness 6 as to whether Witness 3 could have been beaten without Witness 6's knowledge is without merit. The Appeals Chamber finds that any answer on the part of Witness 6 to this question would be speculative and that, if Lahi Brahimaj considered that the answer to this question could have shed light on this issue, he could have raised it himself during the trial.

203. Considering the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber discharged its duty of addressing the inconsistencies in the statements of these crucial witnesses and explaining why it preferred the testimony of one over the other in a reasoned opinion. Lahi Brahimaj has identified no error on the part of the Trial Chamber in this regard.

204. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber rejects this argument.

(b) Whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness 6 did not enter the room where Witness 3 was detained

205. Lahi Brahimaj argues that the Trial Chamber's finding that the evidence did not indicate that Witness 6 entered Witness 3's room when bringing food and water contradicts the facts found by the Trial Chamber in paragraphs 418, 427, and 443 of the Trial Judgement.[468] Lahi Brahimaj also argues that Witness 6's testimony[469] demonstrates that Witness 6 must have entered the room in which Witness 3 and the other two detainees were housed.[470] Lahi Brahimaj points out that the Trial Chamber noted the testimony of Witness 6 that, on the same day at around 1:00 p.m., the man from Grabanica/Grabanicë managed to escape through the window in his room, while the man from Zahać/Zahaq and Pal Krasniqi were caught trying to do the same.[471] Finally, Lahi Brahimaj quotes six passages of Witness 6's evidence about how Witness 6, inter alia, assisted the two men in the room by, for example, bringing them food and water, which, according to Lahi Brahimaj, supports his position that Witness 6 had to have entered the room.[472] In light of the foregoing, Lahi Brahimaj avers that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Witness 6 did not enter the room, handed over to the relatives and the commission issued a death certificate.[920] Body R-17 was wearing a blue dress with purple and white patterns over a hand-knitted vest.[921] Body R-17 was a female between 55 and 65 years old and between 156 and 161 centimetres tall.[922] The autopsy revealed a hand-gun bullet entry and exit wound on the left half of the pelvic bone, which, if inflicted in life, could have caused a haemorrhage and led to death.[923] On 19 September 1998, Vera Kovačević identified the body as Darinka Kovać (born Vujošević), based on clothing, the ossification of the spinal column and signs of a chronic, degenerative bone disease suffered in life, which caused severe ossification of the spinal column.[924] Vera Kovačević told the team that Vukosava Marković and her sister Darinka Kovać went missing on 21 April 1998.[925] Bodies R-10 and R-17 were handed over to the relatives and a death certificate was issued.[926] The witness did not take a DNA sample from R-17, because of the specific nature of the traditional identification.[927]

196. As referred to above, the Trial Chamber has heard hearsay evidence from Vera Kovačević that Vukosava Marković and Darinka Kovać went missing on 21 April 1998. In September 1998, two sets of remains were identified by traditional means as belonging to these two women. Both sets of remains had been found near the concrete wall at the Radonjić/Radoniq canal. In addition to general physical characteristics, the identification of Vukosava Marković was based in part on traces of bone injuries found on the remains that matched injuries sustained in life in a car crash. Likewise, in addition to general physical characteristics, the identification of Darinka Kovać was based in part on the symptoms of a bone disease, present in the remains, that she had suffered in life. The identification further considered a set of upper dentures found with the remains, that Darinka Kovać was known to wear. Also, for both sets of remains, Vera Kovačević identified pieces of clothing as ones that she had made herself. There are some discrepancies between the accounts of Vera Kovačević and Dušan Dunjić, concerning the identification of the clothing of Vukosava Marković. Although the accounts differ, they are not necessarily contradictory and certain discrepancies concern ambiguous details such as the exact colour of clothing. Therefore, the Trial Chamber does not consider these discrepancies significant and notes that the identification of clothing was only one of the factors considered in the identification of the remains. As the remains could not be retrieved, they could not have been identified by DNA analysis. The Trial Chamber has heard evidence of traditional identification of other sets of remains which was later contradicted by DNA analysis. Nevertheless, considering the strong grounds for the traditional identification and the fact that the two sets of remains were discovered in close proximity to each other, the Trial Chamber finds that the remains labelled R-10 belong to Vukosava Marković, and the remains labelled R-17 belong to Darinka Kovać. The forensic medical evidence suggests that Vukosava Marković and Darinka Kovać were murdered. In section 6.1, above, the Trial Chamber has explained that the fact that a body was found in the Radonjić/Radoniq canal area is not in itself conclusive as to who committed the killing or with which group, if any, the perpetrator was affiliated. The Trial Chamber has not received any evidence about either of the women being in KLA custody. By late April 1998, Vukosava Marković and Darinka Kovać were among the last remaining Serbs in the village of Gornji Ratiš/Ratishë ë Eperm, which had fallen under KLA control on or around 21 April 1998. Further, Miloica Vlahović testified that she had heard from a man named Muhamet that Vukosava Marković and Darinka Kovać were killed in July 1998. Miloica Vlahović did not clarify the basis of Muhamet's information. Thus, the evidence is unsourced, and possibly multiple hearsay. Even if the two women went missing in KLA controlled territory and were among the last Serbs remaining in their village in late April 1998, this fact alone could not reasonably exclude the possibility that other forces or persons, unaffiliated with the KLA, committed the killing.

197. For these reasons, even assuming that Vukosava Marković and Darinka Kovać were murdered, the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence before it does not allow for a conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt as to who committed the murders of the two women, with which group, if any, the perpetrator was affiliated, or whether the murders occurred in KLA custody. The Trial Chamber has heard no evidence concerning Idriz Balaj's involvement in the death of either of the two women. The Trial Chamber concludes that all three Accused should be acquitted of this charge.

Đakovica/Gjakovë municipality.[1547] In September 1998, officials at the MUP in Đakovica/Gjakovë told the witness that they had arrested Lëk and Krist Pervorfi, two KLA members from Dujak/Dujakë who had abducted Zdravko Radunović in Dujak/Dujakë.[1548] The officials further informed the witness that the two men had handed Zdravko Radunović over to their commander named "Vuk", and that Zdravko Radunović had subsequently been taken to Glođane/Gllogjan, in Dečani/Deçan municipality, where Ramush Haradinaj was in charge.[1549] In January 1999, the MUP in Peć/Pejë told the witness that Lëk and Krist Pervorfi had stated that Zdravko Radunović had been killed and that his remains had had been disposed of at Lake Radonjić/Radoniq.[1550]

316. The Trial Chamber has also received forensic medical evidence with regard to Zdravko Radunović (remains labelled "R-8/1"). ICMP DNA analysis identified the remains labelled R-8/1 as those of Zdravko Radunović.[1551] An autopsy conducted on 5 December 2003 described totally skeletonized, disarticulated and largely incomplete human remains.[1552] The cause of death could not be ascertained.[1553] Dušan Dunjić[1554] testified that remains R-8/1 were incomplete, with many bones missing.[1555] The remains had mistakenly been placed in the same body bag as body R-8.[1556] The part of the skull that was found showed a trace of a bullet exit wound.[1557]

317. As referred to above, the Trial Chamber received direct evidence that Zdravko Radunović was last seen on the morning of 16 July 1998 when he left for work, and last heard from during a telephone conversation at 1:30 p.m. on the same day, when he indicated that he was leaving Đakovica/Gjakovë for Dobrić/Dobriq. The MUP subsequently informed Witness 68 that Zdravko Radunović was abducted by KLA soldiers in Dujak/Dujakë, transferred to Glođane/Gllogjan, killed, and disposed of at Lake Radonjić/Radoniq. This hearsay account of Witness 68 is the only evidence before the Trial Chamber about the alleged abduction and subsequent events. It does not spell out the circumstances under which the MUP learned about the abduction. Moreover, it is multiple hearsay and Witness 68 does not specify her source. For these reasons the Trial Chamber will not rely on Witness 68's hearsay account of the alleged abduction and subsequent events. In September 1998, Zdravko Radunović's body was found at the Radonjić/Radoniq canal.

318. While at one autopsy, conducted on 5 December 2003, the cause of death of Zdravko Radunović could not be ascertained, Dunjić's autopsy report in 1998 noticed a trace of a bullet exit wound on the part of the skull that was found. Even assuming that Zdravko Radunović was murdered, KLA involvement has to be ascertained to prove the charges of this Count. In section 6.1, above, the Trial Chamber has explained that the fact that a body was found in the Radonjić/Radoniq canal area is not in itself conclusive as to who committed the killing or with which group, if any, the perpetrator was affiliated. The fact that Zdravko Radunović went to visit relatives in Dobrić/Dobriq, because they were under KLA attack a few days before, cannot establish a sufficient link between his disappearance and the KLA. As explained above, the Trial Chamber will not rely on Witness 68's hearsay account on the alleged abduction and subsequent events. For these reasons, the Trial Chamber finds that the evidence before it does not allow for a conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt as to who committed the murder, with which group, if any, the perpetrator was affiliated, or whether the murder occurred in KLA custody. The Trial Chamber therefore concludes that all three Accused should be acquitted of this charge.

6.12.8 Murder of Velizar Stošić

319. All three Accused are charged, as participants in a joint criminal enterprise, with the murder of Velizar Stošić in violation of the laws or customs of war. The Trial Chamber has heard relevant evidence from Miomir Stošić, as well as forensic medical evidence.

IV. Discussion

10. As acknowledged by both the Appellant and the Amicus Prosecutor, the Appellant was ordered to re-file her appeal brief with no more than 9,000 words. In the beginning of its re-filed brief, the Appellant informs the Appeals Chamber as follows:

> The word-limit set by the Appeals Chamber in its Decision of 6 November 2009 has proved inadequate to fully flesh out all grounds of appeal as would have been necessary in the circumstances. ... Because of the Appeals Chamber's decision not to grant any extension of words, and with a view to meet the word limit, the Defence has had to renounce arguing a number of grounds of appeal in its Brief. The Defence notes, however, that this should not be interpreted as a waiver of its right to raise the issues and facts pertaining to these grounds if ever necessary, appropriate or relevant. Nor should it be interpreted as a waiver of Ms Hartmann's fundamental rights. The Defence submits, furthermore, that the Appeals Chamber would have the inherent power, in fairness and with a view to protect the interests of justice, to consider the substance of any of the sub-grounds that could not be fleshed out in the Brief by referring to the detailed notice of these grounds as is contained in the Notice of Appeal.[20]

11. From an examination of the appeal brief, which bears a word count of 8,998 words, it is clear that the Appellant was able to come within the 9,000 word limit by removing spaces between words and characters throughout the footnotes. Footnotes, of course, count toward the overall word limit, pursuant to paragraph 6 of the Practice Direction on the Length of Briefs and Motions. The Appellant therefore seems to have "tricked" Microsoft Word's automatic word-count function into counting a footnote consisting of several words as a single word. Such an approach is contrary to both the spirit and letter of the relevant Practice Directions. Under the present circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that the appropriate remedy is to order the Appellant to re-file her appeal brief in conformity with the relevant Rules and Practice Directions, as well as the 6 November Decision. The Amicus Prosecutor shall have the opportunity to re-file his response, and the Appellant her reply, if any. The Appeals Chamber emphasises that this is not an opportunity for the parties to add fresh arguments to these filings.[21]

12. The Appeals Chamber now turns to the Amicus Prosecutor's request to strike from the appeal brief all references adopting arguments from other filings. The Appeals Chamber has previously held that, pursuant to Rule 111 of the Rules, the proper place for pleading arguments in support of a particular ground of appeal, as well as any supporting authority, is the appeal brief and not the notice of appeal.[22] Moreover, "allowing the appellant to submit arguments in a notice of appeal which are not repeated in the appeal brief would put the respondent in a disadvantageous situation as the respondent responds to the appeal brief and not to the notice of appeal".[23] The Appellant therefore cannot simply refer in her appeal brief to other documents, most notably the notice of appeal, and expect those grounds of appeal to be preserved. The Appeals Chamber therefore, under the present circumstances, intends to consider as abandoned any grounds of appeal not argued in the re-filed appeal brief.[24] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber has already stated that "[t]he quality and effectiveness of an appellant's brief are not contingent on the length of the submissions, but on the cogency and clarity of the arguments presented."[25]

13. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in the Appellant's argument that the Amicus Prosecutor has conducted this matter so as to "see her cards". The Amicus Prosecutor, within a reasonable amount of time, made a motion to strike the initial notice of appeal and brief because it did not conform to the relevant requirements, and that motion succeeded on its merits. The present Motion has also succeeded in substantial part. No gamesmanship on the part of the Amicus Prosecutor has been demonstrated by the Appellant. Moreover, the Appellant cannot complain about differences in argumentation in the Amicus Prosecutor's re-filed respondent's brief. The Appellant's arguments, pursuant to the order of the Appeals Chamber, have been re-worked and refined, and it is reasonable that the Amicus Prosecutor's brief must now meet the present state of the Appellant's arguments, not the previous ones, which no longer control this appeal.

14. In light of the fact that the Appeals Chamber will order the Appellant to re-file her appeal brief and does not intend, at this stage of the proceedings, to consider any grounds of appeal raised in the notice of appeal that are not argued in the appeal brief, it is not necessary to order a re-filing of the notice of appeal. It is also not necessary to order a tracked-changes version of the appeal brief, as requested by the Amicus Prosecutor. However, should the Appellant, in re-filing her appeal brief, wish to reorganise her grounds of appeal in order to meet the word limit, then she must also correspondingly reorganise her notice of appeal and then re-file both.

15. The Appeals Chamber is concerned at the progress of this appeal and the manner in which the Appellant and her counsel are approaching it. Faced with a clear order from the Appeals Chamber to file an appeal brief that conformed to the relevant Rules and Practice Directions, counsel have not done so and continue to engage in a manner of litigation that has necessitated a third filing of the appeal brief. This is unfortunate, and the Appeals Chamber urges the Appellant to ensure that she complies fully with the order of the Appeals Chamber.

V. Disposition

16. For the foregoing reasons and pursuant to Rule 111 of the Rules and paragraphs 8 and 20 of the Practice Direction on Written Appeal Proceedings, paragraphs (C)(2) and (6)–(8) of the Practice Direction on the Length of Briefs and Motions, and paragraph 17 of the Practice Direction on Formal Requirements, the Appeals Chamber hereby:

(a) GRANTS the Motion, in part;

(b) ORDERS as follows:

a. The Appellant shall re-file her appeal brief, which shall not exceed 9,000 words, and her notice of appeal (only if necessary in accordance with the terms of this decision), by no later than 15 January 2010;

b. The Amicus Prosecutor shall re-file his response, which shall not exceed 9,000 words, by no later than 22 January 2010;

c. The Appellant shall re-file her reply, if any, which shall not exceed 3,000 words, by no later than 26 January 2010;

(c) DENIES the Appellant's request for purportedly new arguments not in the original Amicus Prosecutor's brief to be disregarded; and

(d) DISMISSES the Motion in all other respects.

26. However, as indicated above, the Trial Chamber also decided against the right of the prosecution to be heard on the substantive question of whether its evidence was insufficient to sustain a conviction. The Trial Chamber's decision was rendered orally on 19 October 1999, and then put in writing on 14 December 1999. Taking the two together, it is clear that the Trial Chamber considered that, where it was acting proprio motu, the prosecution had no right to be heard at all; such a right was not accorded by the Rules and could not be based upon the principle audi alteram partem.[52] Was this decision correct?

27. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that a Trial Chamber has a right to decide proprio motu entitles it to make a decision whether or not invited to do so by a party; but the fact that it can do so does not relieve it of the normal duty of a judicial body first to hear a party whose rights can be affected by the decision to be made.[53] Failure to hear a party against whom the Trial Chamber is provisionally inclined is not consistent with the requirement to hold a fair trial.[54] The Rules must be read on this basis, that is to say, that they include a right of the parties to be heard in accordance with the judicial character of the Trial Chamber. The availability of this right to the prosecution and its exercise of the right can be of importance to the making of a correct decision by the Trial Chamber: the latter could benefit in substantial ways from the analysis of the evidence made by the prosecution and from its argument on the applicable law.[55]

28. The prosecution therefore had a right to be heard on the question of whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction;[56] it was denied that right. Counsel for the respondent rightly concedes this.[57]

29. The prosecution's first ground of appeal succeeds. The question of remedy is discussed under the prosecution's third ground of appeal.

100. In this case the cross-appellant has alleged an error in the exercise of the Trial Chamber's discretion. It falls on the cross-appellant to show that the Trial Chamber has erred by imposing a sentence outside the discretionary framework provided by the Statute and the Rules. The Statute provides in Article 24 that penalties shall be limited to imprisonment. Rule 101(A) of the Rules provides that "[a] convicted person may be sentenced to imprisonment for a term up to and including the remainder of the convicted person's life". Thus, it falls within the Trial Chamber's discretion to impose life imprisonment. The Trial Chamber has a broad discretion as to which factors it may consider in sentencing and the weight to attribute to them.

101. As stated above, the Appeals Chamber considers that the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber must be individualised and it is generally not useful to compare one case to another unless the cases relate to the same offence committed in substantially similar circumstances. The present case differs considerably from the Erdemovi} case as to the offences and circumstances, and from the Tadi} case as to circumstances. For example, Erdemovi} was found guilty of only one count, namely a count of violations of the laws or customs of war. For the purpose of sentencing, duress, substantive cooperation with the prosecution and remorse were factors taken into account by the Chamber, which are not relevant in the present case. Tadi} was found guilty of more than one crime, including two murders. A comparison between the present case and these two cases, as well as other cases, is, in this instance, of limited guidance. Further, the Appeals Chamber in the Delali} appeal judgement[133] and the Aleksovski appeal judgement[134] endorsed the following finding by the Trial Chamber in Kupre{ki}:

> The sentence to be imposed must reflect the inherent gravity of the criminal conduct of the accused. The determination of the gravity of the crime requires a consideration of the particular circumstances of the case, as well as the form and degree of the participation of the accused in the crime.[135]

102. As to the alleged failure to consider the remorse of the cross-appellant as genuine, the Trial Chamber was not convinced that "the remorse which Goran Jelisi} allegedly expressed to the expert psychiatrist was sincere" and therefore did not consider it a mitigating factor.[136] Counsel for the cross-appellant submits that the Trial Chamber "misdirected itself as to the burden that the accused had to discharge in order to convince them that he [the cross-appellant] had remorse". He submits that it was not for the cross-appellant to have to satisfy the Court that the remorse was genuine and the Trial Chamber should have accepted expressions of remorse that were accepted by an expert

26. The Appeals Chamber is aware that this issue of concurrent convictions has not been appealed by either party and that the Appellant appealed only his sentence. There is, however, an insoluble nexus between a conviction and a sentence. Also, in the case of an error of law the Appeals Chamber has the discretionary power to correct this error proprio motu if the interests of justice so require. As the Appeals Chamber held in the Mucić et al case, "[a]s part of the [International] Tribunal, [the Appeals Chamber] also has an inherent power, deriving from its judicial function, to control its proceedings in such a way as to ensure that justice is done".[67] Thus, the Appeals Chamber has the discretionary power to correct an error of law in relation to the issue of concurrent convictions for individual and superior responsibility. The underlying rationale is that an appropriate sentence can in general only be based on a correct qualification of the criminal conduct. As regards the sentence, the Appeals Chamber bears in mind that such a re-qualification of the conviction, when it occurs proprio motu in a sentencing appeal proceeding, can never be to the detriment of the accused. The Appeals Chamber also notes that it was invited by the parties to address the issue of concurrent convictions.[68]

27. Based on settled jurisprudence and in the light of the discussion above, only one conviction under each count can be entered against the Appellant pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute. Thus, the Appeals Chamber vacates the Appellant's convictions for Counts 1 through 6 insofar as they are based on a finding of the Appellant's superior responsibility under Article 7(3) of the Statute.

28. However, the Trial Chamber was required to take the Appellant's superior position into account as an aggravating factor at sentencing, as it was agreed upon by the parties and accepted by the Trial Chamber that the Appellant held a leadership position.[69]

29. The Trial Chamber expressly considered the Appellant's leadership position in its discussion of aggravating circumstances and held:

> [...] when determining the sentence, the Trial Chamber considers in aggravation the position of Miodrag Jokić and the influence of this position on the overall situation.[70]

Thus, the Trial Chamber fully recognized, as an aggravating factor, that the Appellant held a position of authority and the power of a high-ranking officer over others committing the crimes charged under Counts 1 through 6 as is reflected in the sentence imposed.[71]

III. APPLICABLE LAW

A. Planning, instigating and ordering pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute

25. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber convicted Kordić for planning, instigating, and ordering crimes pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute.[18] The Trial Chamber's legal definitions of these modes of responsibility have not been appealed by any of the Parties. However, the Appeals Chamber deems it necessary to set out and clarify the applicable law in relation to these modes of responsibility insofar as it is necessary for its own decision.

26. The actus reus of "planning" requires that one or more persons design the criminal conduct constituting one or more statutory crimes that are later perpetrated.[19] It is sufficient to demonstrate that the planning was a factor substantially contributing to such criminal conduct.

27. The actus reus of "instigating" means to prompt another person to commit an offence.[20] While it is not necessary to prove that the crime would not have been perpetrated without the involvement of the accused, it is sufficient to demonstrate that the instigation was a factor substantially contributing to the conduct of another person committing the crime.[21]

28. The actus reus of "ordering" means that a person in a position of authority instructs another person to commit an offence.[22] A formal superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrator is not required.[23]

29. The mens rea for these modes of responsibility is established if the perpetrator acted with direct intent in relation to his own planning, instigating, or ordering.

30. In addition, the Appeals Chamber has held that a standard of mens rea that is lower than direct intent may apply in relation to ordering under Article 7(1) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber held that a person who orders an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that order, has the requisite mens rea for establishing responsibility under Article 7(1) of the Statute pursuant to ordering. Ordering with such awareness has to be regarded as accepting that crime.[24]

[23] Trial Judgement, para. 388.
[24] Blaškić Appeal Judgement, para. 42.

31. The Appeals Chamber similarly holds that in relation to "planning", a person who plans an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that plan, has the requisite mens rea for establishing responsibility under Article 7(1) of the Statute pursuant to planning. Planning with such awareness has to be regarded as accepting that crime.

32. With respect to "instigating", a person who instigates another person to commit an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that instigation, has the requisite mens rea for establishing responsibility under Article 7(1) of the Statute pursuant to instigating. Instigating with such awareness has to be regarded as accepting that crime.

B. The responsibility under Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) of the Statute

33. In the Aleksovski Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber observed that the accused's "superior responsibility as a warden seriously aggravated [his] offences"[25] in relation to those offences of which he was convicted for his direct participation.[26] While the finding of superior responsibility in that case resulted in an aggravation of sentence, there was no entry of conviction under both heads of responsibility in relation to the count in question. In the Čelebići Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber stated:

> Where criminal responsibility for an offence is alleged under one count pursuant to both Article 7(1) and Article 7(3), and where the Trial Chamber finds that both direct responsibility and responsibility as a superior are proved, even though only one conviction is entered, the Trial Chamber must take into account the fact that both types of responsibility were proved in its consideration of sentence. This may most appropriately be considered in terms of imposing punishment on the accused for two separate offences encompassed in the one count. Alternatively, it may be considered in terms of the direct participation aggravating the Article 7(3) responsibility (as discussed above) or the accused's seniority or position of authority aggravating his direct responsibility under Article 7(1).[27]

34. The provisions of Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) of the Statute connote distinct categories of criminal responsibility. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that, in relation to a particular count, it is not appropriate to convict under both Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) of the Statute.[28] Where both Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) responsibility are alleged under the same count, and where the legal requirements pertaining to both of these heads of responsibility are met, a Trial Chamber is no requirement in law that the actor possess a "persecutory intent" over and above a discriminatory intent.[135]

112. In addition, the Appeals Chamber considers that a person who orders, plans or instigates an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that order, plan or instigation, has the requisite mens rea for establishing liability under Article 7(1) of the Statute pursuant to ordering, planning or instigating. Ordering, planning or instigating with such awareness has to be regarded as accepting that crime. Thus, an individual who orders, plans or instigates an act with the awareness of a substantial likelihood that persecutions as a crime against humanity will be committed in the execution of the order, plan or instigation, may be liable under Article 7(1) of the Statute for the crime of persecutions.[136]

3. Murder pursuant to Article 5(a) of the Statute

113. The elements of murder as a crime against humanity are undisputed.[137]

4. Imprisonment pursuant to Article 5(e) of the Statute

114. The Appeals Chamber notes the finding of the Trial Chamber that imprisonment of civilians is unlawful where

- civilians have been detained in contravention of Article 42 of Geneva Convention IV, i.e. that they are detained without reasonable grounds to believe that the security of the Detaining Power makes it absolutely necessary;
- the procedural safeguards required by Article 43 of Geneva Convention IV are not complied with in respect of detained civilians, even where initial detention may have been justified; and
- the imprisonment occurs as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against a civilian population.[138]

115. The Appeals Chamber finds that not all of these elements necessarily have to be met in order to establish liability for unlawful confinement pursuant to Article 5(e) of the Statute: the existence of an international armed conflict, an element of Articles 42 and 43 of Geneva Convention IV, is not required for imprisonment as a crime against humanity.

trial.[261] The basis of Čerkez's argument is that there was no reason in this case to depart from the procedural practice of the International Tribunal, which would have allowed Čerkez more time.[262]

188. Regarding the general allegations of the Prosecution's late and new disclosure of evidence, the Prosecution submits that where this occurred, it was not through fault of the Prosecution, but due to objective reasons[263], and that where Čerkez sought access to materials not subject to the disclosure obligations of the Prosecution, he could have employed the solution available to him under Rule 66(B) but decided not to do so.[264] As to the "Zagreb Materials", the Prosecution explained at trial the reasons for the late disclosure, stating that they had only recently been received from the Republic of Croatia, and had been provided to the defence as soon as possible.[265]

189. The Prosecution responds further that, as regards Čerkez's claim of an unfair trial for lack of time to prepare, Čerkez has failed to prove that the Trial Chamber erred in law in not granting him an extension of time.[266]

190. In a decision of 1 December 2000, the Trial Chamber considered the arguments of the parties regarding the admission of the Zagreb Materials. The Trial Chamber correctly stated the relevant test for the admission of new evidence[267], and proceeded to exclude a large number of exhibits from admissibility for various reasons, inter alia: (1) the document(s) had already been admitted; (2) the material had already been produced in other proceedings before the International Tribunal and therefore had been available to the Prosecution when it presented its case; (3) the material was not sufficiently significant to warrant admission at so late a stage of the proceedings; (4) the material was cumulative and did not add to the voluminous material already in evidence; or (5) the material was based on anonymous sources or hearsay statements that were incapable of then being tested by cross-examination. Furthermore, the probative value of some of the evidence was found to be so reduced that it is substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial; "to admit it at this stage of the proceedings would violate the accused's right to a fair trial" as the Defence would have had no opportunity to cross-examine witness.[268] The Trial Chamber voiced its disapproval of any conduct of the Prosecution threatening the defence's ability to prepare its case.[269] Yet, in considering its duty to ensure that a trial be fair and at the same time expeditious, the Trial Chamber declined to grant an adjournment and effectively refused to admit the majority of the evidence, thereby expressing that the interests of the defence could thus be safeguarded.

191. In connection with Čerkez's general allegations of the Prosecution's late and new disclosure of evidence, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the Prosecution disclosed evidence late so as to ambush the Accused. The Prosecution has amply demonstrated that circumstances beyond its control were at play in securing evidence from the Republic of Croatia.

192. The Appeals Chamber considers, however, that Rule 127(A) of the Rules requires the moving party to show good cause for an extension of time. Already in its decision of 11 September 2001, the Appeals Chamber considered Čerkez's motion and identified the misapprehension in this approach:

> It cannot be "good cause" for an extension of time to be granted to Čerkez to file his Respondent's Brief to the prosecution's Appellant's Brief simply because the prosecution has shown "good cause" for an extension of time to file its Respondent's Brief to the Appellant's Briefs filed by Čerkez and Kordić. That is to read into the right to equality of arms a right to equality of relief, even when the circumstances are quite different in each case and provide no basis whatsoever for granting equal relief.[270]

193. For this argument to succeed, Čerkez must prove that by not granting him an extension of time which would have enabled him to testify, the Trial Chamber committed an error of law. He has failed to do so. This argument is dismissed.

(b) Did alleged late and new disclosure preclude Čerkez from preparing his final trial brief?

194. Čerkez submits that the Trial Chamber erred by not allowing him the delay he requested in order to prepare his Final Trial Brief properly.[271] According to Čerkez, the Trial Chamber's decision[272] to deny an extension of time to prepare his Final Trial Brief or testimony was "flagrantly in contrario to the present practice of the Tribunal", especially in the context of the Prosecution's "almost continuous disclosure process".[273] Because his right to an expeditious trial is secondary to his right to adequate time, and in light of new evidence constantly being disclosed by the Prosecution, Čerkez argues that he was deprived adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his Final Trial Brief.

was based on his role in a campaign and not on his involvement in the day-to-day operations of the attacks.[1399]

973. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not make an explicit finding that Kordić had the requisite mens rea. The Trial Chamber only found "that in those cases where Kordić participated in the HVO attacks, he intended to commit the crimes associated with them and did so. His role was a political leader and his responsibility under Article 7(1) was to plan, instigate and order the crimes."[1400]

974. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber held in relation to persecutions that > there was a campaign of persecution throughout the Indictment period in Central Bosnia (and beyond) aimed at the Bosnian Muslims. This campaign was led by the HDZ-BiH and conducted through the instruments of the HZ H-B and the HVO and orchestrated from Zagreb.[1401]

The Appeals Chamber concluded that there was persecutions in Busovača in January 1993, in the Lašva Valley in April 1993, and in Kiseljak in June 1993, and deemed it not to be necessary to identify the main orchestrators of this campaign. Only the responsibility of Kordić is relevant for the Appeals Chamber. It considers that following the meeting on 15 April 1993, a general plan existed to expel the Muslim civilians and to destroy civilian houses, a plan which had no military justification, but was aimed at the civilian population.

975. At the meeting on 15 April 1993, the order to attack at 05:30 a.m. and the order that "all Muslim men of military age were to be killed while the civilians were not to be killed, but expelled and the houses set on fire" were discussed, and the Trial Chamber found at paragraph 631 of the Trial Judgement that Kordić was present at the meeting of politicians which authorised the 16 April 1993 attack; that he thus participated as the senior regional politician in the planning of the military operation and attack against Ahmići (and other Lašva Valley villages), an operation which was aimed at "cleansing" these areas of Muslims.

976. The Appeals Chamber considers that this general plan included the whole of the Lašva Valley and that the crimes explicitly discussed were to kill military aged men, expel civilians, and destroy houses. For these crimes Kordić had direct intent. Kordić approved the general plan knowing that these crimes would be committed, and with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that other crimes such as killings of civilians, unlawful detention of civilians, and plunder would be cumulative convictions, which has been consistently followed by the International Tribunal[1433] and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda.[1434] It held that:

> reasons of fairness to the accused and the consideration that only distinct crimes may justify multiple convictions, lead to the conclusion that multiple criminal convictions entered under different statutory provisions but based on the same conduct are permissible only if each statutory provision involved has a materially distinct element not contained in the other. An element is materially distinct from another if it requires proof of a fact not required by the other.
> Where this test is not met, the Chamber must decide in relation to which offence it will enter a conviction. This should be done on the basis of the principle that the conviction under the more specific provision should be upheld. Thus, if a set of facts is regulated by two provisions, one of which contains an additional materially distinct element, then a conviction should be entered only under that provision.[1435]

1033. When applying the Čelebići test, what must be considered are the legal elements of each offence, not the acts or omissions giving rise to the offence. What each offence requires, as a matter of law, is the pertinent inquiry. The Appeals Chamber will permit multiple convictions for the same act or omission where it clearly violates multiple distinct provisions of the Statute, where each statutory provision contains a materially distinct element not contained in the other(s), and which element requires proof of a fact which the elements of the other statutory provision(s) do not.[1436] The cumulative convictions test serves twin aims: ensuring that the accused is convicted only for distinct offences, and at the same time, ensuring that the convictions entered fully reflect his criminality.

1034. The Appeals Chamber now turns to the question of the permissibility of cumulative convictions with regard to the specific crimes at issue in this case when applying the above test.

1. The law applicable to cumulative convictions under Articles 2, 3 and 5

1035. With regard to cumulative convictions under Article 2 (grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949) and Article 3 (violations of the laws or customs of war) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber has specifically held that wilful killing under Article 2(a) of the Statute contains a materially distinct element not present in the crime of murder under Article 3 of the Statute,[1437] namely that the victim be a protected person, an element which requires proof of a fact not required by the elements of murder under Article 3. The definition of a protected person includes and goes the Trial Chamber in this case. It found that the offences under Articles 2 and 5 each contain an additional element not required by the other (thereby permitting cumulative convictions) but that the Article 3 offence does not contain an additional required element and is, accordingly, subsumed.[1444] The Appeals Chamber agrees that while cumulative convictions under Articles 3 and 5 are permissible,[1445] in circumstances where such convictions would result in an impermissibly cumulative conviction with Article 2, the Article 3 crime must fall away.

2. The law applicable to intra-Article 5 convictions

1039. It has previously been held in Krnojelac, Vasiljević, and Krstić, that intra-Article 5 convictions under the Statute for persecutions as a crime against humanity with other crimes against humanity found in that Article, are impermissibly cumulative. In Vasiljević and Krstić, the Appeals Chamber stated that the appellant could not be convicted both for murder and persecutions under Article 5(a) and (h) of the Statute, on the basis of the same acts.[1446] It was reasoned that where a charge of persecutions is premised on murder and is proven, the Prosecution need not prove an additional fact in order to secure the conviction for murder because the offence is subsumed by the offence of persecutions, which requires proof of a materially distinct element of discriminatory intent in the commission of the act.[1447] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber in these cases, as well as in Krnojelac, held that convictions for persecutions under Article 5(h) and for other inhumane acts under Article 5(i) on the basis of the same conduct are impermissibly cumulative "since the crime of persecution in the form of inhumane acts subsumes the crime against humanity of inhumane acts."[1448]

1040. The Appeals Chamber considers that cogent reasons warrant a departure from this jurisprudence[1449] as an incorrect application of the Čelebići test to intra-Article 5 convictions. These cases are in direct contradiction to the reasoning and proper application of the test by the Appeals Chambers in Jelisić, Kupreškić, Kunarać, and Musema. As stated above, the Appeals Chamber in Čelebići expressly rejected an approach that takes into account the actual conduct of the accused as determinative of whether multiple convictions for that conduct are permissible. Rather, what is required is an examination, as a matter of law, of the elements of each offence in the Statute that pertain to that conduct for which the accused has been convicted. It must be considered whether each offence charged has a materially distinct element not contained in the other; that is, whether each offence has an element that requires proof of a fact not required by the other offence.

1041. The first pair of intra-Article 5 cumulative convictions at issue in this case is persecutions as a crime against humanity under Article 5(h) of the Statute and murder as a crime against humanity under Article 5(a) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber finds that the definition of persecutions contains materially distinct elements not present in the definition of murder under Article 5 of the Statute: the requirement of proof that an act or omission discriminates in fact and proof that the act or omission was committed with specific intent to discriminate. Murder, by contrast, requires proof that the accused caused the death of one or more persons, regardless of whether the act or omission causing the death discriminates in fact or was specifically intended as discriminatory, which is not required by persecutions. Thus, cumulative convictions on the basis of the same acts under Article 5 of the Statute are permissible in relation to these crimes.

1042. The second pair of intra-Article 5 cumulative convictions at issue in this case is persecutions and other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity under Article 5(i) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber finds that the definition of persecutions contains materially distinct elements not present in the definition of other inhumane acts under Article 5 of the Statute: the requirement of proof that an act or omission discriminates in fact and proof that the act or omission was committed with specific intent to discriminate. Other inhumane acts, by contrast, require proof that the accused caused serious bodily or mental harm to the victim(s), regardless of whether the act or omission causing the harm discriminates in fact or was specifically intended as discriminatory, which is not required by persecutions. Thus, cumulative convictions on the basis of the same acts are permissible in relation to these crimes under Article 5 of the Statute.

1043. Finally, the third pair of intra-Article 5 cumulative convictions at issue in this case is persecutions and imprisonment as a crime against humanity under Article 5(e) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber finds that the definition of persecutions contains materially distinct elements not present in the definition of imprisonment under Article 5 of the Statute: the requirement of proof that an act or omission discriminates in fact and proof that the act or omission was committed with specific intent to discriminate. On the other hand, the offence of imprisonment requires proof of the deprivation of the liberty of an individual without due process of law, regardless of whether the deprivation of liberty discriminates in fact or was specifically intended as discriminatory, which is not required by persecutions. Thus, cumulative convictions on the basis of the same acts are permissible in relation to these crimes under Article 5 of the Statute.

impossible that the three Judges of the Trial Chamber were able to deliberate carefully on the voluminous evidence and produce such a comprehensive Trial Judgement in less than a month.[343]

131. The Prosecution responds that there is no objective evidence to establish bias or error in the Trial Chamber's fact finding based solely on the number of days of deliberation. The Prosecution submits that Amicus Curiae does not demonstrate how preparatory work has overreached into the area of deliberation, he simply asserts that the period of time was "self-evidently insufficient".[344] However, general comments on the length of deliberation do not support a valid ground of appeal; instead, "the alleging party must show some manifest error on the face of the findings demonstrating where the chamber has erred, or giving rise to a reasonable inference that the deliberative process was compromised as alleged".[345] The Prosecution concludes:

> Amicus curiae does not show any failure to take relevant materials into account, or where account has been taken of irrelevant material. He does not show objective bias by pointing to manifestly unreasonable findings of fact or law which show a concluded view was reached prior to the close of the case.[346]

132. Amicus Curiae replies that "[t]he permissible period of non-delegable deliberation here is so short that the reasonable observer might well apprehend that significant conclusions on the evidence had either been reached prior to the close of the parties' cases or were made by people other than the Trial Judges."[347]

(b) Analysis

133. The Appeals Chamber recalls that before taking up duties, every Judge of the Tribunal solemnly declares that he will perform his or her duties and exercise his or her powers honourably, faithfully, impartially and conscientiously.[348] There is a strong presumption that the Judges act in accordance with this oath.[349] A party must adduce sufficient evidence to rebut this presumption.[350] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced that Amicus Curiae has done so here.

> assessments and conclusions in respect of earlier evidence would already have been reached. Not only does this give an appearance of bias, it might also result in actual bias.

[345] Prosecution's Response to Amicus Curiae, para. 49. See also ibid., para. 50, quoting para. 19 of SZHNE v. Minister of Immigration and Multicultural & Indigenous Affairs, [2006] FCA 597, 22 May 2006 (Australia):

> The fact that a judgement is delivered ex tempore is not itself an appealable error. The proper question is whether the evidence and submissions of a party were properly considered and not how long the evidence and submissions were under consideration.

134. Just as general observations on the length of the Trial Judgement, or of particular parts of the Trial Judgement, usually do not suffice to show an error of law because of a lack of reasoned opinion,[351] general comments on the length of the deliberations are insufficient to show improprieties in the deliberative process. Here, Amicus Curiae claims that it was impossible to deliberate properly on such a complex case in only 18 working days, but he brings no evidence to substantiate this claim. In particular, he fails to show that conclusions were reached by other persons than the Judges or that preparatory work overreached into the area of deliberation. In this connection, the Appeals Chamber considers that in cases of the size and complexity of the case at stake, given that as a matter of fairness judgements must be issued in a reasonable time, preparatory work can and should be done as the case goes. This is not to suggest that decisions should be taken by others than the Judges or that any improper decisions should be taken by the Judges in advance of hearing all the evidence. However, there are numerous steps than can and should be taken which will place the Bench in the best situation possible following closing arguments to prepare a reasoned, clear and concise judgement within a reasonable time frame. Against this background, the Appeals Chamber cannot infer that the deliberation process was corrupted. This sub-ground is dismissed.

8. Concluding remark

135. The Appeals Chamber has dismissed Amicus Curiae's assertion that Krajišnik's trial was unfair. That said, the Appeals Chamber notes that certain aspects of the conduct of the trial were not free from defects and may have created an appearance of unfairness. However, based on a holistic assessment of the trial record and the additional evidence on appeal, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that Amicus Curiae has shown that these defects amount to a miscarriage of justice which would undermine the fairness of the trial received by Krajišnik. This ground of appeal is therefore dismissed in its entirety.

B. Alleged failure to provide a reasoned opinion (Ground 2)

1. Submissions

136. Amicus Curiae submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law by failing to provide a sufficiently reasoned judgement,[352] opting for an "illustrative approach" instead of giving reasons as to why certain witnesses or exhibits were found credible and others not.[353] He argues in particular of insider witnesses.[364] The Prosecution concludes that, in any event, Krajišnik was convicted "on the basis of a whole tapestry of evidence, including contemporaneous documents, intercepts, and important international witnesses", and that Amicus Curiae has failed to show that no reasonable trial chamber could have found Krajišnik guilty based on this evidence taken as a whole.[365]

138. Amicus Curiae replies that the Trial Chamber did adopt an illustrative approach and that the earlier parts of the Trial Judgement invoked by the Prosecution merely provide a background and context to the judgement, but that they are devoid of in-depth analysis of individual responsibility for crimes. In particular, he claims that the parts of the Trial Judgement addressing the commission of crimes and Krajišnik's responsibility are not sufficiently linked.[366] Amicus Curiae further submits that the individual witnesses referred to in his Appeal Brief are of "objectively adverse credibility", and that the Trial Chamber nevertheless extensively relied upon their evidence without adequately explaining why it was considered reliable.[367] Amicus Curiae also contends that there is no presumption that the Trial Chamber evaluated all the evidence.[368]

2. Analysis

(a) The requirement to provide a reasoned opinion

139. As recently recalled by the Appeals Chamber:

> The fair trial requirements of the Statute include the right of each accused to a reasoned opinion by the Trial Chamber under Article 23 of the Statute and Rule 98*ter*(C) of the Rules. A reasoned opinion ensures that the accused can exercise his or her right of appeal and that the Appeals Chamber can carry out its statutory duty under Article 25 to review these appeals. The reasoned opinion requirement, however, relates to a Trial Chamber's judgement rather than to each and every submission made at trial.[369]

As a general rule, a Trial Chamber "is required only to make findings on those facts which are essential to the determination of guilt on a particular count";[370] it "is not required to articulate every [364] Prosecution's Response to Amicus Curiae, para. 60. The Prosecution illustrates the "[Trial] Chamber's sound approach in assessing reliability of evidence" by referring to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the testimonies of Witnesses Đerić and Mandić as reflected in paragraphs 267 and 1085 of the Trial Judgement (Prosecution's Response to Amicus Curiae, para. 61). The Prosecution adds that, by simply listing impugned paragraphs and through the mere naming of "insider witnesses" without adequate reasoning, Amicus Curiae fails to explain why no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on the evidence in question (Prosecution's Response to Amicus Curiae, paras 62-63).

step of its reasoning for each particular finding it makes"[371] nor is it "required to set out in detail why it accepted or rejected a particular testimony."[372] However, the requirements to be met by the Trial Chamber may be higher in certain cases.[373] It will be "necessary for any appellant claiming an error of law because of the lack of a reasoned opinion to identify the specific issues, factual findings or arguments, which he submits the Trial Chamber omitted to address and to explain why this omission invalidated the decision."[374]

(b) Whether the Trial Chamber erred in using an "illustrative approach"

140. Amicus Curiae contends that the Trial Chamber used an "illustrative approach" with regard to the evidence it considered, and that it failed to provide adequate reasons for its findings. Amicus Curiae refers more specifically to paragraphs 292 and 889 of the Trial Judgement, which read as follows:

> 292. The Chamber notes that there is no practical way of presenting in detail all the evidence it has heard and received during the trial. The Chamber has been able to present only the most relevant parts of the evidence in detail, but generally has had to confine itself to presenting evidence in a summarized form.
> 889. Second, the Chamber cannot possibly discuss here all the evidence relevant to the Accused's responsibility which it received in the course of two-and-a-half years of trial and subsequently analysed. Having carefully deliberated on this vast amount of evidence, what the Chamber can (and must) do is to illustrate the types of fact that underlie its conclusions, so that these conclusions are sufficiently explained.

141. The Appeals Chamber is not convinced that these paragraphs demonstrate the Trial Chamber's failure to provide adequate reasons for its decision. The Trial Chamber does not have to refer to the testimony of every witness or every piece of evidence on the trial record; it is to be presumed that the Trial Chamber evaluated all the evidence before it.[375] In fact, the Trial Chamber specifically stated that it had "carefully deliberated" on the evidence presented to it. Both impugned passages merely stress the fact that the Trial Chamber could not present and discuss "all the evidence" in the judgement, a statement which cannot, by itself, be equated with a failure to examine the evidence in question, nor with a failure to provide sufficient reasons for the conclusions reached in the Trial Judgement. The Appeals Chamber considers that the approach taken by the Trial Chamber in the impugned paragraphs was not in error.

142. The Appeals Chamber also recalls that it is necessary for any appellant claiming an error of law based on the lack of a reasoned opinion to identify the specific issues, factual findings or

> Trial Chamber may find some parts of a witness's testimony credible, and rely on them, while rejecting other parts as not credible.[388]

The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not identify the witnesses for whose testimonies it considered "great caution" to be required, nor did it expressly examine the reliability of each of these witnesses individually. Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber implicitly explained its acceptance of certain parts of the evidence in question: in referring to other evidence, it showed that it accepted the impugned testimony because it considered it to be in agreement with other evidence adduced.[389] The Appeals Chamber is thus of the view that the Trial Judgement provided sufficient reasons for its decision to allow Krajišnik to exercise his right of appeal.

148. As to the argument that the Trial Chamber did not assess the evidence in question with the required caution, the Appeals Chamber considers that the above statement of the Trial Chamber[390] cannot, of course, in itself establish an irrefutable presumption that the evidence given by each of these witnesses was indeed examined by the Trial Chamber with caution. However, it is a clear indication that the Trial Chamber, in its evaluation of the evidence in question, was well aware of the potential risks related to its use. Already during the trial, the Trial Chamber stressed its approach of special caution and emphasised an "extra degree of suspicion and scrutiny" with regard to a witness who might have an interest in testifying before the Trial Chamber.[391] While the Trial Judgement does not expressly reflect the Trial Chamber's evaluation of the evidence given by the impugned witnesses, its cautious approach towards this evidence is apparent from its assessment of the evidence as a whole and, in particular, from its reliance on numerous pieces of evidence for its findings.[392]

149. In particular, the Appeals Chamber considers that Amicus Curiae has failed to show any error by the Trial Chamber when examining the testimonies before it, nor has he demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on this evidence for findings essential to the determination of

[389] In this context, the Appeals Chamber also notes the Trial Chamber's general explanation of its approach in dealing with evidence it considered unreliable or irrelevant when it stated that it "has, on occasions, explicitly refuted some evidence. However, it has generally simply disregarded evidence when, after having considered the record as a whole, it deemed it unreliable or irrelevant for the purpose of reaching an informed decision." (Trial Judgement, para. 22).
[390] Trial Judgement, para. 1203.
[391] See Decision on the Defence's Motion to Preclude Miroslav Deronjić from Giving Testimony Prior to Being Sentenced, 16 February 2004 ("Decision on Deronjić's Testimony"), paras 9-10, where the Trial Chamber acknowledged that a person in Mr. Deronjić's position, who had pleaded guilty but had not yet been sentenced, "might be tempted to improve his chances before the sentencing panel by giving untruthful evidence to this Chamber that significantly assists the Prosecution's case", and thus stated that it would "exercise particular caution in scrutinizing, weighing up, and finding corroboration for the evidence that Deronjić places before it" and that it would "closely control the examination of the witness".
[392] Cf. Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 174, stating that "[i]ndividual items of the evidence, such as the testimony of different witnesses, or documents admitted into evidence, have to be analysed in the light of the entire body of evidence adduced. Thus, even if there are some doubts as to the reliability of the testimony of a certain witness,

Krajišnik's guilt. The Appeals Chamber stresses that the mere listing of witnesses of allegedly "doubtful credibility" by Amicus Curiae and the enumeration of paragraphs of the Trial Judgement which, according to him, rely erroneously on these witnesses, is insufficient in itself to substantiate an error of the Trial Chamber. In any event, the examples summarily provided by Amicus Curiae[393] do not contain any indication of an error by the Trial Chamber in its assessment of the evidence as a whole. In fact, in most of these examples, the testimony of the impugned witnesses is but one of several pieces of evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber in reaching its findings.[394]

150. Moreover, the Trial Chamber's cautious approach in its assessment of the reliability of the challenged witness testimonies is further evidenced by the correct exercise of its discretion to rely on specific parts of these testimonies and to reject other parts as not credible.[395] Indeed, the assessment whether to rely on the evidence given by a person who might have certain interests while testifying before the Tribunal will vastly depend on the specific context of the provided information, as correctly reflected in the analysis of the Trial Chamber.[396]

151. In light of these considerations, the Appeals Chamber finds that Amicus Curiae has failed to show that the Trial Chamber erred when examining the evidence of witnesses of allegedly "doubtful credibility" and has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on their evidence in convicting Krajišnik. Amicus Curiae has not shown any error in the Trial Chamber's approach when assessing the evidence as a whole.

152. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this ground of appeal of Amicus Curiae.

that testimony may be corroborated by other pieces of evidence leading the Trial Chamber to conclude that the witness is credible."

[393] Amicus Curiae's Appeal Brief, fns 237 and 240.

[394] The Appeals Chamber also notes that, in some cases, the challenged evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber (see, for example, Trial Judgement, paras 953, 958 and 1022) is based on evidence stemming from the Indictment period. The Trial Chamber's reliance on these specific, contemporaneous phone intercepts can therefore not reflect an intention of the witness to "implicate the accused person before the Tribunal" (Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 204) and is therefore unsuitable to show that the Trial Chamber did not apply the required caution when assessing the evidence of potentially interested witnesses testifying before it.

[395] See, inter alia, Blagojević and Jokić Appeal Judgement, para. 82.

[396] This is evidenced, inter alia, by the Trial Chamber's graded assessment of the testimony given by Momčilo Mandić, one of the witnesses claimed by Amicus Curiae to be of "objectively adverse credibility" (Amicus Curiae's Reply, para. 37. See also Amicus Curiae's Appeal Brief, para. 138 and fn. 237). While in paragraph 1085 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber chose to rely on Mr. Mandić's opinion, which it found to be equivalent to Witness Đerić's assessment, and concluded that Mr. Mandić's opinion was correct "in light of all the evidence"; in other parts of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber, "in view of the evidence on the record", rejected the evidence provided by Mr. Mandić (Trial Judgement, para. 267).

17. The Chamber finally recalls that the admission of adjudicated facts from previous proceedings leaves unaffected the Chamber's function of assessing their relevance and weight, taking into consideration the evidence in the present case in its entirety.

III. DISCUSSION

18. The Chamber has proceeded to apply the previous principles to the items submitted by the Prosecution. With respect to the Defence's submissions that certain items contain legal characterizations, the Chamber notes that item 489 (previously 677) – the only item still pending from that category – does not contain any characterization that is essentially legal in nature, but rather refers to the mental state of those who established and perpetuated the conditions of detention in KP Dom.

19. With respect to the Defence's submissions that items 620 and 243a are not sufficiently distinct and concrete, are subject to reasonable dispute between the parties in this case and impact on the right of the Accused to a fair trial, the Chamber agrees that item 444 (previously 620) – the only item still pending from that category – is not a distinct factual finding of a Trial Chamber relevant for the Indictment period in this case.

20. With respect to the Defence's submissions on items 1062 to 1080, the Chamber notes that only nine of these items remain on the list (items renumbered 638 to 646). These nine items all refer to the Višegrad municipality, and the Chamber understands the findings as referring to that municipality only. The fact that they are all based on a report which will probably be tendered into evidence in this case is immaterial.

21. With respect to the Defence's submissions on items 1034-1039, 1048-1049, 1052-1057, 1065, 1069, 1070-1072, 1074, 1076, the Chamber finds that items 613-617 (previously 1035-1039), 626-627 (previously 1048-1049), 630-632 (previously 1052-1054), 634 (previously 1057), 642-644 (previously 1069-1070 and 1072), and 646 (previously 1074) – i.e., the remaining items on the revised list – are distinct and concrete factual findings of a previous Trial Chamber. The Chamber only finds it necessary to reword item 631 (previously

241. The relevant provisions on sentencing are Articles 23 and 24 of the Statute, and Rules 100 to 106 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. These provisions constitute factors to be taken into consideration by the Trial Chamber when deciding a sentence on conviction.[396] They do not constitute binding limitations on a Chamber's discretion to impose a sentence,[397] which must always be decided according to the facts of each particular case.[398]

242. The jurisprudence of the ICTY and ICTR has also generated a body of relevant factors to consider during sentencing.[399] The Appeals Chamber has emphasised, however, that it is "inappropriate to set down a definitive list of sentencing guidelines for future reference,"[400] given that the imposition of a sentence is a discretionary decision. The Appeals Chamber has further explained that only a "discernible error" in the exercise of that sentencing discretion by the Trial Chamber may justify a revision of the sentence.[401]

243. It is therefore for the Appeals Chamber to determine whether the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in imposing a sentence of 46 years on Radislav Krstić.

1. The arguments concerning the gravity of the crimes Radislav Krstić has committed and his participation therein

244. Both the Defence and the Prosecution have submitted arguments concerning the gravity of the crimes alleged. The Prosecution argues that in light of the gravity of the crimes Krstić committed, he should be sentenced to life imprisonment.[402] The Defence focuses on the Trial Chamber's recognition of Krstić's limited participation in the events of July 1995 and submits that the sentence was unduly harsh.[403]

245. As discussed above, the Appeals Chamber will consider arguments relating to sentencing only insofar as they allege the commission of a discernible error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of

(i) Criminal Participation

706. The Prosecutor argues that General Krsti}'s "direct, conscious and deliberate participation in creating and furthering the criminal plan as the Chief of Staff and Commander of the Troops which committed the offences, which evidences his intent and willingness to participate in the commission of the crimes, serves as an aggravating factor". The Prosecutor argues that General Krsti}'s "penultimate command after General Mladi}, and/or the fact that he was in a position to order the prevention, cessation or punishment" of the crimes serve as aggravating factors.[1490]

707. The Trial Chamber has already examined the criminal responsibility of the accused in order to decide on his guilt. The same elements should not be reviewed a first time as a constitutive element of the crime and a second time as an aggravating circumstance.

708. Direct criminal participation under Article 7 (1), if linked to a high-rank position of command, may be invoked as an aggravating factor. In determining a sentence, both Tribunals have mentioned the three most direct forms of participation, "planning, ordering, instigating", as possible aggravating circumstances in the case of a highly placed accused.[1491] So it is in the case of genocide. Because an accused can commit genocide without the aid and co-operation of others, provided he has the requisite intent, a one-man genocidal agent could be viewed differently from the commander of an army or the president of a State, who has enlisted the resources of an army or a nation to carry out his genocidal effort. The Trial Chamber finds that the direct participation of a high level superior in a crime is an aggravating circumstance, although to what degree depends on the actual level of authority and the form of direct participation.

709. A high rank in the military or political field does not, in itself, lead to a harsher sentence. But a person who abuses or wrongly exercises power deserves a harsher sentence than an individual acting on his or her own. The consequences of a person's acts are necessarily more serious if he is at the apex of a military or political hierarchy and uses his position to commit crimes.[1492] It must be noted though that current case law of the Tribunal does not evidence a discernible pattern of the some jurisdictions, the judge cannot consider any other aggravating circumstances than those provided by the law, e.g. French Criminal Code, articles 132.71 et seq. (in general) for instance; Dutch Criminal Code, Articles 10, 57, 421-423 for instance.

[1491] Kambanda Judgement, para. 44, Kupre{ki} Judgement, para. 862; Rutaganda Judgement, para. 470 and Akayesu Judgement, para. 36.

[1492] Rutaganda Judgement, para. 469: "the fact that a person in a high position abused his authority and committed crimes is to be viewed as an aggravating factor." Kambanda Judgement, para. 44. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber reduced the sentence imposed on Du{ko Tadi} from 25 to 20 years stating that "there is a need for sentences to reflect the relative significance of the role of the [accused] and [...to take into account] his level in the command structure, [which] was law.", Tadi} Sentencing Judgement III, paras 55-57.

Tribunal imposing sentences on subordinates that differ greatly from those imposed on their superiors.[1493]

(ii) Premeditation and Motives of Crimes

710. The Prosecutor also argues that the "premeditation involved in the genocide and deportation is clearly an aggravating circumstance in the case, given General Krsti}'s critical role in planning this massive crime".[1494]

711. Premeditation[1495] may "constitute an aggravating circumstance when it is particularly flagrant" and motive "to some extent [is] a necessary factor in the determination of sentence after guilt has been established."[1496]. When a genocide or a war crime, neither of which requires the element of premeditation, are in fact planned in advance, premeditation may constitute an aggravating circumstance.[1497] Premeditated or enthusiastic participation in a criminal act necessarily reveals a higher level of criminality on the part of the participant.[1498] In determining the appropriate sentence, a distinction is to be made between the individuals who allowed themselves to be drawn into a maelstrom of violence, even reluctantly, and those who initiated or aggravated it and thereby more substantially contributed to the overall harm. Indeed, reluctant participation in the crimes may in some instances be considered as a mitigating circumstance.

712. The Trial Chamber agrees with the Prosecutor on the relevance of premeditation as an aggravating factor in the abstract but, based on the sequence of General Krsti}'s delayed participation in the genocidal scheme initiated by General Mladi} and others, finds it not applicable to the situation.

(b) Mitigating Circumstances

713. Neither the Statute, the Rules nor the jurisprudence of the Tribunals define "mitigating" circumstances.[1499] A definition of what is a mitigating circumstance is provided in fact by the SFRY Criminal Code. Article 42(2) of the SFRY Criminal Code stated that the judge may determine whether "there are mitigating circumstances which are such that they indicate that the

2. Discussion

127. After an extensive review of the Tribunal's jurisprudence and domestic laws from multiple jurisdictions, the Trial Chamber concluded: [156]

> the actus reus of the crime of rape in international law is constituted by: the sexual penetration, however slight: (a) of the vagina or anus of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator or any other object used by the perpetrator; or (b) the mouth of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator; where such sexual penetration occurs without the consent of the victim. Consent for this purpose must be consent given voluntarily, as a result of the victim's free will, assessed in the context of the surrounding circumstances. The mens rea is the intention to effect this sexual penetration, and the knowledge that it occurs without the consent of the victim.[157]

128. The Appeals Chamber concurs with the Trial Chamber's definition of rape. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber believes that it is worth emphasising two points. First, it rejects the Appellants' "resistance" requirement, an addition for which they have offered no basis in customary international law. The Appellants' bald assertion that nothing short of continuous resistance provides adequate notice to the perpetrator that his attentions are unwanted is wrong on the law and absurd on the facts.

129. Secondly, with regard to the role of force in the definition of rape, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber appeared to depart from the Tribunal's prior definitions of rape.[158] However, in explaining its focus on the absence of consent as the conditio sine qua non of rape, the Trial Chamber did not disavow the Tribunal's earlier jurisprudence, but instead sought to explain the relationship between force and consent. Force or threat of force provides clear evidence of non-consent, but force is not an element per se of rape.[159] In particular, the Trial Chamber wished to explain that there are "factors ?other than force? which would render an act of sexual penetration non-consensual or non-voluntary on the part of the victim".[160] A narrow focus on force or threat of force could permit perpetrators to evade liability for sexual activity to which the other party had not consented by taking advantage of coercive circumstances without relying on physical force.

130. The Appeals Chamber notes, for example, that in some domestic jurisdictions, neither the use of a weapon nor the physical overpowering of a victim is necessary to demonstrate force. A threat to retaliate "in the future against the victim or any other person" is a sufficient indicium of

[157] Ibid., para 460.
[158] See, e.g., Furund`ija Trial Judgement, para 185. Prior attention has focused on force as the defining characteristic of rape. Under this line of reasoning, force or threat of force either nullifies the possibility of resistance through physical violence or renders the context so coercive that consent is impossible.
[159] Trial Judgement, para 458.
[160] Ibid., para 438.

(b) Rape and Enslavement

186. Equally meritless is the Appellants' contention that Kunarac's and Kovac's convictions for enslavement under Article 5(c) and rape under Article 5(g) of the Statute are impermissibly cumulative. That the Appellants also forced their captives to endure rape as an especially odious form of their domestic servitude does not merge the two convictions. As the Appeals Chamber has previously explained in its discussion of enslavement, it finds that enslavement, even if based on sexual exploitation, is a distinct offence from that of rape.[254] The Appeals Chamber, therefore, rejects this ground of appeal.

3. Article 3 of the Statute

(a) Scope of Article 3 of the Statute

187. The Appellants argue that Article 3 of the Statute does not apply to their actions because it is concerned only with battlefield violations (Hague law) and not with the protection of individual physical security. That Article 3 of the Statute incorporates customary international law, particularly Common article 3 of the Geneva Conventions, is clear from the discussions on the Statute in the Security Council on 25 May 1993, and has since then been confirmed in the consistent jurisprudence of the Tribunal.[255] Alone among the Articles of the Statute, Article 3 is illustrative, serving as a residual clause. It is not necessary to rehearse the arguments here and, therefore, this ground of appeal is rejected.

(b) Intra-Article Convictions under Article 3 of the Statute

188. The Appellants' argument against convictions for rape and torture are made also with regard to intra-Article convictions under Article 3 of the Statute. As with intra-Article convictions for rape and torture under Article 5 of the Statute, the Appellants argue that in the "absence of described distinct infliction of physical or mental pain... the infliction of physical or mental pain is brought down only to the very act of sexual intercourse, without the consent of the victim" and that the convicted person's conduct "can not be deemed to be both the case of a criminal offence of rape and the criminal offence of torture, because one act excludes the other".[256]

JUDGEMENT

The Office of the Prosecutor:

Mr. Dirk Ryneveld
Mrs. Hildegard Uertz-Retzlaff
Ms. Peggy Kuo
Mr. Daryl Mundis

Counsel for the Accused:

Mr. Slavi{a Prodanovic and Ms. Maja Pilipovic for the accused Dragoljub Kunarac
Mr. Momir Kolesar and Mr. Vladimir Rajic for the accused Radomir Kovac
Mr. Goran Jovanovic and Ms. Jelena Lopicic for the accused Zoran Vukovic under paragraph 10.1. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that this specific rape has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

727. The Trial Chamber finds that the incident described under paragraph 10.1 of the Indictment, apart from the alleged rape of J.G., has been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Dragoljub Kunarac was fully aware that the other girls, whom he took out of Ulica Osmana Đikica together with "Gaga" and DP 6, ie FWS-191, FWS-186 and J.G., were taken to the abandoned house also for the purpose of rape.

(ii) The rape, enslavement and outrages upon personal dignity of FWS-191 and FWS-186[1395]

728. Paragraph 10.2 of Indictment IT-96-23 alleges that FWS-186 and FWS-191 were kept in the abandoned house in Trnova~e for approximately 6 months starting on 2 August 1992. It further alleges that, during the time of their detention, FWS-191 was constantly raped by the accused Dragoljub Kunarac while FWS-186 was constantly raped by DP 6. Dragoljub Kunarac reserved FWS-191 for himself. According to paragraph 10.3, the girls were treated as personal property of the accused Kunarac and DP 6, they had to do household chores and they had to obey all demands.

729. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the incidents charged under paragraphs 10.2 and 10.3 have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

730. As to the alibi of Dragoljub Kunarac, the Trial Chamber refers to its findings above on the grounds of which it rejects the Defence arguments also with regard to the incidents described in paragraphs 10.2 and 10.3. The Trial Chamber notes that, in any case, Kunarac did not provide any alibi for the period after 8 August 1992.

731. As set out above with regard to the incident charged under paragraph 10.1, both FWS-191 and FWS-186 reliably identified the accused Dragoljub Kunarac.

732. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that FWS-191 and FWS-186 were kept in the Trnova~e house for five to six months, a period that the Trial Chamber accepts as falling under the time frame set out in the Indictment as "approximately 6 months".

[1395] Indictment IT-96-23, pars 10.2 and 10.3.

733. The Trial Chamber accepts the testimony of FWS-191 that she was kept in the Trnova~e house for about five to six months. As already discussed, the Trial Chamber reiterates that specific dates and exact time periods do not require to be proved beyond reasonable doubt due to the specific war context wherein the crimes concerned occurred. The Trial Chamber therefore accepts the testimony of FWS-186 that she stayed in the house in Trnova~e for about five months as supporting evidence of FWS-191. The Trial Chamber further finds that J.G. stayed only for a few days in the house in Trnova~e, as alleged in the Indictment and as was stated by FWS-186.

734. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Dragoljub Kunarac constantly raped FWS-191 for about two months while she was kept in the house. Kunarac came to the Trnova~e house until the end of September, and that each time he came he would rape FWS-191. Although Kunarac broke his arm in an accident sometime in September 1992, he nevertheless continued to rape her. The testimony of FWS-191 is supported by that of FWS-186, who said that FWS-191 was raped by Kunarac for about one and a half to two months while the girls stayed at the house. She further remembered having seen Dragoljub Kunarac at some point with a plaster cast on his arm.

735. FWS-186 was raped by DP 6 continuously during her five-month stay at the Trnova~e house. She was obliged to have sexual intercourse with DP 6 whenever he returned to the house from Montenegro or from the frontlines. The Trial Chamber regards the testimony of FWS-186 as sufficient to prove the rapes by DP 6 in the Trnova~e house beyond reasonable doubt. Her testimony is supported by the testimony of FWS-191, who testified that FWS-186 was forced to have intercourse with DP 6 at the Trnova~e house whenever he was at the house until the summer of 1993.

736. The evidence provided by both witnesses is reliable and supported by the testimonies of other witnesses. FWS-175 who, as FWS-191 confirmed in her testimony, was also brought to the Trnova~e house, testified that FWS-186 was already there when she arrived and that she, FWS-175, noticed that FWS-186 was with DP 6.

737. FWS-192, the mother of FWS-191, testified that "Žaga" told her that her daughter was with him and that he would not bring her back. In addition to the testimony of FWS-191, who recounted having been allowed to write a letter to her mother at some point, FWS-192 testified that she received this letter from "Žaga" and DP 6. With regard to FWS-186, FWS-192 further recounted that she was present when DP 6 admitted to FWS-185, the mother of FWS-186, that her daughter was with him. She recounted DP 6 having ordered FWS-185 to give him clothes for her daughter.

738. The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of FWS-191 and FWS-186, and finds that both witnesses were treated as the personal property of Dragoljub Kunarac and DP 6 during their stay in the Trnova~e house as described in paragraph 10.3 of the Indictment.

739. The Trial Chamber accepts from FWS-191 that the girls at Trnova~e did anything they were ordered to do by the soldiers while being kept there. The testimonies of both FWS-191 and FWS-186 substantiated convincingly that the girls were kept in the house to be used by Dragoljub Kunarac and DP 6 for sexual services whenever the soldiers returned to the house.

740. The Trial Chamber further accepts that the witnesses were not free to go where they wanted to, even if, as FWS-191 admitted, they were given the keys to the house at some point. Referring to the factual findings with regard to the general background, the Trial Chamber accepts that the girls, as described by FWS-191, had nowhere to go, and had no place to hide from Dragoljub Kunarac and DP 6, even if they had attempted to leave the house. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Kunarac and DP 6, both being Serb soldiers in the Foca area, were fully aware of this fact. The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of FWS-191 and FWS-186 that the girls performed household chores for the soldiers whilst under captivity.

741. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proven beyond reasonable doubt that FWS-191 was raped by Dragoljub Kunarac and that FWS-186 was raped by DP 6, continuously and constantly whilst they were kept in the house in Trnova~e. Kunarac in fact asserted his exclusivity over FWS-191 by forbidding any other soldier to rape her. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Kunarac was aware of the fact that DP 6 constantly and continuously raped FWS-186 during this period, as he himself did to FWS-191. It has not been established however that Kunarac provided DP 6 with any form of assistance, encouragement or moral support which had a substantial effect on the perpetration of the individual rapes. Kunarac continued to come to the house for about two months, but it has not been established, apart from the incident charged and described in paragraph 10.1, that he was present while DP 6 raped FWS-186. It has not been shown either how Kunarac's presence or actions would have assisted DP 6 in his raping FWS-186; so loose is the connection between the events at the house and his sporadic presence there, it would stretch the concept of aiding and abetting beyond its limits with respect to the actual rapes by DP 6.

742. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that FWS-191 and FWS-186 were denied any control over their lives by Dragoljub Kunarac and DP 6 during their stay there. They had to obey all orders, they had to do household chores and they had no realistic option whatsoever to flee the house in Trnova~e or to escape their assailants. They were subjected to other mistreatments, such as Kunarac inviting a soldier into the house so that he could rape FWS-191 for 100 Deutschmark if he so wished. On another occasion, Kunarac tried to rape FWS-191 while in his hospital bed, in front of other soldiers. The two women were treated as the personal property of Kunarac and DP 6. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Kunarac established these living conditions for the victims in concert with DP 6. Both men personally committed the act of enslavement. By assisting in setting up the conditions at the house, Kunarac also aided and abetted DP 6 with respect to his enslavement of FWS-186.

743. There is no evidence upon which it would be appropriate to convict the accused for outrages upon personal dignity that is not already covered by other convictions.

744. In summary, the Trial Chamber finds that:

(i) The allegations made in paragraph 10.1 of Indictment IT-96-23 have partly been proved beyond reasonable doubt. On 2 August, Dragoljub Kunarac personally raped FWS-191 and aided and abetted the rape of FWS-186 by DP 6.

(ii) The allegations made in paragraph 10.2 of Indictment IT-96-23 have been proved beyond reasonable doubt. For a period of about 6 months, FWS-186 and FWS-191 were kept in the house in Trnova~e. For a period of about 2 months, Dragoljub Kunarac sporadically visited the house and raped FWS-191 on those occasions.

(iii) The allegations made in paragraph 10.3 of Indictment IT-96-23 have been proved beyond reasonable doubt. While they were kept in the house in Trnovace, FWS-191 and FWS-186 were treated as the property of Dragoljub Kunarac and DP 6.

745. The Trial Chamber consequently finds the accused Dragoljub Kunarac GUILTY of rape under Counts 19 and 20, GUILTY of enslavement under Count 18 and NOT GUILTY of outrages upon personal dignity under Count 21.

2. Radomir Kovac (Indictment IT-96-23)

746. Counts 22 to 25 of Indictment IT-96-23 charge the accused Radomir Kovac with the rape, enslavement and outrages upon personal dignity of FWS-75, FWS-87, A.B. and A.S., as described in paragraphs 11.1 to 11.6 of the Indictment.

(a) The arrival of the girls at Radomir Kovac's apartment

747. Paragraph 11.1 of the Indictment alleges that, on or about 30 October 1992, FWS-75, FWS-87, A.S. and A.B. were taken from "Karaman's house" in Miljevina to Foca by Dragan Zelenovic, DP 1 and DP 6, and that they were subsequently handed over to the accused Radomir Kovac. Paragraph 11.2 alleges that Radomir Kovac detained FWS-75 and A.B. - between about 31 October 1992 until December 1992 - and FWS-87 and A.S. - from the same date until February 1993 - in a apartment over which he had control. The Indictment alleges that, while being so kept, the girls had to perform household chores, that they were frequently sexually assaulted and that they were beaten, threatened, psychologically oppressed and kept in constant fear.

748. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proven beyond reasonable doubt that, on or about 30 October 1992, FWS-75, FWS-87, A.S. and A.B. were taken from "Karaman's house" and brought by Dragan Zelenovic, DP 6 and DP 1 to the Lepa Brena building block in Foca. There, they were handed over to the accused Radomir Kovac. Another man named Jagos Kostic lived in Radomir Kovac's apartment.

749. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied that, while kept in Radomir Kovac's apartment, these girls were constantly raped, humiliated and degraded. They were sometimes beaten, slapped or threatened by one of the occupants of the apartment. The accused Kovac once slapped FWS-75 because she refused to sleep with a soldier whom he had brought in. Twelve-year old A.B. was sent in her place. Kovac also beat FWS-75 up on other occasions.

750. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the girls could not and did not leave the apartment without one of the men accompanying them. When the men were away, they would be locked inside the apartment with no way to get out. Only when the men were there would the door of the apartment be left open. Notwithstanding the fact that the door may have been open while the men were there, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the girls were also psychologically unable to leave, as they would have had nowhere to go had they attempted to flee. They were also aware of the risks involved if they were re-captured.

751. While they were detained in Radomir Kovac's apartment, the girls were required to take care of the household chores, the cooking and the cleaning.

752. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the girls' diet and hygiene was completely neglected by Radomir Kovac. When the men were in the apartment, the girls would get their left-over food. But Kovac sometimes left the girls behind without making sure that they would have sufficient food while he was away. On some occasions, witness DK, a cousin of the accused Radomir Kovac who lived on the floor below the accused's apartment, passed some food to the girls through the window. Considering that people were organising parties where food and drinks were served, that cafés and shops were open, that supply would be available from Montenegro, and that Kovac received food from the army, the Trial Chamber does not accept that the hunger of the girls while detained in Kovac's apartment was due to general shortage of food in Foca.

(b) FWS-75 and A.B.

753. Paragraph 11.3 of the Indictment alleges that FWS-75 and A.B. were detained in Radomir Kovac's apartment from about 31 October 1992 until about 20 November 1992, during which time they had to do household chores and sexually please soldiers, including Radomir Kovac. The Indictment alleges that Radomir Kovac and Jagos Kosti} frequently raped them. In addition, on an unknown date during this period, Kovac is alleged to have brought a soldier named Slavo Ivanovi} to the apartment and ordered FWS-75 to have sexual intercourse with him; when she refused, Kovac beat her. Paragraph 11.3 further alleges that, around 20 November 1992, Kovac took FWS-75 and A.B. from his apartment to a house near Hotel Zelengora where he handed them to other Serb soldiers. The two girls were kept in this house, which Kovac visited for about two weeks. Thereafter, they were taken to an apartment in Pod Masala, where they remained for about fifteen days before being eventually taken back to Kovac's apartment on or about 25 December 1992. The Indictment states that, during the whole period, the two girls were raped. Finally, paragraph 11.3 alleges that, on or about 25 December, when FWS-75 and A.B. were brought back to Kovac's apartment, Kovac sold A.B. to an unidentified soldier for 200 Deutschmark and that, on about 26 December, FWS-75 was handed over to DP 1.

754. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proven beyond reasonable doubt that FWS-75 and A.B. stayed for a few days in Radomir Kovac's apartment before being taken away by a Serb soldier named Vojkan Jadzic to another apartment in the vicinity of Hotel Zelengora. The two girls stayed at that apartment for about 15 days, during which they were constantly raped by at least ten or fifteen Serb soldiers. Kovac would come to this apartment from time to time, asking the girls how they were doing and if they had been abused, despite being was aware that they were being raped. The two girls were then taken to another apartment near Pod Masala by Serb soldiers, including Vojkan Jadzic. They stayed in that other apartment for about 7-10 days, during which time they continued to be raped.

755. One evening, Vojkan Jadzic took the girls back to Radomir Kovac's apartment where FWS-87 and A.S. were still being kept. The exact date of their being brought back to Kovac's apartment has not been established with precision. On the basis of the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that FWS-75 and A.B. were taken back sometime between the first and the second week of December 1992. The Trial Chamber notes once again, for the reasons given above, that a discrepancy in the evidence given as to the exact date would not in itself be sufficient to discredit the evidence. The Trial Chamber also notes that as there has been no attempt to provide an alibi for this period, the precise date is of no importance.

756. The day after they had returned, A.B. and FWS-75 were taken from Radomir Kovac's apartment. A.B. was taken by a man called "Dragec", who gave Kovac 200 Deutschmarks in the process, while FWS-75 was handed over to DP 1 and Dragan "Zelja" Zelenovic. The Trial Chamber finds that this sexual exploitation of A.B. and FWS-75, in particular their sale, constitutes a particularly degrading attack on their dignity.

757. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proven beyond reasonable doubt that, while she was in Radomir Kovac's apartment, FWS-75 was raped by both Kovac and Jagos Kostic. She was once raped together with FWS-87 by Kovac while "Swan Lake" was playing in the background. In addition, she was raped by several other soldiers who would come to Kovac's apartment, including Vojkan Jadzic and the accused Zoran Vukovic. It should be noted, however, that this latter rape was not charged against the accused Zoran Vukovic, and that the Trial Chamber will therefore not take it into consideration with respect to the accused Zoran Vukovic's conviction and sentencing, but will do so for purposes of identification and as circumstantial evidence for the required mens rea necessary to commit the other crimes against humanity with which he is charged.

758. While in Radomir Kovac's apartment, twelve-year old A.B. was raped by, among others, the accused Kovac, Slavo Ivanovic and "Zeljko".

759. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the allegations made in paragraphs 11.3 of the Indictment have all been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The Trial Chamber finds that FWS-75 and A.B. were detained in Radomir Kovac's apartment for about a week, starting sometime at the end of October or early November 1992. The Trial Chamber finds that the accused Radomir Kovac had sexual intercourse with the two women in the knowledge that they did not consent, and that he substantially assisted other soldiers in raping the two women. He did this by allowing other soldiers to visit his apartment and to rape the women or by encouraging the soldiers to do so, and by handing the girls over to other men in the knowledge that they would rape them and that the girls did not consent to the sexual intercourse. Finally, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proven beyond reasonable doubt that, after about a week, Kovac handed the two women over to other soldiers whom he knew would most likely continue to rape and abuse them. Kovac eventually sold A.B. to an unidentified soldier, and handed over FWS-75 to DP 1, in the almost certain knowledge that they would be raped again.

(c) FWS-87 and A.S.

760. Paragraph 11.4 of the Indictment alleges that FWS-87 and A.S. were taken to Radomir Kovac's apartment together with FWS-75 and A.B., on or around 31 October 1992, and that they were kept in this apartment for a period of approximately four months. Paragraph 11.4 of the Indictment alleges that, during the entire period, both girls were raped by Radomir Kovac and Jagos Kosti}.

761. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that it has been proven beyond reasonable doubt that, while in Radomir Kovac's apartment, FWS-87 was raped by both Kovac and Jagos Kosti}. Kovac reserved FWS-87 for himself and raped her almost every night he spent in the apartment. Jagos Kosti} constantly raped A.S., and he took advantage of Kovac's absence to rape FWS-87 too. He threatened her that if she reported this to Radomir Kovac he would kill her. Kova~ knew at all times that the girls did not consent to the sexual intercourse. Jagos Kosti} could rape A.S. because she was held by Kova~ in his apartment. Kova~ therefore also substantially assisted Jagos Kosti} in raping A.S., by allowing Jagos Kosti} to stay in his apartment and to rape A.S. there. The Trial Chamber notes that it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that the accused Kova~ aided and abetted the rape of FWS-87 by Jagos Kostic. The evidence indicates that the fact that Jagos Kosti} raped FWS-87 was hidden from Kovac. Considering the two men's relationship and Jagos Kostic's threats to FWS-87, it seems very unlikely that Kovac could have envisaged the possibility that Jagos Kostic would rape FWS-87.

762. FWS-87 consistently denied any emotional relationship with the accused Radomir Kovac. The Trial Chamber notes that several Defence witnesses mentioned a letter with a heart drawn on the envelope which was allegedly sent by FWS-87 to Kovac. The Trial Chamber accepts, however, that FWS-87 did not send such a letter, and it notes the fact that, even by their own account, none of the Defence witnesses actually read the content of the letter, but only heard about it from Kovac. The relationship between FWS-87 and Kovac was not one of love as the Defence suggested, but rather one of cruel opportunism on Kovac's part, of constant abuses and domination over a girl who, at the relevant time, was only about 15 years old.

763. Radomir Kovac forced FWS-87 to go to cafés with him, at least once forcing her to wear an insignia of the VRS.

764. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that, while in Radomir Kovac's apartment, A.S. was constantly raped by Jagos Kosti}.

765. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that FWS-87 and A.S. were held in Radomir Kovac's apartment for a period of about 4 months. Apart from the exact date of their departure, the allegations in paragraph 11.4 of the Indictment have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

(d) The naked dancing

766. Paragraph 11.5 of the Indictment alleges that, on an unknown date between about 31 October 1992 and about 7 November 1992, while they were kept in Radomir Kovac's apartment, FWS-75, FWS-87, A.S. and A.B. were forced to take off their clothes and to dance naked on a table while Kovac watched them.

767. The witnesses have described three instances when they, together or individually, were forced to dance or to stand naked on a table while Radomir Kovac would watch them. Only one of them was expressly charged in the indictment. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that this one instance has been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

768. FWS-87 testified, and the Trial Chamber accepts, that, on one of these occasions, the four girls, FWS-75, A.S., A.B. and herself, were there and that they were made to dance on a table while Radomir Kovac and Jagos Kostic were watching and pointing weapons at them.

769. A.S. testified, and the Trial Chamber accepts, that she, together with A.B. and FWS-87, were once made to strip and dance. Radomir Kovac, Jagos Kostic and possibly a third soldier watched them. Although she did not recall FWS-75 being present, A.S.'s testimony fully supports FWS-87's evidence of these events.

770. FWS-87 mentioned that the four girls, FWS-75, A.S., A.B. and herself were present on that occasion. The Trial Chamber notes that FWS-75 did not seem to recall this event, testifying instead about another incident when she, together with FWS-87 and A.B. were forced to stand naked on a table and then marched naked by Radomir Kovac in the streets of Foca.

771. Although FWS-75 may have been present on the first occasion too, as FWS-87's testimony suggests, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that this was the case.

772. The Trial Chamber therefore holds that the events described in paragraph 11.5 of the Indictment have been proved beyond reasonable doubt with respect to FWS-87, A.S. and A.B., but not with respect to FWS-75. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that, sometime between about 31 October 1992 and about 7 November 1992, while in Radomir Kovac's apartment, FWS-87, A.S. and A.B. were forced to strip and dance naked on a table while Kovac watched them from the sofa, pointing weapons at them.

773. The accused Radomir Kovac certainly knew that, having to stand naked on a table, while the accused watched them, was a painful and humiliating experience for the three women involved, even more so because of their young age. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Kovac must have been aware of that fact, but he nevertheless ordered them to gratify him by dancing naked for him.

774. The Statute does not require that the perpetrator must intend to humiliate his victim, that is that he perpetrated the act for that very reason. It is sufficient that he knew that his act or omission could have that effect. This was certainly the case here.

(e) The selling of FWS-87 and A.S.

775. Paragraph 11. 6 of the Indictment alleges that, on or about 25 February 1993, FWS-87 and A.S. were sold by Radomir Kovac for 500 Deutschmarks each to two unidentified Montenegrin soldiers.

776. The Trial Chamber first notes that the Defence did not deny that a financial transaction took place between the accused Radomir Kovac and two Montenegrins shortly before the girls were taken away by these two Montenegrins. They submitted that the transaction was of a different sort, and claimed that it was Kovac who actually paid for the girls to be taken away to Montenegro.

777. In view of the treatment reserved by the accused Radomir Kovac for FWS-87 and A.S., which included an almost daily regime of rapes and other abuses, it is not credible to suggest that, after four months of constant intimidation and mistreatment, the accused suddenly decided to shield these two girls from the risks involved for a Muslim girl to live in Foca at the time and so to pay for them to be taken away. The Trial Chamber does not accept the accused's account.

778. The Trial Chamber is aware of one specific discrepancy in the accounts of the witnesses. FWS-87 said that 500 Deutschmarks was paid for each girl, whereas A.S. referred to 500 Deutschmarks for each girl plus a truckload of washing powder. But both agreed that they had been sold to two Montenegrins by Radomir Kovac. The Trial Chamber does not regard this discrepancy as destroying the credibility of the two witnesses.

779. The Trial Chamber finds that, sometime in February 1993, two Montenegrins came to Radomir Kovac's apartment. They went together with the accused to the living room while FWS-87 and A.S. were told to go to the kitchen. The two girls crept out of the kitchen into the corridor from where they listened to the conversation before rushing back to the kitchen when they heard the men moving. FWS-87 heard that the two girls were being sold for 500 Deutschmarks each, but A.S. did not hear the exact words of the conversation. Not long after the transaction, possibly the next day, the two Montenegrins came back to take the girls away. While they were in the car with the two Montenegrins, these two men laughed at their being sold for such a small amount of money and, as A.S. recounted, also for a truck-load of washing powder.

780. Apart from this minor discrepancy concerning the precise amount for which the girls were sold, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the events described in paragraph 11.6 of the Indictment have been proved beyond reasonable doubt. Radomir Kovac detained FWS-75 and A.B. for about a week, and FWS-87 and A.S. for about four months in his apartment, by locking them up and by psychologically imprisoning them, and thereby depriving them of their freedom of movement. During that time, he had complete control over their movements, privacy and labour. He made them cook for him, serve him and do the household chores for him. He subjected them to degrading treatments, including beatings and other humiliating treatments.

781. The Trial Chamber finds that Radomir Kova~'s conduct towards the two women was wanton in abusing and humiliating the four women and in exercising his de facto power of ownership as it pleased him. Kovac disposed of them in the same manner. For all practical purposes, he possessed them, owned them and had complete control over their fate, and he treated them as his property. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied that Kova~ exercised the above powers over the girls intentionally. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that many of the acts caused serious humiliation, of which the accused was aware.

782. For these acts, the Trial Chamber finds the accused Radomir Kova~ GUILTY of enslavement under Count 22; GUILTY of rape under Counts 23 and 24; and, finally, GUILTY of outrages upon personal dignity under Count 25.

3. Zoran Vukovic (Indictment IT-96-23/1)

783. The Trial Chamber first notes that the Defence of the accused Zoran Vukovi} seemed to suggest that he had not pleaded to the amended Indictment.[1396] Vukovi} had already pleaded to the original Indictment in which he was joined with other defendants not the Prosecutor at that stage felt she could not prove beyond a reasonable doubt could be considered for the purposes of sentencing.[1464] The specific incident related to the alleged participation of Zoran Vukovi} in the killing of one of the older men at Buk Bijela, an allegation made in the Prosecutor's Pre-Trial Brief.[1465] This incident was not charged in the Indictment. The Trial Chamber ordered the sentence and the accompanying footnote in the Pre-Trial Brief referring to the Prosecutor's view of using that incident as an aggravating circumstance to be deleted.[1466] The Trial Chamber made it clear that an accused "can only be sentenced for what [he has] been convicted for, and if [he has not] been convicted, [he] can't be sentenced for it."[1467] It was in the context of this discussion that the Trial Chamber also made clear its view that only circumstances that have been proved beyond reasonable doubt may be used in aggravation of a sentence.[1468]

850. Turning to the Prosecutor's closing arguments on 20 November 2000 with respect to her submissions on the alleged rapes of FWS-50 and FWS-75, the Prosecutor appears to have withdrawn her submission that the evidence relating to uncharged alleged rapes could be used in aggravation of Zoran Vukovi}'s sentence.[1469] Had she not done so, however, the view of the Trial Chamber is as follows. The Prosecutor does not appear to have argued that any uncharged criminal conduct should be considered in aggravation. She appeared rather to have argued that only uncharged acts and omissions that were part of the same course of conduct or common scheme or plan as the offence of conviction would be relevant for sentencing purposes. Even assuming, however, that the Defence was put on notice to put its case with respect to such uncharged acts and omissions, that those uncharged offences were established beyond reasonable doubt and that they can be said to be part of the same plan as the offence of conviction, the Trial Chamber would not allow such an uncharged crime being used as an aggravating circumstance. The reason is this: an offender can only be sentenced for conduct for which he has been convicted.[1470] Mitigating and aggravating circumstances should of course also be considered when imposing sentence. Mitigating circumstances not directly related to the offence, such as co-operation with the Prosecutor, an honest showing of remorse and a guilty plea, may be considered. However, the position with respect to aggravating circumstances is quite different. Only those circumstances directly related to the commission of the offence charged and to the offender himself when he committed the offence, such as the manner in which the offence was committed, may be considered in aggravation. In other words, circumstances not directly related to an offence may not be used in aggravation of an offender's sentence for that offence. To permit otherwise would be to whittle away the purpose and import of an indictment. Either the Prosecutor should charge such conduct as an offence, or, where it is not directly related to another charged offence, she should desist from citing such conduct as an aggravating factor. The Trial Chamber understands that the multiplicity of humanitarian law violations committed during an armed conflict as part of a common criminal scheme often cannot be succinctly captured in an indictment. Considerations of fairness to the accused and judicial economy, however, outweigh the wish to have each and every crime committed during a war brought to light and adjudged in whatever way – that is something which this International Tribunal simply cannot do.

(c) Comparison of "per se gravity" of offences

851. The Trial Chamber considers it wrong to resort to some abstract comparison of the "per se gravity of the crimes", comparing the severity of crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war as suggested by the Prosecutor.[1471] The Prosecutor relies on a ruling in the Tadi} case in support of such an exercise.[1472] In that judgement, the Trial Chamber, solely on the basis that a crime against humanity, all else being equal, is a more serious offence than a war crime, considered that a heavier penalty should be imposed for the former crime.[1473] However, the Appeals Chamber in that case concluded that there is "in law no distinction between the seriousness of a crime against humanity and that of a war crime", finding that the Trial Chamber committed an error in determining that crimes against humanity should attract a higher sentence than war crimes.[1474] The Appeals Chamber in the Aleksovski case also held that there is in law no distinction between the

B. Reconsideration of factual findings made by the Trial Chamber

1. General principles

28. Under this heading, the Appeals Chamber will discuss the standard that applies with respect to the reconsideration of factual findings by the Trial Chamber. The vast majority of the grounds of appeal raised by the Defendants in this case concerns alleged errors of fact. Several of the parties to the present appeal have also raised questions of a more general nature relating to the Appeals Chamber's review of errors of fact under Article 25(1)(b) of the Statute.[36] In light thereof, the Appeals Chamber considers it appropriate to elaborate upon this matter.

29. In order for the Appeals Chamber to overturn a factual finding by the Trial Chamber, an appellant must demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a factual error and the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice.[37] The appellant must establish that the error of fact was critical to the verdict reached by the Trial Chamber, thereby resulting in a "grossly unfair outcome in judicial proceedings, as when a defendant is convicted despite a lack of evidence on an essential element of the crime."[38] Consequently, it is not each and every error of fact that will cause the Appeals Chamber to overturn a decision of the Trial Chamber, but only one that has occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[39]

30. Pursuant to the jurisprudence of the Tribunal, the task of hearing, assessing and weighing the evidence presented at trial is left primarily to the Trial Chamber. Thus, the Appeals Chamber must give a margin of deference to a finding of fact reached by a Trial Chamber. Only where the evidence relied on by the Trial Chamber could not have been accepted by any reasonable tribunal of fact or where the evaluation of the evidence is "wholly erroneous" may the Appeals Chamber substitute its own finding for that of the Trial Chamber. It must be borne in mind that two judges, both acting reasonably, can come to different conclusions on the basis of the same evidence.[40]

31. As stated above, it is initially the Trial Chamber's task to assess and weigh the evidence presented at trial. In that exercise, it has the discretion to "admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value", as well as to exclude evidence "if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial."[41] As the primary trier of fact, it is the Trial Chamber that has the main responsibility to resolve any inconsistencies that may arise within and/or amongst witnesses' testimonies. It is certainly within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to evaluate any inconsistencies, to consider whether the evidence taken as a whole is reliable and credible and to accept or reject the "fundamental features" of the evidence.[42] The presence of inconsistencies in the evidence does not, per se, require a reasonable Trial Chamber to reject it as being unreliable.[43] Similarly, factors such as the passage of time between the events and the testimony of the witness, the possible influence of third persons, discrepancies, or the existence of stressful conditions at the time the events took place do not automatically exclude the Trial Chamber from relying on the evidence. However, the Trial Chamber should consider such factors as it assesses and weighs the evidence.

32. The reason that the Appeals Chamber will not lightly disturb findings of fact by a Trial Chamber is well known. The Trial Chamber has the advantage of observing witnesses in person and so is better positioned than the Appeals Chamber to assess the reliability and credibility of the evidence.[44] Accordingly, it is primarily for the Trial Chamber to determine whether a witness is credible and to decide which witness' testimony to prefer, without necessarily articulating every step of the reasoning in reaching a decision on these points. This discretion is, however, tempered by the Trial Chamber's duty to provide a reasoned opinion, following from Article 23(2) of the Statute. In the Furundžija Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber considered the right of an accused under Article 23 of the Statute to a reasoned opinion to be an aspect of the fair trial requirement embodied in Articles 20 and 21 of the Statute.[45]

33. It follows from the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chambers of both the ICTY and ICTR that the testimony of a single witness, even as to a material fact, may be accepted without the need for corroboration.[46] With the exception of the testimony of a child not given under solemn declaration,[47] the Trial Chamber is at liberty, in appropriate circumstances, to rely on the evidence of a single witness.

34. The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that a reasonable Trial Chamber must take into account the difficulties associated with identification evidence in a particular case and must carefully evaluate any such evidence, before accepting it as the sole basis for sustaining a conviction. Domestic criminal law systems from around the world recognise the need to exercise extreme caution before proceeding to convict an accused person based upon the identification evidence of a witness made under difficult circumstances. The principles developed in these jurisdictions acknowledge the frailties of human perceptions and the very serious risk that a miscarriage of justice might result from reliance upon even the most confident witnesses who purport to identify an accused without an adequate opportunity to verify their observations. In the well known United Kingdom case of R. v Turnbull, the court held that, when a witness has purported to identify the accused under difficult circumstances, the judge should "withdraw the case from the jury and direct an acquittal unless there is other evidence which goes to support the correctness of the identification...". It further underscored the need always to caution a jury about the dangers of identification evidence.[48]

35. The Turnbull principles are reflected in the jurisprudence of many other common law countries.[49] The High Court of Malaya, for example, has pointed out that

> [t]here have been many cases of wrongful convictions based on mistaken eyewitness identification. It has been held that evidence as to identity based on personal impressions, however bona fida, is perhaps of all classes of evidence the least to be relied upon, and therefore, unless supported by other facts, an unsafe basis for the verdict.[50]

36. Similarly, the Supreme Court of the United States, has emphasised that the > 'influence of improper suggestion upon identifying witnesses probably accounts for more miscarriages of justice than any other single factor--perhaps it is responsible for more errors than all other factors combined'...And the dangers for the suspect are particularly grave when the witness' opportunity for observation was insubstantial, and thus his susceptibility to suggestion the greatest...the vagaries of eyewitness identification are well known; the annals of criminal law are rife with instances of mistaken identification....[51]

37. Despite the deference afforded to trial court findings of fact in domestic legal systems, particularly on issues of witness credibility, appellate courts have, on occasion, found the factual opinion will not be defective as a result of a failure to refer to a witness, even one whose evidence contradicts the findings of the Trial Chamber.[72] In the Prosecution's view, the Trial Chamber is only required to make findings of those facts which are essential to a determination of guilt on a particular point, and is not required to make findings in relation to other facts which are not essential, even if they were expressly alleged in the indictment.[73]

23. The Appeals Chamber recalls that every accused has the right to a reasoned opinion under Article 23 of the Statute and Rule 98*ter*(C) of the Rules.[74] However, this requirement relates to the Trial Chamber's Judgement; the Trial Chamber is not under the obligation to justify its findings in relation to every submission made during the trial. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is in the discretion of the Trial Chamber as to which legal arguments to address. With regard to the factual findings, the Trial Chamber is required only to make findings of those facts which are essential to the determination of guilt on a particular count. It is not necessary to refer to the testimony of every witness or every piece of evidence on the trial record.[75] It is to be presumed that the Trial Chamber evaluated all the evidence presented to it, as long as there is no indication that the Trial Chamber completely disregarded any particular piece of evidence. There may be an indication of disregard when evidence which is clearly relevant to the findings is not addressed by the Trial Chamber's reasoning, but not every inconsistency which the Trial Chamber failed to discuss renders its opinion defective. Considering the fact that minor inconsistencies commonly occur in witness testimony without rendering it unreliable, it is within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to evaluate it and to consider whether the evidence as a whole is credible, without explaining its decision in every detail.[76] If the Trial Chamber did not refer to the evidence given by a witness, even if it is in contradiction to the Trial Chamber's finding, it is to be presumed that the Trial Chamber assessed and weighed the evidence, but found that the evidence did not prevent it from arriving at its actual findings. It is therefore not possible to draw any inferences about the quality of a judgement from the length of particular parts of a judgement in relation to other judgements or parts of the same judgement.

24. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in certain cases, the requirements to be met by the Trial Chamber are higher. As an example of a complex issue, the Appeals Chamber considered the appraisal of witness testimony with regard to the identity of the accused:

3. Keraterm Camp

(a) Žigi}'s presence and duties in the Keraterm camp

612. Žigi} is the sole accused still charged with responsibility for crimes committed in the Keraterm camp.[987] The Prosecution submits that the accused was a guard at Keraterm for ten days in June 1992 and that he participated in repeated acts of brutality against the detainees in the camp.[988] In his unsworn statement, Žigi} said that his unit was assigned to secure the Keraterm investigation centre during a ten-day period in early June 1992, but that he spent no more than 8 hours working in the camp.[989] However, several witnesses have testified that during the month of June 1992, Žigi} entered the Keraterm camp on a daily basis.[990] According to Defense Witness DD/8, Žigi} was in Keraterm every day during his stay at the camp from 30 May to 5 June 1992.[991] Witness DD5 declared that he saw @igi} in Keraterm about ten times from 30 May until 13 June 1992.[992]According to Ervin Rami},[993] during every day of his detention at Keraterm, from 31 May to 5 August 1992, Žigi} abused detainees:

> I remember the first time. It was a Tuesday. A green Mercedes entered where I was. Four or five people stepped out. Žigi} was already in the camp, and they started beating up everyone without any reason. They just started beating everybody.[994]

613. Some Defense witnesses testified Žigi} brought food, water and cigarettes for the detainees in his mini-van.[995] That was allegedly his only duty at the camp. Several detainees testified that he gave cigarettes and food to detainees.[996] Detainees who collaborated with the Serb authorities at Keraterm testified that Žigi} offered to "protect" them and provided them with cigarettes, biscuits, or sweets.[997] According to Žigi}, the conditions were so dreadful that he avoided staying at the camp and tried to help the detainees by providing some with alcohol.[998]

614. The Trial Chamber however has received extensive and credible evidence confirming that Žigi} regularly entered the Keraterm camp in order to beat the detainees, as reported by the Security Chief of the camp in an official note addressed to Serb authorities.[999] While @igi} seemed able to enter the camp at will, some shift leaders refused to allow Žigi} carte blanche to mistreat detainees at random in the Keraterm camp.[1000] Witness Y testified that toward the end of June, after the beating of one of the detainees, he heard someone (probably the shift leader, Kajin) informing Žigi}, "You're not going to do as you please. You will not be allowed into the camp anymore".[1001] But the other commanders of the camp allowed @igi} free reign. Hase I~i} described how Žigi} left an indelible impression upon detainees arriving in Keraterm:

> You know, my impression was that he wanted to leave the impression that he do [sic] with each one of us as he pleased, to kill whomever he wanted, beat, take out, or whatever. As a matter of fact, yes, he could do that, and he did do that.[1002]

615. Witnesses described how the detainees would say, "Hush, Žigi} is coming" and try to get to the back of the room to avoid being called out.[1003] Du{an Kne`evi} often accompanied @igi}. They would look for certain people, inspecting their identity cards and Žigi} would curse at the detainees.[1004] Witness Y testified that vehicles would approach in the night and people were subsequently called out of their place of detention. The inmates would say, "@iga and Du}a are coming again to kill".[1005]

616. The Defense asserts that Žigi} was intoxicated during many of the incidents alleged in the Amended Indictment, although it does not specify during which incidents @igi} was drinking.[1006]

(b) Beatings Resulting in the Death of Emsud Bahonji} and Sead Jusufagi}[1007]

617. Several witnesses testified how, over a period of several days, Emsud Bahonji}, a policeman, and Sead Jusufagi}, nicknamed "Car", were slowly beaten to death by Žigi} and others. Witness N testified that on 8 or 9 June 1992, Žigi} called Emsud Bahonji} out from room 2, asked him, "Will I have to feed your children?" and referred to Emsud Bahonji} as "sniper".[1008] Emsud Bahonji} was beaten upon his arrival at the camp and Žigi} then started beating and kicking him while making him sing. Emsud Bahonji} was subsequently returned to room 2 with extensive injuries.[1009] The next day, Zoran Žigi}, Dusan Kne`evi}, and Predrag Banovi} again called out Emsud Bahonji} and Sead Jusufagi}:

[1009] Safet Ta}i testified that Emsud Bahonji} had told him that if Žigi} "shows up again, he would be finished, if @igi} comes in, that he would be dead". T.3759.

748. The extreme gravity of the crimes committed by @igi} has already been noted by the Trial Chamber. The Defense asserts that many of the crimes were committed when Zigic was intoxicated. The Trial Chamber rejects @igi}'s claim that intoxication should be a mitigating factor and instead finds it an aggravating factor. However, because the issue was not raised by the Prosecution, it declines to treat it as an aggravating factor in this case.

749. @igi} was transferred to the Tribunal on 16 April 1998 and thus he has been in the custody of the Tribunal for just over 3½ years.

750. The Trial Chamber sentences @igi} to 25 years imprisonment, bearing in mind that the time spent in the custody of the Tribunal is to be deducted from the time to be served.[1187]

[1187] @igi} was in Bosnian Serb custody from 1996 until April 1998. This time should not be deducted, as it was served as punishment for another crime.

121. In the alternative to Haradin Bala's criminal responsibility as a member of the systemic joint criminal enterprise, the Prosecution submits that he aided and abetted the cruel treatment and torture of detainees in the prison camp.[315]

122. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Indictment charges Haradin Bala with criminal responsibility under Article 7(1) of the Statute for having, inter alia, aided and abetted in the commission of these crimes.[316] This form of participation has been litigated at trial and the Trial Chamber found Haradin Bala guilty of having aided and abetted the torture of Witness L12 and an incident of cruel treatment of Witness L04. However, the Trial Chamber did not find him criminally responsible for having aided and abetted any other incident of cruel treatment or torture.[317]

123. The Appeals Chamber is not satisfied, however, that it is the only reasonable inference from the evidence that, in addition to the convictions for aiding and abetting already entered by the Trial Chamber, Haradin Bala incurs criminal responsibility for having aided and abetted the other instances of cruel treatment and torture of detainees in the Llapushnik/Lapušnik prison camp. While the findings of the Trial Chamber show that Haradin Bala played a pivotal role in the functioning of the prison camp,[318] it was open for a trier of fact to conclude that the evidence did not show beyond a reasonable doubt that Haradin Bala knowingly provided substantial assistance as an aider and abettor to each act of cruel treatment or torture in the prison camp. Apart from the evidence in relation to Haradin Bala's participation as a committer or an aider and abettor in specific incidents of cruel treatment and torture, which the Trial Chamber duly considered in paragraphs 654 through 663 of the Trial Judgement, it is a reasonable inference from the evidence to find that Haradin Bala did not provide substantial assistance with respect to other crimes.

2. Conclusion

124. Consequently, the Prosecution's first ground of appeal is rejected in its entirety.

B. Second ground of appeal: Sentence

125. In the alternative to its first ground of appeal, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in exercising its sentencing discretion by sentencing Haradin Bala to the manifestly inadequate sentence of 13 years of imprisonment.[319] The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber's error was three-fold. First, the sentence does not reflect the gravity of Haradin Bala's has been perpetrated.[1701] While each case turns on its own facts, mere presence at the scene of a crime will not usually constitute aiding or abetting. However, where the presence bestows legitimacy on, or provides encouragement to, the actual perpetrator, that may be sufficient. In a particular case encouragement may be established by an evident sympathetic or approving attitude to the commission of the relevant act. For example, the presence of a superior may operate as an encouragement or support, in the relevant sense.[1702]

518. The mens rea required is knowledge that, by his or her conduct, the aider and abettor is assisting or facilitating the commission of the offence.[1703] This awareness need not have been explicitly expressed. It may, of course, be inferred from all relevant circumstances.[1704] The aider and abettor need not share the mens rea of the perpetrator, but he or she must be aware of the essential elements of the crime ultimately committed by the perpetrator,[1705] and must be aware of the perpetrator's state of mind.[1706] This is not to say that the aider and abettor must be aware of the specific crime that will be committed by the perpetrator. If the aider and abettor is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed by the perpetrator, and one of those crimes is in fact committed, then he has intended to assist or facilitate the commission of that crime, and is guilty as an aider and abettor.[1707]

2. Responsibility under Article 7(3) of the Statute

519. Article 7(3) of the Statute provides:

> The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 5 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superior of criminal responsibility if he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

The principle of individual criminal responsibility of superiors for failure to prevent or to punish crimes committed by subordinates is an established principle of international customary law,[1708] applicable to both international and internal armed conflicts.[1709] to establish the identity of those who shot Fehmi Xhema. It has not been established that those were the same people who removed Fehmi Xhema from the storage room for the last time. Moreover, the time of the death of Fehmi Xhema cannot be determined. It is therefore unclear whether the purpose of removing Fehmi Xhema from the storage room by the three soldiers, including Haradin Bala, was his immediate execution. In view of the absence of evidence on these issues, the Chamber is not persuaded that Haradin Bala participated in the shooting of Fehmi Xhema. Nor has it been established that he provided assistance to the murderers.

662. As discussed earlier, Haradin Bala ordered three detainees, including L04 and L10, to bury three bodies, including the body of Agim Ademi. There is no evidence, however, indicating that he directly participated in the killing of any one of the three. It could be inferred from the established circumstances of the incident that Haradin Bala was aware that Agim Ademi he had been shot. It is the evidence that a gunshot injury was visible. As a prison guard, he must also have known that Agim Ademi had been detained in the prison camp. There is nothing to suggest, however, that Haradin Bala had agreed to provide assistance at the time of the planning, preparation or execution of the crime,[2249] or in respect of the other two detainees. Even though the probability of such a prior agreement is clear, it could also be reasonably inferred from the evidence that Haradin Bala learned about the killings afterwards and was only ordered to remove the bodies from the prison camp. In the Chamber's finding, the evidence does not establish that Haradin Bala aided the commission of murder of Agim Ademi, or of the other two detainees.

663. As indicated earlier, the Prosecution suggested that the bodies L04 and L10 were forced to bury, together with the body of Agim Ademi, were those of Jefta Petković and Žvonko Marinković.[2250] The Chamber has found earlier that the evidence does not support the contention that the body of Jefta Petković, whose murder was established, was one of those L04 and L10 buried on the order of Haradin Bala. Accordingly, no link has been established between the murder of Jefta Petković and the Accused Haradin Bala.

b. Murder in the Berishe/Berisa Mountains (Count 10)

664. The Chamber has held that Haradin Bala and Murrizi, and possibly a third KLA soldier, were directly involved in shooting at the remaining small group of prisoners, who were among those they had forced to march into the Berishe/Berisa Mountains on 25 or 26 July 1998 and who remained after the first group was released.[2251] It has been established that nine of those prisoners to improve the conditions. It was a case of too little, too rarely. Occasionally, and irregularly, he would supervise the emptying of the bucket in each of the storage room and cowshed which served as a toilet for all detainees.[2228] In the beginning there was not even a bucket. However, this was not done frequently enough and the buckets overflowed. In the cowshed, at least, chained detainees and those tied to each other were left with no option but to soil themselves in their clothing. Haradin Bala did nothing to enable medical care for the many who were in need of it, even though he knew that a clinic was nearby.[2229] Haradin Bala personally participated thus, through his omissions, in the maintenance and enforcement of the conditions of detention to which the prisoners were subjected, a material element of the crime of cruel treatment. As those conditions were maintained over many weeks, during which Haradin Bala frequently entered the rooms where prisoners were kept and at times provided assistance to them, his failure to do so on numerous other occasions leaves the Chamber persuaded that he had an intent to maintain those conditions of detention. Accordingly, in the Chamber's finding, it has been established that Haradin Bala committed, together with other persons, the crime of cruel treatment.

653. The Chamber has found, in respect of some of the acts of mistreatment and killing charged in the Indictment, that the elements of the crimes of cruel treatment, torture and murder, as violations of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 of the Statute, have been established. In some of these cases there is no evidence of Haradin Bala's direct involvement in the commission of the crime. The evidence demonstrates, however, that Haradin Bala took action which was to some extent related to the commission of others of those crimes.

654. The first incident relates to the mistreatment of L06 which the Chamber has found to constitute cruel treatment and torture.[2230] In the testimony of L10, L06 was taken out of the room by Shala, who in the finding of the Chamber was the Accused Haradin Bala, and, when L06 was brought back, he said he had been beaten. L06 himself stated that Haradin Bala only untied his chains on the day preceding the night when he was beaten and that he was taken out of the room and back by other persons.[2231] The accounts given by L06 and L10 differ as far as the role played by Haradin Bala is concerned. Because of L06's direct involvement in the incident, the Chamber is not prepared to prefer L10's account as more reliable in this particular respect. The Chamber proceeds, therefore, on the basis that the only action of Haradin Bala that might relate to the beating of L06 was untying L06's chains a few hours before the mistreatment. However, the link between his action and the actual mistreatment is far from clear. Even though the name of Shala was mentioned by L06 in the context of the particular incident of beating, it has not been established whether the untying of L06's chains was in any way related to the subsequent beating. For these reasons, the Prosecution has not established that Haradin Bala participated in any way in the actual beating of L06.

655. L10 testified to being mistreated by Shala, who was identified as Haradin Bala. As found earlier in this decision, Haradin Bala pointed a gun at L10's head and threatened him.[2232] The incident has been found to constitute the offence of cruel treatment. The direct participation of Haradin Bala in the commission of this crime has been established. He can only have acted with the intent of inflicting mental suffering upon L10. Accordingly, the Chamber finds Haradin Bala responsible for having perpetrated the crime of cruel treatment in this instance.

656. A further incident involving Haradin Bala relates to the mistreatment of L04 which the Chamber has found constituted cruel treatment.[2233] L04 stated that Shala was told by Tamuli to untie L04. As established earlier, L04 was then blindfolded, taken out of the room and beaten by individuals L04 believed to be Tamuli and Qerqiz.[2234] Shala had an automatic weapon and was guarding the door. He, however, did not personally join in the beating of L04.[2235] The Chamber accepts the evidence of L04 on the circumstances of his mistreatment. It finds that Haradin Bala did not inflict physical suffering on L04. He did, however, provide practical assistance to the direct perpetrators of the offence of cruel treatment. He better ensured there was no prospect of L04 escaping from the beating, or of the beating being seen or disrupted by third persons. In the Chamber's finding, Haradin Bala's involvement had thus a "substantial effect on the commission"[2236] of the crime of cruel treatment. In the circumstances, Haradin Bala could not have been ignorant of the intentions of the direct perpetrators. He certainly knew that a crime was being committed. Nonetheless, he remained and so he facilitated its commission. He is therefore responsible for aiding the crime of cruel treatment in respect of L04.[2237]

657. As indicated earlier in this decision, Shala, identified in the evidence as Haradin Bala, participated directly in another incident regarding L04 and L10. Haradin Bala forced L04 and L10, as well as another individual, to bury the bodies of three persons including Agim Ademi. There are some differences between the detail of the accounts of that event given by L10 and L04. They are nonetheless consistent with respect to the essential features of what occurred, especially the conduct of Haradin Bala, to whom both witnesses referred as Shala. Shala blindfolded them and took them in a car to the place where they were required to dig a grave. L04 and L10 and another individual received a pickaxe and shovels, with which they carried out the task given to them by Shala. They buried three bodies in the hole.[2238] Shala warned them that if they said anything about it, they would be shot.[2239] As discussed earlier, this incident caused psychological suffering of L04 and L10, which, in the Chamber's finding, in the circumstances amounted to cruel treatment. The physical perpetration of the crime by Haradin Bala has been established. Haradin Bala must have been aware of the substantial likelihood that psychological suffering would be inflicted as a result of forcing L04 and L10 to bury the bodies of fellow detainees, especially given the apparent injuries to and condition of the bodies. Haradin Bala is accordingly responsible for having directly perpetrated that crime.

658. Two incidents of mistreatment of L12 have been established. The first one occurred upon his arrival at the prison camp. In the Chamber's finding, Haradin Bala, referred to in L12's evidence as Shala, chained L12 to the wall and beat him with a stick until L12 lost consciousness. As has been established, even though the evidence does not reveal that Haradin Bala was unable to engage in strenuous activities, such as a prolonged beating of a person, it is of relevance that his ability to do so was adversely affected.[2240] The evidence concerning the role Haradin Bala played in this incident is, however, consistent and persuasive. The evidence of L12 as the victim of the incident is consistent with that of L04, who witnessed the incident, and confirmed the length and effect of the beating. Haradin Bala thus physically perpetrated the offence of cruel treatment in this case, despite his state of health. The circumstances of the incident and, in particular, the severity and duration of the beating, leave the Chamber satisfied that Haradin Bala acted with the intent to inflict physical suffering on L12. Haradin Bala is therefore, in the finding of the Chamber, responsible for having committed the offence of cruel treatment in connection with this incident. In the other case of mistreatment of L12 established earlier in this decision, L12 was beaten in a barn. Haradin Bala blindfolded L12 and brought him to a barn, where the beating took place.[2241] L12 testified that Shala was present during the incident.[2242] The Chamber accepts L12's evidence, however, that Haradin Bala's involvement in the incident was limited to bringing L12 to the perpetrators and being present while the beating was taking place. The Chamber finds that by bringing L12 to the barn and being present throughout the beating by others, Haradin Bala did contribute to the commission of the crime substantially enough to regard his participation as aiding the offence committed by the direct perpetrators. In the circumstances, Haradin Bala must have become aware, at least at the time of the beating, that the assailants were committing a crime and of their state of mind. Accordingly, he possessed the mens rea required for aiding and abetting. As established earlier, this incident constitutes the elements of both cruel treatment and torture. However, as will be discussed shortly, the Chamber can enter a conviction only in respect of the charge of torture (Count 4).

659. Reference to Haradin Bala has been made in the evidence concerning the mistreatment of Emin Emini. L10 testified that Shala, together with two other men, took Emin Emini out of the storage room for the purpose of beating him. However, for reasons discussed earlier, despite this evidence, it is not possible to determine the identity of the individuals who took Emin Emini out of the storage room.[2243] Nor does the evidence suggest that Haradin Bala himself beat Emini.

660. As has been indicated, the evidence concerning the mistreatment and death of Fehmi Xhema is affected by a number of discrepancies. In particular, it is not established whether Haradin Bala was among those who took Fehmi Xhema out of the storage room and brought him back after the beating. As discussed earlier, the Chamber assessed that both L06 and L10, who gave differing accounts of mistreatment of Fehmi Xhema, were honest witnesses.[2244] In the absence of other evidence on the matter, there are no grounds for giving preference to either of these accounts. The Chamber therefore finds, in favour of the Accused Haradin Bala, that he did not participate in the mistreatment of Fehmi Xhema, either directly or by providing assistance.

661. The accounts given by L06 and L10 identify the involvement of Haradin Bala in the removal of, what they believed, was the dead body of Fehmi Xhema. Both L06 and L10 stated that Shala and two other soldiers came to the storage room to take away the body of Fehmi Xhema.[2245] The accounts differ, however, as to the time of that event. L06 testified that Fehmi Xhema, whom he believed to be dead at that time, remained in the room for three days before he was taken away.[2246] L10 stated that the body was removed on the day following day after the critical beating.[2247] The Chamber is persuaded, despite these differences, that one of the three soldiers who removed the near dead Fehmi Xhema from the storage room was Haradin Bala. As indicated earlier, Fehmi Xhema was subsequently shot.[2248] The evidence, however, does not make it possible to establish the identity of those who shot Fehmi Xhema. It has not been established that those were the same people who removed Fehmi Xhema from the storage room for the last time. It is therefore unclear whether the purpose of removing Fehmi Xhema from the storage room by the three soldiers, including Haradin Bala, was his immediate execution. 662. As discussed earlier, Haradin Bala ordered three detainees, including L04 and L10, to bury three bodies, including the body of Agim Ademi. In the Chamber's finding, the evidence does not establish that Haradin Bala aided the commission of murder of Agim Ademi, or of the other two detainees.

663. As indicated earlier, the Prosecution suggested that the bodies L04 and L10 were forced to bury, together with the body of Agim Ademi, were those of Jefta Petković and Žvonko Marinković.[2250] The Chamber has found earlier that the evidence does not support the contention that the body of Jefta Petković, whose murder was established, was one of those L04 and L10 buried on the order of Haradin Bala. Accordingly, no link has been established between the murder of Jefta Petković and the Accused Haradin Bala.

660. As has been indicated, the evidence concerning the mistreatment and death of Fehmi Xhema is affected by a number of discrepancies. In particular, it is not established whether Haradin Bala was among those who took Fehmi Xhema out of the storage room and brought him back after the beating. although he neither possesses expertise in this area nor personal knowledge of the information.[49] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber has attached no weight whatsoever to such views, conclusions and analyses of Ari Kerkkanen.

36. Witness MM-003 testified from 8 to 10 March 2006. In its Final Trial Brief, the Prosecution accepted that the evidence of Witness MM-003 should be examined "with care" since "he sought and received assistance from the OTP in order to remain in the country where he is now living".[50] The Defence submitted that this would be a factor negating the credibility of his testimony.[51] On 9 April 2007, the Prosecution sent a letter to the Defence disclosing details of its assistance provided to Witness MM-003 in his asylum case.[52]

37. Witness MM-079 testified on 31 March, 3 and 4 April 2006. In its Final Trial Brief, the Prosecution acknowledged that the evidence of Witness MM-079 should be "scrutinized with care" since "he said that he hoped to receive the assistance of the OTP to remain in the country where he is relocated."[53] Witness MM-079 testified that after his lawyer had suggested that he contact the Tribunal to seek assistance with his asylum, he was interviewed by the Prosecution, and that he was subsequently informed that the Prosecution had written a letter to the authorities of the state where he currently lives to ask that he be allowed to stay there until he finishes testifying at the Tribunal.[54] The Trial Chamber notes that the Defence did not raise objections as to the credibility of this witness.

38. The Trial Chamber notes that both Witness MM-003 and Witness MM-079 sought assistance from the Prosecution, which also provided such assistance to both witnesses. The Trial Chamber therefore considers that there is significant doubt as to the credibility of both witnesses and has consequently given weight only to the parts of their respective evidence which are corroborated by other evidence.

acts of violence.[930] Merely reciting the Trial Chamber's findings on the gravity of the offence does not suffice to show that the Trial Chamber erred in the exercise of its discretion to determine an appropriate sentence.

324. With respect to the victims of the crime of terror, the Appeals Chamber considers that contrary to the Prosecution's claim, the Trial Chamber did not restrict the victims group to those who were directly injured by specific incidents. Read in context, the Trial Chamber's references to "[t]he civilians in Sarajevo" and to "[t]he resulting suffering of the civilian population" in paragraphs 992 and 993 of the Trial Judgement indicate that the Trial Chamber considered the entire population of Sarajevo a victim of the crime of terror. This is confirmed by the Trial Chamber's statement at paragraph 994 that "[b]y planning and ordering the crimes of terror, murder and inhumane acts, the Accused made the entire population of Sarajevo the direct target of countless acts of violence".

325. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber considered Milošević's active and central role in the commission of the crimes when discussing the sentence to be imposed.[931] By merely pointing out the Trial Chamber's findings on Milošević's role in the commission of the crimes, the Prosecution does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber gave it insufficient weight and, as a result, ventured outside its sentencing discretion.

326. Regarding the comparison with the sentence imposed on Galić on appeal, the Appeals Chamber recalls that "sentences of like individuals in like cases should be comparable".[932] However, similar cases do not provide "a legally binding tariff of sentences".[933] While the Appeals Chamber does not discount the assistance that may be drawn from previous decisions, such assistance is often limited, as each case contains a multitude of variables.[934] Differences between cases are often more significant than similarities and different mitigating and aggravating circumstances might dictate different results.[935]

327. In this case, the Trial Chamber expressly referred to the sentence of life imprisonment imposed on Galić by the Appeals Chamber but rightly decided not to construe the Appeals Chamber's decision as restricting the exercise of its own sentencing discretion in this case.[936] The primary concern is the Trial Chambers' obligation to tailor a penalty to fit the individual circumstances of an accused and the gravity of the crime with due regard for the entirety of the case, which may justify different sentencing in similar cases. Notwithstanding this principle, it remains that a disparity out of reasonable proportion between an impugned sentence and another sentence rendered in a like case may give rise to an inference that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise its discretion properly in applying the law on sentencing.[937]

328. As indicated by the Prosecution, the two cases are indeed similar: both accused were convicted for similar crimes committed in the same location in similar circumstances while occupying the same function. Milošević's crimes were characterised by a similar brutality and cruelty to those of Galić. His participation in the crimes was as central and nearly as prolonged as that of Galić. Like Galić, Milošević also abused his position of authority. Nevertheless, the two cases present certain differences, including Milošević's regular use of the modified air bomb, which was considered by the Trial Chamber in aggravation.[938] At the same time, Milošević's personal circumstances considered by the Trial Chamber in mitigation were also different from those of Galić. Notably, the Trial Chamber considered Milošević's voluntary surrender to the authorities of Serbia and Montenegro before being transferred to the Tribunal, the negotiation and signing of the Anti-sniping Agreement, orders issued by Milošević not to shoot civilians and to abide by the Geneva conventions, etc.[939] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the only mitigating factor for which Galić was credited by the Trial Chamber was his "exemplary behaviour [...] throughout the proceedings".[940]

DECISION ON INTERLOCUTORY APPEALS AGAINST TRIAL CHAMBER'S DECISION ON PROSECUTION'S MOTION FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE OF ADJUDICATED FACTS AND PROSECUTION'S CATALOGUE OF AGREED FACTS

The Office of the Prosecutor:

Ms. Carolyn Edgerton
Mr. John Docherty

Counsel for the Accused:

Mr. Branislav Tapušković
Ms. Branislava Isailović

Disposition[63] as well as of the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Harhoff,[64] it seems, however, that in declining to take judicial notice of these 69 Proposed Facts the Trial Chamber mostly – if not exclusively - relied upon its finding that if the Proposed Facts which go to the crimes committed under the command of Galić and which have a strong link with the crimes charged in the Amended Indictment against Milošević, "particularly those facts which may in effect put the Accused on notice", were to be judicially noticed, the burden to produce evidence would be shifted to Milošević in such a manner that it would jeopardize his rights.[65]

16. The Karemera Appeals Decision established that it is prohibited to take judicial notice of "adjudicated facts relating to the acts, conduct, and mental state of the accused."[66] This means that, when an accused is charged with crimes committed by others, while it is possible to take judicial notice of adjudicated facts regarding the existence of such crimes, the actus reus and the mens rea supporting the responsibility of the accused for the crimes in question must be proven by other means than judicial notice.[67] Thus, the Appeals Chamber sees no reason why judicial notice could not be taken of adjudicated facts providing evidence as to the existence of crimes committed by others and which the accused is not even charged with, as in the instant case, as long as the burden remains on the Prosecution to establish, by means other than judicial notice, that the accused had knowledge of their existence. The Appeals Chamber recalls, in this respect, that judicial notice of adjudicated facts "does not shift the ultimate burden of persuasion, which remains with the Prosecution" and that the facts "established under Rule 94(B) are merely presumptions that may be rebutted by the defence with evidence at trial".[68]

17. Taking judicial notice of adjudicated facts related to crimes committed under the command of Galić, e.g. facts regarding the deliberate and indiscriminate sniping and shelling by forces under Galić's command on civilian persons and objects in Sarajevo, would provide evidence of the commission of such crimes. Milošević has full latitude to rebut the presumption that these crimes were committed by introducing reliable and credible evidence to the contrary. Furthermore, establishing the very existence of these crimes does not imply that Milošević had knowledge of [63] "The Trial Chamber understands [R]ule 94(B) as giving a Trial Chamber a discretionary power to admit adjudicated facts when it advances the expeditiousness of the proceedings and is in the interests of justice. Accordingly, the Trial Chamber will identify, in light of the foregoing analysis, those facts which it admits, leaving aside those which it rejects." Impugned Decision, p. 12.

[64] "However, I respectfully disagree with the majority's decision to decline from accepting judicial notice of the remaining 69 proposed adjudicated facts. All of these remaining facts relate to the factual situation or to particular incidents occurring in Sarajevo during General Galić's time in power, and they all imply somehow that the SRK – under Galić – deliberately and indiscriminately targeted civilians or civilian objects in Sarajevo." imprisonment is to be served" and that "particular consideration shall be given to the proximity to the convicted person's relations."

109. Nevertheless, the fact remains that Darko Mrđa will serve his sentence in a state different from his country of origin and at some distance from his wife and children. This is however a common aspect of the prison sentences imposed by the Tribunal. The Trial Chamber takes into account this factor in determining the length of imprisonment, but it does not consider it to be a mitigating circumstance.

8. Conclusions

110. In light of the above, the Trial Chamber finds that the following are relevant mitigating circumstances to which appropriate weight must be attached:

- Cooperation with the Prosecution;
- Guilty Plea;
- Remorse; and
- Personal circumstances of Darko Mrđa.

111. The Trial Chamber rejects the submissions of the Defence concerning duress, compliance with superior orders and the length of time between the commission of the crimes and the trial. However, the Trial Chamber takes into consideration the fact that Darko Mrđa must serve his sentence in a foreign country in determining his sentence.

D. The General Practice Regarding Prison Sentences in the Courts of the Former Yugoslavia

112. Article 24 of the Statute and Rule 101 of the Rules require the Trial Chamber, when determining sentence, to take into account the general practice regarding prison sentences in the former Yugoslavia.[148]

1. Arguments of the Parties

113. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber should consider the factors set out in Article 41(1) of the SFRY Criminal Code[149] (the "Code") in determining sentence and that these are equivalent to aggravating and mitigating factors, evaluated by the Tribunal.[150]

JUDGEMENT

20 November 1991.[276] In light of these findings the Appeals Chamber turns to consider whether Šljivančanin's failure to act upon learning of the order to withdraw the JNA troops from Ovčara substantially contributed to the murder of the prisoners of war by the TOs and paramilitaries.

81. Bearing in mind that the basic elements of the mode of liability of aiding and abetting apply regardless of whether this form of liability is charged as "omission",[277] the Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of aiding and abetting consists of acts or omissions[278] which assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a specific crime, and which have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[279] There is no requirement of a cause-effect relationship between the conduct of the aider and abettor and the commission of the crime or that such conduct served as a condition precedent to the commission of the crime.[280] The actus reus of aiding and abetting a crime may occur before, during, or after the principal crime has been perpetrated, and the location at which the actus reus takes place may be removed from the location of the principal crime.[281]Accordingly, in order to determine whether Šljivančanin possessed the requisite actus reus for aiding and abetting murder, the Appeals Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Prosecution has demonstrated that Šljivančanin substantially contributed to their killing by his inaction[282] and that, when account is taken of the errors committed by the Trial Chamber, all reasonable doubt concerning Šljivančanin's guilt has been eliminated.[283]

(a) Šljivančanin's ability to act

82. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that aiding and abetting by omission implicitly requires that the accused had the ability to act but failed to do so.[284] In order to determine whether Šljivančanin had the ability to act but failed to do so, the Appeals Chamber must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the Prosecution has provided sufficient evidence concerning which means were available to Šljivančanin to fulfil his continuing duty towards the prisoners of war.[285]

(e) The mens rea of aiding and abetting by omission

157. Šljivančanin submits that "aiding and abetting requires an intentional act on the part of the [a]ccused, which can only be matched by a culpable omission, a concept that goes beyond the basic elements of aiding and abetting as defined by the Appeals Chamber".[556] He argues that since the omission would have to be "specifically directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support"[557] to the perpetration of the crime, "only the wilful failure to discharge a duty, which implies the culpable intent of the accused, can lead to individual criminal responsibility, pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute".[558] In this regard, Šljivančanin submits that "mere knowledge" that the conduct facilitates the commission of the crime is insufficient to establish aiding and abetting by omission[559] and that the applicable mens rea standard must include, at a minimum, proof beyond reasonable doubt that he consciously decided not to act, which amounts to consent.[560] He argues that failure on the part of the Trial Chamber to establish that his omission was intentional and deliberate amounts to a finding of strict liability.[561]

158. The Prosecution responds that Šljivančanin attempts to elevate the mental element of aiding and abetting to a kind of special intent, which has already been specifically rejected by the Appeals Chamber.[562] It submits that the correct test is knowledge in the sense of "awareness of a probability" that the crime will be committed and that the acts or omissions will assist or facilitate in the commission of the crime,[563] and that, in any event, the facts as found by the Trial Chamber would fulfil his proposed criteria.[564]

159. The Appeals Chamber considers that Šljivančanin misapprehends the mens rea standard applicable to aiding and abetting. The fact that an "omission must be directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a crime" forms part of the actus reus not the mens rea of aiding and abetting.[565] In addition, the Appeals Chamber has confirmed that "specific direction" is not an essential ingredient of the actus reus of aiding and abetting.[566] It reiterates its finding that the required mens rea for aiding and abetting by omission is that: (1) the aider and abettor must know that his omission assists in the commission of the crime of the principal perpetrator; and (2) he must be aware of the essential elements of the crime which was ultimately committed by the principal.[567] While it is not necessary that the aider and abettor know the precise crime that was intended and was in fact committed, if he is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed, and one of those crimes is committed, he has intended to facilitate the commission of that crime, and is guilty as an aider and abetter.[568] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it has previously rejected an elevated mens rea requirement for aiding and abetting, namely, the proposition that the aider and abettor needs to have intended to provide assistance, or as a minimum, accepted that such assistance would be a possible and foreseeable consequence of his conduct.[569] Accordingly, Šljivančanin's arguments are dismissed.

Šljivančanin further contends that the Trial Chamber should have applied the following additional criteria: (i) that he had knowledge of his ability to act; (ii) that he was aware of the essential elements of the crime ultimately committed by the principal; and (iii) that he had knowledge that taking action would obstruct the commission of the crime (see Šljivančanin Appeal Brief, para. 247(e)).

4. Conclusion

160. In light of the foregoing, Šljivančanin's second ground of appeal is dismissed in its entirety.

C. Third Ground of Appeal: Šljivančanin's Legal Duty to Protect the Prisoners of War at Ovčara by Virtue of his Responsibility for the Evacuation of the Vukovar Hospital

161. The Trial Chamber convicted Šljivančanin for aiding and abetting the torture of over 200 prisoners of war held at Ovčara on 20 November 1991.[570] In reaching this conclusion, the Trial Chamber found that Šljivančanin was under a duty to protect the prisoners of war by reason of his responsibility for the evacuation of the Vukovar hospital, and his failure to prevent the commission of crimes against the prisoners of war amounted to a breach of that duty.[571]

162. Šljivančanin argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Mrkšić put him in charge of the evacuation of the Vukovar hospital and thereby entrusted him with a legal duty to protect the prisoners of war at Ovčara.[572] He avers that the Trial Chamber committed the following errors: (1) the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he testified that Mrkšić ordered him to ensure the

IX. PARTIALLY DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE VAZ

1. I support the Judgement of the Appeals Chamber in respect of the appeals filed by Mile Mrkšić and Veselin Šljivančanin. I regret not to be able to share the position of the majority as regards the second ground of appeal filed by the Prosecution. In my view, for the reasons explained below, the Appeals Chamber could not find beyond reasonable doubt that Šljivančanin aided and abetted the crime of murder and it, therefore, should have left the Trial Chamber's conclusion on acquittal undisturbed. Consequently, I cannot support the revision of the sentence based on the new conviction entered by the Appeals Chamber.[1]

A. Mens rea

2. I am not entirely convinced that Šljivančanin possessed the required mens rea for aiding and abetting murder by omission.[2] In this regard, I note that in order to enter a conviction under this mode of responsibility, the Trial Chamber must have been satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Šljivančanin knew that (i) killings of the prisoners of war were likely to take place at Ovčara and that (ii) his failure to take action in this regard would assist the commission of the murders.[3] The Trial Chamber found itself unable to so conclude and thus acquitted Šljivančanin of the crime of murder.[4] To overturn this acquittal, the Appeals Chamber must find that the inference made by the Trial Chamber was unreasonable and that the only reasonable inference on the evidence was that Šljivančanin did possess the required knowledge.[5]

3. Chronologically, the Trial Chamber – in full consideration of the circumstantial evidence, including Šlivančanin's knowledge of previous incidents of mistreatment and killing[6] - reasonably concluded that Šljivančanin could not foresee that the killings would occur as long as the prisoners of war remained under the authority of the JNA. These conclusions are confirmed by the Appeal Judgement.[7] The Trial Chamber then found that it was only after the full execution of the order to withdraw the JNA troops that the killings became a likely occurrence.[8] However, it was unable to conclude with certainty that Šljivančanin learnt about this order at the time it was given by Mrkšić.[9]

(e) Aiding and abetting

551. "Aiding and abetting" is a form of accomplice liability[1920] which has been defined as the act of rendering practical assistance, encouragement or moral support, which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of a certain crime.[1921] Strictly, "aiding" and "abetting" are not synonymous.[1922] "Aiding" involves the provision of assistance, while "abetting" need merely involve encouragement, or even sympathy, to the commission of a particular act.[1923]

552. With respect to the actus reus, a cause-effect relationship between the conduct of the aider or abettor and the commission of the crime, or proof that such conduct was a condition precedent to the commission of the crime need not be proven.[1924] However, it needs to be shown that the assistance provided by the accused had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime,[1925] which requires a fact-based inquiry.[1926] Such assistance may occur before, during or after the principal crime has been perpetrated.[1927]

553. Further, an omission may, in the particular circumstances of a case, constitute the actus reus of aiding and abetting.[1928] While each case turns on its own facts, mere presence at the scene of a crime will not usually constitute aiding or abetting; however, where the presence bestows legitimacy on, or provides encouragement to, the actual perpetrator, that may be sufficient. For example, the presence of a superior may operate as an encouragement or support, in the relevant sense.[1929] Responsibility for having aided and abetted a crime by omission may arise, regardless of whether the accused's presence at the crime scene provided encouragement to the perpetrators, when the accused was under a duty to prevent the commission of the crime but failed to act, provided his failure to act had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime and he had the requisite mens rea. Such a responsibility has been recognised in other trial judgements, although no convictions were entered on this basis.[1930] The jurisprudence has also addressed, although not

620. In the finding of the Chamber the withdrawal from Ovčara of the only remaining JNA soldiers guarding the prisoners of war had an immediate and direct effect on the commission of the murders that followed. While the JNA soldiers, like other Serb TO and paramilitary forces, had been engaged in a prolonged bitter fight against the Croat forces and had suffered many casualties and hardships, the JNA was, in the main, a disciplined military force with a strong leadership which had an understanding of the legal responsibilities of the JNA towards the prisoners of war.[2083] This was in marked contrast to many members of the Serb TO and paramilitary forces who generally lacked military discipline and strong leadership and who harboured quite intense feelings of extreme animosity toward their enemy, the Croat forces, animosity inflamed by the conflict and recent political and social events, but which also drew on historical, cultural and even religious differences.[2084] The presence of the JNA guards at Ovčara that day had provided some restraint, albeit inconsistent and at times not an effective restraint, against the all too apparent wish of members of the TO and paramilitary forces to have revenge against the Croat prisoners of war.[2085] The withdrawal of the JNA guards removed this one restraint. What followed dramatically demonstrates that the JNA guards had been effective, and the gravity and intensity of the hatred and the desire for revenge was then able to be unleashed without restraint.

621. In the circumstances, by his order for the withdrawal of the remaining JNA soldiers guarding the prisoners of war, Mile Mrkšić in truth rendered substantial practical assistance to the TO and paramilitary forces at Ovčara who were determined to have revenge on the prisoners. By withdrawing the JNA guards, he at once enabled the TO and paramilitary forces to have direct and unrestrained physical access to the prisoners of war. This substantially assisted them to commit the murders that followed, in that it had an immediate effect on their ability to perpetrate the murders. Further, by the removal of the restraint it encouraged the release of their emotions. In the findings of the Chamber, the order of Mile Mrkšić need not share the mens rea of the actual perpetrators which is required to commit murder. Elsewhere in this Judgement, the Chamber has considered the state of knowledge of Mile Mrkšić on 20 November 1991, and in particular by the time he gave the order for the withdrawal of the remaining JNA soldiers guarding the prisoners of war.[2086] By virtue of its findings about his state of knowledge, the Chamber is satisfied that Mile Mrkšić was indeed aware that the TO and paramilitary forces at Ovčara presented a grave threat to the prisoners of war, 2083 See for example infra, para 668.

2084 Significantly, the Chamber recalls that Colonel Pavković, during the meeting held on 19 Novem presence of Mile Mrkšić and the ECMM monitors, had said that if the prisoners of war leave th irregulars/local citizens would attack the convoy. This is indicative, in the Chamber's finding, th was well aware of the great threat that the prisoners of war were subjected to and of the animosit Serb volunteers had for the prisoners of war. (See supra, para 139) a threat he anticipated would manifest itself in considerable and life threatening violence and indeed death. The probability, indeed the considerable likelihood, that prisoners of war would be gravely injured and murdered was, in the established circumstances, one which the Chamber finds to have been obvious to Mile Mrkšić and to anyone with his knowledge of the attitude of the TO and paramilitary forces to the Croat forces. He was aware that some prisoners had indeed been executed by TO and paramilitary forces the previous day and of the difficulties experienced by JNA soldiers on 20 November 1991 by virtue of the efforts of TO and paramilitary forces to gain access to the prisoners of war.[2087] In the Chamber's finding, when he ordered the withdrawal of the JNA guards, he well knew that this left the TO and paramilitary with unrestrained access to the prisoners and that by enabling this he was assisting in the commission of the offences of violence and murder that he was aware would indeed probably follow. These matters, in the view of the Chamber, establish the mens rea on the part of Mile Mrkšić necessary to constitute aiding and abetting the commission of the murders for the purposes of Article 7(1) of the Statute.
2085 See supra, paras 255; 273.

622. The Chamber therefore finds pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute that Mile Mrkšić aided and abetted the commission of the crime of murder as charged in Count 4 of the Indictment.

623. Mile Mrkšić is also charged with aiding and abetting the offences of torture and cruel treatment in Counts 7 and 8. The events relevant to these charges occurred at Ovčara on the afternoon of 20 November 1991 but before the order of Mile Mrkšić to withdraw the remaining JNA soldiers guarding the prisoners of war. Different considerations are relevant, therefore, to aiding and abetting in the context of these two offences. As has been indicated, it is the finding of the Chamber that Mile Mrkšić had ordered the prisoners of war to be taken to Ovčara and had ordered that the JNA provide security at Ovčara of the prisoners of war.[2088] These orders were given only shortly before the prisoners were taken to Ovčara.[2089] There was no time for Veselin Šljivančanin or other staff officers to plan effectively to deal with some over 200 prisoners of war, most of them wounded or otherwise hospital patients. The only facility at Ovčara to hold the prisoners of war was a large hangar normally used for farming activities. The military police of the 80 mtbr sent to Ovčara to guard the prisoners, were unprepared for this duty, they had no clear instructions and were without the leadership of both the commander of the 80 mtbr and the military police commander.[2090]

Prosecution; the Trial Chamber in that case nevertheless attributed "significant weight" to Miroslav Deronjić's co-operation with the Prosecution.[255] Moreover, the Appellant argues that the Sentencing Judgement failed to mention that it was not the Prosecution that found out that he had lied but that he himself went back and brought this false confession to the attention of the Prosecution.[256]

105. The Prosecution agrees that the Appellant's admission to having falsely confessed to other crimes does reduce any negative impact on the assessment of his co-operation. It further acknowledges that his subsequent co-operation was substantial.[257]

106. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that sentencing decisions are discretionary and turn on the particular circumstances of each case. Thus, the mere fact that the Deronjić Trial Chamber gave significant weight to the accused's co-operation notwithstanding certain false statements does not illustrate that the Trial Chamber in this case abused its discretion in reaching a different result.

107. The Appeals Chamber notes that it is undisputed that the Appellant had told lies to the Prosecution when confessing to crimes he had not committed. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that, in the specific circumstances of this case, any negative impact or confusion that such false confessions may have caused on the value of his co-operation had been cured. First, it was on the Appellant's initiative that he went back to the Prosecution, apologised, and corrected his statement.[258] Second, as acknowledged by the Prosecution, the Appellant showed his full willingness to co-operate with the Prosecution by openly admitting to having rendered false confessions. The Trial Chamber did not take account of these actions of the Appellant in assessing the value of his co-operation. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in this regard.

3. The lack of detail in certain areas of the Appellant's testimony

108. In relation to the Trial Chamber's finding regarding the lack of detail in his testimony in the Blagojević case, the Appellant submits that "it is unclear what the Trial Chamber had in mind because it gives no examples"[259] and claims that the reasoned opinion requirement was violated.[260]

DRAGAN OBRENOVIĆ

authority and form of participation.[175] The Defence argues that all the other persons charged for the crimes at Srebrenica were in positions above Dragan Obrenović. Although he accepts responsibility for his role in the offence as acting commander of portions of the Zvornik Brigade and does not dispute that his conduct makes him legally responsible for these acts, the actual level of authority and position of Dragan Obrenović should be taken into account in the overall hierarchy as well as his relatively limited participation in the plan.[176] The Defence draw a comparison with the case of Biljana Plavšić, who though occupying a superior position, was not involved in the first rank of leadership and had a lesser role in the execution of the crimes. The Defence maintains that Dragan Obrenović was only a 32 year old army major, temporarily in command of part of a brigade and was not in the first rank of leadership.[177] The Defence submits that despite higher numbers of victims, broader range of crimes and a higher position than the present case, Biljana Plavšić was sentenced to eleven years.[178]

b. Vulnerability of victims and depravity of the crimes

97. The Prosecution submits that depravity of the crimes and vulnerability of the victims are factors that the Trial Chamber should find to be aggravating factors.[179] The victims were helpless women, children and elderly, as well as captured military age men, who were in a vulnerable position and were subjected to extreme depravity.[180]

98. The Defence submits that while factors such as humiliation of victims, sadistic behaviour and depravity have been considered separately as aggravating in certain instances, the Trial Chamber in the Plavšić case correctly held that these are subsumed in the overall gravity of the offence.[181] Furthermore, in the present case these factors are less aggravating in number and scope than in the Plavšić case.[182]

(ii) Findings

99. The Trial Chamber notes that the position of leadership of an accused can be considered as aggravating factor.[183] The actual authority is of consequence, whereby not only high-ranking, but also a middle-ranking command position can aggravate the sentence.[184] The Trial Chamber finds that Dragan Obrenović was in a position of authority as Acting Commander and Deputy Commander of the Zvornik Brigade. The Trial Chamber recalls that Dragan Obrenović's criminal liability arises in large measure from this responsibility as a commander pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Statute. The Trial Chamber finds it would be inappropriate to use the same conduct to both establish liability and to establish an aggravating circumstance in this case.

100. The Trial Chamber recalls, however, the purpose behind the doctrine of command responsibility: to ensure compliance with the laws and customs of war and international humanitarian law generally.[185] When a commander fails to ensure compliance with the principles of international humanitarian law such that he fails to prevent or punish his subordinates for the commission of crimes that he knew or had reason to know about, he will be held liable pursuant to Article 7(3). When a commander orders his subordinates to commit a crime within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, he will be held liable pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute. When commanders, through their own actions or inactions, fail in the duty, which stems from their position, training, and leadership skills, to set an example for their troops that would promote the principles underlying the laws and customs of war and thereby – either tacitly or implicitly – promote or encourage the commission of crimes, this may be seen as an aggravating circumstance. The Trial Chamber finds that such is not the case with regards to Dragan Obrenović.

101. The Trial Chamber finds that the depravity of the crimes is subsumed in the overall gravity of the offence, and has already been addressed above. Therefore, the Trial Chamber does not consider this separately as an aggravating factor. The Trial Chamber finds that a comparison with crimes committed by others is not particularly helpful in this case.

102. The Trial Chamber takes particular note of the vulnerability of the victims. They were all in a position of helplessness and were subject to cruel treatment at the hands of their captors. In this situation, the Trial Chamber finds this to be an aggravating factor in the commission of the crimes.

103. The Trial Chamber finds that the following aggravating circumstances have been proven beyond reasonable doubt: the vulnerability of the victims.

IX. SEPARATE AND PARTIALLY DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE SCHOMBURG

A. Introduction

1. I support the Judgement of the Appeals Chamber, in particular its Disposition. However, I feel compelled to write separately since the Appeals Chamber fails to discuss the validity of the ratio decidendi of its decision in Prosecutor v. Enver Hadžihasanović et al.,[1] which is challenged by the Prosecution in this appeal. In particular, I dissent from the majority's decision not to address this issue[2] – although it was squarely before the Appeals Chamber – because it conveys the wrong impression that the Appeals Chamber tacitly endorses its decision in Hadžihasanović.

2. I note that the question of whether a superior is indeed under an obligation to punish crimes committed by his subordinates before he assumed command is not relevant in the instant case as it does not have an impact on the validity of the Trial Judgement.[3] However, in accordance with its usual systematic approach, the Appeals Chamber was required first to set out the applicable law before subsuming the underlying facts. Indeed, there are exceptional circumstances warranting that this legal issue of great significance to the jurisprudence of the International Tribunal is properly addressed.[4] Furthermore, the Hadžihasanović Appeal Decision on Jurisdiction's arbitrary limitation of the concept of superior responsibility to crimes committed by subordinates after the superior assumed control does not reflect customary international law. Consequently, there are cogent reasons for the Appeals Chamber to depart[5] as soon as possible from a jurisprudence that is legally not justifiable and goes directly against the mandate of the International Tribunal and the spirit of its Statute, i.e. to implement effectively accountability for crimes forming part of international customary law.

"subordinates [who] have committed a breach" must be understood in the context of the purpose of Additional Protocol I and international humanitarian law in general. As was discussed above, international humanitarian law strives for the greatest possible protection of those who do not or are no longer taking part in hostilities. Indeed, the Preamble to Additional Protocol I confirms that its object is to "reaffirm and develop the provisions protecting the victims of armed conflicts and to supplement measures intended to reinforce their application." A contextual reading of Articles 86 and 87 of Additional Protocol I thus inevitably leads to the conclusion that there is indeed a duty of superiors to initiate the prosecution of offences allegedly committed by their subordinates before the superior's assumption of command. This obligation is also aimed at discouraging the commission of further crimes.[49]

20. In this context, I regard neither the Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind appended to the above-mentioned Report of the International Law Commission nor the Statute of the ICC as helpful. None of them can be perceived as reflecting customary international law, since the aforementioned Draft Code was never implemented[50] and the respective article of the ICC Statute was the subject of difficult negotiations, which resulted in "delicate compromises".[51] Moreover, the ICC Statute is specific to the jurisdiction of the ICC and "was not intended to codify existing customary rules."[52] I would also refer to Article 10 of the ICC Statute which states that "[n]othing in this Part [Jurisdiction, Admissibility and Applicable Law] shall be interpreted as limiting or prejudicing in any way existing or developing rules of international law for purposes other than this Statute."[53] Finally, I cannot but stress that the Appeals Chamber is seized of a case dating back to 1992, while the Statute of the ICC was negotiated in 1998.

21. Furthermore, the reliance of the Appeals Chamber in Hadžihasanović on the words "in the circumstances of the time" and "was committing" contained in Article 86(2) of Additional Protocol I and similar language in the ICC Statute is misguided as it is in contradiction with the contribution, according to its supporting character, must further, or at least facilitate, the commission of the crime.[806]

285. Whereas the Prosecution suggests the same position,[807] the Defence requires the effect of the contribution not only to be substantial but also to be 'direct'.[808] While this position seems supported by the terms used in the trial judgements in the Tadić case[809] and later in the Strugar case,[810] the Trial Chamber in the Furundžija case found such a 'direct' requirement misleading if it was to express more than the necessary 'proximity' (in terms of a link) between the assistance and the principal act.[811] Since the aiding and abetting contribution may be remote both in time and place from when and where the principal crime will be committed,[812] there is no reason why it should be treated differently from instigation which, as previously acknowledged, can be indirect.[813] Accordingly, aiding and abetting should not be limited to direct contributions, as long as the effect of facilitating the crime is the same, irrespective of whether produced directly or by way of indirect means or intermediaries, provided, of course, that the final result is covered by the participant's corresponding intent.[814]

(c) Mens Rea

286. With regard to the varying descriptions of mens rea of the aider and abettor,[815] some clarification is needed. While it is undisputed that aiding and abetting requires intent,[816] the structure and contents of intent is described in different ways. Whereas a long line of judgements appear to identify intent with the knowledge/awareness of the aider and abettor that he is

This position is, at least with regard to the geographical distance, also expressed by the Trial Chamber in the Strugar case: Strugar Trial Judgement, para. 349. If the Trial Chamber in this case nevertheless seems to draw its requirement of a 'direct and substantial effect' from the Appeals Chamber's language in the Tadić case which stated that the "aider and abettor carries out acts specifically directed to assist ?...ğ the perpetration of a certain specific crime", the Appeals Chamber in the Tadić case is obviously merely indicating the necessary 'direction' to the principal crime: see Strugar Trial Judgement, para. 349, fn. 1042, referring to Vasiljević Appeal Judgement, para. 102 and Blaškić Appeal Judgement, para. 45; see also Tadić Appeal Judgement, para. 229. dissolution of the SFRY had started by 25 June 1991,[47] and the conflict broke out in BiH in 1992.[48] In June 1992, the VRS was still in the nascent stages of its formation and the evidence suggests that paramilitary groups were responsible for much of the violence taking place at that time.[49] Perišić made no reference to the VRS in this statement thus, the exodus he referred to cannot necessarily be attributable to the actions of the VRS. This statement therefore does not establish as the only reasonable conclusion that Perišić became aware of the VRS's propensity to commit crimes at that time.

49. On a more general note, both of these statements involve knowledge that the Majority purports Perišić acquired prior to the Indictment period. Even accepting the Majority's interpretation of these statements – which I do not – it is important to recognise that situations during a war can change dramatically over time. What Perišić knew or thought he knew about the activities and propensities of the VRS during the initial break-up of the SFRY cannot be equated with his understanding of circumstances during the later stages of the war.

(b) Evidence Following Perišić's Appointment as Chief of the VJ General Staff

50. I respectfully dissent from the Majority's conclusion that Perišić was aware from the early stages of his appointment as Chief of the VJ General Staff of the VRS's discriminatory intent and criminal conduct in BiH.[50]

(i) Letter from the VRS

51. The congratulatory letter sent from the VRS Krajina Corps Command to Perišić on 26 August 1993 regarding his appointment as Chief of the VJ General Staff – reflecting a desire to unify the VRS and VJ to create a unified Serbian state – did not provide Perišić with knowledge of any sort of discriminatory intent or criminal conduct of the VRS.[51] The letter stated, in relevant part:

> We wish you to settle at your new duty as soon as possible, to choose your associates, transform the army where needed, removing the weaknesses of the old system and the former JNA, creating

XII. DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE MOLOTO ON COUNTS 1 TO 4 AND 9 TO 12

1. I respectfully dissent from the Majority's finding as to Momčilo Perišić's individual criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute in relation to Counts 1 to 4 and Counts 9 to 12 of the Indictment.

A. Introductory Remarks

2. The Majority's conclusion that the objective element of aiding and abetting has been met in this case is premised on two findings: (1) that the VRS heavily depended on the VJ for logistical and personnel support; and (2) that the crimes were inextricably linked with the strategy of the Bosnian Serb leadership.

1. VRS Dependence on VJ Logistical and Personnel Support

3. In my view, providing assistance to the VRS to wage war cannot and should not be equated with aiding and abetting the crimes committed during such war. The provision of assistance by Perišić to the VRS is too remote from the crimes committed during the war to qualify as aiding and abetting such crimes. To conclude otherwise, as the Majority has done, is to criminalise the waging of war, which is not a crime according to the Statute of the Tribunal. In addition, it raises the question: where is the cut-off line? For instance, would a manufacturer of weapons who supplies an army with weapons which are then used to commit crimes during a war also be criminally responsible? In this respect, I note that it is immaterial whether the arms are provided for cash or free of charge. It is noteworthy that, notwithstanding numerous opportunities to do so, no superior has been charged before the Tribunal with aiding and abetting the crimes of his soldiers merely for the reason that he supplied them with arms, sent them to war and they committed crimes. Unlike this example, Perišić was not supplying his soldiers, but soldiers of another army, thus placing him in a more remote position in relation to the crimes. Aiding and abetting has always been charged where the conduct of the accused is proximate to the crime committed by the principal perpetrator. Therefore, if a superior who supplies his soldiers is not charged, Perišić, who supplied a different army, should not be charged.

4. While there is no doubt in my mind that the VRS was, to a large degree, dependent upon the VJ to function as an army, I respectfully submit that it is inappropriate to infer ipso facto on the notion of dependence that Perišić's assistance had a substantial effect on the commission of crimes. It is noteworthy that the trial record established that the dependence of the VRS on the VJ was not absolute.

pursuant to Articles 5 and 3 of the Statute respectively.[254] Common Article 3(1) (a) of the Geneva Conventions provides the basis for the inclusion of murder under Article 3 of the Statute.[255]

H. Individual Criminal Responsibility

1. Responsibility Under Article 7(1) of the Statute – Aiding and Abetting

124. The Prosecution charges Momčilo Perišić with aiding and abetting the planning, preparation or execution of the crimes alleged in Counts 1 to 4 and 9 to 13 of the Indictment pursuant to Article 7(1).[256]

125. Article 7(1) of the Statute provides:

> A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 5 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime.

(a) Aiding and Abetting

(i) Actus Reus

126. "Aiding and abetting" consists of acts or omissions directed at providing practical assistance, encouragement or moral support to the perpetration of the crime, which have a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime.[257] The Appeals Chamber expressly stated that "specific direction" is not a requisite element of the actus reus of aiding and abetting.[258] There is no requirement of a cause-effect relationship between the conduct of the aider and abettor and the commission of the crime or that such conduct served as a condition precedent to the commission of

For a thorough analysis of the actus reus of aiding and abetting, see Furundžija Trial Judgement, paras 192-235.

258 Mrkšić and Šljivančanin Appeal Judgement, para. 159. The Appeals Chamber in Blagojević and Jokić held that "specific direction" has not always been included as element of the actus reus of aiding and abetting and that this may be explained that "such a finding will often be implicit in the finding that the accused has provided practical assistance to the principal perpetrator which had a substantial effect on the commission of the crime" considered that "to the extent that specific direction forms an implicit part of the actus reus of aiding and abetting, where the accused knowingly participated in the commission of an offence and his or her participation substantially affected the commission of that offence, the fact that his or her participation amounted to no more than his or her 'routine duties' will not exculpate the accused", Blagojević and Jokić Appeal Judgement, paras 182, 185-189.

the crime.[259] The actus reus of aiding and abetting a crime may occur before, during, or after the principal crime has been committed[260] and at a location which is removed from that where the principal crime is committed.[261]

127. The aider and abettor is always an accessory to the crime perpetrated by another person, the principal.[262] For an accused to be liable for aiding and abetting, the underlying crime must ultimately be committed by the principal perpetrator. It is however not necessary that the latter be identified or tried, even in cases of crimes requiring specific intent.[263] It is also not necessary that the principal perpetrator be aware of the aider and abettor's contribution to the crime.[264]

128. The determination of whether conduct substantially assists the commission of a crime requires a fact-based inquiry.[265] The Appeals Chamber has determined that the actus reus of aiding and abetting may be satisfied by a commander permitting the use of resources under his or her control, including personnel, to facilitate the perpetration of a crime.[266] Furthermore, the fact that the aider and abettor's conduct amounted to no more than his "routine duties" does not exculpate him, if such conduct substantially contributed to the commission of the crime.[267]

(ii) Mens Rea

129. The requisite mental element of aiding and abetting is knowledge that the acts performed assist the commission of the specific crime of the principal perpetrator.[268] The aider and abettor must be aware of the "essential elements" of the crime committed by the principal perpetrator, including the state of mind of the principal perpetrator.[269] It is not required, however, that the aider and abettor share the mens rea required for such crime.[270]

130. As consistently confirmed by the Appeals Chamber:

the operation was not successful,[4551] the Majority finds that Perišić's actions show that he intended to and in fact did provide assistance to Mladić and the VRS war-effort in the Sarajevo campaign, at a time when he already knew of the VRS criminal intent in the implementation of its war strategy.

7. Conclusion

1621. The Majority finds that Perišić repeatedly exercised his authority to assist the VRS in waging a war that encompassed systematic criminal actions against Bosnian Muslim civilians as a military strategy and objective. Perišić's actions substantially facilitated the commission of these crimes because the VRS heavily depended on the VJ's support to function as an army and conduct its operations, including besieging Sarajevo and taking over Srebrenica. The Majority is also satisfied that all of Perišić's actions described above were voluntary.

1622. As found earlier, Perišić urged the FRY SDC to continue its policy of assisting the VRS. He notably oversaw the provision of wide-ranging logistical and technical assistance to the VRS. Without the regular supply of considerable quantities of ammunition and other weaponry, as well as fuel, technical expertise, repair services and personnel training, the VRS would have been hampered in conducting its operations in Sarajevo and Srebrenica.

1623. In addition, the Majority found that the military personnel that Perišić provided for and sustained through the 30th PC included the officers holding positions of command and authority in the VRS Main Staff, as well as well-trained commanding officers of the lower units. The payment of salaries to the VRS's top officers, including Mladić, Dragomir Milošević, Galić, Popović, Gvero, Tolimir, and other principal perpetrators of the crimes charged in Srebrenica and Sarajevo was instrumental in helping the VRS plan and carry out its operations in Sarajevo and Srebrenica. By creating the PCs – a mechanism through which he ensured that these military personnel continued receiving their salaries and enjoying all their benefits in the VJ – Perišić allowed them to carry out their operations in the VRS with limited concern for their basic material needs and those of their families. Perišić sustained the very life line of the VRS and created the conditions for it to implement a war strategy that encompassed the commission of crimes against civilians.

1624. The Majority recognises that the evidence does not establish that the specific weapons used in committing the charged crimes stemmed from the logistical assistance process overseen by Perišić. However, the Majority recalls that the acts of the aider and abettor need not have been "specifically directed" to assist the crimes.[4552] The element of substantial assistance for aiding and abetting does not require that an accused provided the specific weapon used by the perpetrator, as the element may be established by the numerous other forms of practical assistance described above, which substantially facilitated the perpetrators' crimes. Moreover, any suggestion that assisting the VRS and advising the SDC was part of Perišić's "routine duties" could not be construed as exculpatory because the evidence establishes that this conduct substantially contributed to the commission of the crimes.[4553] By the same token, the fact that other FRY officials, such as members of the SDC or the MOD, also played a role in assisting the VRS does not negate Perišić's actions.

1625. The Majority has considered the Defence's ex post facto argument on the application of aiding and abetting under the facts of the present case,[4554] but finds that only a fraction of the assistance provided by Perišić fits that description. The Majority is satisfied that the overwhelming majority of Perišić's actions in support of the VRS facilitated the commission of future crimes.

1626. The Majority also recalls that there is neither a requirement of a cause-effect relationship between Perišić's conduct as an aider and abettor and the commission of the crimes,[4555] nor a requirement that his actions served as a condition precedent to the commission of the crimes,[4556] nor a requirement that his actions have been the cause sine qua non of the crimes.[4557]

1627. In sum, the Majority finds beyond a reasonable doubt that Perišić's logistical assistance and personnel assistance, individually and cumulatively, had a substantial effect on the crimes perpetrated by the VRS in Sarajevo and Srebrenica, as charged in the Indictment.

C. Findings on the Mental Elements of Aiding and Abetting 1628. The following analysis and findings are made by the Majority of the Trial Chamber, Judge Moloto dissenting.

1. Preliminary Remarks

1629. The Majority recalls that to establish the required mental element for aiding and abetting, it must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt that Perišić knew that his actions provided practical

X. SENTENCING

A. Law on Sentencing

1791. A sentence is to be determined with reference to Article 24 of the Statute, and to Rules 87(C) and 101 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence ("Rules"). In accordance with Article 24(2), the Trial Chamber takes into account "such factors as the gravity of the offence and the individual circumstances of the convicted person".[4840] Rule 101 additionally requires the Trial Chamber to take into account aggravating and mitigating circumstances,[4841] the general practice regarding prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia,[4842] and the extent to which any penalty imposed by a court of any State on the convicted person for the same act has already been served.[4843]

1792. Rule 87(C) of the Rules grants discretion to the Trial Chamber either to impose a sentence in respect of each finding of guilt and indicate whether such sentences shall be served consecutively or concurrently, or to impose a single sentence reflecting the totality of the criminal conduct of the accused.[4844]

1793. A sentence of imprisonment may be entered for a term up to and including the remainder of the convicted person's life.[4845] The Trial Chamber is obligated to individualise penalties to fit the circumstances of the accused and the gravity of the crime, and is granted broad discretion to determine an appropriate sentence that will fulfil this purpose.[4846]

1. Purposes of Sentencing

1794. Retribution and deterrence are the primary purposes of sentencing for crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal.[4847]

liability.[4872] Yet, the abuse of a position of authority may still be taken in consideration as an aggravating circumstance for Article 7(3) liability.[4873]

1802. Mitigating circumstances need only be proven on a balance of probabilities, and need not be related to the offence.[4874] It is generally within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to determine whether or not a factor will be accepted as a mitigating circumstance, and what weight the factor should be granted. Examples of factors that may be accepted as mitigating circumstances include post-conflict conduct of the defendant which promoted peace and reconciliation in the former Yugoslavia,[4875] substantial and qualitative cooperation with the Prosecution,[4876] voluntary surrender,[4877] good character[4878] and compliance with conditions of provisional release.[4879] The absence of a mitigating factor can never serve as an aggravating factor.[4880]

3. General Sentencing Practice in the Former Yugoslavia

1803. Under Article 24(1) of the Statute, the Trial Chamber shall have "recourse to the general practice regarding prison sentences in the courts of the former Yugoslavia".[4881] It is well established, however, that the Trial Chamber is not required to conform to that practice.[4882] The Tribunal has discretion to diverge from the sentencing practices of the former Yugoslavia, particularly where they would be inadequate in light of international law.[4883]

1804. While Article 24(1) of the Statute and Rule 101(B)(iii) of the Rules refer to case law from the courts of the former Yugoslavia, the jurisprudence of the Tribunal has established that statutory provisions in force in the former Yugoslavia at the time of the commission of the crimes should also be consulted.[4884] At the time of their alleged commission, offences of the kind at issue in the present case were regulated by the Criminal Code of the FRY, which had been in force since 1 July 1977.[4885]

1805. Article 142(1) of the FRY Criminal Code, entitled "War Crimes against the Civilian Population", provided as follows:

> Whoever, in violation of international law in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, orders an attack on the civilian population, settlement, individual civilians or persons hors de combat, which results in death or serious injury to body or health; indiscriminate attack affecting civilian population; the killing, torture or inhumane treatment of the civilian population [...] causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health; unlawful deportation, transfers; use of measures of intimidation and terror [...] or whoever commits any of the aforementioned offences, shall be punished by no less than five years in prison, or by the death penalty.[4886]

1806. Article 38(1) and (2) of the FRY Criminal Code provided that no sentence of imprisonment could exceed 15 years, but that a 20-year term could be imposed for criminal offences otherwise punishable by the death penalty.[4887]

4. Credit for Time Served in Custody

1807. In accordance with Rule 101(C) of the Rules, credit shall be given to the convicted person for the period during which they were detained pending surrender to the Tribunal or pending trial. Momčilo Perišić has been detained since his voluntary surrender and transfer to the seat of the Tribunal on 7 March 2005, although he was provisionally released on a number of occasions.

B. Determination of the Sentence

1. Submissions of the Parties

1808. The Prosecution recommends that Perišić be sentenced to life imprisonment.[4888] In support for its position, it notably emphasises the gravity of the crimes perpetrated in Sarajevo, Zagreb and Srebrenica.[4889] It submits that the number of civilian victims across the three crime bases is in the Registrar: Mr. Hans Holthuis

Judgement of: 27 February 2003

PROSECUTOR

v.

BILJANA PLAVŠIĆ

SENTENCING JUDGEMENT

The Office of the Prosecutor:

Ms. Carla Del Ponte
Mr. Mark Harmon
Mr. Alan Tieger

Counsel for the Accused:

Mr. Robert J. Pavich
Mr. Eugene O'Sullivan

3. Conclusion

52. The Trial Chamber accepts that this is a crime of utmost gravity, involving as it does a campaign of ethnic separation which resulted in the death of thousands and the expulsion of thousands more in circumstances of great brutality. The gravity is illustrated by:

- the massive scope and extent of the persecutions;
- the numbers killed, deported and forcibly expelled;
- the grossly inhumane treatment of detainees; and
- the scope of the wanton destruction of property and religious buildings.

B. Aggravating circumstances

53. The Prosecution identifies three aggravating factors:

(i) the leadership position of the accused;

(ii) the vulnerability of the victims; and

(iii) the depravity of the crimes to which the victims were subjected.[100]

54. In relation to the first factor, the Prosecution notes that the International Tribunal has consistently viewed the leadership position of an accused as an aggravating factor. The Prosecution cites the trial judgement in Krstić in contending that the consequences are necessarily more serious if individuals who occupy top military or political positions use those positions to commit crimes.[101] The Prosecution also draws the attention of the Trial Chamber to cases where leadership positions lower than that occupied by Mrs. Plavšić have been found to be aggravating circumstances.[102] The Prosecution moreover observes that in the Kambanda case at the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ("ICTR") the Chamber emphasised the aggravating impact of Kambanda's leadership position when assessing the weight of aggravating factors. Kambanda was the Prime Minister of Rwanda at the time of the commission of the crimes in question.[103]

55. Further, when dealing with the participation of the accused in the offences the Prosecution points out that Mrs. Plavšić supported and maintained the bodies through which the ethnic separation by force was maintained; she encouraged participation in that objective. "While her role was not as influential or powerful as some others, [...] she was a member of the small national leadership cadre which spearheaded the effort [...]."[104] The Prosecution notes that Mrs. Plavšić accepts responsibility for her role as a member of the collective and expanded Presidencies of the Serbian Republic of BH and Republika Srpska, but points out that, as set out in the Factual Basis, there are distinctions to be made between herself and other leaders.[105]

56. The Defence accepts that the scope of the crimes outlined in Count 3 of the Indictment and the manner in which they were committed may be taken into account as an aggravating factor.[106] The Defence also accepts that such aggravating factors may include the scale and planning of the offence, the number of victims, the length of time over which the crimes were committed, the violence associated with the crimes and the repeated and systematic nature of the crimes.[107] However, the Defence submits that a high rank in the political field should not, in itself, result in a harsher sentence for an accused, but accepts that an individual who wrongly exercises or abuses power deserves a harsher sentence than a person acting on his or her own. Further, it notes that while the direct participation of a high level superior in a crime under Article 7 (1) of the Statute is an aggravating circumstance, the extent of such aggravation depends on the level of authority and the form of participation of the accused.[108]

57. The Trial Chamber accepts that the superior position of the accused is an aggravating factor in the case. The accused was not in the very first rank of the leadership: others occupied that position. She did not conceive the plan which led to this crime and had a lesser role in its execution than others. Nonetheless, Mrs. Plavšić was in the Presidency, the highest civilian body, during the campaign and encouraged and supported it by her participation in the Presidency and her pronouncements.

frames, the Trial Chamber cannot be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt as to the timing of the shooting which Pepić heard. As a result, the Trial Chamber cannot infer from this evidence, individually or cumulatively with that of the survivors, that the shooting Pepić heard was the reaction to the "burnt-hands" incident, or the ongoing, full-scale execution.[4799]

1532. The Trial Chamber has also considered the hearsay evidence of PW-100 and PW-168. PW-100's statement, albeit not detailed, does provide support for the involvement of the SBP in the full-scale execution in that he refers to all the prisoners destined to be exchanged in Tuzla as having been killed at a "warehouse" by a "regular special police force".[4800] He makes no mention of a separate event triggered by the killing and injury of some police members present at the site and thus the statement supports the participation of the SBP in the full-blown execution. Yet, as noted previously, this statement is vague in content and the source of the hearsay is not identified beyond the person being a member of the Jahorina Recruits. PW-168, on the other hand, recounted a hearsay statement which is more detailed and in which the source is identified. He related that Stupar described that one of the prisoners grabbed a rifle and used it to kill a member of his unit. There was then an incident "whereby the police men and the soldiers who had been there opened fire on the prisoners and killed them".[4801] However, this statement is ambiguous in its content. It could be interpreted to mean the prisoners in the immediate vicinity were killed, i.e, the "burnt-hands" incident or all the prisoners at the Kravica Warehouse were killed, i.e, full-scale execution. While the Trial Chamber, as noted previously, is satisfied as to the reliability of the evidence, given the lack of detail as to the content and source of PW-100's information and the ambiguity of the statement made to PW-168, combined with the fact that both involve untested hearsay, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence is not sufficient to establish participation on the part of the SBP 2nd Šekovići Detachment in the full massacre at the Kravica Warehouse.

1533. From the totality of the evidence before it, the Trial Chamber finds that a full-scale execution took place at the Kravica Warehouse that evening, after the "burnt-hands" incident occurred.[4802] While there is evidence that there were pauses between the shooting, the length of the pauses is unclear.[4803] It could have ranged from a mere half hour to three hours. In addition, the Trial Chamber is unable on the evidence to establish the time when the full-scale execution began.

1534. As to who executed the Bosnian Muslim prisoners, the evidence is even more unclear. Taken cumulatively, the Trial Chamber finds that one reasonable inference in the circumstances is

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia Since 1991 ("Appeals Chamber" and "Tribunal", respectively) is seized of two appeals, respectively filed confidentially by Jadranko Prlić and publicly by Bruno Stojić, Slobodan Praljak, Milivoj Petković, Valentin Ćorić, and Berislav Pušić against the "Decision on Request for Admission of the Statement of Jadranko Prlić" ("Impugned Decision") issued by Trial Chamber II ("Trial Chamber").

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

2. On 13 and 14 December 2001, Jadranko Prlić was questioned as a suspect[1] – in the presence of his then counsel Ćamil Salahović – by representatives of the Office of the Prosecutor ("Prosecution") in the Netherlands, after he contacted them with a request to be interviewed.[2] The questioning was audio-recorded pursuant to Rule 43. According to the Prosecution, the questioning was also video-recorded.[3] Prlić received the warnings required by Rule 42.[4]

3. On 28 March 2007, the Prosecution requested admission into the trial record of the December 2001 Transcript,[5] both for its substantive content and in order to confront other witnesses in the case.[6] On 5 April 2007, Bruno Stojić, Slobodan Praljak, Milivoj Petković, Valentin Ćorić, and Berislav Pušić ("Joint Defence") filed a Joint Response requesting the Trial Chamber to reject the Prosecution Motion ("Joint Defence Response").[7] Prlić also filed an objection to the admission of the December 2001 Transcript on 12 and 13 April 2007 ("Prlić Response").[8]

4. On 22 August 2007, the Trial Chamber admitted into evidence the December 2001 Transcript pursuant to Rule 89(C), essentially considering that its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial.[9]

The Appeals Chamber considers that, although the parties refer to Prlić's "Statement", it is more appropriate to describe the document in question as a transcript of Prlić's recorded questioning by the Prosecution in December 2001.

5. On 31 August 2007, the Joint Defence filed a request for reconsideration or, in the alternative, for certification of the Impugned Decision,[10] while Prlić filed his request for certification on 5 September 2007.[11] The Prosecution did not file any response.[12]

6. On 8 October 2007, the Trial Chamber issued its "Décision portant sur la demande de réexamen et de certification d'appel de la décision portant admission de la déclaration de Jadranko Prlić", in which it rejected the request for reconsideration advanced by the Joint Defence[13] and granted both requests for certification pursuant to Rule 73(B).[14]

7. On 15 October 2007, Prlić as well as the Joint Defence filed their appeals against the Impugned Decision ("Prlić Appeal"[15] and "Joint Defence Appeal",[16] respectively). On 25 October, the Prosecution filed its response ("Prosecution Response").[17] On 31 October, Prlić filed a confidential reply to the Prosecution Response ("Prlić Reply").[18]

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

8. Trial Chambers exercise broad discretion as regards admission of evidence.[19] In this context, the Appeals Chamber notes that it is seized only with the issue of the admission of evidence: the substantial assessment of the evidence is for the Trial Chamber, subject to an appeal – if any – against the Trial Chamber's judgement and will be properly done when the trial record is complete. Considering that this type of decision must therefore be given a margin of deference, the Appeals Chamber will reverse such decisions only when an abuse of such discretion is established. The Appeals Chamber will overturn a Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion where it is found to be (i) based on an incorrect interpretation of governing law; (ii) based on a patently incorrect conclusion of fact; or (iii) so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion. The Appeals Chamber will also consider whether the Trial Chamber has given weight to extraneous or irrelevant considerations or has failed to give weight or sufficient weight to relevant considerations in reaching its decision.[20]

9. The question before the Appeals Chamber is thus not whether it agrees with a decision but whether the Trial Chamber has correctly exercised its discretion in reaching this decision.[21] For the Appeals Chamber to intervene in a discretionary decision of a Trial Chamber, it must be demonstrated that the Trial Chamber has committed a "discernible error" resulting in prejudice.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Introduction

10. Prlić submits that, by admitting the December 2001 Transcript, the Trial Chamber failed to recognize the existence of a conflict of interest between him and his then Counsel Ćamil Salahović and erred by finding that, at the time Prlić spoke to the Prosecution, his rights as guaranteed by the Tribunal's Statute ("Statute") and the Rules were respected.[22] The Joint Defence focuses its grounds of appeal on the alleged breach of the right of the other five accused "to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against" them, pursuant to Article 21(4)(e) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber will discuss these two appeals in turn.

B. Conflict of interest

1. Introduction

11. Prlić's arguments on appeal are all essentially devoted to arguing a conflict of interest between him and his Counsel in December 2001. On the assumption that Counsel did not effectively represent him during the Prosecution's questioning in December 2001 due to this conflict of interest, Prlić then argues that, despite appearances, his fundamental procedural rights set forth in Rules 42 and 43 were effectively violated. Due to the lack of effective legal assistance, Prlić argues that he "cannot be held to have understood" the potential consequences of subjecting himself to questioning by the Prosecution, rather than remaining silent.[23] Prlić alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in its interpretation of the law on conflict of interest;[24] reached a wrong conclusion

Rule 89(C) would not "evade the admission criteria of Rule 92*bis*"; (d) the co-accused bear the burden of proving that the December 2001 Transcript contained false allegations against them.[62]

2. Relevant background

34. The Trial Chamber, having established that the Rules do not contain an explicit provision dealing with admission of an accused's statement in relation to other co-accused in a joint trial, proceeded to analyse the legal question under the "general provisions" of Rules 89(C) and 89(D):[63]

> A Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value.
> A Chamber may exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial.

The conclusion that the December 2001 Transcript's probative value is not substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial was also premised on the finding that Prlić's questioning had taken place according to the procedure enshrined in Rules 42 and 43 and that the December 2001 Transcript could therefore be admitted in Prlić's trial, including for use against his co-accused, if it was relevant and had probative value.[64]

35. The Trial Chamber further noted that the probative value of the December 2001 Transcript would be greatly increased if Prlić were to decide to exercise his right to testify at trial, since the parties and the Chamber would then be able to cross-examine and question him.[65] It however emphasized that material going to the proof of the acts or conduct of an accused and which was not be subject to cross-examination could not be relied upon in convicting that accused unless corroborated by other evidence.[66]

36. The contentious issue on appeal is whether the December 2001 Transcript should be admitted (and, if so, under which conditions) in proceedings, such as the present ones, where the questioned person is one of several co-accused in a joint trial.[67] The reasoning of the Trial Chamber and the arguments of the Joint Defence against that reasoning therefore relate to the appropriate balance of the competing interests at stake in such a scenario.

JUDGEMENT

The Office of the Prosecutor:

Mr. Kyle Wood
Mr. Aditya Menon

Counsel for Jelena Rašić:

Ms. Mira Tapušković

63. The Prosecution responds that Rašić fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that she abused a position of trust as a case manager.[172] It argues that Rašić's submissions are largely semantic because she was acting as an "officer of justice" by virtue of her role as a case manager which placed her in a significant position of trust despite her youth and inexperience.[173] Moreover, it submits that she fails to explain how the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in describing a case manager as an "officer of justice" or how this description had a negative impact on her sentence.[174]

64. The Prosecution further responds that Rašić's knowledge of the falsity of the Tabaković Statement is irrelevant to whether she bribed him and incited him to bribe others.[175] It submits that Rašić fails to show that the Trial Chamber erroneously considered the fact that her criminal conduct was "persistent and repetitive" as an aggravating factor just because the Tabaković trial chamber did not explicitly mention this as an aggravating factor.[176] Finally, the Prosecution also submits that she fails to explain how her sentence should be shorter merely because others might be more culpable than she.[177]

2. Discussion

65. The Appeals Chamber finds that Rašić has failed to show that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on her position as an "officer of justice" as an aggravating circumstance. The Appeals Chamber notes that neither party explicitly argued that Rašić was an "officer of justice". However, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber used this term to describe Rašić's position of trust as a member of the defence team.[178] This position of trust was mentioned by the Prosecution when it submitted that "Ms. Ra[š]i[ć] occupied a position of trust, as [...] Case Manager, whose activities were at a level above those of Mr. Tabaković, whilst he was a level himself above Mr. X and [Mr.] Y."[179] Thus, Rašić's argument effectively turns on semantics and she has failed to show that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion when it relied on an aggravating circumstance that was not mentioned by the parties.

66. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Rašić has failed to show that the Trial Chamber's finding that she was an "officer of justice" is not supported by the evidence. Again, the Appeals acknowledges that he presented a defence against an allegation of aiding and abetting.[257] In addition, the question of whether the Appellant's responsibility could be characterized as that of an aider and abettor was extensively litigated on appeal.[258] For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds it appropriate to ascertain whether the Trial Chamber's findings support the Appellant's responsibility for persecutions under Count 1 of the Fifth Amended Indictment as that of an aider and abettor pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Statute.

B. Applicable Law

85. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of aiding and abetting consists of acts directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a certain specific crime, and which have a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime.[259] It is not required that a cause-effect relationship between the conduct of the aider and abettor and the commission of the crime be shown, or that such conduct served as a condition precedent to the commission of the crime.[260] The actus reus of aiding and abetting a crime may occur before, during, or after the principal crime has been perpetrated, and the location at which the actus reus takes place may be removed from the location of the principal crime.[261]

86. The requisite mens rea for aiding and abetting is knowledge that the acts performed by the aider and abettor assist in the commission of the specific crime of the principal perpetrator.[262] The aider and abettor must be aware of the essential elements of the crime which was ultimately committed by the principal.[263] In relation to the crime of persecutions, an offence with a specific intent, he must thus be aware not only of the crime whose perpetration he is facilitating but also of the discriminatory intent of the perpetrators of that crime. He need not share the intent but he must be aware of the discriminatory context in which the crime is to be committed and know that his support or encouragement has a substantial effect on its perpetration.[264] However, it is not necessary that the aider and abettor knows either the precise crime that was intended or the one that was, in the event, committed. If he is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed, and one of those crimes is in fact committed, he has intended to facilitate the commission of that crime, and is guilty as an aider and abettor.[265]

C. The Appellant's responsibility as an aider and abettor for persecutions (Count 1)

87. Under Count 1, the Trial Chamber convicted the Appellant of persecutions – as a participant in a joint criminal enterprise – based on the following underlying acts:[266] (1) unlawful arrests and detention;[267] (2) cruel and inhumane treatment, including beatings, torture and confinement under inhumane conditions;[268] (3) forced labour;[269] and (4) deportation and forcible transfer.[270]

88. On the basis of the same acts of deportation underlying the persecutions conviction, the Trial Chamber also found the Appellant responsible for deportation as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(d) of the Statute under Count 2.[271] However, finding that a conviction for deportation as a crime against humanity is impermissibly cumulative with a conviction for persecutions through deportation, the Trial Chamber did not enter a conviction for deportation as a crime against humanity under Count 2.[272]

1. Preliminary issues

89. At the outset, the Appeals Chamber will address the Appellant's third, fifth, sixth and seventh grounds of appeal, as they all raise issues of general significance to the Trial Chamber's findings.

(a) The Trial Chamber's findings relating to joint criminal enterprise (Third ground of appeal)

90. The Appellant submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in inferring from the evidence that there was a common plan to persecute the non-Serb population of the Municipality of Bosanski Šamac and that he was involved therein.[273] He argues that Judge Lindholm's Dissenting Opinion presents another reasonable inference which is consistent with his innocence.[274] He submits that "[a]t most, the Trial Chamber should have convicted [him] only on the basis of aiding and > which contains an additional materially distinct element, then a conviction should be entered only under that provision.[746]

356. Whether the same conduct violates two distinct statutory provisions is a question of law.[747] Therefore, the Čelebići test focuses on the legal elements of each crime that may be the subject of a cumulative conviction rather than on the underlying conduct of the accused.[748] The Kordić Appeal Judgement explained that:

> When applying the Čelebići test, what must be considered are the legal elements of each offence, not the acts or omissions giving rise to the offence. What each offence requires, as a matter of law, is the pertinent inquiry. The Appeals Chamber will permit multiple convictions for the same act or omission where it clearly violates multiple distinct provisions of the Statute, where each statutory provision contains a materially distinct element not contained in the other(s), and which element requires proof of a fact which the elements of the other statutory provision(s) do not. The cumulative convictions test serves twin aims: ensuring that the accused is convicted only for distinct offences, and at the same time, ensuring that the convictions entered fully reflect his criminality.[749]

For the purposes of applying the Čelebići test, the legal elements of the crime include the chapeau requirements of the particular crime.[750]

357. The test is clear, and the Appeals Chamber considers it unnecessary to deal with the peripheral submissions of the parties concerning tests in domestic jurisdictions or the underlying social values and interests reflected in particular crimes.[751]

358. The law on cumulative convictions as established in the Čelebići Appeal Judgement was correctly stated by the Trial Chamber in the Trial Judgement.[752] However, the Trial Chamber went on to further qualify the test, stating that "in the exercise of its discretion, [the Chamber would] convict only in relation to the crime that most closely and most comprehensively reflects the totality of the accused's criminal conduct".[753] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, such an exercise of discretion constitutes an error of law. When the evidence supports convictions under multiple counts for the same underlying acts, the test as set forth in Čelebići and Kordić does not permit the Trial Chamber discretion to enter one or more of the appropriate convictions, unless the two crimes do not possess materially distinct elements.

[748] Both parties have indicated their agreement with this principle in their submissions. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Appellant also makes the inconsistent submission that it is the conduct of the accused that matters in the application of the test. The Appeals Chamber disagrees with this submission. See Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 5.23, Prosecution Reply Brief, para. 4.2; Stakić Response Brief, paras 200, 205, Stakić Reply Brief, para. 162.

263. Accordingly, this sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

B. Alleged Error in Characterization of the Mens Rea of the Criminal Offence

264. The Trial Chamber held that the required form of mens rea for attacks on civilians (Count 3) and destruction or wilful damage to cultural property (Count 6) is "direct intent", that is, respectively, "intent of making the civilian population or individual civilians, or civilian objects, the object of the attack"[653] and "direct intent to damage or destroy the property in question".[654] The Trial Chamber further found that, in the circumstances of the case, it did not need to consider whether "indirect intent" may have been sufficient for the crimes in question. Strugar submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the mens rea element of direct intent was met in relation to these two counts.[655]

265. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Defence Notice of Appeal alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in its findings in relation to both the actus reus and the mens rea for the crime of attack on civilians or civilian objects.[656] As for the crime of destruction and wilful damage to cultural property, the Defence Notice of Appeal refers generally to errors in establishing the elements of the offence.[657] However, the Defence Appeal Brief only elaborates on alleged errors with respect to the mens rea of both crimes.[658] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber understands Strugar to have abandoned the allegations concerning the actus reus elements of this crime.[659]

1. Arguments of the Parties

266. Strugar submits that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the mens rea element for the crimes charged under Counts 3 and 6 requires direct intent.[660] However, he contests the Trial

With respect to the actus reus requirement, the Trial Chamber concluded that "the crime of attacks on civilians or civilian objects, as a crime falling within the scope of Article 3 of the Statute, is, [...] an attack directed against a civilian population or individual civilians, or civilian objects, causing death and/or serious injury within the civilian population, or damage to the civilian objects." (Trial Judgement, para. 283).
[657] Defence Notice of Appeal, para. 86. With respect to elements of the actus reus requirement, the Trial Chamber concluded that (i) there must be actual damage or destruction occurring as a result of an act directed against the property which constitutes the cultural or spiritual heritage of peoples; (ii) the protection accorded to cultural property is lost where such property is used for military purposes at the time of the acts of hostility against it, but may not be lost simply because of military activities or military installations in the immediate vicinity of the cultural property (Trial Judgement, paras 308, 310, 312).
[658] Defence Appeal Brief, paras 119-123.
[659] The Appeals Chamber recalls that an appellant's brief should contain all the arguments and authorities in support of the grounds outlined in the notice of appeal (Rule 111 of the Rules; Practice Direction on Formal Requirements for Appeals from Judgements, para. 4). Cf., a contrario, Halilović Appeal Judgement, para. 25.

elements in the circumstances of this case.[805] Addressing the Prosecution's contention relating to the Trial Chamber's exercise of discretion and its use of the phrase "interests of justice", Strugar argues that the test on cumulative convictions was correctly applied and that "no discretion was asserted".[806] Moreover, Strugar submits that the phrase "interests of justice" is implicitly contained in the Čelebići test on cumulative convictions and that the principles underlying this concept motivate the application of the test. According to Strugar, this is the "exclusive context in which the Trial Chamber uses the phrase 'the interests of justice'".[807]

C. Discussion

321. The jurisprudence of the Tribunal on the issue of cumulative convictions is well-established. The Čelebići test, which is to be applied in determining whether cumulative convictions are permissible, states that:

> Having considered the different approaches expressed on this issue both within this Tribunal and other jurisdictions, this Appeals Chamber holds that reasons of fairness to the accused and the consideration that only distinct crimes may justify multiple convictions, lead to the conclusion that multiple criminal convictions entered under different statutory provisions but based on the same conduct are permissible only if each statutory provision involved has a materially distinct element not contained in the other. An element is materially distinct from another if it requires proof of a fact not required by the other.
> Where this test is not met, the Chamber must decide in relation to which offence it will enter a conviction. This should be done on the basis of the principle that the conviction under the more specific provision should be upheld. Thus, if a set of facts is regulated by two provisions, one of which contains an additional materially distinct element, then a conviction should be entered only under that provision.[808]

322. Whether the same conduct violates two or more distinct statutory provisions is a question of law.[809] Thus, "the Čelebići test focuses on the legal elements of each crime that may be the subject of a cumulative conviction rather than on the underlying conduct of the accused".[810]

1. The Trial Chamber's Use of Discretion in Applying the Cumulative Convictions Test

323. The Appeals Chamber notes that the test applicable to cumulative convictions was correctly set out by the Trial Chamber.[811] However, after finding that the offences at stake each

December 1991" compiled by the "Institute for Protection and Conservation of the Historical Monuments" of Dubrovnik (hereinafter "Institute Report").[979] The Institute Report purports to deal with damage between 1 October and 31 December 1991, which of course includes damage caused on 6 December 1991, and subject of the Indictment, but it is necessary to be able to separate damage of 6 December from all other damage. While the Institute Report itself purports to specify damage occurring on 6 December 1991 by the date of damage given for each object surveyed, this specification has been shown not to be always accurate.[980]

322. Although two witnesses, architects Lucjiana Peko and Slobodan Vuković, who personally carried out inspections of the damage sustained by the buildings and structures in the Old Town, vouched generally for the accuracy and reliability of the extracts from the Institute Report,[981] the Chamber notes that the entries in the Institute Report were recorded on the basis of hearsay evidence. In most of the cases, information was collected from unknown persons who are described merely as neighbours or tenants.[982] Whether those neighbours or tenants spoke from personal knowledge or hearsay knowledge is not known.

323. Moreover, the Chamber notes that these two witnesses had not had previous experience in inspecting war damage. Neither they, nor the members of their inspection teams, had expertise in ballistic or criminal investigation.[983] The cross-examination of Slobodan Vuković on the contents of his part of the Institute Report revealed many inaccuracies and material typographical errors.[984] Finally, the Chamber recalls that the Institute Report was originally conceived as, and still bears the title "preliminary report", i.e. the expectation of its authors was that a final report on damage would follow.[985] However, no final report has been presented in the case. Colin Kaiser, one of the UNESCO consultants tasked to assist in assessing the damage sustained from the October and [979] The Institute Report was marked for identification as Exhibit MFI/P51 but was never admitted into evidence in its entirety. However, the extracts from it were admitted as Exhibits P174, P212 and P52. See Prosecutor v Pavle Strugar, Case No. IT-01-42-T, Decision on the Admissibility of Certain Documents, 26 May 2004, pp 8-11.

[980] It has been effectively pointed out during the cross-examination of Colin Kaiser that the damage described as damage of 6 December 1991 also included other damage which may have been incurred earlier (T 2556-2574). Colin Kaiser states that although the intention was to catalogue damage from 6 December 1991, it appears that other damage has been recorded. He could not guarantee that all the damage from the earlier period is contained in the report (T 2580-2584); Lucijana Peko, although insisting that during inspections she was able to "distinguish between old damage and recent damage" (T 1910-1911), concedes that she was not asked to distinguish between damage sustained in October/November and December and that, although, she was asked to "register all the damage that was sustained on the 6th of December", the Institute Report includes the damage from all three months, T 1912.

[981] Lucijana Peko confirms the list of buildings (Exhibit P52) which she personally examined, T 1862; 1944; Slobodan Vuković confirms the accuracy of the extracts from the Report on buildings which he personally examined (Exhibit P174), T 5922.

November attacks, could not vouch for the accuracy of the Institute Report, stating "You know I didn't carry out this survey. You know I wasn't looking at the teams. You know I am not responsible for this work."[986]

324. The Chamber, in determining what weight to attach to the submitted extracts of the Institute Report, concludes that the Report can be relied upon only to the extent it is confirmed by other evidence presented in this case, i.e. witness statements, other reports and video evidence.[987] The Chamber has proceeded on this basis.

325. As to the alleged damage to the office of the Institute itself (C1) the only evidence offered is the testimony of Colin Kaiser. His statement is, however, in this respect too vague to serve as a basis for a finding of damage to this particular building.[988]

326. In relation to Count 4 specifically, the Chamber finds that the Old Town sustained damage on a large scale as a result of the 6 December 1991 JNA attack. In this regard, the Chamber has considered the following factors: that 52 individually identifiable buildings and structures were destroyed or damaged; that the damaged or destroyed buildings and structures were located throughout the Old Town and included the ramparts surrounding it; that a large number of damaged houses bordered the main central axis of the Old Town, the Stradun, which itself was damaged, or were in the immediate vicinity thereof; and finally, that overall the damage varied from totally destroyed, i.e. burned out, buildings to more minor damage to parts of buildings and structures.

327. In relation to Count 6 specifically, the Chamber observes that the Old Town of Dubrovnik in its entirety[989] was entered onto the World Heritage List in 1979 upon the nomination of the SFRY.[990] The properties inscribed on the World Heritage List include those which, "because of their architecture, their homogeneity or their place in the landscape, are of outstanding universal value from the point of view of history, art or science."[991] The Chamber is of the view that all the property within the Old Town, i.e. each structure or building, is within the scope of Article 3(d) of the Statute. The Chamber therefore concludes that the attack launched by the JNA forces against [987] E.g. when video evidence was indicative of the recent damage, i.e., amount of debris, the Chamber could conclude that the damage was recent. Here the Chamber also recalls the testimony of Slobodan Vuković who said that it was an "instantaneous" practice to clear the streets of debris, Slobodan Vuković, T 5830-5831.

It covers an area of 15,2 ha [...] The boundaries of the historical urban complex are precisely defined by the fortified walls, the former moats and, on the southern side, by the steep coast-line.", P63/2, p 1.

3. Conclusion

348. By virtue of the above, the Chamber finds that it has not been established that the Accused is responsible under Article 7(1) of the Statute for ordering the attack by the JNA on the Old Town of Dubrovnik on 6 December 1991.

B. Aiding and abetting

1. Law

349. Aiding and abetting has been defined in the case-law of the Tribunal as the act of rendering practical assistance, encouragement or moral support, which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of a crime,[1038] before, during or after the commission of the crime,[1039] and irrespective of whether these acts took place at a location other than that of the principal crime.[1040] It is not necessary to establish a cause-effect relationship between the conduct of the aider and abettor and the commission of the crime, or that such conduct served as a conditio sine qua non to the commission of the crime.[1041] However, the acts of the aider and abettor must have "a direct and substantial effect on the commission of the illegal act."[1042] The Blaškić Appeals Judgement left open the possibility that in the circumstances of a given case an omission may constitute the actus reus of aiding and abetting.[1043] Trial Chambers have held that this is the case, for example, if a person with superior authority is present at the crime scene,[1044] provided that his presence had a significant encouraging effect on the principal offender,[1045] or if there was an explicit duty to act.[1046]

350. Regarding the requisite mens rea, it must be established that the aider and abettor was aware that his acts were assisting in the commission of the crime by the principal.[1047] This awareness need not have been explicitly expressed, but it may be inferred from all relevant circumstances.[1048] While the aider and abettor need not share the mens rea of the principal, he must be aware of the essential elements of the crime ultimately committed by the principal.[1049] It is not necessary that the aider and abettor know the precise crime that was intended or actually committed, as long as he was aware that one or a number of crimes would probably be committed, and one of these crimes was in fact committed.[1050]

2. Findings

351. The Indictment alleges that on 6 December 1991, the Accused aided and abetted the unlawful shelling of the Old Town of Dubrovnik conducted by forces under his command, including forces under the command of Captain Kovačević, which were directly subordinated to the 9 VPS commanded by Admiral Jokić.[1051]

352. The Prosecution submits that the Accused's acts or omissions on 6 December 1991 "not only give rise to Article 7(3) responsibility under the Statute but were so egregious as to constitute aiding and abetting under Article 7(1)." It refers in particular to the Accused's failure to intervene on the morning of 6 December 1991 and his subsequent efforts to enable his subordinates to avoid punishment for their offences.[1052]

353. The Defence submits that there is no evidence showing that the Accused lent any support to the commission of the alleged crimes as his acts and omissions were for the most part geographically and temporally removed from the crimes and had no decisive effect on them. Furthermore, the Defence submits that no evidence was adduced that shows that the Accused knew that the crimes were to be committed and that he was aware that his acts were assisting the principal offenders.[1053] There were further submissions but these depended on factual bases which the Chamber has not accepted.

354. As discussed earlier, the Chamber has found that on 5 December 1991 the Accused ordered forces under his command to take Srd.[1054] The Chamber also found that the deliberate and unlawful shelling of the Old Town that occurred on 6 December was not implied in the Accused's

II. APPEAL AGAINST SENTENCING JUDGMENT OF 14 JULY 1997

A. First Ground of Appeal: That the Sentence Imposed by the Trial Chamber is Unfair

1. Submissions of the Parties

(a) The Appellant

18. In the first ground of the appeal against the Sentencing Judgment of 14 July 1997, the Appellant alleges that the 20-year sentence imposed by Trial Chamber II is unfair.[34]

(i) The Appellant avers that the sentence was longer than the facts of the case required. Specifically, the Appellant contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to have regard to any "hierarchy of relative criminal culpability". The Appellant notes that, as a general sentencing principle, heavier penalties should be imposed on those who commit the gravest crimes and whose responsibility for those crimes is highest, and submits that it was incumbent upon the Trial Chamber in determining sentence to have in mind the development of an appropriate tariff reflecting the varying culpability of different accused. The Appellant submits that his rank, activities and position in the hierarchy ought to have placed him at the very bottom of such a list of culpability, and that this fact was not reflected in the Trial Chamber's decision to impose a sentence of 20 years' imprisonment.[35]

(ii) As a second aspect of this ground of appeal, the Appellant avers that the Trial Chamber, in imposing sentence, failed to take sufficient account of the sentencing practice of the courts of the former Yugoslavia, as required by Article 24(1) of the Statute. While acknowledging that the Statute does not make this sentencing practice binding on the Trial Chambers, the Appellant notes in this respect that, in the absence of the death penalty, the most severe punishment that could be imposed under the law of the former Yugoslav was a prison term of 20 years.[36]

(iii) The Appellant further argues that the Trial Chamber gave insufficient weight to his personal circumstances. He submits that at the time of the offences he was the subject of a campaign of deliberate propaganda encouraging participation in ethnic cleansing. The Appellant also notes that he is currently imprisoned and will serve his sentence in a foreign country away from his spouse and family, and isolated from persons of his own nationality. The Appellant further contends that upon his release he will suffer from the notoriety of being the first war criminal convicted by the International Tribunal and that this, combined with other factors, will render return to his native region impossible.[37]

(b) The Respondent

19. The Prosecutor ("Respondent") submits that the Appellant in relation to the first ground of appeal has failed to meet the burden which is to be placed upon him, namely, to show that the Trial Chamber incorrectly stated the law relating to its sentencing options or abused its discretion in arriving at its sentence.[38] The Respondent maintains that the sentence imposed was both in accordance with the law and appropriate in respect of the crimes committed and the circumstances of the offender. The Respondent further submits that the Trial Chamber, in determining its sentence, considered all the relevant factors as required by the Statute and the Rules. It is, accordingly, the Respondent's position that the 20-year sentence imposed by Trial Chamber II on the Appellant should not be disturbed on appeal.[39] and the Appeals Chamber will not, therefore, quash the sentence and substitute its own sentence instead.

21. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in the Appellant's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently consider the sentencing practice and in particular the maximum sentences in the former Yugoslavia. The jurisprudence of this Tribunal has consistently held that, while the law and practice of the former Yugoslavia shall be taken into account by the Trial Chambers for the purposes of sentencing, the wording of Sub-rule 101(A) of the Rules, which grants the power to imprison for the remainder of a convicted person's life, itself shows that a Trial Chamber's discretion in imposing sentence is not bound by any maximum term of imprisonment applied in a national system. The Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that the Trial Chamber, in imposing a sentence of 20 years, erred in the exercise of its discretion. Accordingly, the reliance by the Appellant on the law of the former Yugoslavia which prescribed a maximum sentence of 20 years as an alternative to the death penalty is misplaced, and more especially having regard to the fact that, at the time when the offences were committed, a death penalty could have been imposed under that law for similar offences.

22. With respect to the Appellant's final challenge to his sentence, namely, that the Trial Chamber failed to adequately consider his personal circumstances, the Appeals Chamber is unable to find support for this contention. The Trial Chamber's decision addressed the issue of public indoctrination, and there is no discernible error in the exercise of discretion with regard to the remainder of the Trial Chamber's analysis that would permit the Appeals Chamber to substitute its own decision for that of the Trial Chamber.

3. Conclusion

23. For the reasons set out above, the first ground of appeal fails and is accordingly dismissed.

circumstances of the case, (i) it was foreseeable that such a crime might be perpetrated by one or other members of the group and (ii) the accused willingly took that risk.

229. In light of the preceding propositions it is now appropriate to distinguish between acting in pursuance of a common purpose or design to commit a crime, and aiding and abetting.

(i) The aider and abettor is always an accessory to a crime perpetrated by another person, the principal.

(ii) In the case of aiding and abetting no proof is required of the existence of a common concerted plan, let alone of the pre-existence of such a plan. No plan or agreement is required: indeed, the principal may not even know about the accomplice's contribution.

(iii) The aider and abettor carries out acts specifically directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a certain specific crime (murder, extermination, rape, torture, wanton destruction of civilian property, etc.), and this support has a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime. By contrast, in the case of acting in pursuance of a common purpose or design, it is sufficient for the participant to perform acts that in some way are directed to the furthering of the common plan or purpose.

(iv) In the case of aiding and abetting, the requisite mental element is knowledge that the acts performed by the aider and abettor assist the commission of a specific crime by the principal. By contrast, in the case of common purpose or design more is required (i.e., either intent to perpetrate the crime or intent to pursue the common criminal design plus foresight that those crimes outside the criminal common purpose were likely to be committed), as stated above.

had been no poison gas or gas chambers in the Zyklon B cases, mass exterminations would not have been carried out in the same manner. The same analysis applies to the cases where the men were prosecuted for providing lists of names to German authorities. Even in these cases, where the act in complicity was significantly removed from the ultimate illegal result, it was clear that the actions of the accused had a substantial and direct effect on the commission of the illegal act, and that they generally had knowledge of the likely effect of their actions.

689. The Trial Chamber finds that aiding and abetting includes all acts of assistance by words or acts that lend encouragement or support, as long as the requisite intent is present. Under this theory, presence alone is not sufficient if it is an ignorant or unwilling presence. However, if the presence can be shown or inferred, by circumstantial or other evidence, to be knowing and to have a direct and substantial effect on the commission of the illegal act, then it is sufficient on which to base a finding of participation and assign the criminal culpability that accompanies it.

690. Moreover, when an accused is present and participates in the beating of one person and remains with the group when it moves on to beat another person, his presence would have an encouraging effect, even if he does not physically take part in this second beating, and he should be viewed as participating in this second beating as well. This is assuming that the accused has not actively withdrawn from the group or spoken out against the conduct of the group.

691. However, actual physical presence when the crime is committed is not necessary; just as with the defendants who only drove victims to the woods to be killed, an accused can be considered to have participated in the commission of a crime based on the precedent of the Nürnberg war crimes trials if he is found to be "concerned with the killing". However, the acts of the accused must be direct and substantial.

692. In sum, the accused will be found criminally culpable for any conduct where it is determined that he knowingly participated in the commission of an offence that violates international humanitarian law and his participation directly and substantially affected the commission of that offence through supporting the actual commission before, during, or after the incident. He will also be responsible for all that naturally results from the commission of the act in question.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The municipality of Višegrad is located in south-eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina. Its main town, Višegrad, is situated on the eastern bank of the Drina River. In 1991, about 63% of the population was Muslim and 33% was Serb. Elections were held in the municipality in November 1990; the result, which closely matched the ethnic composition of the municipality, led to mounting tensions. In early April 1991, after requests from the Serb politicians to divide the police along ethnic lines, both groups raised barricades around Višegrad, and over the following months random acts of shooting and shelling occurred. The Yugoslav National Army (JNA) arrived on 14 April 1992, and this at first had a calming effect. However, on 19 May 1992, the JNA withdrew from Višegrad and various Serb para-military units took control. One such group, with a reputation for being particularly violent, was led by Milan Lukić (Milan Lukić group). Although Mitar Vasiljević (Appellant) was not part of the Milan Lukić group, the Trial Chamber found that he was associated with the group and acted as an informant to it. Sometime in May 1992, the Appellant was present when Milan Lukić and his men searched the village of Musići. The Trial Chamber found that on 7 June 1992, the Appellant, together with Milan Lukić and two unidentified men, forcibly transported seven Muslim men to the eastern bank of the Drina River, where they were shot. Five of the seven men died as a result of the shooting and two survived by falling into the river, pretending to be dead. This incident is referred to as the Drina River incident.

2. On 29 November 2002, the Trial Chamber found the Appellant guilty, in relation to the Drina River incident, as a co-perpetrator of persecution as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(h) of the Statute, for the murders of the five Muslim men and the inhumane acts inflicted on the two surviving Muslim men (Count 3) and murder as a violation of the laws or customs of war pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, for the murder of the five Muslim men (Count 5). The Trial Chamber, however, acquitted the Appellant on the remaining counts, either because it found the evidence to be insufficient or because the convictions would have been cumulative. For the convictions on Counts 3 and 5, the Trial Chamber imposed a prison sentence of twenty years.

3. The Appellant is now appealing both the convictions and sentence. His arguments, raising eight grounds of appeal, are spread out in two separate documents - the Defence Appeal Brief and the Defence Additional Appeal Brief. The Appeals Chamber finds these arguments to be repetitive and unstructured and has, therefore, regrouped them. An overview of the arguments of the Appellant as set out in his submissions is found in the procedural background of these appellate proceedings, set forth in Annex A.

55; and VG-59; and v) lack of clear evidence that the Appellant knew prior to 7 June 1992 about killings committed by Milan Lukić.

54. The Appeals Chamber will consider whether this error led to a miscarriage of justice in the context of the alleged error relating to the Appellant's mens rea to kill the seven men (see discussion paragraphs 128-132 below).

C. Alleged error in finding that the Appellant pointed a gun at the seven Muslim men while at the Vilina Vlas Hotel

55. The Appellant argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was armed at the hotel and that he pointed his gun at the seven Muslim men.[90] He submits that the evidence relied on by the Trial Chamber (witnesses VG-14 and VG-32) does not support such a finding.[91]

56. The Prosecution submits that witness VG-14 testified that the Appellant had a gun, did not testify that the Appellant actually pointed it at the victims inside the hotel, and that witness VG-32 testified that it was one of the unidentified perpetrators, not the Appellant, who was pointing a rifle at the victims in the hotel.[92] The Prosecution further submits that it was open to a reasonable trier of fact to conclude that the Appellant was present at the hotel with a rifle contributing to preventing the victims from fleeing the hotel.

57. The issue of whether the Appellant was armed has been dealt with above and the Appeals Chamber concluded that it was reasonable of the Trial Chamber to find that the Appellant was armed at the Vilina Vlas Hotel.[93] Therefore, the issue to be considered at this stage is limited to whether it was reasonable of the Trial Chamber to find that the Appellant pointed his gun at the seven Muslim men at the hotel in paragraph 209 of the Judgement. This conclusion is not supported by the Trial Chamber's own finding in paragraph 100 of the Judgement where it found that "[o]ne of the unidentified armed men guarded them [the seven Muslim men], pointing his automatic rifle at them, preventing any of them from leaving the lobby of the hotel." Further, the evidence presented at trial does not support, as admitted by the Prosecution, a finding that the Appellant pointed his gun at the seven Muslim men. The Appeals Chamber considers that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the Appellant pointed a gun at the seven Muslim men at this stage. However, this finding was only one of several relating to the actions of the Appellant from which the Trial Chamber inferred that the Appellant shared the intent to [90] Defence Appeal Brief, paras 191-194 (under fourth ground of appeal). Further the Appellant argues in the Defence Additional Appeal Brief, para. 58, that the Trial Chamber made an error of fact by accepting criminal responsibility of murder on the basis of inferences stemming from the testimony of witnesses VG-14 and VG-32.

[91] Defence Appeal Brief, para. 193.
[92] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 5.12, referring to the testimony of witness VG-32, T. 268.

kill. It is therefore in the context of the alleged error relating to the mens rea of the Appellant to kill the seven Muslim men that the Appeals Chamber will determine whether the error made by the Trial Chamber, when it found that the Appellant pointed a gun at the men in the hotel, led to a miscarriage of justice.[94]

D. Alleged error in dismissing the Appellant's argument that he attempted to dissuade Milan Lukić from killing

58. The Appellant challenges the fact that the Trial Chamber dismissed his assertion that he attempted to dissuade Milan Lukić from killing the Muslim men, arguing that this was not confirmed by witnesses VG-14 and VG-32, who were, in any event of the view that no one could have influenced Milan Lukić.[95] On this point, the Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber, in paragraph 107 of the Judgement, expressly rejected the Appellant's submission that he could not have dissuaded Milan Lukić from pursuing his criminal purpose. The Prosecution considers that this is an irrelevant question since the Trial Chamber found the Appellant shared the criminal purpose.[96]

59. The Trial Chamber's findings on this point are as follows:

> [t]he Trial Chamber rejects as wholly untrue the evidence of the Accused that he tried to persuade Milan Lukić to spare the life of Meho Džafić or any other man in that group. The Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of VG-32 that the Accused said nothing in response to the pleas of Meho Džafić as the men were marched towards the bank of the Drina River.[97]

> [t]he Trial Chamber also rejects the evidence of the Accused that, in any event, he was powerless to stop Milan Lukić from killing the Muslim men. VG-32 and VG-14 gave evidence of their impression that throughout the entire incident there was no one around Milan Lukić who could have affected him or his decisions and orders in a meaningful way. However, the Accused's claim of duress is inconsistent with the evidence that, one week prior to the shooting at the Drina River and during the Musići incident, he had successfully pleaded with Milan Lukić not to mistreat and harass the people in that house. He asserted that he was the only person who could help on that occasion, and that he had prevented the people living in that house from being mistreated and harassed by Milan Lukić. The Trial Chamber has already rejected that claim, but the inconsistent claims by the Accused as to his relationship with Milan Lukić has persuaded the Trial Chamber that the Accused is prepared to give false versions of that relationship according to the benefit he seeks to obtain at the time each version is given. There was no other acceptable evidence that the Accused was under duress vis-à-vis Milan Lukić. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the Accused willingly accompanied Milan Lukić and his group with the seven Muslim men to the Drina River[98].

60. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Appellant has not demonstrated how the Trial Chamber's rejection of his assertion that he had attempted to dissuade Milan Lukić from carrying out the killings was unreasonable. The Appellant has also failed to demonstrate how the fact that none of the persons crime other than the one which was part of the common design arises "only if, under the circumstances of the case, (i) it was foreseeable that such a crime might be perpetrated by one or other members of the group and (ii) the accused willingly took that risk"[179] – that is, being aware that such crime was a possible consequence of the execution of that enterprise, and with that awareness, the accused decided to participate in that enterprise.

2. Differences between participating in a joint criminal enterprise as a co-perpetrator or as an aider and abettor

102. Participation in a joint criminal enterprise is a form of "commission" under Article 7(1) of the Statute. The participant therein is liable as a co-perpetrator of the crime(s). Aiding and abetting the commission of a crime is usually considered to incur a lesser degree of individual criminal responsibility than committing a crime. In the context of a crime committed by several co-perpetrators in a joint criminal enterprise, the aider and abettor is always an accessory to these co-perpetrators, although the co-perpetrators may not even know of the aider and abettor's contribution. Differences exist in relation to the actus reus as well as to the mens rea requirements between both forms of individual criminal responsibility:

(i) The aider and abettor carries out acts specifically directed to assist, encourage or lend moral support to the perpetration of a certain specific crime (murder, extermination, rape, torture, wanton destruction of civilian property, etc.), and this support has a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime. By contrast, it is sufficient for a participant in a joint criminal enterprise to perform acts that in some way are directed to the furtherance of the common design.

(ii) In the case of aiding and abetting, the requisite mental element is knowledge that the acts performed by the aider and abettor assist the commission of the specific crime of the principal. By contrast, in the case of participation in a joint criminal enterprise, i.e. as a co-perpetrator, the requisite mens rea is intent to pursue a common purpose.

B. Alleged errors of law

1. Alleged errors of law related to the concept of joint criminal enterprise

103. Before turning to the alleged errors of law of the Trial Chamber concerning the concept of joint criminal enterprise and persecution, the Appeals Chamber will first determine under which category of joint criminal enterprise the Drina River incident falls.

[178] Ibid, paras 202, 220 and 228.
[179] Ibid, para. 228. See also paras 204 and 220.

stopped in Sase that the seven Muslim men were to be killed; vi) the behaviour of the soldiers changed drastically from the moment Milan Lukić ordered them to leave the car;[219] vii) that throughout the entire incident the impression of the two survivors was that no one around Milan Lukić could have influenced him or his decisions;[220] and viii) that the Appellant willingly accompanied Milan Lukić and his group with the seven Muslim men to the Drina River.[221]

131. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the question before it is whether no reasonable tribunal could find that the only reasonable inference available on the evidence cited above was that the Appellant shared the intent to commit murder. The Appeals Chamber considers that when a Chamber is confronted with the task of determining whether it can infer from the acts of an accused that he or she shared the intent to commit a crime, special attention must be paid to whether these acts are ambiguous, allowing for several reasonable inferences. The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that no reasonable tribunal could have found that the only reasonable inference available on the evidence, as cited above, is that the Appellant had the intent to kill the seven Muslim men. The Trial Chamber found that the Appellant assisted Milan Lukić and his men by preventing the seven Muslim men from fleeing.[222] It did not find, however, that the Appellant shot at the Muslim men himself, nor that he exercised control over the firing. Compared to the involvement of Milan Lukić and potentially one or both of the other men, the participation of the Appellant in the overall course of the killings did not reach the same level. The above-mentioned acts of the Appellant were ambiguous as to whether or not the Appellant intended that the seven Muslim men be killed. This conclusion is further supported by the relatively short period of time between the change of attitude of Milan Lukić and the shooting, the strong personality of Milan Lukić compared to the Appellant, as well as the factors mentioned in paragraph 130. The Appeals Chamber, therefore, concludes that the Trial Chamber erred by finding that the only reasonable inference from the evidence was that the Appellant shared the intent to kill the seven Muslim men.

132. The error made by the Trial Chamber led to a miscarriage of justice since, without the proof the Appellant's intent, the Appellant would not be responsible as a co-perpetrator in the joint criminal enterprise. The Appeals Chamber will now consider whether the Appellant is, nevertheless, responsible as an aider and abettor.

[220] Judgement, para. 107. Testimony of witnesses VG-14 and VG-32.
[221] Ibid, para. 107.
[222] Cf. for a comparable situation in a national jurisdiction Prosecutor v. Novislav Djajić, 3St 20/96, Supreme Court of Bavaria, 23 May 1997. In this case, the accused was found guilty of, inter alia, aiding and abetting 14 murders by standing with a gun in the middle of a semi-circle that Serbs had formed around a group of Muslims who were then shot.

3. Aiding and abetting

133. The Appeals Chamber has found above that the Trial Chamber erred by finding that the only reasonable inference from the evidence was that the Appellant shared the intent to kill the seven Muslim men. The Appellant argues under his fourth ground of appeal that his actions do not in fact amount to aiding and abetting, as he did not facilitate the commission of the crime. He submits that Milan Lukić and the two unidentified men did not need any help from the Appellant at the Vilina Vlas Hotel or at the Drina River,[223] since they had managed to detain the seven Muslim men on the hill of Bikavac by themselves, despite the fact that the seven Muslim men could have resisted.[224] The Appellant infers from this that it would not be logical to conclude that Milan Lukić and his men needed the assistance of the Appellant at the Vilina Vlas Hotel or at the Drina River as the risk that the seven Muslim men might resist was less important at this stage.[225]

134. The Appeals Chamber has already found that the Appellant knew that the seven Muslim men were to be killed; that he walked armed with the group from the place where they had parked the cars to the Drina River; that he pointed his gun at the seven Muslim men; and that he stood behind the Muslim men with his gun together with the other three offenders shortly before the shooting started. The Appeals Chamber believes that the only reasonable inference available on the totality of evidence is that the Appellant knew that his acts would assist the commission of the murders. The Appeals Chamber finds that in preventing the men from escaping on the way to the river bank and during the shooting, the Appellant's actions had a "substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime."[226]

135. The Appeals Chamber finds that the acts of the Appellant were specifically directed to assist the perpetration of the murders and the inhumane acts and his support had a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crimes. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds the Appellant guilty for aiding and abetting murder pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute (Count 5). Further, the Appeals Chamber finds the Appellant guilty as an aider and abettor for murder as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(a) of the Statute (Count 4) and inhumane acts as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(i) of the Statute (Count 6). However, the Appellant is not convicted of the murder as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(a) of the Statute (Count 4) and inhumane acts as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(i) of the Statute (Count 6) in accordance with the Tribunal's jurisprudence on cumulative convictions.[227] finds that the Appellant has not shown a discernable error in the exercise of the Trial Chamber's discretion. This sub-ground of appeal is dismissed.

B. The Appeals Chamber's considerations

181. The Trial Chamber imposed a prison sentence of twenty years on the Appellant. The Appeals Chamber has not found in favour of any of the Appellant's alleged errors in relation to the sentence. However, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the sentence needs to be adjusted due to the Appeals Chamber's finding that the Appellant was responsible as an aider and abettor with respect to murder as a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 of the Statute (Count 5) and persecution by way of murder and inhumane acts as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(h) of the Statute (Count 3), instead of being responsible as a co-perpetrator as was found by the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber considers that it has the mandate to revise the sentence by itself without remitting it to the Trial Chamber.[290]

182. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that aiding and abetting is a form of responsibility which generally warrants a lower sentence than is appropriate to responsibility as a co-perpetrator.[291] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the sentence to be imposed must reflect the inherent gravity of the criminal conduct of an accused. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Appellant committed very serious crimes. Therefore, taking into account the particular circumstances of this case as well as the form and degree of the participation of the Appellant in the crimes, the Appeals Chamber finds that a sentence of 15 years is appropriate.

25(3)(a) of the Statute has criminalised precisely the kind of responsibility that embodies such an apparent contradiction.

506. This doctrine has also been applied in international criminal law in the jurisprudence of the international tribunals.[672] In The Prosecutor v. Milomir Stakić Judgement, Trial Chamber II of the ICTY relied on the liability theory of co-perpetration of a crime through another person as a way to avoid the inconsistencies of applying the so-called "Joint Criminal Enterprise" theory of criminal liability to senior leaders and commanders.[673]

507. As noted by the Defence for Germain Katanga,[674] the Trial Chamber's Judgement was overturned on appeal. However, the reasoning of the ICTY Appeals Chamber's Judgement is of utmost importance to an understanding of why the impugned decision does not obviate its validity as a mode of liability under the Rome Statute.

508. The Appeals Chamber rejected this mode of liability by stating that it did not form part of customary international law.[675] However, under article 21(1)(a) of the Statute, the first source of applicable law is the Statute. Principles and rules of international law constitute a secondary source applicable only when the statutory material fails to prescribe a legal solution. Therefore, and since the Rome Statute expressly provides for this specific mode of liability, the question as to whether customary law admits or discards the 'joint commission through another person' is not relevant for this Court. This is a good example of the need not to transfer the ad hoc tribunals' case law mechanically to the system of the Court.[676]

509. Finally, most recently, the Pre-Trial Chamber III of the Court also endorsed this notion of individual criminal responsibility in the case of The Prosecutor v. Jean-Pierre Bemba Gombo. Having established the suspect's position as the leader of the organisation and described the functioning of the militia, the Pre-Trial Chamber III stated:

> In light of the foregoing, the Chamber considers that there are reasonable grounds to believe that, as a result of his authority over his military organisation, Mr. [...] had the means to exercise control over the crimes committed by MLC troops deployed in the CAR.[677]

9. On 7 June 2012, the legal representatives filed their submissions on the defence request to introduce additional evidence.[16] The prosecution filed its submissions on this issue on 8 June 2012.[17]

10. The Chamber issued an Order on the defence request to provide the Chamber with additional evidence during the sentencing hearing on 11 June 2012,[18] granting leave to the defence to: (i) call two additional witnesses (D01-0039 and D01-0040) via a video-link with the DRC; (ii) rely on two documents when questioning witness D01-0040;[19] and (iii) introduce an additional document relevant to the time spent by Mr Lubanga in detention in the DRC.[20]

11. The sentencing hearing was held on 13 June 2012, during which the Chamber heard the evidence of witnesses D01-0039 and D01-0040. Thereafter the Prosecutor, the legal representatives of victims and the defence made their oral submissions. Following these submissions, Mr Lubanga made a statement to the Chamber.[21] The evidence of the two additional witnesses and all the oral submissions are considered below, where relevant.

II. The jurisprudence of other courts in relation to sentencing regarding child soldiers

12. Although the decisions of other international courts and tribunals are not part of the directly applicable law under Article 21 of the Statute, the ad hoc tribunals are in a comparable position to the Court in the context of sentencing. However, the only convictions by an international criminal tribunal for the recruitment or use of child soldiers are from the Special Court for Sierra Leone ("SCSL"). There have been seven[22] convictions at the SCSL in four cases for the crime of using child soldiers under the age of 15.[23] In two of those cases,[24] the Trial Chamber did not address each count separately in its sentencing decision, and accordingly it is impossible to determine the effect the conviction for the use of child soldiers had on the overall sentences. The two cases in which separate sentences were handed down for the crime of using child soldiers are briefly discussed below.

13. The Trial Chamber in the RUF case, when addressing the issue of gravity, determined that the offences it was considering relating to the use of child soldiers were committed on a large scale and with a significant degree of brutality.[25] It was established that many children had been abducted from their families and they were subjected to cruel and harsh military training. Those who were unable to withstand the training regime were often summarily shot and killed.[26] Children as young as 10 were armed and used to ambush others, as well as acting as bodyguards for the commanders. The Chamber found that "very young children were used to engage in the perpetration of gruesome crimes directed against innocent civilians", including amputating the limbs of civilians and beheading corpses.[27] Many children were shot and killed in training and relied on for the purposes of sentence following Mr Lubanga's conviction.[45] The Chamber requested written submissions on: (i) the procedure to be adopted for sentencing and the principles to be applied by the Chamber;[46] and (ii) the relevant evidence presented during trial, the aggravating and mitigating factors, and the sentence to be imposed on Mr Lubanga.[47] This has ensured that he has had adequate notice of the matters that may be taken into consideration by the Chamber at this stage of the proceedings.

31. Moreover, the defence has been provided with adequate time and facilities, including the opportunity to identify and introduce evidence relevant to sentence.

2) Standard of proof

32. The prosecution argues that the Chamber should not follow the jurisprudence of the ad hoc tribunals when they decided that the relevant aggravating factors need to be established by the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt and they must be directly related to the offences that resulted in a conviction.[48] The prosecution submits that it is open to the Chamber to make findings as to the aggravating and mitigating factors on the basis of a "balance of probabilities".[49] The defence argues that the aggravating factors must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[50]

33. It is for the Chamber to establish the standard of proof for the purposes of sentencing, given the Statute and the Rules do not provide any guidance. Since any aggravating factors established by the Chamber may have a significant effect on the overall length of the sentence Mr Lubanga will serve, it is necessary that they are established to the criminal standard of proof, namely "beyond a reasonable doubt".

34. As to the mitigating circumstances, the defence submits that it is not limited to the facts relied on during the confirmation stage of the proceedings, and the standard of proof to be applied should be that of a balance of probabilities.[51] The Chamber accepts that the mitigating factors are not limited to the facts and circumstances described in the Confirmation Decision, particularly given Rule 145(2)(a)(ii) of the Rules refers to "the convicted person's conduct after the act" in this context. As to the standard of proof, the Chamber is of the view that the in dubio pro reo principle applies at the sentencing stage of the proceedings, and any mitigating circumstances are to be established on a balance of probabilities.

3) Double counting

35. Any factors that are to be taken into account when assessing the gravity of the crime will not additionally be taken into account as aggravating circumstances, and vice versa.[52]

C. The relevant factors

1) Gravity of the crime

36. The "gravity of the crime", as set out in Article 78(1) of the Statute and in Rule 145 of the Rules, is one of the principal factors to be considered in the losses entailed by those attacks, in some instances blaming other armed parties to the conflict, in particular the DRC governmental Forces Armées de la République Démocratique du Congo ("FARDC").[16] The systematic denial was aimed at preventing the FDLR's leaders from being labelled as mass murderers, on the one hand, and at exploiting the international attention on the FDLR and its political agenda triggered by the attacks, on the other.[17]

8. According to the DCC, in his capacity as Executive Secretary of the FDLR, Mr Mbarushimana was the individual responsible for the implementation of this part of the FDLR strategy. On the one hand, whilst having full knowledge of the attacks perpetrated by the FDLR against the civilian population, he issued several press releases on behalf of the organisation in the aftermath of operations, systematically denying any responsibility of the group. On the other hand, he engaged in international peace talks and negotiations, shrewdly portraying the FDLR as an actor seeking peace and stability in the Kivu area.[18] In the words of the Prosecution, the Suspect was the "linchpin" of the overall FDLR strategy, namely "because of his ability to transform the FDLR's crimes on the ground into political capital".[19] As such, he is to be held criminally responsible under Article 25(3)(d) of the Rome Statute ("Statute"), since he knowingly and intentionally contributed "in any other way" – i.e., in a way other than the ones listed in article 25(3) (a), (b) and (c) of the Statute - to the commission of the war crimes and crimes against humanity charged by the Prosecution under Counts 1 to 13.

mentioned earlier, the jurisprudence of the ad hoc tribunals does not require the aider and abettor to share the intent of the perpetrator to commit the crime, whereas under article 25(3)(c) of the Statute the aider and abettor must act with the purpose of facilitating the commission of that crime. There is also scholarly disagreement as to whether the actus reus required should likewise differ from the ad hoc tribunals' "substantial contribution" requirement.[663]

282. JCE and 25(3)(d) liability are also not identical, as similar as they may appear. Some relevant differences between JCE and 25(3)(d) liability include: (i) whether a defendant who is found guilty is convicted as a principal[664] or accessory, (ii) whether a defendant must be in the group acting with the common purpose[665] or not, (iii) whether the contribution is to the common purpose[666] or to the crimes committed, and (iv) whether some form of intent[667] or mere knowledge is sufficient for responsibility. However, both 25(3)(d) liability and JCE emphasise group criminality and actions performed in accordance with a common plan, which, when coupled with the fact that JCE requires a lower threshold of contribution than aiding and abetting at the ad hoc tribunals, makes the modern formulation of JCE's concept of a "significant contribution" relevant to the present discussion.

283. In view of the foregoing considerations, the Chamber finds that the contribution to the commission of a crime under article 25(3)(d) of the Statute cannot be just any

CASE CONCERNING APPLICATION OF THE CONVENTION ON THE PREVENTION AND PUNISHMENT OF THE CRIME OF GENOCIDE

COUR INTERNATIONALE DE JUSTICE

RECUEIL DES ARRÊTS,

AFFAIRE RELATIVE À L'APPLICATION DE LA CONVENTION POUR LA PRÉVENTION ET LA RÉPRESSION DU CRIME DE GÉNOCIDE

(BOSNIE-HERZÉGOVINE c. SERBIE-ET-MONTÉNÉGRO)

ARRÊT DU 26 FÉVRIER 2007

State, the necessary conclusion would be that the genocide was attributable to the State, which would be directly responsible for it, pursuant to the rule referred to above (paragraph 398), and no question of complicity would arise. But, as already stated, that is not the situation in the present case.

However there is no doubt that "complicity", in the sense of Article III, paragraph (e), of the Convention, includes the provision of means to enable or facilitate the commission of the crime; it is thus on this aspect that the Court must focus. In this respect, it is noteworthy that, although "complicity", as such, is not a notion which exists in the current terminology of the law of international responsibility, it is similar to a category found among the customary rules constituting the law of State responsibility, that of the "aid or assistance" furnished by one State for the commission of a wrongful act by another State.

420. In this connection, reference should be made to Article 16 of the ILC's Articles on State Responsibility, reflecting a customary rule, which reads as follows:

> "Article 16
> Aid or assistance in the commission of an internationally wrongful act
> A State which aids or assists another State in the commission of an internationally wrongful act by the latter is internationally responsible for doing so if:
> (a) That State does so with knowledge of the circumstances of the internationally wrongful act; and > (b) The act would be internationally wrongful if committed by that State."

Although this provision, because it concerns a situation characterized by a relationship between two States, is not directly relevant to the present case, it nevertheless merits consideration. The Court sees no reason to make any distinction of substance between "complicity in genocide", within the meaning of Article III, paragraph (e), of the Convention, and the "aid or assistance" of a State in the commission of a wrongful act by another State within the meaning of the aforementioned Article 16 — setting aside the hypothesis of the issue of instructions or directions or the exercise of effective control, the effects of which, in the law of international responsibility, extend beyond complicity. In other words, to ascertain whether the Respondent is responsible for "complicity in genocide" within the meaning of Article III, paragraph (e), which is what the Court now has to do, it must examine whether organs of the respondent State, or persons acting on its instructions or under its direction or effective control, furnished "aid or assistance" in the commission of the genocide in Srebrenica, in a sense not significantly different from that of those concepts in the general law of international responsibility.

from, inter alia, the attitude of the Parties and the attitude of States towards certain General Assembly resolutions, and particularly resolution 2625 (XXV) entitled "Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations". The effect of consent to the text of such resolutions cannot be understood as merely that of a "reiteration or elucidation" of the treaty commitment undertaken in the Charter. On the contrary, it may be understood as an acceptance of the validity of the rule or set of rules declared by the resolution by themselves. The principle of non-use of force, for example, may thus be regarded as a principle of customary international law, not as such conditioned by provisions relating to collective security, or to the facilities or armed contingents to be provided under Article 43 of the Charter. It would therefore seem apparent that the attitude referred to expresses an opinio juris respecting such rule (or set of rules), to be thenceforth treated separately from the provisions, especially those of an institutional kind, to which it is subject on the treaty-law plane of the Charter.

189. As regards the United States in particular, the weight of an expression of opinio juris can similarly be attached to its support of the resolution of the Sixth International Conference of American States condemning aggression (18 February 1928) and ratification of the Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States (26 December 1933), Article 11 of which imposes the obligation not to recognize territorial acquisitions or special advantages which have been obtained by force. Also significant is United States acceptance of the principle of the prohibition of the use of force which is contained in the declaration on principles governing the mutual relations of States participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (Helsinki, 1 August 1975), whereby the participating States undertake to "refrain in their mutual relations, as well as in their international relations in general," (emphasis added) from the threat or use of force. Acceptance of a text in these terms confirms the existence of an opinio juris of the participating States prohibiting the use of force in international relations.

190. A further confirmation of the validity as customary international law of the principle of the prohibition of the use of force expressed in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations may be found in the fact that it is frequently referred to in statements by State representatives as being not only a principle of customary international law but also a fundamental or cardinal principle of such law. The International Law Commission, in the course of its work on the codification of the law of treaties, expressed the view that "the law of the Charter concerning the prohibition of the use of force in itself constitutes a conspicuous example of a rule in international law having the character of jus cogens" (paragraph (1) of the commentary of the Commission to Article 50 of its draft Articles on the Law of Treaties, ILC Yearbook, 1966-II, p. 247). Nicaragua in its Memorial on the Merits submitted in the present case states that the principle prohibiting the use of force embodied in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations "has come to be recognized as jus cogens". The United States, in its Counter-Memorial on the questions of jurisdiction and admissibility, found it material to quote the views of scholars that this principle is a "universal norm", a "universal international law", a "universally recognized principle of international law", and a "principle of jus cogens".

191. As regards certain particular aspects of the principle in question, it will be necessary to distinguish the most grave forms of the use of force (those constituting an armed attack) from other less grave forms. In determining the legal rule which applies to these latter forms, the Court can again draw on the formulations contained in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV), referred to above). As already observed, the adoption by States of this text affords an indication of their opinio juris as to customary international law on the question. Alongside certain descriptions which may refer to aggression, this text includes others which refer only to less grave forms of the use of force. In particular, according to this resolution :

> "Every State has the duty to refrain from the threat or use of force to violate the existing international boundaries of another State or as a means of solving international disputes, including territorial disputes and problems concerning frontiers of States.
> . . . . . .
> States have a duty to refrain from acts of reprisal involving the use of force.
> . . . . . .
> Every State has the duty to refrain from any forcible action which deprives peoples referred to in the elaboration of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of that right to self-determination and freedom and independence.
> Every State has the duty to refrain from organizing or encouraging the organization of irregular forces or armed bands, including mercenaries, for incursion into the territory of another State.
> Every State has the duty to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in acts of civil strife or terrorist acts in another State or acquiescing in organized activities within its territory directed towards the commission of such acts, when the acts referred to in the present paragraph involve a threat or use of force."

292. For these reasons,

THE COURT

(1) By eleven votes to four,

Decides that in adjudicating the dispute brought before it by the Application filed by the Republic of Nicaragua on 9 April 1984, the Court is required to apply the "multilateral treaty reservation" contained in proviso (c) to the declaration of acceptance of jurisdiction made under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court by the Government of the United States of America deposited on 26 August 1946 ;

(3) By twelve votes to three,

Decides that the United States of America, by training, arming, equipping, financing and supplying the contra forces or otherwise encouraging, supporting and aiding military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua, has acted, against the Republic of Nicaragua, in breach of its obligation under customary international law not to intervene in the affairs of another State ;

ARRÊT DU 6 NOVEMBRE 2003

SEPARATE OPINION OF JUDGE SIMMA

Matters relating to United States use of force are at the heart of the case, therefore the approach of dealing with Article XX before turning to Article X of the 1955 Treaty is acceptable — The Court's position regarding the United States attacks on the oil platforms, although correct as such, is marked throughout by inappropriate self-restraint — While hostile military action not reaching the threshold of an "armed attack" within the meaning of Article 51 of the United Nations Charter may be countered by proportionate and immediate defensive measures equally of a military character, the United States actions did not qualify as such proportionate counter-measures — The Court's treatment of Article X on "freedom of commerce" between the territories of the Parties follows a step-by-step approach which is correct up to a certain point but then takes turns in two wrong directions: first, the platforms attacked in October 1987 did not lose protection under Article X through being temporarily inoperative because the freedom under the Treaty embraces also the possibility of commerce in the future; secondly, the indirect commerce in Iranian oil going on during the time of the United States embargo is also protected by the Treaty — The Court's finding on the United States counter-claim is profoundly inadequate particularly with regard to the so-called "generic" counter-claim which should have been upheld — The problems of attribution and causality posed by the existence of several tortfeasors in the case could have been solved by recourse to a general principle of joint-and-several responsibility recognized by major domestic legal systems — Neither would the "indispensable-third-party" doctrine have stood in the way of declaring Iran responsible for breaches of Article X.

I have voted in favour of the first part of the dispositif of the present Judgment with great hesitation. In fact, I see myself in a position to concur — in principle — with the Court's treatment of only one of the two issues dealt with there, namely that of the alleged security interests of the United States measured against the international law on self-defence. As to the remaining parts of the dispositif, neither can I agree with the Court's decision that the United States attacks on the Iranian oil platforms ultimately did not infringe upon Iran's treaty right to respect for its freedom of commerce with the United States; nor do I consider that the way in which the Court disposed of the so-called "generic" counter-claim of the United States is correct. In my view, this counter-claim ought to have been upheld. Regarding the part of the dispositif devoted to this counter-claim, I thus had no choice but to dissent.

The reason why I have not done so also with regard to the first part of that I consider it of utmost importance, and a matter of principle, for the Court to pronounce itself on questions of the threat or use of force in international relations whenever it is given the opportunity to do so. In this regard, the desirable standard of vigour and clarity was set already in the Corfu Channel case where the Court condemned a right to self-help by armed force claimed by the United Kingdom

> "as the manifestation of a policy of force, such as has, in the past, given rise to most serious abuses and such as cannot, whatever be the present defects in international organization, find a place in international law"[9].

Unfortunately, in the sombre light of developments over the 50 years that have passed since the Corfu Channel case, but more particularly in the recent past, this statement of the Court shows traits of a prophecy.

6. My agreement with the present position of the Court in principle does not however keep me from criticizing the Judgment for what I consider the half-heartedness of the manner in which it deals with the question of the use of force.

I recognize of course that there are valid legal reasons for the Court to keep what has to be said on the legality of United States military actions against the oil platforms within the confines of the text of Article XX, paragraph 1 (d), of the Treaty. In fact, my criticism of the Court's treatment of the issues arising under that provision does not stem from any disagreement with what the text of the Judgment is saying. Rather, what concerns me is what the Court has decided not to say. I find it regrettable that the Court has not mustered the courage of restating, and thus reconfirming, more fully fundamental principles of the law of the United Nations as well as customary international law (principles that in my view are of the nature of jus cogens) on the use of force, or rather the prohibition on armed force, in a context and at a time when such a reconfirmation is called for with the greatest urgency. I accept of course that, since its jurisdiction is limited to the bases furnished by the 1955 Treaty, it would not have been possible for the Court to go as far as stating in the dispositif of its Judgment that, since the United States attacks on the oil platforms involved a use of armed force that cannot be justified as self-defence, these attacks must not only, for reasons of their own, be found not to have been necessary to protect the essential security interests of the United States within the meaning of Article XX of the Treaty; they must also be found in breach of Article 2 (4) of the United Nations Charter. What the Court could have done, without neglecting any jurisdictional bounds as I see them, is to restate the backbone of the Charter law on use of force by way of strong, unequivocal obiter dicta. Everybody will be assistance, while "abetting" involves "facilitating the commission of an act by being sympathetic thereto."[933]

534. No evidence of a plan or agreement between the aider and abettor and the perpetrator is required.[934] An accused may not be convicted of aiding and abetting a crime that was never carried out. The perpetrator of the crime need not have been tried or even identified.[935]

535. Liability for aiding and abetting a crime requires proof that the accused knew that a crime would probably be committed, that the crime was in fact committed, and that the accused was aware that his conduct assisted the commission of that crime.[936] This knowledge can be inferred from the circumstances.[937] Further, the requirement that the accused be aware of, though need not share, the perpetrator's intent applies equally to specific-intent crimes, like persecution as a crime against humanity.[938]

THE ROECHLING CASE—INDICTMENT, JUDGMENT, AND JUDGMENT ON APPEAL*

INDICTMENT

GENERAL TRIBUNAL OF MILITARY GOVERNMENT FOR THE FRENCH ZONE OF OCCUPATION IN GERMANY

Indictment Against the Directors of the Firm of Roechling

The Government Commissioner of the General Tribunal of the Military Government for the French Zone of Occupation in Germany

Hermann Roechling, Ernst Roechling, Hans Lothar von Gemmingen-Hornberg, Albert Maier, Wilhelm Rodenhauser, Directors of the Roechling Enterprises

Under the Moscow Declaration of 30 October 1943; the London Agreement and the Charter of 8 August 1945; Law No. 10 of the Berlin Control Council of 20 December 1945; Ordinance No. 2 of the Supreme Interallied Commander on the Military Government Tribunals; Ordinance No. 36 of 25 February 1946 of the General in Command of the French Zone of Occupation in Germany; Decree No. 43 of 2 March 1946 of the Administrator General of the French Zone of Occupation in Germany; the judgment of the International Military Tribunal of the Major War Criminals dated 1 October 1946 has the honor to submit—

The International Military Tribunal in its judgment of 30 September 1946 has laid down in principle that the political leaders of the "Third Reich" were responsible for the preparation and the

* The materials reproduced herein have been translated from the French language. The Roechling case was tried at Rastatt, Germany (French Zone of Occupation), under Allied Control Council Law No. 10 and certain ordinances of the French Supreme Commander in Germany providing for the trial of war criminals in the French Zone. The case had many interesting features and was cited in numerous arguments at Nuernberg and in the judgment of the Farben case. (United States vs. Carl Krauch, et al., Case 6, vol. VIII, this series.) The principal prosecutor in the Roechling case, M. Charles Gerthoffer, had been one of the French prosecutors in the first Nuernberg trial before the International Military Tribunal. In the Ministries case he appeared before the Tribunal as special counsel.

The General Tribunal in the Roechling case was composed of seven judges, five of whom were French, one of whom was Belgium, and one of whom was Dutch. The prosecution in that case included a representative of the Polish Government. The judgment of the General Tribunal was the only judgment after that of the International Military Tribunal in which a defendant was found guilty of the waging (as distinguished from the planning, preparation, and initiation) of aggressive war, or in which an industrialist was found guilty upon charges of aggressive war. However, this finding was set aside on appeal by the Superior Military Government Court. The judgment on appeal directed the forfeiture of the property of the defendants Hermann and Ernst Roechling, and half of the property of the defendant von Gemmingen-Hornberg; measures not included in the original sentences of the General Tribunal hearing the case.

The defense of lack of knowledge—No superior may prefer this defense indefinitely; for it is his duty to know what occurs in his organization, and lack of knowledge, therefore, can only be the result of criminal negligence. For the rest, the acceptance of superior orders on the one hand, and the lack of knowledge as to their execution by subordinates, on the other, would lead to the abolishment of any penalty; the executing agents would seek cover behind the superior order, and the superior behind his lack of knowledge and say: "I had no knowledge of that."

Finally, the excuse of total war as taught by [von] Clausewitz doctrines cannot be taken into consideration even for one moment. It is said there: "War is an act of violence, and there are no limits to violence. Imperceptible restrictions under the name of 'international law' futilely sap its strength. He who ruthlessly serves violence will have the biggest advantage if the opponent acts otherwise."

In other words, it is the formula, "everything is permitted in war" or, "the end justifies the means," a doctrine which was also expressed in the course of a session by Hermann Roechling who said, "The most powerful is in the right."

For, it was just the Hague Convention, the Geneva Convention, etc., which—after the elapse of such a length of time and after the age of antiquity, of Christendom, of the medieval period had produced such interesting examples as God's Truce, the Golden Bull of Charles V—reestablished the principles of humane warfare as far as this was possible considering its direful effects.

Germany's intention deliberately to betray these principles to which she had become a party by signing the various diplomatic documents is clearly obvious.

It must be stated in addition that the defendants assert in this connection that the Hague Convention of 1907 had become void and was not in force any longer, but that they—contradicting themselves—refer to this international agreement whenever it provides the defense with a favorable argument.

Before proceeding to the examination of the facts, the Tribunal, finally, deems it expedient to affirm—if such affirmation is needed at all—that its findings will not be influenced by either the least feelings of the "right of the victor," or by the least feeling of hatred or, what in itself would be incomprehensible, by any feeling of anxiety on the part of anyone, whoever he may be, on account of the consequences which might result from this decision in future; it exclusively pursues the aim of finding a judgment in accordance with the principles of "human rights" which were masterfully brought to bear by the International Military Tribunal in Nuernberg.

The Court finds that Hermann Roechling's responsibility for the execution of the forced-labor program was of the same type as that with which the International Military Tribunal has charged Speer. For, the applications which were forwarded by Speer to Sauckel, which were the cause for the deportation of civilian workers, were drafted on behest of the Reich Plenipotentiary Hermann Roechling, president of the RVE, in order to obtain workers for the iron industry.

Moreover, the German industrialist, Flick, has confirmed this fact. He has stated that the plant executives concerned forwarded the requirement reports for foreign workers for the iron industry to the chairman of the RVE, Roechling, who in turn submitted them through the Minister, Speer, to Sauckel.

Hermann Roechling has admitted this fact. In a statement, dated 6 November 1945, which he made for the United States occupation authorities in Germany, he said that all manpower requirements were submitted to Speer through the RVE, and through Speer to Sauckel. There are numerous requirement reports of this type; it will suffice, however, to mention one of them in order to illustrate the methods used. On 12 August 1942 the RVE sent a memorandum to Speer concerning the program for raising the steel production in the last two quarters of that year.

In order to put this new plan into effect, the RVE stated that 60,000 workers would be required, of whom 55,000 could be foreigners. However, on 12 August 1942, Sauckel had been in office for 5 months, and the chairman of the RVE knew in what way such foreign workers were supplied.

On the other hand, Hermann Roechling stated the following in a report of the RVE, dated 15 August 1942: "In accordance with the requirement reports submitted by the Reich Association Iron * * * Russian civilians have arrived as the first transports during the last days of July." The exact number of workers required by the RVE and of these deported workers which were made available for the RVE by Sauckel and Speer, is not known; it is a fact, however, that their number was quite considerable and that they included civilians from France, Luxembourg, Belgium, Holland, Poland, and Soviet Russia.

A statement of Hermann Roechling shows that after 1942, approximately 200,000 foreign workers were employed in the iron industry in Germany proper. Thus, Hermann Roechling was connected with the war crime of deportation for the purpose of forced labor, and he was coresponsible for the deportation of all those workers who had been assigned to the iron and steel industry as of 29 May 1942, the day on which he assumed his supreme command of this industry.

Hermann Roechling and the other accused members of the Directorate of the Voelklingen works are not accused of having ordered this horrible treatment, but of having permitted it; and indeed supported it, and in addition, of not having done their utmost to put an end to these abuses. In adopting this attitude they permitted the continued existence and further development of this inhuman situation and thus, particularly through this tolerance, participated in the maltreatment within the meaning of Law No. 10.

As a result of the positions they held, Ernst Roechling and Maier were not connected with manpower matters, and their conduct can therefore not be considered as participation in these abuses.

In view of their positions and powers, this is not the case with Hermann Roechling, von Gemmingen-Hornberg, and Rodenhauser. It was Hermann Roechling's duty to keep himself informed about the treatment of the deportees; the fact that he did no longer concern himself about their fate, could only increase his responsibility. In his dual capacity as chief of the Voelklingen plants and chairman of the Reich Association Iron he had sufficient authority to intervene and to render the abuses less severe, even if he could not stop them. The contested judgment validly establishes that the witnesses declared Hermann Roechling to have had repeated opportunities during the inspection of his concerns to ascertain the fate meted out to his personnel, since he could not fail to notice the prisoners' uniform on those occasions.

Von Gemmingen-Hornberg was president of the Directorate of the Stahlwerke Roechling; he furthermore held the position of works manager, that is, as the works representative in negotiations with the authorities specially competent to deal with matters relating to labor. His sphere of competence also included contact with the Gestapo in regard to the works police.

Von Gemmingen-Hornberg declares that he was incapable of altering the conditions, of which he was aware, since the deported workers were under the jurisdiction of the Gestapo and the German Labor Front. However, the high position which he held provided him with sufficient authority to intervene and to ensure an improvement in the treatment of the convicted deportees. The contested judgment validly describes his conduct as showing negligence and lack of courage; a few measures which were apparently taken by him, can at the most be evaluated merely as extenuating circumstances.

With regard to Rodenhauser, the Court confirms the findings of the contested judgment, according to which Rodenhauser, as Director General, member of the Directorate, and Special Dele-

SPECIAL TRIBUNAL FOR LEBANON
TRIBUNAL SPÉCIAL POUR LE LIBAN

SECTION II: MODES OF RESPONSIBILITY

I. Harmonising Articles 2 and 3 of the Tribunal's Statute

204. Close scrutiny of Articles 2 and 3 of the Tribunal's Statute shows that, in some respects, these two provisions may overlap, because they both deal with modes of responsibility (although Article 2 also contemplates the crimes subject to the Tribunal's jurisdiction). It is this ambiguity that motivates the Pre-Trial Judge's thirteenth question:

> xiii) In order to apply modes of criminal responsibility before the Tribunal, should reference be made to Lebanese law, to international law or to both Lebanese and international law? In this last case, how, and on the basis of which principles, should any conflict between these laws be resolved, with specific reference to commission and co-perpetration?

In answering this question, we will also discuss in greater depth questions (iv) and (xii), which relate to the characterisation of offences in the presence of dolus eventualis.

205. Article 2 states that the Tribunal shall apply provisions of the Lebanese Criminal Code relating to "criminal participation" (as a mode of responsibility) and "conspiracy", "illicit association" and "failure to report crimes and offences" (as crimes per se).

206. Article 3 incorporates principles of international criminal law regarding various modes of criminal liability, including commission, complicity, organising or directing others to commit a crime, and contribution to the commission of crimes by a multitude of persons or an organised group. The language of Article 3 draws verbatim from the Statutes of the ICC, the ICTY, the Nuremberg International Military Tribunal, and the more recent international conventions against terrorism; it reflects the status of customary international law as articulated in the case law of the ad hoc tribunals.[312] It thus implicitly incorporates into the Tribunal's Statute the body of international law setting out and applying these principles of individual criminal responsibility. However, as the Secretary General noted in his report to the Security Council on the establishment of this tribunal, [312] Compare Article 3(1)(b) of the STL Statute to Article 25(3)(d) of the Rome Statute of the ICC, Article 2(3) of the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombing, and Article 2(4) of the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism; Article 3(2) of the STL Statute to Article 28(b) of the Rome Statute of the ICC; and Article 3(3) of the STL Statute with Article 7(4) of the ICTY Statute and Article 8 of the Charter of the IMT. See also Article 7(3) ICTYSt; Article 33 ICCSt; Report of the Secretary-General on the Establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon, S/2006/893 (2006), para. 26. See also cases cited below in footnotes 355-362.

Article 3(1)(a) also "reflect[s]" the Lebanese Criminal Code,[313] presumably the provisions on criminal participation referenced in Article 2.

207. Since the matters covered by Article 2 are regulated by Lebanese law, whereas the concepts envisaged in Article 3 are governed by international criminal law, the question before us is how to harmonise the two bodies of law whenever there appears to be inconsistencies or differences in legal regulation.

208. According to the Prosecutor, while the Statute does not provide any express rule on the hierarchy applicable to the modes of criminal responsibility set out in Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute, the sentence in Article 2 "subject to the provisions of the Statute" "could be interpreted to mean that Article 3 modes of responsibility take precedence over any conflicting provision of the Lebanese law made applicable under Article 2, thereby indicating a preference for Article 3 modes of criminal responsibility over those in Lebanese law".[314] However, according to the Prosecutor, the better interpretation is that the Statute "allows for the application of modes of criminal responsibility from both Lebanese law and international criminal law",[315] with the consequence that "there exists no actual conflict between Articles 2 and 3" of the Statute.[316] The Prosecutor goes on to say that "no issue relating to conflicting modes of criminal responsibility arises so long as the Prosecutor has specified the meaning and elements of any mode of criminal responsibility it [sic] alleges in an indictment".[317] Insisting on the practical side of the application of the two provisions in question, the Prosecutor notes that "in any case, any potential unfairness or legal difficulty arising out of charges based on provisions from both Articles 2 and 3 may be resolved prior to trial and in any case would not result in any prejudice or unfairness to an accused".[318] In the Prosecutor's view, "[c]onsistent with the aims of uncovering the truth and ensuring the highest international standards of justice, the mode [of criminal responsibility] that most accurately captures the conduct of an accused may be applied".[319] and this is our second remark, Article 2 also includes the proviso that Lebanese law, including the regulation of "criminal participation", should apply "subject to the provisions of this Statute", and it is clear that the drafters of the Statute intended to incorporate through Article 3 modes of criminal responsibility recognised in international criminal law. The Appeals Chamber cannot just assume that Article 3 was a mistake and should not be considered part and parcel of the Statute. Third, the principle of nullum crimen (in particular, its non-retroactivity requirement) applies not only to substantive crimes, but also to modes of criminal responsibility.

[317] Prosecution Submission, para. 89.
[318] Prosecution Submission, para. 107.
[319] Prosecution Submission, para. 107.

211. Applying these three principles, we conclude that generally speaking the appropriate approach is to (i) evaluate on a case-by-case basis whether there is any actual conflict between the application of Lebanese law and that of the international criminal law embodied in Article 3; (ii) if there is no conflict, apply Lebanese law; and (iii) if there is a conflict, apply the law that would lead to a result more favourable to the rights of the accused.

212. We do not undertake here a comprehensive survey of the modes of criminal responsibility that may be charged and prosecuted before this Tribunal. Instead we consider two particular modes: (i) perpetration and co-perpetration, under Lebanese and international law (including joint criminal enterprise as a mode of perpetration and co-perpetration under international law), as specifically mentioned by the Pre-Trial Judge in question (xiii); and (ii) complicity (or aiding and abetting), which shows how a conflict between Lebanese and international criminal law could result in the application, in this particular instance, of Lebanese law.[323] refrained from accomplishing his duty (this for instance applies to police officers), or where the passive conduct of the accomplice amounts to strengthening the resolve of the perpetrator to commit a crime;[336] (ii) complicity is punished even if the primary author of the crime is not punishable (for instance, he is a minor or is mentally incapacitated); (iii) where the perpetrator is guilty of an attempted crime, complicity is punished if the perpetrator has commenced the execution of the crime; (iv) complicity is punished even if the crime was committed abroad and falls under foreign jurisdiction; (v) conversely, if the crime is committed in Lebanon but the action by an accomplice took place abroad, complicity shall nevertheless be punished in Lebanon.

224. A case of complicity in terrorism is Bombing of the Church of our Lady of Deliverance in Zouk Mikayel (decision of 13 July 1996, no. 4/1996). The Court of Justice found that a defendant was an accomplice to terrorism where his acts:

> were confined to aiding and abetting the perpetrators in their preparation for the bombing by attending the meetings that were held to plan the operation, by helping to assemble one of the explosive devices, and by providing guidelines for the execution of the bombing operation, in the form of a sketch of the interior and exterior of the church, which enabled the perpetrators to determine the manner in which they should enter the church and the time and place at which they should plant the two explosive devices therein. He did that in full awareness of the perpetrators' intent.[337]

2. International Criminal Law

225. Aiding and abetting an international crime involves participating in the crime by assisting the principal in the commission of the criminal offence in the knowledge that the conduct of the principal perpetrator is criminal, even if the accomplice does not share the precise criminal intent of the principal perpetrator.

226. The objective element of accomplice liability is the accomplice's practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support to the principal perpetrator. In addition, such assistance or support must have a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime. This assistance may be provided in the form of positive action or omission, and it may be provided before, during or after perpetration of the crime.[338] Furthermore, the assistance may be physical (or tangible) or moral and psychological.[339]

227. The subjective element of aiding and abetting resides in the accessory having knowledge that "his actions will assist the perpetrator in the commission of the crime".[340] Thus, this subjective element consists of two requirements: (i) awareness that the principal perpetrator will use the assistance for the purpose of engaging in criminal conduct, and (ii) intent to help or encourage the principal perpetrator to commit a crime. It is not required that the accessory be fully cognizant of the specificities of the crime that will be committed by the perpetrator.[341] Indeed, aiding and abetting does not presuppose that the accomplice shares a common plan or purpose with the principal perpetrator or his criminal intent; as stated by the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Tadić, at "the principal may not even know about the accomplice's contribution".[342] Instead, the aider and abettor is required to be aware either of the criminal intent of the perpetrator or at least of the substantial likelihood that the perpetrator will commit a crime.[343] In other words, it may suffice for the accomplice to entertain what in certain legal systems is defined as "advertent recklessness" (dolus eventualis) with regard to the specific conduct of the principal perpetrator,[344] if there is also an intent to encourage or enable [339] See ICTY, Furundžija, Trial Judgment, 10 December 1998 ("Furundžija TJ"), para. 231.

In the ICC Statute aiding and abetting is envisaged in Article 25(3)(c), whereby a person is responsible if he, 'For the purpose of facilitating the commission of such a crime [i.e. a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court], aids, abets or otherwise assists in its commission or its attempted commission, including providing the means for its commission.'

[342] Tadić AJ, para. 229.

[343] In Furundžija an ICTY Trial Chamber held that 'it is not necessary that the aider and abettor should know the precise crime that was intended and which in the event was committed. If he is aware that one of a number of crimes will probably be committed, and one of those crimes is in fact committed, he has intended to facilitate the commission of that crime, and is guilty as an aider and abettor.' Furundžija TJ, para. 246. Another ICTY Trial Chamber supported this proposition in Blaskić (Trial Judgment, 3 March 2000, para. 287), and the Appeals Chamber concurred in it in its judgment in Blaškić AJ, para. 50. However, when the principal crime requires specific intent, such as genocide or persecution, the accused must have known that the person or persons he is aiding or abetting possessed that specific intent—i e , the genocidal or discriminatory intent. ICTY, Popović et al, Trial Judgment, 10 June 2010, para. 1017.

[344] As an SCSL Trial Chamber put it, "[t]he mens rea required for aiding and abetting is that the accused knew that his acts would assist the commission of the crime by the perpetrator or that he was aware of the substantial likelihood that his acts would assist the commission of a crime by the perpetrator" Brima et al, Trial Judgment, 20 June 2007, para. 776.

the principal's criminal conduct. This accords with fundamental principles of criminal law: if someone provides a gun to a well-known thug with the knowledge that it will be used (or is reasonably likely to be used) to commit a crime, he is liable for aiding and abetting whatever that crime is, regardless of whether he was fully aware of the specific crime the thug intended to perpetrate.[345]

3. Comparison between Lebanese and International Criminal Law

228. It is apparent from the above that to a large extent the Lebanese notion of complicity and the international notion of aiding and abetting overlap, with two important exceptions. First, Lebanese law limits the objective element to the discrete list of means of support included in Article 219: accomplice liability only attaches if support is provided through one of the enumerated means. Second, Lebanese law generally requires an accomplice to know of the crime to be committed, to join with the perpetrator in an understanding, whether immediate or long-standing, to commit the crime, and to share in the intent to further that particular crime. Thus the Lebanese Criminal Code's concept of complicity should be applied as it is more protective of the rights of the accused..

C. Other Modes of Participation in Criminal Conduct

1. Lebanese Law

229. We shall now examine how Lebanese law and international criminal law regulate other modes of participation in criminality, that is, modes of participation in collective crimes (crimes committed by a multiplicity of persons) other than co-perpetration or complicity.

As stated by the ICC in another context, "[t]he concept of [simple] recklessness requires only that the perpetrator be aware of the existence of a risk that the objective elements of the crime may result from his or her actions or omissions, but does not require that he or she reconcile himself or herself with the result [which is instead required by dolus eventualis]. In so far as recklessness does not require the suspect to reconcile himself or herself with the causation of the objective elements of the crime as a result of his or her actions or omissions, is it not part of the concept of intention." ICC, Lubanga, Decision on the Confirmation of Charges, 29 January 2007, fn. 438.

[345] As an example of this general principle of law applied in national courts, consider the van Anraat Case before the Hague Court of Appeal (Judgment of 9 May 2007). The accused had provided to Iraq, between 1980 and 1988, the chemical raw material TDG (Thiodiglycol) necessary for the manufacture of the mustard gas that the Iraqi Government had then used against the Kurds in 1987-88. The Court applied Dutch law, which does not require that the assistance provided by the accessory be indispensable or make a "causal contribution" to the main offence; it simply requires that "the assistance offered by the accessory [should] promote the offence or [make] it easier to commit that offence" (at para. 12.4). The Court first found that the accused knew that the quantity of TDG he provided could only be used to produce mustard gas (at para. 11.10) and then found that the accused was aware of the high risk of use of the mustard gas in war, particularly given the "unscrupulous character of the then Iraqi regime." (at para. 11.16).

[re...] lated how he shot 30 Jews because they had left the ghetto without permission. He did this, he said, under orders from the chief of the Einsatzgruppe, Nebe, who ordered him "to establish an example". At the trial he gave a different explanation of this episode which, however, establishes even a clearer case of guilt. He said that three women had contacted some partisans and, returning to the town, had talked to the thirty Jews in their homes. This, according to the defendant, made them guilty of partisan action and he had them shot. He, of course, also shot the three women. He did, however, accord them a special consideration. He had them blindfolded for the execution and then ordered that they be given a separate grave.

Klingelhoefer has stated that his function in the Einsatzgruppe operation was only that of interpreter. Even if this were true it would not exonerate him from guilt because in locating, evaluating and turning over lists of Communist party functionaries to the executive department of his organization he was aware that the people listed would be executed when found. In this function, therefore, he served as an accessory to the crime.

> "Q. I asked you, Witness, didn't you know that when you were giving him these lists of Communist party functionaries that he was going to exterminate all those he could? You either knew it or you didn't know it.
> "A. Of course, I did."

But the evidence is clear that Klingelhoefer was no mere interpreter in the grim business of the Einsatzgruppe. He was an active leader and commander. He knew what the Einsatz units were doing to the Jews.

> "Q. You told us you knew that if he stayed in the ghetto he was killed. Now, if he left the ghetto, was he then set free?
> "A. If he left the ghetto, he violated the directives which were given.

"Q. So that he was killed anyway?

"A. Then he had to be executed, yes."

In his own affidavit the defendant stated:

> "While I was assigned by Nebe to the leadership of the Vorkommando Moscow, Nebe ordered me to go from Smolensk to Tatarsk and Mstislavl to get furs for the German troops and to liquidate part of the Jews there. The Jews had already been arrested by order of Hauptsturmfuehrer Egon Noack. The executions proper were carried out by Noack under my supervision." [Emphasis supplied.]

Although the defendant stated several times during his interrogation on the witness stand that he was morally opposed report which he was compiling on the morale of the population, and he replied he did not have a chance.

> "Q. Well, how much time would it take in an SD report which you were compelled to make and which it was your job to make, to say that there were excesses in Tarnopol to the extent that 600 Jews were murdered, — or if you didn't want to say murdered — were killed by the population. How much time would it take to include that, with your fingers on the typewriter, into a report? How much time would it take to say that?
> "A. Two seconds.
> "Q. Well, then, why didn't you have the two seconds to write that?
> "A. Because I made no report.
> "Q. Why didn't you make a report?
> "A. Because I was given the order by the Kommando leader to evaluate this material."

Fendler denies that he ever functioned as deputy to the Kommando leader and stated that, when he acted as an advance Kommando leader, he occupied himself only with the obtaining of intelligence files left behind by the Bolsbevists. But, in evaluating these reports, it is inevitable that he would need to tell someone what he found. In fact, he did admit that this information usually was "utilized for individual reports". The army was also informed "in a written form or orally".

In order to prove that the work of every officer was specialized and thus one would not know what the others were doing, the defendant stated that his unit never divided its forces. Thus, one officer would not need to do the job of others. However, since this would establish that, by sheer proximity, the officers could not help but know each other's business, the defendant later stated that the unit was not always together because of the distance it had to travel.

The defendant knew that executions were taking place. He admitted that the procedure which determined the so-called guilt of a person which resulted in his being condemned to death was "too summary". But, there is no evidence that he ever did anything about it. As the second highest ranking officer in the Kommando, his views could have been heard in complaint or protest against what he now says was a too summary procedure, but he chose to let the injustice go uncorrected.

He was asked —

> "Do I understand you correctly that you were of the opinion that there was an insufficient safeguard for the suspected person, as there was no trial, that his rights as a defendant were

"THE FLICK CASE"

cently led Tribunal III to "hold that crimes against humanity as defined in Control Council Law No. 10 must be strictly construed to exclude isolated cases of atrocity or persecution whether committed by private individuals or by governmental authority." United States vs. Altstoetter, et al., decided 4 December 1947. The transactions before us, if otherwise within the contemplation of Law No. 10 as crimes against humanity, would be excluded by this holding.

Whether we hold that we have not jurisdiction or whether we assume jurisdiction and hold that no crime against humanity has been proved, the result so far as these defendants are concerned is the same. They cannot be convicted on the fact that the evidence submitted on this count relates to subject matter not within its jurisdiction. Accordingly, count three is dismissed.

COUNTS FOUR AND FIVE

PRESIDING JUDGE SEARS: We consider together counts four and five. The latter charges Steinbrinck with membership subsequent to 1 September 1939 in the SS. The gist of count four is that as members of the Himmler Circle of Friends, Flick and Steinbrinck with knowledge of the criminal activities of the SS contributed funds and influence to its support.

The basis of liability of members of the SS, as declared by IMT, is that after 1 September 1939 they "became or remained members of the organization with knowledge that it was being used for the commission of acts declared criminal by Article 6 of the Charter, or who were personally implicated as members of the organization in the commission of such crimes, excluding, however, those who were drafted into membership by the State in such a way as to give them no choice in the matter and who had committed no such crimes." [1] Steinbrinck was a member of the SS from 1933 to the time of the German collapse. There is no evidence that he was personally implicated in the commission of its crimes. It is not contended that he was drafted into membership in such a way as to give him no choice. His liability therefore must be predicated on the fact that he remained a member after 1 September 1939 with knowledge that "it was being used for the commission of acts declared criminal."

IMT also found "that knowledge of these criminal activities was sufficiently general to justify declaring that the SS was a criminal organization to the extent * * *" [2] later described in the judgment, namely, that "the SS was utilized for purposes which were criminal under the Charter, involving the persecution and extermination of the Jews, brutalities and killings in concentration camps, excesses in the administration of occupied territories, the administration of the slave-labor program and the mistreatment and murder of prisoners of war." [1]

It seems clear that mass extermination of the Jews, mass murders in the guise of experiments in concentration camps such as described in the judgment in Case 1 [2] recently decided by Tribunal I, and other atrocities referred to generally in the above quotation from the IMT judgment, were crimes against humanity and war crimes well recognized by international law quite independent of the legislation of the four powers embodied in the Charter and Law No. 10. An organization which on a large scale is responsible for such crimes can be nothing else than criminal. One who knowingly by his influence and money contributes to the support thereof must, under settled legal principles, be deemed to be, if not a principal, certainly an accessory to such crimes. So there can be no force in the argument that when, from 1939 on, these two defendants were associated with Himmler and through him with the SS they could not be liable because there had been no statute nor judgment declaring the SS a criminal organization and incriminating those who were members or in other manner contributed to its support.

Relying upon the IMT findings above quoted the prosecution took the position that it devolved upon Steinbrinck to show that he remained a member without knowledge of such criminal activities. As we have stated in the beginning the burden was all the time upon the prosecution. But in the face of the declaration of IMT that such knowledge was widespread we cannot believe that a man of Steinbrinck's intelligence and means of acquiring information could have remained wholly ignorant of the character of the SS under the administration of Himmler. The extent of his knowledge and the part he played with such knowledge will be treated later in the opinion.

Steinbrinck became a member of the Circle in 1932 in its early days when it was known as the Keppler Circle. At the instigation of Hitler or with his approval, Keppler gathered together a few industrial leaders including Steinbrinck for their advice upon economic questions including, it seems, the problem of solving the unemployment situation. There is evidence that industrialists believed Keppler would become Hitler's chief economic adviser and they were not unwilling to meet and exchange views with a man who was likely to become a powerful State leader. Flick was not drawn into the group until three years later and then more or less casually. Keppler's influence with Hitler waned and Himmler's influence grew and his ascendancy began, so that even before the beginning of the war the group came to be known as the Circle of Friends of Himmler. In its early meetings SS leaders or officers were not present in any considerable number but as the war went on more of them came to the meetings, probably on the invitation or command of Himmler.

[1] Ibid., p. 273.

[2] Medical case, United States vs. Brandt, et al., judgment, section XII, Volume II, this series.

We do not find in the meetings themselves the sinister purposes ascribed to them by the prosecution. Kranefuss, an assistant of Keppler and Himmler, throughout its history controlled the invitations, doubtless with the approval of Himmler. There was an annual dinner in connection with the Party rally at Nuernberg. Later there were more frequent meetings taking the form of dinner parties with the usual beverages. It may be questioned whether the members of the SS who attended had any reason more compelling than Himmler's invitation and the opportunity as guests to get an excellent dinner. There was no regular seating and after dinner the party broke up into small groups of congenial acquaintances. Flick and Steinbrinck naturally drifted to groups of business men. Himmler was not always present. He did not single out Flick or Steinbrinck for attention. There is no evidence that the criminal activities of the SS were discussed. As a matter of fact, it was the policy of Himmler to conceal them. As a part of the program usually there were talks and sometimes showing of films on subjects foreign to the war such as the Tibet expedition, in which Himmler was interested, to which, with one exception later discussed, no criminal significance may be ascribed. There is credible evidence that Himmler was a man of dual personality; on the one hand a gentleman with cultural interests and on the other an inhuman monster. In these meetings we have no doubt he appeared the gentleman and genial host. So far we see nothing criminal nor immoral in the defendants' attendance at these meetings. As a group (it could hardly be called an organization) it played no part in formulating any of the policies of the Third Reich.

But Himmler was Reich Leader SS. His person can hardly be separated from his organization. Of this the defendants could not be unaware. In 1936 he took members of the Circle on an inspection trip to visit Dachau concentration camp which was under his charge. They were escorted through certain buildings including the kitchen where they tasted food. They saw nothing of the infamous atrocities perhaps already there begun. But Flick who was present got the impression that it was not a pleasant place. The members of the Circle visited at his invitation other places where money was being spent under Himmler's would result in the establishment of the fact that Germany, for obvious reasons, was unwilling to provide Jews with foreign currency, and thus the ultimate object would be reached, namely, to prove that it was again the German obstinacy which was responsible for the misery of the Jews; that merely for the act of making Germany the scapegoat he was unable to recommend Rublee's plan, but that he would pass the memorandum on to the competent office. In this memorandum he states that his answer to the American Ambassador was more placatory, but of the same tenor.

As stated, he was directed by von Ribbentrop to make no reply to the British memorandum. The British and Americans from time to time attempted to renew the matter, but von Weizsaecker and Woermann put them off with vague promises. The defendants claim that finally through their exclusive efforts, Rublee was permitted to visit Berlin and engaged in various conferences.

There can be no question whatsoever that here neither von Weizsaecker nor Woermann was in a position to control the matter. Their superior had given express orders as to the nature of the conversation they might conduct with the foreign representatives in question. They derived their powers only from and through him, and they merely repeated his decision. They did not execute or implement a policy of wrongdoing.

Wannsee conference and the part played by the Foreign Office. —The mass deportation of Jews to the East which resulted in the extermination of many millions of them found its expression in the celebrated Wannsee conference of 20 January 1942. The Foreign Office played an important part in these negotiations and in the actions thereafter taken to implement and assist the program. Von Weizsaecker or Woermann neither originated it, gave it enthusiastic support, nor in their hearts approved of it. The question is whether they knew of the program and whether in any substantial manner they aided, abetted, or implemented it. That both von Ribbentrop and Luther did, there can be no possible question.

On 8 December 1941 a memorandum was prepared by Luther's department "Deutschland" in preparation for a conference with Heydrich to set up the wishes and ideas of the Foreign Office concerning the "total solution" of the Jewish question in Europe. The document does not show on its face that it was submitted to von Weizsaecker or Woermann, and ordinarily this would indicate that it was not.

But on 4 December 1941 Luther prepared a memorandum which was submitted to von Weizsaecker and initialed by him regarding a proposal or suggestion made by Foreign Minister Popoff of

The witness Oswald Pohl was administration chief of the SS from 1934 to 1945. He was tried and condemned to death. He was called for cross-examination with respect to [Prosecution] Exhibits 3477, 2826, 2862, 2827, 2865 [Documents 4045–PS, NI–399, NI–470, NI–382, NID–14605 respectively]. He says that while a prisoner of the British he was badly mistreated, although he makes no claim that he was mistreated while in Nuernberg, either before, during, or after his interrogations here. He attempted to state that he did not know that the material came from concentration camps, or from extermination camps and dead Jews, or that it contained such items as gold rings, gold fillings, glasses, and gold watches.

August Frank testified, in the Oswald Pohl case, that as early as 8 October 1942 he had informed Himmler about this dental gold and suggested that further collections be sent to the Reich Bank, and further, that he knew that much of it came from concentration camps. We deem it highly unlikely that Pohl would not have at least as much definite information as his deputy, Frank.

We have carefully reviewed Pohl's testimony before a commission of this Tribunal. It is our opinion that he gave false oral testimony in an attempt to exonerate himself as well as defendant Puhl. Certainly Pohl's cross-examination shows that he would go to any lengths, wholly without regard to the facts, in order to avoid the effect of the affidavits which he had given.

From the records we draw and make the following findings of fact:

That Puhl was the managing director and vice president of the Bank, and that in Funk's absence he exercised all the powers of Funk;

That Funk was seldom in the bank and comparatively seldom exercised his powers as president;

That Puhl, at the time he received the direction from Funk and after he talked to Pohl, knew that what was to be received and disposed of was stolen property and loot taken from the inmates of concentration camps.

We do not believe that at that time he was informed that the grisly dental gold and wedding rings were part of it. However, we think it is fairly established by the record that long before the deliveries were completed he was informed of this. His part in this transaction was not that of a mere messenger or businessman. He went beyond the ordinary range of his duties to give directions that the matter be handled secretly by the appropriate departments of the bank. It is to be said in his favor that he neither originated the matter and that it was probably repugnant to him. He had no part in the actual extermination of Jews and other concentration camp inmates, and we have no doubt that he would not, even under orders, have participated in that part of the program.

But without doubt he was a consenting participant in part of the execution of the entire plan, although his participation was not a major one.

We find him guilty under count five.

RASCHE

The defendant Rasche is a banker by profession, and after many years of banking experience in the Rhineland he joined the Dresdner Bank, became a member and finally the spokesman for its Vorstand. He was one of the most able and active executive officers of the bank.

The evidence clearly establishes that the Dresdner Bank loaned very large sums of money to various SS enterprises which employed large numbers of inmates of concentration camps, and also to Reich enterprises and agencies engaged in the so-called resettlement programs.

It is unnecessary to recapitulate the evidence in this case or the findings of others of these Tribunals to the unlawful nature of these enterprises.

Prosecution Exhibit 2825 [Document NI–10120] is a draft of a letter of recommendation which Rasche prepared or caused to be prepared for the signature of SS Gruppenfuehrer Pohl, which contains the statement:

> "Dr. Rasche is an old fighter for the Baltikum, and as a member of the delegation of the Reich Leader SS (Himmler) he also participated in the decisive measures concerning resettlement."

The defense that Pohl did not sign this letter and that it was never used is of no materiality, as they are Rasche's own words praising himself and not those of Pohl.

The record, however, does not disclose that Rasche was ever a member of any delegation of the Reich Leader SS, nor what the delegation did, if it ever existed, or what the decisive measures consisted of; nor are we able, from other evidence, to determine any relationship with Himmler or the SS from which any conclusive inference can be drawn.

Rasche was a member of Himmler's Circle of Friends, and the [Dresdner] Bank, with his knowledge, acquiescence, and approval, even in part at his insistence, made large annual contributions to a fund placed at Himmler's personal disposal. There is no evidence, however, that matters relating to the resettlement program were ever discussed or acted upon in the meetings of this circle, or that it was in any way a policy-making body. Nor is there any evidence that Rasche knew that any part of the fund to which the bank made contributions was intended to be or was ever used by Himmler for any unlawful purposes.

His participation in the loans made by the Dresdner Bank to various SS enterprises which employed slave labor and to those engaged in the resettlement program presents a more difficult problem.

The defendant is a banker and businessman of long experience and is possessed of a keen and active mind. Bankers do not approve or make loans in the number and amount made by the Dresdner Bank without ascertaining, having, or obtaining information or knowledge as to the purpose for which the loan is sought, and how it is to be used. It is inconceivable to us that the defendant did not possess that knowledge, and we find that he did.

The real question is, is it a crime to make a loan, knowing or having good reason to believe that the borrower will us the funds in financing enterprises which are employed in using labor in violation of either national or international law? Does he stand in any different position than one who sells supplies or raw materials to a builder building a house, knowing that the structure will be used for an unlawful purpose? A bank sells money or credit in the same manner as the merchandiser of any other commodity. It does not become a partner in enterprise, and the interest charged is merely the gross profit which the bank realizes from the transaction, out of which it must deduct its business costs, and from which it hopes to realize a net profit. Loans or sale of commodities to be used in an unlawful enterprise may well be condemned from a moral standpoint and reflect no credit on the part of the lender or seller in either case, but the transaction can hardly be said to be a crime. Our duty is to try and punish those guilty of violating international law, and we are not prepared to state that such loans constitute a violation of that law, nor has our attention been drawn to any ruling to the contrary.

The defendant Rasche should be and is found not guilty under count five.

HOUSE OF LORDS

GILLICK
(RESPONDENT)

WEST NORFOLK AND WISBECH AREA HEALTH AUTHORITY AND THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND SOCIAL SECURITY

(APPELLANTS) (ENGLAND)

Lord Fraser of Tullybelton
Lord Scarman
Lord Bridge of Harwich
Lord Brandon of Oakbrook
Lord Templeman

LORD FRASER OF TULLYBELTON

My Lords,

The main question in this appeal is whether a doctor can lawfully prescribe contraception for a girl under 16 years of age, without the consent of her parents. The second appellant, the Department of Health and Social Security ("the D.H.S.S.") maintains that a doctor can do so. The respondent, Mrs. Gillick, maintains that he cannot. The first appellant, West Norfolk and Wisbech Area Health Authority, was not represented when the appeal reached this House, but in the Court of Appeal they were represented by the same counsel as the D.H.S.S.

In December 1980, the D.H.S.S. issued guidance on family planning services for young people, which was a revised version of earlier guidance on the same subject, and which stated, or implied, that, at least in certain cases which were described as "exceptional," a doctor could lawfully prescribe contraception for a girl under 16 without her parents' consent. Mrs. Gillick, who is the mother of five daughters under the age of 16, objected to the guidance and she instituted the proceedings which have led to this appeal, and in which she claims a declaration against both appellants that the advice given in the guidance was unlawful. She also claims a further declaration against the first appellant alone, but it is of less general importance than the declaration to which I have already referred, and I defer consideration of it until later in this speech.

It will be convenient to dispose at once of some preliminary matters. In the first place, Mrs. Gillick's husband is not a party to the present proceedings, but we were informed that he is in full agreement with Mrs. Gillick's contention, and I proceed on that basis. Secondly, there is no suggestion that Mrs. Gillick's relationship with her daughters is other than normal and happy, nor is it suggested that there is any present likelihood of any of the daughters seeking contraceptive advice or treatment without the consent of their mother.

Thirdly, I must mention a procedural matter. The declaration which is claimed against the D.H.S.S., to the effect that the advice given in the guidance was unlawful, amounts to an assertion that the Secretary of State for Health and Social Security has acted illegally, in the sense of ultra vires. The remedy claimed is in the field of public law and, since the decision of your Lordships' House in the case of O'Reilly v. Mackman [1983] 2 A.C. 237, it is one which should normally be claimed in an application for judicial review. But the writ and statement of claim in this action were issued on 5 August 1982, three months before the decision in O'Reilly, which was on 25 November 1982. Accordingly, Mr. Laws, who appeared for the D.H.S.S., merely mentioned the procedural point but he did not submit that the procedure was out of order. I have had the benefit of reading in draft the speech prepared by my noble and learned friend Lord Scarman and I agree with him that, for the reasons explained by him, Mrs. Gillick was fully entitled to proceed in the case by ordinary action.

The advice, the lawfulness of which is in dispute, is a revised version of part of a comprehensive Memorandum of Guidance on the family planning service which had been issued to health authorities in May 1974 under cover of a circular (H.S.C. (I.S.) 32) from the D.H.S.S. The Memorandum of Guidance was divided into a number of sections, one of which was section G which was headed "The Young." The revised section G, which contains the disputed advice, is as follows:

> "There is widespread concern about counselling and treatment for children under 16. Special care is needed not to undermine parental responsibility and family stability. The Department would therefore hope that in any case where a doctor or other professional worker is approached by a person under the age of 16 for advice in these matters, the doctor, or other professional, will always seek to persuade the child to involve the parent or guardian (or other person in loco parentis) at the earliest stage of consultation, and will proceed from the assumption that it would be most unusual to provide advice about contraception without parental consent.
> "It is, however, widely accepted that consultations between doctors and patients are confidential; and the Department recognises the importance which doctors and patients attach to this principle. It is a principle which applies also to the other professions concerned. To abandon this principle for children under 16 might cause some not to seek professional advice at all. They could then be exposed to the immediate risks of pregnancy and of sexually-transmitted diseases, as well as other long-term physical, psychological and emotional consequences which are equally a threat to stable family life. This would apply particularly to young people whose parents are, for example, unconcerned, entirely unresponsive, or grossly disturbed. Some of these young people are away from their parents and in the care of local authorities or voluntary organisations standing in loco parentis.

> "The Department realises that in such exceptional cases the nature of any counselling must be a matter for the doctor or other professional worker concerned and that > the decision whether or not to prescribe contraception must be for the clinical judgment of a doctor."

That advice emphasised, more strongly than section G in its original form had done, that the cases in which a doctor could properly advise a girl under 16 years of age about contraception without parental consent would be most unusual. If the advice had been contained in a legal document there might well have been room for argument as to its exact effect, but, in my view, it is perfectly clear that it would convey to any doctor or other person who read it that the decision whether or not to prescribe contraception for a girl under 16 was in the last resort a matter for the clinical judgment of a doctor, even if the girl's parents had not been informed that she had consulted the doctor, and even if they had expressed disapproval of contraception being prescribed for her. Mrs. Gillick objected to the guidance, in its amended form, and after some correspondence with the area health authority, she wrote to the acting area administrator on 3 March 1981 a letter which included this paragraph:

> "I formally FORBID any medical staff employed by Norfolk A.H.A. to give any contraceptive or abortion advice or treatment whatsoever to my four daughters whilst they are under 16 years without my consent."

Mrs. Gillick's youngest (fifth) daughter has been born since that letter was sent. The acting administrator replied on 9 March 1981 acknowledging the letter and stating that the A.M.A. held to the view "that treatment prescribed by a doctor is a matter for that doctor's clinical judgment, taking into account all the factors of the case."

On 5 August 1982 Mrs. Gillick began these proceedings against the area health authority and the D.H.S.S., in which she seeks the following declarations (as amended before the Master):

> "(i) A declaration against the [Area Health Authority] and the [D.H.S.S.] on a true construction of the said notice and in the events which have happened, including and in particular the publication and the circulation of the said notice, the said notice has no authority in law and gives advice which is unlawful and wrong, and which adversely affects or which may adversely affect the welfare of the plaintiff's said children, and/or the rights of the plaintiff as parent and custodian of the said children, and/or the ability of the plaintiff properly and effectively to discharge her duties as such parent and custodian;
> "(ii) A declaration against the [Area Health Authority] that no doctor or other professional person employed by the [Area Health Authority] either in the Family Planning Service or otherwise may give any contraceptive and/or abortion advice and/or treatment to any child of the plaintiff below the age of 16 without the prior knowledge and consent of the said child's parent or guardian."

Woolf J. [1984] Q.B. 581 refused to grant the declarations sought by Mrs. Gillick and dismissed the action. The Court of Appeal (Eveleigh, Fox and Parker L.JJ.) [1985] 2 W.L.R. 413 allowed the appeal and granted the declarations. Against that decision the D.H.S.S. now appeals.

The central issue in the appeal is whether a doctor can ever, in any circumstances, lawfully give contraceptive advice or treatment to a girl under the age of 16 without her parents' consent. The effect of the Court of Appeal's judgment is to answer that question in the negative. The answer is subject certainly to one exception, in the case of an order by a competent court; this exception was recognised by Parker LJ. in the Court of Appeal, [1985] 2 W.L.R. 413, 420H, and it is accepted in Mrs. Gillick's printed case. But it is of theoretical rather than practical importance, because it would inevitably involve disclosing to the parents the doctor's advice to the girl, and thus would destroy its confidentiality, and also because the delay and expense of obtaining a court order makes frequent use of such procedure impracticable. There must, I think, be a second exception for cases in which the parents, or the sole surviving parent, have deliberately abandoned their parental responsibilities; in such cases it would, in my opinion, be wrong to allow them to emerge from the shadows solely in order to veto contraceptive advice or treatment for their daughter. But these exceptions do not touch the principle which is at issue in the appeal.

The guidance is addressed to regional health authorities and other authorities concerned in administering the National Health Service ("N.H.S."), and the appeal therefore only directly concerns doctors and other persons working in the N.H.S. I shall refer throughout to doctors, to include bevitatis causa other professional persons working in the N.H.S.

The first statutory provision for contraceptive advice and treatment in the N.H.S. was made by section 1 of the National Health Service (Family Planning) Act 1967. That section empowered local health authorities in England and Wales, with the approval of the Minister of Health, to make arrangements for giving advice on contraception, for medical examination of persons seeking such advice and for the supply of contraceptive substances and appliances. There appears to have been no similar provision applying to Scotland. The Act of 1967 was repealed by the National Health Service Reorganisation Act 1973 which, by section 4, replaced the power of local health authorities to provide such advice and treatment with a duty on the Secretary of State to do so. A similar duty was placed on the Secretary of State for Scotland by section 8 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1972. The 1973 provision for England and Wales has now been superseded by the National Health Service Act 1977 which by section 5(l)(b) imposes a duty on the Secretary of State:

> "to arrange, to such extent as he considers necessary to meet all reasonable requirements in England and Wales, for the giving of advice on contraception, the medical examination of persons seeking advice on contraception, the treatment of such persons and the supply of contraceptive substances and appliances."

These, and other, provisions show that Parliament regarded "advice" and "treatment" on contraception and the supply of appliances for contraception as essentially medical matters. So they are, but they may also raise moral and social questions on which many people feel deeply, and in that respect they differ from ordinary medical advice and treatment. None of the provisions to which I have referred placed any limit on the age (or the sex) of the persons to whom such advice or treatment might be supplied.

Three strands of argument are raised by the appeal. These are:

1. Whether a girl under the age of 16 has the legal capacity to give valid consent to contraceptive advice and treatment including medical examination.

2. Whether giving such advice and treatment to a girl under 16 without her parents' consent infringes the parents' rights.

3. Whether a doctor who gives such advice or treatment to a girl under 16 without her parents' consent incurs criminal liability.

I shall consider these strands in order.

1. The legal capacity of a girl under 16 to consent to contraceptive advice, examination and treatment.

There are some indications in statutory provisions to which we were referred that a girl under 16 years of age in England and Wales does not have the capacity to give valid consent to contraceptive advice and treatment. If she does not have the capacity, then any physical examination or touching of her body without her parents' consent would be an assault by the examiner. One of those provisions is section 8 of the Family Law Reform Act 1969 which is in the following terms:

> "(1) The consent of a minor who has attained the age of 16 years to any surgical, medical or dental treatment which, in the absence of consent, would constitute a trespass to his person, shall be as effective as it would be if he were of full age; and where a minor has by virtue of this section given an effective consent to any treatment it shall not be necessary to obtain any consent for it from his parent or guardian.
> 2. In this section 'surgical, medical or dental treatment' includes . . .
> 3. Nothing in this section shall be construed as making ineffective any consent which would have been effective if this section had not been enacted."

The contention on behalf of Mrs. Gillick was that subsection (1) of section 8 shows that, apart from the subsection, the consent of a minor to such treatment would not be effective. But I do not accept that contention because subsection (3) leaves open the question whether consent by a minor under the age of 16 would have been effective if the section had not been enacted. That question is not answered by the section, and subsection (1) is, in my opinion, merely for the avoidance of doubt.

Another statutory provision which was referred to in this connection is the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1974 (S.I. 1974 No. 160) as amended by the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment Regulations 1975 (S.I. 1975 No. 719). These regulations prescribe the mechanism by which the relationship of doctor and patient under the National Health Service is created. Contraceptive services, along with maternity medical services, are treated as somewhat apart from other medical services in respect that only a doctor who specially offers to provide contraceptive or maternity medical services is obliged to provide them. See the definition of "medical card" and "treatment" in regulation 2(1), regulations 6(1)(a) and 14(2)(a) and Schedule 1 paragraph 13. But nothing turns on this fact. Two points in those regulations have a bearing on the present question although, in my opinion, only an indirect bearing. The first is that by regulation 14 any "woman" may apply to a doctor to be accepted by him for the provision of contraceptive services. The word "woman" is not defined so as to exclude a girl under 16 or under any other age. But regulation 32 provides as follows:

> "An application to a doctor for inclusion on his list . . . may be made, either -
> > (a) on behalf of any person under 16 years of age, by the mother, or in her absence, the father, or in the absence of both parents the guardian or other adult person who has the care of the child; or
> > (b) on behalf of any other person who is incapable of making such an application by a relative or other adult person who has the care of such person; or . . ." (Emphasis added).

The words in paragraph (b) which I have emphasised are said, by counsel for Mrs. Gillick, to imply that a person under 16 years of age is incapable of applying to a doctor for services and therefore give some support to the argument on behalf of Mrs. Gillick. But I do not regard the implication as a strong one because the provision is merely that an application "may" be made by the mother or other parent or guardian and it applies to the doctor's list for the provision of all ordinary medical services as well as to his list for the provision of contraception services. I do not believe that a person aged 15, who may be living away from home, is incapable of applying on his own behalf for inclusion in the list of a doctor for medical services of an ordinary kind not connected with contraception.

Another provision, in a different branch of medicine, which is said to carry a similar implication is contained in the Mental Health Act 1983 section 131 which provides for informal admission of patients to mental hospitals. It provides by subsection (2) that:

> "In the case of a minor who has attained the age of 16 years and is capable of expressing his own wishes, any such arrangements as are mentioned in subsection (1) above [for informal admission] may be made, carried out and determined notwithstanding any right of custody or control vested by law in his parent or guardian."

That provision has only a remote bearing on the present question because there is no doubt that a minor under the age of 16 is in the custody of his or her parents. The question is whether such custody necessarily involves the right to veto contraceptive advice or treatment being given to the girl.

Reference was also made to the Education Act 1944 section 48 which deals with medical inspection and treatment of pupils at state school. Subsection (3) of section 48 which imposes on the Secretary of State a duty to provide for medical and dental inspection of pupils was repealed and superseded by the National Health Service Reorganisation Act 1973 section 3 and Schedule 5. The Act of 1973 in turn was replaced by the National Health Service Act 1977 section 5(l)(a). Subsection (4) of Section 48 of the Education Act 1944 which has not been repealed imposes a duty on the Secretary of State to arrange for encouraging pupils to take advantage of any medical treatment provided under Section 43 but it includes a proviso in the following terms:

> "Provided that if the parent of any pupil gives to the authority notice that he objects to the pupil availing himself of any medical treatment provided under this section, the pupil shall not be encouraged ... so to do."

I do not regard that provision as throwing light on the present question. It does not prohibit a child under the stipulated age from availing himself of medical treatment or an education authority from providing it for him. If the child, without encouragement from the education authority, "wishes to avail himself of medical treatment" the section imposes no obstacle in his way. Accordingly, in my opinion, the proviso gives no support to the contention from Mrs. Gillick, but on the contrary points in the opposite direction.

The statutory provisions to which I have referred do not differentiate so far as the capacity of a minor under 16 is concerned between contraceptive advice and treatment and other forms of medical advice and treatment. It would, therefore, appear that, if the inference which Mrs. Gillick's advisers seek to draw from the provisions is justified, a minor under the age of 16 has no capacity to authorise any kind of medical advice or treatment or examination of his own body. That seems to me so surprising that I cannot accept it in the absence of clear provisions to that effect. It seems to me verging on the absurd to suggest that a girl or a boy aged 15 could not effectively consent, for example, to have a medical examination of some trivial injury to his body or even to have a broken arm set. Of course the consent of the parents should normally be asked, but they may not be immediately available. Provided the patient, whether a boy or a girl, is capable of understanding what is proposed, and of expressing his or her own wishes, I see no good reason for holding that he or she lacks the capacity to express them validly and effectively and to authorise the medical man to make the examination or give the treatment which he advises.

After all, a minor under the age of 16 can, within certain limits, enter into a contract. He or she can also sue and be sued, and can give evidence on oath. Moreover, a girl under 16 can give sufficiently effective consent to sexual intercourse to lead to the legal result that the man involved does not commit the crime of rape - see Reg. v. Howard [1966] 1 W.L.R. 13, 15 when Lord Parker C.3. said:

> "... in the case of a girl under 16 the prosecution, in order to prove rape, must prove either that she physically resisted, or if she did not, that her understanding and knowledge were such that she was not in a position to decide whether to consent or resist. . . There are many girls under 16 who know full well what it is all about and can properly consent."

Accordingly, I am not disposed to hold now, for the first time, that a girl aged less than 16 lacks the power to give valid consent to contraceptive advice or treatment, merely on account of her age.

Out of respect for the comprehensive and fully researched argument submitted by Mr. Laws for the D.H.S.S. I should notice briefly two old Acts to which he referred, but which do not appear to me to be helpful. One of these is the Abduction Act 1557 (4 and 5 Ph. & M. c.3) for punishing "such as shall take away maidens that be inheritors, being within the age of 16 years, or that marry them, without consent of their parents." That Act was evidently passed for the protection of property rather than for protection of the virtue of maidens. It was repealed by the Offences Against the Person Act 1823 (9 Geo. 4, c.31). We were referred to section 20 of the Act of 1823, but that section was concerned only with punishing abduction of any unmarried girl under the age of 16 and appears to me to have little or no bearing on the present problem.

On this part of the case accordingly I conclude that there is no statutory provision which compels me to hold that a girl under the age of 16 lacks the legal capacity to consent to contraceptive advice, examination and treatment provided that she has sufficient understanding and intelligence to know what they involve. I can deal with the case law more conveniently in what follows.

2. The parents' rights and duties in respect of medical treatment of their child. "

The amended guidance expressly states that the doctor will proceed from the assumption that it would be "most unusual" to provide advice about contraception without parental consent. It also refers to certain cases where difficulties might arise if the doctor refused to promise that his advice would remain confidential and it concludes that the department realises that "in such exceptional cases" the decision whether or not to prescribe contraception must be for the clinical judgment of a doctor. Mrs.

Gillick's contention that the guidance adversely affects her rights and duties as a parent must, therefore, involve the assertion of an absolute right to be informed of and to veto such advice or treatment being given to her daughters even in the "most unusual" cases which might arise (subject, no doubt, to the qualifications applying to the case of court order or to abandonment of parents' duties).

It was, I think, accepted both by Mrs. Gillick and by the D.H.S.S., and in any event I hold, that parental rights to control a child do not exist for the benefit of the parent. They exist for the benefit of the child and they are justified only in so far as they enable the parent to perform his duties towards the child, and towards other children in the family. If necessary, this proposition can be supported by reference to Blackstone Commentaries, 17th ed. (1830), vol. 1, p. 452, where he wrote "The power of parents over their children is derived from . . . their duty." The proposition is also consistent with the provisions of the Guardianship of Minors Act 1971 section 1 as follows:

> "Where in any proceedings before any court . . . -
> (a) the custody or upbringing of a minor; or ... is in question, the court, in deciding that question, shall regard the welfare of the minor as the first and paramount consideration, and shall not take into consideration whether from any other point of view the claim of the father, or any right at common law possessed by the father, in respect of such custody, upbringing, administration or application is superior to that of the mother, or the claim of the mother is superior to that of the father."

From the parents' right and duty of custody flows their right and duty of control of the child, but the fact that custody is its origin throws but little light on the question of the legal extent of control at any particular age. Counsel for Mrs. Gillick placed some reliance on the Children Act 1975. Section 85(1) provides that in that Act the expression "the parental rights and duties" means "all the rights and duties which by law the mother and father have in relation to a legitimate child and his property," but the subsection does not define the extent of the rights and duties which by law the mother and father have. Section 86 of the Act provides:

> "In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, 'legal custody' means, as respects a child, so much of the parental rights and duties as relate to the person of the child (including the place and manner in which his time is spent)."

In the Court of Appeal Parker L.J. attached much importance to that section especially to the words in brackets. He considered that the right relating to the place and manner in which the child's time is spent included the right, as he put it, "completely to control the child" subject of course always to the intervention of the court. The learned Lord Justice went on thus at [1985] 2 W.L.R. 413, 423A:

"Indeed there must, it seems to me, be such a right from birth to a fixed age unless whenever, short of majority, a question arises it must be determined, in relation to a particular child and a particular matter, whether he or she is of sufficient understanding to make a responsible and reasonable decision. This alternative appears to me singularly unattractive and impracticable, particularly in the context of medical treatment."

My Lords, I have, with the utmost respect reached a different conclusion from that of the learned Lord Justice. It is, in my view, contrary to the ordinary experience of mankind, at least in Western Europe in the present century, to say that a child or a young person remains in fact under the complete control of his parents until he attains the definite age of majority, now 18 in the United Kingdom, and that on attaining that age he suddenly acquires independence. In practice most wise parents relax their control gradually as the child develops and encourage him or her to become increasingly independent. Moreover, the degree of parental control actually exercised over a particular child does in practice vary considerably according to his understanding and intelligence and it would, in my opinion, be unrealistic for the courts not to recognise these facts. Social customs change, and the law ought to, and does in fact, have regard to such changes when they are of major importance. An example of such recognition is to be found in the view recently expressed in your Lordships' House by my noble and learned friend Lord Brandon of Oakbrook, with which the other noble and learned Lords who were present agreed, in Reg. v. D [1984] 1 A.C. 778, 806 D. Dealing with the question of whether the consent of a child to being taken away by a stranger would be a good defence to a charge of kidnapping, my noble and learned friend said:

"In the case of a very young child, it would not have the understanding or the intelligence to give its consent, so that absence of consent would be a necessary inference from its age. In the case of an older child, however, it must, I think be a question of fact for a jury whether the child concerned has sufficient understanding and intelligence to give its consent; if, but only if, the jury considers that a child has these qualities, it must then go on to consider whether it has been proved that the child did not give its consent. While the matter will always be for the jury alone to decide, I should not expect a jury to find at all frequently that a child under 14 had sufficient understanding and intelligence to give its consent."

That expression of opinion seems to me entirely contradictory of the view expressed by Cockburn C.J. in Reg. v. Howes (1860) 1 E. & E. 332, 336-337:

"We repudiate utterly, as most dangerous, the notion that any intellectual precocity in an individual female child can hasten the period which appears to have been fixed by statute for the arrival at the age of discretion; for that very precocity, if uncontrolled, might very probably lead to her irreparable injury. The legislature has given us a guide, which we may safely follow, in pointing out 16 as the age up to which the father's right to custody of his female child is to continue; and short of which such a child has no discretion to consent to leaving him."

The question for decision in that case was different from that in the present, but the view that the child's intellectual ability is irrelevant cannot, in my opinion, now be accepted. It is a question of fact for the judge (or jury) to decide whether a particular child can give effective consent to contraceptive treatment.

In times gone by the father had almost absolute authority over his children until they attained majority. A rather remarkable example of such authority being upheld by the court was the case of In re Agar-Ellis (1883) 24 Ch.D. 317 which was much relied on by the Court of Appeal. The father in that case restricted the communication which his daughter aged 17 was allowed to have with her mother, against whose moral character nothing was alleged, to an extent that would be universally-condemned today as quite unreasonable. The case has been much criticised in recent years and, in my opinion, with good reason. In Hewer v. Bryant [1970] 1 Q.B. 357,369 Lord Denning M.R. said:

"I would get rid of the rule in In re Agar-Ellis and of the > suggested exceptions to it. That case was decided in the year 1883. It reflects the attitude of a Victorian parent towards his children. He expected unquestioning obedience to his commands. If a son disobeyed, his father would cut him off with a shilling. If a daughter had an illegitimate child, he would turn her out of the house. His power only ceased when the child became 21. I decline to accept a view so much out of date. The common law can, and should, keep pace with the times. It should declare, in conformity with the recent Report of the Committee on the Age of Majority [Cmnd. 3342, 1967], that the legal right of a parent to the custody of a child ends at the 18th birthday: and even up till then, it is a dwindling right which the courts will hesitate to enforce against the wishes of the child, and the more so the older he is. It starts with a right of control and ends with little more than advice."

I respectfully agree with every word of that and especially with the description of the father's authority as a dwindling right. In J. v. C. [1970] A.C. 668 Lord Guest and Lord MacDermott referred to the decision in Agar-Ellis as an example of the almost absolute power asserted by the father over his children before the Judicature Act 1873 and plainly thought such an assertion was out of place at the present time - see Lord MacDermott at pp. 703-704. In Reg. v. D. [1984] A.C. 778 Lord Brandon of Oakbrook cited Agar-Ellis as an example of the older view of a father's authority which his Lordship and the other members of the House rejected. In my opinion, the view of absolute paternal authority continuing until a child attains majority which was applied in Agar-Ellis is so out of line with present day views that it should no longer be treated as having any authority. I regard it as a historical curiosity. As Fox L.J. pointed out in the Court of Appeal [1985] 2 W.L.R. 413, 439D, the Agar-Ellis cases (1878) 10 Ch.D. 49; 24 Ch.D. 317 seemed to have been regarded as somewhat extreme even in their own day, as they were quickly followed by the Guardianship of Infants Act 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c.27) which, by section 5, provided that the court may:

> "upon the application of the mother of any infant [whether over 16 or not] make such order as it may think fit regarding the custody of such infant and the right of access thereto of either parent, having regard to the welfare of the infant, and to the conduct of the parents, . . ." (Emphasis added).

Once the rule of the parents' absolute authority over minor children is abandoned, the solution to the problem in this appeal can no longer be found by referring to rigid parental rights at any particular age. The solution depends upon a judgment of what is best for the welfare of the particular child. Nobody. doubts, certainly I do not doubt, that in the overwhelming majority of cases the best judges of a child's welfare are his or her parents. Nor do I doubt that any important medical treatment of a child under 16 would normally only be carried out with the parents' approval. That is why it would and should be "most unusual" for a doctor to advise a child without the knowledge and consent of the parents on contraceptive matters. But, as I have already pointed out, Mrs. Gillick has to go further if she is to obtain the first declaration that she seeks. She has to justify the absolute right of veto in a parent. But there may be circumstances in which a doctor is a better judge of the medical advice and treatment which will conduce to a girl's welfare than her parents. It is notorious that children of both sexes are often reluctant to confide in their parents about sexual matters, and the D.H.S.S. guidance under consideration shows that to abandon the principle of confidentiality for contraceptive advice to girls under 16 might cause some of them not to seek professional advice at all, with the consequence of exposing them to "the immediate risks of pregnancy and of sexually-transmitted diseases." No doubt the risk could be avoided if the patient were to abstain from sexual intercourse, and one of the doctor's responsibilities will be to decide whether a particular patient can reasonably be expected to act upon advice to abstain. We were told that in a significant number of cases such abstinence could not reasonably be expected. An example is the case of In re P (A Minor) (1981) 80 L.G.R. 301 in which Butler-Sloss J. ordered that a girl aged 15 who had been pregnant for the second time and who was in the care of a local authority should be fitted with a contraceptive appliance because, as the learned judge is reported to have said at p. 312:

> "I assume that it is impossible for this local authority to monitor her sexual activities, and, therefore, contraception appears to be the only alternative."

There may well be other cases where the doctor feels that because the girl is under the influence of her sexual partner or for some other reason there is no- realistic prospect of her abstaining from intercourse. If that is right it points strongly to the desirability of the doctor being entitled in some cases, in the girl's best interest, to give her contraceptive advice and treatment if necessary without the consent or even the knowledge of her parents. The only practicable course is, in my opinion, to entrust the doctor with a discretion to act in accordance with his view of what is best in the interests of the girl who is his patient. He should, of course, always seek to persuade her to tell her parents that she is seeking contraceptive advice, and the nature of the advice that she receives. At least he should seek to persuade her to agree to the doctor's informing the parents. But there may well be cases, and I think there will be some cases, where the girl refuses either to tell the parents herself or to permit the doctor to do so and in such cases, the doctor will, in my opinion, be justified in proceeding without the parents' consent or even knowledge provided he is satisfied on the following matters:

1. that the girl (although under 16 years of age) will understand his advice;

2. that he cannot persuade her to inform her parents or to allow him to inform the parents that she is seeking contraceptive advice;

3. that she is very likely to begin or to continue having sexual intercourse with or without contraceptive treatment;

(4) that unless she receives contraceptive advice or treatment her physical or mental health or both are likely to suffer;

(5) that her best interests require him to give her contraceptive advice, treatment or both without the parental consent.

That result ought not to be regarded as a licence for doctors to disregard the wishes of parents on this matter whenever they find it convenient to do so. Any doctor who behaves in such a way would, in my opinion, be failing to discharge his professional responsibilities, and I would expect him to be disciplined by his own professional body accordingly. The medical profession have in modern times come to be entrusted with very wide discretionary powers going beyond the strict limits of clinical judgment and, in my opinion, there is nothing strange about entrusting them with this further responsibility which they alone are in a position to discharge satisfactorily.

3. Is a doctor who gives contraceptive advice or treatment to a girl under 16 without her parents' consent likely to incur criminal liability?

The submission was made to Woolf J. on behalf of Mrs. Gillick that a doctor who provided contraceptive advice and treatment to a girl under 16 without her parents' authority would be committing an offence under section 28 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 by aiding and abetting the commission of unlawful sexual intercourse. When the case reached the Court of Appeal counsel on both sides conceded that whether a doctor who followed the guidelines would be committing an offence or not would depend on the circumstances. It would depend upon the doctor's intentions; this appeal is concerned with doctors who honestly intend to act in the best interests of the girl, and I think it is unlikely that a doctor who gives contraceptive advice or treatment with that intention would commit an offence under section 28. It must be remembered that a girl under 16 who has sexual intercourse does not thereby commit an offence herself, although her partner does - see the Sexual Offences Act 1956 sections 5 and 6. In any event, even if the doctor would be committing an offence, the fact that he had acted with the parents' consent would not exculpate him as Woolf 3. pointed out [1984] Q.B. 581, 595G. Accordingly, I regard this contention as irrelevant to the question that we have to answer in this appeal. Parker L.J. in the Court of Appeal dealt at some length with the provisions of criminal law intended to protect girls under the age of 16 from being seduced, and perhaps also to protect them from their own weakness. The learned Lord Justice at [1985] 2 W.L.R. 413, 435B expressed his conclusion on this part of the case as follows:

> "It appears to me that it is wholly incongruous, when the act of intercourse is criminal, when permitting it to take place on one's premises is criminal and when, if the girl were under 13, failing to report an act of intercourse to the police would up to 1967 have been criminal, that either the . department [or] the area health authority should provide facilities which would enable girls under 16 the more readily to commit such acts. It seems to me equally incongruous to assert that doctors have the right to accept the young, down, apparently to any age, as patients, and to provide them with contraceptive advice and treatment without reference to their parents and even against their known wishes."

My Lords, the first of those two sentences is directed to the question, which is not in issue in this appeal, of whether contraceptive facilities should be available at ail under the National Health Service for girls under 16. I have already explained my reasons for thinking that the legislation does not limit the duty of providing such facilities to women of 16 or more. The second sentence, which does bear directly on the question in the appeal, does not appear to me to follow necessarily from the first and with respect I cannot agree with it. If the doctor complies with the first of the conditions which I have specified, that is to say if he satisfies himself that the girl can understand his advice there will be no question of his giving contraceptive advice to very young girls.

For those reasons I do not consider that the guidance interferes with the parents' rights.

The Second Declaration

The second declaration is directed only against the area health authority. Its practical importance would be minimal because doctors are not "employed" by the area health authority in the family planning service and, if they were, the declaration could easily be avoided by the girl going to a doctor in a different area. The Court of Appeal made the declaration sought, and the authority has not appealed against its decision. I am, therefore, of opinion that we should not reverse the decision of the Court of Appeal on this part of the case. But it is clearly inconsistent with the views I have expressed on the first declaration, and I agree with Lord Scarman that it should be overruled.

I would allow the appeal against the first declaration granted by the Court of Appeal, and I would overrule the second declaration as being erroneous.

LORD SCARMAN

My Lords,

I have had the advantage of reading in draft the speech delivered by my noble and learned friend, Lord Fraser of Tullybelton. Agreeing with it, I shall endeavour in delivering my opinion to avoid repetition. The importance of the case is, however, such that I believe it necessary, even at the cost of some repetition, to deliver my opinion in my own words. The case is the beginning, not the conclusion, of a legal development in a field glimpsed by one or two judges in recent times (notably Butler-Sloss 3. In re P (A Minor) (1981) 80 L.G.R. 301) but not yet fully explored. Mrs. Gillick, even though she may lose the appeal, has performed a notable public service in directing judicial attention to the problems arising from the interaction of parental right and a doctor's duty in a field of medicine unknown to our fathers but of immense consequence to our society. The contraceptive pill has introduced a new independence, and offers new options, for women: but has it in the process undermined parental right and duty? In my judgment, the answer is "no", even though parental right may not be as extensive or as long lasting as she believes it to be.

Victoria Gillick, mother of five daughters under the age of 16, challenges the lawfulness of a memorandum of guidance issued by the Department of Health and Social Security which she says encourages and in certain circumstances recommends health authorities, doctors, and others concerned in operating the department's family planning services to provide contraceptive advice and treatment to girls under the age of 16 without the knowledge or consent of a parent. Mrs. Gillick is a wife and mother living in a united family with her husband and their children. The husband supports the action being taken, as they both see it, to protect their daughters. No further need be said of their family situation in deciding this appeal.

Mrs. Gillick began her proceedings by the issue of a writ against two defendants, the health authority for the area in which she lives and the department. She claims in an ordinary civil action declaratory relief against both defendants that the guidance is unlawful, and against the area health authority alone a declaration that no doctor or other person in its employ may give contraception or abortion advice to Mrs. Gillick's children under the age of 16 without her prior knowledge and consent. The area health authority has taken no part in the litigation, but the department has fought the case strenuously. The appeal to the House is that of the department: the health authority has not appealed and is not represented.

The written case submitted on Mrs. Gillick's behalf to the House formulates three propositions of law, any one of which, if made good, would suffice to entitle her to relief. They are as follows:

> "(i) parental rights should be protected from any invasion or interference neither authorised by a competent court nor expressly authorised by statute: [the parental rights case]

> "(ii) the provision of contraceptive treatment to girls under the age of 16 either constitutes criminal conduct in itself or is so closely analogous thereto as to be contrary to public policy: [the criminal law case]

> "(iii) a girl below the age of 16 is not capable in law of giving a valid consent to medical treatment and in the particular context of this case to contraceptive or abortion treatment." [the age of consent point].

Before, however, considering these propositions, it is necessary to clear out of the way certain procedural questions, which, though not urged upon our attention, do call for a brief consideration.

Procedure

Three procedural questions have emerged in the course of the litigation. First, Mr. Simon Brown, who before his elevation to the bench had the conduct of the case as counsel for the department, raised at the trial the question as to the propriety of the civil court granting a declaration in a case which involved the criminal law. The judge saw no reason why he should be inhibited on this ground from dealing with the issues in the action; and I agree with him. It was not contended that the issue of the guidance was itself a crime: the case against the department was simply that the guidance, if followed, would result in unlawful acts and that the department by issuing it was exercising a statutory discretion in a wholly unreasonable way; i.e. the classical "Wednesbury" case for judicial review: Associated Provincial Picture Houses Ltd, v. Wednesbury Corporation [1948] 1 K.B. 223.

The second question is as to the propriety of proceeding in this case by ordinary civil action. Should not Mrs. Gillick have proceeded by way of judicial review under R.S.C. Ord. 53? No point was taken at trial or in the Court of Appeal against Mrs. Gillick that she should have proceeded not by issuing a writ, but by applying for judicial review. Woolf J. did, however, mention the matter only to hold that there was a relevant precedent for proceeding by writ in this House's decision in Royal College of Nursing of the United Kingdom v. Department of Health and Social Security [1981] A.C. 800. "

The point having been brought to the attention of the House I think it desirable to consider it if only because of the later decision of the House in O'Reilly v. Mackman [1983] 2 A.C. 237, where Lord Diplock, with whose opinion their other Lordships agreed, laid down a rule in these terms at p. 285D:

> "Now that those disadvantages [i.e. those previously associated with prerogative order procedure] to applicants have been removed and all remedies for infringements of rights protected by public law can be obtained upon an application for judicial review, as can also remedies for infringements of rights under private law if such infringements should also be involved, it would in my view as a general rule [emphasis supplied] be contrary to public policy, and as such an abuse of the process of the court, to > permit a person seeking to establish that a decision of a public authority infringed rights to which he was entitled to protection under public law to proceed by way of an ordinary action and by this means to evade the provisions of Order 53 for the protection of such authorities."

If there be in the present case an abuse of the process of the court, the House cannot overlook it, even if the parties are prepared to do so, and even though the writ in this case was issued before the decision of the House in O'Reilly's case [1983] 2 A.C. 237.

Mrs. Gillick's action is essentially to protect what she alleges to be her rights as a parent under private law. Although she is proceeding against two public authorities and invokes the criminal law and public policy in support of her case, she claims as a parent whose right of custody and guardianship in respect of her children under the age of 16 is (she says) threatened by the guidance given by the department to area health authorities, doctors, and others concerned in the provision by the department of a family health service. This is a very different case from O'Reilly [1983] 2 A.C. 237 where it could not be contended that there was any infringement or threat of infringment of any right derived from private law. For the appellants in O'Reilly's case were convicted prisoners faced with forfeiture of remission, and they were held to have not a right to remission of their prison sentences but merely "a legitimate expectation" which could, if the necessary facts were established, entitle them "to a remedy in public law." They had, therefore, no private right in the matter, and could rely only on the "public law" doctrine of legitimate expectation.

It is unnecessary to embark upon an analysis of the newly fledged distinction in English law between public and private law, for I do not see Mrs. Gillick's claim as falling under the embargo imposed by O'Reilly's case [1983] 2 A.C. 237. If I should be wrong in this view, I would nevertheless think that the private law content of her claim was so great as to make her case an exception to the general rule. Lord Diplock at p. 285F recognised that the general rule which he was laying down admitted of exceptions including cases:

> "where the invalidity of [the public authority's] decision arises as a collateral issue in a claim for infringement of a right of the plaintiff arising under private law, or where none of the parties objects to the adoption of the procedure by writ or originating summons."

Both these exceptions can be said to apply in the present case. Like Lord Diplock, I think that procedural problems in the field of public law must be left to be decided on a case to case basis. Mrs. Gillick was, in my opinion, fully entitled to proceed by ordinary action, even though she could also have proceeded by way of judicial review.

The third and final procedural question is a mere technicality: as such, it creates - no lawyer would be surprised - more trouble than the other two. If the House should allow the department's appeal against the guidance declaration what is to be done about the other declaration granted exclusively against the area health authority? As a matter of common sense, if Mrs.

Gillick fails to establish that the department's guidance is unlawful she cannot upon the evidence in this case establish her entitlement to the other declaration against the health authority. The Court of Appeal treated the second declaration as consequential upon the guidance declaration, which upon the evidence they were plainly, right to do. But there is a difficulty in allowing an appeal where there is no appellant and no appeal. Fortunately in this case there is no issue between the parties as to costs. If the department succeeds, it does not ask for costs against Mrs. Gillick here or below: and the area health authority has incurred no costs. Two courses are open to the House: one would be to ignore the technicalities, allow the appeal (if that be the view of the House), and set aside both declarations: the other, which is strictly correct, would be to allow the department's appeal and to declare that the reasoning was also applicable to the Court of Appeal's decision in favour of the health authority which must, therefore, be held to be overruled. If the second course should be taken, the only order to be made by the House would be to allow the department's appeal and set aside the "guidance" declaration. I favour the second course.

The Department's Guidance

In 1974 the department assumed statutory responsibility for the provision of family planning services on a national basis. This involved a reorganisation which included a transfer of services from the agencies previously concerned to area health authorities. In the course of the reorganisation which took some two years to complete the department issued guidance as to the duties and responsibilities of doctors and others concerned with the provision of such services. It was empowered so to do by its assumption, pursuant to statute, of responsibility for the provision of such services. In May 1974 the department circulated a memorandum of guidance HN(80)46: it included a section (section G.) as to the provision of services to young people. The text of section G. aroused some public concern, and in December 1980 a revised section G. was issued to replace the earlier text. It is this revision which lies at the heart of the case, being the subject of Mrs. Gillick's challenge. I set it out in full:

"REVISED SECTION G - THE YOUNG

"Clinic sessions should be available for people of all ages, but it may be helpful to make separate, less formal arrangements for young people. The staff should be experienced in dealing with young people and their problems.

"There is widespread concern about counselling and treatment for children under 16. Special care is needed not to undermine parental responsibility and family stability. The Department would therefore hope that in any case where a doctor or other professional worker is approached by a person under the age of 16 for advice in these matters, the doctor, or other professional, will always seek to persuade the child to involve the parent or guardian (or other person in loco parentis) at the earliest stage of consultation, and will proceed from the assumption that it would be most unusual to provide advice about contraception without parental consent.

'It is, however, widely accepted that consultations between doctors and patients are confidential; and the Department recognises the importance which doctors and patients attach to this principle. It is a principle which applies also to the other professions concerned. To abandon this principle for children under 16 might cause some not to seek professional advice at all. They could then be exposed to the immediate risks of pregnancy and of sexually-transmitted diseases, as well as other long-term physical, psychological and emotional consequences which are equally a threat to stable family life. This would apply particularly to young people whose parents are, for example, unconcerned, entirely unresponsive, or grossly disturbed. Some of these young people are away from their parents and in the care of local authorities or voluntary organisations standing in loco parentis.

'The Department realises that in such exceptional cases the nature of any counselling must be a matter for the doctor or other professional worker concerned and that the decision whether or not to prescribe contraception must be for the clinical judgment of a doctor."

The first question in the appeal is simply: what is the true meaning of this text? Does it, or does it not, permit doctors concerned in the provision of a statutory service to prescribe contraceptive treatment for a girl under 16 without the knowledge and consent of her parents? And, if it does, in what circumstances?

There can be no doubt that it does permit doctors to prescribe in certain circumstances contraception for girls under 16 without the knowledge and consent of a parent or guardian. (In this opinion I shall use the term "parent" to include "guardian"). The text is not, however, clear as to the circumstances (variously described as "unusual" and "exceptional") which justify a doctor in so doing. The House must be careful not to construe the guidance as though it was a statute or even to analyse it in the way appropriate to a judgment. The question to be asked is: what would a doctor understand to be the guidance offered to him, if he should be faced with a girl under 16 seeking contraceptive treatment without the knowledge or consent of her parents?

He would know that it was his duty to seek to persuade the girl to let him bring into consultation her parents (or one of them). If she refused, he (or the counsellor to whom the girl had gone) must ask himself whether the case was one of those exceptional cases in which the guidance permitted a doctor to prescribe contraception without the knowledge or consent of a parent (provided always that in the exercise of his clinical judgment he thought this course to be in the true interest of his patient). In my judgment the guidance clearly implies that in exceptional cases the parental right to make decisions as to the care of their children, which derives from their right of custody, can lawfully be overridden, and that in such cases the doctor may without parental consultation or consent prescribe contraceptive treatment in the exercise of his clinical judgment. And the guidance reminds the doctor that in such cases he owes the duty of confidentiality to his patient, by which is meant that the doctor would be in breach of his duty to her if he did communicate with her parents.

The guidance leaves two areas of the doctor's responsibility in some obscurity. Though it provides illustrations of exceptional cases, it offers no definition. And it gives no clue as to what is meant by "clinical judgment" other than that it must at least include the professional judgment of a doctor as to what is the medically appropriate advice or treatment to be offered to his patient. .

This lack of definition does not, in my judgment, assist Mrs. Gillick. If, contrary to her submission, the law recognises that exceptional cases can arise in which it is lawful for a doctor to prescribe contraceptive treatment for a girl under 16 without the knowledge and consent of a parent, the guidance would be within the law notwithstanding its lack of precision, unless its vagueness created so obscure a darkness that it could reasonably be understood by a doctor as authorising him to prescribe without the parent's consent whenever he should think fit.

I do not find upon a fair reading of the guidance anything to obscure or confuse its basic message that a doctor is only in exceptional circumstances to prescribe contraception for a young person under the age of 16 without the knowledge and consent of a parent. No reasonable person could read it as meaning that the doctor's discretion could ordinarily override parental right. Illustrations are given in the text of exceptional cases in which the doctor may take the "most unusual" course of not consulting the parent. Only in exceptional cases does the guidance contemplate him exercising his clinical judgment without the parent's knowledge and consent. Lastly, there really can be no compulsion in law upon a government department to spell out to a doctor what is meant by "clinical judgment."

The Question in the Appeal

It is only if the guidance permits or encourages unlawful conduct in the provision of contraceptive services that it can be set aside as being the exercise of a statutory discretionary power in an unreasonable way.

The question, therefore, for the House is - can a doctor in any circumstances lawfully prescribe contraception for a girl under 16 without the knowledge and consent of a parent?

Before discussing the question, I put out of the way the two exceptions which I understand both parties to the appeal accept? namely the order of a competent court, and emergency. Nobody disputes the existence of the court exception, nor does the other situation call for more than a brief mention.

If, as is clear in the light of section 5 of the National Health Service Act 1977 (re-enacting earlier legislation) and section 41 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978, contraceptive medical treatment is recognised as a legitimate and beneficial treatment in cases in which it is medically indicated, it must be an available option for the doctor in an emergency where treatment is urgently needed and the consent of the patient or his parent cannot be obtained either in time or at all. And the case of a teenage girl abandoned by her parents and not yet received into the care of a local authority or placed under the protection of a responsible adult in loco parentis can be seen to be a true emergency. Both Mrs. Gillick, as I understand her case, and the department accept these exceptions to the general rule that a parent must be consulted and give consent and I say no more than that it would be unthinkable for the law not to recognise them.

Parental Right and the Age of Consent

Mrs. Gillick relies on both the statute law and the case law to establish her proposition that parental consent is in all other circumstances necessary. The only statutory provision directly in point is section 8 of the Family Law Reform Act 1969. Subsection (1) of the section provides that the consent of a minor who has attained the age of 16 to any surgical, mental, or dental treatment which in the absence of consent would constitute a trespass to his person shall be as effective as if he were of full age and that the consent of his parent or guardian need not be obtained. Subsection (3) of the section provides that:

> "Nothing in this section shall be construed as making ineffective any consent which would have been effective if this section had not been enacted."

I cannot accept the submission made on Mrs. Gillick's behalf that subsection (1) necessarily implies that prior to its enactment the consent of a minor to medical treatment could not be effective in law. Subsection (3) leaves open the question whether the consent of a minor under 16 could be an effective consent. Like my noble and learned friend, Lord Fraser of Tullybelton, I read the section as clarifying the law without conveying any indication as to what the law was before it was enacted. So far as minors under 16 are concerned, the law today is as it was before the enactment of the section.

Nor do I find in the provisions of the statute law to which Parker L.J. refers in his judgment in the Court of Appeal [1985] 2 W.L.R. 413 any encouragement, let alone any compelling reason, for holding that Parliament has accepted that a child under 16 cannot consent to medical treatment. I respectfully agree with the reasoning and conclusion of my noble and learned friend, Lord Fraser of Tullybelton, on this point.

The law has, therefore, to be found by a search in the judge-made law for the true principle. The legal difficulty is that in our search we find ourselves in a field of medical practice where parental right and a doctor's duty may point us in different directions. This is not surprising. Three features have emerged in today's society which were not known to our predecessors:- (1) contraception as a subject for medical advice and treatment; (2) the increasing independence of young people; and (3) the changed status of women. In times past contraception was rarely a matter for the doctor: but with the development of the contraceptive pill for women it has become part and parcel of every-day medical practice, as is made clear by the Department's Handbook of Contraceptive Practice (1984 revision), particularly para. 1.2. Family planning services are now available under statutory powers to all without any express limitation as to age or marital status. Young people, once they have attained the age of 16, are capable of consenting to contraceptive treatment, since it is medical treatment: and, however extensive be parental right in the care and upbringing of children, it cannot prevail so as to nullify the 16-year's old capacity to consent which is now conferred by statute. Furthermore, women have obtained by the availability of the pill a choice of life-style with a degree of independence and of opportunity undreamed of until this generation and greater, I would add, than any law of equal opportunity could by itself effect.

The law ignores these developments at its peril. The House's task, therefore, as the supreme court in a legal system largely based on rules of law evolved over the years by the judicial process is to search the overfull and cluttered shelves of the law reports for a principle, or set of principles recognised by the judges over the years but stripped of the detail which, however appropriate in their day, would, if applied today, lay the judges open to a justified criticism for failing to keep the law abreast of the society in which they live and work.

It is, of course, a judicial common place to proclaim the adaptability and flexibility of the judge-made common law. But this is more frequently proclaimed than acted upon. The mark of the great judge from Coke through Mansfield to our day has been the capacity and the will to search out principle, to discard the detail appropriate (perhaps) to earlier times, and to apply principle in such a way as to satisfy the needs of their own time. If judge-made law is to survive as a living and relevant body of law, we must make the effort, however inadequately, to follow the lead of the great masters of the judicial art,

In this appeal, therefore, there is much in the earlier case law which the House must discard - almost everything I would say but its principle. For example, the horrendous Agar-Ellis decisions 10 Ch.D. 49; 24 Ch.D. 317 of the late 19th century asserting the power of the father over his child were rightly remaindered to the history books by the Court of Appeal in Hewer v. Bryant [1970] 1 Q.B. 357, an important case to which I shall return later. Yet the decisions of earlier generations may well afford clues to the true principle of the law: e.g. Reg. v. Howes (1860) 3 E. & E. 332, 336, which I also later quote. It is the duty of this House to look at, through, and past the decisions of earlier generations so that it may identify the principle which lies behind them. Even Lord Eldon, (no legal revolutionary), once remarked, when invited to study precedent, (the strength of which he never under-rated):

> "All law ought to stand upon principle; and unless decision has removed out of the way all argument and all principle, so as to make it impossible to apply them to the case before you, you must find out what is the principle upon which it must be decided." 1 Bligh 486 quoted by Lord Campbell, Lives of the Lord Chancellors, 4th ed. (1857), vol. 10, chap. 213, p. 244.

Approaching the earlier law in this way, one finds plenty of indications as to the principles governing the law's approach to parental right and the child's right to make his or her own decision. Parental rights clearly do exist, and they do not wholly disappear until the age of majority. Parental rights relate to both the person and the property of the child - custody, care, and control of the person and guardianship of the property of the child. But the common law has never treated such rights as sovereign or beyond review and control. Nor has our law ever treated the child as other than a person with capacities and rights recognised by law. The principle of the law, as I shall endeavour to show, is that parental rights are derived from parental duty and exist only so long as they are needed for the protection of the person and property of the child. The principle has been subjected to certain age limits set by statute for certain purposes: and in some cases the courts have declared an age of discretion at which a child acquires before the age of majority the right to make his (or her) own decision. But these limitations in no way undermine the principle of the law, and should not be allowed to obscure it.

Let me make good, quite shortly, the proposition of principle.

First, the guardianship legislation. Section 5 of the Guardianship of Infants Act 1886 began the process which is now complete of establishing the equal rights of mother and father. In doing so the legislation, which is currently embodied in section 1 of the Guardianship of Minors Act 1971, took over from the Chancery courts a rule which they had long followed (it was certainly applied by Lord Eldon, during his quarter of a century as Lord Chancellor, as Parker L.3. in this case, quoting Heilbron 3. at [1985] 2 W.L.R. 413, 424, reminds us) that when a court has before it a question as to the care and upbringing of a child it must treat the welfare of the child as the paramount consideration in determining the order to be made. There is here a principle which limits and governs the exercise of parental rights of custody, care, and control. It is a principle perfectly consistent with the law's recognition of the parent as the natural guardian of the child; but it is also a warning that parental right must be exercised in accordance with the welfare principle and can be challenged, even overridden, if it be not.

Secondly, there is the common law's understanding of the nature of parental right. We are not concerned in this appeal to catalogue all that is contained in what Sachs L.J. has felicitously described as the "bundle of rights" (Hewer v. Bryant, [1970] Q.B. 357, 373) which together constitute the rights of custody, care, and control. It is abundantly plain that the law recognises that there is a right and a duty of parents to determine whether or not to seek medical advice in respect of their child, and, having received advice, to give or withhold consent to medical treatment. The question in the appeal is as to the extent, and duration of the right and the circumstances in which outside the two admitted exceptions to which I have earlier referred it can be overridden by the exercise of medical judgment.

As Parker and Fox L.JJ. noted in the Court of Appeal, the modern statute law recognises the existence of parental right: e.g. sections 85 and 86 Children Act 1975 and sections 2. 3, and 4

Child Care Act 1980. It is derived from parental duty. A most illuminating discussion of parental right is to be found in Blackstone's Commentaries, 17th ed. (1830), vol. 1 chapters 16 and 17. He analyses the duty of the parent as the "maintenance . . . protection, and . . . education" of the child: p. 446. He declares that the power of parents over their children is derived from their duty and exists "to enable the parent more effectually to perform his duty, and partly as a recompense for his care and trouble in the faithful discharge of it:" op.cit. p. 452. In chapter 17 he discusses the relation of guardian and ward. It is, he points out, a relation "derived out of [the relation of parent and child]: the guardian being only a temporary parent, that is, for so long a time as the ward is an infant, or under age": op.cit. chap. 17, p. 460. A little later in the same chapter he again emphasises that the power and reciprocal duty of a guardian and ward are the same, pro tempore, as that of a father and child and adds that the guardian, when the ward comes of age, (as also the father who becomes guardian "at common law" if an estate be left to his child) must account to the child for all that he has transacted on his behalf: pp. 462-463. He then embarks upon a discussion of the different ages at which for different purposes a child comes of sufficient age to make his own decision; and he cites examples, viz. a boy might at 12 years old take the oath of allegiance; at 14 he might consent to marriage or choose his guardian "and, if his discretion be actually proved, may make his testament of his personal estate;" at 17 he could be an executor - all these rights and responsibilities being capable of his acquiring before reaching the age of majority at 21: op.cit. p. 463.

The two chapters provide a valuable insight into the principle and flexibility of the common law. The principle is that parental right or power of control of the person and property of his child exists primarily to enable the parent to discharge his duty of maintenance, protection, and education until he reaches such an age as to be able to look after himself and make his own decisions. Blackstone does suggest that there was a further justification for parental right, viz. as a recompense for the faithful discharge of parental duty: but the right of the father to the exclusion of the mother and the reward element as one of the reasons for the existence of the right have been swept away by the Guardianship of Minors legislation to which I have already referred. He also accepts that by statute and by case law varying ages of discretion have been fixed for various purposes. But it is clear that this was done to achieve certainty where it was considered necessary and in no way limits the principle that parental right endures only so long as it is needed for the protection of the child.

Although statute has intervened in respect of a child's capacity to consent to medical treatment from the age of 16 onwards, neither statute nor the case law has ruled on the extent and duration of parental right in respect of children under the age of 16. More specifically, there is no rule yet applied to contraceptive treatment, which has special problems of its own and is a late-comer in medical practice. It is open, therefore, to the House to formulate a rule. The Court of Appeal favoured a fixed age limit of 16, basing themselves on a view of the statute law which I do not share and upon their view of the effect of the older case law which for the reasons already given I cannot accept. They sought to justify the limit by the public interest in the law being certain. Certainty is always an advantage in the law, and in some branches of the law it is a necessity. But it brings with it an inflexibility and a rigidity which in some branches of the law can obstruct justice, impede the law's development, and stamp upon the law the mark of obsolescence where what is needed is the capacity for development. The law relating to parent and child is concerned with the problems of the growth and maturity of the human personality. If the law should impose upon the process of "growing up" fixed limits where nature knows only a continuous process, the price would be artificiality and a lack of realism in an area where the law must be sensitive to human development and social change. If certainty be thought desirable, it is better that the rigid demarcations necessary to achieve it should be laid down by legislation after a full consideration of all the relevant factors than by the courts confined as they are by the forensic process to the evidence adduced by the parties and to whatever may properly fall within the judicial notice of judges. Unless and until Parliament should think fit to intervene, the courts should establish a principle flexible enough to enable justice to be achieved by its application to the particular circumstances proved by the evidence placed before them.

The underlying principle of the law was exposed by Blackstone and can be seen to have been acknowledged in the case law. It is that parental right yields to the child's right to make his own decisions when he reaches a sufficient understanding and intelligence to be capable of making up his own mind on the matter requiring decision. Lord Denning M.R. captured the spirit and principle of the law when he said in Hewer v. Bryant [1970] 1 Q.B. 357, 369:

"I would get rid of the rule in In re Agar-Ellis, 24 Ch.D.

317 and of the suggested exceptions to it. That case was decided in the year 1883. It reflects the attitude of a Victorian parent towards his children. He expected unquestioning obedience to his commands. If a son disobeyed, his father would cut him off with a shilling. If a daughter had an illegitimate child, he would turn her out of the house. His power only ceased when the child became 21. I decline to accept a view so much out of date. The common law can, and should, keep pace with the times. It should declare, in conformity with the recent Report of the Committee on the Age of Majority [Cmnd. 3342, 1967], that the legal right of a parent to the custody of a child ends at the 18th birthday: and even up till then, it is a dwindling right which the courts will hesitate to enforce against the wishes of the child, and the more so the older he is. It starts with a right of control and ends with little more than advice."

But his is by no means a solitary voice. It is consistent with the opinion expressed by the House in J. v. C. [1970] A.C. 668 where their Lordships clearly recognised as out of place the assertion in the Agar-Ellis cases 10 Ch.D. 49; 24 Ch.D. 317 of a father's power bordering on "patria potestas." It is consistent with the view of Lord Parker C.J. in Reg. v. Howard [1966] 1 W.L.R. 13, 14 where he ruled that in the case of a prosecution charging rape of a girl under 16 the Crown must prove either lack of her consent or that she was not in a position to decide whether to consent or resist and added the comment that "there are many girls who know full well what it is all about and can properly consent." And it is consistent with the views of the House in the recent criminal case where a father was accused of kidnapping his own child, Reg. v. D. [1984] A.C. 778, a case to which I shall return.

For the reasons which I have endeavoured to develop the case law of the 19th and earlier centuries is no guide to the application of the law in the conditions of today. The Agar-Ellis cases 10 Ch.D. 49; 24 Ch.D. 317 (the power of the father) cannot live with the modern statute law. The habeas corpus "age of discretion" cases are also no guide as to the limits which should be accepted today in marking out the bounds of parental right, of a child's capacity to make his or her own decision, and of a doctor's duty to his patient. Nevertheless the "age of discretion" cases are helpful in that they do reveal the judges as accepting that a minor can in law achieve an age of discretion before coming of full age. The "age of discretion" cases are cases in which a parent or guardian (usually the father) has applied for habeas corpus to secure the return of his child who has left home without his consent. The courts would refuse an order if the child had attained the age of discretion, which came to be regarded as 14 for boys and 16 for girls, and did not wish to return. The principle underlying them was plainly that an order would be refused if the child had sufficient intelligence and understanding to make up his own mind. A passage from the judgment of Cockburn C.J. in Reg. v. Howes (1860) 3 E. & E. 332, which Parker L.J. quoted in the Court of Appeal, illustrates their reasoning and shows how a fixed age was used as a working rule to establish an age at which the requisite "discretion" could be held to be achieved by the child. The Chief Justice said at pp. 336-337:

> "Now the cases which have been decided on this subject shew that, although a father is entitled to the custody of his children till they attain the age of 21, this court will not grant a habeas corpus to hand a child which is below that age over to its father, provided that it has attained an age of sufficient discretion to enable it to exercise a wise choice for its own interests. The whole question is, what is that age of discretion? We repudiate utterly, as most dangerous, the notion that any intellectual precocity in an individual female child can hasten the period which appears to have been fixed by statute for the arrival of the age of discretion; for that very precocity, if uncontrolled, might very probably lead to her irreparable injury. The legislature has given us a guide, which we may safely follow, in pointing out 16 as the age up to which the father's right to the custody of his female child is to continue; and short of which such a child has no discretion to consent to leaving him"

The principle is clear: and a fixed age of discretion was accepted by the courts by analogy from the Abduction Acts (the first being the Act of 1557 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c.8). While it is unrealistic today to treat a 16th century Act as a safe guide in the matter of a girl's discretion, and while no modern judge would dismiss the intelligence of a teenage girl as "intellectual precocity," we can agree with Cockburn C.J. as to the principle of the law - the attainment by a child of an age of sufficient discretion to enable him or her to exercise a wise choice in his or her own interests.

The modern law governing parental right and a child's capacity to make his own decisions was considered in Reg. v. D; [1984] A.C. 778. The House must, in my view, be understood as having in that case accepted that, save where statute otherwise provides, a minor's capacity to make his or her own decision depends upon the minor having sufficient understanding and intelligence to make the decision and is not to be determined by reference to any judicially fixed age limit. The House was faced with a submission that a father, even if he had taken his child away by force or fraud, could not be guilty of a criminal offence of any kind. Lord Brandon of Oakbrook, with whom their other Lordships agreed, commented at pp. 804-805 that this might well have been the view of the legislature and the courts in the 19th century, but had this to say about parental right and a child's capacity in our time to give or withhold a valid consent:

> "This is because in those times both the generally accepted conventions of society, and the courts by which such conventions were buttressed and enforced, regarded a father as having absolute and paramount authority, as against all the world, over any children of his who were still under the age of majority (then 21), except for a married daughter. The nature of this view of a father's rights appears clearly from various reported cases, including, as a typical example, In re Agar-Ellis (1883) 24 Ch.D. 317. The common law, however, while generally immutable in its principles, unless different principles are laid down by statute, is not immutable in the way in which it adapts, develops and applies those principles in a radically changing world and against the background of radically changed social conventions and conditions."

and later, at p. 806 -

> "I see no good reason why, in relation to the kidnapping of a child, it should not in all cases be the absence of the child's consent which is material, whatever its age may be. In the case of a very young child, it would not have the understanding or the intelligence to give its consent, so that absence of consent would be a necessary inference from its age. In the case of an older child, however, it must, I think be a question of fact for a jury whether the child concerned has sufficient understanding and intelligence to give its consent; if, but only if, the jury considers that a child has these qualities, it must then go on to consider whether it has been proved that the child did not give its consent. While the matter will always be for the jury alone to decide, I should not expect a jury to find at all frequently that a child under 14 had sufficient understanding and intelligence to give its consent."

In the light of the foregoing I would hold that as a matter of law the parental right to determine whether or not their minor child below the age of 16 will have medical treatment terminates if and when the child achieves a sufficient understanding and intelligence to enable him or her to understand fully what is proposed. It will be a question of fact whether a child seeking advice has sufficient understanding of what is involved to give a consent valid in law. Until the child achieves the capacity to consent, the parental right to make the decision continues save only in exceptional circumstances. Emergency, parental neglect, abandonment of the child, or inability to find the parent are examples of exceptional situations justifying the 'doctor proceeding to treat the child without parental knowledge and consent: but there will arise, no doubt, other exceptional situations in which it will be reasonable for the doctor to proceed without the parent's consent.

When applying these conclusions to contraceptive advice and treatment it has to be borne in mind that there is much that has to be understood by a girl under the age of 16 if she is to have legal capacity to consent to such treatment. It is not enough that she should understand the nature of the advice which is being given: she must also have a sufficient maturity to understand what is involved. There are moral and family questions, especially her relationship with her parents; long-term problems associated with the emotional impact of pregnancy and its termination; and there are the risks to health of sexual intercourse at her age, risks which contraception may diminish but cannot eliminate. It follows that a doctor will have to satisfy himself that she is able to appraise these factors before he can safely proceed upon the basis that she has at law capacity to consent to contraceptive treatment. And it further follows that ordinarily the proper course will be for him, as the guidance lays down, first to seek to persuade the girl to bring her parents into consultation, and if she refuses, not to prescribe contraceptive treatment unless he is satisfied that her circumstances are such that he ought to proceed without parental knowledge and consent.

Like Woolf J., I find illuminating and helpful the judgment of Addy J. of the Ontario High Court in Johnston v. Wellesley Hospital (1970) 17 D.L.R. (3d) 139, a passage from which he quotes in his judgment in this case, [1984] Q.B. 581, 597. The key passage bears repetition!

> "But, regardless of modern trend, I can find nothing in any of the old reported cases, except where infants of tender age or young children were involved, where the courts have found that a person under 21 years, of age was legally incapable of consenting to medical treatment. If a person under 21 years were unable to consent to medical treatment, he would also be incapable of consenting to other types of bodily interference. A proposition purporting to establish that any bodily interference acquiesced in by a youth of 20 years would nevertheless constitute an assault would be absurd. If such were the case, sexual intercourse with a girl under 21 years would constitute rape. Until the minimum age of consent to sexual acts was fixed at 14 years by a statute, the courts often held that infants were capable of consenting at a considerably earlier age than 14 years.

> "I feel that the law on this point is well expressed in the volume on Medical Negligence (1957), by Lord Nathan, p. 176: 'It is suggested that the most satisfactory solution of the problem is to rule that an infant who is capable of appreciating fully the nature and consequences of a particular operation or of particular treatment can give an effective consent thereto, and in such cases the consent of the guardian is unnecessary; but that where the infant is without that capacity, any apparent consent by him or her will be a nullity, the sole right to consent being vested in the guardian.'"

I am, therefore, satisfied that the Department's guidance can be followed without involving the doctor in any infringement of parental right. Unless, therefore, to prescribe contraceptive treatment for a girl under the age of 16 is either a criminal offence or so close to one that to prescribe such treatment is contrary to public policy, the department's appeal must succeed.

The Criminal Law Case

If this case should be made good, the discussion of parental right is, of course, an irrelevance. If it be criminal or contrary to public policy to prescribe contraception for a girl under the age of 16 on the ground that sexual intercourse with her is unlawful and a crime on the part of her male partner, the fact that her parent knew and consented would not make it any less so. I confess that I find the submission based upon criminality or public policy surprising. So far as criminality is concerned, I am happy to rest on the judgment of Woolf J. whose approach to the problem I believe to be correct. Clearly a doctor who gives a girl contraceptive advice or treatment not because in his clinical judgment the treatment is medically indicated for the maintenance or restoration of her health but with the intention of facilitating her having unlawful sexual intercourse may well be guilty of a criminal offence. It would depend, as my noble and learned friend, Lord Fraser of Tullybelton observes, upon the doctor's intention - a conclusion hardly to be wondered at in the field of the criminal law. The department's guidance avoids the trap of declaring that the decision to prescribe the treatment is wholly a matter of the doctor's discretion. He may prescribe only if she has the capacity to consent or if exceptional circumstances exist which justify him in exercising his clinical judgment without parental consent. The adjective "clinical" emphasises that it must be a medical judgment based upon what he honestly believes to be necessary for the physical, mental, and emotional health of his patient. The bona fide exercise by a doctor of his clinical judgment must be a complete negation of the guilty mind which is an essential ingredient of the criminal offence of aiding and abetting the commission of unlawful sexual intercourse*

The public policy point fails for the same reason. It cannot be said that there .is anything necessarily contrary to public policy in medical contraceptive treatment if it be medically indicated as in the interest of the patient's health: for the provision of such treatment is recognised as legitimate by Parliament: section 5 National Health Service Act 1977. If it should be prescribed for a girl under 16 the fact that it may eliminate a health risk in the event of the girl having unlawful sexual intercourse is an irrelevance unless the doctor intends to encourage her to have that intercourse. If the prescription is the bona fide exercise of his clinical judgment as to what is best for his patient's health, he has nothing to fear from the criminal law or from any public policy based on the criminality of a man having sexual intercourse with her.

It can be said by way of criticism of this view of the law that it will result in uncertainty and leave the law in the hands of the doctors. The uncertainty is the price which has to be paid to keep the law in line with social experience, which is that many girls are fully able to make sensible decisions about many matters before they reach the age of 16. I accept that great responsibilities will lie on the medical profession. It is, however, a learned and highly trained profession regulated by statute and governed by a strict ethical code which is vigorously enforced. Abuse of the power to prescribe contraceptive treatment for girls under the age of 16 would render a doctor liable to severe professional penalty. The truth may well be that the rights of parents and children in this sensitive area are better protected by the professional standards of the medical profession than by 'a priori' legal lines of division between capacity and lack of capacity to consent since any such general dividing line is sure to produce in some cases injustice, hardship, and injury to health.

For these reasons I would allow the Department's appeal, and set aside the declaration that the guidance is unlawful. I would add that, since the second declaration granted by the Court of Appeal, which concerns only the area health authority, was based on the same reasoning as the first, it must be held to have been wrongly granted. The Court of Appeal's decision to grant it should be, in my opinion, overruled as erroneous in law.

LORD BRIDGE OF HARWICH

My Lords,

The prelude to the proceedings from which this appeal arises was an exchange of correspondence between the present respondent, Mrs. Victoria Gillick, and her local area health authority in which she sought, but failed to obtain, an assurance that in no circumstances would any of her daughters when under 16 be offered contraceptive advice or treatment. Mrs. Gillick now has her declaration against the health authority, from which they do not appeal. I should suppose that in such a family as Mrs. Gillick's the possibility of any of her daughters under 16 seeking to use contraceptives secretly was in any event so remote as to make the issue in the proceedings against the health authority purely academic. But what prompted the correspondence was a "Memorandum of Guidance" (to which I will refer simply as "the Memorandum") on the subject of contraceptive advice and treatment for children under 16 issued to all health authorities by the present appellants, the Department of Health and Social Security ("D.H.S.S."). The terms of the Memorandum are set out in full in the speeches of my noble and learned friends Lord Fraser of Tullybelton and Lord Scarman. The Memorandum has been declared by the Court of Appeal to be contrary to law and it is that declaration that gives rise to the only live issue in this appeal. It is against the ethos expressed in the Memorandum that Mrs. Gillick's crusade, as my noble and learned friend Lord Templeman aptly calls it, is primarily directed.

Throughout the hearing of the argument in the appeal and in subsequent reflection on the questions to which it gives rise I have felt doubt and difficulty as to the basis of the jurisdiction which Mrs. Gillick invokes in her claim to a declaration against the D.H.S.S. If the claim is well founded, it must surely lie in the field of public rather than private law. Mrs. Gillick has no private right which she is in a position to assert against the D.H.S.S. But the point which troubles me has nothing to do with the purely procedural technicality that the proceedings were commenced by writ rather than by application for judicial review. I agree that no objection has been, nor could now be, raised on that ground. My difficulty is more fundamental. I ask myself what is the nature of the action or decision taken by the D.H.S.S. in the exercise of a power conferred upon it which entitles a court of law to intervene and declare that it has stepped beyond the proper limits of its power. I frame the question in that way because I believe that hitherto, certainly in general terms, the court's supervisory jurisdiction over the conduct of administrative authorities has been confined to ensuring that their actions or decisions were taken within the scope of the power which they purported to exercise or conversely to providing a remedy for an authority's failure to act or to decide in circumstances where some appropriate statutory action or decision was called for.

Now it is true that the Secretary of State for Health and Social Security under section 5(1)(b) of the National Health Service Act 1977 has a general responsibility for the provision within the National Health Service of what may be described shortly as family planning services. But only in a very loose sense could the issue of the Memorandum be considered as part of the discharge of that responsibility. The Memorandum itself has no statutory force whatever. It is not and does not purport to be issued in the exercise of any statutory power or in the performance of any statutory function. It is purely advisory in character and practitioners in the National Health Service are, as a matter of law, in no way bound by it.

In the light of these considerations I cannot, with all respect, agree that the Memorandum is open to review on "Wednesbury" principles on the ground that it involves an unreasonable exercise of a statutory discretion. Such a review must always begin by examining the nature of the statutory power which the administrative authority whose action is called in question has purported to exercise, and asking, in the light of that examination, what were, and what were not, relevant considerations for the authority to take into account in deciding to exercise that power. It is only against such a specific statutory background that the question whether the authority has acted unreasonably, in the Wednesbury sense, can properly be asked and answered. Here there is no specific statutory background by reference to which the appropriate Wednesbury questions could be formulated.

The issue by a department of government with administrative responsibility in a particular field of non-statutory guidance to subordinate authorities operating in the same field is a familiar feature of modern administration. The innumerable circulars issued over the years by successive departments responsible in the field of town and country planning spring to mind as presenting a familiar example. The question whether the advice tendered in such non-statutory guidance is good or bad, reasonable or unreasonable, cannot, as a general rule, be subject to any form of judicial review. But the question arises whether there' is any exception to that general rule.

Your Lordships have been referred to the House's decision in Royal College of Nursing v. Department of Health and Social Security [1981] A.C. 800. The background to that case was exceptional, as only becomes fully clear when one reads the judgment of Woolf 3. at first instance, reported at [1981] 1 All E.R. 545. The Royal College of Nursing ("R.C.N.") and the D.H.S.S. had received conflicting legal advice as to whether or not it was lawful, on the true construction of certain provisions of the Abortion Act 1967, for nurses to perform particular functions in the course of a novel medical procedure for the termination of pregnancy, when acting on the orders and under the general supervision of a registered medical practitioner but not necessarily in his presence. The R.C.N. had issued a memorandum and a later circular to its members to the effect that it was not lawful. The D.H.S.S. had issued a circular advising that it was lawful. The desirability of an authoritative resolution of this dispute on a pure question of law was obvious in the interests both of the nursing profession and of the public. The proceedings took the form of a claim by the R.C.N. against the D.H.S.S. for a suitable declaration and the D.H.S.S. in due course counterclaimed a declaration to the opposite effect. As Woolf J. pointed out, neither side took any point as to the jurisdiction of the court to grant a declaration. Woolf J. himself felt it necessary to raise and examine certain questions as to the locus standi of the R.C.N. to bring the proceedings and as to the propriety of their form. He answered these questions in a favourable sense to enable him to decide the disputed question of law on its merits. No technical question bearing on jurisdiction attracted any mention in the Court of Appeal or in this House. In the litigation the original conflict between the parties was reflected in a conflict of judicial opinion. On a count of judicial heads a majority of 5 to 4 favoured the R.C.N. But by a majority of 3 to 2 in your Lordships' House the D.H.S.S.. carried the day and obtained the declaration they sought.

Against this background it would have been surprising indeed if the courts had declined jurisdiction. But I think it must be recognised that the decision (whether or not it was so intended) does effect a significant extension of the court's power of judicial review. We must now say that if a government department, in a field of administration in which it exercises responsibility, promulgates in a public document, albeit non-statutory in form, advice which is erroneous in law, then the court, in proceedings in appropriate form commenced by an applicant or plaintiff who possesses the necessary locus standi, has jurisdiction to correct the error of law by an appropriate declaration. Such an extended jurisdiction is no doubt a salutary and indeed a necessary one in certain circumstances, as the Royal College of Nursing case [1981]

A.C. 800 itself well illustrates. But the occasions of a departmental non-statutory publication raising, as in that case, a clearly defined issue of law, unclouded by political, social or moral overtones, will be rare. In cases where any proposition of law implicit in a departmental advisory document is interwoven with questions of social and ethical controversy, the court should, in my opinion, exercise its jurisdiction with the utmost restraint, confine itself to deciding whether the proposition of law is erroneous and avoid either expressing ex cathedra opinions in areas of social and ethical controversy in which it has no claim to speak with authority or preferring answers to hypothetical questions of law which do not strictly arise for decision.

My Lords, the Memorandum, in expressing the view that in exceptional and unusual cases it may be proper for a doctor to offer contraceptive advice and treatment to a girl under 16 without the knowledge or consent of her parent, guardian or other person in loco parentis, implies that the law does not prohibit the doctor from so acting. The exceptional and unusual cases contemplated are clearly not confined to cases of children abandoned by their parents and not yet taken into care by a local authority or to cases of "emergency", whatever meaning one may give to that word in this context. I am content to assume, without deciding, that Mrs. Gillick, in view of her dispute with the health authority, has sufficient locus standi to contest the issue of the lawfulness of the Memorandum. To succeed in her action against the D.H.S.S. she must at least establish that, leaving aside cases of abandoned children or emergencies, the law does absolutely prohibit the prescription of contraception for a girl under 16 without parental consent or an order of the court.

The most direct support for that proposition is to be found in the opinion of my noble and learned friend Lord Brandon of Oakbrook that to prescribe contraception for a girl under 16, with or without parental consent, is either to aid and abet the offence which will be committed by the man with whom she has intercourse, or at least so far to facilitate his criminal conduct as to be contrary to public policy. I appreciate the logical cogency of my noble and learned friend's reasoning, but I cannot agree with his conclusion. With reference to the possible criminal complicity of the doctor I am content gratefully to adopt the relevant passage from the judgment of Woolf J., [1984] 1 Q.B. 581, 593B - 595G, with which I fully agree. On the issue of public policy, it seems to me that the policy consideration underlying the criminal sanction imposed by statute upon men who have intercourse with girls under 16 is the protection of young girls from the untoward consequences of intercourse. Foremost among these must surely be the risk of pregnancy leading either to abortion or the birth of a child to an immature and irresponsible mother. In circumstances where it is apparent that the criminal sanction will not, or is unlikely to, afford the necessary protection it cannot, in my opinion, be contrary to public policy to prescribe contraception as the only effective means of avoiding a wholly undesirable pregnancy. On the facts presented to Butler-Sloss J. in the case of In re P. (A Minor) (1981) 80 L.G.R. 301, I think, if I may respectfully say so, that she took an eminently sensible and entirely proper course.

The alternative and more extensively argued ground on which Mrs. Gillick challenges the lawfulness of the Memorandum depends on the two closely related propositions:

1. that no girl under 16 can have the capacity in law to give a valid consent to submit to contraceptive treatment;

2. that the prescription of such treatment without parental consent is an unlawful invasion of parental rights.

Both these propositions are comprehensively examined in the speeches of my noble and learned friends Lord Fraser of Tullybelton and Lord Scarman. I fully agree with the reasons expressed by both my noble and learned friends for reaching the conclusion that neither proposition is well founded in law.

Accordingly I would allow the appeal of the D.H.S.S. to the extent of setting aside the declaration made by the Court of Appeal that the Memorandum was contrary to law.

LORD BRANDON OF OAKBROOK

My Lords,

In this case your Lordships are concerned with the legal aspect of three activities relating to the sexual conduct of girls who are under the age of 16. The first activity is the giving to such girls by professional persons other than doctors (e.g. social workers) of advice about contraception. The second activity is the physical examination of such girls by doctors with a view to their using one or other form of contraception. The third activity is the prescribing for such girls of contraceptive treatment, especially that form which is commonly called "the pill."

The question with regard to these three activities which has been raised in the two courts below, and again in your Lordships' House, is whether such activities can be lawfully carried on without the prior knowledge and consent of the parents of any girl of the age concerned.

In my opinion the formulation of the question for decision in this way involves the rolling up in one composite question of two quite separate and distinct points of law. The first point of law is whether the three activities to which I have referred can be carried on lawfully in any circumstances whatever. If, on the one hand, the right answer to this first point of law is "no", then no second point of law arises for decision. If, on the other hand, the answer to the first question is "yes", then a second point of law arises, namely, whether the three activities referred to can only be lawfully carried on with the prior knowledge and consent of the parents of the girl concerned.

The first point of law appears to me to be one of public policy, the answer to which is to be gathered from an examination of the statutory provisions which Parliament has enacted from time to time in relation to men having sexual intercourse with girls either under the age of 13 or between the ages of 13 to 16.

It is, I think, sufficient to begin with the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1885 (48 & 49 Viet. C. 69) and then to go on to the Sexual Offences Act 1956, by which the former Act was repealed and largely replaced.

Part I of the Act of 1885, which contained sections 2-12, had the cross-heading "Protection of Women and Girls." Sections 4 and 5 provided, so far as material:

> "4. Any person who –
> unlawfully and carnally knows any girl under the age of 13 years shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than five years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. . . .
> 6. Any person who –
> 6. unlawfully and carnally knows or attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of any girl being of or above the age of 13 years and under the age of 16 years; ...
> shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and being convicted thereof shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. . . ."

In Reg. v. Tyrrell [1894] 1 Q.B. 710 it was held by the Court of Crown Cases Reserved that it was not a criminal offence for a girl between the ages of 13 and 16 to aid and abet a man in committing, or to incite him to commit, the misdemeanour of having carnal knowledge of her contrary to section 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1885 set out above. The ground of this decision was that the Act of 1885 had been passed for the purpose of protecting women and girls against themselves: see the judgment of Lord Coleridge C.J. at p. 712.

The Sexual Offences Act 1956 represents the latest pronouncement of Parliament on these matters. Sections 5 and 6 provide, so far as material!

> "5. It is a felony for a man to have unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under the age of 13.
> 6. - (i) It is an offence . . . for a man to have unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl not under the age of 13 but under the age of 16."

Further, by section 37 and the Second Schedule, the maximum punishment for an offence under section 5 is imprisonment for life, and that for an offence under section 6 imprisonment for two years. Since the passing of the Act of 1956 the distinction between felonies and misdemeanours has been abolished. For the purposes of this case, however, nothing turns on this change of terminology.

My Lords, the inescapable inference from the statutory provisions of the Acts of 1885 and 1956 to which I have referred is that Parliament has for the past century regarded, and still regards today, sexual intercourse between a man and a girl under 16 as a serious criminal offence so far as the man who has such intercourse is concerned. So far as the girl is concerned, she does not commit any criminal offence, even if she aids, abets or incites the having of such intercourse. The reason for. this, as explained earlier, is that the relevant statutory provisions have been enacted by Parliament for the purpose of protecting the girl from herself. The having of such intercourse is, however, unlawful, and the circumstance that the man is guilty of a criminal offence, while the girl is not, cannot alter that situation.

On the footing that the having of sexual intercourse by a man with a girl under 16 is an unlawful act, it follows necessarily that for any person to promote, encourage or facilitate the commission of such an act may itself be a criminal offence, and must, in any event, be contrary to public policy. Nor can it make any difference that the person who promotes, encourages or facilitates the commission of such an act is a parent or a doctor or a social worker.

The question then arises whether the three activities to which I referred earlier should properly be regarded as, directly or indirectly, promoting, encouraging or facilitating the having, contrary to public policy, of sexual intercourse between a man and a girl under 16. In my opinion there can be only one answer to this question, namely, that to give such a girl advice about contraception, to examine her with a view to her using one or more forms of protection, and finally to prescribe contraceptive treatment for her, necessarily involves promoting, encouraging or facilitating the having of sexual intercourse, contrary to public policy, by that girl with a man.

The inhibitions against the having of sexual intercourse between a man and a girl under 16 are primarily two-fold. So far as the man is concerned there is the inhibition of the criminal law as contained in sections 5 and 6 of the Act of 1956. So far as both are concerned there is the inhibition arising from the risk of an unwanted pregnancy. To give the girl contraceptive treatment, following appropriate advice and examination, is to remove largely the second of these two inhibitions. Such removal must involve promoting, encouraging or facilitating the having of sexual intercourse between the girl and the man.

It has been argued that some girls under 16 will have sexual intercourse with a man whether contraceptive treatment is made available to them or not, and that the provision of such treatment does not, therefore, promote, encourage or facilitate the having of such intercourse. In my opinion this argument should be rejected for two quite separate reasons. The first reason is that the mere fact that a girl under 16 seeks contraceptive advice and treatment, whether of her own accord or at the suggestion of others, itself indicates that she, and probably also the man with whom she is having, or contemplating having, sexual intercourse, are conscious of the inhibition arising from the risk of an unwanted pregnancy. They are conscious of it and are more likely to indulge their desires if it can be removed. The second reason is that, if all a girl under 16 needs to do in order to obtain contraceptive treatment is to threaten that she will go ahead with, or continue, unlawful sexual intercourse with a man unless she is given such treatment, a situation tantamount to blackmail will arise which no legal system ought to tolerate. The only answer which the law should give to such a threat is "wait till you are 16."

The D.H.S.S. has contended that section 5(1) of the National Health Service Act 1977 imposes on it a statutory duty to carry out, in relation to girls under 16 as well as to older girls or women, the three activities to which I referred earlier. That provision reads:

"5. - (1) It is the Secretary of State's duty - . . .

(b) to arrange, to such extent as he considers necessary to meet all reasonable requirements in England and Wales, for the giving of advice on contraception, the medical examination of persons seeking advice on contraception, the treatment of such persons and the supply of contraceptive substances and appliances."

This provision does not define the "persons" who are the subject-matter of it, nor is there any definition of that expression anywhere else in the Act. In these circumstances it seems to me that a court, in interpreting the provision, must do so in a way which conforms with considerations of public policy rather than in a way which conflicts with them. For the reasons which I have given earlier, I am of the opinion that, in the case of girls under 16, the giving of advice about contraception, medical examination with a view to the use of one or other form of contraception, and the prescribing of contraceptive treatment, are all contrary to public policy. It follows that I would interpret the expression "persons" in section 5(1)(b) above as not including girls under 16. Alternatively I would say that the expression "all reasonable retirements", which occurs earlier in the provision, cannot be interpreted as including the requirements of a girl under 16 which, if satisfied, will promote, encourage or facilitate unlawful acts of sexual intercourse between a man and her.

My Lords, reference was made in the course of the argument before you to a decision of Butler-Sloss J. in In re P (A Minor) 80 L.G.R. 301. In that case the learned judge, in wardship proceedings, ordered that a girl of 15, who had been pregnant for the second time and was in the care of a local authority, should be fitted with a contraceptive appliance because it appeared that it was impossible for the local authority, in whose care she was, to control her sexual conduct. It was contended that this decision was authority for the proposition that, in wardship proceedings at any rate, an order could lawfully be made for the supply and fitting of a contraceptive appliance to a girl under 16.

I do not know what arguments were or were not addressed to Butler-Sloss J. in that case, and it is, in any event, unnecessary for your Lordships to decide in these proceedings the limits of the powers of a court exercising wardship jurisdiction. As at present advised, however, I am of opinion, with great respect to Butler-Sloss 3., that the order which she made was not one which she could lawfully make.

My Lords, great play was made in the argument before you of the disastrous consequences for a girl under 16 of becoming pregnant as a result of her willingly having unlawful sexual intercourse with a man. I am fully conscious of these considerations, but I do not consider that, if the views which I have so far expressed are right in law, those considerations can alter the position.

It is sometimes said that the age of consent for girls is presently 16. This is, however, an inaccurate way of putting the matter, since, if a man has sexual intercourse with a girl under 16 without her consent, the crime which he thereby commits is that of rape. The right way to put the matter is that 16 is the age of a girl below which a man cannot lawfully have sexual intercourse with her. It was open to Parliament in 1956, when the Sexual Offences Act of that year was passed, and it has remained open to Parliament throughout the 29 years which have since elapsed, to pass legislation providing for some lower age than 16, if it thought fit to do so. Parliament has not thought fit to do so, and I do not consider that it would be right for your Lordships' House, by-holding that girls under 16 can lawfully be provided with contraceptive facilities, to undermine or circumvent the criminal law which Parliament has enacted. The criminal law and the civil law should, as it seems to me, march hand in hand on all issues, including that raised in this case, and to allow inconsistency or contradiction between them would, in my view, serve only to discredit the rule of law as a whole.

Since I am of opinion that the first question which I posed earlier, namely, whether the provision of contraceptive facilities to girls under 16 was lawful in any circumstances at all, should be answered in the negative, the second question which I posed relating to the need for prior parental knowledge and consent, does not arise. This is because, on the view which I take of the law, making contraception available to girls under 16" is unlawful, whether their parents know of and consent to it or not.

My Lords, it remains for me to indicate what order I Consider that the House should make on this appeal. With regard to the first declaration made by the Court of Appeal, I would uphold it, albeit on grounds wider than those on which it was founded in that court. With regard to the second declaration, there is no appeal against it and I would uphold it also, although, for the reasons which I have given, I regard the four lines which follow the words "the age of 16" as surplusage.

In the result, I would dismiss the appeal of the D.H.S.S. with costs.

My Lords,

This appeal involves consideration of the independence of a teenager, the powers of a parent and the duties of a doctor. The question is, who has the right to decide whether an unmarried girl under the age of 16 may practise contraception?

An unmarried girl under the age of 16 does not, in my opinion, possess the power in law to decide for herself to practise contraception. Section 6 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 makes it an offence for a man to have unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under the age of 16. Consent by the girl does not afford a defence to the man or constitute an offence by the girl. Parliament has thus indicated that an unmarried girl under the age of 16 is not sufficiently mature to be allowed to decide for herself that she will take part in sexual intercourse. Such a girl cannot therefore be regarded as sufficiently mature to be allowed to decide for herself that she will practise contraception for the purpose of frequent or regular or casual sexual intercourse. Section 6 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 does not, however, in my view, prevent parent and doctor from deciding that contraceptive facilities shall be made available to an unmarried girl under the age of 16 whose sexual activities are recognised to be uncontrolled and uncontrollable. Section 6 is designed to protect the girl from sexual intercourse. But if the girl cannot be deterred then contraceptive facilities may be provided, not for the purpose of aiding and abetting an offence under Section 6 but for the purpose of avoiding the consequences, principally pregnancy, which the girl may suffer from illegal sexual intercourse where sexual intercourse cannot be prevented. In general, where parent and doctor agree that any form of treatment, including contraceptive treatment, is in the best interests of the girl, there is, in my opinion, no legal bar to that treatment.

Difficulties arise when parent and doctor differ. The parent, claiming the right to decide what is in the best interests of a girl in the custody of that parent may forbid the -provision of contraceptive facilities. A doctor, claiming the right to decide what is in the best interests of a patient, may wish to override the parent's objections. A conflict which is express may be resolved by the court which may accept the view of either parent or doctor or modify the views of both of them as to what is in the best interests of the girl. The present appeal is concerned with a conflict which is known to the doctor but is concealed from the parent and from the court. The girl, aware that the parent will forbid contraception, requests the doctor to provide and the doctor agrees to provide contraceptive facilities and to keep the parent in ignorance.

A parent is the natural and legal guardian of an infant under the age of 18 and is responsible for the upbringing of an infant who is in the custody of that parent. The practical exercise of parental powers varies from control and supervision to guidance and advice depending on the discipline enforced by the parent and the age and temperament of the infant. Parental power must be exercised in the best interests of the infant and the court may intervene in the interests of the infant at the behest of the parent or at the behest of a third party. The court may enforce parental right, control the misuse of parental power or uphold independent views asserted by the infant. The court will be guided by the principle that the welfare of the infant is paramount. But subject to the discretion of the court to differ from the views of the parent, the court will, in my opinion, uphold the right of the parent having custody of the infant to decide on behalf of the infant all matters which the infant is not competent to decide. The prudent parent will pay attention to the wishes of the infant and will normally accept them as the infant approaches adulthood. The parent is not bound by the infant's wishes, but an infant approaching adulthood may be able to flout the wishes of the parent with ease.

A doctor tenders advice and offers treatment which the doctor considers to be in the best interests of the patient. A patient is free to reject the advice and refuse the treatment; Sidaway v. Board of Governors of the Bethlem Royal Hospital and the Maudsley Hospital [1985] 2 W.L.R. 480, 508. Where the patient is an infant, the medical profession accept that a parent having custody and being responsible for the infant is entitled on behalf of the infant to consent to or reject treatment if the parent considers that the best interests of the infant so require. Where doctor and parent disagree, the court can decide and is not slow to act. I accept that if there is no time to obtain a decision from the court, a doctor may safely carry out treatment in an emergency if the doctor believes the treatment to be vital to the survival or health of an infant and notwithstanding the opposition of a parent or the impossibility of alerting the parent before the treatment is carried out. In such a case the doctor must have the courage of his convictions that the treatment is necessary and urgent in the interests of the patient and the court will, if necessary, approve after the event treatment which the court would have authorised in advance, even if the treatment proves to be unsuccessful.

I accept also that a doctor may lawfully carry out some forms of treatment with the consent of an infant patient and against the opposition of a parent based on religious or any other grounds. The effect of the consent of the infant depends on the nature of the treatment and the age and understanding of the infant. For example, a doctor with the consent of an intelligent boy or girl of 15 could in my opinion safely remove tonsils or a troublesome appendix. But any decision on the part of a girl to practise sex and contraception requires not only knowledge of the facts of life and of the dangers of pregnancy and disease but also an understanding of the emotional and other consequences to her family, her male partner and to herself. I doubt whether a girl under the age of 16 is capable of a balanced judgment to embark on frequent, regular or casual sexual intercourse fortified by the illusion that medical science can protect her in mind and body and ignoring the danger of leaping from childhood to adulthood without the difficult formative transitional experiences of adolescence. There are many things which a girl under 16 needs to practise but sex is not one of them. Parliament could declare this view to be out of date. But in my opinion the statutory provisions discussed in the speech of noble and learned friend Lord Fraser of Tullybelton, and the provisions of section 6 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 indicate that as the law now stands an unmarried girl under 16 is not competent to decide to practise sex and contraception.

In the present case it is submitted that a doctor may lawfully make a decision on behalf of the girl and in so doing may overrule or ignore the parent who has custody of the girl. It is submitted that a doctor may at the request of a girl under 16 provide contraceptive facilities against the known or assumed wishes of the parent and on terms that the parent shall be kept in ignorance of the treatment. The justification is advanced that if the girl's request is not met, the girl may persist in sexual intercourse and run the risk of pregnancy. It is not in the interests of a girl under 16 to become pregnant and therefore the doctor may, in her interests, confidentially provide contraceptive facilities unless the doctor can persuade the girl to abstain from sexual intercourse or can persuade her to ensure that precautions are taken by the male participant. The doctor is not bound to provide contraceptive facilities but, it is said, is entitled to do so in the best interests of the girl. The girl must be assured that the doctor will be pledged to secrecy otherwise the girl may .not seek advice or treatment but will run all the risks of disease and pregnancy involved in sexual activities without adequate knowledge or mature consideration and preparation. The D.H.S.S.

memorandum instructs a doctor to seek to persuade the girl to involve the parent but concludes that "the decision whether or not to prescribe contraception must be for the clinical judgment of a doctor."

There are several objections to this approach. The first objection is that a doctor, acting without the views of the parent, cannot form a "clinical" or any other reliable judgment that the best interests of the girl require the provision of contraceptive facilities. The doctor at the family planning clinic only knows that which the girl chooses to tell him. The family doctor may know some of the circumstances of some of the families who form his registered patients but his information may be incomplete or misleading. The doctor who provides contraceptive facilities without the knowledge of the parent deprives the parent of the opportunity to protect the girl from sexual intercourse by persuading and helping her to avoid sexual intercourse or by the exercise of parental power which may prevent sexual intercourse. The parent might be able to bring pressure on a male participant to desist from the commission of the offence of sexual intercourse with a girl under 16. The parent might be able and willing to exercise parental power by removing the family or the girl to a different neighbourhood and environment and away from the danger of sexual intercourse.

The second objection is that a parent will sooner or later find out the truth, probably sooner, and may do so in circumstances which bring about a complete rupture of good relations between members of the family and between the family and the doctor. It is inevitable that when the parent discovers that the girl is practising sexual intercourse, the girl will in self justification and in an attempt to reassure the parent reveal that she is relying on contraceptive facilities provided by the doctor in order to avoid pregnancy. The girl and the doctor will be the loser by this revelation.

The third and main objection advanced on behalf of the respondent parent, Mrs. Gillick, in this appeal is that the secret provision of contraceptive facilities for a girl under 16 will, it is said, encourage participation by the girl in sexual intercourse and this practice offends basic principles of morality and religion which ought not to be sabotaged in stealth by kind permission of the National Health Service. The interests of a girl under 16 require her to be protected against sexual intercourse. Such a girl is not sufficiently mature to be allowed to decide to flout the accepted rules of society. The pornographic press and the lascivious film may falsely pretend that sexual intercourse is a form of entertainment available to females on request and to males on demand but the regular frequent or casual practice of sexual intercourse by a girl or a boy under the age of 16 cannot be beneficial to anybody and may cause harm to character and personality. Before a girl under 16 is supplied with contraceptive facilities, the parent who knows most about the girl and ought to have the most influence with the girl is entitled to exercise parental rights of control, supervision, guidance and advice in order that the girl may, if possible, avoid sexual intercourse until she is older. Contraception should only be considered if and when the combined efforts of parent and doctor fail to prevent the girl from participating in sexual intercourse and there remains only the possibility of protecting the girl against pregnancy resulting from sexual intercourse.

These arguments have provoked great controversy which is not legal in character. Some doctors approve and some doctors disapprove of the idea that a doctor may decide to provide contraception for a girl under 16 without the knowledge of the parent. Some parents agree and some parents disagree with the proposition that the decision must depend on the judgment of the doctor. Those who favour doctor power assert that the failure to provide confidential contraceptive treatment will lead to an increase in pregnancies amongst girls under 16. As a general proposition, this assertion is not supported by evidence in this case, is not susceptible to proof and in my opinion is of doubtful validity. Availability of confidential contraceptive treatment may increase the demand for such treatment. Contraceptive treatment for females usually requires daily discipline in order to be effective and girls under 16 frequently lack that discipline. The total number of pregnancies amongst girls of under 16 may, therefore, be increased and not decreased by the availability of contraceptive treatment. But there is no doubt that an individual girl who is denied the opportunity of confidential contraceptive treatment may invite or succumb to sexual intercourse and thereby become pregnant. Those who favour parental power assert that the availability of confidential contraceptive treatment will increase sexual activity by girls under 16. This argument is also not supported by evidence in the present case, and is not susceptible to proof. But it is clear that contraception removes or gives an illusion of removing the possibility of pregnancy and therefore removes restraint on sexual intercourse. Some girls would come under pressure if contraceptive facilities were known to be available and some girls under 16 are susceptible to male domination.

Parliament could decide whether it is better to have more contraception with the possibility of fewer pregnancies and less disease or whether it is better to have less contraception with the possibility of reduced sexual activity by girls under 16. Parliament could ensure that the doctor prevailed over the parent by reducing the age of consent or by expressly authorising a doctor to provide contraceptive facilities for any girl without informing the parent, provided the doctor considered that his actions were for the benefit of the girl. Parliament could, on the other hand, ensure that the parent prevailed over the doctor by forbidding contraceptive treatment for a girl under 16 save by or on the recommendation of the girl's general medical practitioner and with the consent of the parent who has registered the girl as a patient of that general practitioner. Some girls, it is said, might pretend to be over 16 but a doctor in doubt could always require confirmation from the girl's registered medical practitioner.

This appeal falls to be determined by the existing law. No authority has been cited which prevents an infant from seeking medical or any other advice or which forbids a doctor to advise an infant who has not been tendered by the parent as a patient. No authority compels a doctor to disclose to a parent, otherwise than in the course of litigation, any information obtained as a result of a conversation between the doctor and the infant. On the other hand, in my opinion, confidentiality owed to an infant is not breached by disclosure to a parent responsible for that infant if the doctor considers that such disclosure is necessary in the interests of the infant. A doctor who gave a pledge to a girl under 16 that he would not disclose the fact or content of a conversation would no doubt honour that pledge, but the doctor ought to hesitate before committing himself. A doctor who gave an unconditional pledge of confidentiality to a girl under 16 would, for example, be in a difficult position if the girl then disclosed information which made the doctor suspect that she was being introduced to sexual intercourse by a man who was also introducing her to drugs.

Although a doctor is entitled to give confidential advice to an infant, the law will, in my opinion, uphold the right of a parent to make a decision which the infant is not competent to make. The decision to authorise and accept medical examination and treatment for contraception is a decision which a girl under 16 is not competent to make. In my opinion a doctor may not lawfully provide a girl under 16 with contraceptive facilities without the approval of the parent responsible for the girl save pursuant to a court order, or in the case of emergency or in exceptional cases where the parent has abandoned or forfeited by abuse the right to be consulted. Parental rights cannot be insisted upon by a parent who is not responsible for the custody and upbringing of a infant or where the parent has abandoned or abused parental rights. And a doctor is not obliged to give effect to parental rights in an emergency.

A girl under 16 is usually living with a parent and is usually attending school. It is sufficient for the doctor to obtain the consent of the parent or guardian with whom the girl is living. It seems to me to be contrary to law and offensive to professional standards that a doctor should provide contraceptive facilities against the known or presumed wishes of such a parent and that the doctor should conspire with the girl to keep the parent in ignorance of the fact that the girl intends to participate in frequent, regular or casual sexual intercourse in the belief that the only bar to sexual intercourse is the risk of pregnancy and in complacent reliance on the doctor's contraceptive facilities to obviate that risk.

But parental rights may have been abandoned. If the doctor discovers, for example, that the girl is not living with a parent but has been allowed to live in an environment in which the danger of sexual intercourse is pressing, the doctor may lawfully provide facilities for contraception until the parent has been alerted to the danger and has been afforded the opportunity to reassert parental rights and to protect the girl by means other than contraception. The court will uphold the doctor's actions if the doctor reasonably believes that parental rights have, for the time being at any rate, been abandoned.

Parental rights may have been abused. The dangers of sexual intercourse may emanate from the girl's home. The doctor would be entitled to provide the girl with contraceptive facilities but would then be bound to consider whether the local welfare authorities should be alerted to the possibility that the girl is in need of care and protection. Again, the doctor may be satisfied that the parent is a brute and that the girl has been driven to seek solace outside the family. The doctor might decide that it was necessary to provide contraceptive facilities for the girl without informing the parent but the doctor would be bound to consider the possible consequences if the parent, known to be brutal, discovered the truth.

The doctor may also be faced with circumstances which could properly be described as a medical emergency. The doctor may decide that the girl is unable to control her sexual appetite or is acting under an influence which cannot be counteracted immediately. The doctor would be entitled to provide contraceptive facilities as a temporary measure but would, in my opinion, be bound to inform the parent. A subsequent decision to continue contraceptive treatment would be open to the doctor and the parent acting jointly; in default of agreement between them, the welfare authority or the court could be asked to intervene.

There may be other exceptional circumstances and emergencies which would impel the doctor to provide contraceptive facilities without the prior consent of the parent but in most cases the doctor would be bound to inform the parent as soon as possible in order that the parent might have the opportunity of exercising parental rights in such manner as to deter or prevent the girl from indulging in sexual intercourse.

The position seems to me to be as follows. A doctor is not entitled to decide whether a girl under the age of 16 shall be provided with contraceptive facilities if a parent who is in charge of the girl is ready and willing to make that decision in exercise of parental rights. The doctor is entitled in exceptional circumstances and in emergencies to make provision, normally temporary provision, for contraception but in most cases would be bound to inform the parent of the treatment. The court would not hold the doctor liable for providing contraceptive facilities if the doctor had reasonable grounds for believing that the parent had abandoned or abused parental rights or that there was no parent immediately available for consultation or that there was no parent who was responsible for the girl. But exceptional circumstances and emergencies cannot be expanded into a general discretion for the doctor to provide contraceptive facilities without the knowledge of the parent because of the possibility that a girl to whom contraceptive facilities are not available may irresponsibly court the risk of pregnancy. Such a discretion would enable any girl to obtain contraception on request by threatening to sleep with a man.

In the present state of the law the D.H.S.S. memorandum appears to me to be defective. The principal defect lies. in the assertion that "the decision whether or not to prescribe contraception must be for the clinical judgment of a doctor." In my opinion a decision by a doctor to provide contraceptive facilities for an unmarried girl of 16 against the known or presumed wishes of a parent who has custody of the girl and without the knowledge, of the parent would constitute an unlawful interference with the rights of the parent, subject to the intervention of the court, to make that decision on behalf of the girl and an unlawful interference with the right of the parent to influence the conduct of the girl by the exercise of parental powers of control, guidance and advice.

There are two further defects. The memorandum asserts "that consultations between doctors and patients are confidential" without making any distinction between adult patients and infant patients. The memorandum also suggests that doctors should consider providing contraceptive facilities without the knowledge of the parent where "parents are, for example, unconcerned, entirely unresponsive or grossly disturbed." Of course a doctor must protect a girl against a parent who is grossly disturbed although the doctor must also consider the possible consequences if such a parent discovers that the daughter has been practising sexual intercourse with the ostensible approval of the doctor manifested by the secret supply of contraceptives. And if it is plain that the parent is "unconcerned" in the sense that parental control has been abandoned, then the provision of contraceptive facilities without the prior knowledge of the parent would be lawful. But any girl who is anxious to practise sexual intercourse may plausibly represent that the parent is "entirely unresponsive." On behalf of Mrs. Gillick it was urged with some force that the practical effect of the memorandum couched in this opaque language was to enable an inexperienced doctor in a family planning clinic, exuding sympathy and veiled in ignorance of the girl's personality and history, to provide contraceptives as if they were sweets withheld from a deprived child by an unfeeling parent; and that any parent who was concerned with the girl's immortal soul or with moral or religious principles might be said to be "entirely unresponsive" to a proposal that an unmarried girl under the age of 16 should be provided with contraceptives. As the memorandum now stands, a "clinical judgment" by the doctor may amount to no more than a belief that a parent will not consent to contraception and a fear that the girl may practise sex without contraception.

These defects in the memorandum constitute in my opinion a mistake of law on the part of the D.H.S.S. The memorandum assumes and asserts that the doctor is entitled by himself to decide whether an unmarried girl under the age of 16 shall be provided with contraceptive facilities and that the doctor is entitled to conceal that decision from the parent. In my opinion the decision cannot lawfully be made without the consent of the parent in charge of the girl unless the parent has abandoned or abused parental powers or is not available. If the memorandum is defective by reason of a mistake of law and if, in consequence, a doctor making a decision in reliance on the views, expressed in the memorandum may unlawfully interfere with the rights of a parent and make and act upon a decision which the doctor is in law not entitled to make, then in my opinion, the D.H.S.S. which is responsible for the memorandum is amenable to the remedies of judicial review. It matters not whether the memorandum constitutes an order or guidance or advice or a mere expression of views directed to the medical profession or directed to doctors who are engaged in the National Health Service. The issue is not whether the D.H.S.S. are exercising a statutory discretion in a reasonable way but whether by mistake of law the D.H.S.S., a public authority, purports by the memorandum to authorise or approve an unlawful interference with parental rights. In this respect I gratefully acknowledge and accept the observations of my noble and learned friend, Lord Bridge of Harwich, and his warning against the involvement of the courts in areas of social and ethical controversy or hypothetical questions. Nevertheless the questions raised by this appeal must now be answered and, differing from a majority of your Lordships, I consider that Mrs. Gillick has succeeded in her crusade and is entitled in judicial review proceedings to a declaration that the memorandum is unlawful insofar as it purports to authorise or approve of the provision of contraceptive facilities for an unmarried girl under the age of 16 without the knowledge of a parent who holds custody of the girl and has not abandoned or abused the parental right to decide whether such facilities shall be provided. The danger that other parents or individuals may exploit judicial review proceedings by referring social problems to the courts or by seeking general pronouncements of law based on hypothetical facts can be averted by the exercise of the judicial, discretion to refuse leave to prosecute judicial review proceedings. In the present case the proceedings are not in form judicial review proceedings but at this stage the technicality can be ignored because the legal issues raised in these proceedings cannot be allowed to remain unanswered. I would therefore grant the relief I have indicated in substitution for the declarations made by the Court of Appeal and I would order Mrs. Gillick's costs to be paid by the D.H.S.S.

My Lords, in this appeal social issues are entangled with legal issues. In my view the law is consistent with social policy in forbidding the provision of contraceptive facilities for young girls who are under the' care and protection of a parent without the involvement of the parent. But social issues need not finally be determined and are not best determined by lawyers or by doctors.

CASE No. 9

THE ZYKLON B CASE

TRIAL OF BRUNO TESCH AND TWO OTHERS

BRITISH MILITARY COURT, HAMBURG,
1ST–8TH MARCH, 1946

Complicity of German industrialists in the murder of interned allied civilians by means of poison gas.

Bruno Tesch was owner of a firm which arranged for the supply of poison gas intended for the extermination of vermin, and among the customers of the firm were the S.S. Karl Weinbacher was Tesch's Procurist or second-in-command. Joachim Drosihn was the firm's first gassing technician. These three were accused of having supplied poison gas used for killing allied nationals interned in concentration camps, knowing that it was so to be used. The Defence claimed that the accused did not know of the use to which the gas was to be put; for Drosihn it was also pleaded that the supply of gas was beyond his control. Tesch and Weinbacher were condemned to death. Drosihn was acquitted.

A. OUTLINE OF THE PROCEEDINGS

1. THE COURT

The Court consisted of Brigadier R. B. L. Persse, as President, and, as members, Lt. Col. Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart., Coldstream Gds., and Major S. M. Johnstone, Royal Tank Regt.

Capt. H. S. Marshall was Waiting Member.

C. L. Stirling, Esq., C.B.E., Barrister-at-Law, Deputy Judge Advocate General, was Judge Advocate.

Major G. I. D. Draper, Irish Guards, Judge Advocate General's Branch, HQ. B.A.O.R., was Prosecutor.

Three German Counsel appeared on behalf of the accused. Dr. O. Zippel, Dr. C. Stumme and Dr. A. Stegemann defended Tesch, Weinbacher and Drosihn respectively.

2. THE CHARGE

The accused, Bruno Tesch, Joachim Drosihn and Karl Weinbacher, were charged with a war crime in that they "at Hamburg, Germany, between 1st January, 1941, and 31st March, 1945, in violation of the laws and usages of war did supply poison gas used for the extermination of allied nationals interned in concentration camps well knowing that the said gas was to be so used." The accused pleaded not guilty.

3. THE CASE FOR THE PROSECUTION

The prosecuting Counsel, in his opening address, stated that Dr. Bruno Tesch was by 1942 the sole owner of a firm known as Tesch and Stabenow, whose activities were divided into three main categories. In the first place, it distributed certain types of gas and gassing equipment for disinfecting various public buildings, including Wehrmacht barracks and S.S. concentration camps. Secondly, it provided, where required, expert technicians to carry out these gassing operations. Lastly, Dr. Tesch and Dr. Drosihn, the firm's senior gassing technician, carried out instruction for the Wehrmacht and the S.S. in the use of the gas which the firm supplied. The predominant importance of these gassing operations in war-time lay in their value in the extermination of lice.

The chief gas involved was Zyklon B, a highly dangerous poison gas, 99 per cent. of which was prussic acid. The gas was manufactured by another firm. Tesch and Stabenow had the exclusive agency for the supply of the gas east of the River Elbe, but the Zyklon B itself went directly from the manufacturers to the customer.

The contention for the Prosecution was that from 1941 to 1945 Zyklon B was being supplied as a direct result of orders accepted by the accused's firm, Tesch and Stabenow. On that basis, the Zyklon B was going in vast quantities to the largest concentration camps in Germany east of the Elbe. In these same camps the S.S. Totenkopfverbände were, from 1942 to 1945, systematically exterminating human beings to an estimated total of six million, of whom four and a half million were exterminated by the use of Zyklon B in one camp alone, known as Auschwitz/Birkenau. In these concentration camps were a vast number of people from the occupied territories of Europe, including Czechs, Russians, Poles, French, Dutch and Belgians, and people from neutral countries and from the United States. The Prosecutor also claimed that over a period of time the three accused got to know of this wholesale extermination of human beings in the eastern concentration camps by the S.S. using Zyklon B gas, and that, having acquired this knowledge, they continued to arrange supplies of the gas to these customers in the S.S. in ever-increasing quantities, until in the early months of 1944 the consignment per month to Auschwitz concentration camp was nearly two tons.

The accused Weinbacher was a " Procurist " ; when Tesch was absent he was fully empowered and authorised to do all acts on behalf of his principal which his principal could have done. His position was of great importance, since his principal would travel on the business of the firm for as many as 200 days in the year.

The case for the Prosecution was that knowingly to supply a commodity to a branch of the State which was using that commodity for the mass extermination of Allied civilian nationals was a war crime, and that the people who did it were war criminals for putting the means to commit the crime into the hands of those who actually carried it out. The action of the accused was in violation of Article 46 of the Hague Regulations of 1907, to which the German government and Great Britain were both parties.

4. THE EVIDENCE FOR THE PROSECUTION

Emil Sehm, a former bookkeeper and accountant employed by Tesch and Stabenow, supplied information, regarding the legitimate business activities of the firm and the positions of the three accused therein, which substantially bore out the opening statements of the Prosecutor on these points. He went on to state that in the Autumn of 1942 he saw in the files of the firm's registry one of the reports, dictated by Tesch, which gave accounts of his business journeys. In this travel report, Tesch recorded an interview with leading members of the Wehrmacht, during which he was told that the burial, after shooting, of Jews in increasing numbers was proving more and more unhygienic, and that it was proposed to kill them with prussic acid. Dr. Tesch, when asked for his views, had proposed to use the same method, involving the release of prussic acid gas in an enclosed space, as was used in the extermination of vermin. He undertook to train the S.S. men in this new method of killing human beings.

Sehm had written down a note of these facts and taken it away with him, but had burnt it the next day on the advice of an old friend, named Wilhelm Pook, to whom he had related what he had seen.

Dr. Marx, a German Barrister practising since 1934, who was called upon to define the status of a Procurist in German law, said :

> " The procurist had the right to act in the name and on behalf of the firm. He is a man who, out of all the others mentioned in the law who have also the right to act on behalf of the firm, has most of these rights. He has the right to act on behalf of the firm and to conclude any transactions or any sort of act on behalf of the firm, and to conclude any transactions or any sort of legal proceedings in which the firm might find itself involved. One can say that anybody who has any sort of transactions with a man who holds the ' Procura ' and who is called the Procurist is in exactly the same position as if he had had that transaction with the head of the firm."

Erna Biagini, a former stenographer of the firm, who was also in charge of the registry, claimed to have read, in " approximately 1942," a travel report of Dr. Tesch which stated that Zyklon B could be used for killing human beings as well as vermin.

Anna Uenzelmann, a former stenographer of the firm, said that in about June 1942 Tesch, after he had dictated a travel report on returning from Berlin, had told her that Zyklon B was being used for gassing human beings, and had appeared to be as terrified and shocked about the matter as she was.

Karl Ruehmling, who had been a bookkeeper and assistant gassing master with the firm, said that Zyklon B was sent by the concern to the concentration camps at Auschwitz, Sachsenhausen and Neuengamme, but Auschwitz was sent the largest consignments.

Alfred Zaun, who was in charge of the firm's bookkeeping, said that, in his opinion, Auschwitz of all the concentration camps had received the most Zyklon B during the war.

Wilhelm Bahr, an ex-medical orderly at Neuengamme, described a prussic acid course which he had attended in the S.S. Hospital at Oranienburg in 1942, and which Dr. Tesch had conducted. He said that he himself had gassed two hundred Russian prisoners of war in Neuengamme in 1942, using prussic acid gas, but that it was not Dr. Tesch who had taught him the procedure which he had applied.

Perry Broad, who had been a Rottenführer in the Kommandatur of the Auschwitz camp from June 1942 until early 1945, described how persons were gassed there with Zyklon B. The people being gassed, to his knowledge, at Auschwitz and Birkenau were German deportees, Jews from Belgium, Holland, France, North Italy, Czechoslovakia and Poland, and Gypsies.

Dr. Bendel, who had been a prisoner at Auschwitz and had acted as a doctor to the inmates, said that from February 1944 to January 1945 a million people had been killed there by Zyklon B.

The remaining Prosecution witnesses were a member of a British war crimes investigation team, who identified pre-trial statements made by the accused ; Wilhelm Pook and his wife ; and five more employees of Tesch and Stabenow. The evidence of Pook and his wife supported that of Sehm to a degree, though not in every detail, but the fact that they had discussed the events of 1942 between his and their giving evidence was recognised by the Judge Advocate to be " undoubtedly unfortunate."

The Prosecution, acting in accordance with Regulation 8(i) (a) of the Royal Warrant, submitted to the Court a sworn affidavit in which Dr. Diels, a former high-ranking German government official, stated that it was common knowledge in 1943 in Germany that gas was being used for killing people.

Among various other documents(1) Dr. Tesch's S.S. subscription card was produced before the Court ; the Defence pointed out, however, that this did not prove that Dr. Tesch had been an active member of the S.S.

5. THE OPENING STATEMENTS OF DEFENCE COUNSEL

(i) Counsel for Tesch

Before calling Tesch to the witness-box, his Counsel stated that he intended to prove to the court, first, that Tesch had no knowledge of the killing of human beings by means of Zyklon B ; secondly, that Zyklon B was delivered only for normal purposes of disinfection and for medical reasons ; thirdly, that parts of gas chambers were sold only for the purpose of exterminating vermin ; fourthly, that concentration camps got the gas only in amounts which were quite normal in relation to the number of inhabitants, and only for killing vermin ; and fifthly, that instruction courses were held only according to the relevant laws and regulations, and again only for the purpose of teaching the method of exterminating vermin.

(ii) Counsel for Weinbacher

Dr. Stumme, defending Weinbacher, said that by the evidence which he would call, he would try to prove that Weinbacher had no knowledge of any note or report by Dr. Tesch to the effect that human beings were being killed by poison gas, and that until the capitulation of Germany he never had any reason to believe that Zyklon B was being used for any other purpose than the destruction of vermin.

(iii) Counsel for Drosihn

Counsel for Drosihn set out to prove, by the evidence which he called, first, that Dr. Drosihn had nothing to do with the business concerning the supply of gas ; secondly, that, being on journeys for considerable periods, he had only a very scanty knowledge of the activities of the business ; thirdly, that he heard about the gassing of human beings only after the capitulation of Germany ; and fourthly, that he never carried out instruction either in concentration camps or for S.S. personnel.

6. THE EVIDENCE FOR THE DEFENCE

(i) Dr. Tesch

All three accused gave evidence on oath. Dr. Tesch stated that he had heard nothing and had known nothing about human beings being killed in concentration camps with prussic acid. He denied ever having attended any conference, or having been approached by any official or military authority on the subject, or having written in any document that human beings should be killed by prussic acid. He specifically denied that he had made the remarks referred to by Anna Uenzelmann. He had never been to Auschwitz himself and had had no reason to believe that the camps were incorrectly run.

He did not think that deliveries to Auschwitz were very high because it was a large camp and, further, it " administered more camps in the General Government of Poland." He could not remember Dr. Drosihn ever having instructed S.S. men. Although the witness had paid subscriptions to both the S.S. and the Nazi Party, he had never been an active member of either. He thought that the passage in the travel report which Erna Biagini had read might have been a record of an answer put to him by a pupil.

Drosihn, stated Tesch, was a technical expert and was not concerned with the administration of the firm or the office. Weinbacher, however, had complete control when Tesch was away from the office.

(ii) Karl Weinbacher

This accused, giving evidence on oath, said that his work was, briefly, to look after the current business affairs in the absence of Dr. Tesch, seeing to the incoming and the outgoing mail, answering any queries, and confirming any orders received. He read some of Dr. Tesch's travel reports but not all, because there were too many ; in particular, he had not read any dealing with the possibility of destroying Jews with Zyklon B. Dr. Tesch had not mentioned any such possibility to him, nor had the witness heard during the war that Jews were being gassed. He had never been inside a concentration camp, nor had he received unfavourable reports during the war about such camps. He, too, stated that Drosihn had nothing to do with the business management. He could not agree that the S.S. would necessarily come to Dr. Tesch for advice on the extermination of human beings with Zyklon B, since, although Dr. Tesch was an expert on the use of the gas, there were plenty of books available on prussic acid.

(iii) Dr. Drosihn

Drosihn claimed that his part in the activities of the firm consisted in collaborating on scientific issues, being in charge of the gassing, for instance, of ships in Hamburg docks, and examining delousing chambers to see whether they were working correctly. He spent about 150 to 200 days a year in travelling on business. He had been to check the working of the delousing chambers in Sachsenhausen and Ravensbruck and had been to Neuengamme ; but had neither been to Auschwitz, nor given instructions to the S.S. in any place. He knew nothing of the size of consignments of gas to Auschwitz. Contrary to Tesch's evidence, the witness claimed to have reported to him once that he had seen happening in the camps things that were contrary to human dignity.

(iv) The Remaining Defence Witnesses

Nine other witnesses called by the Defence did not add very substantially to the evidence before the Court. The subjects covered by their remarks included the character of Dr. Tesch, and the extent of general knowledge in Germany concerning the killing of Jews. Inter alia, they were called to prove that Zyklon B was widely used for the legitimate purpose of killing vermin. These witnesses were two Medical Officers from Hamburg, a doctor and two chemists employed by the German Hygiene Institute, a retired professor of the same institute, the Manager of the Disinfection Institute of Hamburg, a stenotypist formally employed by Tesch and Stabenow, and Dr. Stumme, one of the Defence Counsel, who gave evidence regarding the German law regarding State secrets.

7. THE CLOSING ADDRESSES OF THE DEFENCE COUNSEL

(i) Counsel for Tesch

In his closing address, Dr. Zippel, dealing with the point of law involved, submitted that, since the charge was not one of destroying human life but only of supplying the means of doing so, such action would only be contrary to the laws and usages of war if the means supplied were necessarily intended to kill human beings. To supply a material which also had quite legitimate purposes was no war crime.(2)

Turning to the facts, Counsel claimed that while supplies of Zyklon B to the S.S. were large, it was the duty of the S.S. to see that the state of health in the eastern provinces was kept at a high level, and it was concerned not only with the Wehrmacht itself, but also with the state of health of those parts of the eastern provinces whose population was repatriated to Germany before the entry of Germany into war with Russia. Supplies were not too great to have been used wholly for legitimate purposes. Since 1944 the S.S. had had unlimited permission to use the gas for the destruction of vermin and the prevention of epidemics. He submitted that even in the concentration camps the gas was, at least at the beginning, used only for its legitimate purpose.

(2) The English translation of Dr. Zippel's speech subsequently contains the following passage : " I have two duties to perform. The first would be to try to prove that Tesch supplied this gas not knowing for what purposes it might be used. My second duty is that, even if he knew something about it, still the laws of this procedure would not suffice to find him guilty."

Counsel then questioned whether the Zyklon B used at Auschwitz for killing human beings had been supplied by Tesch and Stabenow. The fact that Auschwitz was situated in the district for which the firm were the agents could not be decisive, for other firms were able to supply that district, especially since during the war the boundaries of the districts were not so much respected as before. Further, the S.S. had been active all over the occupied territories during the war and had had various means of securing the gas. So many people were killed by gassing in Auschwitz that the S.S. must necessarily have used sources other than Tesch and Stabenow.

Counsel observed that the witnesses who were called to prove that Dr. Tesch knew about the unlawful use of his gas had given different versions as to how he must or should have known about such use. He proceeded also to throw doubts on the reliability of Sehm, for instance, in view of a statement of his, denied by many other witnesses, that the files of the firm in which he had found the travel report were kept under lock and key. Miss Biagini had denied that she saw anything in this report about a conference with the High Command of the Wehrmacht or any propositions made by Dr. Tesch to this authority. None of the typists who could have typed the travel report in question knew of it or of any rumour in the office regarding it. Under the existing war-time regulations of secrecy, it seemed impossible that a man as careful as Tesch should have dictated a report on an interview with the High Command on such a secret matter, placed the report where anyone in the office could read it, as was the case with all travel reports, and then discussed the facts with his employees. Dr. Tesch had been shown to be a fair and honest man, and his concentration on his work explained why he had not heard any rumour which may have circulated Germany concerning the gassing of human beings. Regarding the large supplies of gas to Auschwitz in particular, Counsel submitted that Dr. Tesch was too busy to be expected to know what individual customers bought, and in any case the supply of Zyklon was not as important to the firm as were its gassing activities. Furthermore, Dr. Tesch had regarded Auschwitz as a transit camp needing therefore unusually frequent delousing. Counsel concluded that Dr. Tesch knew nothing of the gassing of human beings either in Auschwitz or Neuengamme.

(ii) Counsel for Weinbacher

In his closing address, Dr. Stumme submitted that it had become clear during the trial that Weinbacher did not know that Zyklon B had been used for the killing of human beings. Not one of the witnesses could say really that Weinbacher had any knowledge of a travel report or any observation of Dr. Tesch that human beings had been killed by Zyklon B, or that Dr. Tesch had conversations with Weinbacher on such a subject. Nor had the trial shown that Weinbacher should have had reasonable suspicion, or grounds for suspicion, that Zyklon B had been used for the killing of human beings. Even if Dr. Tesch had written such a travel report as the one alleged, Weinbacher need not have read it, because he was a busy man, and witnesses had shown that many of the travel reports were filed and read by no one. Even Sehm claimed to have come across the particular report by accident, and Miss Biagini because she had to file it. He repeated Dr. Zippel's argument that Dr. Tesch would not write a State secret in a document which all the staff could read. If Sehm had found any other document, it must have been purely by accident ; and no such accident had happened to Weinbacher. In connection with the large supplies of gas which were sent to Auschwitz, Counsel pointed out that Weinbacher had stated on oath that he had never had a summary of supplies to a single customer because this was left to the accountants. In any case, it had been shown that the quantity of Zyklon B needed for the killing of human beings was much smaller than that required for the killing of insects. The quantities of Zyklon B needed for killing half a million or even a million human beings stood in such small proportion to the quantities needed for the killing of insects that it would not have been noticed at all. Therefore, there had been no need for Weinbacher to have grown suspicious, since, claimed Counsel, he knew that Auschwitz was one of the biggest camps and a sort of transit camp. Counsel did not think, therefore, that it was correct to assume that the large quantity of Zyklon going to Auschwitz was any indication of the fact that human beings were being killed there. Supplies for Neuengamme were much lower than those for Auschwitz.

Dr. Stumme did not deal with the law involved, except for stating that Weinbacher, although a procurist, was still only an employee like Sehm and Miss Biagini, against whom no action was being taken, despite the knowledge which they were said to have had.

(iii) Counsel for Drosihn

Dr. Stegemann, in his closing address, confined his remarks to what concerned his client exclusively, while claiming the benefit of everything favourable to him which had already been said by the other Counsel. Every witness who was asked had said that the accused had had nothing whatever to do with the firm's business activities. He could not, therefore, for instance, have known of the size of the consignments to Auschwitz. His relatively small salary showed his subordinate position. He was a zoologist, and first technical gassing master to the firm, and spent more than half the year in travelling. When both Tesch and Weinbacher were away, Mr. Zaun had had the power of attorney, not Drosihn.

Both Dr. Tesch and Dr. Drosihn had said that the latter had never instructed S.S. men in the use of Zyklon B, and not even Sehm claimed that he knew anything about the alleged travel report. Drosihn had been away from the office for irregular periods, and was in no position to read Dr. Tesch's travel reports, which were in any case of no interest to him. Counsel denied that there had been general knowledge in Germany before the end of of the war about the gassing of Jews ; his client could not therefore have acquired such knowledge from rumours.

8. THE PROSECUTOR'S CLOSING ADDRESS

In his closing address, the prosecuting Counsel said that the possibility that some firm other than Tesch and Stabenow could have supplied Zyklon B to Auschwitz could be ruled out, as the latter had the monopoly in that area. The essential question was whether the accused knew of the purpose to which their gas was being put. Counsel admitted that the S.S. were under no restrictions as to the use they made of the gas, and that the direct knowledge which was available to Tesch as to that use was of the scantiest, due to the fear and secrecy in which the S.S. worked. He relied for his case on the evidence of Sehm, Miss Biagini and Miss Uenzelmann.

Counsel said that it was unbelievable that Dr. Tesch did not know that anything wrong went on in the concentration camps. Dr. Drosihn had said without hesitation that he saw things there which were not worthy of human dignity, and that he had said so to Tesch. It was also unbelievable that Dr. Tesch had no knowledge of the amounts of gas being supplied to the S.S. and to Auschwitz in particular, by a firm which was wholly his property. In 1942 and 1943 Auschwitz had been the firm's second largest customer. Dr. Tesch had no reason to believe that Auschwitz was a transit camp, and moreover he was too efficient a man to be duped by the S.S. Counsel completed his case against Tesch by casting doubt on his veracity by showing how contradictions existed between his statements and those of other witnesses on certain details unrelated to the main issue.

Dealing very shortly with Weinbacher's position, Counsel contended that all that Tesch knew must, from the nature of the inner organisation of the business, have also been known by Weinbacher. For 200 days in the year he was in sole control of the firm, with access to all the books, able to read the travel reports, indeed compelled to read the travel reports if he was to carry on the business properly during the periods when his principal was away.

Prosecuting Counsel claimed that Drosihn must to some extent have shared the confidence of Tesch and Weinbacher, even although his activities were confined to the technical side of the firm as opposed to the sales and bookkeeping side.

He concluded that, by supplying gas, knowing that it was to be used for murder, the three accused had made themselves accessories before the fact to that murder.

9. THE SUMMING UP OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE

The Judge Advocate, in summing up the evidence before the Court, pointed out that the latter must be sure of three facts, first, that Allied nationals had been gassed by means of Zyklon B ; secondly, that this gas had been supplied by Tesch and Stabenow ; and thirdly, that the accused knew that the gas was to be used for the purpose of killing human beings. On points of law he did not think that the Court needed any direction.

After summarising the evidence of the Prosecution witnesses, the Judge Advocate said : " To my mind, although it is entirely a question for you, the real strength of the Prosecution in this case rests rather upon the general proposition that, when you realise what kind of a man Dr. Tesch was, it inevitably follows that he must have known every little thing about his business. The Prosecution ask you to say that the accused and his second-in-command Weinbacher, both competent business men, were sensitive about admitting that they knew at the relevant time of the size of the deliveries of poison gas to Auschwitz. The Prosecution then ask : " Why is it that these competent business men are so sensitive about these particular deliveries ? Is it because they themselves knew that such large deliveries could not possibly be going there for the purpose of delousing clothing or for the purpose of disinfecting buildings ? "

In Weinbacher's case, there was no direct evidence, either by way of conversation or of anything that he had written among the documents of the firm produced during the trial, which formed any kind of evidence specifically imputing knowledge to Weinbacher as to how Zyklon B was being used at Auschwitz. " But the Prosecution," said the Judge Advocate, " ask you to say that, in his case as in Tesch's case, the real strength of their case is not the individual direct evidence, but the general atmosphere and conditions of the firm itself." The Judge Advocate asked the Court whether or not it was probable that Weinbacher would constantly watch the figures relating to a less profitable activity of the firm, particularly since he received a commission on profits as well as his salary.

The Judge Advocate emphasised Drosihn's subordinate position in the firm, and asked whether there was any evidence that he was in a position either to influence the transfer of gas to Auschwitz or to prevent it. If he were not in such a position, no knowledge of the use to which the gas was being put could make him guilty.

10. THE VERDICT

Tesch and Weinbacher were found guilty.
Drosihn was acquitted.

11. THE SENTENCE

Counsel for Tesch, pleading in mitigation of sentence, said that if Tesch did know the use to which the gas was being put, and had consented to it, this happened only under enormous pressure from the S.S. Furthermore, had Tesch not co-operated, the S.S. would certainly have achieved their aims by other means. Tesch was merely an accessory before the fact, and even so, an unimportant one.

Counsel for Weinbacher pleaded that the Court should consider the latter's wife and three children ; that he as a business employee might have thought that the ultimate use of the gas was Tesch's responsibility ; and that if he had refused to supply Zyklon B the S.S. would immediately have handed him over to the Gestapo.

Nevertheless, subject to confirmation, the two were sentenced to death by hanging.

The sentences were confirmed and carried into effect.

B. NOTES ON THE CASE

1. A QUESTION OF JURISDICTION : THE NATIONALITY OF THE VICTIMS

The Prosecutor specified a number of Allied countries from which, he claimed, many of the persons gassed had originated. Wilhelm Bahr told how he himself had gassed two hundred Russians. Perry Broad mentioned Jews from Belgium, Holland, France, Czechoslovakia and Poland, among those gassed at Auschwitz. The Judge Advocate, in his summing up, stated that " among those unfortunate creatures undoubtedly there were many Allied nationals."

It was not alleged that British citizens were among the victims.

The British claim to jurisdiction over the case could be based primarily on the fact that by the Declaration regarding the defeat of Germany and the assumption of supreme authority with respect to Germany, made in Berlin on the 5th June, 1945, the four Allied Powers occupying Germany have assumed supreme authority therein. They have, therefore, become the local sovereigns in Germany. There is vested, then, in the United Kingdom authorities, administering the British Zone of Germany, the right to try German nationals for crimes of any kind wherever committed. The claim to jurisdiction is the stronger if, as in the present case, the criminal activities of the accused have been committed in the British Zone of Germany, by German residents of this Zone, although, of course, the crimes to which the accused were alleged to be accessories had their effect outside Germany, in Auschwitz, Poland.

British jurisdiction could further be based on either

(a) the general doctrine called Universality of Jurisdiction over War Crimes, under which every independent State has in International Law jurisdiction to punish pirates and war criminals in its custody regardless of the nationality of the victim or the place where the offence was committed ; or

(b) the doctrine that the United Kingdom has a direct interest in punishing the perpetrators of crimes if the victim was a national of an ally engaged in a common struggle against a common enemy.

2. QUESTIONS OF SUBSTANTIVE LAW

(i) The Crime Alleged

Article 46 of the Hague Convention of 1907, concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, on which the case for the Prosecution was based, provides that " Family honour and rights, individual life and private property, as well as religious convictions and worship must be respected." This Article falls under the section heading, Military Authority over the Territory of the Hostile State, and was intended to refer to acts committed by the occupying authorities in occupied territory. In the trial of Tesch, the acts to which the accused were allegedly accessories before the fact were committed mainly at Auschwitz, in occupied Poland.

(ii) Civilians as war criminals

The decision of the Military Court in the present case is a clear example of the application of the rule that the provisions of the laws and customs of war are addressed not only to combatants and to members of state and other public authorities, but to anybody who is in a position to assist in their violation.

The activities with which the accused in the present case were charged were commercial transactions conducted by civilians. The Military Court acted on the principle that any civilian who is an accessory to a violation of the laws and customs of war is himself also liable as a war criminal.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Evidence — Corroboration — Accomplices — Charge to jury — Whether or not trial judge required by law to instruct jury as to danger of unconfirmed testimony of an accomplice — Whether or not trial judge to define corroboration and analyse evidence in that regard.

The appellants were convicted with conspiracy to traffic in heroin. The only question before this Court relates to the rule of law, long recognized in this Court, requiring a trial judge to warn the jury that it is dangerous to find a conviction on the evidence of an accomplice unless that evidence is corroborated in a material particular implicating the accused. The trial judge so instructed the jury, but the appellants object to the judge's comments on those pieces of evidence which were capable of corroborative effect.

Held: These appeals should be dismissed.

This Court has in the past declared its willingness to depart from its own prior decisions as well as decisions of the Privy Council and House of Lords. The present case is an appropriate occasion to exercise this direction. The law of corroboration is unnecessarily complex and technical.

There is no special category for "accomplices". The testimony of some accomplices may be untrustworthy, but this can also be said of many other categories of witnesses. There is nothing inherent in the evidence of an accomplice which automatically renders it untrustworthy. To construct a universal rule singling out accomplices is to fasten upon this branch of the law a

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE LA COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

Preuve — Corroboration — Complices — Exposé au jury — Le juge du procès est-il tenu, en droit, de signaler au jury le danger que représente le témoignage non corroboré d'un complice? — Le juge du procès doit-il définir ce qu'est la corroboration et analyser les dépositions à cet égard?

Les appelants ont été déclarés coupables de complot en vue de faire le trafic d'héroïne. La seule question posée par le pourvoi a trait à la règle de droit, confirmée depuis longtemps par cette Cour, qui exige que le juge du procès signale au jury qu'il est dangereux de déclarer quelqu'un coupable sur la foi d'un témoignage d'un complice à moins que ce témoignage ne soit corroboré sur un détail essentiel qui incrimine l'accusé. Le juge du procès a donné ces directives au jury, mais les appelants contestent les remarques du juge à propos des éléments de preuve susceptibles de constituer une corroboration.

Arrêt: Les pourvois sont rejetés.

Cette Cour a déjà indiqué qu'elle était prête à s'écarter de ses propres décisions antérieures et de celles du Conseil privé et de la Chambre des lords. Le présent pourvoi constitue une occasion appropriée d'exercer ce pouvoir discrétionnaire. Le droit relatif à la corroboration est inutilement complexe et formaliste.

Il n'y a pas de catégorie spéciale réservée aux «complices». Le témoignage d'un complice peut ne pas être digne de foi, mais on peut en dire autant de celui de bien d'autres catégories de témoins. Il n'y a rien d'inhérent au témoignage d'un complice qui le rende nécessairement indigne de foi. Imposer une règle universelle singularisant les complices revient à attacher à ce domaine du accomplices: where the testimony of an accomplice was admissible, it could justify a verdict of guilty. But while the common law (after some initial doubts) recognized an accomplice as a competent witness, it continued to harbour some suspicions as to the trustworthiness of his testimony. There appeared to be something unsavoury about a self-confessed knave, often for reward, accusing his companions in crime. Thus the practice arose in the 18th century of warning the jury that, while they might legally convict on the basis of the testimony of an accomplice, it would be dangerous to do so unless the testimony were supported or 'corroborated' by other unimpeachable evidence. This warning was for many years a matter for the discretion of the trial judge but in 1916, the English Court of Criminal Appeal declared that the practice had become "virtually equivalent to a rule of law" (R. v. Baskerville, supra, at p. 663). The Court also took the opportunity, at p. 667, to state that 'corroboration' had a precise legal meaning:

> We hold that evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it.

As Lord Diplock observed in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Hester, supra, at p. 1075, there are several formulae in the Baskerville judgment, of which the above is one.

Since Baskerville, a failure to instruct the jury in accordance with Lord Reading's exegesis will usually result in a conviction being overturned. (See Davies v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1954] 1 All E.R. 507 (H.L.))

In evaluating the adequacy of the law in this area, the first question which must be answered is a basic one: why have a special rule for accomplices at all? Credibility of witnesses and the weight of the evidence is, in general, a matter for the trier of fact. Identification evidence, for example, is notoriously weak, and yet the trial judge is not automatically required, as a matter of law, to d'un complice: lorsque ce témoignage était recevable, il pouvait entraîner un verdict de culpabilité. Tout en reconnaissant, malgré certaines hésitations au début, qu'un complice est un témoin compétent, la common law a continué à entretenir des doutes sur la fiabilité de son témoignage. Il semblait être passablement louche de voir un filou repenti accuser, souvent moyennant récompense, ses compagnons de crime. Il devint donc d'usage, au 18e siècle, de prévenir le jury que même s'il pouvait juridiquement trouver l'accusé coupable sur la foi du témoignage d'un complice, il était dangereux de le faire si ce témoignage n'était pas étayé ou «corroboré» par une preuve irréfutable. Pendant longtemps, le juge du procès a eu l'entière liberté de faire ou non la mise en garde, mais en 1916, la Court of Criminal Appeal anglaise a statué que l'usage [TRADUCTION] «était presque devenu une règle de droit» (R. v. Baskerville, précité, à la p. 663). La cour a aussi, à cette occasion, affirmé que le mot «corroboration» avait un sens juridique précis (à la p. 667):

> [TRADUCTION] Nous décidons que la preuve apportée en corroboration doit être un témoignage indépendant qui vise l'accusé et l'associe ou tend à l'associer à l'infraction. En d'autres termes, il faut que ce soit une preuve qui l'implique, c'est-à-dire qui confirme, sous un aspect important, non seulement la preuve que l'infraction a été commise, mais également que c'est l'accusé qui l'a commise.

Comme lord Diplock le signale dans l'arrêt Director of Public Prosecutions v. Hester, précité, à la p. 1075, il y a plusieurs formules dans l'arrêt Baskerville, dont celle-ci.

Depuis l'arrêt Baskerville, l'omission d'instruire le jury selon l'exégèse de lord Reading entraîne ordinairement l'annulation du verdict de culpabilité. (Voir: Davies v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1954] 1 All E.R. 507 (H.L.))

Dans le but d'évaluer la pertinence des principes juridiques dans ce domaine, la première question à se poser en est une fondamentale: pourquoi faut-il une règle spéciale pour les complices? La crédibilité des témoins et la valeur de la preuve sont ordinairement laissés à l'appréciation du juge des faits. La preuve d'identification, par exemple, est notoirement faible et pourtant on n'exige pas auto-variations, inconsistencies, and great complexities" (Study Paper 11, supra, at p. 7). The result is that what was originally a simple, common sense proposition — an accomplice's testimony should be viewed with caution — becomes transformed into a difficult and highly technical area of law. Whether this "enormous superstructure" (to use the description of the Law Reform Commission) has any meaningful relationship with the task performed by the jury is unknown.

The third and perhaps most serious difficulty associated with the Baskerville definition is that the definition itself seems unsound in principle. Prior to the judgment of Lord Reading, there had been controversy over whether corroborative evidence must implicate the accused, or whether it was sufficient if it simply strengthened the credibility of the accomplice. Lord Reading settled the controversy in favour of the former view.

With great respect, on principle Lord Reading's approach seems perhaps over-cautious. The reason for requiring corroboration is that we believe the witness has good reason to lie. We therefore want some other piece of evidence which tends to convince us that he is telling the truth. Evidence which implicates the accused does indeed serve to accomplish that purpose but it cannot be said that this is the only sort of evidence which will accredit the accomplice. This is because, as Wigmore said, the matter of credibility is an entire thing, not a separable one:

> . . . whatever restores our trust in him personally restores it as a whole; if we find that he is desiring and intending to tell a true story, we shall believe one part of his story as well as another; whenever, then, by any means, that trust is restored, our object is accomplished, and it cannot matter whether the efficient circumstance related to the accused's identity or to any other matter. The important thing is, not how our trust is restored, but whether it is restored at all [Vol. VII, para. 2059, at p. 424].

The point can be illustrated with the following simple example. The accomplice, "A", testifies against the accused "B" and "C". There is evidence implicating "B" in the crime, but no evidence implicating "C". Nevertheless, since the dence sur le sujet qu'elle est d'une complexité inouïe et qu'elle abonde en subtilités et en incohérences (Étude n° 11, précitée, à la p. 8). Il en résulte que ce qui à l'origine était une proposition simple et conforme au bon sens — il faut se méfier du témoignage d'un complice — est devenu un domaine du droit difficile et extrêmement formaliste. Nul ne sait cependant si cet «édifice juridique» (selon l'expression utilisée par la Commission de réforme du droit) a un rapport réel avec la fonction remplie par le jury.

La troisième difficulté, et probablement la plus grave, liée à la définition de l'arrêt Baskerville tient à ce que la définition elle-même semble mal fondée en principe. Avant l'arrêt de lord Reading, la question de savoir si la preuve corroborante devait impliquer l'accusé ou s'il suffisait qu'elle renforce la crédibilité du complice faisait l'objet d'une controverse. Lord Reading y a mis fin en adoptant la première solution.

Avec égards, le point de vue de lord Reading semble en principe peut-être trop prudent. On exige la corroboration parce qu'on croit que le témoin a de bons motifs de mentir. On cherche donc d'autres éléments de preuve qui tendent à nous convaincre qu'il dit la vérité. Des éléments de preuve qui impliquent l'accusé servent effectivement à atteindre ce but, mais on ne peut pas dire que ce soit le seul genre de preuve qui puisse accorder du crédit au complice. Il en est ainsi parce que, comme le dit Wigmore, la crédibilité est une chose globale, non divisible:

> [TRADUCTION] . . . ce qui rétablit notre confiance en lui personnellement la rétablit complètement; si nous concluons qu'il veut dire la vérité, nous allons ajouter foi à l'ensemble de sa version des événements; chaque fois que par quelque moyen, notre confiance est rétablie, notre fin est atteinte et il importe peu que ce qui produit ce résultat ait un lien avec l'identité de l'accusé ou tout autre sujet. L'important, ce n'est pas comment notre confiance est rétablie mais qu'elle le soit [Vol. VII, par. 2059, à la p. 424].

L'exemple suivant peut facilement illustrer ce point. Un complice «A» dépose contre les accusés «B» et «C». Des éléments de preuve impliquent «B» dans le crime, mais aucun n'implique «C». Cependant comme la preuve complémentaire a trait à un supporting evidence relates to a vital issue in the case (the guilt of one of the accused) it bolsters the credibility of "A" and increases the probability that he is telling the truth. We therefore believe his story and convict both "B" and "C".

Such a situation arose in Murphy and Butt v. The Queen, supra. The complainant alleged that she had been raped by the two appellants. Murphy admitted intercourse but alleged that it was with the complainant's consent, while Butt denied intercourse altogether. The principal issue was whether the complainant's distraught condition was corroboration of her testimony against Butt as well as against Murphy. The difficulty was that in and of itself, the hysterical condition merely tended to rebut the suggestion of intercourse with consent. This implicated the accused Murphy, who had admitted intercourse but alleged consent. But considered in isolation, the hysterical condition did not directly implicate the accused Butt, who denied intercourse altogether. How then, could the hysterical condition corroborate the complainant's testimony as against Butt?

The majority of the Court emphasized that what was required was confirmation of a material particular of the evidence of the complainant. Once such confirmation was supplied, her testimony was rendered credible as a whole. Mr. Justice Spence, speaking for the majority, put the matter in this way at p. 615:

> It is a material particular of that evidence which must be corroborated. There is no requirement that the whole of her evidence be corroborated. Were that the requirement, there would be no need for even the evidence of the complainant. The so-called corroborative evidence would be sufficient for a conviction.

Mr. Justice Spence did not contend that the corroborative evidence implicated the accused Butt. Rather, in a carefully worded conclusion, Spence J. noted at p. 616 that the corroborative evidence confirmed the complainant's story implicating each of the accused:

> It is all of that evidence plus the complainant's distraught condition upon which the Crown relies as corroboration of not only Murphy's but Butt's rape of the aspect essentiel de l'affaire (la culpabilité d'un des accusés), elle augmente la crédibilité de «A» et la probabilité qu'il dise la vérité. En conséquence, nous ajoutons foi à sa déposition et déclarons «B» et «C» coupables.

Une situation analogue s'est présentée dans l'affaire Murphy et Butt c. La Reine, précitée. La plaignante affirmait que les deux accusés l'avaient violée. Murphy a admis avoir eu des rapports sexuels avec la victime, mais a soutenu que c'était avec le consentement de celle-ci, tandis que Butt a nié tous rapports sexuels. Il s'agissait de déterminer si l'état de désarroi de la victime corroborait son témoignage contre Butt aussi bien que contre Murphy. La difficulté tenait à ce qu'en soi, l'état d'hystérie de la victime ne tendait qu'à réfuter la prétention de rapports sexuels de plein gré. Cela impliquait l'accusé Murphy qui admettait avoir eu des rapports sexuels, mais prétendait que la victime y avait consenti. Mais, considéré seul, l'état d'hystérie de la victime ne mettait pas directement en cause l'accusé Butt qui niait même avoir eu des rapports sexuels. Comment alors l'état d'hystérie pouvait-il corroborer le témoignage de la victime à l'égard de Butt?

La Cour, à la majorité, a souligné que ce qu'il fallait, c'était une confirmation d'un élément important de la déposition de la plaignante. Une fois cette confirmation fournie, son témoignage entier devenait crédible. Le juge Spence, qui a rédigé les motifs de la majorité, s'exprime ainsi (à la p. 615):

> C'est un détail important de ce témoignage qui doit être corroboré. Rien n'exige que tout son témoignage soit corroboré. Si tel n'était pas le cas, le témoignage de la plaignante serait en fait inutile puisque la preuve corroborante suffirait alors pour prononcer une déclaration de culpabilité.

Le juge Spence n'affirme pas que la preuve corroborante implique l'accusé Butt. Le juge Spence souligne plutôt, dans une conclusion soigneusement formulée, que cette preuve confirme la version de la plaignante impliquant chacun des accusés (à la p. 616):

> C'est sur tous ces éléments de preuve ainsi que sur l'état de désarroi de la plaignante que se fonde le ministère public pour corroborer la version de la plaicomplainant. The jury were entitled to consider all of that evidence and to come to the conclusion that that evidence with its rather unusual outline of events does corroborate the evidence of the complainant. It was that evidence which the learned trial judge left to the jury as evidence which they might find corroborative of the complainant's testimony.

In my view, the learned trial judge was correct in his conclusion that that evidence was capable of corroborating the complainant's story implicating each of the accused. [Emphasis added.]

Mr. Justice Spence's approach was to look for evidence which confirmed the story of the complainant. Once the story was confirmed, the complainant could be believed and the accused convicted. Implicit in this approach, it seems to me, is a recognition of the inadequacy of the Baskerville definition of corroboration. Evidence implicating the accused is a possible but not a necessary element for corroboration. Here, even though there was no evidence implicating Butt, there was evidence confirming the story of the complainant and thus it was safe to convict. The important question, as Wigmore pointed out, is not how our trust is restored, but whether it is restored at all.

In my view, a return to the earlier common law approach, to the earlier "common sense" approach has already been foreshadowed in our law. In Warkentin et al. v. The Queen, supra, Mr. Justice de Grandpré spoke of corroboration in these terms, at p. 374:

Corroboration is not a word of art. It is a matter of common sense. In recent years, this Court has repeatedly refused to give a narrow legalistic reading of that word and to impose upon trial judges artificial restraints in their instructions to juries or to themselves.

Later, he observed at p. 377:

This treatment of corroboration as a matter of common sense, the purpose of which is to ensure that no conviction will be entered if there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt, is not restricted to Canada. It is sufficient for my purpose to refer to two recent decisions of the gnante selon laquelle non seulement Murphy mais Butt l'ont violée. Le jury était fondé à considérer tous ces témoignages et à conclure que la preuve, qui révélait des événements plutôt inhabituels, corroborait la version de la plaignante. C'est cette preuve que le savant juge de première instance a retenue lorsqu'il a indiqué au jury qu'elle pouvait corroborer le témoignage de la plaignante.

A mon avis, le savant juge de première instance a eu raison de conclure que cette preuve pouvait corroborer la version de la plaignante impliquant chacun des accusés. [C'est moi qui souligne.]

La démarche du juge Spence a consisté à rechercher des éléments de preuve qui confirmaient la version de la plaignante. Une fois la version de la plaignante confirmée, on pouvait la croire et déclarer les accusés coupables. Selon moi, cette démarche reconnaît implicitement le caractère inadéquat de la définition de la corroboration donnée dans l'arrêt Baskerville. Une preuve qui implique l'accusé constitue un élément possible mais non essentiel de la corroboration. Dans cette affaire-là, aucun élément de preuve n'impliquait Butt, mais certains éléments confirmaient la version de la plaignante et, en conséquence, on pouvait sans danger rendre un verdict de culpabilité. La question importante, comme l'a souligné Wigmore, n'est pas de savoir comment notre confiance est rétablie mais qu'elle le soit.

A mon avis, on trouve déjà un présage du retour à la solution antérieure de la common law, à la solution de «bon sens» dans notre droit. Dans l'arrêt Warkentin et autres c. La Reine, précité, le juge de Grandpré dit à propos de la corroboration (à la p. 374):

La corroboration n'est pas une notion technique. C'est une simple question de bon sens. Ces dernières années, cette Cour a refusé à plusieurs reprises de donner une interprétation légaliste et étroite à ce terme et d'imposer aux juges du procès des restrictions artificielles aux directives qu'ils adressent au jury ou qu'eux-mêmes doivent suivre.

Plus loin, il souligne (à la p. 377):

Cette manière d'envisager la corroboration comme une question de bon sens vise à garantir qu'aucune condamnation ne sera prononcée s'il existe un doute raisonnable sur la culpabilité et cette pratique ne se limite pas au Canada. Il suffit à ce sujet de citer deux and instigating and planning these crimes, but I would like to focus in a little more depth with the aiding and abetting aspect of the case, because it is on this that the evidence is absolutely overwhelming.

14:36:56 Throughout the relevant period, the accused provided vital and substantial assistance, encouragement or support to the RUF, then to the Junta, and finally to the AFRC/RUF alliance in the bush which enabled these forces to conduct this widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population of Sierra 14:37:21 Leone.

To support this indictment, during the course of this trial we will, of course, present many witnesses who will testify and be examined and cross-examined, and we will also present many documents. I'd like just to mention two of those documents, two 14:37:43 of those documents which were found in the Sankoh home/residence in Freetown after his arrest in May of 2000.

One was a narrative report provided by one of his followers, prepared almost like a diary during the periods of 1997 and 1998 and early 1999 in order that the leader, when and 14:38:10 if he were released, could have an account of what happened while he was sitting in prison in Nigeria.

In that ten-page letter, a report, which is signed by a Black Guard Commander and addressed to his commander Foday Sankoh, there are many very interesting passages, but I'd just 14:38:35 like to quote from one, describing events in 1998 between the fall of the Junta, the intervention in February of 1998 of ECOMOG that caused the defeat of the group that had controlled the country for nine months and its withdrawal into the countryside, and the attack on Freetown by some of the same forces some ten will be issues over which Mr Taylor, for one reason or another, would rather speak to the Principal Defender than Mr Jalloh and I think that is perfectly reasonable. It's a reasonable request and falls within his rights to do so. The Office of the 15:31:57 Principal Defender was set up precisely for reasons like that.

Now, we've not heard a convincing reason why the Principal Defender has repeatedly been denied the opportunity to come to Freetown and perform his -- to come to The Hague and perform his duties. On the contrary, what we have seen is that the trial -- 15:32:18 the smooth running of the trial is being hampered by this kind of development and it's not good.

I'm therefore going to issue certain directives addressed -- directed at the Office of the Registrar, the Acting Registrar, and the order or the directive is in these terms:

15:32:43 The Registrar is directed to immediately facilitate the Principal Defender to travel to The Hague for the purpose of speaking with Mr Taylor and sorting out his defence problems. The Registrar is further directed to ensure that logistically the accused has adequate facilities, in accordance with Article 17 of 15:33:11 the Statute, without further delay.

I think with those directives that should bring us to the close of today's proceedings. The trial will adjourn to Monday, the 25th of June, at 9:00.

Please adjourn the court.

15:33:47 COURT OFFICER: All rise.

[Whereupon the hearing adjourned at 3:33 p.m.]

Q. So you were the deputy chief of security for the army division?
A. Deputy chief of staff. Deputy chief of staff for the army division.
11:40:25 Q. And during what years did you hold this position?
A. I had the position from 2001 to 2002, the end of 2002.
Q. Now I'd like to go back to your job as assistant deputy of operations for the --
A. Assistant. Assistant, yeah. Assistant director, yeah.
11:41:06 Q. So this job that you held from about the time President Taylor became the President until, you said, the end of 1999 or 2000, I would like to ask you some questions about your activities during that period of time. Now first of all as the assistant director of operations for the SSS what were your 11:41:33 duties?
A. I was responsible for the security of the President, his family, the immediate family, his properties, the movement of the President, et cetera.
Q. Now during this time where were you based?
11:41:56 A. Based in Monrovia, Executive Mansion was my office.
Q. Now you have mentioned earlier in your testimony the Executive Mansion. Is this the same Executive Mansion you're talking about, the Executive Mansion located in Monrovia?
A. Yes.
11:42:18 Q. And as the assistant director of operations what would you wear when you were working?
A. Blue and navy blue.
Q. What was that?
A. That was a uniform.

Q. Now, let us talk about that. How did it happen that you saw him at Robert international airport?
A. We were instructed by Mr Taylor that that there are arms and ammunitions coming. Paul Molrbah was with us and he was the police director and he was responsible to go and receive these arms and ammunitions. So, we all travelled together to the airport when I saw --
Q. If I could stop you there for just a moment. So, Paul Molrbah, is that what you said? Molrbah?
A. Paul Molrbah.
Q. Do you know how to spell his last name?
A. M-o-l-r-b-a-h.
Q. So, you travelled to the airport?
A. Yes.
Q. You travelled together to the airport?
A. Yes.
Q. And when you got to the airport, what happened?
A. I saw Joe Tuah, Musa Sesay and Sam Bockarie. Martina Johnson had a restaurant at the back of the airport, so they were all seated there together discussing what the quantities were that they will receive each and I heard it myself. When Paul Molrbah said, "Look, I have just received this thing. I have to take it first to White Flower before anybody gets any supply. Nobody is going to get any supply right from here". So that happened at Robert international airport, and these ammunitions were received and they were taken to White Flower and the ammunition was distributed to the various front lines.
Q. Now, let me ask you. You said that the ammunition was going to be taken to White Flower. Now, were you involved in taking the ammunition to White Flower?

A. No, we just drove behind the police director because he said that he was not going to give anything to anybody and nobody was going to be involved in it unless when they reached to the 15:32:53 owner, who was Mr Taylor, he would in turn distribute arms and ammunition to who he wants to give them to.
Q. Now, did you - at that time were you able to have any idea of what quantity of arms and ammunition were brought into Roberts international airfield at that time?
15:33:16 A. No.
Q. Now, you said that they were taken to White Flower. Do you know what happened to them once they arrived at White Flower?
A. The ammunition reached at White Flower. It was after everyone - Paul Molrbah always received ammunition. Sometimes 15:33:39 Musa Sesay say to me that he personally also went to Burkina Faso and got arms and ammunition and bring them to White Flower.
Q. Now, do you know who if anyone at White Flower was in charge of taking care of these arms and ammunition?
A. It was Mr Taylor who had total control over that White
15:34:11 Flower and he had his attendants who worked with him. Sometimes he will tell them to give this amount to such a person and that would be the only time when they will open the warehouse and give the stated amount to that person. That area was controlled by himself.
15:34:29 Q. And do you recall the names of any of these attendants who worked with him?
A. This has taken a very long time. I cannot recall their names, but I know all of them in person.
Q. Now this meeting that you had with Sam Bockarie at Robert three cars or four cars. Those were Toyota Land Cruiser jeeps, open back sleeper jeeps and some even had trucks where they can transport their ammunition.

Q. So one of the ways they would take it it would be to drive it to Lofa County, is that correct, in their vehicles?

A. Yes, in the vehicles. Sometimes they will use the anti-terrorist helicopter to drop it to you and sometimes they may make another plane at Spring field that will transport - Roland Duoh himself would transport the ammunition from James Spring field to Foya.

Q. Okay, now let's stop for a moment. Now you said that they would use the anti-terrorist helicopter to drop it to you. Now you testified earlier that the anti-terrorist unit had two helicopters, is that correct?

A. Yes, they had two helicopters, camouflage and fatigue colour.

Q. When you say camouflage, can you tell the Court what you mean by camouflage?

A. That is army colour.

Q. Is camouflage a solid colour or broken colour?

A. A green colour and a mixed up colour. That is the green, black and grey.

Q. And then also I believe you said army colour. What is that? Or fatigue colour, what is that?

A. Fatigue colour is the green.

Q. And that is a solid uniform?

A. Yes.

Q. Now these helicopters, who flew these helicopters?

A. They had the Ukraine and South Africans.

M-O-R-L-A-I.

Q. Now you said Issa was present in Koidu. Where exactly did you see him in Koidu?

A. At that time when we arrived at Five-Five I met Ovaltine tins, they were all on the floor and I gathered all of them because at that time food was difficult to come by because Issa was in a jeep and he came and those things that we put together, he said we should hand over some to him. At that time I saw him standing with a set in his hand, a hand set.

10:19:06 Q. First of all before I ask you about that, you mentioned a reference to Five-Five. What are you referring to when you say Five-Five in Koidu?

A. Five-Five, it's a place they called Five-Five in the centre of the town where the mosque is.

10:19:31 Q. So Five-Five refers to a specific location in Koidu Town. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And you said you saw Issa and he had a handset?

A. Yes.

10:19:51 Q. What do you mean?

A. He came and met us there. He was in a Suzuki jeep, those short jeeps, green in colour, together with his bodyguards, and he alighted. Those things that we had gathered, he took some from us.

10:20:15 Q. Okay, and you said he had a handset. What do you mean?

A. A satellite phone.

Q. Describe what you saw in terms of the satellite phone?

A. Well, I myself, I am an engineer, electrical engineer, whatever electrical device I see I could identify. When I say it was a satellite phone. A satellite phone, he was having the Ericsson type.

Q. Can you describe what it looked like?

A. The one that had a long antenna.

10:21:22 Q. So let me ask you did you see - what was he doing with it?

A. He was having it in his hand and he was talking.

Q. From your vantage point did you have the opportunity to hear what he was saying?

A. Yes, I heard what he was saying. He was standing by me and 10:22:04 I went close to him and what he was saying I heard. He was saying - he was telling Mosquito that Kono was now under their control.

Q. How did you know it was Mosquito that he was talking with?

A. At that time he wouldn't be able to talk to Mr Kabbah. He 10:22:41 would only talk to Mosquito.

Q. How exactly did he address him?

A. He said, "Master, Kono is under our full fledged control."

Q. So he used the word "master"?

A. Yes, and Master - Mosquito, even when they went to Freetown

10:23:19 that's what they called him, Master.

Q. So did you recognise he was speaking with Mosquito because he was using the term Master?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is Mosquito's full name?

10:23:41 A. His name is Samuel Bockarie, but they cut it short to say Sam Bockarie, but his nickname is Master. Even kids knew that.

Q. Now you said that you, when you saw him you stated, "Those things we had gathered he took some." Describe what you mean?

A. The food stuff that was thrown all over the place, because

Q. Is it correct that you spent a couple of years with the RUF, is that right, in Sierra Leone?
A. Yes.
Q. During your time with the RUF would you see these men often: Mazhar and Jungle?
A. Yes.
Q. Taking them one at a time, do you know why Mazhar was coming to Sierra Leone?
A. If there was any problem where they needed Mazhar, they would send him to Sierra Leone.
Q. How often do you think he would come to Sierra Leone, based upon when you saw him?
A. If there was any problem, that was the time he would come. He wouldn't just come on his own. They would send him.
Q. What about Jungle -
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, who is "they"? We don't know who they are.
MR KOUMJIAN:
Q. Sir, who would send Mazhar?
A. Mazhar, Jungle and Sampson, they only came to Sierra Leone when Benjamin Yeaten sent them.
Q. Do you know if Jungle had a particular job in Sierra Leone when he came to Sierra Leone?
A. I didn't know that he had any other job. They would only send him.
Q. Can you tell us what tribe or ethnicity Jungle is?
A. Jungle belonged to the Kissy tribe in Liberia.
Q. I should say was. Do you know what happened to Jungle?
A. I don't know what happened to him. They said he was did you have any discussion about your bodyguards?

A. The bodyguards, they later changed. He gave me his own bodyguards and then the bodyguards who came with me, he took them over.
Q. How many bodyguards did Sam Bockarie give you?
A. He gave me three bodyguards.
Q. Did you have anything else with you that Sam Bockarie took?
A. He requested for the Yaesu radio that I brought with me and then he took the Yaesu radio that I brought, the one that was assigned to me by Benjamin Yeaten. He requested that I turn it over to him.
Q. Did you do that?
A. Yes.
Q. Can you tell us, when Sam Bockarie came to Buedu with the 300 boxes of ammunition, what was the atmosphere among the RUF present in Buedu?
A. They were very happy and then he called a muster, he called a meeting, and then those of us who were vanguards, he invited us into his house to discuss about the ammunition and then the plan that we should take towards the ammunitions.
Q. Okay. Let us take these slowly. You mentioned several meetings with Sam Bockarie. On that day when Sam Bockarie came back, what was the first meeting he had that you recall?
A. The first meeting, you know it was not with me in particular, but it was the whole RUF. He called Issa Sesay who was in that meeting, Lawrence Wohmandia was there, SB Rogers, Lawrence Wohmandia, Akim, Leatherboot and he said, "That is the material, that is the ammunition, and the operation is that we should take over Kono and Makeni and to terrorise the highway", he said, because Kono was a strategic area for us to get arms so that the mining will continue.

Q. Okay, where it did this meeting with these commanders take place?

A. The meeting took place at his house and then from there they had a vanguard meeting which was in closed doors in his bedroom. The people who they called vanguards, those were the people who brought the war into Sierra Leone. Those were the ones they called the vanguards.

Q. Okay, thank you. I was going to ask you to clarify that, but let me make sure we understand. When you say the vanguards are the people that brought the war into Sierra Leone, what do you mean?

A. I mean the first people who entered into Sierra Leone with the war, with the RUF. Those were the ones who were called vanguards.

Q. Were vanguards Sierra Leoneans, Liberians, or both?

A. They were a mixture. There were Liberians, there were Sierra Leoneans.

Q. Now, you have explained to us what vanguards are. Perhaps I will take this opportunity, you mentioned earlier the word "honourable", can you explain who were the honourables?

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, could counsel go over his question please.

A. Vanguard means -

MR KOUMJIAN: Wait, the interpreter asked me to restate the question.

Q. Can you tell us what the term "honourbles" means?

A. Of the vanguard, or the honourables, or the ones who were the honourbles, who were honourable, Adams, Suleh. They were the form of people who did the overthrow of the AFRC. Those were the people. But the vanguards were the special forces, the first group that crossed into Sierra Leone with the RUF. Those were the ones that were called the vanguards.

Q. Thank you. This first meeting that Bockarie had at the house after bringing the ammunition, you mentioned some commanders and in your answer you also mentioned - you said it was an RUF meeting and you mentioned Akim and Leatherboot. Akim and Leatherboot were AFRC, they were SLAs, is that right?

A. Yes, but they all worked with the RUF.

Q. Can you explain to us, you said Bockarie said Kono was strategic, did he explain why?

A. He said because we needed to generate funds for the RUF and then the only place where we can get more resources to generate funds was Kono, so we could be able to do mining.

Q. Okay, so after the meeting at the house you said there was a meeting in Bockarie's bedroom of the vanguards, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. So were you allowed into that meeting? Were you present for that?

A. No, they never allowed me to attend the meeting, sir. It was only for vanguards and I was not a vanguard.

Q. After the closed door vanguard meeting, was there another meeting?

A. That was a muster parade it was not a meeting, where all the soldiers assembled at the military grounds before Kaisoko's office. That was the time he instructed Issa Sesay that this mission, that the mission is that there should be no retreat, no surrender, "You should make sure you take over Kono and Makeni", and then he said President Taylor said they should be very vigilant and maintain the ground of the RUF, during that muster parade.

Q. You said it was in front of Kaisoko's office?

A. Not Kasava [phon], it is Kaisoko, the military police commander in Buedu.

MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you, I believe that is K-A-I-S-O-K-O.

Q. Sir, after this meeting was there an offensive?

A. Yes, that was the time we took the offensive against Kono and Makeni, and then myself there was an operation from Segwema, from Bunumbu to Segwema, to Jumo Kafebu, Gbava and Bendu junction.

MR KOUMJIAN: Okay, thank you. It is going to take me a few moments to spell some of these. Jumo Kafebu, J-U-M-O and second word K-A-F-E-B-U. Segwema, S-E-G-W-E-M-A. Bunumbu, B-U-N-U-M-B-U. B-U-N-U-M-B-U.

Q. I believe, sir, did you say Gbava?

A. Gbava, Gbava.

Q. That is G-B-A-V-A. In that offensive do you know if the main town in Kono, Kono Town, or Koindu Town as it is sometimes called, was taken?

A. Officially Kono Town was announced on Christmas day that Koindu has been taken over by the RUF.

Q. So that was Christmas day 1998?

A. Yes.

Q. Just so we have an idea, about how long before Kono Town fell did Sam Bockarie come back with the 300 boxes of ammunition?

Sir, where were you when the attack on Freetown happened?
A. When the attack on Freetown happened I was in Buedu.
Q. Where was Sam Bockarie?
A. Sam Bockarie was in Buedu. That was the time I told you that he came with these jean trousers and T'shirts and the car.
Q. How did you become aware of what was happening in Freetown?
A. At 3 o'clock we listened to BBC Focus on Africa and one commander spoke from Freetown saying that they were in control of the State House. Sam Bockarie became angry. He called up Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon asking them why they should allow someone to call the BBC while he, the commander, has not called the BBC. Then from there he himself called the BBC when they were in Buedu. He was speaking to Robin White over the satellite phone. He shot and said we were coming around the State House, but we were in Buedu.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, who is this "he himself called the BBC", is that Issa Sesay?
A. Sam Bockarie, General Sam Bockarie [indiscernible]. He called the BBC from Buedu over his satellite phone.

MR KOUMJIAN:
Q. Did Sam Bockarie maintain any communications with people in Freetown?
A. In Freetown?
Q. In and around Freetown?
A. He was talking to the various commanders over the Yaesu radios. He also communicated with Benjamin Yeaten and Joe Tuah over his satellite phone at night.
Q. Starting with the commanders you mentioned over the Yaesu radios, do you know the names of the commanders he was communicating with?

A. He was communicating with Issa and Morris Kallon.
Q. Anyone else that you recall him communicating with?
A. Those were the names - those are the names I can remember.
Q. On the Yaesu radios, can you tell us, are all of the commanders normally communicating on the same channel?
A. Yes.
Q. Was there someone in Buedu monitoring those channels?
A. There was a chief signal operator called Zedman. He monitored all the radio channels.
Q. You mentioned that Bockarie was on the satellite phone with Benjamin Yeaten, Joe Tuah - those are the names I recall. Did you hear him talking to Benjamin Yeaten and Joe Tuah during the Freetown fighting?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know when the Freetown fighting occurred?
A. It started in January. It was on 6 January that they called from the State House saying they were in control of the State House.
Q. What year?
A. That was in 1999, sir.
Q. When Bockarie called Yeaten did you hear any of the conversation?
A. Yes.
Q. After the calls, would Bockarie ever discuss with you what he had talked to Yeaten about?
A. He said he just explained about the operation, how the men were progressing.
Q. Did Bockarie ever indicate whether he got any instruction from Yeaten, or anyone else in Liberia, during that offensive?

A. Coordinating in which way? I want you to explain, sir.

Q. Let me try the question again because I didn't say coordinating. Did Bockarie ever indicate whether he got any instruction from Liberia during the Freetown fighting?

MR ANYAH: Madam President -

A. He only communicated to Benjamin Yeaten.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Just pause, Mr Witness.

MR ANYAH: I object to the form of the question. Counsel is tacitly, or indirectly, leading the witness with phrases like "instructions" and this has been going on for a while. He could easily just ask the witness what Bockarie told the witness was the nature of these calls.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Koumjian, there have been a few objections to leading. There are implications in some of the wordings you use. Please reword these questions to avoid any form of leading.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. What did Bockarie tell you, or what did you hear him say to Benjamin Yeaten?

A. I heard Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten conversing about the progressive move that RUF has made. I didn't hear any instruction from Benjamin Yeaten to Bockarie to say do this, or do that, at that time.

Q. Thank you. During the fighting in Freetown, in the January offensive, did you play any part in that? What was your assignment?

A. I told you that I was assigned to Segbwema, Bunumbu, just in case any wounded soldier comes, I will take that wounded should maintain the RUF and to maintain the controlled areas of the RUF.

Q. Who said, just to be clear, who said that the message had come from President Taylor?

A. Sam Bockarie, Sam Bockarie, sir, Sam Bockarie.

Q. Thank you, now it is clear. Did Sam Bockarie pass that message to anyone?

A. Yes. He talked to Issa, Morris Kallon.

Q. Sir, when you were with the RUF did you become aware of any strategies to deal with attacks from jets?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us about those RUF strategies?

A. The strategy was you should not cook during the day time. You should not set fire during the day. You do not launder and hang the clothes on a line. You are not entitled to rear chicken in the town. You are not entitled to keep a dog, because those things, when the jet discovers them they can operate.

Q. Was there any strategy involving radios?

A. The strategy was the monitor - Zedman monitored the radio stations from the Nigerian ECOMOG who were based in Lungi. Also Memunatu and Sita, they monitored from Monrovia. If a jet takes off from Monrovia on the RIA - because Victor Malu, who was the first commander, was staying in Monrovia - so they will call "448", so the radio operator would ring a bell and everybody would escape. That was the only strategy that I knew about.

MR KOUMJIAN: Some of these names we have spelt before. Situ, S-I-T-U, Memunatu, M-A-M-A-N-T-U:

Q. Sir, you said RIA, what do you mean by RIA?

A. The international airport of Liberia.

Q. You mentioned a Victor Malu. Who is Victor Malu, M-A-L-O?
A. He was the ECOMOG force commander in Liberia.
Q. Excuse me, it is M-A-L-U I understand.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, there was a word the witness mentioned before the letters "448", a word or a name.
A. It is a radio code. It is a radio code the radio operator used for the jet, called "448".
MR KOUMJIAN:
Q. So what does that mean when you hear over the radio "448"?
A. If the radio communication says "448" it means the jet is up.
Q. You talked about some men coming with Bockarie when he first arrived in Buedu after your arrival. Did you ever see any other arrivals of manpower into Sierra Leone?
A. Yes, later some more men followed.
Q. Do you recall when that was approximately?
A. That was after the Freetown and Kono invasions. Another 150 men came with Mazhar and Sampson.
Q. What happened to those men?
A. The men were dispatched into another group of the RUF.
Q. Sir, you mentioned, when we were back and talking about the meetings before you left Liberia, that you had met an Ibrahim Bah. Did you ever see Mr Ibrahim Bah in Sierra Leone?
A. Yes.
Q. Where was it that you saw Mr Bah?
A. I saw Mr Bah in Kono with Eddie Kanneh and CR.
Q. Do you remember which year that was?
A. That was during Issa Sesay's administration, sir.
Q. Well, can you estimate which year, or years, it might have

A. That happened in May.
Q. What happened then with the peacekeepers after the attack on Sankoh's house?
A. We got Dennis Mingo, who was called Superman, and Gibril Massaquoi and one bodyguard to Foday Saybana Sankoh who was called Ray. He was the Black Guard commander. They retreated from Freetown and then we got them. We met with them Gbere Junction. That was the time they reached amongst us, they entered our midst, and I drove them to Makeni and then they said Foday Saybana Sankoh gave them message that Issa Sesay should take charge of the RUF.
MR KOUMJIAN: Just a spelling, Gbere Junction, Gbere is G-B-E-R-E:
Q. After the message came from Sankoh that Issa Sesay should be in charge, what happened with the peacekeepers?
A. The peacekeepers were still under their control and we saw Mazhar and Jungle, they came for Issa Sesay in Makeni. We drove to the border. They crossed into Liberia. When Issa Sesay came back he brought a satellite phone. He called a meeting in Makeni at the military police headquarters at the roundabout because we were using the old bank in Makeni. So he spoke to all the commanders. He said, "Charles Taylor said we should release the peacekeepers over to him in Liberia", and then now he never had any alternative but for us to release the peacekeepers. So we took the peacekeepers, we drove them to the border and then they were handed over to Benjamin Yeaten and then Joe Tuah again in Foya.
Q. When Issa Sesay came back from Liberia you said he brought a satellite phone. Did he indicate where he got the satellite phone?

A. He said the satellite phone was issued to him by Charles Taylor and then with the satellite phone he came with 50 boxes of ammunition again.
Q. Okay, thank you, Mr Witness. I now want to move to a different topic and that is your knowledge of diamond mining during the time you were with the RUF. You mentioned seeing diamonds with Sam Bockarie in the Boulevard Hotel. Did you ever see Sam Bockarie with diamonds once you were in Sierra Leone?
A. Yes.
Q. When was that?
A. That was in Buedu. I saw Kennedy, the mining commander, giving diamonds to Sam Bockarie in Buedu.
Q. What were the diamonds contained in?
A. The diamonds were in the plastic, in papers, and it was sealed up.
Q. When you were with the RUF in Sierra Leone did you see any mining operations?
A. Yes.
Q. Where did you see mining operations?
A. In Kono.
Q. When you say Kono, you mean the whole district of Kono?
A. Yes, I mean Kono District, sir.
Q. Can you tell me the names of any places where you saw mining going on and, please, very slowly because I will spell each one as you say it.
A. One was that Number 11 Plant.
Q. Okay, next one?
A. Number 11 was - then what did he do?

A. And then they will travel, but if you don't have the pass you will not pass through the check point. That means you are trying to escape.
Q. Now, this pass that was issued by the RUF G2 or G5, would the border guards in Sierra Leone, the men at the border, would they recognise it and let the civilian through?
A. Yes.
Q. How about when you got to the Liberian check points, the three you mentioned on the way the Foya?
A. You will still show the same pass and then they will know that you have not escaped from the RUF controlled area.
Q. The people that were manning these check points in Liberia were who again?
A. They were Liberians.
Q. From which units?
A. The AFL and the Liberian national police and the customs.
Q. Thank you. I now want to move to a different area and ask you, Mr Witness, about any RUF operations you were involved in outside of Sierra Leone. Can you tell us were you involved in operations by the RUF outside the borders of Sierra Leone?
A. Yes.
Q. Let's talk about the first one. Can you tell us the first operation you were involved in?
A. The first operation was Mosquito Spray, 1999, August, when they attacked Liberia from Voinjama and Kolahun. That was the first operation that I took part in.
Q. When you used the words Mosquito Spray, can you explain to those not familiar with it, what is Mosquito Spray?

A. Mosquito Spray was one commander of the LURD rebels who entered into Liberia. That was the name that he called himself, he said Mosquito spray. He said he was in Liberia to spray the AFL and the national police and to remove Charles Taylor from power.

Q. Okay. Now, you mentioned Mosquito - excuse me, but the name Mosquito, was there more than one Mosquito?

A. The name Mosquito Spray of LURD rebels.

Q. Thank you. But you mentioned before Sam Bockarie being called Mosquito, is that right?

A. Sam Bockarie was Mosquito, but this one is Mosquito Spray of LURD rebels.

Q. I understand that. Was there another Mosquito on the Liberian side of the border?

A. Yes, that was Liberian Mosquito. They call him Christopher Varmoh of the NPFL.

Q. Okay. Varmoh is V-A-R-M-O-H. Mr Witness, do you know the real name of the LURD rebel who called himself Mosquito Spray?

A. No.

Q. Thank you. Can you tell us how did the RUF get involved in that operation against Mosquito Spray?

A. Sam Bockarie contacted us in the morning to prepare ourselves to move to Foya. He said because LURD rebel Mosquito Spray had already attacked Voinjama and Kolahun. So Benjamin Yeaten said we should move. So he got the instructions from Benjamin Yeaten. So he called Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon for us to move and implement this operation in Liberia. And then he, Sam Bockarie, said - and he was busy in Foya and then the Liberian commander that we based in Foya he was called Stanley, Colonel Stanley of the AFL. He was the commander in charge of Foya.

Q. Okay, thank you. Mr Witness, a few questions about this. First, can you help us by letting us know when this happened, when the RUF was involved in the operation against Mosquito Spray?

A. That was what I said. I said August 1999, sir.

Q. Thank you. Now you said Sam Bockarie indicated he had gotten this information - instructions, you said - from Benjamin Yeaten. Do you know who Benjamin Yeaten reported to?

A. Benjamin Yeaten reported to Taylor, sir.

Q. Did you go and fight then in Liberia?

A. Yes, we fought against the LURD rebels against Mosquito Spray and we took over Kolahun and then we took over Voinjama. That was a successful mission for us. And then Benjamin Yeaten, Sam Bockarie and the defence minister Daniel Chea, they arrived on helicopter in Voinjama and then they were flown to Monrovia, sir.

Q. In that operation in Liberia which RUF commanders were involved?

A. That is what I am saying. It was Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon and then the overall commander was Sam Bockarie who was based at Foya.

Q. Were there other units besides RUF that were fighting together against Mosquito Spray?

A. Yes, they were the AFL whom I told you that there their commander was Colonel Stanley, the battalion commander in Foya, and the police and the ATU. We all did the operation to clear off Mosquito Spray from Kolahun and Voinjama.

Q. I don't believe we have discussed the ATU before. Can you tell the judges what the ATU unit is?
A. From the SSU, when the SSU was dissolved they formed the ATU which were the special mansion guards assigned to Charles Taylor at the mansion.
Q. So it's the same as the SSU, but just the name changed. Is that correct?
A. Yes, to ATU.
Q. So of all these units that were involved, the AFL, the ATU, the RUF, was there any overall commander?
A. The overall commander we had was Benjamin Yeaten. He was the field supervisor for us.
Q. Okay, thank you. Now I would like to move to the second operation that you were involved in. Were you involved in a second operation outside of the borders of Sierra Leone with RUF?
A. What? Come back. Please repeat.
Q. Certainly. I have now finished asked you about the Mosquito Spray operation - sorry, but we're getting the interpretation on the channel.

Okay, let me start again, Mr Witness. I apologise. So I am finished now asking you about Mosquito Spray and I am asking you were you involved in any other operations outside of the borders of Sierra Leone with the RUF?
A. Yes.
Q. What was the next one?
A. The next one, after releasing the peacekeepers which were the Zambians and the Kenyans, when Issa Sesay came with the 50 boxes of ammunition we moved from Makeni to Kamakwie and then the commander who was in Kokuima, who was called Colonel Komba Gbundema, he was the commander in Kamakwie and then we used the Kabbah ferry, we went to Madina Wola, we attacked Madina Wola in Guinea and then in that attack we incurred more casualties.

Q. Okay. What year did this occur then? You said it was the time of the peacekeepers in Makeni that were taken captive?

A. That was 2000.

MR KOUMJIAN: Just a few spellings. The witness mentioned Kamakwie, K-A-M-A-K-U-I-E and he mentioned a name Komba Gbundema, fist name K-O-M-B-A, second name G-B-U-N-D-E-M-A.

Q. In that operation after you crossed the river were you inside then Guinea?

A. Yes, we attacked Madina Wola on a Sunday.

MR KOUMJIAN: Madina Wola is M-A-D-I-N-A and the second part W-O-L-A. Two words.

Q. Who were you fighting against in that operation?

A. In that operation we were fighting against the Guinean army.

Q. Who was commanding the RUF forces?

A. It was Short Bai Bureh.

MR KOUMJIAN: Short is spelt S-H-O-R-T, Bai B-A-I, Bureh B-U-R-E-H.

Q. Can you tell me if any other commanders - if you recall the names of any other commanders involved in that operation?

A. The commanders were many. We had Kennedy who also incurred serious injury. They had this guy that I called Komba Gbundema because we passed through his own territory and then we even lost another commander who was called Olu.

MR KOUMJIAN: I believe Olu is O-L-U.

Q. Sir, did you receive any information - were you told why

RUF was going to Guinea, attacking Guinea at that time?
A. Issa Sesay said Charles Taylor informed him that we should give him grounds in Guinea so that the time for the disarmament into Sierra Leone, some of arms we had would be crossed over into Guinea for safekeeping.
Q. What were the results of that operation?
A. In the operation we attacked Madina Wola, we fought over Madina Wola and then we even killed one of the Guinean commanders who was called Colonel Kanigba Bangura. We captured his car, one Nissan Patrol jeep, and the commander of the mission himself, we used him and we captured two millimetre weapons that used electronics current batteries.
Q. Did you suffer many casualties among the RUF?
A. We had more casualties. That was the reason why we didn't make it up in the operations, we decided to move back, because the Guineans were using the military helicopter and the jets to bombard the borderline.
Q. After you returned to Sierra Leone. Is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. What was the next operation you took part in with RUF outside the borders of Sierra Leone?
A. The next operation was Dennis Mingo, alias Superman. When we moved from Kono we attacked Guinea closer to Kissidou. We went in between Kissidou and Gueckedou and then they had a refugee camp there where both Liberians and Sierra Leoneans were based. They call it Toma refugee camp and Yende refugee camp.
Q. Thank you. Mr Witness, I am going to spell a few words. Fist you mentioned Kissidou. That is we believe K-I-S-S-I-D-O-U-G-O-U. And then Gueckedou, again it is

G-U-E-C-K-E-D-O-U with accents over the Es. You mentioned Dennis Mingo. Was he the - what was his role in that attack?

A. He was the commander that led the troops from Kono to cross into Guinea.

Q. In that --

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Sorry, Mr Koumjian, there was a name of a refugee camp that you did not spell.

THE WITNESS: Yes, Toma and Yende refugee camps in Guinea.

MR KOUMJIAN: Toma I believe is T-O-M-A and the second word I believe the witness said was Yende, Y-E-N-D-E.

Q. What kind of people were in those refugee camps?

A. They were both Liberians and Sierra Leoneans.

Q. Who were you fighting against in that operation?

A. We were fighting against the Guinea government.

Q. And how long do you think you were in Guinea that time?

A. We spent a month.

Q. Did you return to Sierra Leone?

A. We retreated to Sierra Leone.

Q. What was the next operation that you were involved in with RUF outside the borders of Sierra Leone?

A. We moved to Kono. From there Issa provided transport for every one of us and we moved to Liberia and we were in Foya where we met Colonel Benjamin Yeaten and he said, "Guys, everybody should get ready for the operation." He said, "This time around we have to take Gueckedou." so we used the Solomon crossing point. That is the crossing point between Liberia and Gueckedou they call Solomon.

Q. So you were crossing into Guinea from Liberia, is that correct?

operators allowed to use the satellite phone to communicate at all?

A. No, that was not allowed, but it was their responsibility because this satellite phone was in the radio room. Any time there was an incoming call they would go and call Mr Sam Bockarie to come and receive the call. When he himself would receive that call, whatever he discussed, you would be there and prepare a message and transmit it to all RUF communications to inform all RUF authorities.

10:15:30 Q. Now you have mentioned Sankoh and Mosquito. Did any other person or any other leader of the organisation get a satellite phone at some stage?

A. Yes, the times Sam Bockarie left and went to Liberia to Mr Taylor and again when Foday Sankoh was arrested in Freetown

10:16:07 during the May incident 2000 Issa took over as a leader, as acting leader of the RUF. During that time again Issa had a satellite phone through Liberia. So he himself was talking to Mr Taylor. So whatever they discussed, he would do the same thing by sending messages to all commanders through field radio

10:16:40 communications. And even if the RUF spokesman or whomsoever was representing BBC Focus on Africa or the VOA, they would use the same satellite phone to talk.

Q. Mr Witness, you mentioned - in your testimony yesterday we discussed the various bases that the RUF had and you mentioned 10:17:18 some new locations that you were able to take at a certain point and one of them I remind you was Zogoda. Now how long were you able to hold Zogoda?

A. Zogoda, what I can recall from early 1995, '96, those were the times we spent at Zogoda, our leadership spent at Zogoda.

you have mentioned is the Bumpe mission. Is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. When did this mission take place?
A. Well, Bumpe mission was the first mission among all the 15:06:16 missions that took place in 1998.
Q. Can you give an indication when in 1998 roughly?
A. Well I cannot say this now, the month that the mission took place, but --
Q. From where was the Bumpe mission planned?
15:06:48 A. It was at Superman Ground, where the mission was planned, and before we planned it Sam Bockarie sent a message. He said we should try and be - he sent a message with ammunition. The message was we should try and make Kono District fearful to ECOMOG so that they could not base there.
15:07:28 Q. Now, I would like to just take you back briefly to your testimony earlier today and I believe you used the same expressions to make the area fearful. What is the meaning, or what was the meaning, of this expression in this situation?
A. When we talk about an area being fearful, it was the 15:08:05 destruction of life and property, where there will be killings, am putations, burning of houses, destruction of bridges, setting up road blocks. All of those things would happen and that will have made the area fearful.
Q. Now, in this case the order was to make Koidu or Kono 15:08:36 fearful for ECOMOG. Is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Who undertook the operation? Which commander?
A. The commander who was given this Bumpe mission was CO
Rocky, then I was there myself as a radio man. I was there Ammunition were in the box and some had arms inside. The other carton that I have also spoken about had a commercial radio inside. That was an FM radio. The other thing also I have spoken about, they were now using it in fact. That was a satellite phone.

15:47:12

Q. Now did you have any idea what type of arms were in the boxes?

A. Yes, the arms that were in the boxes he showed us all on paper. He said, "This is AK-47". He said, "This is GPMG". He said, "This is RPG". Those were the weapons he showed to us and LMG.

Q. Did you actually see the list yourself or did he just explain a list that he had to you?

A. Well, I saw the list clearly during the meeting. He showed it to everybody and some of us went over the list.

15:48:19

Q. Now what else did he say after you had inspected these items that he showed you, after you had looked at them and gone back to the meeting what else did he say?

A. Sam Bockarie told us that he was just coming from Mr Taylor's sight with a very big plan so that we will be able to take over the country. So I saw them bring a map of Sierra Leone. He said this is how Taylor has planned and he told him to come and implement it. He showed us the areas we should attack. I can still recall the towns that he made mention of on the war plan.

Q. Please give us the names of those towns?

A. One of the towns was Kono, Sefadu itself, or you call it Koidu. The other town was Kabala. The other town was Makeni. Magburaka, Matotoka, 91, Masiaka and Waterloo. Waterloo.

Freetown. We will miss our targets. So that was the reason why we went through all those areas before we go to Freetown.

Q. Now just before we continue with this line of your evidence, you mentioned a herbalist was sent by Mr Taylor, is that correct?

15:53:33

A. Yes, one herbalist came. This herbalist - sorry. Sam Bockarie gave Superman in Buedu and we all travelled and came to Koidu Town. It was this herbalist that was going to inspire us so that we will have no fear of attacking Kono and the various areas I have named. This herbalist was - we were going to use this herbalist to go on a mission that we called Fitti-Fatta mission. This herbalist, after we had come to Kono before the Fitti-Fatta mission --

15:53:57

Q. Now before you get on to going back to Kono, how did you know this herbalist came from Mr Taylor?

15:54:25

A. Well, the herbalist himself was introduced to us during the meeting. It was from there that I was able to know that he came from Mr Taylor. And he said with all these plans these were the herbalists who were helping him in Liberia. Therefore he sent him to us also so that he will come and work for us.

15:54:49

Q. Now who introduced the herbalist to you?

A. It was Sam Bockarie. He did all the introductions I have spoken about.

Q. And did he explain how exactly the herbalist was going to help you?

15:55:11

A. Yes, I can explain the way he explained. This herbalist was brought. He said he was going to carve on our bodies and in that light if he rubs those concoctions on our bodies you will not be in fear of the guns and then you will not be able to be to do. They will send messages and discuss what they wanted to do, what they planned to do. More especially when they had relationship between Superman, Mosquito and SAJ Musa, during that time they normally spoke on that and then SAJ Musa accepted that 16:05:01 Superman should go and meet him so that they do their military exercise together.

Q. This move, proposed move, for Superman to join SAJ Musa in Koinadugu, was it part of the plan that had been discussed in Buedu by Sam Bockarie?

16:05:27 A. Yes, I had said it earlier that it was a plan for - to let SAJ Musa and Superman join together and that they were responsible for Kabala and Makeni and that was part of the plan.

Q. Now how long were you in Buedu on this trip?

A. Well, we did not complete a week.

16:06:03 Q. Before you left Buedu, were you given anything?

A. Yes, before I left Buedu to return to Superman Ground, which was in the Kono District, we received plenty ammunition, food and drugs, there was something that we referred to as morale booster. Those were drinks for fighters.

16:06:35 Q. And what was the ammunition and arms intended for?

A. These particular arms that were given to us were for that Fitti-Fatta mission and also ammunition that Superman was supposed to carry to SAJ Musa.

Q. Did SAJ Musa - did Mosquito say anything about how arms and 16:07:03 ammunition would be provided for the big plan which he had discussed which was a long-term plan?

A. Yes, he told us that the ones that he had showed to us were not at for this - just this first mission plan. He said there are more ammunitions of ammunition coming for that big mission.

to the transmission. That was the control station in Buedu and they would send it to all stations. That was their responsibility. That 448 information was coming from Buedu, Sam Bockarie's station.

12:04:51 Q. Now, let us come to Freetown. You have testified already that you entered Freetown on 6 January 1999, correct?

A. Yes, it is correct.

Q. Now, can you describe your entry into Freetown. From which end of Freetown did you get into the city?

12:05:22 A. Well, we used the main highway from Waterloo to Freetown, from Kossoh Town - from Hastings, Kossoh Town to Freetown. We entered from the eastern part of Freetown and we entered with heavy firing. We entered Freetown fighting, but before we got to Freetown we divided ourselves into groups.

12:05:52 Q. Hold on, Mr Witness. (Your Honours, Kossoh Town is K-O-S-S-O-H, Kossoh). Yes, you have said you divided yourselves into groups. Which groups did you divide yourselves into?

A. We divided ourselves into fighting groups. That means - you know, Freetown is not a small village. It is a very big city

12:06:23 if we didn't divide ourselves into groups. Every group had a commander, who will lead it. We appointed some areas where the commanders would go like Ferry Junction, that is one point, Ferry Junction covered Upgun, and also State House in Freetown, that was one target, the second target was Pademba Road, which is the 12:06:53 maximum prison in Freetown, and we had the National Stadium and these are the areas I can recall. We divided our groups according to these areas and appointed commanders to go to these areas.

As for me personally, I was in a group with my radio with my men and we entered Pademba Road. Some other group went to State House, some other went to National Stadium and the others we left at Ferry Junction. That is from the back. That was how we divided ourselves and, as we entered, everybody would go his various ways.

12:07:32

Q. Now can you describe, you said you were with the group that went to Pademba Road. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you describe the activities that you engaged in when you entered Freetown, your group?

12:07:54

A. Please repeat.

Q. What did your group do on the day that you entered Freetown?

A. I said we divided ourselves into groups. I was among the group that went to Pademba Road. What we did at Pademba Road, our mission was to receive Foday Sankoh and to also release all the political detainees who were called collaborators of the juntas. That was our mission.

12:08:09

Q. Mr Witness, what was at Pademba Road?

A. Pademba Road, that is the maximum prison in Freetown. Those who were at Pademba Road were the RUF and the AFRC detainees detained by the government of Sierra Leone, and even the former leader, that is Foday Sankoh, he was jailed there. That is why we made it a target to go there and release all - to release him and all the fighters and members of the AFRC and RUF who were under detention there.

12:08:36

Q. Did you succeed in doing this?

A. Perfectly, yes. All the targets that I have been naming, everybody succeeded. We who were at Pademba Road we attacked and drove away all the securities, we used force on the Prison Officers to open the gates and some of them - we beat some of them because they delayed us. We opened the gate and we asked them where was Foday Sankoh and they said that people they had taken Foday Sankoh. They didn't know where he had been taken to. We opened the gate, everybody went outside and we made sure all the rooms were open and everybody went out.

Pademba Road was congested. In fact, some prisoners were sleeping on cartons. All the rooms were occupied. Civilians, juntas, RUF rebels, all of those who were there were released, including former President JS Momoh and one of the journalists, Hilton Fyle, he was among them with some other important people. Because of time now I cannot name everybody, but these are the names I can remember now. And also Gibril Massaquoi, who was former spokesman for the RUF. These are the names that I can recall right now.

MR BANGURA: Thank you. Now, your Honours, I need to go over some spellings. Fyle I see the spelling here is different. It is F-Y-L-E. Hilton Fyle. Massaquoi, okay, that is correct:

Q. Now apart from Gibril Massaquoi who was a senior member of the RUF as you have said, was there any other member, senior person within the RUF that was released from prison that day?

A. The only person I can remember was a friend of RUF who was Steve Bio. He was a businessman, he was a friend to RUF, but I was not too sure whether he was a full member of RUF. But there were other men, because after the release of these people at Pademba Road our manpower in Freetown nobody could tell, because even ourselves we didn't know each other any more because those who came from Pademba Road had one slang. They said they were been happening and the discussion by Gullit, that was going on through my radio communication set.

Q. Now on this first day that you entered Freetown, was there any communication between the forces - your forces - and Sam Bockarie?

12:17:10

A. Yes, as we entered Freetown we were based and settled, the authorities got settled at State House, they were able to communicate with Sam Bockarie about the situation. Gullit told Sam Bockarie that, "You said we should not enter, but however we have now entered and thanks to God we were able to get State House, Pademba Road and the National Stadium. Our men are still advancing, were still under fighting and we were able to release JS Momoh, Gibril Massaquoi, Hilton Fyle and some other prominent authorities. In response, Massaquoi - I am sorry, Mosquito told Gibril Massaquoi that, "Do as a military man".

Q. Can you just pause. Was Mosquito - you said, "Mosquito told Gibril Massaquoi". Who was Mosquito responding to? Who called Mosquito and who was he responding to?

A. I am sorry, Gullit called Mosquito and told him those whom we had released from Pademba Road. In response, Mosquito said Gullit should - Gullit and others should take great care of those people and Gullit told him that they were under safekeeping at State House. Mosquito said Gullit should provide security and take great care of those people, until he tried by all possible means and dispatch them to Kailahun. So, whatever activities that was going on Gullit used to transmit the message to Mosquito. At that time SAJ Musa was dead. And even myself as a radio man I had my personal radio, because it was my responsibility according to Mosquito to give him all detailed information about the Freetown operation. That was what I was doing. Any conversation going on between Mosquito and Gullit I used to monitor that. At times I will be at the radio station and I will get information about that and -- 12:19:52 THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness go over the last bit?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter needs you to repeat the last part of your answer.

THE WITNESS: Any information that was going around in 12:20:09 Freetown either by voice or by messages, that is written messages, I used to monitor that and write it down, and any information that Gullit failed to tell Mosquito that was my responsibility to tell him. And from there I was able to give him details, but when SAJ Musa entered Camp Rosos and what 12:20:37 happened around his death and after his death, what actions, why we didn't wait and we entered Freetown. I gave all of these pieces of information to Mosquito.

MR BANGURA:

Q. Mr Witness, apart from the prisoners from Pademba Road whom 12:21:00 you had taken to State House, were you holding any other persons there at State House?

A. Yes, as we were fighting so we were capturing ECOMOG troops, but for the SLA we didn't have much problems with them because some of them were running from the government and coming 12:21:21 to join us with their guns. And for the ECOMOG soldiers, when we captured the ECOMOG we killed them at the front line and those that we would bring to the State House we report them to Gullit and he himself would report to Sam Bockarie. Sam Bockarie would tell him that he had no prison for ECOMOG. No politicians. As a situation changed and you said that as this happened you got messages from Sam Bockarie. Is that correct?

A. Yes, all what I am talking happened in 1999 under Sam Bockarie's administration. All what I am talking about we 12:30:18 used to get message from Sam Bockarie on a daily basis.
Q. When you say the military situation changed, what do you mean?
A. Well, at that time we were not that strong to fight ECOMOG. Their firing power was more than us and so we started to retreat.
12:30:41 Up to the time we got to Upgun turntable, we moved from that point and went to Shell Road and at that time the situation had changed against us. ECOMOG was chasing us. That is what I meant by the military situation had changed.
Q. What messages or orders did you get from Sam Bockarie in 12:31:05 this changed military situation?
A. After the military situation had changed, we received reinforcements of a message which says we should make Freetown more fearful than before. Also we received another message that we should come to Waterloo, we should send troops to meet at 12:31:36 Hastings because at that time the other troops that we had left behind us, which was Superman, Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon and some others, had come to Waterloo. So, for them to reinforce us we were to send a team so we should organise ourselves and attack Kossoh Town, together with Superman's group, so that we could 12:32:07 clear Kossoh Town where ECOMOG was based on the main road. The troops from Waterloo could join us after that. That was the message that we got.
Q. Mr Witness, you said that one of the messages ordered that you should make the area more fearful. At this point, what was - what was this message intended, or what did you understand from this message?

A. Well, what I knew if before we entered Freetown if we had a message that we should make an area fearful it was to destroy, kill, amputate, destroy bridges, set road blocks. That was the meaning of making an area fearful. And in that message he talked about some areas as well and it was not just one message. I spoke about Kissy, Kissy Road, Kissy Terminal and the ferry and some other important areas. He said we should set up road blocks that should delay ECOMOG to clear and maybe that will lead them to reduced attention.

Q. Now, you mentioned Kissy Terminal. What was there?

A. Well, what I understand by Kissy Terminal it is a place where they will get oil, petrol, diesel, engine oil. That was where it was refined. That was a major area for Sierra Leone.

Q. Did you follow the orders about burning Kissy Terminal?

A. Yes, I went there myself and I saw fire. I saw thick smoke coming from the place and I made sure that the order was implemented.

Q. Now following these orders from Sam Bockarie, can you describe the scale of atrocities that occurred after he had passed his orders to make the order more fearful?

A. Please repeat.

Q. Now you said that - you already described some of the things that you were doing in Freetown, burning and killing and blocking roads, and because the military situation changed Sam Bockarie sent you a message, or messages, one of which was to make the area more fearful. Did this - in carrying out this order, did it even change the situation regarding the acts that clarify that? What exactly were you supposed to do from both sides?

A. Gullit's side, Gullit was to send fighters at a point where they will meet and attack Kossoh Town and Superman, Issa Sesay, 12:38:21 Morris Kallon were to also dispatch fighters to go and attack Kossoh Town so they will clear the route, so that the fighters could come and enter Freetown and join Gullit so we could re-attack and regain all the areas we had lost and even to take over - to take all over the city. That was the plan.

12:38:42 Q. Now, which forces were at Waterloo at this time?

A. The forces which were at Waterloo were Superman's group, including Morris Kallon and Issa Sesay. That was the group which was at Kono and Koinadugu which led - they all came and joined at Waterloo. According to the plan which we had at Buedu, they had 12:39:10 now come and merged. If they had met us there we would have entered Freetown together, we wouldn't have stopped getting Freetown, but our group did not wait.

Q. Now, did you send - did Gullit send troops to Kossoh Town as was ordered by Mosquito?

12:39:33 A. No.

Q. What about the troops waiting at Waterloo? Did they advance to Kossoh Town as was the plan?

A. Yes, those men organised themselves. They attacked Kossoh Town at night until daybreak, but they could not get the town. 12:40:00 But among that group they had one AFRC strong fighter who was Red Lion - sorry, Red Goat, Rambo Red Goat. He was the only man who could garner up to 15 manpower and they bypassed ECOMOG and came to Freetown and joined us.

Q. Now, this fighter who you have just mentioned, Rambo Red

Goat, you say he was an SLA and he had 15 manpower, I assume fighters, is that correct, with him?

A. Yes, he came to Freetown with 15 manpower.

Q. Now, at the time that he left, or up until the time that he left Waterloo and bypassed ECOMOG positions, who was he fighting under?

A. Well, he was with Superman's group.

Q. Now, when this group came into Freetown, did anything happen?

A. Those 15 men that I told you about, they came to Freetown and met us at Kissi Old Road. When they arrived they said from Waterloo they attacked Kossoh Town but they could not succeed, but Rambo, who was Red Lion - sorry, Red Goat, was able to take 15 men to come and join Gullit's group in Freetown, but at that time they met us now on our way going. The day they arrived Gullit passed an order that all those who had motorcycles and vehicles and what you could not - somebody could not carry, let us burn everything. So, everything was put at one place and they were burned. Vehicles and everything was burnt, those that we could not carry. So, when Red Goat Rambo came he said he had not come to return. He said he had come to stay in Freetown. Some men were happy to be with Rambo in Freetown and Gullit himself, who he met there, he gave him the okay to stay. In fact, at that moment only a few of us returned because we were more than 4,000 in Freetown. Most of the people hadn't guns, particularly those who were released from Pademba Road, so most of us, the armed men - a few armed men and a few unarmed men returned to Waterloo. Rambo stayed in Freetown with many other men.

Q. Now, amongst the men that stayed in Freetown with Rambo, do you recall any of them that you now remember?

A. Yes, I can recall one name: Rambo Red Goat himself.
THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, the witness has called a name that I need clarification on.
12:43:42 PRESIDING JUDGE: Could you please repeat the name for the interpreter.
MR BANGURA:
Q. Could you go back, Mr Witness?
A. Striker, who was the Red Lion's commander, Red Lion
12:43:55 Battalion Commander.
Q. And what was the size of the force that you said decided to stay in Freetown with Rambo Red Goat?
A. That number was too much. I cannot recall now.
Q. Now, were any orders given to Rambo Red Goat before you
12:44:23 pulled out of Freetown?
A. Yes, of course. Rambo was given an order by Gullit.
Q. Now, the decision to allow Rambo Red Goat to stay in Freetown, was it discussed at all in any communication with Mosquito?
12:44:44 A. Yes, Mosquito told him that as far as that man has said that he is living there and he is able to get manpower, they should leave and they should come back to Waterloo, reorganise themselves and re-attack Freetown. I want to ease myself.
MR BANGURA: Your Honours?
12:45:12 PRESIDING JUDGE: I see. Madam Court Attendant, if you would assist the witness to leave, please.
[In the absence of the witness]
MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, could I take advantage of the break and just bring to the Court's attention that we have

MR MUNYARD: You are absolutely correct, Madam President. I wanted to make it plain to the Court that as far as accommodating witnesses is concerned, we are happy with the accommodation of this particular witness and I wanted the Court 12:48:04 to know that we are in discussions with the Prosecution to try to accommodate other witnesses to whom the 42 day rule does apply and, as I have indicated at the moment, our offer to accommodate them has not borne fruit. I will say no more than that at the moment.

12:48:50 PRESIDING JUDGE: The Bench will accommodate this request for the Prosecution. We note the remarks of the Defence and any other applications will be dealt with on a case by case basis.

[In the presence of the witness]

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, Mr Bangura, please proceed.

12:49:51 MR BANGURA:

Q. Are you all right, Mr Witness?

A. I am all right, thank you.

Q. Now, you were at a point where orders had been given to Rambo Red Goat who was going to stay in Freetown, but before that 12:50:17 I think I asked you whether any communications were had with Mosquito about Rambo Red Goat staying in Freetown. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the communication about and did - what was the 12:50:35 communication about?

A. One thing I would want to start with, it was when they were unable to attack Kossoh Town, or to capture Kossoh Town, Mosquito asked Gullit to try and pull out and, by doing so, when Gullit received Red Goat that was Rambo, Gullit told Mosquito that the men said they are going to stay in Freetown. He said they should leave, but he told them that they should destroy to make the area fearful until they came back and reorganised themselves, but, "Since the time you got the former president and the other 12:51:28 prominent people, you try and pull out with them, you bring them to Waterloo so that you can dispatch them to me," Mosquito, "and then we will reorganise and regain Freetown." That was how the communications went on.

Q. Do you know what specific orders Gullit gave to Rambo Red 12:51:51 Goat before he left him in charge of Freetown?

A. Yes.

Q. What were the orders?

A. One - when our commanders said that we should make the area fearful, that means we should destroy most of the houses. We 12:52:13 should burn down houses, make road blockades, amputate and kill. That was the order that he gave. Also he gave him the order that any politician Rambo knew and saw, he should not spare them and he should not bring any prisoner of war to him, and he should not make any reports on that. That is what he told him. That was 12:52:43 what Gullit told Rambo.

Q. Now, how long had you been in Freetown before you left?

A. In Freetown, our own group, I can say we spent almost two weeks and then we also left the other groups.

Q. Now, you mentioned earlier that one of the men who decided 12:53:27 to stay with Rambo Red Goat was Striker, who was of the Red Lion battalion, is that correct?

A. Yes, he also had men who were fighters. They were many and he was the commander for this Red Lion battalion and since he said he should leave, that meant that the majority of his fighters who were with him, when he was leaving they all left with him.

Q. Now, when you say leaving can you clarify what you mean?

A. What I mean, when he said he was leaving it meant that he was leaving with Red Lion, or I mean Red Lion would go from Freetown. It means all the fighters who were with him were going to stay in Freetown.

Q. Mr Witness, do you mean that Rambo Red Goat and Striker were leaving Freetown to go somewhere else?

A. No, what I am saying, Rambo, Striker and the manpower who was behind him they all stayed in Freetown. We left them in Freetown and then we came to Waterloo.

Q. Thank you. Now, following the orders which were given to Rambo Red Goat by Gullit, do you know what happened as you left Freetown?

A. Yes, some of the things that happened in Freetown, in the first place we never left them behind with radio communication sets, but anything that happened we used to listen to commercial radio and even the BBC media and they reported on activities, atrocities, that took place in Freetown. They used to talk on that.

Q. Were you able to gather what was happening in Freetown as you left?

A. Yes, most of the information, though not all, but we were able to gather them over the media that those were radios from Freetown. We got information from them that the rebels in Freetown were amputating civilians, they were raping, they were burning down houses, they were making road blockades, they were killing. Those were some of the things that were on the media message Mr Taylor sent and Issa Sesay in Makeni, he called everybody and told all the authorities and fighters on the ground and they loaded these people from Makeni. In fact they were stripped naked, they travelled from Makeni to Yengema. Yengema 15:07:00 was one RUF strong training base. Yengema is a very short distance from Koidu Town which is in Kono. From Yengema he crossed with them to Liberia. He transferred all of them to Foya. It was a helicopter that came from Monrovia sent by Mr Taylor and when this helicopter came it brought a lot of 15:07:31 ammunition from Liberia and dropped them at Foya. In return it took the peacekeeping forces, loaded them into the helicopter and took them to Liberia to Mr Taylor. That was how we released those people.

Q. Now what happened to the equipment of the peacekeepers that 15:07:53 you also seized?

A. Those smaller weapons were with us, but the bigger ones like tanks - we arrested the UN from two locations, in Makeni Town they were based there and Makote. Makote is about 12 miles off Makeni.

15:08:29 Q. Can you pause, Mr Witness. Your Honours, Makote is M-A-K-O-T-E. Continue, please.

A. Those armoured tanks, I don't know but they were many. The UN commander who was in Sierra Leone at that time, he arranged with the RUF leadership who was Issa Sesay and they accepted to 15:09:00 come and collect their materials. That was where Morrison Kallon went. I was there myself and I saw one prominent reporter, a BBC reporter Mark Doyle. He came and interviewed all of us in the village where those armoured tanks were released. But the lowest weapons and the vehicles, trucks and Land Rover vans, we were

Q. Were you aware that Mr Taylor worked personally with ECOWAS in order to secure the release of these individuals?
A. No, I was not aware personally that Mr Taylor worked with 14:36:56 other authorities for the release of the UN. I didn't know about that.
Q. And you were not aware, were you, either that resulting from international requests Mr Taylor sent a former Foreign Minister, Mr Cooper, a former Foreign Minister of Liberia, to 14:37:22 Freetown to negotiate the release of these UN peacekeepers? You were not aware of that fact either, were you?
A. No.
Q. And I think finally on this point you were not aware either, were you, that the helicopter that was sent to pick up 14:37:32 these individuals in Foya was a UN helicopter? You were not aware of that fact, were you?
A. No, it was not a UN helicopter. I was not aware that it was a UN helicopter. It was Mr Taylor's helicopter that they used to collect those people.
14:37:50 Q. Witness, you are lying when you say that. It was a UN helicopter and it didn't contain ammunition, did it?
A. I am not telling lies. It was Charles Taylor's helicopter that came and received those people from Foya.
MR CAYLEY: Now, finally, if the witness could be shown the 14:38:12 bundle again:
Q. Just a final question on the UN peacekeepers. Can you tell the Court where you were when the men in Foya - the UN peacekeepers - were picked up by the helicopter? Where were you at the time?

all you told them was that you returned in 2002?
A. It might be - I told you it might be a mistake. It is maybe a mistake.
Q. Can you think of any reason why they would have made that very specific mistake?
12:46:11
A. I can just tell you that it is a mistake, the rest I really don't know.
Q. The fact is you obviously told them that, didn't you?
A. No, I told them that I returned there in 2002.
12:46:44
Q. The only sensible explanation for that appearing on that page is that you gave that information to the investigators, would you agree?
A. Yes, I am the one who told them to write it.
Q. I am not sure, Madam President, if that "yes" was agreeing with me or not, but I am going to move on from this.
12:47:11
PRESIDING JUDGE: Please do, Mr Munyard. I think we have explored it well.
MR MUNYARD: Sure. Can we move on to tab 8, please:
Q. Before we actually look at tab 8 can I ask you this,
12:47:38
Mr Camara: You told us, it seems like a long time ago now, but you told us when I was first asking you questions that when you were seen by investigators from this Court you received no benefits whatsoever except that your expenses were reimbursed. Do you remember saying that?
12:48:11
A. The benefits you are talking about, they didn't give me anything. You asked me if they had given me anything. I said that they paid my transport, but they didn't give me anything. They didn't give me any bribe. They didn't tell me that they were going to give me something if I accepted to testify.

Q. What you actually said was that you had never been given anything other than the reimbursement of your expenses.
A. Yes, that is the answer I gave you when you were talking about benefits I received. When you asked me if I had received 12:49:08 any benefits, or money, I told you that they didn't give me - they didn't promise me anything and they didn't tell me they were going to give me something. They just reimbursed my transport costs.
Q. In 2006 --
12:49:34 MR WERNER: Sorry, your Honours. He said something further.
THE INTERPRETER: And they gave him also some assistance.
THE WITNESS: They paid my transport, for my transport and then they gave me a little assistance.
12:49:59 MR MUNYARD:
Q. "They gave me a little assistance" is something new and different from what you told us last week. Do you remember, Mr Camara, saying to us last week, when I asked you the question, "They have reimbursed your expenses, but they have not given you 12:50:21 anything else in addition, is that right?", that your reply was, "Tell him that exactly that is what happens."
A. I am telling you, if my memory serves me right, the question you asked was that did the investigators promise anything to me for me to accept to testify. That was the 12:50:55 question you asked. I told you no. I told you that they paid for my transport and they gave me some assistance.
Q. You never told us that they gave you some assistance when I asked you these questions that first afternoon that I was questioning you.

A. Maybe it is the way you put the question to me, but it is normal that they pay for my transport and they gave me some assistance.

Q. What I asked you - and I am reading from the transcript - was, "Have you, in fact, ever received any benefit of any sort for giving information to the Special Court investigators, or lawyers?" Your reply was as follows, "Tell him that these people, the investigators, normally when they came to the Gambia, what I can say, what I have from them was that my fare to go and come used to be refunded because I pay my own fare to see them. Apart from that I had no benefit from them." Today you are telling us that apart from that you did have some benefit from them in the form of some assistance. Why didn't you tell us, when I first asked you the questions, that you had some benefit in addition to the reimbursement of your expenses?

A. What do you mean by benefits? If you say benefits that means that I am in a deal with them when you talk about benefits and there was no deal between me and them. There is no business whatsoever between me and them. That is what I understood by benefits.

Q. Mr Camara, you made it very plain, I suggest, on Monday afternoon that the only money you ever received from the investigators was the reimbursement of your expenses and nothing else. Do you agree?

A. They have given me - they have refunded my transport fares, but I don't think of that in terms of benefits because there was no deal between us. You must be thinking that there was a deal between them and myself.

Q. Don't worry about what I may or may not be thinking.

Concentrate, please, on the question.
A. I am telling you I am giving you my opinion. I am not - you thought that I was maybe in business with these people and that I got some benefits from them. That was not the case.
12:55:06 Q. Mr Camara, don't trouble yourself with what might be going on in my head. On Monday I asked you, "Were you given to understand by the investigators that there would be any benefit for you, of any sort, if you were to tell them - if you were to answer their questions, or give them information?" That is the 12:55:34 question I asked and this was your reply, "Tell him that what I was told by the investigators was that this is - this is something voluntary if you want to join, but I was not promised for anything that they will give me something, no."
A. That is what I told you. I told you that nobody promised 12:55:58 me anything.
Q. I then asked you the following question, "Have you ever had any benefit for giving information to the Special Court investigators?" You replied as follows, "Tell him that you are not hearing what I am telling you. I said I am not looking for 12:56:22 any interest for this and I was not promised that they were going to give me something if I give evidence."
A. That is what I said. Nobody promised any benefit. When you talk about benefit that means, according to me, that means that there is something going on, a business, or a deal.
12:56:45 Q. I then went on to ask you the following question, "I am going to ask you the question one more time only. It is a very simple question. Have you ever received any benefit for giving information to the investigators?" Now, at that point Mr Werner intervened and said that you had already answered the question.

The Presiding Judge replied to Mr Werner as follows, "He didn't actually, Mr Werner. The first question was in the future, were you promised at the time, and this one is have you had any benefit? They are two different questions." The learned judge then allowed me to ask you the question once again. I asked you the question again, "Have you, in fact, ever received any benefit of any sort for giving information to the Special Court investigators, or lawyers?"

You did not at any stage say, "What do you mean by benefit?" You gave the answer that I first read out to you when I began to ask you these questions. You gave the answer, "I used to be refunded because I pay my own fare to see them. Apart from that I had no benefit from them. When I leave they do not send anything to me in the Gambia as benefit." So in your mind you knew perfectly well what benefit meant, didn't you, on Monday afternoon?

12:58:07

A. What is benefit according to you? Because benefit, for me, is when you are in a deal with somebody. Assistance and benefit, for me, are two different things according - in my opinion, in fact. So, the way you understand benefit is completely different from the way I understand it.

12:59:12

Q. Just in case that was the position I then went on to ask you a further question so that we could all be absolutely clear. The question I asked was this, "So the position is this: That they have reimbursed your expenses, but they have not given you anything else in addition, is that right?" To which you replied, "Tell him that exactly that is what happens."

12:59:44

A. That is - you said benefit. That is why I answered yes.

Q. Mr Camara, I did not mention benefit in that last question.

I am going to repeat it to you so that you understand what I asked and what your answer was on Monday afternoon. The question I put was as follows, "So the position is this: That they have reimbursed your expenses, but they have not given you anything else in addition, is that right?" And your answer, "Tell him that exactly that is what happens."

13:00:46

A. Yes, that is what I said. They refunded my transport costs, but the amount they gave me was a kind of assistance, assistance for me, because since I have started seeing them they said that it was on a voluntary basis so something which is voluntary, whatever they give you is assistance.

13:01:14

Q. Do you mean over and above your travel expenses they have given you assistance?

A. Yes, that is assistance only. For me that is not benefit because it was on a voluntary basis, so the amount they gave me was a kind of assistance.

13:01:53

Q. Do not get bogged down with benefit. We have moved on from benefit. The answer that you gave us on Monday was therefore untrue, wasn't it?

A. No, no, no, that is not true.

13:02:18

Q. You were first interviewed in 2006 in October and November. Did you incur expenses in 2006 when you were being interviewed in the Gambia?

A. Yes, I got some assistance, help from them.

Q. I want you to be absolutely clear about this. This is the first time they ever come to see you and then a month later they come again. Now, just let me ask you this first of all: When the investigators first made contact with you was it by letter, by telephone, or did someone turn up at your house and say they wanted to see you and interview you? How was contact first made?

A. The way I happened to know these people, the way they learnt of my - I was in Gambia. I don't know how they learnt that I was in Gambia. I just saw them when they came in the 13:03:47 Gambia. They got my telephone number, they called me and I went to meet them.
Q. And when you went to meet them did that involve you having to travel at your own expense?
A. I went to meet them and the place I reside are completely 13:04:27 two different areas.
Q. Right, we don't need to know where you reside, or where you went to meet them, but did it involve you having to spend money in order to go and meet them in this other place?
A. Yes, I paid. I paid my own transport to go and meet them
13:04:58 in a different village.
Q. Was that transport by road, or by rail, or for that matter by air?
A. By car.
Q. Did it involve you staying overnight anywhere?
13:05:32 A. Yes, indeed. It is because I wanted to stay overnight, but I could have come back the same day.
Q. Were you given expenses for your overnight stay?
A. They didn't even know that I would be spending the night. I didn't tell them that.
13:06:08 Q. So they didn't give you any overnight expenses for that first interview. Is that what you are telling us?
A. They gave me something, but I didn't tell them that I was spending the night somewhere.
Q. All right, let us just be clear on what they gave you. Did they give you money - did you have to pay to travel by car? Was it like a taxi?

A. Yes, yes, I had to hire a car.

Q. You had to pay for that. Did you also - did you get reimbursed for that?

13:06:55

A. Yes, it was refunded.

Q. Did you get a meal allowance for that day?

A. Yes, because the amount they gave me exceeded my transport cost. I knew that it was more than what I spent, so I thought that the rest was a kind of assistance.

13:07:32

Q. What currency were you paid in?

A. Sorry, can you repeat that question, please?

Q. Certainly. What currency were you paid in? What kind of money? Was it Gambian money, or was it United States dollars, or what was it?

13:08:02

A. They gave me some assistance. US dollars, in US dollars.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Munyard, I am just concerned and I am seeking guidance from Madam Interpreter. Is the witness using the word "assistance" or "subsistence"?

13:08:35

THE INTERPRETER: In fact it is assistance, help assistance, not subsistence.

MR MUNYARD: Thank you, your Honour:

Q. What was the amount of this assistance, over and above the cost of you having to hire the car?

13:09:05

A. They gave me 100 US dollars.

Q. On top of the money that you had spent hiring the car, is that right?

A. I always paid my transport myself. Since I have left my village, until I arrived, I always paid - I always paid my transport. They gave me the money and told me that it was as a refund and the effort also I made to come and meet them.

Q. So you were reimbursed your expenses and you were rewarded for giving them information. Would you agree with that?

13:10:21 A. Yes, that was not a payment.

Q. You were reimbursed your expenses, the cost of the hire car, and, to use your words, you were also given money for "the effort" you made to come and meet them?

A. Yes.

13:11:01 Q. So you were rewarded for the effort in coming to be interviewed?

A. Yes.

Q. And the amount of the reward, was it 100 US dollars only, or was it 100 US dollars and the cost of the hire car?

13:11:34 PRESIDING JUDGE: [Overlapping speakers].

THE WITNESS: Yes, yes, yes.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: What exactly do you mean, Mr Witness? Two propositions were put before you, which of these two propositions are you agreeing with?

13:11:59 THE WITNESS: Can you repeat?

MR MUNYARD: I will repeat the question:

Q. Were you given a total sum of 100 US dollars, or were you given 100 US dollars and, on top of that, the cost to you of hiring the car?

13:12:31 A. They gave me 100 US dollars as a compensation for the efforts I made and for my transport. That is what happened, in my opinion.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, does that mean you got a total of 100 dollars?

A. Yes, yes, exactly. That is what they gave me. That is what they gave me the first time I went to see them and whenever I met them later on they gave me some help.

MR MUNYARD:

13:13:31 Q. Did you pay for the cost of the hire car in Gambian currency, your own money?

A. That is - in Gambia we use the dallasi. You cannot use the US dollars, so I had to pay in dallasi.

MR MUNYARD: Madam Interpreter, it has come out on the 13:14:03 screen as "in Gambia we use the dollars"?

THE INTERPRETER: No, the dallasi, the dallasi.

MR MUNYARD: It is a different word that needs to be typed onto the transcript:

Q. Mr Camara could you spell the dallasi, please, the unit of 13:14:18 Gambian currency?

A. D-A-L-L-A-S-I, dallasi.

Q. Thank you. How many dallasis did you have to pay, roughly speaking, for the hire car?

A. I am going to give you an estimation then: Something like 13:15:11 500 dallasi from my village to the meeting point.

Q. And how many dallasis are there to one US dollar?

A. At that time the dollar was not so high. I think it was something like 1,000 - it amounted to something like 1,700-1,800 dallasis at that time.

13:16:19 Q. So the rest of the 100 US dollars was your reward for being interviewed. That is correct, isn't it?

A. Yes, yes, I already told you that it was a compensation for the efforts I made and the transport I had to pay for.

Q. The next time they saw you did they see you in the same place? Again, I don't need to know the identity of the place, but did they see you in the same meeting point, or somewhere different?

A. Yes, yes, I used to meet them at a hotel. I used to meet them at their hotel.

13:17:22

Q. Did you stay overnight on the second occasion, now November of 2006?

A. No, I didn't spend the night. No, no, no, I never spent the night there.

13:17:47

Q. So what were your expenses on the second visit? Was it just the hire of a car and a meal?

A. Normally when I see them, when I meet with them, when - if my memory serves me right, because they usually give me 100 dollars, US dollars.

13:18:27

Q. Do you think that is what you got in November of 2006?

A. I don't remember exactly the exact date, but --

Q. Don't [overlapping speakers].

A. They came on one of the occasions and on that occasion I told them about problems of the education of my kids and on that occasion they gave me some assistance also. I remember that. They told me that if I had any problems I could tell them so that they would try to help me.

13:19:15

Q. Help you financially you mean?

A. Yes, yes. They gave me something for my kids.

13:19:53

Q. I just want to be clear about the second time you were interviewed. Do you think now that you received 100 US dollars on that second occasion?

A. I didn't put that on record. I didn't record the - but sometimes they gave me dollars, but some other times also when they knew they had dallasis they would give me dallasis.

Q. Mr Camara, I know that it was a while ago and I am not expecting that you necessarily kept records, but I just want to be clear, if we can be, do you think that on the second occasion, 13:20:55 the second interview, also in 2006, that you were paid another 100 US dollars?
A. Yes, they gave me dollars, but I can't tell you exactly on which occasions because sometimes they gave me dallasis also.
Q. Right. There is a reason for me asking you about those 13:21:23 first two occasions and I can tell you it is this: That we have been supplied with written records of the money that you received, but the written records do not indicate that you received anything at all in 2006, so that is why I am having to ask you rather more questions about those first two interviews.
13:21:58 A. Yes, indeed, they gave me something.
Q. Now, can I ask you to look at tab 8, please. On the first page of tab 8 we are looking at a document headed "Special Court of Sierra Leone, all Disbursements for Witness" and on the left-hand side, underneath the crest of the Special Court, there 13:22:52 is an indicator "TF1-548" and we know that that is an indication that you are the witness that this document is concerned with. Do you understand that?
A. Yes, I do understand.
Q. Have you ever seen this document, or something like it 13:23:18 before?
A. No, they usually gave me a paper to sign to acknowledge that I have received money from them in a form of assistance.
Q. I want us to look through this document, please. You will see that there are a number of boxes on each page. There are four boxes on each page. The first three on the first page have not been filled in and so we start with box 4 and in that box we can see the date of 27 February 2007. Now, I want to ask you this: When you were interviewed were you given the money for your expenses and your reward for giving information on the very same day that you were interviewed? Did it always happen like that?

A. They gave me that sum of money as compensation and for my transport costs.

Q. Yes. Did they give it you on the day that the interview finished?

A. Yes, when the interview finished they used to give me the money at that time.

Q. Was there ever a time when they travelled to your village to give you the money some time after you had been interviewed?

A. Coming to my village you said?

Q. Yes, did that ever happen?

A. No, no, no. I am the one who used to meet them on appointment, no, but they don't know where - they don't know my village.

Q. Was there ever a time when they didn't give you the money after the interview and so you had to go back and see them again to get the money on some later date?

A. Yes, possible.

Q. Did it happen? Anything is possible, did that actually happen?

A. Yes, that happened.

Q. How did it happen? Did you travel - let us break it down, first of all. After you had been interviewed, were there occasions when they didn't give you the money even though the interview had finished and you were ready to travel back to your village?

A. Yes, that happened. They said it was on a voluntary basis. I was not expecting them to give me something every time.

13:27:12

Q. Well, they always reimbursed your expenses, didn't they?

A. Yes, they did refund my expenses. They refunded my expenses, yes.

Q. I just want you to help us with this before the break: Was there ever a time when you were interviewed and they said at the end of the interview, "Sorry, we can't give you the money now, you will have to come back to see us in a couple of weeks time", or a couple of days time, or anything like that? Did that ever happen?

13:27:44

A. No, no. To my knowledge, usually when I met with them, usually they would stay for three, four days in the Gambia and sometimes at the end they would give me the money.

13:28:06

Q. At the end of the interview, or later at the end of their stay?

A. Sometimes when they are about to leave the country, before they leave the Gambia.

13:28:39

Q. Last question before the break: So you would have to go back to your village and then come back again some time later to see them to get your money. Is that what you are saying?

A. Yes.

13:28:56

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, on the computer it is about one minute to go.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I am watching this clock, but we will not split hairs, Mr Munyard.

MR MUNYARD: I am in the Court's hands.

PRESIDING JUDGE: We will take the lunchtime adjournment and adjourn until 2.30. Madam Court Attendant, please adjourn the Court.

13:29:23 [Lunch break taken at 1.30 p.m.]

[Upon resuming at 2.30 p.m.]

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard? I apologise, Ms Hollis.

MS HOLLIS: No problem, Madam President. I just wish to note that Nicholas Koumjian is not with us this afternoon.

14:29:56 Otherwise, the composition remains the same.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you for that, Ms Hollis.

MR MUNYARD: No change on the Defence team:

Q. Mr Camara, can you have a look, please, at tab 8, and I am going to ask Madam Court Officer to come over and put it on the 14:30:15 screen for you. Madam Court Officer, could you show us the lower half of this document, please. Thank you. Mr Camara, if you look at the fourth box, the bottom box, this is the first piece of information that we on the Defence side have been given about the money that was paid to you for assisting the Office of the 14:31:08 Prosecutor. You will see that the date there is Tuesday, 27 February 2007 and Mr Haddad, the investigator who you are familiar with, has filled in some entries in that box, and what we can see there is that for meals and communication and transport you were paid 100 United States dollars. Do you see 14:31:54 that?

A. Yes, I see it.

Q. And the amount was approved by Mr Berry, who is the other investigator who you are familiar with?

A. Yes, exactly.

Q. Now, we all understand what meals and transport are. I know it is not your document, you haven't filled this in, but have you any idea what "communication" refers to? You were given money for meals, transport and communication. Do you know what 14:32:46 "communication" refers to there?
A. According to my understanding, I have been told that it was the way we used to communicate with each other - with one another.
Q. Why did that cost you money?
14:33:29 A. When I used to communicate by mobile phone with them and mobile phone you need to subscribe.
Q. Did the investigators buy you a mobile phone?
A. No, I already had a mobile phone.
Q. So, this money is intended to cover the cost of your calls
14:34:00 to the investigators?
A. Yes, that is what I think.
Q. Right. And are you able to help us -- [Mobile phone interference] Can I just check in case. Neither Dutch nor English, not me. I am sorry, Mr Camara, we had a little bit of 14:34:34 interference from a foreign object. Appropriately enough it would seem it was a mobile telephone. Can you just help us with this. How much were your calls to the investigators in February of 2007? In other words, how much of the $100 was covering the cost of your phone calls to the investigators in their hotel?
14:35:16 A. I didn't tell you that I was using the whole amount of 100 US dollars for only communications.
Q. No.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Well, Mr Witness, counsel is asking how much - what part of that one hundred was used.

THE WITNESS: Actually, I can't tell you the exact amount. I didn't calculate. I didn't think anybody was going to ask the question - that question.

MR MUNYARD:

14:35:48 Q. Well, I don't want to spend a long time on it. [Mobile phone interference] I think it is happening again, unless - I don't want to spend a long time on this subject, but can you help us with this. Did you make a couple of telephone calls to them, or many more than that?

14:36:14 A. Yes, I made some calls to them and it was not very cheap.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Just before you proceed on, Mr Munyard, can we just make sure that nobody has a mobile phone in the Court, because I suspect it may be in the booths. That is what I am thinking.

14:36:45 MR MUNYARD: Very well.

PRESIDING JUDGE: In which case if that is the case I would be grateful if that could be checked. I am sorry to interrupt. Please proceed.

MR MUNYARD: That is quite all right, Madam President:

14:37:03 Q. Mr Camara, can you just help us with this. Have you any idea now how much - how many Dalasis, if I have got the currency correct, you spent in making phone calls to the investigators?

A. I told you that I don't know the exact amount. I don't remember the exact amount. I never thought that somebody was 14:37:35 going to ask me any question about that.

Q. All right, let me put it another way. Would I be right in assuming that the cost of your meals, your transport and your telephone calls translated into United States dollars would only be a matter of a few dollars?

A. I don't - I can't tell you how much dollars it would be, because I can't tell you the exact amount of my transport fare and so actually I didn't calculate the amount of my communication expenses.

14:38:26 Q. Was the transport fare the same as usual; the same as in November and in October of 2006, the cost of car hire?

A. No.

Q. Was it less expensive, or more expensive?

A. More expensive on some occasions, so it depends. It really 14:39:03 depended on the number of days I would spend in the town.

Q. All right. Well, just tell us this. What was the most amount of money that you spent on car hire when you were going to see the investigators?

A. 1,500 Dalasi. Yes, I can remember on some occasions I

14:39:51 hired a car at around 1,500.

Q. Thank you. Sticking with box 4 on the first page, you are paid this money on 27 February. Now, we know that you were interviewed on 9 and 10 February. Are you saying that you were not paid this money at the end of the interview, but that it 14:40:26 wasn't until another two and a half weeks later that you got the money?

A. No, they gave me the amounts at the end of the interview. They gave me the money when we finished the interview.

Q. Can you turn over the page, please, and we will look at box

14:41:03 5. Now this is a receipt dated Thursday, 1 March 2007, paid by Mr Haddad and approved by Mr Berry, and the reason given for this money being spent is "Investigations Interviews", the category is "MEALS/COMMUNICATION/TRANSPORT" and the amount is 20.83 US dollars. Now, were you interviewed - sorry, were you given money

A. I don't - I can't tell you how much dollars it would be, because I can't tell you the exact amount of my transport fare and so actually I didn't calculate the amount of my communication expenses.

14:38:26 Q. Was the transport fare the same as usual; the same as in November and in October of 2006, the cost of car hire?

A. No.

Q. Was it less expensive, or more expensive?

A. More expensive on some occasions, so it depends. It really 14:39:03 depended on the number of days I would spend in the town.

Q. All right. Well, just tell us this. What was the most amount of money that you spent on car hire when you were going to see the investigators?

A. 1,500 Dalasi. Yes, I can remember on some occasions I

14:39:51 hired a car at around 1,500.

Q. Thank you. Sticking with box 4 on the first page, you are paid this money on 27 February. Now, we know that you were interviewed on 9 and 10 February. Are you saying that you were not paid this money at the end of the interview, but that it 14:40:26 wasn't until another two and a half weeks later that you got the money?

A. No, they gave me the amounts at the end of the interview. They gave me the money when we finished the interview.

Q. Can you turn over the page, please, and we will look at box

14:41:03 5. Now this is a receipt dated Thursday, 1 March 2007, paid by Mr Haddad and approved by Mr Berry, and the reason given for this money being spent is "Investigations Interviews", the category is "MEALS/COMMUNICATION/TRANSPORT" and the amount is 20.83 US dollars. Now, were you interviewed - sorry, were you given money each time you were interviewed, or were you given money between interviews as well as at the end of each interview? And if you want me to explain that to you again I am quite happy to do so.

A. I don't remember exactly. Sometimes they would give me at 14:42:20 the end of the interview. That is what I remember. Some - on some occasions also they will give it to me during or before the interview.
Q. Well 1 March is a long time before the next interview, which was on 18 April 2007. Six - more than six weeks away from 14:42:49 the next interview. Is this the position, that every time you were given money by the investigators you were interviewed by them?
A. They came to The Gambia. When I went to see - to meet them it is on those occasions that they used to give me the money, and 14:43:27 sometimes they would stay for a long time without coming to The Gambia.
Q. But every time you went to meet them and got money from them, you gave them some information. Is that correct?
A. Yes, if they asked me questions I would answer.
14:43:54 Q. And every time they asked you questions did they write down notes of what it was you were telling them?
A. Yes, I saw them writing it down.
Q. And I don't suppose you can remember now what it was on the 1 March 2007 that you got $20.83 for?
14:44:37 A. Yes, they gave me that amount of money.
Q. Yes, but do you remember what it was for?
A. I told you at the beginning already that my transport costs expenses and assistance also as they gave me that amount for that purpose.

Q. Mr Camara, all I am trying to find out is do you now remember what it was you got that particular sum for in March of 2007? Do you remember anything about the occasion that led to you being given that money?
14:45:42 A. Whenever they gave me money they would ask me to sign a receipt. I have never read that it was for meals communication, transport.
Q. All right. And whenever they gave you money it was because you had given them information, correct?
14:46:09 A. It was on a voluntary basis. They gave me some assistance. It was on a voluntary basis. They told me that it was on a voluntary basis.
Q. Can I just go back to the question I asked you. Whenever they gave you money, was it because you had given them 14:46:37 information?
A. It is possible, yes. It is possible. It is just possible that they just wanted to help me.
Q. Well, sticking with box 5, it looks as though you have been given money on that occasion for a very specific purpose for 14:47:14 meals, communication and transport. So does that suggest to you that you travelled to see them and they reimbursed your expenses?
A. Yes, it is possible. That is what I am talking about assistance. That is the assistance. That is what they have written there.
14:47:45 Q. And the only reason that you would travel to see them would be to give them information, correct?
A. No, not only that, because they used to interview me when they were in town.
Q. I think we may be at cross-purposes here. When you say they used to interview me when they were in town, do you mean when you travelled to the town they were in they used to interview you?

A. Unless they come to Gambia, I wouldn't see them. It is when they came to The Gambia that I would meet them and it was not always for an interview.

Q. For what other reasons would they - would you travel to see them apart from for an interview?

A. I met them in The Gambia. The reason why they were in Gambia, I wouldn't know that, because they just when they arrive they used to just call me. So, I don't know for which purpose exactly they came to The Gambia.

Q. Mr Camara, I wasn't asking you about their purpose. Just listen, please, very carefully to the question. When they were in The Gambia and you would travel from your village to see them where they were staying, the purpose of your going there would be so that you could give them information. Is that correct?

A. They used to come to The Gambia. It is not every time that they interviewed me when they came to The Gambia.

Q. It may be me, Mr Camara, but I am not asking you about them coming to The Gambia. I am really asking you about why you would go to see them when they were in your country. Don't worry about them being in The Gambia, or why they came there. Just answer this question, if you can. Whenever you went to see them, was it in order to give them some information?

A. No, no, not at all. When they came to The Gambia, when they needed me they would call me. When they - and they would tell many I that it was for an interview. They would tell me that. If they didn't need me, if they didn't need me they would tell me also.

Q. I am going to have one last attempt. You wouldn't ---
A. But I used to go and meet them personally because I knew them.
14:51:50 Q. Are you telling the Court that you used to go and meet them for social reasons?
A. In our culture when you know somebody then you have relations. You know that person. That is our culture. We have a certain social life. It is not that you meet somebody just 14:52:20 because when you need the person. When they came to the Gambia and call me and tell me that they are there, and even if they don't tell me to go there I just go there and meet them.
Q. In box 5 do you see what is recorded underneath the name of A had dad as the reason why you were being paid your expenses?
14:52:56 Can you see what is written there against the word "Reason"?
A. Yes, I have seen it.
Q. What it is in English?
A. If I am not mistaken it is investigations interviews.
Q. Right. And so you were reimbursed travel expenses on 1
14:53:32 March 2007 because you went to assist these two investigators with their investigations and interviews, correct?
A. Yes, it is possible because I don't remember all their stays in the Gambia. It is possible.
Q. Mr Camara, no-one is expecting you to remember that. I am 14:54:01 just trying to find out for each of these occasions what you were given the money for, do you follow?
A. Yes, it was on that occasion they gave me the money.
Q. Box 6, please?
A. Yes, I see box 6.

Q. Four days later, on 5 March 2007, Mr Haddad gave you 100 US dollars for assistance rendered in the form of information. Do you see that?
A. Yes, yes, I see that.
14:54:49 Q. Pausing there. In other words, you were paid money by the investigators to give them information, do you agree?
A. It is an assistance. It was not a payment. You are using payment. It was not a payment.
Q. Forget the word I used. You were given $100 for giving the 14:55:23 investigators information, weren't you?
A. Yes, yes, they gave it to me because of that. For that.
Q. So, why was it that you told this Court on Monday of this week that you were never paid for giving information to the investigators?
14:55:53 A. I told you not to say that they have paid me. They didn't pay me. It was - it was for assistance. It was not a payment. Don't say that they paid me.
Q. What did they do with the 100 United States dollars on 5 March? How was it - how did it end up in your hands?
14:56:27 A. I am a chief of family. I have wives and kids. I am a married man and I have a family. I have problems.
Q. Mr Camara, I don't think you are understanding. How did the one pounds get from Mr Haddad's hand into your hand?
MR WERNER: US dollars, your Honours.
14:56:49 PRESIDING JUDGE: It is actually dollars [microphone not activated].
MR MUNYARD: I may have slip --
PRESIDING JUDGE: A slip of the tongue, Mr Munyard. You said pounds.

MR MUNYARD: I am so sorry.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Don't worry about it.

THE WITNESS: Yes, he gave me the money.

MR MUNYARD: Had it been in pounds it would have been worth twice as much of course:

14:57:08

Q. He gave you the money. And we know from the entry that he has made on that form that he gave it to you for giving them information, yes? I don't know if that was --

A. Indeed. Indeed, that's what is written.

14:57:41

Q. And that's right, isn't it? You were paid 100 United States dollars for providing assistance to the interviewers in the form of information that you gave to them?

A. I was not paid. I told you please - I have asked you to stop saying that I was paid.

14:58:05

Q. Let's use the word "given"?

A. I was not paid. They helped. It was an assistance.

Q. You were given 100 United States dollars for the information that you gave them. Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, I agree with that.

14:58:22

Q. All right. I will try to stick to the expression "given". Now did you give them information each time you were given $100?

A. No, no.

Q. Were you given $100 on 5 March because you gave them information that day?

14:59:01

A. Yes. I already said yes. I said yes. They gave me assistance.

Q. No, with respect, you gave them assistance. That's what this box means. "Assistance rendered, information" means you gave them assistance in the form of information?

A. Yes, me too, I answered to their questions. That is why I am using the term "assistance".
Q. I don't think you're going to get any answers from that side of the Courtroom, Mr Camara, so don't keep looking over there. Look towards the judges, please. Now let us go to box 7.
THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, can the witness repeat?
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter didn't catch what you said. Can you repeat it, please.
THE WITNESS: I am not looking at a particular person. I am looking in the room, in the Courtroom.
MR MUNYARD:
Q. Look at the page now, please, box 7. Four days later on Friday 9 March Mr Haddad gave you 50 United States dollars?
A. Yes, indeed.
Q. For assistance rendered by you to them. Do you agree?
A. Yes, I do agree.
Q. And it was in order to reimburse you for your meals, your transportation, your telephone calls and then something called assistance, this time assistance from them to you?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know what their assistance to you was? How much of the $50 amounted to assistance? If you don't know, just say so?
A. It is exactly what is written there.
Q. Box number 8, please. Six days after that, on 15 March, Mr Haddad gave you another 100 United States dollars. The reason --
A. Yes, that's true.
Q. The reason for it is the assistance rendered by you to them and the money is to cover your transport, your loss of wages and the information that you have given them. Transport we know about - sorry?

A. Yes.
Q. Transport we know about. You told us yesterday that you had not been in work I think from the time you got back from 15:02:57 Liberia in 2003. So what's lost wages here?
A. Yes, yes, indeed, I was not working.
Q. So you didn't have any loss of wages for which you had to be compensated in March of last year?
A. Why don't you ask Haddad for that what he means by loss of 15:03:33 wages? He would explain it to you. What I know is that they gave me assistance and they made me sign the receipt. They asked me to sign and I signed. And then I have seen on the paper - I have seen the lost wages written there, transport, loss of wages, information. That I have seen. I have seen that on the paper.
15:04:04 I can't say that I haven't seen it.
Q. Did you tell them that you had lost earnings in coming to see them at some point in March of 2007?
A. No, no, I don't - I didn't - I didn't go there for that. I'm a cultivator.
15:04:40 Q. We know that you gave them more information that day because it's recorded there. When you gave them information they always wrote it down, you told us earlier, and so can we assume that they wrote down what you told them on 15 March 2007?
A. Yes, that's what they have written down.
15:05:13 Q. Box 9, please, and I think Madam Court Officer will have to move the page on the screen. We are now on the third page of this document. Wednesday 18 April last year. This is a day when we do have interview notes for, unlike the previous date we have just been looking at, 15 March. On 18 April you were paid 100

United States dollars again and the reason you were paid that money was because you had given them assistance in locating people and in transportation and communication?

A. Yes, yes.

15:06:15 Q. It doesn't actually say there that you were given the money for information, does it?

A. Yes, indeed. Indeed. It's not written there.

Q. Although we know that you did give them information that day because for that particular day we do have interview notes?

15:06:45 A. Yes, it's possible.

Q. Box 10, please. On 24 May you were paid 57.69 United States dollars. This was to cover family assistance to you?

A. Yes.

Q. The reason, what you had done for them, is a number 1,500.

15:07:29 Does that make any sense to you, the 1,500?

A. No, I don't know. They are the ones who know what it means. I don't know what it means.

Q. Box 11, the same day, you are given 38.46 United States dollars, this time for family assistance and transport and the 15:08:04 reason given there is 1,000 and I don't suppose that the 1,000 means anything to you in that box, does it, Mr Camara?

A. That you are talking about I don't - I really don't know, but maybe - I don't know what they have written. I am not used to what they are writing. I don't know their terms. I don't 15:08:42 know what they have written there.

Q. Yes, don't worry about that. I don't claim to know what it means either. But on that day, 24 May, you were given close to 100 United States dollars to cover family assistance and transport and we - just pause for a moment. We know that you were interviewed by the investigators on 23, 24 and 28 May?

A. No, this was - I didn't say that all these things - occasions were for interviews. I didn't say that. It was not for interviews.
15:09:41 Q. Did you take your family with you when you went to see them in late May last year, or is this simply money that they gave you because you wanted it for your family?
A. No, that was not the case.
Q. No, you didn't take your family with you?
15:10:09 A. No.
Q. So they gave you this money in order for you to spend it on your family?
A. They knew my conditions. They know that I had a family. I have wives, I have kids. They knew my conditions, so they had 15:10:34 asked me about my conditions.
Q. Box 12, please. On Tuesday 12 June you were given another 100 United States dollars, no reason was given, but it was to cover family assistance and your telephone calls?
A. Yes, it was assistance indeed. They have been helping me.
15:11:07 Q. Do you know if you gave them any information in June of last year?
A. No, no, I don't remember. I don't remember having given them any information on that date.
MR MUNYARD: Madam Court Officer, could you turn over the 15:11:28 page, please, and we will look at box 13:
Q. Two days later on 14 June last year you were given 100 United States dollars again also for family assistance?
A. These people, they usually - that's usually what they write when they gave me the assistance, but I don't remember each and every occasion. They have helped me, but I can't remember each and every occasion.

Q. Box 14, please. Six days later on 20 June Mr Morris paid you 7.88 United States dollars reimbursing you for the cost of a meal or meals?

15:12:32

A. Yes, it's possible.

Q. And the assistance you had given them is recorded as a number 205 and again, Mr Camara, I am not asking you to comment on that. Now 7.88 United states dollars would buy an awful lot of food in The Gambia, wouldn't it?

15:13:00

A. The part you have just read to me, if it's true - if it's Haddad who has written this or Morris or John, it's true then.

Q. I am not suggesting it's not true. I just want to ask you can you remember were you given this amount of money, $7.88, or was a meal bought for you that cost 7.88 US dollars?

A. $7 would not be too - I mean a lot of meal, because at that time already one dollars - one dollar would be - would amount to 18/19 Dalasi, so that was not a big amount. I use - what I spend for my family daily is far more than that.

Q. If you had a meal with Mr Morris and/or with Mr Berry that would mean that you had gone to see them, wouldn't it?

15:14:27

A. Yes.

Q. And when you went to see them to have a meal, you would usually give them information, wouldn't you?

A. No.

15:14:53

Q. Usually. Not always, but usually you would give them information, wouldn't you?

A. Sometimes, yes.

Q. Most of the time, yes?

A. No.
Q. Mr Camara, you weren't under the illusion that these men were your personal social friends, were you?
A. Yeah, we knew each other and when you know somebody and you 15:15:43 come to have this type of meetings I will - I can say that I know them.
Q. You do appreciate, don't you, that the reason that these men were spending money on meals for you was because they wanted to get information out of you?
15:16:14 A. No, no, because it's not on every occasion that they would ask me for informations.
Q. I have accepted that, but most of the time they would ask you for information, wouldn't they?
A. No. I said no.
15:16:34 Q. That was the sole purpose of their continuing to see you to get more and more information out of you, wasn't it?
A. No, I said no.
Q. Five days later on 25 June Mr Morris gave you $42.31 in US currency?
15:17:11 A. Yes.
Q. To cover your transportation and family assistance?
A. Yes.
Q. So within the space of eleven days you had been given $142 for family assistance and transportation and another nearly $8
15:17:54 for a meal. Are you saying --
A. It's possible.
Q. Well, it's there. Are you saying that you didn't give them any information at all over that period?
A. No.

Q. Let us just clarify what you mean by no. Are you saying that you gave them no information during that period, or are you saying that you might have given them information during that period?

15:18:36 A. When I give them information they write it down. When I give them information indeed they do write it down.

Q. Mr Camara, they don't. Would you go back, please, to box 9. We know that on 18 April 2007 you were interviewed and you gave them information and you were given on that day 100 United 15:19:13 States dollars for your assistance in locating people and your transportation and communication costs. They didn't write down information then, did they?

A. Yes, it's written there.

Q. Yes, but where is the word "information" written in box 9?

15:19:44 A. No, not in those terms. I haven't seen that in those terms.

Q. Box 16, please. On 30 July last year Mr Morris gave you 145.83 US dollars and the reason for that was investigations, interviews and to cover the costs of your transportation and your 15:20:19 phone calls. Now we know that you were interviewed five days before that on 25 July. So this money was clearly given to you partly for the information you gave them, wasn't it, and partly for your expenses?

A. Yes, that's what he wrote - he wrote down. That's why he 15:20:53 gave me the money.

Q. Box 17, please. September 26, 2007, this time somebody else, a Mr Swart or Miss Swart for all I know gave you 200 United States dollars for 100 dollars for security for October, in other words the month that had not yet arrived, and 100 dollars for the assistance that you rendered to them. What assistance did you render to them on or before 26 September 2007?

A. I don't remember that meeting with Swart.
Q. That meeting with who?
15:21:57 A. With Swart. Who is Mr Swart? Can you tell me who is Mr Swart?
Q. I was hoping you would tell us who Mr Swart is. Whoever they are, they were being very generous to you in September last year, weren't they, giving or authorising 200 United States 15:22:19 dollars to you. And do you know what the assistance was that you had rendered to them to justify the giving of 100 dollars out of that 200?
A. If you give me the name, because I don't remember the name.
Q. It may be that it was simply authorised by this person, I 15:22:53 don't know. All I am concerned about is do you agree that you got 200 US dollars on 26 September for a combination of assistance that you gave them and something to do with security the following month, October?
A. Yes, yes, I do remember having received 200 US dollars.
15:23:27 Q. Thank you. Do you know what the security aspect of it refers to? It says, "Security October". Can you help us at all with what that means?
A. I don't actually know what it means. And then the assistance also I really don't know. This is their way of 15:23:59 putting things.
Q. Yes, let me just ask you a little bit more about security. Had you had to pay for any security for yourself, your family, or your house?
A. When they give me assistance they write down "assistance".

Q. This was the largest single amount of money that you were ever given, 200 dollars. Can you remember the occasion? It's not that long ago. It is only late last September. Can you remember getting $200 in your hand, if that's how it was given to 15:24:57 you?
A. Maybe for you 200 is a lot of money, but for me it is not because I have already had much more - I have already had much more in my hands.
Q. That's very interesting, Mr Camara, but it doesn't go 15:25:24 anywhere near answering the question I asked you. What do you recall of the circumstances in which you were paid $200. Let me withdraw that word. What were the circumstances in which you were given $200 on 26 September 2007?
A. They know why they gave me the money and they wrote it 15:26:08 down.
Q. Do you remember being given 200 US dollars in your hand just a few months ago at the end of September last year?
A. I said that it's possible. I don't put - I didn't put things on record. I told you - I told you that I don't remember 15:26:33 exactly. I didn't even know that somebody was going to ask me questions about these questions.
Q. How often does somebody walk up to you and give you 200 United States dollars?
A. Before I came here I found people - I have some teachers
15:27:01 outside, they gave me amounts much more important than 200 US. I always get money, you know, much more than this amount. So for me that is not a big issue.
Q. Well, you are obviously in a very lucky position, Mr Camara, but I want to go back, please, to these investigators.

Just let me finish the question. Somebody has recorded here that on 26 September last year you were paid 200 US dollars. Can you remember if that was put into your hand?

A. I am telling you that this is not a big issue. I have got much more than 200. People, brothers have given me much more than this.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the question is can you remember if that amount of money was put into your hand.

THE WITNESS: No, I don't remember. I don't remember. It's possible, but I didn't put it on record. It's possible, because they have given me assistance on many occasions. I didn't say that it didn't happen. It's quite possible.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. Do you have a bank account, Mr Camara?

A. No.

Q. So are you able to help us with the security aspect of this money. Did you yourself have to spend any money on your personal security or that of your family, or your home, or homes, in October of last year?

A. Unless you ask the person named Swart, you ask him that question. What I know is what I have told you already. They usually gave me assistance and they gave me a receipt to sign and I signed, because normally they were supposed to report to their supervisors when they gave me an amount of money.

Q. I am taking that as the answer no to my last question and I am going to move you on to the box 18. The very next day Mr Morris reimbursed you 43.18 United States dollars for transport?

A. That's possible.

Q. Can you remember what you would have spent 43 United States dollars on for transport?
A. I didn't put things on record. I didn't note those informations. Really I don't remember on which occasion I was 15:30:59 given a specific amount of money. I don't remember all of the different occasions. I know that they used to write it down, so what they have written, it's true. It is not a lie.
Q. Boxes 19 and 20, please, the same page. Box 19 on 5 November and box 20 on 4 December you were paid 100 dollars on 15:31:41 each of those dates for something entitled "Security". Can we assume that you don't know what that security refers to?
A. I can't tell you what it means. You should maybe ask those people who gave me the money. I think they would be in a better position to explain why they gave me that money, but I am not in 15:32:20 a position to explain.
Q. You took the money on these two occasions. Did you spend it on your own security?
A. The amount they gave me, you mean?
Q. Yes.
15:32:45 A. They have given me the money and they wrote down the reason, but the way I use the money they gave me, that was left up to me.
Q. I don't want to be unfair to you. Were you actually given 100 United States dollars in your hand at the beginning of 15:33:07 November and again at the beginning of December?
A. When they came to The Gambia, I was the one who took them to the hotel and they want to go to what is called a cultural area - cultural area and so I had to go there with them. Maybe that's why they have written "Security", because you know they asked me to go with them, to accompany them. I am the one who accompanied them. All that might be included in "Security".

MR MUNYARD: I'm sorry, I don't know if you have finished the interpretation. Madam Interpreter, had you finished interpreting?

15:34:14

THE INTERPRETER: Yes, I had.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. Are you telling us, Mr Camara, that you were paid in September 100 United States dollars to provide security cover for the Special Court investigators when they came in October?

15:34:31

A. I didn't say that, exactly that. I know that they gave me that assistance as a kind of compensation to help - to help me. I am not the one who wrote "security".

Q. Is this right: That you have no idea what security means on these receipts?

15:35:06

A. No.

Q. And I think for the sake of clarification that means you are agreeing with me that you have no idea what it means?

A. No, I don't know.

Q. If they are paying you this money as security offered by you to them while they are going around cultural areas, what you are really saying is that you were acting as their bodyguard while they went touring as tourists. That's what you're suggesting, isn't it?

15:35:28

A. They just asked me to go around, to go with them.

Q. As their friend, or as their bodyguard, or possibly as both?

A. It is just because we know each other. That's how I perceive it. You're the one saying that I was the bodyguard, but for me it is just a matter of relations - personal relations.

Q. Thank you. So you have removed the idea that you're being paid security money to show them round as tourists?
A. I didn't tell you that.
15:36:55 MR MUNYARD: Madam Court Officer, can we now turn, please, to the final page and look at box 21 next, Mr Camara.
Q. Do you see that on the screen in front of you?
A. Yes, I see the page.
Q. On 7 January this year you were paid 100 United States
15:37:33 dollars as security for the month of January 2008 and under "Category" it says "Property". Was your property given security measures?
A. No, no, no, I don't remember that. No, no, that's not the case.
15:38:09 Q. So, as far as --
A. My orchard was not fenced and so maybe it was an assistance in that they gave me some kind of assistance for my orchard to have it fenced. I remember talking to them about that.
Q. Are you saying that they gave you the money and you spent 15:38:45 it on fencing your orchard?
A. Yes, yes, yes, to - they wanted to help me to fence my orchard, yes, so that I could protect my property. Yes, I remember having told them that and so they gave me - they just helped me for that.
15:39:24 Q. And quite by chance it happened to cost 100 US dollars to put a fence round your orchard, did it?
A. Yes, that's why they helped me.
Q. And when did you pay this 100 dollars to fence your orchard?

A. That's what's so. That's why they have written that, because I remember having told them that.
Q. Have you fenced the orchard, Mr Camara, or haven't you?
A. I have started it before I came to The Hague.
15:40:16 Q. The reason given in box 21 is "Security for the month of January 2008". It does not say "Security for the orchard"?
A. I'm telling you what I remember. What I do remember, that's what I'm telling you. It is possible. They are the ones who know why they wrote - they put that down, why they put 15:40:46 "Security for the month of January".
Q. On 4 December you were paid by coincidence another 100 United States dollars for security. What did you use that 100 dollars for?
A. Please don't deal with my personal problems. What my 15:41:22 family problems and my personal problems have nothing to do with this issue.
Q. Mr Camara --
A. I'm an adult.
Q. The last thing I want to do is to pry into your personal 15:41:33 problems. What I do want from you though is truthful answers about these large amount am of the money, $100 at a time given, you to you in November, December and January for security and I want you to tell these judges why public money was given to you under the heading of "Security" to this amount?
15:42:17 THE INTERPRETER: Can he repeat it, please?
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, can you please repeat your answer for the interpreter slowly.
THE WITNESS: If the money belongs to the public - to the state, it is not the whole state which is helping the Special Court. I am the one helping the Special Court. So in that case any assistance I render in that framework - I mean, it is as a compensation.

MR MUNYARD:

15:43:06 Q. Go back to 7 January, Monday 7 January 2008. Where were you then?

A. I'm in the Gambia.

Q. You were in The Gambia. Do you remember did somebody hand you 100 US dollars on that day?

15:43:45 A. Yes. I said yes. I told you yes.

Q. You actually have a memory of being given the $100 at the beginning of January?

A. Yes, I already answered.

Q. Who gave it to you? Who was it who handed you the money?

15:44:12 A. The name is written at the bottom.

Q. What is the name?

A. I don't know the person, but I know that he works for the Special Court. He was introduced to me.

Q. The way it is printed on the page makes it difficult to 15:44:41 know which of the initial or initials, but what we have on the page is "Approved by RDIACK". Assuming that is somebody called R Diack, is that a name that you know?

A. No, I don't know the name. I really didn't, because was my first time to see that person.

15:45:11 Q. Don't worry about the name. Where were you when you were given this money?

A. I was in The Gambia on 7 January.

Q. I'm sorry, I should have been more specific. Were you at your home or were you at some other place in The Gambia? I don't need to know where either of them are?

A. I was in The Gambia. Where else would I be?
Q. Were you at your home or at some other place?
A. [Inaudible] telling me. These people have given me the 15:46:04 assistance, yes. They have given me an assistance. The person who did this, I don't know that person. I just know that that person works for the Special Court. I didn't ask for anything.
I told them that I wanted to fence my orchard, but the receipt itself, I haven't seen the receipt.
15:46:45 Q. Did the person come to your property, your home, to give you the money, or did you have to travel somewhere to get it from them?
A. I went to receive the money.
Q. Did you incur travel expenses in going to receive the 15:47:12 money?
A. Yes.
Q. Were you reimbursed for your travel expenses?
A. No, it was a kind - it was an assistance I was receiving.
Q. Assistance in West Africa means financial support, doesn't 15:47:37 it?
A. Yes.
Q. Thank you. We can see here at the bottom of this - well, below box 21 we can see the total that you are said to have received according to these receipts and the total is 1,506.18
15:48:07 United States dollars. If you turn back - again Madam Court Officer. If you turn back to the first page this total only relates to money you were given on or after 27 February 2007 and so we have to add to the total $100 for your interview in October 2006 and $100 for your interview in November 2006, don't we?

A. Yes, I wouldn't know the total.
Q. We have to add in those two figures, don't we, because they are not shown in this document which only starts in February of 2007?
15:49:22 A. Which days?
Q. October and November 2006 when you were interviewed and gave information to the investigators and you told us that you were paid for doing that?
A. I didn't tell you that I was paid for giving information.
15:49:43 I didn't tell you that. And I told you - I asked you to stop saying that I was paid.
Q. I'm using an apparently emotive term again and let me change it. You were given $100 each time for those two earlier interviews for which we do not have financial records. That is 15:50:09 correct, isn't it?
A. If it is not written down, that means that they didn't give it to me. If it is written down there in the statement then it is true. Whatever amount they gave me they wrote it down.
Q. Mr Camara, you will not know this, but the entry in box 4, 15:50:34 $100 on Tuesday 27 February 2007 was not disclosed to us. Box 4 was empty until we got a revised version of this document just a matter of a few days ago. So the fact that there is nothing in a box doesn't mean that you were not paid - sorry, doesn't mean that you were not given money. Now you told this Court earlier, 15:51:03 did you not, that when you were interviewed in 2006 you were given money for the assistance you provided to the investigators?
A. Everything, if they haven't written it down, I haven't got the money. Whatever I got from them they wrote it down. Whenever they gave me money they wrote it down. I don't remember having received money from them without them writing it down. That's what I remember.

Q. If I had been asking you these questions three weeks ago I wouldn't have had anything in box 4 to ask you about and so it doesn't follow, does it, that an empty box means that you weren't paid?

A. I told you that whatever I received they wrote it. It was written down and I remember that whenever I got money they asked me to sign a receipt.

15:52:21 Q. How long have you now been in Holland, the Netherlands?

A. I came here on last month I think in January, around 17 January. If my memory serves me right it must be around 16/17 January that I arrived in The Hague.

Q. And have you finally been to the Amsterdam?

15:53:01 PRESIDING JUDGE: What is the relevance of this question, Mr Munyard?

MR MUNYARD:

Q. You told the Court this morning that when you left The Gambia in 1986 your intention was to go to Amsterdam?

15:53:21 A. I didn't tell you that. I didn't come. This is my first time to come to the Netherlands.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Munyard, I do recall the witness using or referring to the word Amsterdam as an example, that if you are travelling from somewhere to Amsterdam, maybe from The Hague to 15:53:44 Amsterdam, this is what you would do, so and so, but he didn't literally mean that he went to Amsterdam.

MR MUNYARD: Your Honour --

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: That's what I recall.

MR MUNYARD: Before I reply I think the witness wants to say something to you.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I remember. It's the judge who is reminding me now what I said. You had put a question to me. You asked me whether I left Gambia to improve my financial situation. I said that I didn't leave with the intention of going to fight - to join the SOFA and I gave you an example. I said for example you can take a car in The Hague to go to Amsterdam. You might have an accident on your way even if it was not your intention at the beginning. That is how Amsterdam came in my statement. Now I remember. I never told you that I wanted to go to Amsterdam.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. Let's go back to the money, please. Have you spent the 1,700 odd dollars that you received?

A. Yes, indeed.

Q. Have you received any money since Monday 7 January?

A. No, I haven't received anything yet.

Q. You haven't received anything yet, but does that mean you're expecting to receive more money for having given further assistance to the Prosecution in this case, Mr Camara?

A. Since they went as the first - at the beginning they told me that all this matter was on a voluntary basis, so if I receive money from them it will be a kind of surprise.

Q. But are you expecting that pleasant surprise once you have finished giving your evidence?

A. No, not at all. I am not expecting anything.

Q. Is that an honest answer, Mr Camara?

A. Yeah, that's quite true.

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, I have no further questions. Thank you.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Munyard. Any re-examination, Mr Werner?

MS HOLLIS: Madam President, excuse me for rising instead of my colleague, but there is something that we need to put on the record relating to the disclosures about reimbursements for this witness, because when the matter came up in cross-examination I sent an email to Freetown asking them if payments had been missed and I received a response and the reason that I am giving this to you is that, as a senior trial attorney, this is my responsibility. So I wanted to let you know.

And here is the information that I received: On 7 October 2006 there was a disbursement made to this witness of $14.81. The reason was given as transport and communication and meal. The category was transport. I apologise for not having printed this out, but we have no print capability of our own. On 13 October 20 --

MS MUZIGO-MORRISON: Excuse me, your Honour, if Ms Hollis forwards the email to me I can print it out for the Court.

MS HOLLIS: Okay, maybe I will forward it and as you're printing it I will be providing the information.

MS MUZIGO: Thank you.

MS HOLLIS: Let me provide the information and then I will forward it for you. On 13 October 2006 this witness was provided the amount 22.22 United States dollars. The reason given was transport and communication, the category was transport.

On 3 November 2006 the witness was provided $18.51. The reason given was reimbursement for meal, transport and communication and it was listed as transport/lost wages.

On 10 November 2006 the witness was given the amount of 100

US dollars. The reason given was potential witness location, the category was information.

On 9 February 2007 the witness was given $23.07, that is US dollars. The reason given was transport and communication. The 16:00:37 category was transport.

On 10 February 2007 the witness was provided 100 US dollars. The reason given was cost for transportation and communication in locating potential witnesses. The category was information.

16:01:09 On 19 February 2007 the witness was given 100 US dollars. The reason given was locating of potential witnesses. The category was information.

The next entry is 27 February 2000 entry that Defence counsel has spoken of and in that regard the updated disbursement 16:01:45 record that Defence was given did include the 27 February 2007. It was at the top of the next page. The amount that was corrected was the total amount.

Now I have enquired, because obviously this is an issue of concern - I have enquired as to why these payments were not made. 16:02:07 It has been indicated to me that it was some issue relating to entries in the computer, but I have requested that a double and triple check be made of disbursements to all upcoming witnesses and for all witnesses who have already testified and should there be changes in that information for upcoming witnesses we will of 16:02:34 course provide it to the Defence. If there are changes in information for witnesses who have already testified, that information will be provided to the Court and to the Defence.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you for that information, Ms Hollis.

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, can I just say this: My learned friend might be quite right in saying that the 27 February amount was disclosed to us. The fact is if it was then it was in box 5 and box 4 was empty. I have actually got both of the pages with me. I am not taking a point on it. I just want the Court to understand that until very recently boxes 1 to 4 were blank.

Can I also say that in the light of what Ms Hollis has just told us then obviously the total that appears below box 21 is boosted by more than $300, not just by $200.

MS HOLLIS: And if I may, your Honour, what I have been sent does reflect the new total and the new total is reflected as $1,984.79 and that is US dollars.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard, that has now been disclosed to you. As Ms Hollis correctly says, that's a duty of the Prosecution. This information was not before you when you were cross-examining. Have you any application to make?

MR MUNYARD: I am grateful for the opportunity, but I don't propose to labour these points any further than I have done.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you for that indication. In the light of that please proceed with your re-examination, if any, Mr Werner.

MR WERNER: Thank you, Madam President, your Honours.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Pause, Mr Witness.

MR BANGURA:

Q. Mr Witness, you talked about a street in your area. What's the name of that street, please?

16:16:34

A. Bus stop. It was an old bus stop closer to Kissy Mental Home, in that area.

Q. And what happened there?

A. So all of them came and parked the vehicles in which they had come.

16:16:56

Q. Can you remember how many of them?

A. They were more than 40.

Q. And did anything happen when they arrived there?

A. Yes, sir. He went and met us. When he met us, where they had killed the people and where they had amputated my arms --

16:17:24

Q. Mr Witness, who are you referring to when you say "he"? Please give the name?

A. Rambo met us there along with the people he had come with. When he met us there, the commando and the others, all of them saluted him. After they had saluted him Rambo asked the commando, he said, "What are you doing here?" He said, "Why are you killing these people?" He said, "Why are you chopping off these people's arms?" He said, "Is that why you came here?" He said, "I am going to punish you." Then he said, "Release these people, release these remaining people." He told him - at that time he was holding to my one hand, my one arm, that is Rambo, he still held my one arm. He told the commando who had chopped off our arms, whom he had said he would punish, he said, "All of you follow me to the base." We went up there. Look at the church and there was - look at the Kissy Mental Home. It was in that area that I was. So when we arrived there we met a lot of guns. When we arrived he told them to stand there, that is he told the commando and the other rebels who were there, he put them outside, he told them to stand there. He asked for one Captain Blood. I saw the Pa come out. He asked him, "Where is the doctors?"

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, correction, interpreter, "Where are the doctors?"

THE WITNESS: And the Pa told him that they had gone out. So Rambo told Captain Blood that, "Have you seen what this man did to these people?" He said, "I was going to punish him." He said, "That was not why he came." Then he took out 100,000, that is Rambo took out 100,000 and placed it in my pocket. He told me to endure, that was what God ordained. Then he took - he asked one rebel to accompany me. So the rebel accompanied me up to Taylor Street and he returned. At that time I was feeling dizzy. I was not seeing properly and I fell down close to the bathroom. That was where I laid. In the morning of Friday I tried to get to Helena.

football training at 7th Battalion, Freetown. When I saw him, then I went to him and I greeted him. When I greeted him then I told my guys with whom I had gone there and I said, "This was the guy who amputated my arms". When I told him that, his colleague whom I met at the gate he did not say anything in response. He entered the compound. Then I went and boarded the vehicle and we went, but since then I have not seen him again.

Q. Now, you said 7th Battalion was the place where you saw this person. Where is the 7th Battalion?

09:36:41 A. It is in Freetown at the Western Area.

Q. Was this - is this a particular place where people lived?

A. Yes, it is a military barracks.

Q. Now, do you recall when you saw this person at the 7th Battalion?

09:37:23 A. Well, I cannot remember the day now.

Q. Was it very long after this incident had occurred?

A. Yes, it even took nearly up to one year.

Q. Now earlier in your evidence, Mr Witness, you said that when Rambo came to the scene where you had been amputated he was 09:38:02 - sorry, when he took you to his base he said he was going to punish the people who had amputated your hands. Is that correct?

A. Yes, the language by itself is a code in terms of English or Krio. When you are speaking Mende on a radio communication it is a code by itself. It is a code in the sense that you may not understand Mende because you are not a Mende.

14:56:31 Q. Now, the time that Foday Sankoh left for Ivory Coast you said he went to several places. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know where he ended up?

A. Yes.

14:56:50 Q. Where?

A. His last trip was when he was en route to Libya and he was arrested in Nigeria.

Q. Now, can you - when Foday Sankoh was arrested in Nigeria, how did you come to learn this?

14:57:15 A. Foday Sankoh made a trip from Ivory Coast along with Gibril Massaquoi, Martin Moinama, an operator, with the intention of going to Libya, and he was arrested in Nigeria at the airport. Gibril Massaquoi escaped and he was in Nigeria along with Martin Moinama. While in Nigeria he used to visit Mr Sankoh.

14:57:57 Q. Who is "he"? Who is "he"?

A. Martin Moinama used to visit Mr Sankoh to get information from Mr Sankoh and then transmit that information to Liberia and from Liberia we received all necessary communication into Sierra Leone. To set a bright and clear example, Mr Sankoh was 14:58:34 imprisoned in Nigeria. When he promoted Sam Bockarie, Isaac Mongor, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Peter Vandi and many more saw communication that they should cooperate until his release. and Gullit when Gullit reported to Sam Bockarie that the troops in Freetown were undergoing serious threat and pressure from ECOMOG. Sam Bockarie in return verbally instructed Gullit and all the other commanders at the various positions in Freetown to 11:16:57 ensure that they make themselves fearful so that ECOMOG will not overrun the positions which they occupy in Freetown. He said in Krio, "Gullit, if it causes you to kill all the civilians, burn all the houses where you are, just so that you will not leave Freetown, you should go ahead and make sure that you maintain 11:17:36 where you were. You should chase whosoever would want to chase you. You know that Freetown is surrounded with water. You should chase them into the water. Burn any house. You should kill and make yourselves fearful. Amputate arms. The civilians, let them go to the enemy. They will know that we are on 11:18:15 something serious."

MR SANTORA: Now, Mr Witness, I am sorry to intervene, but I do want - I was going to ask your Honours if the record should reflect that the witness recited that in Krio and it was translated, I believe, by the same translator. I think if your 11:18:36 Honours want to enquire whether the translation was - in terms of the accuracy.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Interpreter, did the witness speak in Krio?

THE INTERPRETER: Yes, he did.

11:18:48 PRESIDING JUDGE: And you interpreted it?

THE INTERPRETER: In English.

PRESIDING JUDGE: The witness spoke in Krio and was interpreted by the interpreter, so we will just merely note that on the record.

Q. So when Gibril Massaquoi arrived in Lunsar with other combatants, when was that?
A. It was after they had been pushed out of Freetown in 1999.
Q. One moment, Mr Witness.
11:22:04 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Santora, I don't quite understand. This Moinama, he was a radio operator but also a prosecutor?
MR SANTORA: I can have him clarify. I am just going to look at the record very quickly:
Q. Mr Witness, you said that Martin Moinama was a former radio
11:22:29 operator who travelled with Foday Sankoh to Nigeria. Then you said, "He was the one who prosecuted Foday Sankoh during his trial in Freetown." What do you mean when you say, "He was the one who prosecuted Foday Sankoh"?
A. He was a prosecution witness against Foday Sankoh during 11:22:55 his trial, during his last trial in Freetown in 1999, 1989, yes.
MR SANTORA: Your Honour, does that clarify?
Q. You said that you heard Sam Bockarie communicate to Gullit in Krio saying, "Gullit, if it causes you to kill all the civilians, burn all their houses where you are, just so that you 11:23:48 will not leave Freetown, you should go ahead and make sure that you maintain where you are. You should chase whosoever would want to chase you. You know that Freetown is surrounded with water, you should chase them into the water."
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Santora, it was corrected by the 11:24:10 interpreter to sea, yes.
MR SANTORA: I didn't know if I should read the corrected one:
Q. "You should chase whosoever would want to chase you. You know that Freetown is surrounded by the sea. You should chase

Q. So when you say, "I listened to the communication ..." -- "I listened when that communication was confirmed by Major CY and that such an instruction was given to them to make themselves fearful", what do you mean when you say "... that communication was confirmed by Major CY that such an instruction was given to them"?

12:08:56

A. I am trying to say that the instruction that was given by Sam Bockarie did not only stay within the top commanders, but it went down to the least person that was in Freetown in respect of the order of making themselves fearful.

12:09:25

Q. Mr Witness, after the Freetown invasion where were you based?

A. I was in Waterloo and I later moved to Makeni and back to Lunsar.

Q. When you moved back to Lunsar, what was your assignment?

12:10:06

A. I was still with Superman.

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, could the witness say the last bit of the statement?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter requests that you repeat the last part of your answer. We have got, "I was still with Superman". What did you say after that?

12:10:27

THE WITNESS: That was where I stopped.

MR SANTORA: Actually, I do want to go back to one thing:

A. Yes, it was confirmed that he was executed, but the instruction was given by Sam Bockarie on the air.
Q. Was it Massaquoi who told you that, yes, Gullit - that, yes, Moinama had been executed?
10:02:46 A. Gibril Massaquoi said it and other combatants proved that he was executed based on the instruction given by Sam Bockarie.
Q. And when you met with the Office of the Prosecution in January of 2007, specifically 17 January, you told them who carried out the execution. You said it was Alhaji Conteh or 10:03:24 Black Jesus, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. He was the triggerman or the person who actually did the deed, yes?
A. Yes.
10:03:37 MR ANYAH: Madam Court Officer, if you could assist me, please. I will be referring to tab 1, page 21 from the witness's interview with the Office of the Prosecution on 17 November 2003. The ERN number on that page is 00037118 and I will start at line 17.
10:04:26 Q. Mr Lansana, you were asked the question - actually, your Honours, it might be best if I were to start from page 20 for contextual reasons and that will be the last line, line 15, and there's a question posed to you:
"Q. Who was now in charge of the communication in Kangari 10:04:58 Hills?
A. Kangari Hill?
Q. Yeah.
A. One Martin Moinama, who - Martin Moinama was in charge.
Q. And where is Martin Moinama now?

A. Really, I cannot give a specific location of Martin Moinama, but according to other information that I got, he was the one that prosecuted Mr Sankoh in 1990 - the last case that he got, that he was condemned, yeah, he was the one who do the Prosecution. So I cannot tell his whereabouts now and I have not seen him from that time."

This is what you told the Prosecution in 2003?

A. That is what is recorded on this tab.

Q. But you did not tell them that Martin Moinama was dead, true? True?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Yes you did not tell them, correct?

A. No, no.

Q. Yes or no, did you tell them?

A. No, I did not tell them.

Q. You did not tell them that Alhaji Conteh killed Martin Moinama, true or false?

A. Yes, but I also revealed it to them that Martin was executed by Alhaji Conteh.

Q. You told them this information on 17 November 2003, is that your evidence?

A. Yes.

Q. On the day that this interview was recorded you told them that information, that's what you're telling the Court?

A. Yes.

Q. I am putting it to you that you only mentioned that Martin Moinama was killed when you spoke with them in January 2007, true or false?

A. It was in 2007, yes.

Q. So the first time you told them Alhaji Conteh or Black Jesus killed Martin Moinama was in 2007, right?
A. Yes.
Q. In 2003, however, you did not know the whereabouts of Martin Moinama, yes?
A. I never had a complete clue on the information that I gave. I mean the information was not actually put through to them that Martin was killed at that particular time.
Q. Well, let me suggest --
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, I'm having trouble understanding that answer. The question was in 2003 did you know where Martin Moinama was.
THE WITNESS: No. It was one of the points that I based my information on that I cannot give information or continue to give information to the Special Court if they wanted me to be a witness, because Martin who had served as Prosecution witness against Mr Sankoh was killed when the troops of the RUF and the junta entered Freetown on January 6 and Martin was recaptured by those troops under Gullit's command and he was executed because he never had protection. So that was my point of contention, that I would not want to be a witness based on this experience until the security was put in place.
MR ANYAH:
Q. So your evidence to the Court is as a result of the death of Martin Moinama you were reluctant to be a Prosecution witness, is that your evidence?
A. Yes, very fine, from 2003.
Q. And when they interviewed you on 17 November 2003 when they came to this particular issue of Kangari Hills and Martin Moinama

MR MUNYARD: I know that, I'm asking --

10:26:01 PRESIDING JUDGE: Of the 365 in the year?

MR MUNYARD: Thank you.

MS ALAGENDRA:

Q. Witness, are you able to tell the Court when is it that you went to visit Sam Bockarie in Kenema?

10:26:16 A. Yes.

Q. When was that, witness?

A. The time, it was in 1997 August. It was the time I went there. It was only one - it was not only once. I went there more than one time.

10:26:46 Q. Witness, when you visited Sam Bockarie in August 1997 are you able to recall the other people that you might have met there?

A. Yes, I can recall some of the people I met there, those he was residing with in that house, Sam Bockarie.

10:27:13 Q. Who was the person that Sam Bockarie was residing with in the house?

A. The time I went there I saw somebody whose name was Jungle. He was at the house. I also saw one Junior Vandi, his other name is JR. That very night I was there when Mike Lamin too arrived 10:27:56 there. There were some other people who were also junior fighters. Even Sam Bockarie's wife too was there as well.

Q. Witness, you have said that you went to Kenema Town to visit Sam Bockarie more than once. On how many occasions did you meet these people that you've named?

A. Well, the other visits I made to Sam Bockarie in Kenema, the person I had not been meeting all the time at the house was Mike Lamin, but the others had been residing there together with Sam Bockarie. Even though the house was divided into apartments, Sam Bockarie residing in one apartment and even Jungle himself was residing in one of the apartments.

10:29:05

Q. Witness, who is Jungle, do you know?

A. Yes, I knew Jungle.

Q. Who was Jungle?

10:29:30

A. Jungle, I knew him as one of the fighters.

Q. Do you know where he is from?

A. Yes.

Q. Where?

A. He is from Liberia. He's a Liberian.

10:29:53

Q. And when you say fighters are you able to say which group he was a fighter for?

A. Jungle was an NPFL member. He was an NPFL fighter.

Q. How do you know Jungle?

A. I knew Jungle at Zogoda in 1995. I met him there together with Foday Sankoh. When I was called by Foday Sankoh to meet him at Zogoda, there I met him and I knew him.

10:30:28

Q. Do you know what he was doing with Foday Sankoh in Zogoda?

A. The information I heard about him when I met him, he was one of the person, like Jungle, Foday Sankoh would send them from 10:31:15

RUF territories to Liberia to Guinea. That was what I knew about Jungle.

Q. Do you know what was the purpose that Foday Sankoh was sending Jungle to Liberia and Guinea?

A. Well, the way I understood it, he was somebody whom Foday Sankoh would send to Liberia for us to get arms and ammunition. Then also he used to go to Guinea to get food items for the RUF. That was what I understood.

Q. What made you understand or why did you understand that Foday Sankoh was sending Jungle to Liberia for arms and ammunition?

A. The time when Foday Sankoh called me, I would sit very close to him whilst they sit to discuss some of those issues. There I was able to gather some information. He will ask Jungle about patrols he had made with other people. They would be sitting, discussing. Because myself, Foday Sankoh considered me as an experienced person so when I used to visit him I would sit very close to him. So that was the way I gathered information about the movement of Jungle.

Q. Do you know where in Liberia Jungle was getting arms and ammunition from during this time?

A. Well, that one I wouldn't say because I had not been travelling with him.

Q. Witness, you told the Court that between March and December 1998 you were based in Quiva and you said Quiva is in Kailahun District?

A. Yes.

Q. And you told the Court your assignment there was as 2nd Battalion IDU commander?

A. Yes. I was the 2nd Battalion IDU commander at Quiva.

Q. Who were you reporting to when you were in Quiva?

A. At the time I reported to the 1st Brigade IDU commander.

Q. What was his name?

A. His name was John Ngevoa.

For the Prosecution:	Ms Brenda J Hollis Mr Mohamed A Bangura Mr Nicholas Koumjian Ms Maja Dimitrova
For the accused Charles Ghankay Taylor:	Mr Terry Munyard Mr Morris Anyah

A. The first meeting took place at Hill Station where Sam Bockarie was residing. That is his house. That was where the first meeting took place and the meeting took place amongst us the RUF authorities and Ibrahim Bah.

09:34:34 MR KOUMJIAN: Unless I misheard, I believe the witness said Hill Station:

Q. Is that correct, Mr Witness?

PRESIDING JUDGE: I heard Hill Station.

THE WITNESS: Yes, Hill Station.

09:34:45 MR KOUMJIAN: H-I-L-L, capitalised:

Q. Sir, you said it was Sam Bockarie's house. Was Sam Bockarie present?

A. No, Sam Bockarie was not present, but it was in that house that Sam Bockarie resided at the time we went to Freetown.

09:35:10 Q. At the time you had this meeting, to your knowledge was Sam Bockarie in Freetown?

A. He was not in Freetown. He was in Kenema.

Q. Who was present at this first meeting at Bockarie's house with Bah?

09:35:29 A. Issa Sesay was there, Morris Kallon, CO Nya, who is also called Foday K Lansana, Gibril Massaquoi and then they sent for me, I was also present, and some other people.

Q. Thank you, Mr Witness. What happened at the meeting?

A. During that meeting Mr Bah came to talk to us, the RUF, for 09:36:38 us to join hands with the AFRC people whom had called on us for us to work together with them. He said it was that message that he brought from Mr Taylor for us.

Q. What was the reaction, if any, from the RUF members present?

A. Well, we did not do anything because we knew Ibrahim Bah. He had been with us before and we knew him to be a liaison officer who had been with the RUF, so when we saw him, and when he brought the message, we were happy and we received the message according to how he brought it.

09:37:56

Q. Mr Witness, this message from Mr Taylor that you should work - the RUF should work with the AFRC, did the members of the RUF discuss that, or was there any reaction given to General Bah about whether they accepted that?

09:38:20

A. Well, we accepted it because it was not that we went to have another meeting because of the message that he brought. We accepted it. We accepted that the message he brought, we received it and then we took him, the Bah - we took him, the Bah, to JPK's place, that is Johnny Paul Koroma, so that he will also get to know the message that Ibrahim Bah brought.

09:38:51

Q. Where was Johnny Paul Koroma's place that you took Mr Bah to?

A. Johnny Paul Koroma's house was at Spur Road.

Q. When you got to Johnny Paul Koroma's house who was present there?

09:39:15

A. Johnny Paul Koroma, he sent to call the other officers. Those were the SLA officers. They called SO Williams, they called Gullit, Bazzy. They called on all the other authorities who belonged to the AFRC and they were also present there.

Q. What was said at this meeting at JPK's house?

A. JPK and all of us who were there together with Ibrahim Bah, we went to introduce the man to him to tell him that, "This man was the man who has been with us and that it is the Pa who sent him for him to come and talk to all of us." When I say the Pa, that is Mr Taylor. "So, he brought a message that we should all work hand in hand and that is the reason why Mr Taylor sent him here. So, we brought him so that you will also see him and then he will explain to you the reason why he was sent."

09:41:12 Q. When Mr Bah delivered this message, what was the reaction of those present?

A. Well, everybody was happy for the message. We all accepted it and we all agreed with him.

Q. Did Johnny Paul Koroma say anything?

09:41:43 A. Johnny Paul Koroma himself received the message and he was happy too for the reason being that for the message for which Mr Taylor had sent the man.

Q. You say that the reaction was that those present were happy. Can you explain why they were happy?

09:42:19 A. Well, they were happy because we also needed help and the reason why they also accepted it was because that man will be able to help us to get ammunition because we were fighting and the AFRC also never had enough ammunition that they would use to continue the war.

09:42:54 Q. Was this something that was stated at the meeting: That there was a need for ammunition?

A. Yes, we discussed that one. In fact, that was our main topic that we had in mind.

Q. How long, to your knowledge, did Ibrahim Bah stay in 09:43:25 Freetown on that occasion?

A. Well, after that day, the next morning I didn't see him again. He went.

Q. At the meeting when Bah delivered this message from Taylor, was there any response given to Bah to take back?

A. We were fighting against the ECOMOG and the Kamajors.
Q. At the time of the AFRC coup, did all of the SLAs join with the RUF?
A. Not all the SLAs joined the AFRC, but at the time we were 10:07:39 in town they all pretended as if they were with the AFRC. That was how they used to do, but some were there who were spies, who used to spy on our information and any plans that we had they would reveal them to the people to whom they were loyal. What I mean is the then President Kabbah.
10:08:11 Q. Mr Witness, I want to go back to ammunition. During the time that you were in Freetown, do you know if any significant ammunition shipments were received?
A. Yes, we received a small amount of ammunition that came before the intervention.
10:08:42 Q. What shipments do you recall?
A. Well, the one that came it was at Magburaka that they brought them, but even before they brought them Johnny Paul had told us that his brother, who is Mr Taylor, was going to send something for us and that was small amount of ammunition and he 10:09:14 said we should go and receive them at Magburaka, because at Magburaka we had an airstrip. So, that was where we went and at that time they appointed Fonte Kanu, who was an SLA. He led us to go and receive the ammunition. Mike Lamin also went. I also went. But whilst we were there, the aeroplane that brought the 10:09:52 things, when it alighted it was like the ECOMOG had intercepted the movement so the Alpha Jet came around and bombarded the place, but when it came, even before it could reach there, we had already collected the items even before the Alpha Jet got there to bombard the place.

that we had plans that Johnny Paul himself should go and see Mr Taylor, so that communication was there.

Q. Thank you, Mr Witness. First let me ask you, you said, "Johnny Paul would tell us that he talked to his brother", just so the record is clear, who do you mean by Johnny Paul's brother?

A. Well, I will call the name again. Maybe you did not get it clear. I said he used to tell us that his brother was Mr Taylor because he was also considering Mr Taylor as his own elder brother. So, he took Foday Sankoh's footstep, so he was also calling Mr Taylor his brother.

MR KOUMJIAN: Some spellings, your Honour. Memuna, M-E-M-U-N-A. Tollo, T-O-L-L-O:

Q. You said that you yourself were sent to Magburaka; is that correct?

A. Yes, I went to Magburaka with Fonte Kanu and Mike Lamin, together with other people.

Q. You described something being delivered. Can you tell us what you remember as to what was actually unloaded from that plane?

A. They brought two AA guns and those were anti-aircraft guns, two of them. They brought some ammunition, the ammunition for the AA gun, and they brought some GMG rounds. Those were the things that they brought, but although we also received them, we also expected to receive AK rounds. Although we had had AK rounds before, but we needed more.

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, the witness is going too fast.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, you are going fast for the interpreter, so if you can speak more slowly so the interpreter can keep up with you, please. Please continue.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Had you finished your answer? The last thing we understood you to say was you had expected AK rounds, "Although we had AK rounds before, we needed more." Is there anything else you wanted to add?

A. Well, I said the AK rounds that we had was small in quantity, so we expected more AK rounds. Although the one that came, we accepted it, but we will have been happier if more AK rounds came because that was what we expected.

Q. Now, you indicated that you received GMG rounds. Can you tell us again what GMG rounds were for?

A. The GMG rounds is - we use it in a gun that has something like a belt. That is where we fix the ammunition before we fix it into the gun and it is that belt that that particular gun uses with the ammunition to fight.

Q. Did you, the members of the AFRC/RUF, have GMG guns that you could use these rounds in?

A. Yes, we had the guns.

Q. You also talked about two anti-aircraft guns with ammunition. Can you describe what the anti-aircraft guns looked like?

A. Well, the anti-aircraft gun is a gun. It has a stand that you can put on the ground. Sometimes it can be mounted on a van and sometimes when we wanted to take it to the front to fight we will mount it on top of a vehicle and it has a long barrel that has the magazine by the side. It also uses a belt and it is in the belt that you will load the ammunition, and it has a box that has the magazines that you put it by the side of the barrel.

Q. These anti-aircraft guns, could they be used for other purposes besides shooting at aircraft?
A. Yes. We shot human beings with it, not just aircraft. It was to kill human beings.
10:18:52 Q. The anti-aircraft gun rounds, can you describe them?
A. It is something that is big. It is longer and bigger than the AK rounds and it is even bigger than the GMG rounds, but it is an explosive.
Q. Do you know whether this shipment was paid for by the 10:19:30 AFRC/RUF?
A. Well, I have told you here that Johnny Paul and Ibrahim Bah had a closed door meeting, so whatever they discussed in that meeting they did not tell us and Johnny Paul himself did not tell us that he sent something to be taken along, only that he told us 10:20:01 that it was an instruction that he received from his brother when they were discussing and he said we should go and receive those items.
Q. Thank you. Mr Witness, during this time between the coup and the intervention when you were in Freetown, can you describe 10:20:18 what the civilians', in Freetown, reaction was to this AFRC/RUF regime?
MR MUNYARD: Again, the civilians in Freetown is a rather large population for one man to be able to speak on behalf of, unless he was elected democratically by them as some sort of 10:20:43 spokesman.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Koumjian, you have heard the objection.
MR KOUMJIAN: Yes, your Honour. This witness said he spent a year there. I can't ask him about the reactions of every then told you you should not talk about this on the radio. What happened then?

A. He told me that I should go to Buedu for us to sit together and talk, so I also prepared myself and then I left to go there.

12:59:06 Q. Okay. Between --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Koumjian, who is the "he"?

MR KOUMJIAN: Yes.

PRESIDING JUDGE: "What happened then?", and he said "He told me".

12:59:15 MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you:

Q. Who told you to come to Buedu?

A. It was Sam Bockarie, who was my commander. He was the one who called me to go.

Q. Before you actually went to Buedu, did you receive any 12:59:32 other information?

A. Yes, I had information that the advice that I gave to the man, he became angry with it because he took it that I was siding Superman, so he had already planned that if I went he would also kill me. So, somebody told me, somebody told me secretly, and he 13:00:13 said as I was going I shouldn't forget myself. I should go like a man. I also said "all right" and I went.

Q. When you say in your answer that after you "had information that the advice that I gave to the man, he became angry", who is the man that became angry?

13:00:42 A. It was Mosquito who became angry.

Q. Okay. Mr Witness, we will understand now when you say Mosquito that you mean Sam Bockarie unless you tell us differently, okay? Is that understood?

A. Yes.

Q. You mentioned another Mosquito much earlier in your testimony. So, after you received the information - you said you received information that he was planning to kill you. Who was planning to kill you?

13:01:19 A. It was Sam Bockarie who was planning to kill me.

Q. So after receiving that information, what did you do?

A. I also prepared myself. I took my bodyguards and the arms that I had with me and then I decided to go to Buedu, because he had called me that I should go to Buedu to discuss about the 13:01:45 advice that I gave him and he said I should go so as to sit and discuss better.

Q. Mr Witness, help us understand, if you believed there was a chance that he was planning to kill you why did you obey the order and go to Buedu?

13:02:05 A. Well, I went there - I never wanted anything that will spark off and spread over to other people, so that was the reason why when the problem was between himself and Superman, I decided to intervene. So, if I had also refused to go he was going to order some other people to come and meet me and do something else

13:02:42 to me. So, if he decided to do that and if the people came, I was also going to command my own men and that was not going to stop between him and I, and if that happened it will have been an infighting. So, that was what I was trying to avoid, although I did not understand that that was what he was about to do, but I

13:03:08 went there. So, if I went there and he wanted to do that, we were both going to die together.

Q. Okay. Just a bit slower in your answers, please, Mr Witness, would be helpful for the interpreters. Can you tell us then what happened after you prepared yourself to go to Buedu with your bodyguards?

A. Well, I prepared myself and I went with some people, who were mining people who were in Kono. They had already got some diamonds and that was Mr Kennedy. They also joined me to go to Buedu, so we all travelled together and we went to Mosquito at Buedu.

Q. What happened when you got to Buedu?

A. Well, when we got to Buedu, when I entered the town, his bodyguards used to sit in front of his house under the tree and so they were sitting there. So, when I got there the bodyguards were talking to me and they said my men should not enter Mosquito's ground with arms, so they said they should disarm. Then I said no. I said "I am also an authority, so, it doesn't mean that if I am coming to meet this man my bodyguards should disarm." So, whilst we were talking Mosquito was inside the house and he heard - he overheard my voice and then he came and he told his men that, no, they should forget about me, so that my armed men will enter. So, my bodyguards joined his own bodyguards where they were seated and then I also entered to Mosquito. So, when I went we shook hands, we greeted each other nicely. I didn't see - I didn't see a countenance of him about the information that I had received, because myself I had already alerted my own men, so whilst I was with him inside, if anything was going to happen they should also do what they will be able to do. But when I got there the man gave me a smiling face, we sat down, we smoked together, he brought rum, we drank and then we started discussing.

Q. Tell us about your discussions with Sam Bockarie at that time?

A. Well, at that time the reason why he called me was because of the advice that I gave him about the Superman issue, so that we will discuss it, and then what he also told me was that he said, "Bra, I was waiting for somebody like you, for you to come here, because we have a problem here on the ground. So, we all need to sit together and hang heads and then we discuss and then we will act on what to do next." And then I asked him, "What can we do next?" Then he said, "It is about this ammunition business." Then he said, "There is nothing that we will be able to get now because the one we have at hand now has almost finished", and he said, "I have been discussing this with some other commanders here so that we will send somewhere for us to get ammunition and luckily I called you and you are here. So, we have to discuss it and when the other commanders arrive here, we always sit together and discuss it and then we will see what to do next." I said, "All right", and then I went to bed and slept.

So, the next morning all of us, the commanders who were in the town there, we discussed that we should request for ammunition from Mr Taylor and that we should write a letter and give to Brother Jungle to take it along. So, those of us, the commanders who were there, we went, we had the meeting, we held the meeting, we discussed. Even Pa Rogers was present in the meeting. We all sat down, we discussed and then we came to a conclusion that we should write a letter, and then we wrote the letter.

Q. Let me stop you and go over this a little more slowly.

MR KOUMJIAN: First of all, your Honours, line 25, it states the "war" has almost finished. I thought the witness said "what we had was almost finished".

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: He said "the one we have".

MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you, your Honour.

MR MUNYARD: "Bra" just disappeared off the top of the page, which I think must mean "Bro". I think it is line 20.

13:09:21 MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you:

Q. So, do you want to go back for a moment. When you talked about the advice you gave Mosquito/Sam Bockarie about Superman, can you tell us again what advice you gave to Sam Bockarie about his argument with Superman?

13:09:43 A. When I told him that we should forget about this and that he should forget about Superman, I said we shouldn't have anything like infighting because I wanted us to concentrate on the enemies, but if we started petty conflict amongst ourselves the enemy will take that as an advantage to advance on our

13:10:10 positions. So, I told him that we should forget about those things. So, he listened to me and he agreed. That was the reason why he brought the discussion up when he was trying to get some other people and when I came he said I was lucky to be present and that when we all meet, we sit and discuss it. That 13:10:40 was how it happened.

Q. Then you told us that the next day there was a meeting of commanders; is that correct?

A. Yes, we met.

Q. Where did that meeting take place?

13:10:55 A. Well, we held the meeting in Buedu. That was where we held the meeting.

Q. Okay. Who was present at the meeting?

A. Myself who is speaking, I was there. Mosquito was there. Jungle was there because he was also based in Buedu. We had other commanders who were also based on that ground, like one SLA he was called Sambebe. He was also present and some other commanders who were in Buedu, we and the late Pa Rogers.

Q. At first you mentioned an SLA and I just wasn't familiar with the name. Can you say the name of the SLA who you said was present and based in Buedu?

A. Sambebe.

MR KOUMJIAN: Taking a guess, it is S-A-M-B-E-B-E:

Q. Who is Pa Rogers?

A. Pa Rogers was the - one of the RUF - he was the RUF Secretary-General who was there and he was the War Council Chairman.

Q. At that meeting - sorry, and then you said Jungle was there. Are you referring to the person who you said was also named Tamba?

A. Yes, that is the person that I am talking about.

Q. What was discussed again at this meeting of the commanders?

A. Well, I have told you that we did - during our discussions we were talking about ammunition because we had run out of ammunition. So, we did not have enough ammunition again to continue our offensive, or to fight, or to even defend our areas, so we discussed that it will be better that this time around we all ensure to write a letter and give it to Brother Jungle to take it to Mr Taylor for him to help us get some ammunition. So, those were the things that we discussed and we all came to the conclusion that we agreed. We told the adjutant, who was Rashid Sandy, to write a letter and he wrote it. He read the letter out to everybody and from there we enveloped it and we gave it to Colonel Jungle to take along. So, Colonel Jungle went with the letter and after three days Sam Bockarie called us and said he had received a message from the Pa, and that is Mr Taylor, that he himself should go, that is Sam Bockarie, that he should go to Monrovia. So, Sam Bockarie called us and informed us and we also said okay, it is not bad, and he said, "Okay, but since I am leaving I want Issa to come to Buedu and stay here and you, Isaac, you should go to Pendembu and stay there", because that was where Issa was. That was his own area of control. So, I went to where Issa was and then Issa came to Buedu. So, when Mosquito was leaving he said, "I will not go alone. I wanted to go with some other people." So, he went with Rashid Sandy, he went with Pa Rogers and then he went with Lawrence Wohmandia and Eddie Kanneh also.

Q. Mr Witness, do you recall, or can you give us an estimate of when it was that you held this meeting in Buedu where you drafted the letter for Charles Taylor?

A. Well, at Buedu the place where they used to hold meetings, or discussions, it was not actually in the town itself, but it was out of the town going towards Liberia. There was a place that was called Waterworks. That was where we used to hold our meetings.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, I think the question you asked was when. It relates to a time frame, not where.

MR KOUMJIAN: Yes, your Honour, before I re-ask the question I believe Wohmandia may not be spelt correctly. Our spelling is W-O-H-M-A-N-D-I-A:

Q. Mr Witness, do you recall when the month, or the season, that it was that you held the meeting in Buedu where you drafted the letter to Jungle? I realise it was ten years ago.

A. The letter I can say it was in early November, something like that.
Q. Do you recall if it was rainy season, or if rainy season had ended?
13:17:57 A. Well, it was during the dry season.
Q. Thank you.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Which year is this? November of which year?
MR KOUMJIAN:
13:18:06 Q. Mr Witness, you have indicated earlier that the operation - well, what year was it that we are talking about when you drafted the letter?
A. It was in 1998.
Q. Thank you. You indicated that Sam Bockarie left and he 13:18:44 asked you to have a new assignment because he was going to Liberia; is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Did you take that assignment? Did you fulfil that order?
A. Yes, I took it.
13:19:05 Q. So, where did you go?
A. I went to Pendembu.
Q. Do you know if Issa Sesay replaced Bockarie in Buedu during the time he was gone?
A. Yes, Issa Sesay replaced Bockarie in Buedu.
13:19:32 Q. Now, the letter you said was given to Colonel Jungle and you have mentioned him before, but you said he is based in Buedu. Can you explain what you mean when you say he was based in Buedu?
A. Colonel Jungle was based in Buedu with Mosquito. He had his own place there where he was staying, but he would go to Liberia and come back because himself and Mosquito belonged to the same tribe, so they were doing things together. So, he was also there. He had his own bodyguards with him and he was there in the place.

13:20:27 Q. When you say that Jungle and Mosquito were the same tribe, which tribe were they?

A. It was Kissi.

Q. What language would Jungle and Mosquito speak when they spoke to each other?

13:20:51 A. Well, they would speak the Liberian English and sometimes, when they are ready again, they will speak the Kissi.

Q. What was Jungle's job when he was there in Buedu?

A. Well, Jungle was there as a liaison officer. He used to carry messages and he will bring things come again. So, that was 13:21:33 just what he was.

Q. When you say liaison officer, liaison between which parties?

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Interpreter, what do you mean "he will bring things come again"? What do you mean by that?

13:21:51 THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, the witness said he would bring things come. He did not specify what thing.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: [Overlapping speakers].

THE WITNESS: I have said before that Jungle will go to Monrovia and then he will bring ammunition. I have even told you 13:22:15 that at one time when I was in Kono I requested for ammunition, when Mosquito told me that I should exercise patience because Brother Jungle had gone to Monrovia to bring some ammunition. He went to the Pa, that is Mr Taylor. So, if you are asking that when he took something along and then he brought something back, the something that I am talking about is ammunition.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Thank you, Mr Witness. You indicated he was a liaison, liaison between who?

13:23:06 A. A liaison between the RUF and the NPFL.

Q. Do you know if at that time in 1998 Colonel Jungle belonged to any unit?

A. Colonel Jungle was part of the Executive Mansion guard, but they had changed his name. At that time I was not there any 13:23:42 longer, but at that time I knew him to be an Executive Mansion guard, but they had changed the name from Executive Mansion guards and they now had another name.

Q. Do you recall what the name was, the new name for the Executive Mansion guard?

13:24:09 A. Well, they said they had SS unit.

Q. Thank you. Did you ever speak to Jungle yourself?

A. Yes, the time I went to Buedu I spoke to Jungle. He and I spoke.

Q. Do you have knowledge of who it was that Jungle reported to 13:24:39 within the Liberian structure?

A. Jungle was going to Mr Taylor because it was to him that we were sending a message, so he was going to him.

Q. How do you know that? How do you know that he was going directly to Mr Taylor?

13:25:19 A. Well, I had told you that I have been talking to him and he also told me that, so I knew that for himself.

Q. Just to be completely clear, when you say the Executive Mansion guard you are speaking of the Executive Mansion for which country and which person?

A. It was in Liberia and it was Mr Taylor, the place where he was.

Q. Going back for a moment to the time you were in Buedu and you drafted the letter, the group drafted the letter for Jungle, how many days were you in Buedu area for that stay?

13:26:20

A. I said I was there for three days in Buedu Town.

Q. During that time did you go outside of Buedu at any time?

A. Yes, I went to the village that is Kangama. I went to Kangama where Johnny Paul Koroma was.

13:26:55

Q. Why did you go to Kangama?

A. That is my village and I later understood that Johnny Paul was there and so I went there.

Q. You told us, I believe, at the beginning of your testimony that you were born in that village; is that correct?

13:27:24

A. Yes.

Q. When you got to Kangama, did you see Johnny Paul Koroma?

A. Yes, I saw Johnny Paul Koroma. I met him. He was in zorbush [phon]. Because of the Alpha Jets, in the morning people would go and hide somewhere, so when I arrived in the town there people told me that Johnny Paul was in the zorbush, so I went there.

13:28:00

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Would you please spell the name of that location for us.

MR KOUMJIAN: It is S-A-W-B-U-S-H. Let me just clarify with the witness:

13:28:18

Q. Is it Sawbush?

A. Zorbush, zorbush.

Q. Is that a place?

A. It is a kind of hideout in the bush, a kind of hideout in a shop.

Q. And do you know, if you don't know or if you don't know just tell us, what kind of shop that was before it became Sam Bockarie's house?
14:38:09 A. Well, that shop, that was where we kept the ammunition. It's a store. That's where we kept the ammunition and the food stuff which he brought. That's where we kept them. It was not owned by Mosquito himself. The house was owned by civilians, but the house had a shop before Mosquito moved into that house. So 14:38:30 he just turned the shop into a store.
Q. Had you been inside that shop area in Mosquito's house before?
A. Yes, I went there.
Q. When you went into the shop, when he took you into the shop 14:38:51 area of his house this time what did you see?
A. I said I saw the ammunition that he'd brought. They were packed from the floor up to the ceiling, that was how the ammunition boxes were packed. The ammunition was plenty at the time that he brought them. So when I saw the ammunitions I was 14:39:17 very happy.
Q. You indicated that the ammunition was packed up to the ceiling. Can you point to something perhaps in this room or give us an idea of the height in comparison to my height or in comparison to something you see in the room as to how high the 14:39:35 ammunition was?
A. Well, the ceiling that was in the house, I can say this one is higher a little. This one is higher a little. But it could be where that - I don't know if that's a speaker, where that speaker is. From down here to where that speaker is. That's how the boxes were packed.

MR KOUMJIAN: It appears to me, your Honours, that the speaker is about three metres. Two and a half, three metres high.

14:40:21 MR MUNYARD: From here - I suppose it's the same height as this. Yes, I'd agree with that.

PRESIDING JUDGE: We will put on the record that the witness has indicated a piece of machinery on the wall which is approximately three metres from the floor.

14:40:39 MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Can you give any estimate or did Sam Bockarie tell you how many boxes there were of ammunition in that room?

A. Well, the ammunition boxes that were packed there, he told me they were more than a hundred, but they were mixed because 14:41:01 they were different. He brought AK rounds, RPG and GMG rounds. So it was mixed.

Q. Just so the record is clear, when you say RPG what do you mean?

A. RPG is a rocket. It's a bomb. It's a rocket that we 14:41:25 launch.

Q. Had you ever seen this much ammunition before, you yourself, in Sierra Leone?

A. Well, when we started the war I did not see any kind of ammunition that Bockarie showed to me. I have not seen any - I 14:41:53 had not seen any ammunition that could be up to that quantity.

Q. Now you also mentioned that Bockarie said he brought back medicine. Do you know what kind of medicine he brought back?

A. They brought injections, medicines, tablets, but they were in cartons.

was coming I came along with some people who were in the mining group who brought some diamonds. So those diamonds were the ones he took along and when he came back he told us that the diamonds that he went with, he left them there with Mr Taylor.

14:45:29 Q. Now you said that Mr Taylor had made a connection for Bockarie with Burkina Faso and Bockarie went to Burkina Faso. Did he say who he went with on this trip to Burkina Faso?

A. Yes, he said he went with SYB Rogers.

Q. Okay. And the photographs that he showed you, did he 14:46:09 indicate where they were taken?

A. Yes, he said they took those photographs at the restaurants where they were eating in Burkina Faso and the hotel where they lodged and the swimming pool where they used to go swimming.

Q. Did you see the photographs?

14:46:36 A. Yes, I looked at them and I saw them.

Q. And do you recall now, I realise it's a long time ago, any persons you recognised in those photographs?

A. I saw Sam Bockarie himself. He was on that picture. The late SYB Rogers, he too was on that picture.

14:47:14 Q. Did Sam Bockarie indicate what the result was of his time in Burkina Faso?

A. Well, he said he had gone and seen the Burkina Faso president and they have spoken for us to be able to buy ammunition from there. So they had made those - that arrangement 14:47:44 - they had made that arrangement already. So whenever we want those things he will make sure that he goes there. So that was what he said.

Q. Did Sam Bockarie indicate where the ammunition came from that you saw in the storeroom?

A. The ammunition which he brought, he told me he had brought them from Liberia and that it was Mr Taylor who gave them to him.
Q. After your conversation with Sam Bockarie where he showed you the ammunition what happened then in Buedu?
14:48:45 A. Well, after he had shown the ammunitions to me he told me the plan that he had come with with respect to those ammunitions. He told me that he and Mr Taylor sat together and planned to come and run an operation. He said he sat with the Pa, Mr Taylor, who took out a map and showed the locations where the RUF and the 14:49:26 SLAs, where we occupied. He showed that to him. He came with a plan for us to launch an operation whereby we'll capture Kono, Makeni and advance to Freetown. And we were also to attack Joru. So those were the areas we were to capture. We were also to launch another attack on Kenema. We were to attack Kenema as 14:50:06 well.

He said he discussed with the Pa, that is Mr Taylor, to meet with Superman, that of the two of us one person should attack Joru, when that person would have attacked Joru he should advance on Zimmi. He said he discussed that.

14:50:33 MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, if I can just get a clarification. Well, I'll ask the witness:
Q. The interpretation we got is that Bockarie told you he discussed with the Pa, that is Mr Taylor, to meet with Superman and I thought I heard you say something different. When Bockarie 14:50:50 discussed with Taylor what did they say about you and Superman?
A. Bockarie discussed with Mr Taylor for I and Superman, one of us should attack Joru. But Superman was in Koinadugu District, so Mosquito told the Pa, that is Mr Taylor, that Superman was far away from the Buedu end. So I was close to the place and they said I should attack Joru and advance, when I would have captured Joru I should advance on Zimmi because I was to receive some other people from the NPFL who were to come from Liberia. I was to receive them. I was to receive them in Zimmi, I should be in Zimmi when they came. That was the reinforcement that would have arrived.

Q. Now you indicated that Mr Taylor had told Bockarie that you or Superman should attack Joru and advance to Zimmi in order to receive some NPFL who were to come from Liberia. Do you know why it would be you or Superman who would have been chosen for that assignment?

A. Yes, because the two of us used to be NPFL fighters and we were familiar with the NPFL brothers.

Q. Did Sam Bockarie indicate what the purpose of this attack was going to be? What was the ultimate purpose?

A. The reason for this attack, for this advance on the various places and for us to take those places, you can remember that at that time Foday Sankoh had been moved from Nigeria and he was in jail in Freetown. So we were to attack Kono and take there. We were to attack Freetown in order to free Foday Sankoh and the others who were in jail there. We were also to ensure that we seized power.

Q. Did Sam Bockarie indicate to you in his discussions with Mr Taylor if there was any discussion about how the attack should be carried out in order to free Sankoh?

A. Yes, he said they discussed it. After he had shown those places to him they discussed that we should run that mission to ensure that we free Foday Sankoh and others and on the operation we should ensure that the ammunition is not wasted. We should make the operation fearful than all the other operations that we had undertaken because we want to make sure that we take Freetown and hold on to power.

Q. Mr Witness, are you telling us now when you talk about the plan for a fearful operation that this is what Bockarie told you he discussed with Charles Taylor?

A. Yes, that was what Sam Bockarie said.

Q. What happened after your private discussion there in the storeroom and in the house with Bockarie?

14:55:13 A. After that, because they had sent for the commanders to come, the following morning the commanders came to Buedu. Then we had a meeting where he told us all I have explained here and what he had brought to show them to the commanders and what the 14:55:48 mission was for those ammunitions that he's brought. So just like he told me, that was what he also told the commanders after they had all come, including the SLA commanders who had come. We had the meeting and he explained the same thing that he had briefed me on. He also showed the ammunition to the people.

So when he spoke at the meeting the late Pa Rogers, SYB

14:56:18 Rogers that I spoke about with whom he came, he stood and told and thanked Sam Bockarie and he told us that if Sam Bockarie was the rebel leader at the time the war started then the war would have ended quickly because the ammunition which they brought, the man who was Foday Sankoh who was the rebel leader had never 14:56:55 brought that quantity of ammunition which they had now brought.

Q. Who was present at this meeting of commanders in Buedu that you just discussed?

A. I was there. Mike Lamin was there. Leather Boot was at that meeting. Akim Turay, Eddie Kanneh and other commanders from other places, they too came and they were present.

Q. First, Mr Witness, can you tell us what faction Akim Turay belonged to?
A. Akim Turay was an SLA. He was a soldier in the Sierra 14:58:10 Leone Army.
Q. What faction did Leather Boot belong to?
A. Leather Boot too was a soldier, an SLA.
Q. What faction did Eddie Kanneh belong to? Who was Eddie Kanneh?
14:58:31 A. Eddie Kanneh was one of the soldiers. He too was a soldier, an SLA.
Q. Can you tell us if you recall any RUF commanders besides Mike Lamin being present at this meeting, and yourself?
A. You had Monkey Brown who was also another RUF commander.
14:59:12 Q. Thank you.
A. Issa Sesay too was there. Morris Kallon was there.
Q. Thank you. Do you recall any other names at this time?
A. Augustine Gbao, he too was there.
Q. Now, sir, you indicated that the plan for your own 14:59:52 assignment was to go and attack Joru and Zimmi to receive NPFL troops. What do you mean at this time in 1998 by NPFL forces?
A. NPFL fighters were those who came from Liberia who were Charles Taylor's men and who were in Liberia. They were the ones who were to join us. But I was to go and receive. That was why 15:00:36 he said I should attack Joru and advance on Zimmi for me to receive them. They were to join us for us all to run the operation.
Q. You did not mention Superman. Was Superman at the meeting?
A. No, Superman was not there. I had told you that Superman was now in Koinadugu District and there was no space - there was no way he could have left that place to come because ECOMOG were at Koidu Town, they had occupied Koidu Town.

Q. Thank you and that is part of my next question. You talked about an attack on Kono. Can you explain when the plan was to attack the Kono District what was the situation in Kono at the time you had this meeting, what forces were occupying various locations in Kono?

A. In Kono ECOMOG occupied there, Kamajors and you had loyalists, that is the SLAs of former President Tejan Kabbah.

Q. Did these forces occupy all of Kono District or parts of Kono District?

A. Well, they were in Koidu Town itself. They occupied Koidu Town itself. They were in some other areas, but we too had men around them.

Q. Thank you. At this meeting in Buedu that you've talked about was SAJ Musa present?

A. No, SAJ Musa was not there. SAJ Musa and Superman were in that Koinadugu area, so he was not there.

Q. At the meeting was there any discussion of the forces in the north, SAJ Musa and Superman's forces, taking any part in your plans?

A. Yes, we discussed them and we all agreed that we should send - Mosquito should send radio message to them for all of them to join hands so that we can run the operation. But we all decided that Mosquito would not be the best person, but it would be better for Johnny Paul to talk to SAJ Musa, for us to forget about the past, to put all that infighting behind us and run the operation. That was what we agreed upon and sent to Johnny Paul and Johnny Paul was able to talk to SAJ Musa and others for us all to join hands together to run the operation and they agreed.

Q. How do you know about the communication between Johnny Paul Koroma and SAJ Musa?

15:04:14 A. Well, that was something that we talked about at the meeting and we all agreed that Johnny Paul should do it because he will be the best person and it went on because I too had a radio in my own area. So my radio man monitored it and he told me that the message went, that they've sent the message to 15:04:48 SAJ Musa and others for all of them to join hands in the operation.

Q. Do you know if SAJ Musa gave any response to Johnny Paul Koroma's request that they all join hands?

A. Well, SAJ Musa accepted to run the operation.

15:05:16 Q. Do you know if there were any RUF with SAJ Musa at that time?

A. Yes, I had said it from the early stages that at that place we had some RUF men who retreated from Makeni to that end. So there were some RUF men with SAJ Musa.

15:05:39 Q. Can you remember any names of RUF that you know were with SAJ Musa at the time you had these discussions in Buedu about the national offensive?

A. I told you that the RUF men like one of the senior men who was there, Alfred Brown, I told you about that. He was a radio 15:06:08 man. He was a radio operator. I told you about King Perry and other fighters who were there.

Q. Did you know Alfred Brown yourself?

A. Yes, I know Alfred Brown.

Q. During this period of time in November in 1998 you told us was the meeting were you in any communication with Alfred Brown yourself?

A. At the time that he was in Koinadugu I did not communicate with him, but at the time that the offensive started when all of us had gone on the offensive in our different areas I communicated with him.

Q. Okay. So when the offensive started you had some direct communications with Alfred Brown, is that correct? On the radio, I mean?

15:07:11 A. Yes, yes.

Q. After that meeting what did you do, after the meeting of all the commanders where the plan was made for the offensive?

A. Well, everybody agreed to run the operation. People had their various targets where they should go and they were to be 15:07:40 supplied with ammunition to go. The only people who were not able to receive the supplies at that moment were the ones who were in the northern jungle in the Koinadugu District. At that moment they were not able to receive any supplies. But those of us who were to go to the various targets, we received supplies.

15:08:06 Q. And can you explain again why those in the northern district could not receive supplies at that time?

A. I think I have said it and I'll say it again. I said because there was no way for us to transport any ammunition to go their way because the enemies who we were fighting, that is the 15:08:32 ECOMOG troops and the loyalists to former President Tejan Kabbah and the Kamajors, were based in Koidu Town. So we had no way of taking any ammunition to them.

Q. After the meeting did you receive ammunition?

A. Yes, I received ammunition to go to my own target.

A. At that time they were in Waterloo.
Q. Okay. And what exactly did Sam Bockarie tell Gullit to wait for?
A. He said they should wait until they received reinforcement.
15:58:53 Q. Now, Mr Witness, you said at one point something I'd like you to explain. You said SAJ Musa selected you to move with men to join him. Is that correct?
A. Say it again. Let me get it clear.
Q. What I understood from the translation is that you had said
15:59:17 that SAJ Musa had selected you to move with your men to join him. Did SAJ Musa ever give you an instruction to join him or did we misunderstand something?
A. Maybe you got me wrong. I didn't say SAJ Musa.
Q. It would perhaps help if you spoke a little bit slower 15:59:42 about these events. When the force got to Waterloo and this message from Mosquito was given to Gullit to wait where were you at that time?
A. I said I was around that Joru axis. That was where I was.
Q. How do you know about Bockarie's message to Gullit to wait
16:00:06 for reinforcements?
A. It was something that I heard over the communication set that we had.
Q. Now when you found out - when Gullit was in Waterloo and Bockarie told him to wait for reinforcements did you receive any 16:00:33 orders from anyone at that time?
A. Yes, I got an order from Sam Bockarie that I should come to Kailahun and then from there I moved to Kono and then get some men to join the other men who were in Makeni for me to take the men to Waterloo to join Gullit and others. That was the troops or the forces who were considered our enemies and against whom we were fighting.

So he started communicating with Sam Bockarie and saying that he was getting pressure and he was calling for reinforcements, but there was no easy way because the other men on the Hastings side were also trying to fight to enter but they didn't make it to enter. So the other men who were inside, they had too much pressure so they decided to retreat.

16:09:34

Q. When you say the men on the Hastings side which men are you referring to?

16:10:01

A. Well, I am talking about Rambo, Rambo's own group. So when those men were receiving this pressure in Freetown Mosquito passed instruction to them telling him that if there was no way to stand the men they should start carrying out some destruction, they should set fire on the Nigerian embassy and other areas. So the men also started carrying out the orders that Mosquito passed to them. So they started setting the houses on fire, but they were - they didn't make it to burn the Nigerian embassy, but the other areas where they set the fire, they were burnt down and they carried out some other destructions.

16:10:32

16:11:04

Q. Mr Witness, could you recognise Gullit's voice?

A. I know Gullit's voice very well.

Q. When you told us about Gullit calling for reinforcements, calling Bockarie for reinforcements, is that something someone told you or is that something you heard yourself on the radio?

16:11:28

A. Well, I heard it over the radio and whilst the instructions were given to the men telling him that they should do it or they should do that, it was not something that they encoded. They were saying it out now so that even the enemy against whom they were fighting would be afraid.

Q. You said Sam Bockarie gave orders to burn houses and the Nigerian embassy. Is that something someone told you or how did you learn that?

16:12:19 A. I said I heard him when he was passing the order that they should set the Nigerian embassy on fire.

Q. By the way what did Gullit call Bockarie, do you recall?

A. He called him Sir because he knew that the man was chief of defence staff, he knew about his position.

16:12:57 Q. Now earlier in your testimony you talked about 448s. At this time you said the troops entered Freetown on January 6 did you hear any of these alerts, these 448s, over the radio while you were monitoring?

A. Yes, that 448, they were saying it and they were sending it 16:13:33 to the men who were in Freetown and they were alerting them that 448 was around.

Q. Mr Witness, how often did you hear Gullit communicating with Bockarie?

A. Well, they did it frequently. Let's say in half an hour

16:14:06 they would communicate, because it was not just Sam Bockarie but we were all focused on the capital city at that time and all the mission that we had planned to carry out was focused on the capital city, because that was where we wanted, so we all had our attentions focused there so Mosquito was talking to Gullit

16:14:34 frequently.

Q. Now you indicated that the 448s, they were saying it and they were sending it. Who was sending the 448s to those in Freetown?

A. I had told the Court that we had a monitoring team that was Guinea and Sierra Leone and he would take it from the embassy and he would carry it. So Jungle too was assigned with Tiagen Wantee and that was his mission for which he was assigned there, and my own mission was to take it from Gbarnga from Charles Taylor to escort it as far as Kissidugu. That was what I said.

12:07:43

Q. Thank you. Now you've indicated you took the ammunition and rockets from Gbarnga from Charles Taylor. Where exactly in Gbarnga did you get the ammunition and rockets?

A. From the mansion. From Charles Taylor's mansion at Bofell Hill [phon]. That was where the ammunitions were stored in his warehouse.

12:08:13

Q. Thank you. Now you've indicated this happened when ULIMO controlled Lofa County. After ULIMO disarmed, did you make any trips to Sierra Leone?

A. Plenty times, plenty times, and at that time the road was free to me. Many times. If you ask, I will name them.

12:08:39

Q. Can you just give us an estimate of how many trips you made to Sierra Leone? Give us some idea.

A. I made trips to Sierra Leone at the time Mosquito was there up to Issa Sesay's administration. So it was more than 20, 30 to 40 trips.

12:09:05

Q. Thank you. On those trips would you carry anything to or from Sierra Leone?

A. Yes, I carried arms, ammos including some artillery pieces, chasers. We had one of Charles Taylor's friends, a white guy with a big stomach. He used to bring some artillery pieces. I escorted it there so many times.

12:09:34

Q. Now, you mentioned chasers. Can you tell the Court what chasers are?

phone.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please repeat the name of the phone, Mr Witness. It wasn't heard clearly.

THE WITNESS: I said after they left when they went to 12:34:08 Burkina they spent a week and five days and they returned; they and Eddie Kanneh - Eddie Kanneh, Mike Lamin with Sam Bockarie and Musa Cisse. Musa Cisse came along with them.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Witness, you were saying that you were at a club
12:34:32 drinking at a table and Sam Bockarie received a call on his phone. What kind of phone was that? Can you give us the name of the type of phone?

A. It was Thuraya satellite phone. I was in possession of one.

12:34:52 MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honours, the spelling is T-H-U-R-I-Y-A:

Q. After Sam Bockarie received a call on this phone, what did he do?

A. He rushed in to where I was sitting down and he said, "Top Bra, let's go", and I said, "All the drinks we have here?", and 12:35:17 he said, "Let's go". So, we left and went to White Flower. At the time we went, Benjamin Yeaten, Joe Tuah, Peter Saikpedeh, they were all at the White Flower's front door and they said, "Your materials have arrived. Your ammos have come". Then we left and went to the airport.

12:35:39 When we went I saw the Russian cargo plane. It came with enough ammos and arms which we were not able to offload. We were not able to haul everything to Monrovia that night. We left some there at the cargo warehouse at Roberts International Airport. Then we took some - in two days we took some, Mosquito and I,

Eddie Kanneh, Mike Lamin, FOC, the late FOC, Victor Kallon - Victor Kallon. Morie Kallon is different. Victor Kallon. We left them there and we got into the car, two trucks, a pick-up and a jeep. We escorted the first trip, yeah.

12:36:38 Q. Mr Witness, I'm going to go over that a little bit slowly and again ask you to speak slowly for the interpreter. Now you said when Sam Bockarie came back from receiving the phone call he said "Top Brass". What does the word "Top Brass" or name mean? Who is that?

12:37:02 A. I was the one they called Top Bra. Over there they called me so many names. They called me Zigzag, they called me Top Bra, they called me [indiscernible], they called me Five-O-Five, they called me Jungle Broom. Yes, these are my names.

MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, the spelling I believe that the 12:37:16 witness is pronouncing, Top Brass, T-O-P B-R-A-S-S:

Q. So you said that after the phone call you all rushed to the Roberts International Airport. Is that correct?

A. We were not rushed directly. We rushed to White Flower to Charles Taylor's house. It was there that we met Benjamin 12:37:49 Yeaten, Joe Tuah and Peter Saikpedeh there. Later Mosquito went inside from there. Then they took us to the airport. We went and I said at the time I saw a Russian cargo plane, a very big plane loaded with ammos and ammunition - I mean ammunition and arms.

12:38:14 MR KOUMJIAN: And the name Peter Saikpedeh, the last name is spelled S-A-I-K-P-E-D-E-H.

THE WITNESS: He was one of the Special Forces.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Now, you've described that the plane was full of ammunition. Can you tell us what kind of ammunition was in the plane?

A. Some were LAR rounds, AK rounds, GPMG, 32 PC, and some GPMG barrels. Enough, yes. These were the materials that were in the plane.

Q. For those of us not so familiar with weapons, GPMG barrels, by barrels do you mean - is that a gun?

A. Yes.

Q. And you've mentioned LAR rounds. What is LAR?

A. It's a rifle. It's a rifle. The round - the rounds of that rifle is what I'm talking about.

Q. Now, you mentioned you were not able to take all of the ammunition to White Flower that night. What did you use to transport the ammunition to White Flower?

A. In Monrovia Charles Taylor was having so many trucks and these trucks, two were assigned directly to me to escort arms and ammunition, but that night there were some trucks that were headed by Joe Tuah, one of the Special Forces, some trucks headed by Peter Saikpedeh there and some headed by Benjamin Yeaten. I led the other two, but we were not able to overhaul everything at night.

Q. Thank you.

A. The only thing we did was that we offloaded the plane, because when the plane comes we don't want that plane - day to break on that airplane. So, we offloaded the plane at all costs and stored the materials in the cargo warehouse at the airport.

Q. So, how many trucks in total carried ammunition from the airport that night?

A. If I'm not mistaken it's about - it's six or five, if I'm not mistaken.

Q. Can you give us some idea of the size of these trucks, of how much they could carry?

A. No, I can't give account of that, but the trucks were big, the one I was using.

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can he repeat the brand of truck? It's not very clear.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, can you tell us the name of the kind of truck again, please.

THE WITNESS: Mack truck. My own. The one that I was using. My own Mack truck, a yellow truck.

MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you:

Q. Mr Witness, did this appear to be a lot of ammunition to you?

A. Repeat.

Q. The ammunition that arrived that night, based on your prior experience was that a lot of ammunition to arrive in Liberia?

A. Yes, yes. Like the chaser, the chaser that came with our chief Charles Taylor's friend, the four white guys, they were many. Many times. Even the other truck - the other plane that came at the second to the last time that had the accident on the runway with our ammos which he Charles Taylor - when Charles Taylor had stopped all international security not to go to the airport again, we were able to produce eight to nine trucks.

Q. I want to concentrate now on this ammunition that arrived - that came just after Sam Bockarie returned from Burkina Faso and you said Sam Bockarie got the call about the arrival of the plane. Was Sam Bockarie at the airport when the ammunition was being unloaded?

A. Sam Bockarie and I rode in the same car. We rode the same jeep. Then my driver who was assigned with me, [indiscernible] and Benjamin Yeaten, they had their own truck. Yes, but he - he 12:44:05 was not on the field at the same time. We were in Monrovia city in the nightclub when he received the call that the plane had arrived with the ammo.
Q. Mr Witness, the next day after the plane had arrived and the ammunition had been unloaded, what did you do?
12:44:26 A. We were happy. The following day we rested all day. I think we spent two days in the city. It was the following night that we took off, because we couldn't have left during the day.
Q. Mr Witness, when you say "We took off", first of all who was travelling with you?
12:44:52 A. At the time that we took the first trip from White Flower with the ammos I went along with Eddie Kanneh, Mosquito, Mike Lamin, including their bodyguards. One was called FOC, Victor Kallon, Yellow Man. I can't remember all those boys, yes.
Q. On that trip what vehicles did you take?
12:45:33 A. We used two Mack trucks, the trucks I was using. The two yellow Mack trucks with the jeep and the pick-up.
Q. Where did you go?
A. To Sierra Leone. We passed through Bong County, we got to Lofa, passed through Voinjama, Kolahun, Foya and entered through 12:46:01 Buedu.
Q. What were you carrying in those vehicles on this trip?
A. I told you the arms and the ammo that came, but the first one that came were enough ammos that we carried. That was what was in the car. But the jeep that we were in, there was no ammo in there, but it was in front of me escorting those items. So when they see me they will know straightaway that I was the one travelling with those trucks and there would be no embarrassment through Charles Taylor's directive.

12:46:51 Q. I just want to be clear about what was being carried. In the trucks what were you carrying, if anything?

A. I said ammo. Ammo, ammo, ammo. I repeat, ammo, ammo, that can be put in a gun to shoot. That's what I'm talking about. It's not something different. We cannot carry an empty truck.

12:47:11 Q. Thank you. Now the ammunition that you were carrying, you indicated that this plane had arrived, you called it the Russian cargo plane at Roberts International Airport, and you had unloaded the ammo from that plane. Did you take all of the ammo from that plane on this trip to Sierra Leone?

12:47:36 A. No, we did not carry them on the same time. I said the ammo was plenty. What we did was that we offloaded the truck - I mean we offloaded the plane and stored these ammos and arms in at IRIA cargo warehouse. The one we were able to haul that night, we took them to Charles Taylor's residence at White Flower in 12:48:04 Monrovia. At the time they were hauling overnight we were resting. We spent two days. The following night we took off from Monrovia with the two yellow trucks and a pick-up, plus the jeep. That's what I'm saying.

Anyway, I'm very sorry, you see my head, I've got a 12:48:25 problem, so you too should take your time to ask me. You see this head? You see here? Through my ears, I can breathe through my ears, do you see? You hear that? So you must take your time too. The rocket burst this side.

Q. Okay, I'll take my time and, you're right, it will be anti-artillery unit. Some were with the police. Some were with immigration also.

Q. Now, Mr Witness, you've indicated that Bockarie had a conflict with Issa Sesay. Did you ever receive any orders subsequent to Sam Bockarie leaving Sierra Leone concerning Issa Sesay?

12:57:56

A. Yes, I received an instruction from Charles Taylor when he said I should go for Sam Bockarie, "I don't want him to have conflict with Issa and Issa has more fighting men under him once he was facing battle and Mosquito was in Buedu. You go and bring him". It was at that time that I, Peter Saikpedeh, Joe Tuah, went for him and brought his group of people, his group of people including his mother, his wife and his children.

12:58:25

Q. Thank you. But after you had brought Sam Bockarie to Liberia, after that time did you ever receive any orders concerning Issa Sesay?

12:58:45

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us who gave you the order?

A. From time immemorial I was taking orders from my leader, Charles Taylor. When Issa Sesay was there I received orders to ammos for him. When Issa Sesay was there, there was some behaviours that he was putting up like signing documents with the UN. At that time I was in Kono, some UN people went there with a paper for Issa Sesay to sign. I called directly to Charles Taylor. From there he asked me whether I can execute Issa and I said, "Oh, chief, I am in Kono, the centre. I'm in the midst of these people. I cannot do anything". Then he said, "Come to Kailahun. I will call him to come for ammos in Buedu. Then you'll be able to execute him there". So I left Kono, I you want me to go over that. I did say that it was something like a container, like a jar, where normally it is something like - it was a jar in which the diamonds were and normally when they brought them he will call the commanders all to come to be present so he will show them to the commanders so after seeing them before he kept it.

Q. Okay, thank you. You have reminded me that you did discuss that previously. Mr Witness, who were the mining commanders for the RUF?

11:15:28 A. Well, the commander who was there on behalf of the RUF was Kennedy. Kennedy and Alpha were there. They were in charge of the mining. I think I have said this before.

Q. Thank you. Now, you have mentioned seeing Johnny Paul Koroma with diamonds. Did you ever see any RUF commanders with 11:16:01 diamonds?

A. Yes, RUF commanders had diamonds. Like Mosquito had diamonds.

Q. Can you tell us when you saw Mosquito with diamonds?

A. The mining which was taking place in Tongo Field, the 11:16:34 diamonds that came out as proceeds from there were handed over to Mosquito. I think I have said before that there was a point in time when I also left Freetown, I went to Tongo Field and I met with Mosquito in Tongo Field at that time and in fact he left me there when he came back to Kenema Town. I think I have said that 11:17:02 before.

Q. Did Sam Bockarie ever tell you what he did with the diamonds that he obtained?

A. Yes, he told me that the diamonds that he had been receiving were always taken to Monrovia to Mr Taylor in exchange of ammunitions. In fact it was the issue of the diamonds that brought a problem between Mosquito and Foday Sankoh and, if you can recall, I had said that when Foday Sankoh came from Lome to Monrovia Mr Taylor showed him some diamonds that were taken to him by Mosquito, but he did not take them from him.

11:17:50

And according to Foday Sankoh he said that Mr Taylor showed him the diamonds that Bockarie had been taking to him in exchange of ammunition, so Foday Sankoh went angry and on his return he blamed some of us who were the commanders, especially me. He blamed me, saying that the diamonds that we have been getting we have not given any up-to-date report to him with regards all the diamonds that we have been getting - that we have been gathering. We have all taken the diamonds and taken them and handed them over in Liberia and so he was angry with us, but I tried to clear my own area because I told him that I never went to Liberia so I had no hands in it. And then he said, "Well, when I am saying that you have been taking diamonds over to Liberia I am not accusing you specifically, but I am accusing all of you because it is your commander who took those diamonds to Charles Taylor in Liberia".

11:18:25

11:19:18

Q. Thank you. I want to move on to a different topic for a short period of time and that is the military discipline system, if any, in the RUF. Mr Witness, did the RUF have any kind of internal discipline system?

A. Yes, they had it.

11:19:43

Q. Can you describe the system?

A. Yes, well we had the MPs who were in charge of discipline. They were there to ensure that any soldier who intended to move from one point to the other should have a pass. If you didn't operation fearful. Can you tell us what that means, to make an operation fearful?

A. Yes, to make the area fearful, as we used to say it, it meant that we should kill, we should burn down houses so that we will make sure that even the people who were living in the areas, when they saw those things going on they would be afraid and that even the enemies against whom we were fighting will also be afraid. So that was what we meant.

MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you. Correction from my colleagues on the Njaiama Nimikoro. The first word is N-J-A-I-M-A, the spelling:

Q. Mr Witness, in your experience with the RUF were there any other tactics that were used to create terror in civilians in areas that the RUF was present?

A. Yes, they marked people on their chests so that even when you escaped and went to the enemy side they will also capture you there and then you will be killed. So they wrote on people's chests or sometimes on people's back "RUF".

Q. Mr Witness, did you ever witness any amputations yourself while you were actually present and saw the amputation?

A. Well, I have told you here that it happened at the time the war started when I had called the name of one soldier who became victim of that, he was called Ngawojia. He was the first soldier at that time. Momoh was in power so we used to call the soldiers Momoh's soldiers. I think I have spoken about that. We chopped off his hand and then we wrote a letter and hung it on his neck and we told him to go and show it to Momoh so that Momoh should know and that he himself should take his hands off the fighting. And one other thing that happened in certain areas that I myself

Q. Mr Mongor, I'm now going to ask you some questions, please, on behalf of Mr Taylor. I think you understand that, is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
14:36:35 Q. I just want you to help us with this please: Do you remember on one of the days when you were giving evidence before we had our break, prosecuting counsel, Mr Koumjian, made the point that you were one of the most senior RUF commanders in the field during the civil war in Sierra Leone? Do you remember him 14:37:08 making that point?
A. Yes.
Q. That's right, isn't it, that you were one of the most senior commanders of the RUF from a very early stage during the civil war in Sierra Leone?
14:37:32 A. Yes.
Q. And therefore you are one of the people, are you not, who bears the greatest responsibility for what went on during the course of that civil war in Sierra Leone?
A. No.
14:37:54 Q. Why do you say that you were one of the most senior commanders, but somehow that absolves you of the greatest responsibility of the conduct of the civil war?
A. Because I was also under command.
Q. Yes, as were others, but you were part of the most senior 14:38:26 group in the hierarchy of the RUF, weren't you?
A. I was one of the senior people in the RUF command structure, but I had people who were above me.
Q. Ultimately Foday Sankoh was the most senior figure in the RUF, wasn't he?

A. Yes.
Q. But people below him such as Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Sam Bockarie and yourself held positions of very great authority, didn't you?
14:39:27 A. I had authority, but I was under the authority of some other people.
Q. Yes and Morris Kallon and Issa Sesay and Sam Bockarie were at times under the authority of other people, weren't they?
A. Well, they were under an authority who was Foday Sankoh,
14:40:10 yes.
Q. Let's just try and see where you fitted in to the hierarchy. On the account that you gave us in the course of your evidence before the break, you had spent around two months in the Liberian army in the mid-1990s before you deserted and went back 14:40:44 to being a businessman. That is the start of your military career, isn't it?
A. Yes.
Q. And you don't learn very much in two months starting from scratch in the armed forces, do you?
14:41:16 A. Well, yes, I learnt so many things.
Q. Why did you run away from the armed forces of Liberia after only two months?
A. Well, I just made up my mind that I shouldn't be there. That was why I left there.
14:41:48 Q. Well, I'm going to come back to that in due course, but let's just look at your military career as it progressed: Two months in the mid-1980s in the armed forces of Liberia, then in 1989 you're captured by the NPFL, yes?
A. Yes.

Q. And you have some training with the NPFL before you go on to be a trainer yourself, is that right?
A. Yes.
Q. How long were you being trained before you yourself became 14:42:32 a trainer?
A. Well, I did not spend a long time on the training that I had from the NPFL.
Q. According to you you were training RUF recruits by March of 1990, weren't you?
14:43:07 A. Yes.
Q. When exactly is it you say that you were captured by the NPFL, just so that we get a sense of how much training you had with them?
A. Well, I have said that they captured me in Nimba County.
14:43:42 Q. I asked you when, not where.
A. Well, they captured me in December month and that was in 1989.
Q. Where were you captured, where in Nimba County?
A. Well, I said they captured me in a village.
14:44:17 Q. The name of the village, please?
A. Well, I don't know the name of the village and I don't think I have called the name of any village here where I was captured.
Q. Are you trying to avoid telling us where it was that you 14:44:42 claim to have been captured?
A. Well, I didn't try to avoid. I am not trying to avoid, but I said I was captured in a village in Nimba County. That was what I said, but I don't even know the name of the village because that was not where I was staying.

Q. We'll come back to that. By 1991, the invasion of Sierra Leone by the RUF - you are a lieutenant. You're the commander of the 2nd Battalion, aren't you?
A. Yes.
14:45:29 Q. In early 1992 you're the acting battle group commander, yes?
A. Yes, I was acting battle group.
Q. And it wasn't until 1993 that you go back to your other rank of the battalion commander. That's right, isn't it?
14:46:03 A. No, I did not take a position that was battalion commander.
Q. Well, you were acting battle group commander in 1992 because of the absence of someone else, weren't you?
A. Yes.
Q. Who was that?
14:46:29 A. It was Rashid Mansaray.
Q. When did he return to take up his position of battlefield group commander?
A. Are you waiting for me?
Q. I am. I asked you a question. The normal procedure is to 14:47:11 await the answer.
A. Okay, I would like you to go over the question one more time.
Q. When did Mansaray return to his role of battle group commander?
14:47:27 MR KOUMJIAN: Excuse me, your Honour, it assumes a fact not in evidence: That Mansaray returned.
PRESIDING JUDGE: He is allowed to lead in cross-examination.
MR KOUMJIAN: My objection is not leading, but the witness has been asked the equivalent of, "When did you stop beating your wife?" There is no evidence that Mansaray ever returned and the question was when did he return.

MR MUNYARD: There doesn't have to be evidence. I can ask the question and the witness can answer it.

14:47:51

PRESIDING JUDGE: He can.

MR KOUMJIAN: He cannot answer when if something never occurred.

MR MUNYARD: We don't yet know whether or not it occurred. This is not the United States, as we have been constantly reminded by the other side. This is an international tribunal in which other rules of evidence apply. As far as I'm aware, there is no basis in any jurisdiction for my being denied the right to ask the question, "What happened when this man returned?"

14:48:02

14:48:22

PRESIDING JUDGE: In cross-examination there is more leeway, Mr Koumjian, and I allow the question. Please repeat the question.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. When did Rashid Mansaray resume his role of battle group commander in which you had been acting?

14:48:44

A. Well, Mansaray resumed duty in 1993.

Q. Thank you, so he did in fact return. You go back to being battalion commander, don't you?

A. My Lords, I want you to understand that I was not battalion commander and when I gave the office back to Rashid, I did not go to take up a battalion commander position.

14:49:24

Q. All right, if I've got that wrong you tell me what your position was when Rashid returned?

A. Well, when Rashid took over it was the same week that the NPRC advanced on RUF positions, so we were all focused on the front line. There was no function in office at that moment.

Q. So, would it be wrong to say that when Rashid Mansaray came to Kailahun from Pujehun in early 1993 you went back to being a battalion commander in the field? Would that be wrong?

A. Well, I did not occupy the position of battalion commander, so I have not said I was battalion commander.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, I have a note here that you were asked, "In 1991 were you commander of the 2nd Battalion of the NPFL?", and you said yes. I understand that that's what is being referred to. Am I correct, Mr Munyard?

MR MUNYARD: Your Honour is absolutely correct and I can put more detail to the witness if he fails to understand the questions I've put so far.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, are you saying that that answer you gave was incorrect?

THE WITNESS: Well, my Lords, when you talk about 2nd Battalion commander I want the Court to know that the battalion that we were fighting with, it was the 2nd Battalion that occupied Kailahun District and the 1st Battalion occupied Pujehun District. So, in case of the 2nd Battalion, yes at the time we entered I was the commander. That was prior to my occupying the position of acting battle group commander. But when I left the position of acting battle group commander, I did not return to become the head of the battalion, but I was within the 2nd Battalion and the man who came to take over as the acting battle group commander was the man in charge of that whole battalion in Kailahun District. So, I was within the 2nd Battalion, but I was a commander at the front line. That is what I want the Court the understand.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Witness, I am clear now.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. What I'd like you to do, Mr Mongor, is answer my question. Would it be wrong, therefore, to say that when Mansaray came to Kailahun from Pujehun in early 1993 you went back to being a battalion commander in the field? Would it be wrong to say that?

A. Yes, it would be wrong because I was not the battalion commander at that time, so I cannot say, "Yes, I was battalion commander."

Q. You've just told us that you weren't the battalion commander, but you were in the battalion and you were a commander. What happened to you after Mansaray came back and took on his previous role?

A. Well, I said I went to the front line and I was fighting until the time the NPRC started advancing on us.

Q. And when is that, do you say?

A. Well, it was in the same 1993 when the NPRC advanced on the RUF.

Q. What was your position, your rank, during that time?

A. At that time I have said I was fighting on the front line, I was with the fighting - with the fighters and the rank I carried at that time was captain.

Q. So who made you a captain and when?

A. Well, the promotion came from the leader. He gave me the promotion.

Q. The leader being who?

A. It was Foday Sankoh.

Q. Now tell us, please, when you were promoted by Foday Sankoh to captain.

A. The time I occupied the position as acting battle group commander was the time I became captain.
Q. All right, that's 1993. Do you change your rank at all in 1993 from captain?
14:56:11
A. In 1993 I did not change to any other rank in that year.
Q. What about 1994, any promotions in 1994?
A. There was promotion in 1995. They gave promotions --
Q. You were a major then? Sorry, I interrupted. I'm sorry. You were made a major in 1995, weren't you?
14:56:56
A. Yes, they made me major.
Q. And area commander of the north?
A. Yes.
Q. Who was above you when you were area commander of the north? Who was higher up than you then?
14:57:22
A. It was Mohamed Tarawalli.
Q. In 1996 you're promoted again, aren't you, to colonel?
A. Yes.
Q. That was the year that Camp Zogoda was routed, wasn't it, that the RUF were chased out of Camp Zogoda?
14:58:05
A. Yes, sir.
Q. But you weren't there because you spent most of that year in the northern hills, didn't you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many times did you visit Camp Zogoda before the RUF were driven out of it?
14:58:28
A. I visited there two times.
Q. Right. We'll return to that in due course. In 1997 the AFRC coup takes place and you become a member of the Supreme Council, don't you?

A. Yes.
Q. That's to say you become a member of the governing body of the country of Sierra Leone. That's right, isn't it?
14:59:22 A. Yes, you are right.
Q. In the following year the junta is driven out of Freetown by ECOMOG forces, 1998, but you were then promoted to brigadier, weren't you, in 1998?
A. Yes.
14:59:50 Q. Who else was promoted to brigadier in 1998?
A. Superman, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay and Mike Lamin was also brigadier.
Q. And the group whose names you've just given to us, including your own of course, were the most senior commanders 15:00:32 within the RUF at that time, weren't they?
A. Yes.
Q. And you remained as one of those most senior commanders in the RUF until your imprisonment at Pademba Road in May of 2000. That's right, isn't it?
15:01:04 A. Yes.
Q. And so until your imprisonment at Pademba Road, you were one of those with the greatest responsibility for conducting the civil war in Sierra Leone, weren't you, Mr Mongor?
A. I was one of the senior men, yes.
15:01:30 Q. The senior men are those with the greatest responsibility for what went on in the course of the civil war, aren't they?
A. Not all of them.
Q. Who do you say amongst them does not bear the greatest responsibility for the conduct of the civil war? Give us the

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. It is headed "Additional information provided by witness TF1-532", that's you. "The witness gave the following additional information in the course of proofing interviews on 16 and 20 February in The Hague." Then it also says, "This material has not been reviewed with the witness or read back to him."

I am now going to review at least one passage of it and read it back to you to see if you agree that this is an accurate note of what you told the Prosecutors just a few weeks ago here in The Hague. I would like you to go to the third paragraph from the bottom where there is a sentence that starts, "In discussing the Magburaka plane shipment." Would you let us know when you have got that?

A. I have seen it, my Lord.

Q. Let's read it and see what you say about this:

"In discussing the Magburaka plane shipment the witness said that the shipment received included two single barrel AA guns with ammunition."

Is that right? Have they recorded that correctly?

A. It is correct.

Q. "And GMG ammunition." Did you tell them that?

A. I told them.

Q. General machine gun, I think. "But did not include any AK-47 ammunition." Did you tell them that?

A. I told them.

Q. "Which limited the military benefit of the shipment." Did you tell them that? Did you tell them that by not including any ammunition for your AK-47s that rather limited the value of what you'd received in the Magburaka airdrop?

to the RUF controlled areas. I don't recall that. The fact that they went there I have not disagreed with and, even when they came, they showed us some pictures.

Q. What was it they went for to Burkina Faso?

11:08:22 A. Well, what Sam Bockarie told me was that he had received call to go to Mr Taylor and at that time when he was going he went with SYB Rogers and some other people. And he said it was during that time that the Pa, Mr Taylor, made a connection between Sam Bockarie and the Libyan leader, so he said after they 11:09:05 went there they spoke with the man and then they later came back to Liberia.

Q. Did you mean to say, "... the Pa, Mr Taylor, made a connection between Sam Bockarie and the Libyan leader"? Did you mean Libyan leader, or did you mean Burkina Faso leader?

11:09:28 A. I said Sam Bockarie told me that when they got to Liberia the Pa, who is Mr Taylor, he connected him with the Burkina Faso President.

Q. Thank you. And what was the point of connecting him with the Burkina Faso president, Mr Mongor?

11:10:01 A. Well, he connected him with them there because of materials and that was arms and ammunition contact.

Q. Thank you. So that was the purpose of Sam Bockarie and SYB Rogers going to Burkina Faso and staying in a hotel, to try to get arms and ammunition from Burkina Faso?

11:10:38 A. Well they went there to establish the contacts, but they did not immediately get the arms and ammunition from there. That was why they went and stayed in the hotel and, when Sam Bockarie came back, that was what he explained to me.

Q. And they came back with a large amount of materials, as you

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you and I welcome you both to the Special Court here in The Hague and I think I am also welcoming our first lady interpreter. So, you are both welcome. If there 09:31:44 are no other matters I will - proceed with cross-examination, Mr Munyard. I will first remind the witness of his oath.

Mr Witness, you recall that last week you took the oath to tell the truth. That oath is still binding on you and I again remind you of this and you are to answer questions truthfully.
09:32:09 You understand?

THE WITNESS: Yes, my Lord.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well. Please proceed, Mr Munyard.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BY MR MUNYARD [Cont.]:

09:32:14 MR MUNYARD: Thank you, your Honour:

Q. Good morning, Mr Mongor. I am going to ask you first of all about money this morning and, your Honours, I am looking at tab 17 in the bundle. Thank you, Madam Court Officer.

Mr Mongor, I have a correction to make. Throughout the 09:33:28 course of last week when I was cross-examining you, up to I think Friday, I kept saying that you had been interviewed on 24 separate dates. As I indicated at the end of last week, I thought I might have got that wrong. I have rechecked and on my counting of all the different days you were actually interviewed
09:33:53 on 26 separate dates and, as I have previously said, if I have got that wrong there are others who have the documentation who will correct me and I will be happy to be corrected.

Now, you told us when I first started asking you questions that you had been given some money on each of the occasions, each of the dates when you were interviewed, is that correct?

A. Yes, my Lord.
Q. We looked last week at some of those occasions and I am not going to go over that material again, but I will just go through it, as it were, to tick off those dates. So we start on the first page of tab 17. We have looked already at box number 1, 28 August. That was prior to your first interview. The first interview was in the second box, 30 August, and we looked at that. We also looked at the next interview in box number 3 where you received 50,000 leones, the same as box number 2, for transport, meals and lost wages, and again the third interview, on 4 September, the same sum for the same reasons.

If you go over the page, please, box number 5 is Friday, 8 September. Again the same amount of money, 50,000 leones, for meals, transport and lost wages. Now, number 5, 8 September, follows on from number 4 which is 4 September, but we know that you were interviewed in between those two dates: On 5 September and then again on 6 September, but there are no sums recorded for those two dates of interview.

The next time you were interviewed after 8 September, in box 6, was 17 September, but there is no receipt for that date, or on that date as such. The next receipt we see is box 6. Can you have a look at that, please. Friday, September 29th 2006, transport and lost wages, 15,000 leones. No reference to meals there. Can you pause for a moment and just think back. Was there ever a time when you went along to see the Prosecution for an interview, but they didn't at the end of that interview, on that day, hand over the money to you, they gave it to you at some later date? Did that ever happen, or did you always get it on the same day as you have told us both this morning and last week?

A. No, I can't recall that. The one you have spoken about, I don't think I was given the money on that same day.
Q. Well, I am not going to spend a long time on this, but the 09:37:56 one I have spoken about is 17 September 2006. How can you now remember whether on 17 September 2006, one out of 26 different days on which you were interviewed, that on that specific date you weren't given the money on the day?
A. Well, as we go along discussing issues about the monies
09:38:43 then maybe my - I will reflect and recall about the money issues that you are talking about. That was why I said so.
Q. The question I asked you is how can you remember on 7 April 2008 that on the day you were interviewed, 17 September 2006, on that particular day they didn't give you the money there and 09:39:10 then, they gave it you at some other time? How can you remember that now?
A. Well, I want to tell you that the date you are talking about I can't recall it actually, but I recall that there were days that I went there that they did not give me money and I 09:39:35 returned.
Q. Well, can you recall saying in the last eight minutes that every time you were interviewed you were paid? You certainly said that when I first asked you about this last week?
A. Yes, I said it. I have said it. I have not denied that.
09:40:09 Q. Are you now saying that you have got that wrong and there were in fact days on which they didn't pay you?
A. Well, it was not a large amount, but I think they were always giving me money, but if I am not mistaken I think it was just about two times that I was not given money, but the money was later given to me.

Q. Let me see if I have understood that. Are you saying that there were about two occasions on which they didn't give you any money on the day, but they gave it to you later, or are you 09:40:59 saying there were about two occasions on which they gave you no money at all, either on the day or at any time after that?
A. I said they gave me the money later.
Q. All right. After 17 September the next time you were interviewed was 1 October 2006. In fact, in box 6, Friday 29
09:41:42 September, you are given 15,000 leones, although that wasn't a date on which you were interviewed. You were interviewed two days later on Sunday, 1 October; but if you look at box 7, which is the next one in time after box 6, that relates to 23 December 2006 when you were given 40,000 leones for meals, transport and
09:42:26 lost wages again. Now, in the meantime, between 29 September and 23 December, you had been interviewed on 1 October, 8 October, 11 December and 23 December, the same date of the next receipt in box 7. Were there four occasions when you received - well, let me put that in another way. Were there three occasions on which 09:43:11 you can think that you weren't paid at all in October and December 2006, or is the position that you just don't know now?
A. Well, I can't recall now.
Q. Box 8, 20,000 for meals, transport and lost wages, another Sunday. You said last week that you wouldn't lose wages on a 09:43:56 Sunday. Do you still maintain that?
A. I don't sell on Sundays.
Q. No, all right. Box 8, Sunday 28 January, meals, transport and lost wages. Lost wages there for that Sunday, is that a mystery to you as to why they would pay you for lost wages?

A. Well, maybe that is the procedure of their own job. I cannot dispute that.

Q. Box 9, please. Another Sunday, 4 February, which was indeed a date on which you were interviewed. The reason given 09:45:01 there is "monies provided to witness to enable clarification interview on 4 February 2007", that is the Sunday, another 20,000 for meals, transport and lost wages.

The next occasion on which you were interviewed was 8 February 2007, but there is no payment specific to that date in 09:45:31 this document. The next date where there is a payment is box 10, Wednesday 21 February 2007, "monies provided during interview with witness management unit/investigations on 21 to 22 February 2007". Now, I just want to ask you - I don't want to know the detail, certainly not at the moment at any rate. Did you have 09:46:13 interviews with the witness management unit/investigations on 21 and 22 February 2007, that is just over a year ago, that you can now remember?

A. Well, the people who were there, all I know is that they are Special Court workers who are there, who normally went to 09:46:53 call me. So I can't tell the difference between them to say this person is this and that other person is that, but all I know is that they were all Special Court people, so when they needed me they called me.

MR MUNYARD: Would your Honour bear with me for just a 09:47:10 moment:

Q. This is a document supplied to us by the Prosecution, you understand, not from court staff as such. Can you remember being interviewed on two consecutive days, one day after another, in late February last year by somebody in the Prosecution?

A. Well, I can't recall that now because it has taken a long time, but I know that those things have been happening.

Q. Right. We don't have any interviews for either of those dates, so if you were interviewed on those dates then that brings the total number of days on which you were interviewed to 28. Again, 40,000 for transport, lost wages and meals on 21 February. The next box is Monday, 26 February 2006 and it is described as follows, "reimbursement provided to witness during clarification by Witness Management Unit on same date", presumably meaning the date Monday, 26 February 2007. 20,000 for meals, lost wages and transportation then. We don't have any document relating to an interview on that date, but if you were interviewed on that date by the Prosecution then that would bring it to 29 separate dates.

The next time you were interviewed you were interviewed on 14 and then on 15 June 2007.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Just pause a moment, Mr Munyard. Did you ask - I didn't record or hear a reply when you put the 26 February interview to the witness.

MR MUNYARD: Yes, to be fair to the witness I think the only thing he could say is "yes" because I was simply putting the fact in evidence that this document demonstrates that there was an interview on that date, 26 February.

MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, I would say that is a matter of interpretation of grammar: Whether "on same date" refers to the reimbursement, or the clarification.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I think you have a question on record, Mr Munyard. In fairness to the witness he should be allowed to answer it.

MR MUNYARD: I completely agree. Shall I put it again?

PRESIDING JUDGE: I think it would be best. Put it again.

MR MUNYARD: I will put it again in a way I hope the witness is able to answer:

Q. Mr Mongor, if you have a look at box 11 the date is Monday, 26 February 2007. On that date you were given 20,000 leones for meals, lost wages and transport and the reason that is specified there is "reimbursements provided to witness during clarification by Witness Management Unit on same date". Now, do you have any memory now of being paid for - or being paid on that date during a clarification interview?

A. Well, the date that you are talking about I can't recall now because it has taken a long time, but I received money, but I can't recall the dates.

Q. Right, but do you agree that the document suggests that you were paid money for an interview on Monday, 26 February 2007?

MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, I would object because that is asking this witness to give an opinion as to the grammar of that sentence and what it means and I would say since clarification by WMU, WMU does not do the clarification. So clarification - "reimbursements provided to witness during clarification by WMU on same date", to me it is quite clear what the meaning of that is and I don't think it is proper to ask the witness to give his interpretation of the English.

MR MUNYARD: I am very happy for my learned friend to give what his interpretation is. I, of course, have nothing to do with the WMU of the Prosecution. He will know better than me.

MR KOUMJIAN: I would just point out that it is logical that WMU does not do clarifications. They to do do reimbursements, so if it says "reimbursement by WMU on this date" that is what took place.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you for that clarification, Mr Koumjian. Likewise I am not aware of the bureaucratic procedures, but clarification is now before us and it would appear that "on the same date" refers to --

09:52:57

MR MUNYARD: Can I have a try at this and Mr Koumjian will correct me if I have got it wrong:

Q. Mr Mongor, it appears that you were paid by the Witness Management Unit on the same date, i.e. Monday 26 February 2007, for your expenses during a clarification interview. Do you agree?

09:53:26

A. Yes, I agree that I received money, but I can't recall the date now, my Lord.

MR MUNYARD: All right, thank you. Can I invite the Prosecution to supply us with records of the interviews referred to in both boxes 10 and 11?

09:53:50

MR KOUMJIAN: Yes, thank you, your Honour. I want to make it absolutely clear that the Prosecution has provided the Defence with all interviews with this witness and if there is a record of a payment on a certain day we have checked all interviews have been provided to the Defence of this witness.

09:54:09

MR MUNYARD:

Q. Box 12, please. Mr Mongor, the next date on which you are paid anything is Thursday, 29 November 2007. It is for communication and it is 30,000 leones. Now, that is some nine months after the previous payment in February of 2007. In the meantime, we know that you were interviewed on 14 and then on 15 June 2007 and on 25 and then on 26 July 2007. So that is four separate dates between boxes 11 and 12. Do you have any recollection of not being paid for four interviews in the middle of last year?

09:54:39

A. I can't recall now concerning the dates you are talking about.

09:56:02 Q. Box 12, 29 November 2007, you were interviewed on that date. Then if we go over the page to box 13, Wednesday 5 December 2007, again for communication another 30,000 leones. You had been interviewed the previous day on 4 December 2007. Do you now know what you were either given money for, or what given 09:56:38 something to the value of 30,000 leones for communication means?

A. Well, I can recall that the 30,000 that you are talking about was for me to buy a top-up card for my phone.

Q. Right. The next box, 14, Wednesday 5 December 2007, 120,000 leones for communication. Was that top-up cards, or was 09:57:18 that something else? Sorry, it is the same date, but it is a separate receipt.

A. I received that money they gave me.

Q. And what was it for?

A. Well, I had requested for communication business so they 09:57:55 gave it to me.

Q. Yes, but what do you mean by communication business? It is four times as much as the two previous payments of 30,000 which were top-up cards.

A. Yes.

09:58:15 Q. What was this one for?

A. Well, the 120,000 leones that you are talking about was given to me and I used some for communication business. That is also to buy some top-ups for my phone. Then the remaining, I used it for meals.

Q. So can you remember now how much you spent of it on communication, on top-ups?
A. Well, I can't recall everything now. To say that I can recall everything now and give you the exact amount that I used on communication I cannot recall it now, but I am sure that I was given money for me to buy top-up and put it into my phone most times.
Q. Can I just clarify something with you and I know you told us last week, but can you remember the date when you came to The Hague this year?
A. I came here in January.
Q. Right.
A. That was the time I came to The Hague.
Q. All right, thank you. Any idea now whether it was early January, late January? Can you be any more specific than that?
A. I can say it was in late January that I came here.
Q. All right. The next tab, please, number 18. I think the witness is still on the previous tab. Yes, thank you.
Mr Mongor, this is a further sum of money that was expended in relation to you and your family by the Witness and Victim Service. That is a separate body of the Court, different from the Prosecution. You can see there, in paragraph numbered 2, "subsistence allowance", that you were brought under the protection of the Court on 10 March 2007, that is just about 13 months ago, and since then, to 26 February of this year, you have been paid a total as follows: A subsistence allowance of 7,852,000 leones. Now, I don't want to know details of any addresses, or anything like that, but did you move house at all on or around 10 March 2007? I am not talking about coming to The things?

A. You mean the information regarding this particular letter that I have spoken about? Is that what you mean, my Lord?
Q. I do.
10:23:38 A. Yes, the person who first spoke to me, who tried to ensure that I talked to the Prosecution, he assured me of that even before I came to the Court.
Q. Right, thank you. I want to turn to something else, please. In your evidence in March when you were being taken 10:24:09 through your account by Mr Koumjian, you told this Court - and correct me if I have misunderstood - that the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999 was essentially Charles Taylor's idea, do you agree?
A. I said that, my Lord.
10:24:49 Q. So it was all down to Charles Taylor, was it, the idea that Freetown should be attacked in early January of 1999?
A. Well, it was a plan that they arranged that we should attack all the other places that we attacked and that we should attack Freetown. That was a plan brought - that Mosquito 10:25:28 brought.
Q. From?
A. The time he came from Monrovia. That was the time he called us to a meeting and he explained that to us.
Q. Are you sure it wasn't in fact a project of the AFRC, the 10:26:07 attack on Freetown in January 1999?
A. Well, the AFRC people went there. They went to Freetown, but the plan that was brought by Mosquito from Mr Taylor was for us to attack all the other places and to advance on Freetown, but they did not select a specific group that it was this group that was supposed to go to Freetown. I am not saying that the AFRC and the RUF did not go to Freetown. They all went to Freetown on 6 January.

Q. And whose idea was it?

10:27:02 A. Well, the plan I have told you about was a plan that Mosquito brought when he came from Monrovia and he told us that he discussed with Mr Taylor and that was the same time he brought the ammunition for us to attack Kono and other places, and for us to advance on the capital city and to capture there.

10:27:28 Q. Now, I put to you on Friday that the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF was a difficult relationship and you didn't agree. Do you remember?

MR KOUMJIAN: I believe counsel on Friday put a timeframe of during the initial junta period, during the time that they 10:27:50 were in Freetown, as I recall.

MR MUNYARD: I think what I put was "from the outset". I think I used that expression "from the outset".

MR KOUMJIAN: That is correct.

MR MUNYARD: Meaning right from the start it was a

10:28:02 difficult relationship:

Q. And you would not agree with that, would you, Mr Mongor?

A. Yes, it was because you were talking about the start. You said the RUF and the AFRC and you were talking about the beginning. That was the one I said I did not agree with.

10:28:25 Q. Yes, you have just heard Mr Koumjian's intervention, haven't you, and that is why you are now coming out with that answer, isn't it?

A. That was not it, my Lord.

Q. All right, I suggest it was. When I was asking you

Q. Thank you. It reads as follows:

"Before the AFRC coup in 1997 the witness had requested from the RUF, northern jungle, ammunition by radioing Sam Bockarie in Buedu. Sam Bockarie told him that Jungle had already left to see Papay (Charles Taylor) with the request for more ammunition and that the witness should hang on."

Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. It then goes on:

"Sam Bockarie later told the witness [that is you] that Jungle had come back to Buedu with some 50 boxes of ammunition for AKs, RPGs and GMGs. When he was told about that the witness was already in Freetown with the AFRC and it was in 1997."

Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. It goes on:

"The witness thinks that Jungle was in Monrovia when the AFRC coup took place in Sierra Leone and that he brought the ammunition to Buedu once the RUF had joined the AFRC in Freetown."

Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, I told them, my Lord.

Q. It continues, "When the ammunition did arrive in Buedu" - pausing there and just taking your face away from the page for a minute, Mr Mongor, can you help us, when did the ammunition arrive in Buedu?

A. Well, I can't tell you the time now because at the time I requested for the ammunition I was still in the jungle and the time it arrived I had received instruction that I should go and join the brothers and that is the AFRC, so I can't recall any specific date now that it was on this specific date that the ammunition arrived.

Q. Well, let us just look at the whole of that sentence, please, "When the ammunition did arrive in Buedu the RUF top command" - are you in the RUF top command?

10:44:53

A. Yes, I was there.

Q. "... the RUF top command did not tell the AFRC that they had received this ammunition as some level of mistrust still existed between the AFRC and the RUF."

10:45:20

Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. So why did you tell us that there was no level of mistrust between the two organisations just a moment ago?

10:45:52

A. Yes, I did say that I did not trust somebody. I did not feel that way.

Q. Pardon? Can you just explain that again?

A. I said I don't think I had the feeling that I feared somebody.

10:46:26

Q. Right. Now would you go back to my question, please. Why did you tell the judges a very short time ago that there was no level of mistrust between the AFRC and the RUF?

MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, I would refer counsel to page 29 of the LiveNote, line 9, and the witness's answer, at least on my

10:46:46

14 point screen. May I read the question and answer to help your Honours, or at least --

MR MUNYARD: [Microphone not activated].

MR KOUMJIAN: The question begins on line 6 and the answer of the witness on line 9.

the moment.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, did you say that SAJ Musa did not voice his opinion to you, or did not voice his opinion to "us"?

11:02:51 THE WITNESS: To us.

MR MUNYARD: All right. Right, Madam President, are we ready to move on from that one?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please proceed.

MR MUNYARD: Thank you:

11:03:23 Q. Mr Mongor, I want you to think carefully about this question that I am going to ask you now. When you were first being interviewed by the Prosecution, was it your position that Charles - that you didn't really know anything about Charles Taylor's role, if any, in the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 11:03:50 1999?

A. Yes, if my memory serves me well maybe I said that.

Q. And is that right: That you didn't really know anything about Charles Taylor's role, if any, in the invasion of Freetown in January 1999?

11:04:29 A. Well, I did not know initially, but later I came to know.

Q. Well, I don't want to be unfair to you. When you say "later I came to know", what do you mean by that? When is later?

A. When communication started going on.

Q. Right. Let me make it perfectly plain, I am not talking to 11:05:00 you about the time that these things were happening, 1998 and 1999. I am talking about your discussions, your interviews, with the Prosecution that start at the end of August 2006. Now, when you were first being interviewed by the Prosecution in 2006, you couldn't really tell them anything about Charles Taylor's involvement in the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999 because you didn't know anything about it, did you? Do you agree?

A. I want you to ask that question again. Let me understand it well.

11:06:00 Q. Right. You start to be interviewed at the end of August 2006 and you are then interviewed many times in 2006 and again many times in 2007. When the Prosecution first started to ask you questions about Charles Taylor's involvement, if any, in the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999, you told them you didn't 11:06:45 really know anything about whether or not he had any part in that, didn't you?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. And that was the truth, wasn't it?

A. That was what I said.

11:07:05 Q. What you first said to them, that you didn't know anything about Charles Taylor's involvement in the invasion of Freetown, was true, wasn't it? You didn't have any knowledge about Charles Taylor being involved in the plan to attack Freetown in January 1999, did you?

11:07:31 A. I told them that, my Lord.

Q. Thank you. There came a later stage later on when you started to tell them a story along the lines of the evidence that you had given to us in March, namely that Charles Taylor had told Sam Bockarie that you should attack all these other towns and 11:08:06 then move on to Freetown. That is right, isn't it?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Why did you tell them that Charles Taylor had the plan to attack Freetown later on when earlier you had told the Prosecution that you really didn't know anything about his involvement in the invasion of Freetown in January 1999?

A. Yes, I said that.
Q. No, why did you change your story - hang on - later on, when you were being interviewed later on, having originally said 11:08:53 that you don't know anything about Charles Taylor's involvement in the attack on Freetown in January 1999?
A. When they asked me whether I was saying the truth, what I was talking was the truth, and they said they wanted me to say the truth, I said, "Well, the plan was something that Mosquito 11:09:19 brought and he explained to us that it was he and the Pa who discussed that we should attack all the other areas and then advance on Freetown and capture there." That was the time I told them, "Okay, I will tell you the truth. This was what Mosquito explained to us when he returned."
11:09:47 Q. So why didn't you tell the Prosecutors that when they were first asking you about what, if anything, you knew of Charles Taylor's involvement in the attack on Freetown in January 1999.
A. Yes, I did not initially tell them, but later when they asked me they said to me that they wanted me to say the truth 11:10:19 about what I was explaining and then I also told them that, "I don't want to lie. Now I will tell you the truth." I said, "This plan came from Mr Taylor and it was when Sam Bockarie returned that he brought the whole plan that the attacks should go on", and that was the time I told them that.
11:10:43 Q. Right, so before you were ever interviewed by the Prosecution you knew all along that the plan to attack Freetown was Charles Taylor's idea, yes?
A. Yes, I knew.
Q. When they first start interviewing you were you telling them lies?

A. I did not tell them at all.

Q. I am going to try again on that one. When they first asked you, "What can you tell us about Charles Taylor's involvement in the attack on Freetown in January 1999?", did you tell them the truth, or did you tell them lies?

11:11:21

A. I did not tell them the truth. At the start, at the first time, I did not tell them the truth, but later I came out plain to them.

11:11:50

Q. Would you like to explain to the learned judges why you claim that you lied to the Prosecution in the early stages of your interviews?

A. What did you say, sir?

Q. Would you like to explain to the learned judges sitting there why you lied to the Prosecution in the early stages of your interviews?

11:12:08

A. Well I myself who is sitting here now I thought those things were strategies that the people used and, although they had told me that they had nothing to do with me, I think it was something that they were doing to cajole me so that later they will be able to get me round and to arrest me for something. But later when they actually told me that I shouldn't hide anything away from them, I should tell them the truth, and then I later came out to plain to them and said, "Okay, I will tell you the truth", and I said to them that, "Yes, this plan was a plan that came from Liberia and it was Mosquito that brought it that we should carry out the attack".

11:12:41

11:13:06

Q. Right, let us look at what you have just told us:

"I thought those things were strategies that the people used and, although they had told me that they had nothing to do with me, I think it was something they were doing to cajole me so that later they will be able to get me round and to arrest me for something".

11:13:46 On 12 September of 2006 you had been given a letter granting you immunity from prosecution, hadn't you?

A. They told me that.

Q. You have told us this morning that you knew before you ever started being interviewed by them that they were going to give 11:14:09 you this letter. Did you think that the letter might not be worth the paper that it was written on? Is that what you are saying?

A. Well it worth it, but I am a human being. I needed to think. Sometimes somebody will write something on a piece of 11:14:40 paper and then I will read it and sometimes what is said in the paper then I will just look at it that way, but equally so I am a human being. I had my own way to feel about it.

Q. So, you were still worried? Despite having had the promise of immunity, you were still worried that they might actually 11:15:10 charge you with an offence and you would end up being on trial in front of this Court. Is that right?

A. At times I had the feelings in mind and sometimes I thought over them, but sometimes again I will sit down and say, "What actually did I do? I did not do anything", but as a human being 11:15:38 you will be sure - you will not be cock sure, so sometimes I sat down and said, "Maybe these things will happen, or maybe they will not happen", and sometimes I had a free mind and sometimes I had it in mind I thought that it was going to end up this way.

Q. So, have I understood you correctly? Throughout 2006 are you saying that you were still worried that they might prosecute you even though you were co-operating with them?

A. Yes, I was co-operating with them. Yes, I had really accepted to talk to them and they also had assured me that they were not going to do anything to me, but at the same time I had a shaky heart.

Q. Right, and because of your shaky heart you decided you wouldn't tell them the truth about some things. Is that right?

A. Well it was when I started, but later when they actually assured me I said, "Okay", this thing - I decided to give in and I decided to tell the truth. So whether anything was going to happen to me now let it just happen, whether they were going to kill me let them kill me, but I said, "Okay, I will say the truth", but as long as I wanted peace for myself and I also wanted peace for them I decided to give in to say the truth to them.

Q. So, in how many interviews did you tell them lies?

A. Well I don't think I can recall that it was so and so interview, but based on this particular interview that we are talking about I decided to give in myself and say the truth. And as long as I wanted peace I decided to say the truth and if anything was going to happen after that let it happen, but I said I will say the truth to them.

Q. Let me see if I have understood, Mr Mongor. You were worried that they would still prosecute you and so you decided that you would give them more information that they wanted to hear in order that they would not prosecute you. Is that what you are saying?

A. No, my Lord, not what they wanted to hear that I told them only to satisfy them, but I am saying that I gave in myself so that I will say the truth for the sake of peace. This was the reason why I was willing to say the truth for to them, but I am not saying that this was any reason just for me to say something that will satisfy them. I was not trying to satisfy them at all.

Q. Did you feel at any stage during the whole interview process that you were being pressed by them?

A. What is the pressed, my Lord?

Q. You understood it last week because you said when I used the same term, "No, I wasn't being pressed by them". Have another go at that question, please, and try and give me an honest answer. Did you feel that you were being pressed by the Prosecution to give them information at any stage during the interview process?

A. Well, when you talk about press I take it that it is just like when you press somebody to say something that you want to satisfy you. That was not the case actually. It was not the case that I was being pressed just to say, okay, say this, or say this or say that. That was not what they were doing to me.

Q. Are you sure about that?

A. But at times they asked me question and later they will ask me the same question. Like, for instance, if they asked me a question today and when I went some other time when I came back they will ask me that same question. Something like that.

Q. Yes. In fact, you do know what pressed means because last week you asked me to stop pressing you. Do you remember that? Do you recall?

A. Yes, I recall when I told you not to press me. It was when you were asking me over and over, over and over.

Q. Right. Was there ever a time when the Prosecution made it clear to you that they really wanted more information out of you than you were currently giving them and that there must be more information you could give them?

11:21:42 A. They wanted more information from me based on the roles that I played and the things that I knew about for me to come out plain and explain to them.

Q. Mr Mongor, just tell the learned judges, would you, some of the lies that you told in the first interviews? Give them some 11:22:07 example of things you told the Prosecution that were lies.

A. Well I can't recall now, except this topic that we are discussing on now concerning the J6 that we were discussing, I told you that initially I did not tell them with regards Mr Taylor's plans. But when they later told me that, "We 11:22:50 actually want you to tell this Court the truth", and then I also accepted that I will be willing to say the truth, then I decided to come out plain, but if you think there is any other that you have recognised or that you have realised that I did that I had not said initially that I have not been able to say now, you come

11:23:11 up with it and then I will answer before this Court plainly that, yes, that is it.

Q. Well, I am not going to rise to the challenge. You just tell us - tell the Court - how it was to your advantage not to tell them the truth about Charles Taylor's involvement in the 11:23:41 attack on Freetown on January 6th 1999?

A. Well I don't know about any advantage that you are talking at, my Lord.

Q. You have told the Court this morning a series of questions - sorry, a series of answers and I am just going to go through them. First of all, you knew before you were ever interviewed that you were going to get the immunity letter. Even after you got the immunity letter you still had a shaky heart and you thought they might - hang on, hang on. Listen to the question, please. That they might still find some reason to prosecute you. You have also told the Court this morning that therefore you devised strategies in order to protect yourself against the possibility of them charging you. How did it protect you to tell them that you didn't know about Charles Taylor's involvement in the attack on Freetown on January 6th 1999?

A. Before answering to your question all the things that you have said, I want to make one point clear. I have told you that I did not tell you that they were coming to give me a letter, because they did not inform me that they were going to give me a letter. And I had said initially that the person who spoke with me told me that the things that I was going to come and explain before them did not mean that the Court had something against me even before they served me the letter.

Q. How did it help you not to tell them the truth about what you claim to be Charles Taylor's involvement in the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999?

A. He did not help me in any way to say that was a help to me, because it was not something that as long as I was going to benefit from it if I had to say that.

Q. So, then why lie?

A. Well I did not lie, my Lord.

Q. Well, you have told us that you did lie. Do you have any recollection, Mr Mongor, of what you have been saying in the last 20 minutes?

A. I said I did not make up my mind to tell them at that time, but later I made up my mind to tell them the truth. That was what I said.

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, I am going to move on to something. Would this be a convenient moment? It is not something I can deal with in two minutes.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Well, we only have a few minutes left on the tape and so this may be an appropriate point to adjourn.

MR MUNYARD: Thank you.

PRESIDING JUDGE: We will resume at 12 and you will be able to then go into your next area.

Mr Witness, we are now going to take the mid-morning break. We will start Court again at 12 o'clock. Please adjourn Court until 12.

[Break taken at 12.00 p.m.]

[Upon resuming at 12.00 p.m.]

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard, please proceed with your cross-examination.

MR MUNYARD: Thank you, your Honour:

11:59:20 Q. Mr Mongor, just before we broke you are recorded as having said, "I said I did not make up my mind to tell them at that time, but later I made up my mind to tell them the truth. That was what I said." Now you said that you told them lies, but you can't remember what the lies were apart from about Charles Taylor
11:59:48 and the 6 January invasion. In the last half hour while we've had a break have you been able to think of any other lies that you told the investigators during the earlier interviews?

A. I did not remember any one, my Lord.

Q. Well, can I suggest that it was a lie to say that you had asked for and received ammunition around the time of the AFRC coming to power, that's the ammunition that you say eventually made its way to Buedu. That's a lie, isn't it?

A. Not a lie, my Lord.

12:00:39 Q. The AFRC came to power in May of 1997, do you agree?

A. I agree it was in May, yes, my Lord.

Q. What was going on in Liberia at that stage?

A. You mean in May, my Lord?

Q. That's what I mean.

12:01:17 A. Well, I can't recall anything now that I think was going on there.

Q. Well, try hard to think about it. You are part Liberian. Did you have family in Liberia in May 2007?

A. Yes, I had family there.

12:01:42 Q. Who was president of Liberia in May 2007?

A. It was Mr Taylor who was there.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Are we talking May 2007 or 1997?

MR MUNYARD: Did I say 2007? I am so sorry, it may be me. We will start again:

12:02:15 Q. The AFRC came to power in May 1997 you agree. Did you have family in Liberia in May 1997?

A. Yes, in 1997 I had family there.

Q. And who was president in May 1997 in Liberia?

A. It was Mr Taylor.

12:02:52 Q. Had he been elected president by May 1997 when the AFRC came to power next door in Sierra Leone?

A. Well, I can't recall the month, but I know that he was president.

Q. At the time that the AFRC staged their coup in Sierra Leone

MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, I believe counsel has made a mistake. If I refer counsel and the Court to page 5821, line 13, we went over this at time of the direct and there was a question of the interpretation. Page again 5821, line 13.

12:25:06 MR MUNYARD: I accept that. I am looking at line 13, yes:

Q. Well, you corrected it. Do you accept you must have made a mistake the first time round, because nobody could hear SAJ Musa in fact if you had said Gullit? Do you accept you used the wrong name the first time round?

12:25:38 A. Yes, I agree that I used the wrong name, but it was not SAJ Musa but Sam Bockarie.

Q. The plan to take Freetown had been SAJ Musa's and Gullit's plan, hadn't it?

A. It was they who moved towards that point.

12:26:10 Q. It was their plan not Charles Taylor's plan, right or wrong?

A. Well, it was a plan that Mr Taylor made together with Sam Bockarie and even before we heard it.

Q. So it was your plan first, was it, when you say, "We heard 12:26:53 it"? It was Mr Taylor, Sam Bockarie and the RUF's plan first, was it?

A. It was Sam Bockarie and Mr Taylor. They were the ones that planned and send the plans to the RUF for us to carry out those things; the advancement.

12:27:21 Q. Let us just see what you said in March. On 11 March, page 5795, and I am going to try and summarise it from line 5 down. Sam Bockarie told you he and Mr Taylor had sat together and planned to run an operation:

"... [the] plan [was] for us to launch an operation whereby we'll capture Kono, Makeni and advance to Freetown. And we were also to attack Joru. So those were the areas we were to capture. We were also to launch another attack on Kenema ... and one person should attack Joru, when that person would have attacked Joru he should advance on Zimmi."

12:28:08

And then over the page, page 5796 starting at line 16 - well, line 14 actually:

"Q. Did Sam Bockarie indicate what the purpose of this attack was going to be?", that is the attack Mr Taylor had planned, "What was the ultimate purpose?

12:28:28

A. The reason for this attack, for this advance on the various places and for us to take those places, you can remember at that time Foday Sankoh had been moved from Nigeria and he was in jail in Freetown. So we were to attack Kono and take there. We were to attack Freetown in order to free Foday Sankoh and the others who were in jail there. We were also to ensure that we seized power."

12:28:48

Yes? That is what you told this Court in March, that it was Mr Taylor's plan and that was the objective. Is that what you have always told the Prosecution?

12:29:13

A. I told them.

Q. Can we go to tab 4, please. This is 1 October 2006. I would like you to turn, please, to page 23798 and let me know when you have that, Mr Mongor.

A. Yes, I have it, my Lord.

12:30:26

Q. Does it say in the middle of that page - can you see a line that says, "Mongor has never been back to Liberia"? Do you see that? Do you see that, halfway down the page?

A. Yes, yes, I have seen it.

Q. Two lines below that does it read as follows, "Mongor doesn't know about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown in January 1999." Does it say that?
A. Yes, that is what the paper says.
12:31:26 Q. Is that what you told the Prosecutors on 1 October 2006, a Sunday?
A. Yes, I said that.
Q. Why?
A. That was what I told them.
12:31:58 Q. Why?
A. Because I did not know about that.
Q. So that is the truth, that statement, is it?
A. I cannot say it is the truth.
Q. If it is not the truth why did you tell them that?
12:32:51 A. I don't think I have any reason why I told them that.
Q. Try again, please, Mr Mongor.
A. I said I don't think I have any reason.
Q. Have a third attempt at explaining that statement, would you?
12:33:19 MR KOUMJIAN: Asked and answered.
PRESIDING JUDGE: It has been asked twice. If you have another question to put, please put it, Mr Munyard.
MR MUNYARD:
Q. Can you think of any reason why you would have told a lie
12:33:37 to the investigators on Sunday, 1 October 2006?
A. I don't have any reason to proffer to you to say that I lied. And I am not lying.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, I wish to be clear. The counsel is challenging you that you told a lie on Sunday, 1

October 2006. Are you saying in reply that you are not lying now, or you didn't lie on 1 October 2006?

THE WITNESS: I said I am not lying now. That is what I'm saying.

12:34:32 MR MUNYARD:

Q. Well, you haven't given us any reason yet.

MR KOUMJIAN: Well, that's not a question.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. Have you? Have you given us a reason yet that isn't a lie?

12:34:48 PRESIDING JUDGE: Are you now referring to 1 October 2006, for purposes of clarity?

MR MUNYARD: Yes.

THE WITNESS: Yes, my Lord, ask your question again.

MR MUNYARD:

12:35:19 Q. You told us, in fact you told her Honour, the Presiding Judge, "I am not lying now". Not lying about what?

A. I am not lying now that Taylor did not take part in the January 6 invasion. I am not lying at all.

Q. Mr Mongor, we're not talking about Mr Taylor's taking part 12:36:06 in it. Look at the words on the printed page, 23798: "Mongor doesn't know about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown in January" 1998 - sorry "1999". I'm doing it again. 1999.

A. Well, that is what I am trying to tell you and that what I 12:36:46 am telling you now is that Charles Taylor knew about that attack.

Q. You started this interview at 10.20 in the morning on Sunday, 1 October 2006. Would you have been to church already before you went to have this interview on that Sunday?

A. Maybe, but I can't recall whether I went to church, or that I had come from church at that time. I can't recall.

Q. You knew then how important it was to tell the truth to the investigators, didn't you?
A. I know.
12:38:01 MR MUNYARD: I'm not sure if that was "I know", K-N-O-W, or "no", the opposite of yes.
PRESIDING JUDGE: I thought it was "I know".
Mr Interpreter, what did the witness say? We are not clear.
THE INTERPRETER: The witness said, "I know".
12:38:18 MR MUNYARD: All right:
Q. Mr Mongor, can you think of any way in which it would have protected you to tell a lie to the investigators on 1 October 2006 about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown?
12:38:55 A. I don't think I have any reason to lie to the investigators.
Q. Yes, all right. Could you turn, please, to tab 19 and for the benefit of everybody this was the small bundle that I distributed last week. I am afraid there was a slight fault
12:39:42 with the bundle that was the main bundle that was prepared. There is one tab in there, I think it's tab 17, that is a duplicate. No, it's tab 16. Tab 16 is a duplicate so we can ignore that and tab 19 should have gone in sequentially after tab 7, but we have just continued - sorry, sequentially after tab 8.
12:40:21 We have just continued the tab numbering.
In any event, we will look at tab 19, please. This is 8 February 2007. Do you see that, Mr Mongor?
A. Yes, I have seen it, my Lord.
Q. Now the interview we have just been looking at which took place on 1 October, you were asked more questions about your answers in that interview on 8 February following and if we look at page 28455 we can see that you were interviewed at just after 2 o'clock in the afternoon on 8 February and the interviewer was 12:41:38 continuing to clarify the answers that were contained in the record of the interview of 1 October. If you turn, please, to page 28457 I would like you to look three paragraphs down from the top. Do you have that in front of you?

A. Yes, my Lord.

12:42:18 Q. Three paragraphs down from the top the sentence starts, "When the witness said". Do you see that?

A. Yes, I have seen it, my Lord.

Q. And it reads as follows:

"When the witness said that he didn't know about 12:42:36 Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown, he meant that he understood that the Freetown invasion was largely an AFRC project."

Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, my Lord.

12:43:06 Q. Is it the truth?

A. Yes, I told them, my Lord.

Q. No, is what you told them there the truth?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. So it wasn't all Charles Taylor's idea. It was largely an 12:43:34 AFRC project?

A. AFRC had the movement, but how would they have done it without the RUF? They wouldn't have been able to do it.

Q. Mr Mongor, they did do it without the RUF, didn't they?

A. Yes, it was when they were in Freetown that they made the coup in May that you are talking about.

Q. You know what we are talking about here. We are talking about the invasion of Freetown in January 1999.

A. Yes, I told you that they wouldn't have been able to do it without the help of the RUF.

Q. The invasion of Freetown in January 1999, is that what you're talking about?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. In fact, it wasn't until the AFRC contingent started to get into trouble in Freetown that they only then called in the RUF. That's right, isn't it?

A. I want to tell you that if the RUF had not been attacking all the other places those men wouldn't have been able to get inside. What I know about fighting is what I am trying to tell you.

Q. This was a SAJ Musa and Gullit idea to attack Freetown to restore the Sierra Leone Army, wasn't it, January 1999?

A. They wouldn't have been able to bring the Sierra Leone Army back together if they only depended on that small group that they used to go, because you can see that all the other areas where the ECOMOG troops were occupying will not allow them to pass through to go and restore the army, except the RUF participated to reduce the burden on them. It is the experience that I have concerning war that I am sharing with you.

Q. Thank you. SAJ Musa was not on good terms with the RUF at this stage, was he?

A. Well, initially SAJ Musa was not in agreement with the RUF. He never had any good dealings with the RUF.

Q. Tab 12, please, page 39001. Now this is an interview in July 2007 conducted by an investigator, Umaru Kamara, and the attorney present was Mr Koumjian. Mr Nick to you. If you look at the top of page 39001, paragraph 14 reads, "SAJ Musa was hard to work with because SAJ felt he should take orders from nobody." Did you tell Mr Nick and the investigator that?

A. I told them that.

Q. Is it true?

A. Yes.

Q. SAJ Musa was a fully qualified soldier, wasn't he?

A. Yes, he was a fully qualified soldier.

Q. He did not have a lot of respect for you RUF fighters, did he?

A. That was later on that he did not have respect for us.

Q. Yes, he died in the attack on Freetown, didn't he?

A. He did not enter Freetown, my Lord.

Q. Waterloo was where he died, wasn't it? Benguema Barracks?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. As part of the advance on Freetown, yes?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. He was not cooperating in some big plan of Charles Taylor's to seize Freetown in January 1999, was he?

A. Well, he agreed with the arrangement.

Q. Tab - I am sorry.

A. That was why when the --

MR KOUMJIAN: Excuse me, can the witness be allowed to finish his answer please.

MR MUNYARD: I did actually apologise and some moments before Mr Koumjian stood up to say that.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, please finish your answer if you have not done so.

THE WITNESS: Well I have finished, my Lord.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. Right, thank you.

12:50:46 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, you did not finish your answer. You said, "Well, he agreed with the arrangement. That was when the --" The question asked to you was, "As part of the advance on Freetown?", and then you didn't finish your answer.

THE WITNESS: My Lord, I thought I finished it, but I did 12:51:24 say he agreed with the plan that Mosquito brought. That was why they moved.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. This was the time later on when he did not have respect for the RUF. That is right, isn't it?

12:51:50 A. I think I had said initially that the man was not taking any command from the RUF at the time they were there, but the time the plan came up that we should forget about all the petty misunderstandings that we had, they said we should forget about it all and that we should go on this plan. That was the reason 12:52:15 why they agreed and then they moved.

Q. Tab 13, please. Do you have tab 13, Mr Mongor?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. This is an interview where - on 29 November 2007 where you were interviewed by Mr Werner, or he was present certainly, with 12:52:58 an investigator, S Streeter. Do you remember that interview, November of 2007? Can you remember being interviewed in an interview in which Mr Werner was present?

A. Well there were interviews but I cannot recall the dates as you are keeping the records, but the name of the person that you are referring to if I see it and if I know the person then I will answer, "Yes, I know the person".

Q. Right. Mr Werner is the gentleman that we have identified earlier sitting closest to you on the Prosecution side. Now I would like you, please, to turn to page 45403, paragraph 28. Keep turning. Do you have that? It is in the middle of that page.

12:53:56

A. Yes, I have seen it, my Lord.

Q. It reads as follows, "The witness states that he was in Kenema District when he heard that SAJ Musa died." Did you tell them that?

12:54:46

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. It continues, "The witness stated that Gullit took over command of this group after the death of SAJ Musa." Did you tell them that?

12:55:06

A. Yes, I told them that, my Lord.

Q. Then it goes on, "The witness said that as a member of the RUF high command he was happy when Gullit took over command." Did you tell them that?

12:55:27

A. Yes, I told them, my Lord.

Q. It continues, "He stated that he was happy because he did not feel that SAJ Musa would have cooperated with the RUF if he had led the group that took Freetown." Did you tell them that?

A. I told them, my Lord.

12:55:48

Q. The invasion of Freetown was an AFRC project, wasn't it?

A. Well, it was not just AFRC.

Q. Let me make it absolutely clear to you that when you said that, when you didn't know about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown, you meant you understood that the Freetown invasion was largely an AFRC project, you were there being asked questions about your earlier statement, "Mongor doesn't know about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown in January 1999." That is the invasion of 12:56:54 Freetown that we are talking about. Not the AFRC coming to power in a coup, but the invasion J6 as I think you called it. Is that right?

A. Yes, that was how I called it, my Lord.

Q. Why did you tell the interviewer then, in February of 2007
12:57:39 when he was trying to find out what you meant in October 2006 - why did you tell him that you didn't know about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown because that invasion was largely an AFRC project?

A. Well if AFRC had that plan then it was their business to 12:58:15 have it, but I am saying they would not have been able to do it. I am mainly explaining to you what my experience is about war. That group, being a small group, wouldn't have been able to enter Freetown when ECOMOG was occupying Kono, Makeni, Gberie Junction and all those other areas up to Freetown. To say that small 12:58:41 group will have been able to go through all of those obstacles to go to Freetown without the help of the RUF for them to be able to enter, they were able to enter Freetown because some other RUF groups who were in Kailahun District were able to attack Kono, Kenema District, Makeni, Gberie junction and all those areas.
12:59:14 They were able to attack there, so that was what made the way for them to be able to enter inside.

Q. So it is not right to say, is it, that the Freetown invasion was largely an AFRC project?

MR KOUMJIAN: Asked and answered. I believe the witness has given a detailed answer explaining that.

MR MUNYARD: Well, we were dealing with October 2006 when we went over that. I have now moved on to February 2007. This is the second part of his explanation to the investigator about why - about not knowing about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown. As far as I am aware, 8 February was not a Sunday. I had only been dealing with the Sunday, 1 October, before.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, as I understand it, we are dealing with prior inconsistent statements. I for one have not had a satisfactory answer to the numerous questions by Mr Munyard around this issue. Every time he asks a question we get a slightly different answer from what he has asked and I would like to get an answer to this prior inconsistency.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Put the question, Mr Munyard.

MR MUNYARD: Can I just go back to it? I have got to find it on the transcript:

Q. Mr Mongor, why did you tell the interviewer in February 2007, when he was trying to find out what you meant in October 2006 when you had said that you didn't know - sorry, let me just make sure I am putting the right thing to you.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Which one are we dealing with, Mr Munyard?

MR MUNYARD: We are dealing with February 2007. I have got it now:

Q. Why did you tell the interviewer in February 2007, when he asked you what you meant in 2006 October when you told him, "I don't know about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown in January 1999", why did you tell the investigator when he asked you the second time that by that you meant you understood that the Freetown invasion was largely an AFRC project? Why did you tell him that in February 2007?

A. I think when you said it was the AFRC that planned that to 13:02:52 enter Freetown, but I was able to make it explicit to you that the AFRC were unable to enter Freetown without the help of the RUF because the enemies did occupy the other areas where we attacked them before SAJ Musa's group were able to get a free access to enter.

13:03:25 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Mongor, I think you are avoiding the question. Nobody asked you to tell us the logistics of who entered or when they entered. The question by counsel is very clear. For the nth time: Why did you in 2007 tell the investigators what you told them, namely that the attack, the 13:03:52 January 1999 attack, was largely an AFRC project? Why did you tell that to the investigators? That is the question that has been asked. You haven't answered it.

THE WITNESS: The reason why I told them that was because if you look at the group that moved for the Freetown invasion, 13:04:23 many of them were AFRC men who were soldiers. They refused to wait for the RUF group to join them. They were just doing it by themselves. It was based on that I said that.

MR MUNYARD: I'm not going to pursue this any longer:

Q. However, there came a time, did there not, in November 2007
13:05:06 when you tell them, the investigators, that Sam Bockarie told you that he'd had a meeting with Charles Taylor and a plan had been developed to attack Koidu, Makeni, Kenema and other strategic areas prior to advancing to Freetown. Why did you tell them that in November 2007 when you had been saying on several occasions before that you did not know about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown?

A. This was the time that I said they had not asked me anything concerning the plans and I did say that it was when Sam 13:06:13 Bockarie came with the ammunition that he explained to us the things that they discussed with regards our advancement.
Q. But they asked you about Charles Taylor's involvement in the decision to attack Freetown on a number of occasions before November 2007 and you said you didn't know anything about his 13:06:43 involvement. What made you change your story in November 2007?
A. It was because I knew and I later realised something about the plans that Sam Bockarie brought with regards the advancement that I later told the investigators.
Q. Are you saying that you had forgotten about what Sam
13:07:40 Bockarie told you of Charles Taylor's big idea to attack Freetown when you were questioned in 2006 and 2007 and that you suddenly remembered in November 2007? Is that what you mean by, "I later realised something about the plans that Sam Bockarie brought"?
A. Yes. I am a human being. I am liable to forget and you 13:08:21 cannot say - you cannot say what I am saying I will sit in one place and explain everything about it because it is a history. That was why I said that.
Q. Were you being pressed in November 2007 to give the Prosecutors more than you had given them on this subject before?
13:08:52 A. Well, I have told you, yes, the Prosecution would want more information.
Q. Yes, were you being pressed?
A. Yes, when they asked me over and over.
Q. And did you feel you had to give them more than you had already given them to satisfy them?

A. Well, it was not something to satisfy them that I was to say, but it was because it came to my mind that I told them at that time.
13:09:50 Q. Did you have a shaky heart in November 2007 when you were being interviewed yet again?
A. Well, I have so many other things, so many problems that disturb me, but I cannot say it was because of that at that time that my mind was shaky, but I am a human being. I normally have 13:10:33 problems that I think about.
Q. Interview number 19 it was. Did you worry, Mr Mongor, that you were being interviewed now for the 19th time and that they really needed something more out of you, or that you might be in trouble yourself?
13:11:03 A. I have my mind on so many other things. I think about so many things, my Lord. I'm a human being. I will have something in mind as I am sitting here and then maybe I will forget about it and start thinking about some other thing. You will not tell me that as a human being it is always that you have a steady 13:11:33 mind.
Q. I asked you one day last week if you knew, now that is, last week - if you knew that the RUF accused Sesay, Kallon and Gbao were on trial and you said no, you didn't know they were on trial. You changed your account later, but do you remember 13:12:02 saying nobody had told you they were on trial when I first asked you that question last week?
MR KOUMJIAN: I believe asked and answered. This area has been covered quite in detail.
MR MUNYARD: Can I say I understand my learned friend's

Q. Did you feel pressed by that comment that you hadn't disclosed everything to them?

A. They did not press me. It was not a press.

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, I see the time. Is this a convenient moment?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, Mr Munyard. We have only about a minute left so we will take the lunchtime adjournment. Mr Witness, we are now going to adjourn for lunchtime. We will recommence court again at 2.30. Please adjourn court.

[Lunch break taken at 1.28 p.m.]

[Upon resuming at 2.30 p.m.]

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard, please proceed.

MR MUNYARD: Thank you, Madam President. Your Honours, I have no further questions of this witness.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Munyard. Re-examination, Mr Koumjian?

RE-EXAMINATION BY MR KOUMJIAN:

MR KOUMJIAN: Yes, your Honour, just a few areas:

Q. Sir, I want to start, Mr Mongor, with talking to you about what we were discussing just before the lunch break and you were asked about an interview that you had last year, with Mr Streeter and Mr Werner, where you talked about the nationwide offensive that led to the attack on Freetown. I want to ask you about a couple of other interviews you gave previous to that, starting with 23 December 2006. So if I could maybe borrow the Defence tabs that they've provided, it's in tab 7 of the Defence bundle and if that could be just put on the screen, page 0002676. This is from 23 December 2006.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Is it 26276?

communicate with the other side?
A. When I got to Buedu it was at that time I was given the authority to communicate.
Q. Now, which radios did you communicate with in Liberia on 10:56:52 the other side?
A. On the other side - before crossing there I was given a radio set. I crossed into Liberia with a radio set. Of course, when I arrived and 50 received me from Foya --
Q. Can I pause you. I think you are not actually answering 10:57:11 the question. Before you left to go to Liberia when you said at some point at Buedu you had authority to communicate, you could also communicate with the radios in Liberia. Is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now which radios in Liberia, or which stations in Liberia,
10:57:27 would you communicate with at that time?
A. Call sign 020, 020, that was located at the Executive Mansion Ground in Monrovia, and one call sign, Base 1, like I said earlier, was located in Congo town at Benjamin D Yeaten's residence. That is by White Flower and White Flower is the 10:57:56 personal residence of President Charles Taylor of Liberia.
Q. Thank you. Before these - before this time when you could communicate to 020 and Base 1, was there any radio - any other radio - that you communicated with in Liberia?
A. Yes, there was also another radio station located in Foya.
10:58:29 That is Foxtrot Yankee as we referred to.
Q. So, at the point of your assignment to Liberia there were - (your Honours, my attention has just been called to the spelling for Foxtrot. Foxtrot Yankee.)
THE WITNESS: We just say "FY" and we were referring to

A. One Base 1 had our code. Base 1 was operated by an operator called Sunlight.
Q. Where was Base 1?
A. Base 1 was located in Congo Town, that is to Benjamin 12:30:18 Yeaten's personal residence.
Q. And you stay it was operated by?
A. Operator Sunlight, one, and, two, operator Dew.
Q. Can you spell Dew?
A. D-E-W.
12:30:34 Q. Now, these names that you've just mentioned, the names of the operators, how do you refer to them in communication parlance?
A. Those were code names and I knew them only by those code names.
12:30:48 Q. So the operators for the radio called Base 1 were?
A. The name Base 1 was the call sign of the radio. Dew, Sunlight were the code names of the operators who operated that radio.
Q. And you say that radio had access to the RUF code?
12:31:10 A. Yes, sir. They had a copy of our code and the other station Zero 20 at the Executive Mansion Ground, that was operated by Sky 1.
Q. When you say operated by Sky 1, what do you mean?
A. Sky 1 is the name of the operator who operated that radio 12:31:32 with the call sign 020, 020.
Q. To your knowledge who did the operators Sunlight and Dew for the radio Base 1 report to?
A. They reported to Benjamin D Yeaten, Unit 50.
Q. And when you say Unit 50 and you call Benjamin Yeaten's name, what was Unit 50? Why was it called Unit 50?

A. That was his code name. He was called by that name, Unit 50.
Q. Now, you also mentioned radio call sign 020 which you say 12:32:25 was at the Executive Mansion, is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. It had a radio operator whose code name was --
A. Sky 1.
Q. Sky 1. Now, who do you recall that - the radio at the 12:32:45 Executive Mansion reported to who?
A. To the president.
Q. Who was the president then?
A. President Charles Taylor was in power at that time.
Q. Now, let us focus briefly. You say that these two radios 12:32:56 had the code for the Sierra Leone - for the RUF radio network, is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How do you know this?
A. I was an operator and when I was taken to Liberia the 12:33:11 number of times I received a message from them in our code and besides when I was to cross into Liberia I was given a special code which was distributed to operators Sunlight, Sky 1 and the other radio that was in Foya and that was the code we used.
Q. Now, let's for a brief moment focus on communication within 12:33:42 Sierra Leone, the RUF within Sierra Leone. Now, you have mentioned that the RUF operated on a 7 megahertz and that means that the frequency numbers on this network started with the number 7, is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.

they be initiated?
A. They could call us. Sometimes if our call sign - when it was Bravo Zulu 4 they could call, "020 calling for Bravo Zulu 4" and we could respond. And in response they could tell us, "Have 14:42:32 your principal informed to get on the 21, that the chief is on the 21 the talk to him" and the message would be relayed to Sam Bockarie.
Q. Now here you have just given an example using Bravo Zulu 4. In your earlier testimony you said this was the previous call 14:42:52 sign for Bockarie's radio. Is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So if you got a call on Bravo Zulu 4 it means that call came before a certain time, a certain period in time. Is that right?
14:43:03 A. Yes.
Q. It would be before what time?
A. Before the operation in Voinjama, because the call sign changed to Planet 1 when the operation in Voinjama was carried out and those recruits brought to Buedu. That was the time the 14:43:20 call sign changed.
Q. Now when there was a call from 020 and indicating that they wanted log to go on the 21, who would come on the 21 to speak to Log?
A. They made reference to the chief. The operator could make 14:43:44 reference to the chief by telling us on the radio to have Log informed to go on the telephone and Log was Sam Bockarie in the code and the chief they were referring to was Charles Taylor.
Q. Now how did you know that he would be speaking to Charles Taylor?

A. After their conversation himself could come on the radio to draft message to be transmitted to the front line and he could tell us. He never used to hide anything from us.
Q. Now apart from telling you, would you tell from the nature 14:44:20 of the conversation who he was talking to?
A. He could say, "Yes, sir", the thing would be implemented, "Yes, sir", and thereafter he would go. We had the radio room like this. In fact when the radio was transferred to the vehicle and when the station was now in the vehicle the vehicle was 14:44:39 parked just by or let's say outside of the radio room where he had the computer and the satellite phone.
Q. And did Bockarie in your experience and the time you were with the RUF, who would he defer to by answering "Yes, sir" in your recollection?
14:45:05 A. He could refer to Benjamin D Yeaten as sir and his chief.
Q. Apart from those two do you recall anyone else who would call him on the radio and to whom he would answer "Yes, sir"?
A. No, I can cannot confirm that.
MR BANGURA: Now, your Honours, at this stage I want to 14:45:34 deal with the document which I had referred to earlier.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes.
MR BANGURA: Can the witness be shown - the document is marked ERN 00047121:
Q. Mr Witness, do you recognise that piece of paper that has 14:46:11 been shown to you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What do you recognise it as?
A. It is an example of how the messages were processed. As you can see the preamble, let's say for example there is a communicating with Gullit, really improved after the death of SAJ Musa.

Q. When did SAJ Musa die?

A. I cannot come up with the actual date, but it was during the venture to retake Freetown.

14:59:11

Q. Now, do you recall when this venture was to retake Freetown?

A. It was 1999, early.

Q. Now, do you recall before the actual effort to take Freetown - the actual attempt to take Freetown, what was the state of communication between the RUF and SAJ Musa?

14:59:41

A. There was not that much flow of communication between them.

Q. Do you recall which group entered Freetown?

A. I only used to receive a call when I was on duty. In fact, when you are on duty you have a right to stay in the station. I was not all the time assigned on the radio set.

15:00:24

Q. And so what communication did you receive about the move to Freetown?

A. In fact, the time I was on duty communicating with those forces, that was the time they were already about to pull out from Freetown and Gullit sent a message to Sam Bockarie that the situation was tense and that they were without ammunitions. So he told SAJ - I mean Gullit to stay at the particular location and move to Rambo at a particular point, and communication was going on between Rambo and Superman and the other commanders to move in to reinforce Gullit at a particular point. But again he told him, "If they mount - if the pressure is too much, if pressure is mounted on you too much, take your time to retreat by the peninsula, but before retreating you have to make the area fearful to call the minds of the international community", and he was doing that to maintain --

15:00:57

Q. Can I pause you, Mr Witness. Can you say who was saying all of this to who?

15:02:21 A. Sam Bockarie was talking directly to Gullit.

Q. Can we go back and establish how the communications came about between Sam Bockarie and Gullit. To your recollection, when did you first get to know that there was communication going on between Sam Bockarie and Gullit?

15:02:45 A. His operator was communicating to us.

Q. Whose operator?

A. Elongima.

Q. Whose operator is Elongima?

A. Gullit's operator.

15:02:57 Q. Can you spell that name, please?

A. E-L-O-N-G-I-M-A.

Q. Yes. What was the substance of that communication?

A. He used to give a report to Sam Bockarie, the position they were and the situation in which they were. And entering Freetown 15:03:26 they were communicating still. So when they entered Freetown they contacted Sam Bockarie that they were at the State House.

Q. Can you just pause. Your Honours, I see the name which the witness gave is not --

THE WITNESS: Elongima who was the radio operator.

15:03:46 PRESIDING JUDGE: But it's been noted that there was a spelling, Mr Bangura, so I think it will be picked up on record.

MR BANGURA:

Q. Yes, you said you - continue, please?

A. When they entered Freetown he contacted that they were at that we used to collect information from the front lines.

Q. Now you said that at some point there was this message about the prisoners. Was there some other substance in the communication with Bockarie with Gullit that you came to know about?
15:06:32
A. At one time he told them - he told Gullit, he said, "Listen to the radio." He said, "I have just had some interview with the correspondent, BBC West African correspondent Mark Doyle, saying if pressure is mounted on your position you have to burn some government buildings, the oil refinery and try to pull out by the peninsular and then find yourself to a particular location." He said, "But you have to maintain communication with Rambo, Superman and the other officers for smooth operations."
15:06:58
Q. Now you said that he informed - he told Gullit on the radio to burn down public buildings. How did you know this?
15:07:23
A. It was openly stated on the radio and again he had an interview with the BBC correspondent following that instruction. He informed the combatant on the front line to listen to the radio, that he had had interview with the BBC correspondent and they would get the instructions.
15:07:57
Q. Did you yourself listen to that radio broadcast, BBC radio broadcast?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now in Sam Bockarie's radio communication with Gullit where he ordered him to burn down public structures, do you recall the exact words that he said --
15:08:13
A. He said --
Q. -- when he gave that order?
A. He said it in Krio.

Q. What exactly did he say in Krio?
A. He said, "If they mount pressure on us", he said, "I will burn the fucking place."
Q. And translated what would that mean in English?
15:08:39 A. He said if pressure is mounted on them they should burn down the buildings, the government buildings, and that will now raise alarm.
Q. Now you used a word that came in Krio "fucking". Did that feature in your translation that you gave in English? What did 15:09:10 he say? He said it in Krio. Can you give us that in English?
A. He said let them burn the entire place, more government buildings and then mount pressure on them, that on Gullit - Sam Bockarie then passed this instruction to Gullit.
Q. Yes, we get that in Krio, but when you put it in English it
15:09:31 sounds a little different because I understand Krio.
A. He said, "If the pressure is mounted on you", he said, "Burn down the fucking place and try retreating by the peninsular."
Q. Thank you. You mentioned that Superman and a number of 15:09:59 other commanders were also to be involved in coordinating Gullit's retreat if he was to pull out of Freetown. Is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where was Superman at this time?
15:10:17 A. They are all within the same axis.
Q. Which axis?
A. The Freetown axis, the western, they were all within that same axis.
Q. Do you know whether Superman himself was in Freetown?

have crossed into Liberia. So 50 again commanded Sam Bockarie to open a training base to recruit civilians and that was implemented. The place was opened right there in Bunumbu Mababo [phon].

15:23:33 Q. Now, apart from communications with Benjamin Yeaten's radio, Base 1, during the Freetown invasion period was there communication with any other station by Bockarie?

A. Yes, sir, 020.

Q. And how was this communication initiated?

15:23:56 A. 020 called on our radio frequency requesting Bockarie to go on the 21.

Q. That is over the period of the Freetown invasion?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what happened after that?

15:24:12 A. After their telephone conversation Bockarie could then come on the radio and draft message instructing commanders as how best to manoeuvre to capture areas and Bockarie could tell us that he had had contact with his chief.

Q. Now, in the particular Freetown situation, and not other 15:24:34 situations where there had been communications, what specifically did Bockarie order his troops, meaning Gullit in Freetown, after the conversation on the 21?

A. He could instruct Gullit to set ambushes to go on attacks like that.

15:24:55 Q. Was this a one-off communication on the 21? Was it a one-off communication?

A. No. No, sir.

Q. How do you know this?

A. I was there myself.

Q. Were you present when the satellite communication was going on, or -

A. We were in the vehicle and sometimes by the vehicle, if I was not on duty and we heard the satellite phone just in the room and we had the vehicle parked, let us say, by the window.

15:25:28

Q. Now, during the period of the Freetown invasion was there any form of support which was given to the fighters in Freetown from Buedu?

A. Freetown is a long distance away from Buedu.

15:25:59

Q. Did the commanders in Freetown get any assistance, or any support from Bockarie in Buedu at the time during the course of the invasion?

A. All they were discussing really was strategy, giving them instructions as how to manoeuvre to capture so and so area and when the fighting was tough with them he could issue instructions to pull out to a particular point. After 72 hours another instruction could be transmitted.

15:26:24

Q. Did you hear anything about jets during the Freetown invasion?

A. We had a monitoring team that was another group of radio operators. Those were the SLAs: One Gbamayagi, Atati and the other SLA I cannot just recall his name. They were tasked with the responsibility of receiving messages from ECOMOG and decoding that message. So that was then used to be transmitted to the fighters on the front line, more especially the flying of the jet, so they could just say on the air "448" meaning the ECOMOG jet, or let us say jet bomber was up and everybody could take concealment.

15:26:38

15:27:17

Q. Now, when you say 'take concealment', what do you mean?

Q. Now, FOC, did he have another name?
A. I only knew him to be FOC. He was a bodyguard to Corporal Sankoh and when Sankoh left for Yamoussoukro he was ordered to work with Sam Bockarie.
15:51:08 Q. Now, you mentioned another name, Takpo. Can you spell that name, please?
A. T-A-K-P-O, Takpo.
Q. Who was Takpo?
A. Takpo was an RUF soldier sent to Foya.
15:51:31 MR BANGURA: Your Honours, Takpo was spelt T-A-K-P-O. I see "B" comes up:
Q. Sorry, you said he was an RUF soldier sent to Foya?
A. Yes.
Q. What was the purpose of him being sent to Foya?
15:51:50 A. He was there to provide security at the airfield where the helicopter used to land.
Q. How important was Foya?
A. Foya was a strategic point wherein we used to coordinate to meet with those who were sent from Monrovia and those to be, let 15:52:13 us say, taken to Monrovia from Sierra Leone. In fact, Eddie Kanneh, who was given the responsibility to take diamonds across, used to get to Foya to await the helicopter to fly into Monrovia.
Q. Now, you said that Takpo was stationed at - or posted to Foya to provide security. Did the RUF maintain security around 15:52:43 Foya, or in Foya regularly?
A. Men were assigned along with Takpo, men were assigned, and their responsibility was purely to keep security on the airfield.
Q. What was the movement/flow of people? I am talking about the RUF, like between Buedu and Foya normally. Between Buedu and Foya what was the frequency of movement of RUF personnel between those two points?

A. There was no hindrance at all.

Q. And this Foya was - Foya was on the Liberian side, is that correct?

A. Foya was on the Liberian side, yes.

Q. And Buedu on the Sierra Leone side?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the question was how was the flow of people, the RUF personnel, across the border to Liberia?

A. It was frequently. The flow was frequent.

Q. Thank you. Now, you said that before the route became unsafe to travel by road supplies from Liberia would come always by road, by vehicle, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, who would go for these supplies to Liberia?

A. Sometimes Sam Bockarie himself and sometimes Zigzag could come with these materials, Colonel Jungle could come with these materials, Dopoe and late during General Issa's regime, and at that time Superman and others were fighting in Lofa, there was a man called Amphibian Father, Roland Duoh, was also coming with materials and Mosquito, one black Liberian Mosquito, also used to come with the ammunitions to Buedu.

Q. And this was around what period?

A. That was in the year 2000.

Q. Okay. Now, when supplies came from Liberia by road, how were they conveyed?

A. From Foya in a vehicle to Buedu and in Buedu there was a unit called G4 and one Captain Felix was the commander of that unit. So the materials could be handed over to Felix for safekeeping.

Q. What about the situation where they were flown to Foya? How were they then conveyed to Buedu?

15:55:47 A. By vehicles.

Q. Who provided the vehicles?

A. Mosquito had vehicles on the ground there in Buedu. There were vehicles in Liberia with the Liberian soldiers. They used to sometimes make use of their own vehicles, or sometimes they 15:56:04 asked Mosquito to send vehicles to take the materials to his location.

Q. Now, these men who you have mentioned, particularly Zigzag Marzah, Dopoe Menkarzon and Jungle, did they ever stay in Sierra Leone after 1998?

15:56:27 A. They only came with materials and returned and even when they came, their movement was restricted.

Q. Was there any kind of documentation kept for material which was brought across from Liberia?

A. Materials - the G4 used to take account of those materials.

15:56:51 That was what - and sometimes they came with document and Sam Bockarie could sign that document which was taken back.

Q. Who would come with documents?

A. If it were Jungle that came with the materials he could come with the document and that document had to be signed, so 15:57:10 also with the other men.

Q. Now, apart from ammunitions what else came from Liberia?

A. Petrol, medicine and sometimes food and in General Issa's regime I was there when some cartons of military fatigue, and that was referred to in Liberia as the immigration combat and Democracy, that were fighting Charles Taylor's government. They were occupying Voinjama. They captured Voinjama and held it for almost two to three months --

Q. Yes.

16:20:21 A. -- under their control.

Q. Now, what were the helicopters --

A. The ATU helicopter flew to Kolahun, took off from Kolahun and went to Voinjama, bombarded and came back to Kolahun. There again it was refilled with bombs and went back to Voinjama.

16:20:42 Q. Now, were the --

A. They were used as well as a sort of gun ship.

Q. The ATUs were used as gun ships? Is that what you are saying?

A. The ATU helicopters were used as well to bombard enemy

16:20:59 locations.

Q. What about the SSS helicopters? Do you recall what uses they were put to?

A. The SSS helicopters really were to transport I would say two or three, four, five persons, very small size helicopter. I 16:21:15 flew on board this helicopter from Schefflein myself and General Yeaten, from Schefflein, to Kolahun.

Q. Where did you fly from?

A. From Schefflein.

Q. Can you spell that name?

16:21:28 A. I heard it. That was the point we took off. I heard it Camp Schefflein.

Q. Can you spell Schefflein? Are you able to spell Schefflein?

reported that they were persistently attacked and Sam Bockarie came on the radio and told Gullit to instruct the men to burn down some areas, in fact the government buildings, so that will raise alarm in the international community.

09:35:01 Q. Now, this communication which Bockarie had with Gullit, my question was, "Do you recall a situation where after communicating on a 21 with 020 in Liberia, do you recall a situation where Bockarie came back and gave an order?" So are you saying that this order which he gave followed a conversation

09:35:34 on the 21 with 020?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Thank you. Do you recall any other communication that Bockarie had during this period with 020?

A. Communications was going on with 020 and Base 1 and some of 09:36:00 those communications were like one I have explained and the other was the instructions to Gullit to report with the POWs who were released from the prison. I mean the prisoners who were released from Pademba Road prison, that they were to be taken to Bockarie's location.

09:36:30 Q. It's not so clear, was there a communication on the question of the prisoners between Bockarie and another radio?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which radio was that?

A. That was Base 1.

09:36:46 Q. And following that you said Bockarie then communicated with Gullit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In Freetown?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did he specifically say?
A. Bockarie told Gullit to ensure that all the prisoners who were released from Pademba Road prison were sent to his location.
Q. How do you know this?
09:37:09 A. I monitored this on the radio myself.
Q. You mentioned yesterday that a radio operator with the forces in Freetown would communicate with your radio in Buedu and you called the name of Elongima, is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
09:37:35 Q. Apart from Elongima was there any other radio operator in Freetown who communicated with Buedu?
A. After the death of SAJ Musa, King Perry also used to communicate, operator King Perry.
Q. Thank you. Now, you mentioned that Sam Bockarie gave an 09:37:52 orderer to "burn down the fucking place" when there was pressure in Freetown. Do you recall that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And did you get any report about atrocities in Freetown?
A. Yes, sir. The operator reported and he went further to 09:38:15 tell them to listen to BBC, that he had had an interview with the BBC correspondents.
Q. Now, the question was did you get any report about atrocities in Freetown?
A. Yes, sir. The radio operator, Elongima, briefed us that 09:38:39 the men who were left by the commander at that particular location were engaged in some kind of atrocities, that in fact they had gone on the rampage. He said, "They are just doing things at their wish."
Q. Did he say exactly what sort of atrocities were being let's say to move to Monrovia just like that.

Q. Now, at this time that we're talking of who was the leader of the RUF in Sierra Leone?
A. The other attack I'm talking about in the year 2000 was 10:44:47 General Issa Sesay.
Q. Before that, when you had just arrived in Liberia, who was Benjamin Yeaten communicating with, through you, on the Sierra Leone side?
A. Okay. When I arrived let's say initially communications
10:45:06 were to Sam Bockarie.
Q. And what were the subject of those communications at that time?
A. Requesting for materials, but let me make this part clear: Sam Bockarie was still in Sierra Leone in control, but Issa had 10:45:22 the authority as well, maintaining communication directly with General 50.
Q. What would be the subject of Issa Sesay's - well, let's finish Sam Bockarie. What would be the subject of Sam Bockarie's communication with Yeaten at this time?
10:45:41 A. Information. Information, making requisition for manpower.
Q. Information about what? Who requested information?
A. Benjamin D Yeaten requested from Sam Bockarie manpower, manpower to be sent to his location there in the Voinjama axis.
Q. What would be Bockarie's line of communication - what would 10:46:12 he be communicating with Yeaten about?
A. Making of requisitions.
Q. For what?
A. Ammunition and Yeaten sometimes responded by saying, "Okay, same message will be transmitted to my father and I will get to you later", and he came with the instructions for him to get to Foxtrot Yankee.

Q. Now, during the early part of your stay there in Liberia do you recall any supplies coming through, following communications from Sam Bockarie for supplies?

10:46:44

A. This was occurring. Taking of ammunitions from Foya into - I mean to Sierra Leone was occurring.

Q. When you say it was occurring, can you be more specific? During this period that you were now in Liberia, do you recall?

10:47:11

A. Materials were sent to Sam Bockarie any time he requested for those materials.

Q. What role would you play in the communications --

A. It was to inform --

Q. -- between Bockarie and Yeaten about material?

10:47:31

A. If I could recall, if materials were to be sent to Foya and Bockarie was to come to Foya to collect those materials then the message could be transmitted to come to Foya. If the message was requesting him to move to Monrovia to get the materials, then that was the message.

10:47:47

Q. Now, do you recall what the nature of the communications was between Issa Sesay - you said he also communicated directly with Yeaten. What was the nature of his communications with Yeaten?

A. In 2000, when General Issa Sesay took over, messages were now channelled directly to General Issa Sesay.

10:48:14

Q. What was the subject of some of those messages?

A. Similar messages, just as the messages transmitted when Sam Bockarie was there in power.

Q. When you say similar what do you mean?

Corporal Sankoh's base in Sandiaru and they were handed over to Morris Kallon and taken to Liberia.

Q. Was that how you got to know?

A. Yes, sir.

12:32:57 Q. Now, after this incident which you have just explained, when was the next time that the RUF got involved in any operation in Liberia?

A. That was now in 1999.

Q. All right.

12:33:13 A. That was in 1999.

Q. About what time in 1999?

A. Before I crossed into Liberia.

Q. Yes, we know you crossed into Liberia, you have said, in June/July.

12:33:27 A. I cannot state the exact month, but it was in 1999 before I crossed into Liberia.

Q. What was the - what led to the RUF going into Liberia again at this time?

A. There was an attack on Voinjama and that man - a man

12:33:49 identified himself as a Mosquito Spray and he claimed that Voinjama was under his control and Voinjama being the supply route for the RUF, Sam Bockarie organised men - because I was not on the base when the message came really. He organised men and called on one Colonel Olso to report to Buedu and undertake that 12:34:23 mission. So Olso led the troop that went into Voinjama and captured Voinjama.

Q. Now, first of all you say you were not on the base when the message came; which message?

A. For Sam Bockarie to organise men to move across. Not all the day I was on the radio. Most of this information I received by looking into the message book.

Q. All right, and on this occasion where did this message come from?

12:34:54 A. From 50.

Q. What did the message say?

A. That he was to organise armed men to attack Voinjama.

Q. And you said he appointed a commander called Olso?

A. Olso.

12:35:14 Q. And Olso led his troops into Voinjama?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall how many men, manpower strength, Olso led into Voinjama?

A. The number was big, over one hundred with some artillery

12:35:32 pieces.

Q. How long was this operation for in Voinjama?

A. When they crossed into Voinjama, on that whole operation it spent about a month, because when - they did not just capture Voinjama and return.

12:35:52 Q. After they captured Voinjama, what happened?

A. They were still there maintaining security and the forces were still coming from where they were based in Guinea. That was what it was alleged: That the insurgents were based in Guinea, crossing into Liberia and attacking Voinjama and the environs.

12:36:12 Q. Right. How long then did the troops stay in Voinjama before the operation ended?

A. I can not state any specific time anyway.

Q. Do you recall when they came back from Voinjama?

A. I cannot really recall. They did not spend much time in Voinjama and they retreated. In fact a good number of them retreated without the consent of the commander. They looted goods and they were interested in transporting those looted materials into Sierra Leone.

12:36:55 Q. How did you know this?

A. We used to see them and it was put on the radio that a good number of the men have started pulling out.

Q. Now what sort of goods were looted on this operation by the RUF men?

12:37:07 A. I saw vehicles.

Q. What kind of vehicles?

A. Those were believed to be vehicles belonging to certain NGO.

Q. Now you mentioned earlier - at this point in time what was 12:37:22 the call sign of your radio in Buedu at the point before the operation in Voinjama?

A. I think it was Bravo Zulu 4, something like that, but these call signs used to change from one call sign to the other and one cannot really recall all those call sings because they were 12:37:45 changing with time gradually.

Q. Now what was the name of this operation which the RUF got involved in Voinjama?

A. That was called Operation Vulture. That particular operation was code named Operation Vulture.

12:38:01 Q. Now in your evidence yesterday you did say that vehicles were captured from that operation which had radios in them and were brought and which Sam Bockarie later used as his radio bases. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir. In fact, during the particular time those recruits were brought to Buedu I was not on the ground. I think we went on patrol somewhere. When I came back I met those recruits on the ground.

Q. Now was this the operation that you referred to?

12:38:41 A. As Operation Vulture. The first operation after - that was the second operation after Morris Kallon's operation in 1993. That was another operation carried out by the RUF, or in which the RUF fighters took part in.

Q. Now when you said the second operation after Morris 12:39:06 Kallon's operation in '93, was there one between that '93 operation and this one?

A. No, I am explaining the different occasions RUF fighters took part in fighting in Liberia. The first one was that which was carried out by Morrison Kallon, the second one was that 12:39:26 Operation Vulture.

Q. Okay, thank you. Now after Operation Vulture was there any other operation in which the RUF was involved in? Just before we talk about any other one, did the RUF fight alone in taking Voinjama in this operation?

12:39:51 A. There were Liberian soldiers.

Q. Which Liberian soldiers were they?

A. The AFL.

Q. How do you know this?

A. They were making mention of the other - they said the 12:40:11 brothers, our brothers, they were making too much of their panic, they are not confronting the men.

Q. Who were making mention of - you said they were making mention. Who were they?

A. On this Operation Vulture a radio operator was sent on this mission and that was Tiger, operator Tiger was giving us detailed information about what was happening on the front line.

Q. And when you said they were referring to them as brothers, what do you mean?

12:40:42 A. The allied forces because --

Q. Who was referring to who as the brothers?

A. The RUF fighters were referring to the AFL as their brothers.

Q. And you said something about them being panicked. You said

12:41:04 something about them, that there was too much panic. What the you mean?

A. Too much panic. The AFL were not confronting the insurgents.

Q. And who said this?

12:41:17 A. That was the report sent by the operator.

Q. Thank you. Now after this operation when was the next one that the RUF got involved in in Liberia?

A. There was another operation also involving the RUF a short while after that, because the insurgents came back and took care

12:41:45 of Voinjama. Then other armed men were sent to join Benjamin D Yeaten to take Voinjama. They succeeded in capturing Voinjama and the men took - in fact patrolled around Voinjama and captured civilians. They took those civilians to their personal residence. They were taking them as their wives. Looting

12:42:11 materials in and around Voinjama. Then --

Q. Who were behaving in this way?

A. The RUF fighters who were sent into Liberia to fight and retake Voinjama.

Q. Okay, now before you just continue, now when was this operation? This next operation, when did it take place?

A. That was in the rainy season now.
Q. Of what year?
A. That one was '99.
12:42:42 Q. Where were you at this time?
A. I have crossed into Liberia.
Q. And how did you get to know about this operation?
A. When Voinjama was captured I was taken to the Free Pentecostal Bible Institute.
12:43:04 Q. Say again?
A. Free Pentecostal Bible Institute where 50 was residing. I was with him.
Q. Is it Free --
A. Pentecostal Bible Institute.
12:43:20 MR BANGURA: Okay, your Honours, Pentecostal --
THE WITNESS: You climb the hill from the main road going to towards Zorzor and you roll down and the institute is situated there.
MR BANGURA: Okay. Your Honours, Pentecostal is spelt
12:43:36 P-E-N-T-E-C-O-S-T-A-L. I see it come up in three separate words.
THE WITNESS: Free Pentecostal Bible Institute.
MR BANGURA:
Q. Right. So the question was how did you get to know and you said you were taken to Benjamin Yeaten or where he was staying at 12:43:53 the Free Pentecostal Bible Institute, to do what? Why were you taken there?
A. There the radio was operating, was installed.
Q. And what happened?
A. The men were taking patrol around. They started collecting civilians and bringing them to Voinjama.

Q. No, not about that, but about how you got to know about the operation. You know you talked about being taken to this location where Benjamin Yeaten was?

12:44:22 A. When I crossed into Foya I - when I crossed into Foya I got in touch with Benjamin Yeaten. After that we flew to Gbarnga. He collected - he requested for materials from there to Tenenbu and from there to the target, but twice unsuccessful attacks conducted to retake Voinjama, okay? And thereafter he made 12:44:47 requisition for armed men and they had a good number of armed men crossing from Sierra Leone into Liberia.

Q. Okay, now just pause. You say he made requisition for armed men. To who did he make the requisition?

A. It was to General Issa. The message was to be sent to 12:45:10 General Issa.

Q. Now who passed this message on to General Issa?

A. The message was transmitted to his radio. In fact at that time Bockarie had - he had left Buedu into Liberia I think on some other mission and then he remained there, the incident took 12:45:29 place, okay? Then who was on the ground was General Issa. So the message came to him directly since he was on the ground.

Q. Now who communicated the message to General Issa?

A. Benjamin D Yeaten drafted that message and it was transmitted. General Issa received that message and organised 12:45:47 armed men. They were sent to Liberia.

Q. Now when you say it was transmitted, who transmitted the message?

A. I transmitted the message.

Q. Right. And the message requested General Issa to provide men for this situation in Liberia, in Voinjama. Is that correct?

A. Yes.
Q. And who did General Issa send on this occasion?
A. One Colonel Sherrif. One Colonel Sherrif.
12:46:19 Q. And was he the commander?
A. Colonel Sherrif was the commander.
Q. And do you recall how many troops, how many men, he had in his - he led?
A. Over 150.
12:46:35 Q. And what was the outcome of this operation?
A. Voinjama was captured.
Q. By?
A. By Colonel Sherrif. Voinjama was captured by the RUF fighters led by colonel Sherrif.
12:46:48 Q. Was Colonel Sherrif - were the RUF fighting alone, or were they fighting along with other forces?
A. Along with other forces.
Q. Which forces were they fighting along with?
A. The AFL, the Armed Forces of Liberia.
12:47:01 Q. And who was commanding all of that force, the combined forces that fought to get - to take back Voinjama?
A. Colonel Sherrif was the mission commander.
Q. Now how do you know this? Personally how did you know all of this?
12:47:30 A. When the men report - when they crossed into Liberia they reported to the commander and I was with the commander.
Q. So who did they report to when you said the commander?
A. Benjamin D Yeaten.
Q. So Colonel Sherrif was answerable to Benjamin Yeaten on this operation?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Okay. And how long did the operation last?
A. Not too long. Not too long. And when they captured
12:47:57 Voinjama they started taking patrol, collecting civilians, taking them and looting materials and taking them to private bases. Then Benjamin D Yeaten grew annoyed and told them, "Oh, no, here you are, you are not rebels, but you are purely fighting in the interest of the government and so this is not expected of you.
12:48:20 This is not Sierra Leone wherein you behave like rebels." So they were asked to pull out of Voinjama and they came back to Foya.
Q. When he said you were fighting in the interests of the government, what government was he referring to?
12:48:32 A. The Liberian government. He said, "Here you are representing - you are fighting in the interests of the government so there is no need to behave like a rebel, looting is not expected of you at all" and he asked that they pull out and they pulled out from Voinjama.
12:48:48 Q. Did all of them pull out of Voinjama?
A. A good number of them pulled out from Voinjama.
Q. And did anything happen? You were in Voinjama, you were on the Liberian side at this time. Is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
12:49:02 Q. Did anything happen after they withdrew?
A. We did not spend much time and they were - the target Voinjama fell again into the hands of the insurgents.
Q. At this time did you know who the insurgents were?
A. There was no pronouncement made of - or about who was fighting.

Q. Now after this incident was there any other situation in which the RUF got involved in fighting in Liberia?

A. Yes, sir.

12:49:37 Q. Which one was that?

A. After the insurgents took back Voinjama another attack was organised, but that was now within the Armed Forces of Liberia and Voinjama was captured. It spent so long and in 2000, the year 2000, some time in 2000, Voinjama again fell into the hands 12:50:05 of the insurgents and this time Superman was called upon to come and take care of that situation.

Q. When you say Superman was called upon, who called upon Superman to come and take care of the situation?

A. The negotiation was between Benjamin D Yeaten and General

12:50:25 Issa Sesay.

Q. How do you know this?

A. A message was transmitted to the effect requesting manpower.

Q. Who transmitted the message?

12:50:37 A. I transmitted the message.

Q. And the message was directed - the message was from who?

A. From Benjamin D Yeaten.

Q. And directed to who?

A. To General Issa Sesay.

12:50:49 Q. And what was it requesting Issa Sesay to do?

A. To send a strong commander to come and have Voinjama situation under control.

Q. Was any particular commander requested?

A. Yes, Superman. After the information about sending manpower then General Issa responded that Superman was going to be dispatched to meet 50 for that operation.

Q. And was Superman dispatched?

A. Yes, sir.

12:51:20 Q. And where did Superman - where did he go to when he got to Liberia?

A. To Foya.

Q. Who did he report to?

A. To 50, right at one Pa Taylor. Pa Taylor is said to be a 12:51:36 chief. He was once a chief in Foya and so he reported to 50's house there in Foya.

Q. Were you there when Superman reported to 50?

A. Yes, sir. In fact, we went to receive Superman at a certain point and we all crossed into Liberia.

12:51:55 Q. When you say you "went to receive Superman at a certain point", at a certain point where?

A. To the border, to the border.

Q. The border between?

A. Between Liberia and Sierra Leone. When the message was 12:52:07 transmitted that he was on the way coming from Makeni to cross into Liberia, we moved to a certain point and he met us there and together we all entered now into Liberia, or Foya.

Q. When you say "we", who were you referring to?

A. I was not the only person in Liberia. There were some 12:52:31 other Sierra Leoneans who were in Liberia and those were RUF fighters. So when we got the news that Superman was on the way coming, everybody was happy. So together with 50 he sent some armed men and we got on board the vehicle. We came to a certain point, we I received Superman and we all travelled to Foya.

Q. Did Superman travel alone?
A. He came with a good number of RUF fighters and with some artillery pieces. I am talking about a 50 calibre.
Q. Now, these --
12:53:10 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Bangura, sorry to interrupt, at the top of page 96 there is something the witness said that didn't make sense to me when he was saying it and certainly doesn't make sense on the paper. Look at line 2, "To 50, right at one Pa Taylor. Pa Taylor is said to be a chief. He was once a chief in 12:53:32 Foya", et cetera, et cetera. What is that?
THE WITNESS: When Superman --
MR BANGURA: Okay:
Q. Now, you said Superman reported to Yeaten at a particular place in Foya?
12:53:49 A. Yes, sir.
Q. Whose place was this?
A. Pa Taylor's house in Foya.
Q. Who was Pa Taylor?
A. Pa Taylor was once a chief of Foya, so his house was 12:54:04 somehow special and Superman, together with his men, were sent that particular house that was provided as their lodging.
Q. Thank you. What happened after Superman had -- JUDGE SEBUTINDE: So, in other words, 50 was residing at Pa Taylor's house at the time that Superman reported?
12:54:30 MR BANGURA: I am not sure whether that is the evidence. I will get the witness to clarify, your Honour:
THE WITNESS: That is exactly what I am saying.
MR BANGURA:
Q. 50, say again please?

A. 50 was staying in Pa Taylor's house and when Superman arrived in Foya he reported to 50 and 50 was staying at Pa Taylor's house.
Q. Okay, so where was Superman provided accommodation for?
12:54:56 A. That same Pa Taylor's house.
Q. Thank you.
A. And in fact we did not spend much time in Foya and we proceeded to Kolahun.
Q. Now, you said Pa Taylor was one time chief of Foya, is that 12:55:11 right?
A. Yes, sir. I was trying really to state the particular point Superman reported to - or where he met 50.
Q. Okay. Now, what happened after Superman reported to 50?
A. Everybody was commanded. I mean Superman's bodyguard, the 12:55:44 men he travelled with, including myself, were all commanded to move to Kolahun.
Q. And then? What happened at Kolahun?
A. In Kolahun I think about 72 hours we set in for the target, that was Voinjama.
12:56:04 Q. Right. Then what happened there?
A. Fighting started in a town called Vesala. Vesala, to LPMC, to Voinjama and Voinjama was captured.
Q. Were the RUF forces under Superman fighting alone, or were they fighting along with any other forces?
12:56:26 A. Superman was the overall boss for the RUF fighting in Voinjama, Liberia, at that time.
Q. The question is: Did the RUF fight alone in this operation, or did they fight with another force?
A. They fought alongside another force.

Q. Which force was that?
A. The AFL and at this time we heard of the AFL, the ATU and the SOD and of course there were some other armed forces referred to as the SSS, but another group - the SSS fell under a group 12:57:05 called Jungle Fire.
Q. Now, you have given us all these acronyms. Can you say what they stand for. AFL?
A. Armed Forces of Liberia.
Q. What about ATU?
12:57:20 A. Anti-Terrorist Unit.
Q. What about SSS?
A. I think that is Special Security Service. I am really not sure of that, but that was what I heard, SSS.
Q. What about SOD?
12:57:37 A. Special Operational Division.
Q. Now, you worked with 50, Yeaten. Which one of these units did he belong to?
A. 50? 50 was operating under the SSS.
Q. What was his position there?
12:58:01 A. He was the director for that unit.
Q. Right. You mentioned Jungle Fire. What group was this?
A. Jungle Fire was under the same SSS, Jungle fire. According to what I learnt from 50 was that during the NPFL days, during the time of the rebel fighting in Liberia, there was a particular 12:58:28 group called Jungle Fire and when their party was legitimately put into power they formed those armed groups, the SSS, which comprises mostly the former fighters of Jungle Fire.
Q. Thank you. Now, we are still talking about this operation in which Superman was involved. What was the outcome of the operation?

A. Voinjama was captured.
Q. What happened after that?
A. Superman retreated to Sierra Leone, but during that 12:59:12 fighting 50 assigned me to Super in that particular operation. I was communicating all messages for Superman. All messages from Superman to General Issa were transmitted by me. He gave me the message, it was drafted, it was codified and transmitted to General Issa in Kono, Sierra Leone.
12:59:41 Q. At this time what was the substance of communication between Superman in Liberia and General Issa in Sierra Leone?
A. About the situation on the front line, how fighting went on, how many men were wounded. Of course those who were wounded were taken to Monrovia by the helicopter. After a short time 13:00:10 Superman returned to Sierra Leone, to Makeni, and Voinjama again fell in the hands of the insurgents, so everybody retreated to Kolahun. So in Kolahun we were there for some time.
Q. Now, let us be clear again about the time frame. The operation which you have just described, in which Superman was 13:00:35 involved, took place in what year?
A. That was in the year 2000.
Q. Okay. Do you remember the month?
A. It was in the rainy season, some time 2000. The year 2000.
Q. Okay.
13:00:52 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: This is the rainy season of where?
THE WITNESS: The year 2000.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: The rainy season of which country?
MR BANGURA: I will get the witness to say.
THE WITNESS: Liberia and Sierra Leone.

MR BANGURA:

Q. When you said the rainy season of Liberia and Sierra Leone, let us stick to --

A. It was raining in Sierra Leone and Liberia as well.

13:01:15 Q. Can you try and put a month to what would be the rainy season in Sierra Leone? Was it in the early part of the rainy season, or the mid-rainy season, or the latter part?

A. Mid, because it was still raining. It was raining seriously at that time.

13:01:39 Q. Right. Now, you said that the injured were taken to hospital where?

A. To Liberia - Monrovia. They were taken to Monrovia by helicopter and then Superman returned to Sierra Leone and when he returned to Sierra Leone he was involved in an accident and he 13:01:59 was brought back to Liberia.

Q. Now, when you say Superman returned to Sierra Leone, did he return with his troops to Sierra Leone?

A. With his bodyguard. He returned with some of his bodyguards, leaving some of the troops with Benjamin D Yeaten in 13:02:15 Kolahun, but whilst based in Kolahun they were still moving, attacking Voinjama. I was based at that time in Kolahun with the radio.

Q. Okay. During this operation how - you said Superman came with his men from Sierra Leone. Were they armed when they came 13:02:39 in from Sierra Leone?

A. They crossed into Liberia with arms.

Q. Okay, thank you. Now, you said Superman went back to Sierra Leone and was involved in an accident?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of accident?
A. I was contacted by his radio in Makeni that he fell on bike, on top of a bike.
Q. He fell off from a bike?
13:03:11 A. Yes, sir.
Q. And what happened?
A. He had serious bruises on his face and almost all over his body and so he was brought back to Liberia and flown to Monrovia. Whilst fighting in Lofa, we were based at that time in Kolahun.
13:03:32 This time around the forces made several attempts to capture Voinjama, more than ten times Voinjama remained uncaptured. It was still under the control of the insurgents.
Q. Now, let us be clear. We have a situation where Voinjama has just been taken by the combined forces in which Superman was 13:04:03 fighting. Is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And then Superman goes back to Sierra Leone?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And some of the forces stay with Yeaten in Liberia, is that 13:04:17 correct?
A. Yes.
Q. The RUF.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And then what happened?
13:04:20 A. Voinjama was again captured by the insurgents, but at that time Superman had already crossed back into Sierra Leone.
Q. What happened after that?
A. I was still in Liberia with 50 in Kolahun and the RUF fighters, together with the other forces in Liberia, were still attacking led by General Yeaten, but in Kolahun we used to move to Gbarnga and back, Monrovia and back to Kolahun, okay? Then another request was made by Benjamin Yeaten to General Issa Sesay calling for reinforcement, reinforcement of fighters. There was 13:05:14 one officer, who was sent by General Issa, called Harris. Harris came and took part in - I think about so many attacks in Voinjama that were unsuccessful. Harris was called back to Sierra Leone and one Colonel Eagle came just after the return of Harris. Colonel Eagle, together with the RUF fighters he came with and 13:05:47 those he met on the ground with General Issa and together with other armed forces, captured Voinjama.

Q. Now, when you said those he met on the ground with General Issa --

A. Yes, sir, not General Issa. General Yeaten.

13:06:04 Q. Thank you. They together captured Voinjama again?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when was this latter request made for reinforcement by Yeaten, when you said he made the request and for reinforcement and Harris was first sent and then later Eagle?

13:06:28 A. When Voinjama was captured by Superman, he returned. We were now in Kolahun with General Benjamin D Yeaten and Voinjama fell in the hands of the insurgents, okay? Those men who were left with General 50 by Superman were still with 50 attacking.

Q. Yes.

13:06:54 A. And another request was made by 50 to General Issa Sesay requesting for manpower reinforcement and they came.

Q. When was this request made for reinforcement?

A. That was in the year 2000.

Q. Was it a long time after Voinjama had been retaken by

Q. So the forces then moved to Foya. The forces then moved on to Foya. What happened there?
A. We were in Foya for about one to two months, about that. Then Foya came under attack because at that time the LURD forces 14:42:33 had already captured Kolahun and advanced to a junction referred to as Kamatahun junction and that was leading to Vahun and the other road was leading to Foya where we were.
Q. What's the name of the junction again? Can you spell that name, please?
14:42:51 A. K-A-M-A-T-A-H-U-N, Kamatahun.
Q. You say Foya came under attack from the LURD forces?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What happened?
A. During the confrontation to repel the attack Superman got 14:43:11 wounded and he ordered that we should all retreat to Sierra Leone. We had two vehicles there in Foya, one a truck and a one a military jeep and we used that jeep to retreat to Sierra Leone through Koindu and the other day we arrived at Buedu.
Q. Now you in Foya were a mixed group of RUF and other 14:43:36 Liberian forces. Is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When Superman ordered that you should retreat into Sierra Leone was this order for the RUF only?
A. We were not able to withstand the tension. The force that 14:43:55 attacked us in Foya was heavy. The fighters exchanged fire with them and still it was serious, so he got wounded in that confrontation and everybody became concerned. They ordered everybody to retreat to Sierra Leone.
Q. When you say everybody did that include -- discussing with General Dopoe - and this is what he stated.

Q. And did anything happen after this?
A. After some days I was authorised to join with Amphibian Father to travel. I travelled together with Amphibian Father and 15:03:30 one Next to God. There was another commander who was supposed to join Amphibian Father to travel up to Buedu, his name was Second God - either Next to God or Second God. They used to call him Next to God, sometimes Second God.
Q. Did he have another name?
15:03:49 A. I only knew him by that name Next to God or Second God.
Q. Which nationality was he?
A. He was a Liberian fighter.
Q. You said he was a commander?
A. He was a commander for a particular group that came to 15:04:02 travel up to Foya.
Q. You said you were ordered to travel with Amphibian Father to - where were you supposed to go to?
A. To Buedu. I was to work with him. He had some ammunitions on board the vehicle.
15:04:19 Q. Where was Amphibian Father at this time?
A. He was in Vahun. He had come also to Vahun. At that time the UN patrol team that was - was it UNAMSIL? The UN patrol team had started patrolling in the Kailahun District.
Q. Right. But when you said the UN patrol team, which UN
15:04:45 patrol team was this?
A. I think it was UNAMSIL, but the contingent that were visiting Buedu were the Ghanaians and sometimes the Nigerians, but first it was the Ghanaians.
Q. And this patrol team was based where?

A. They came from Daru, that was what they told us.
Q. They were based in Sierra Leone?
A. They were based in Sierra Leone. They had started patrolling. So whenever there was a convoy from Liberia through 15:05:17 Vahun to Bomaru, Baiwala to Pendembu a Sierra Leonean had to be among that group to lead them.
Q. Why was it necessary to have a Sierra Leonean among the group?
A. For security reasons, because travelling with ammunitions
15:05:32 on board the vehicle. Sometimes we waited until in the evening before we started moving.
Q. Now when this patrol was moving around that area what would happen if they came across the members of the RUF?
A. That was the security measures taken.
15:05:54 Q. The question is what would happen if they met with members of the RUF?
A. Really at that time it was not expected of the RUF to be moving with that kind of ammunition because they were approaching the point of disarmament. The negotiation was going on and of 15:06:16 course at some part of - some part of the RUF head territory in Sierra Leone had started undergoing disarmament.
Q. Just before I get onto that, what about the Liberian forces who were on the Sierra Leonean side? What if they came across the UN patrol, what would happen?
15:06:45 A. No, they did everything in their ability to avoid that for security reasons.
Q. Now you said some part of Sierra Leone at this time was already - there was already disarmament going on. Do you recall where?

this interview, yes?
A. This is what --
Q. Yes or no?
A. This is what I am seeing stated.
15:58:50 Q. Mr Witness, did you or did you not tell the Prosecution that on 11 September 2001 you were in Liberia, yes or no?
A. That was in Vahun. That was in Vahun and it was --
Q. Mr Witness, are you saying on 11 September 2001 you were in Vahun? Is that your evidence?
15:59:21 A. Yes, but let me make that point clear.
Q. Okay, go ahead.
A. I have said that after the retreat from Foya, Liberia, back to Buedu I was still moving into Liberia and back. I was still moving into Liberia and back. So many times General Barbue was 15:59:44 instructed by General Issa Sesay to join forces with Amphibian Father and the other commanders to attack Liberia. I went with the radio, the operation - I mean the mobile radio. But that doesn't mean I was just throughout in one particular location. I have stated this one. Even the question of asking - I mean the 16:00:05 question of saying "how long were you there?", and "where were you when this incident occurred?", I was a mobile radio operator. Today I am in Liberia, the other day I'm back to Sierra Leone.

A. He was also one of the commanders of the RUF, but died some time in the year 2001.
Q. Who is Sherrif Parker?
A. Where is the name?
10:42:08 Q. I'm just putting the name to you, Sherrif Parker. Who is that?
A. He was also one of the commanders.
Q. Where did he command?
A. In Kono and in some other areas.
10:42:25 Q. Did you hear about Sherrif Parker on the RUF radio?
A. Yes.
Q. Under what circumstances did you hear about him?
A. At one time he was a wounded soldier - he got wounded - and that he crossed into Liberia on a mission and got wounded, 10:42:44 Colonel Sherrif, and he was taken to Monrovia. He was there for some time.
Q. I'm speaking of Sherrif Parker. You've said now Colonel Sherrif. We're focusing on Sherrif Parker, the one in Kono, right? Was he the one that was wounded and taken to Monrovia?
10:43:02 A. He lived in Kono first before crossing. These commanders I'm talking about were not permanent in one area. One would be assigned on this target today and let's say in a couple of hours he would be posted to some other target. They were not fixed in one area.
10:43:23 Q. Did you ever intercept any calls or monitor any calls pertaining to Sherrif Parker?
A. Intercept call from where?
Q. Well, not intercept. While you were a radio operator for the RUF, were there any calls you listened to, either monitored, transmitted or received, that pertained to Sherrif Parker?

A. Yes, in Liberia. Yes.
Q. Under what circumstances did you hear any messages pertaining to Sherrif Parker?
10:43:57 A. He got wounded in Voinjama attack and I was informed to have the headquarter informed that that was the situation; that Colonel Sherrif had got wounded.
Q. How was he wounded? What sort of injury did he sustain?
A. He was shot in his leg and the leg was broken. He had to 10:44:22 be flown into Monrovia. And again at certain point in time in Voinjama - I mean, in Vahun I met him in a dungeon.
Q. You met him in a dungeon?
A. Yes.
Q. In Vahun?
10:44:37 A. In Vahun.
Q. What was he doing in a dungeon?
A. After the death of Superman, I met Colonel Sherrif and one other boy called Bomb Blast.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, the question to you was,
10:45:01 "What was he doing in a dungeon?"
THE WITNESS: He was placed there under punishment.
MR ANYAH:
Q. For doing what?
A. That was the accusation 50 levied against him. He was in 10:45:15 the dungeon for disciplinary measures.
Q. Mr Witness, you are just making all of this up, are you not?
A. I am not making up. These are things I saw.
Q. Sherrif Parker was not injured in Kono and transported to Monrovia. That's a lie, right?

A. He was not injured in Kono, but in Voinjama, Liberia. He was injured in Voinjama, Liberia, and flown into Monrovia. He remained in Monrovia for some months.

10:45:46 MR ANYAH: Madam Court Officer, can you assist me, please. Your Honours, I apologise, I again do not have copies, but I will have the Court Officer show counsel opposite and then the Bench the document I'm about to put to the witness.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I just want to be clear. You're 10:46:12 referring to Sherrif Parker and the witness is referring to Colonel Sherrif. I just want to make sure we're talking about the same person.

MR ANYAH: Madam Court Officer, could you hold on, please, one second:

10:46:21 Q. Mr Witness, I have been asking you about Sherrif Parker. This is the person you have told us you know, correct?

A. Yes, Colonel Sherrif.

Q. Is he also Sherrif Parker? His name is Sherrif Parker, right?

10:46:35 A. Yes.

MR ANYAH: Can you show counsel that, please:

Q. Mr Witness, the document you are going to be handed - and I will ask that the Court Officer put it on the overhead. Mr Witness, if you don't mind moving to the overhead projector
10:49:40 and Madam Court Officer will assist you. Mr Witness, the first page says, "Witness to Truth, Report of the Sierra Leone Truth and Reconciliation Commission, Volume 2". If you flip over to the next page again you have the title or the caption of the report, then over to the next page some other copyright information about the report and then over to the next page. This is page 49 of Volume 2 of the Sierra Leone Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes.

10:50:48 Q. At the top it says, "Senior RUF Battalion Commanders and Influential Ground Commanders". Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes.

Q. You start with the first name of Denis Mingo, alias Superman. Do you see that?

10:51:00 A. Yes.

Q. Peter Borbor Vandi?

A. Yes.

Q. Morris Kallon?

A. Yes.

10:51:11 Q. Komba Gbundema. We just spoke about him, true?

A. Yes.

Q. Boston Flomoh, alias Rambo?

A. Yes.

Q. Momoh Rogers, yes?

10:51:22 A. Yes.

Q. Isaac Mongor, true?

A. Yes.

Q. Abubakarr Jalloh, alias Bai Bureh, yes?

A. Yes.

10:51:35 Q. Monica Pearson, true?

A. Yes.

Q. Sherrif Parker, alias Base Marine. Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes.

Q. Sherrif Parker, the same Sherrif Parker we've been talking about, right?
A. No.
Q. Mr Witness, is it the same Sherrif Parker we've been talking about?
A. No, Base Marine I spoke about first.
Q. Yes.
A. We had other Colonel Sherrif, Sherrif Parker.
Q. Mr Witness --
A. Sherrif was in Liberia. He went on a Liberian mission and got wounded. He was in Congo Town for some months before he was flown back to Vahun and he got wounded on Voinjama operation. When he recovered he was again sent to Vahun. In Vahun he was put in dungeon.
Q. You have said that.
A. That's different from Base Marine.
Q. Mr Witness, you have --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, answer the question.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

PRESIDING JUDGE: The question is was this the same Sherrif Parker we've been referring to; the one named in that list?

THE WITNESS: No, no. This Colonel Sherrif who got wounded in Liberia is different from Base Marine, whose name I am saying is Sherrif Parker.

MR ANYAH:

Q. Mr Witness, I have the question I asked you. It's on page 42, starting at line 16. The question was, "Was Base Marine his only name?", the answer, "That was the name I knew him by, Base Marine. He was a bright boy"?

Town?

A. Well, it was Mosquito who called and that was after we had returned and through monitoring we came to understand that the jet 448, because that was how they used to call it, it was moving to come and bombard Koidu Town as ECOMOG were en route to enter there.

Q. Could you explain your answer, please. You said it was Mosquito who called and that was after we had returned. After you had returned from where?

A. We left Koidu Geiya to go to Koidu Town.

Q. What do you mean by, "Through monitoring we came to understand that the jet 448", what does that mean?

A. Well, on the radio set we had a continuous monitoring of all activities, but on our arrival in Koidu Town Superman later called Bomb Blast, that is Hassan Papa Bangura, and he went to meet him at Dabundeh Street. He said that he had got a call from Mosquito that ECOMOG were on their way, that they were advancing towards Sewafe.

Q. Did he explain how Mosquito knew that, that ECOMOG were on their way?

A. Yes, he said he got information from Liberia that he had monitored from Liberia that the ECOMOG forces were moving now, that the 448 was moving, because we later understood that it was from Liberia that the ECOMOG Alpha Jet was moving from. He said that they were moving to come and bombard Koidu Town. So he said we should prepare to go and destroy the Sewafe bridge.

Q. Witness, do you know who in Liberia Mosquito got this information from, or how he got this information?

A. Well, all what he said, he said he got it from President Taylor. He said he got information from President Taylor that the ECOMOG forces were moving and that they were advancing to capture Koidu Town.

Q. What is 448?

11:20:17 A. That was the Alpha Jet, because that was the code that we used on the radio set when communication was going on. They will say that the 448 had left, so all the areas that monitored, that was what they will understand.

Q. Who would say the 448 has left?

11:20:35 A. That was what Mosquito said, that he had got information from President Taylor that the 448 had left and it was coming to attack positions in Koidu Town.

Q. Was it only on this occasion that you heard communication relating to 448 and the way you described it?

11:21:03 A. Well, actually when we went to Koidu Town we never used to have jet raids, but it was at the time that it started and it was through monitoring and at any time we monitored he would pass the word that the 448 had left.

Q. Who would pass the word that 448 had left?

11:21:30 A. Well, it was through monitoring and whenever Superman got it he would send it to SAJ Musa in Koinadugu and he also will send it to the other bases about the 448 and each and everybody will disguise. Everybody will leave the town and go to the bush.

Q. And this information relating to 448, did it only come from 11:21:57 Liberia?

A. Well, that was the only source through which we got information about the ECOMOG movement. That is, the movement of the 448, the movement of the jet.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I am not entirely clear on that answer.

was taking the lead?
A. D company took the lead and Tito too was leading, so the brigade stopped by and it was at the rear, but they took some men from B and C company to take the lead because we had information 11:33:57 that there was a military strategic point there.
Q. What was your role in this advance into Karina?
A. Well, I joined the advanced team. I was together with Bazzy to advance on Karina.
Q. Did the troops advance into Karina?
11:34:23 A. Yes, my Lord. The troops advanced to Karina, but to our surprise we did not meet any military check point nor military presence, but indeed we attacked. Myself together with the troops, we entered and attacked Karina.
Q. Witness, what was the first thing that happened when your 11:34:49 troops entered Karina?
A. Well, the first thing that happened was that I was with Bazzy when we entered a house where we met six to seven young girls and young women, so they were crying and when we entered the house they were crying. Bazzy said we should execute them, 11:35:20 but the girls said that we shouldn't execute them. They said they are ready for us to take them along, but Bazzy said no. He said we should close all the doors and set the building on fire, so we set the building on fire. They were screaming in there and they were there until they died in there. So myself, Bazzy and 11:35:38 the CSO, we moved forward.
Q. Witness, do you know why is it that these girls were not captured and they were executed instead?
A. Well, we had had orders from above that we should demonstrate in Karina and in that demonstration we should kill,

A. Well, they are had the Gbethis. They were within that area. They and the Kamajors, they were within that area.

MS ALAGENDRA: Your Honours, Gbethis is spelt G-B-E-T-H-I-S:

12:20:21 Q. Witness, who are the Gbethis?

A. Well, this was an auxiliary force that the SLPP government also formed to fight against us, those of us who were in the jungle, to fight against the RUF and the SLA who were in the jungle.

12:20:40 Q. What happened during this attack?

A. During this attack we repelled the Kamajors and the Gbethis and we captured two of them and we brought them to Gullit and Gullit ordered their execution and we executed them. We decapitated them and then we placed - we displayed their heads on 12:21:20 sticks in Mandaha. Also the troops were now - the troops divided. Some of our men ran away and it was during that time that we lost Money Milk, Guitar Boy and the radio communicator and a few of them ran away. And whilst we had repelled the attack we tried to trace these people, but we did not see them.

12:22:02 Q. Witness, when you say, "We decapitated them", who is we?

A. Well, like I said, the troop which was a mixed troop, the SLA and the RUF who were in Mandaha, after we had repelled the Gbethis and the Kamajors and we captured two of them and it was an order from Gullit asking for us to execute them. Then we 12:22:32 executed them and displayed their heads.

Q. Did you participate in this execution?

A. No, I did not participate, but I was present when it happened because it happened in the presence of the whole brigade.

MS ALAGENDRA: Exactly. That's what I heard, but I just wanted the record to be clear that he did not mention the name Keita.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Is there a name?

12:25:28 MS ALAGENDRA: Yes, it is spelt on the record as K-E-I-T-A.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: I don't see it. What page, what line are you referring to?

MS ALAGENDRA: It is 66. Maybe it is a different font. Page 66, your Honour.

12:25:43 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Yes, yes. Radio communication man. Guitar Boy and the radio communication man.

MS ALAGENDRA: I just wanted that to be clear, that there was no name given.

PRESIDING JUDGE: It is page 65, line 22 on my record and I

12:26:03 am sure Madam Court Attendant will note it and will be picked up later. Thank you. Please proceed, Ms Alagendra:

MS ALAGENDRA:

Q. Witness, where did your troop move after this?

A. Well, our troops left towards Gbendembu.

12:26:29 MS ALAGENDRA: Your Honours, that is spelt G-B-E-N-D-E-M-B-U:

Q. Where is this, witness, Gbendembu?

A. Gbendembu is within the Bombali District.

Q. Did anything happen on the way to Gbendembu?

12:26:52 A. As far as I can recall, Gullit captured some civilians, I think about three of them, so Gullit called one of our men who was called Lansana Conteh but I have forgotten his aka and he said he should amputate about three of them and then he wrote a note.

A. That too is within that Bombali District, around the Sanda area.
Q. Did you go anywhere after Matiti?
A. Yes, from Matiti we went towards Mateboi.
12:39:08 MS ALAGENDRA: That is spelt M-A-T-E-B-O-I, your Honours:
Q. Witness, where is Mateboi, in which district?
A. That too is within the Bombali District, around the Sanda area.
Q. Did anything happen on your way to Mateboi?
12:39:30 A. The only thing that happened, a password went as we were approaching, which was "check back", "back clear", when they say there was enemy threat at the rear, so the troop stopped. So Gullit called the operation commander, that was Hassan Papa Bangura, and called Junior Sherrif too, who was the deputy 12:40:04 operations. He said as we had had the information they should organise a troop that should go back and see as far as towards Matiti and Matinka area, to see if there was anybody following us and I too was appointed, Junior Sherrif and others. We went as far as Matiti, but we got to a village towards Matiti. We heard
12:40:43 some noise. We attacked, but we could not see any civilian, or anybody else. The people ran away and Gullit had ordered us while we were coming that if we saw any threat we should burn down the villages, so when we got to that place, when the people ran away, Junior Sherrif ordered that we should burn, so we 12:41:07 started burning from Matiti right up to towards Mateboi.
Q. Witness, I will take you back a little bit. Now, you have spoken about a password. Can you explain where this password came from?
A. This was a password that when we were advancing it was in a distance, this was in Mansofinia, that was the password we were using: "Check back", "back clear". That is if you were not in the troop and we identified you, like for now if I said "check back" and you could not respond the "back clear", that means you 12:41:56 are an enemy force and you should be killed, but with this response, "check back", "back clear", then I will know that you are a member of our group. That was how the password was used.

Q. Now, you said that you, Junior Sherrif, went back and you burnt some areas. You said from - was it Matinka up to Mateboi?
12:42:38 A. I said from Matiti, Matiti. We were to go as far as Matinka, but a village close to Matiti we heard some sound, the village.
Q. Do you know the name of this village?
A. No, my Lord, I don't know the name of the village.
12:43:05 Q. And what did you say happened in this village?
A. Well, actually we made a counter attack, but the people ran away. We did not even shoot. They ran away. So we burnt down that village and we retreated to Mateboi.
Q. You have said that you started burning from Matiti right up 12:43:34 towards Mateboi.
A. Yes, my Lord.
Q. So can you be a bit more clear on that. What villages were burnt?
A. Like Matiti we burned it down. The village that was close 12:43:55 to it too we burnt that down. We burnt about three villages towards Mateboi, Matiti and two other villages.
Q. And what did you burn in these villages?
A. Since we had suspected some movement and there was threat, we burnt the houses. We burned the houses in the villages.

will know that indeed you have done it.

So he said the Ibrahim Bazzy Kamara who was second in command should lead the troops and Five-Five also went. You had Hassan Papa Bangura too. He was also part of that operation. Junior Lion and the others who were chosen, they all went on that operation, Captain Arthur. They all went.

13:19:35

Q. Did you go on this operation?

A. Yes, my Lord, I was part of the operation.

Q. What happened in Gbomsamba?

13:20:05

A. Well, we left Camp Rosos and we headed to Camp Rosos and we attacked Gbomsamba.

Q. I'm just going to stop you.

A. When we attacked --

Q. Your answer seems to have come out, "We left Camp Rosos and we headed to Camp Rosos and we attacked Gbomsamba." Can you just repeat that again, please?

13:20:21

A. I said we left. It was a mistake on my part. I said we left Camp Rosos and moved towards Gbomsamba.

Q. Did the group you were with arrive in Gbomsamba?

13:20:50

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Did the operation as ordered by Gullit take place?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Do you recall what happened during that operation?

A. Well, during the operation we encountered some resistance from the ECOMOG force wherein the civilians in Gbomsamba ran away and indeed we pushed the ECOMOG forces and we captured the ground. We burnt down some houses in Gbomsamba and we got few ammunition from the ECOMOG forces and indeed we captured about five Nigerian soldiers and we executed them, after which we retreated from Gbomsamba.

Q. Who executed these Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers?

A. Well, this was an order from Bazzy and he said they should execute them.

13:22:06 Q. Bazzy passed the order. Who executed them?

A. Well, it was - it was an SLA from amongst the two troops that went. I cannot recall the name actually, but he was a man from amongst the SLA that he asked to shoot them.

Q. Witness, in your testimony on Friday you spoke about the 13:22:39 distribution of ammunition that was received from Kailahun after the Koidu Geiya operation. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. You also testified that at the time your group pulled out from Masingbi Road and moved to Tombodu, that ammunition which 13:23:04 was distributed was still with the group. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. By this time can you tell the Court anything about that particular set of ammunition that was distributed?

A. Well, this ammunition were the ones that we were using, 13:23:33 because since we left Freetown we did not actually have ammunition with us. So it was this ammunition that we got later that reached us in Kono that we were using. As were coming on the way this was the ammunition we were using to attack.

Q. And when you say "as we were coming on the way", coming on 13:23:54 the way to where?

A. Well, the various areas that I had named before from Mansofinia to Kamagbengbe, Karina, Mandaha, Gbendembu, we came up to Rosos and as we went along with the operation it was that ammunition that we had. We never had any other supply. The one that we brought from Kono was what we were using.

Q. Witness, what happened after the operation in Gbomsamba?
A. Well, we retreated to Rosos and we were warmly received by Gullit and he was very much happy because we brought some 13:24:49 logistics like rice, tomato, salt, pepper. All of the things that we were short of in the camp, we were able to get them and we brought them.
Q. Did anything happen after the group arrived in Camp Rosos and after you were received by Gullit?
13:25:17 A. Well, the only thing is that Gullit received the troops and then we explained to him exactly how we demonstrated according to his order what we did in Gbomsamba.
Q. What, if anything, happened after this?
A. Well, the only thing that happened was that later Arthur 13:25:45 came after the operation. He came from Mateboi and he said he went on patrol and he discovered a mic that we would use on our sets.
Q. Witness, let me take you back a little bit. When I was talking about the ammunition just a minute ago your answer - the 13:26:14 last answer in relation to this issue you gave was, "The one that we brought from Kono was what we were using"?
A. Yes, my Lord.
Q. Can you remind us again what was the ammunition you brought from Kono?
13:26:32 A. Well, this was the supply that we received when Mosquito called us to go and clear Koidu Geiya. And then this ammunitions came from Kailahun, according to Mosquito he said they came from Liberia, and those were the ammunition that were distributed to us when we came back to Koidu Town to push the ECOMOG forces in Kono.

Q. Now you were talking about a boy who said he came - he went on patrol and discovered a mic. Who is this boy you are talking about?

13:27:19 A. No, I was talking about Captain Arthur. At that time that we were at the headquarters in Rosos when he came and met the operations commander and said he has the mic, because at that time we were just monitoring now, because the man who was on the radio had actually ran away since Mandaha, so the mic that we 13:27:48 were now using to monitor was not working, so Arthur went and discovered this mic in Batkanu and then he brought it to Commander Bomb Blast, after which Bomb Blast took it to Gullit and then it was handed over to the radio man that we had who was Jalloh and then he tried to fix it up and then when he fixed it 13:28:19 he resumed communication.

MS ALAGENDRA: Your Honours, for the record Jalloh is spelt J-A-L-L-O-H. Also, your Honour, I have just got my eye on the clock, if this is an appropriate moment?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, indeed, Ms Alagendra, this is an 13:28:37 appropriate time. We will adjourn until 2.30. Mr Witness, we are going to take the lunchtime adjournment. We will resume court at half past 2. Please adjourn court.

[Lunch break taken at 1.30 p.m.]

[Upon resuming at 2.30 p.m.]

14:29:41 PRESIDING JUDGE: Ms Alagendra, when you are ready we will proceed.

MS ALAGENDRA: Your Honours, just two brief issues. Back to the record again. Your Honour, again it seems to have come through as "Yeaten clock". It should be "eye on the".

PRESIDING JUDGE: I am not sure where that one is, Ms Alagendra. Could you help me?

MS ALAGENDRA: Just before we ended, your Honour, where I said I had my eye on the clock.

14:30:18 PRESIDING JUDGE: Oh, yes, indeed. I see it. Yes.

MS ALAGENDRA: And, your Honour, there is a spelling that I told the Court I will get back on.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, indeed.

MS ALAGENDRA: Sanda Tendaren, which is S-A-N-D-A T-E-N-D-A-R-E-N.

14:30:30 Your Honours, with that I will proceed with the examination of the witness, if I may?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, please do so.

MS ALAGENDRA:

14:30:46 Q. Witness, just before we broke for lunch you were telling the Court about a microphone that was found on an operation in Batkanu by Captain Arthur and that the mic was fixed up and after it was fixed you said he resumed communication. Also you told the Court that the name of the radio man with the group at the 14:31:26 time was a Jalloh?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Can you clarify when you said "he fixed it" and "he resumed communication", who is the "he" that you are referring to, witness?

14:31:47 A. I was - I spoke about the radio man. After he had fixed the mic, Gullit resumed communication with the other commanders.

Q. Do you know which other commanders communication was resumed with?

A. Well, as far as I know he resumed communication with - he came there and I saw that my family house had been burnt down on Guard Street. So I asked the family who was the commander that came there and if they did not tell the commander that I was part of the troop that entered. They said it was Captain Blood who 16:21:30 was assigned to Bazzy and he was the one who burned down the house and they said he said he did not want to know, because the orders that were given to us, be you RUF or STF, they said, the orders that were given to us was - and even when they told him that I was one of those of them who came, he said no, he did not 16:21:53 want to know, it was the orders. Then I asked him what route did he take. They told me he went towards Guard Street and I went there, I realised that Blood had already captured about seven men and he decapitated them. I can recall that. It happened on Guard Street and everybody ran away. So I had nothing to 16:22:17 question him about, neither to do any other thing to him, because he was attached to Bazzy and that happened during the second week of January, 6 January, I saw it with my own eyes.

Q. Witness, the seven men that were decapitated, who were they, do you know?

16:22:40 A. Well, these were all young men who were captured by the man in that area. When I went there I saw that he had captured them and he was saying that these were collaborators and that they were working with the Nigerians, so he executed them and he decapitated them.

16:22:58 Q. Were you there when he was decapitating them?

A. Yes, my Lord. When I left where my family house was on Guard Street, because they told me that he had gone ahead and when I moved to meet him, because he was still on the same Guard Street, when I met him there I saw that he was doing this action.

But I had nothing else to do to him because that was an order that came from above: That when we get to Freetown we should burn down and do killings.

Q. Can you remind us who that order was from?

16:23:37 A. Well, it was Gullit who gave the order before we entered Freetown, so this was one of the orders that he told me that he executed.

Q. Do you recall anything else that happened during the second week of January 1999?

16:24:02 A. Well, what I also recall that happened during the second week was that we had a call from RUF Rambo in which he said that they were preparing reinforcement to come and reinforce us, because at that time now we had started getting some threats from ECOMOG. He said, well, the SLA Rambo whom we referred to as Red

16:24:38 Goat, who was alongside with them, they were now advancing together with Superman and others and he said he was going to lead some men to come to Freetown to reinforce us. So Gullit gave him a location that we were going to receive them in Allen Town and he said the manpower was on their way coming to

16:25:07 reinforce us in Freetown, so that happened and Gullit chose some men --

Q. Witness, I will ask you to pause at this point. How do you know about this communication?

A. Well, this communication took place just after we started

16:25:29 receiving threats from ECOMOG and when Gullit called back to the rear. He called Rambo, who was the RUF commander, and he told him that now that we have pressed on, we have also started getting pressure from ECOMOG so we need reinforcements and it was the time that Rambo said that he had moved with Issa, they have are we on?

A. Well, this was almost during the third week of 6 January when we entered. That was now the third week.

Q. Now, when you recaptured State House at this time --

10:33:51 PRESIDING JUDGE: I am a little unclear. The third week of 6 January, what does that mean?

MS ALAGENDRA:

Q. Witness, can you be a bit clearer?

A. The third week of January.

10:34:06 Q. Of which year?

A. 1999.

Q. This time when you recaptured the State House, how long did you stay in the State House?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Have we got to a stage where he 10:34:28 recaptured State House?

MS ALAGENDRA: Yes, your Honour.

PRESIDING JUDGE: He said, "We moved and we undertook another advance."

MS ALAGENDRA: "And recaptured State House."

10:34:36 PRESIDING JUDGE: Oh, I see. I apologise. I see it clearly now. I withdraw that comment.

MS ALAGENDRA:

Q. Witness, how long did the troops stay in the State House this time?

10:34:47 A. Well we did not stay in State House for a long time, but we captured there and we were there on the ground and later we had an announcement over the international media and that was Mosquito again that went over air. He said he was not ready for any peace or ceasefire that the government wanted to establish and that now he was giving order to the commander Gullit, who was in Freetown, to start burning strategic positions in Freetown and to capture civilians. He said they should start burning strategic areas in Freetown and to capture civilians. He said he 10:35:43 was not going to accept any ceasefire.

After that announcement he also called Gullit on the radio set and he told him that the government was about to fool around the troops and the movement. According to him the government was just trying to prepare themselves to reorganise themselves to 10:36:07 flush us out of Freetown, and he said from now onward Gullit should start moving with his men around to burn Freetown and burn down strategic areas so that there would be no government and there will be nobody for the government to rule. You will have nowhere to sit and rule.

10:36:27 Q. How do you know about this communication?

A. Well, like I said, the one was over international media that we had, and the second one was at the State House after we had recaptured there when Gullit came and he went on the set and Mosquito gave him these orders in confirmation to what was said 10:36:52 over the international media.

Q. When he said there will be nobody for the government to rule, did he explain what that meant?

A. Well, he said by burning down strategic areas, that is government offices, and by capturing people in Freetown they 10:37:14 would not have anybody to rule.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Ms Alagendra, what international media is the witness referring to exactly?

MS ALAGENDRA:

Q. Witness, you said before this radio communication that Mosquito spoke over the international media. What international media are you talking about?

A. This was the BBC. He went over the BBC. Mostly he used two stations, the BBC and the RFI. Mostly it was through there that the news came up.

Q. Did Gullit respond?

A. Well, from that stage Gullit ordered commanders --

Q. Witness, I will stop you there. My question is did Gullit respond to Mosquito during this communication?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Can you just tell us what his response was, please?

A. Gullit said, "Yes, sir, I will do according to your wish. Just as you have given me order, I will also order the men now to start the operation to burn down and capture people in Freetown."

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Ms Alagendra, I'm lost. The witness just testified that this was a broadcast over the BBC. What communication are you talking about?

MS ALAGENDRA: Your Honours, he testified that after the broadcast there was a communication. That's what he was testifying about.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: I understand.

MS ALAGENDRA:

Q. Witness, what happened after Gullit responded to Mosquito?

A. Well, after that Gullit ordered senior commanders and he said to them that now we are going to start distributing fuel, petrol to the forces that were in Freetown and those were the ones he held, he leaded, so they started burning.

Q. "Those were the ones he held, he leaded", can you explain that?

1997. Can you tell me, Mr Witness, to be fair to you, was this shipment somewhere about July 1997, or was it in October 1997 as I said? Which is it?

A. Well, like I have said, it was some months after AFRC took over. Probably you are correct that month October was the month the shipment came.

Q. Where did you understand these arms to have come from, Mr Witness?

A. Well, my Lord, we had so many talks. Some said it came from Ukraine, some said from Liberia, so people were giving different versions. Some said from Ukraine, some said from Liberia.

Q. Yes, but when you met with the Office of the Prosecutor less than a year ago, 8 May 2007 - it's in tab 13. Madam Court Officer, can you show him tab 13. This is the Defence bundle of documents. Mr Witness, I'm on page 5 of tab 13. The ERN number ends in 2140 and if you look at that page, Mr Witness, there's a paragraph that says, "Witness is aware of arms shipment that took place at Magburaka" airstrip, or "airtrip" as it is written there. Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. The paragraph reads:

"Witness is aware of arms shipment that took place at Magburaka airtrip. Witness was present on the only one shipment when he accompanied Colonel SO Williams to the airstrip who received the arms. The second shipment that was to arrive, the ECOMOG Alpha Jet was raiding the area. This made the second shipment to be cancelled. Witness is not aware where the shipment originated, but he was told by other soldiers that it originated from Ukraine."

Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Less than a year ago you said you heard from others it came from the Ukraine, correct?

A. Yes, my Lord. I think they left out Liberia. Some said from Ukraine, some said from Liberia, and that was what I said and I'm saying it in court now.

Q. Yes, that was my point. The Prosecution has no records of you saying the shipment came from Liberia. You're saying it in court now, yes?

A. Well it's for the Prosecution, but what I said - and I said it openly in the court before you brought this paper before me - I told you that there were discussions that people were saying they came from Liberia and some said from Ukraine. Those were the discussions people were having.

Q. And you're also telling us that you told the Prosecution on 8 May 2007 that Liberia was a source of these weapons. Is that your evidence, Mr Witness?

A. I said that was what we heard from among the fighters. Everybody was happy that these things were - Liberia has done well for us. Some would say, "No, this was Ukraine", so there was this controversy between us when everybody discussed, not that senior commanders that went.

Q. Can you explain how it is the Prosecution does not have a record of you saying Liberia was a source of these weapons in the interview notes of 8 May 2007?

A. Well, this is - they typed and wrote it and so it might be that they made a mistake, but I don't know. That is why I said those who posed the question, they have that area. Like when I went there they - when I went they would type something.

Q. I see. This shipment of arms at Magburaka, Mr Witness, tell us what was received. What kind of shipment and arms are we talking about?

A. They came with some SMGs and some anti-aircraft where we also mounted and they came with they called them - they said laser to put down jets, but obviously they tested it and they knew that it was a fake and that it was not good enough. It was in Johnny Paul's place. So they planted in Johnny Paul's place, but the bombs were fake which they came with.

Q. Well, let's clarify a few things. What is SMGs first? I see the Chamber might have a query about that. What is SMGs, Mr Witness?

A. This was a submachine gun. It looked like an AK-47.

Q. You then said they came with some lasers that was a fake?

A. Well, yes, because all of us were happy that they had come with things that would put down the jet, but it was planted in Johnny Paul's place and it was tested and knew that it was fake and it was not useful. The bombs they came with that, they were already cold.

Q. When you say "Johnny Paul's place", where are you referring to, Mr Witness?

A. I was talking about Spur Road, where he was. There it was the place that it was planted.

Q. Do you mean during the junta period they took some lasers to Johnny Paul's place at Spur Road and tested the lasers in Freetown? Is that your evidence, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, it was there when the jet came to raid, because the invasion of Freetown as directed by SAJ Musa: 1, instigated by the execution of these 24 officers; and, 2, to facilitate the reinstatement of the army. Yes, Mr Witness?

A. Well, that was the word that he told us. He said we should go and reinstate the army. He said we should go with these words, then we will get support from the people.

Q. We know what words he used. We are trying to get at the meaning of those words and at the time those words meant that was a reason, amongst others, to go and invade Freetown, yes?

12:05:05 A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Yes. None of this had anything to do with the RUF, did it, either the execution of the 24 officers, or the reinstatement of the army?

A. It had something to do with them, my Lord.

12:05:28 Q. Tell us what it had to do with the RUF?

A. Well, in the execution you see the 24 officers, but you will see the names of other people, including Foday Sankoh who was in prison there, and then also, like I said, you have some names of political detainees who were there who were also part of 12:05:54 the AFRC, who had come together with the RUF and the SLA, that formed the AFRC. So it also had something to do with them.

Q. Mr Witness, the two documents I have just read to you are your own words and they focus on 24 SLA officers and their execution. Do you hear mention there of Foday Sankoh being in 12:06:18 jail as a factor for the Freetown invasion?

A. But what I am trying to say is that when this happened and when Mosquito went over the air, he commented and he said it. He said, "Our men will march into Freetown. We will ensure that our men March into Freetown, as long as they are executing our

Q. From entry number 11 through entry number 58 all payments made in the year 2006 and we don't have one record - one record of you having been interviewed for any of those dates. Do you understand what I am saying, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. What were they meeting with you about for all these meetings and spending all of this money on you in the year 2006?

A. My Lord, just as I said, I was under their control. So any time I was at my house they will call me say Bobby, you come. We need this, or we need this, or maybe they can say we want this direction or that, so I would help. And they used to call me constantly and I was under their control. They had relocated me for my protection. I did not go anywhere. Any time they needed me, I will go there. They will call me say we want you to enlighten us on this, we want you to do this for us then I will do it. But to say that I want to dispute the contents of this document, no, that's not what I am saying. Most of the times they will go and pick me up and when I will come back they will say, "No, we don't need you now" and I will return. They will 15:03:14 give me transport allowance and if I am there for some time, spend some time with them, they will give me money for meal.

Q. 40 something entries, about 47 I have counted, we don't have one interview note from any of those 47 events. Shall we take one, for example, and look at it. Let's look at entry 15:03:35 number 13. See entry number 13, Mr Witness, top of page 4, it has there 8 June 2006. Do you see that, Mr Witness? Madam Court Officer could you assist him?
A. Yes.
Q. Has there 8 June 2006. Category, information. Amount in 15:04:21 question, 15,000 leones. Let's look at the dates and the reason. Reason, "Paid for three days meals" and it gives the dates 6 June, 7 June and 8 June. This entry corresponds to 8 June. Let's flip back a page and see if you had anything to do with them on 7 June. No record for 7 June. What we see in entry 15:04:52 number 12 is that you are paid for breakfast for 6 June, 5,000 leones. Do you see that, Mr Witness?
A. Yes, my Lord.
Q. And when we flip the page to entry 13, on 8 June, despite the fact they paid you 5,000 leones for breakfast on the 6th they 15:05:24 give you money for three days meals, including 6 June, including 7 June when they are not even meeting with you at all, and then for the day in question 8 June. Do you see that, Mr Witness?
A. Yes, my Lord.
Q. Were they giving you money to feed you on days that you were not meeting with them, Mr Witness?

A. No. As long as they called me to the office and I went there they will make transportation - provision for transportation. Whatever information I was called for, I was in 15:06:02 their hands. Whatever they needed, information or anything, I will go there. If they invited me I will honour their invitation.
Q. Yes, Mr Witness, I understand that, but you see what is happening. On 6 June they gave you 5,000 leones for breakfast.
15:06:25 On 8 June they are giving you money for three days meals including the 6th that they have already given you 5,000 leones for. Do you see something wrong with that, Mr Witness?
A. I don't see anything wrong with that. As I said, I will be at my house and they will say Bobby, get ready, maybe you will 15:06:46 come or we will come to pick you. I cannot dispute the fact.
Q. You remember when we started with your cross-examination on the 17th, I recall, or perhaps it was not the 17th, but whenever it was, some time last week, Thursday last, we started out with the document in tab 23. If you flip over one page you will see 15:07:13 that document. That is by the Witnesses and Victims Section, or rather if you flip over one tab. Do you see that it says that you were brought under the protection of the court - I am reading from paragraph 2 now of that document - on 14 March 2005? Do you see that, Mr Witness?
15:07:39 A. Yes, my Lord.
Q. The money the WVS, or Witnesses and Victims Section, spent on you is distinct and different from the money spent on you by the Office of the Prosecutor. Are you aware of that, Mr Witness?
A. Well according to the document, yes.

Q. So since 14 March all your expenses - and you see the categories in the document in tab 23, rent, child care, all of that was being taken care of by the Witnesses and Victims Section. What we are speaking about in tab number 22 are 15:08:17 payments by the Office of the Prosecutor and they are paying you twice for meals for the same day. Do you understand the records in entry number 13 and entry number 12, what they say, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, yes, yes.

15:08:54 Q. Do you understand that there is something unusual about paying someone 5,000 for breakfast on 6 June and then on 8 June you give him additional money for meals on 6 June which has just passed?

A. Well this document states it clearly, June 6, 7 and 8, and 15:09:26 in particular they knew that I had to go and they will engage me that day, the following day and the day following that. They will give me the money in advance, because they will say, "We don't want to be disturbing you every now and then to be signing documents". At times they will call me, they will want me to go 15:09:46 with them to see areas where we were fighting and I will go with them. Places like Hastings, I will go there and show the place to them. I am not denying this fact.

Q. Do you see the next entries for 12 June? They are entries 14, 15 and 16 on the same page we were looking at.

15:10:05 A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Do you see for entry number 14 they gave you 5,000 leones on Monday, 12 June for lunch? Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Now look at entry number 16, also pertains to 12 June, Monday. They gave you another 5,000 for meals. Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Same day, one payment for lunch and another payment for meals, yes?

A. Yes, because if I went there in the morning they will provide money for breakfast, they will go and buy it for me and if I will be there until lunch they will provide money for lunch. They did the buying. They will buy it and when they come they bring the document and I will sign.

Q. Twice paid for food for the same day.

A. That is what I have just told you. I said if I will be there in the morning they will provide breakfast. They will pay. In that courtroom it is that everything they bought there it is expensive. As long as I spent time there, they will provide feeding.

Q. Mr Witness, entry number 15 says you were paid 10,000 leones for transport and lost wages, reason "Transportation for witness to go home and report at the SCSLP" the following day, 13 June 2006. Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. What kind of work were you doing in the year 2006, Mr Witness?

A. Well, I was still with my church and apart from that I had some business run by my brother and my sisters. I helped that and I monitored that. Apart from that, as I said, at times the court will call me that somebody had come and they want to visit this and that area, so I will come there and go to the place and I will ask them to pay for my transport fare because I will not go there taking money from my own pocket. At times they send vehicle for me, but when I will be returning they give me transport fare.

Q. My initial question was what sort of work were you doing. Are you saying you were employed by your church, Mr Witness?

15:12:34

A. Yes, my church employed me. I used to get salary from Flaming. Even where I am now, I get salary from that.

Q. And you said you were doing some business on the side through your family, yes?

15:12:58

A. Yes, and in fact I have a whole house and they pay rent to me and every year I get 3.5 million. Two apartments: the one downstairs 3.5 and the other one upstairs, where my brother was, they pay the money to me directly. My sister sends money for me every month. I will not tell you a lie.

15:13:24

Q. That is okay.

A. Okay.

Q. How much did you make on average between your church and all these other ventures on the average day in 2006?

A. Well, I would have some other businesses. I had some other ways to get money. Every month I had other means to get money, apart from the church. The church used to give me 150,000 monthly. The pastor pleaded with me to accept that and I said, "Okay, no problem". Apart from that, I have my own investment. I have some money in the bank which was paid to me by the army.

15:13:46

15:14:07

I have the documentation. 5 point something million. I went and bought Treasury bearer bonds. I get interest from that.

Q. At this time, though, you were already living --

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Interpreter, what was that last thing you said?

THE INTERPRETER: Profit from that. I have - I bought Treasury bearer bonds.

MR ANYAH:

Q. Mr Witness, by this time, 12 June 2006, you were living in accommodation provided by the Special Court, correct?

A. Yes, my Lord, that is correct.

Q. You did not have to pay rent whatsoever, right?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. Yes. The Special Court was feeding you in the place where you were staying, right?

A. Well they were not feeding me directly, but I had my weekly allowance that they gave to me and I did not trust them. They asked me to be relocated and they used to give me allowance.

Q. When we look through these records and we see meals and breakfast, these sums being given to you they are in addition to the weekly allowance they used to give you when you were in this house, right?

A. No, as I said, this department that you are referring to, if they called on me and if I went there they will give me my transportation fare. That happened. Because there were times I would be in the church and they will call me. They will just say, "Pay and when you come we will refund your money".

Q. Mr Witness, let's not focus on transportation. Let's focus on the issue of feeding, meals. It is correct, is it not, that the Witness and Victims Section gave you feeding allowance while you were housed by them in Freetown, correct?

A. Yes, weekly allowances. Yes.

Q. And my point is separate and distinct from that whenever the Office of the Prosecutor would get you for interviews, or meetings, they also gave you money for food, yes?

A. As long as I went there, they provided my feeding. As long as they invited me to the office and I went there, they provided my feeding and transportation cost.
15:16:48 Q. And that was in addition to what WVS was giving you on a weekly basis for food, yes?
A. Well I did not request for this, as I said.
Q. I didn't ask if you requested for it, Mr Witness. I didn't ask if you requested for it. It might be a gift, for all you 15:17:08 knew. I am just asking if it was in addition to what the Witnesses and Victims Section was giving you for food on a weekly basis?
A. No, no, when they invited me I will go there. They will go and pick me up and I will come. They will give me my 15:17:31 transportation cost. The food, they used to buy it. They will go and buy it. I didn't know how much they bought it and I will sign for it on the document.
Q. Yes, well let's break it down. When you would go to the Special Court premises you are telling us they would buy you 15:17:45 food, right?
A. Yes, my Lord, they will go and bring food from the canteen. When they will bring it they will say this is 5,000 and they will ask me to sign. Whatever, they will ask me to sign on a document and I did.
15:18:01 Q. On the dates when you did not go to the Special Court premises and you stayed in the house that was being provided for by the Witnesses and Victims Section you used to eat based on the allowance they gave you, right?
A. Yes.

Q. So the allowance you were receiving for food from the Witnesses and Victims Section was different from money spent on you for food whenever you went to the Special Court premises, right?

15:18:38 A. It was different. As long as they invited me to that office that you are referring to - not the WVS, this prosecution - if the investigators wanted to see me they provided my transportation cost. When once they provided transportation they would bring the document and I will sign.

15:18:57 Q. Mr Witness, if you look at entry number 11 where we started with, 4 April 2006 - do you see that?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. And if you go all the way to the end of the page you see the page number is "Page 3 of 17"? Do you see that, Mr Witness?

15:19:32 A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. All of the entries from entry number 11 all the way to page 15 - actually, it is even worse. All the way up to page 16 of this document, entry number 63. From entry 11 through entry number 63. Entry number 63 speaks of the date 6 November 2007.

15:20:11 Do you see that, Mr Witness?

A. Yes, my Lord.

Q. For all of those entries, the dates between lines 11 and 63, none of those dates correspond to any interview dates of yours that we have records of. From pages 3 through pages 16, we 15:20:36 don't have any records of you meeting with them on any of those dates. And what the Chamber would like to know, I suspect, is what were you doing with them during all of these meetings? What was going on?

A. My Lord, just as I said, I will be at my house and they will invite me. At times they will ask me to go and show them a particular place, or they will ask me - they will call me and ask me, "Do you know this person?", I will say, "No", or maybe they will want to get information from me or somebody else. I was in their hands. At times they will call me, or they will take me and ask me that I should take them to West Side. Maybe somebody else wanted to see the West Side. So, mostly that was why they took me. They would say they had a visitor who wanted to see West Side and I will say, "Okay, let's go. No problem". I will just take an excuse from my pastor, but I will tell them and say, "Be prepared for tomorrow. We will go to the place", and we will go there.

Q. Mr Witness, look at the entry in entry number 63. As of 64 - entry 64, 16 November, we know you were interviewed on that day, but the preceding entry, entry number 63, it says you were given the sum of 60,000 leones and the category is "Information". The reason you were given this money is "Purchase of information". What information were they buying for 60,000 leones, Mr Witness?

A. It was not to buy something. At times they will call me and they will tell me we want you to go to this and this place. Maybe it is in the provinces, I will ask them to give me transportation and I will go. If they wanted information from me, there were many areas, at times Karina and some other places, I would go there. I had taken people there who wanted to see some places and if you want to see places like those it will cost you money, it will cost you transportation. So they would give me the money.

Q. Why doesn't it say money for transportation. It says,

Q. Mr Witness, what do you say on the basis of having lived in Sierra Leone the average Sierra Leonean would make, or made, in the year 2006? Let me rephrase that. I withdraw that phraseology. If you took the average Sierra Leonean on the side in 2006 and you asked how much the man on the street made that year, would it add up to about 300 United States dollars, Mr Witness?

15:37:58

A. Well I cannot judge for people, because everybody has his own way of getting money. I cannot judge for even the least. I was not - some people are businessmen, so everybody had his own way of getting his living.

15:38:23

MR ANYAH: My colleague, Mr Munyard, just reminds me that I should make a formal request to the extent there are any records of interviews with this witness for the dates mentioned that we do not have, all of the year 2006, we would like to request them formally on the record.

15:38:47

PRESIDING JUDGE: Ms Alagendra?

MS ALAGENDRA: Your Honours, I was going to raise it in re-examination, but I can respond briefly. This witness testified in the RUF trial between 5 to 10 July 2006 and there was preparation work that was going on with this witness for that purpose. Unfortunately, we don't have a formal record of it.

15:39:02

MR ANYAH: Madam President, the Chamber will note that the dates I canvassed exceed and go beyond July 2006 into - they go into as far as December. I have records up to 6 December 2006. They start in April of 2006 and they go through December 2006. Several meetings in October of 2006, in September of 2006 several meetings and we have nothing from April through December 2000 and - we have nothing for 2006.

15:39:30

PRESIDING JUDGE: Ms Alagendra, you have heard counsel. He says that - the dates you have quoted are 5 to 10 July 2006?

MS ALAGENDRA: That was the date on which he testified in the RUF trial.

15:40:09 PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes.

MS ALAGENDRA: So, preparation work was going on before that.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, and counsel has now raised the period after.

15:40:17 MS ALAGENDRA: Yes, your Honour, and in relation to that Mr Koumjian will address you.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Koumjian?

MR KOUMJIAN: I don't have any personal information, but we recognise counsel has made the request for any interviews and we 15:40:30 understand the disclosure obligations.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, and the disclosure obligations you will therefore as requested make the appropriate enquiries.

MR KOUMJIAN: I personally will double check what I know about any interviews of this witness and what I can find out 15:40:51 during the dates stated.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well.

MR ANYAH: Thank you. We appreciate the response and the self-undertaking to double check. Thank you, counsels.

Madam President, there are a number of documents I have put 15:41:10 to the witness that I have not requested to be marked for identification. With the leave of Chamber, I would like to do so.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Just before we move on to that, have we completed the questions relating to this United Nations bullets that it used were large. It was a chain and he hung it round his neck.

Q. What did he hang around his neck?

A. That is the bullets that were connected in the box and the box was underneath the gun and he used to tie it round his neck. Wherever resistance was, as he fires, as he shoots, that's how the bullets came out of the box.

Q. Thank you. Now you said that at Kukuna there was some fighting and after the fighting you - the commanders then came to you and said that you should move on to Colonel Eddie Town. Can you tell us how you proceeded from Kukuna?

A. When we left Kukuna, we went through some villages and we got to one village where we rested. The village where we rested, Kabila took me - at that time he had - he was able to get another gun that had two handles. You can hold it at the back and in front. He said, "I have taught you how to dismantle a gun, clean it and couple it up". He said, "Now I'm going to teach you how to shoot the gun". So he took me to a riverside. He said, "I will be doing the shooting in the river". So I went to the river and he said, "Hold on to this. Hold on to it tighter, because it will pull you", so I held on to it and he told me to shoot. He said I should point it into the water and I should put my finger into something and he asked me to shoot it and I shot it once and he called me that we should go to town.

Q. Now do you know why he asked you to shoot - to aim your shot into the water?

A. At that time he told me that, because he's taught me how to clean and dismantle a weapon, he said now he's going to teach me how to shoot.

Q. Yes, but you said that in the training that he gave you he told you to aim your shot into the water. Do you recall that?
A. During the training that he gave me he did not - he did not teach me how to shoot. He did not teach me how to shoot.
12:52:05 Q. Did you fire a shot from that gun?
A. I shot the gun.
Q. Where did you aim at when you shot the - when you pulled the trigger?
A. I pointed the gun in the water. I pointed the gun in the 12:52:26 water and that was where I shot it.
Q. Why did you have to shoot it into the water?
A. He said because his bosses were in town and he said because the place where we had fought was not too away from Kukuna he said he wouldn't want them to hear that were in that town. So 12:52:51 when we got into the - if they heard the sound they will come into that area. That was why he told me to point it into the water so that the sound will not be heard.
Q. Now after you had gone through the training, after that short process did anything happen?
12:53:16 A. Well, when we came to town, when we came to the village where his bosses were, the house where he had left his wife and his other boy, his friends were there. He went and brought out marijuana and he wrapped it for me and he asked me to smoke it. So I smoked it. I smoked the marijuana. There was some ground 12:53:40 nut there and I started chewing it. I did that until I started vomiting.
Q. Now were you the only one smoking marijuana?
A. Well, at that time his other friends, his other colleague fighters, also sat down smoking. I and - he gave me marijuana

A. Yes.

09:51:52 Q. Did they explain how they were going to pay themselves?
A. That was where they stopped.

A. Yes, because they went on clearing people's properties and they were beating up people.
09:52:24 Q. How long did the junta stay in Karina Town on this occasion?
A. After taking - they had taken all the properties, then they went.
Q. After the junta went, did anything else happen in Karina
09:52:47 Town?
A. Yes.
Q. What happened?
A. The other juntas came again. They came to the town.
Q. What do you mean by "other juntas"?
09:53:05 A. RUF, the soldiers.
Q. Witness, you have said "RUF, the soldiers". Can you clarify what do you mean?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Please do so.
09:53:22 A. I don't understand.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Interpreter, did the witness say "the RUF soldiers" or "the RUF and soldiers".
THE INTERPRETER: She said, "The RUF and the soldiers".
THE WITNESS: Yes, because some spoke Liberian dialect and some spoke the Sierra Leonean dialect.

MS ALAGENDRA:

Q. When the RUF and the soldiers came back - I beg your pardon, came to Karina Town this time, how long did they stay?

09:54:06 A. They were there for about two weeks.

Q. During the two weeks do you recall if anything happened?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What happened?

A. Well, when they came to the town they said the town chief 09:54:28 should lodge them. Then the town chief told them that he did not have any place to lodge them and then they said they would lodge themselves.

Q. What did they do after they said they will lodge themselves?

09:54:50 A. We had an upstairs building there where Dr Sherrif had his clinic. They broke into the place and entered there. They based there.

Q. Where exactly is this building, witness?

A. It is an upstairs building, a storey building. It's in 09:55:16 Karina Town.

Q. After the RUF and the soldiers based in this building, did anything else happen in Karina Town?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What happened?

09:55:32 A. They went and took people's properties, they cleared people's properties in Karina and then they went to the other villages and took people's properties from there and they brought them.

Q. The people's property who was being taken, who was taking these properties?

A. The junta. They went and took people's property.
Q. Witness, you told the Court that on this occasion the group that came to Karina Town was RUF and soldiers?
09:56:16 A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you say it was the junta who was taking the people's property?
A. It was the junta and the RUF.
Q. Whose property was being taken?
09:56:41 A. They took my sister's properties. They went to where the cows were kept in the farm and then they were taking people's cows and then taking them over.
Q. Apart from this, did anything else happen in Karina Town during the two weeks?
09:57:13 A. Yes, sir.
Q. What happened?
A. Well, my --
THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, could the witness again clarify the gender of the sister's pikin.
09:57:25 PRESIDING JUDGE: Again, Madam Witness, the interpreter asks was your sister's pikin a girl or a boy?
THE WITNESS: She was a girl.
MS ALAGENDRA:
Q. And your pikin, witness?
09:57:47 A. Yes, sir.
Q. What gender was this pikin?
A. She was a girl.
Q. You were going to tell the Court something about these two girls. Please proceed, witness, and again I remind you not to mention any names?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Tell the Court if anything happened to these two girls?
A. Yes, sir, something happened to these girls.
09:58:28 Q. What happened?
A. My girl was around 13 years. She was raped. My sister's daughter, she was around the age of 12. She was also raped.
Q. Who had raped them, did you know?
A. Yes, it was the RUF and the junta, because they were mixed 09:59:01 living in the house there.
Q. How do you know these two girls were raped?
PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Witness, would you like to take some water? Perhaps the WVS can help the witness. Would you like to take a break, Madam Witness? Would you like to take a 09:59:53 break now? I think in the circumstances the witness seems very overwrought and so we will take a brief break and allow her to compose herself and perhaps someone can report to us how she is. We will take a break until the witness feels better. Please adjourn Court temporarily.
10:00:24 [Break taken at 10.01 a.m.]
[Upon resuming at 10.22 a.m.]
PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Witness, are you feeling better now?
THE WITNESS: Yes, I feel better now.
10:21:45 PRESIDING JUDGE: Good. You must take this at your own pace. No-one is rushing you. We will continue with your evidence now. Please proceed.
THE WITNESS: Okay, sir.
MS ALAGENDRA: Your Honours, on the part of the Prosecution

we would like to put on record that we had checked with WVS and what we were told was that the witness was not only willing to testify but she wants to testify, your Honour.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

10:22:25 MS ALAGENDRA:

Q. Madam Witness, we are going to continue from where you were talking about the two girls that were raped, your daughter and your sister's daughter, okay?

A. Yes, sir.

10:22:42 Q. When you say those two girls were raped, can you explain what you mean, witness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please explain.

A. When the girls were captured, when they wanted to rape them 10:23:00 they placed them under gunpoint and they raped them. The raping that I am talking about is that they were damaged in the vagina and they were bleeding. I myself checked them and I saw the infection.

Q. Did anything else happen in Karina during these two weeks?

10:23:29 A. Yes, sir.

Q. What happened?

A. The people, the juntas, went back, but as they were going - they said as they were going they would come back to Karina.

Q. Did anything happen after they left?

10:24:03 A. Yes.

Q. What happened?

A. Well, I and my elder brother were outside late that day in Karina and at daybreak I came out and I saw fire - a big fire in the other village.

but it was during the same month that the two of us went there.
Q. And what was he doing when he was in Peyama?
A. Well, he was deployed as a battalion commander. We all went there and we were keeping defensive.
14:37:02 Q. For how long were you in Peyama?
A. I was there for up to a month.
Q. And when you left Peyama, where did you go to?
A. Well, I went to Kailahun in Giema. I was with Sam Bockarie again.
14:37:24 Q. And are you able to tell us in what year you arrived in Giema in Kailahun?
A. Well, that was in '95. 1995.
MS BALY: And Giema is spelt with an N. It's N-G-I-E-M-A:
Q. So you arrived in Giema in 1995, is that so?
14:37:58 A. Yes.
Q. Do you know when? What month in 1995?
A. No.
Q. And you said you went with Sam Bockarie, is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
14:38:11 Q. Was the first time you ever met Sam Bockarie in Peyama?
A. Repeat that.
Q. You told us earlier that you had met Sam Bockarie when you were in Peyama. Was that the first time that you had met him?
A. No.
14:38:36 Q. When was the first time you had met Sam Bockarie?
A. Well, after phase two I met Sam Bockarie. That was in Zogoda. Then he left and came back. The two of us were detained in the same jail when he committed that crime.
Q. What do you mean by phase two?

A. Well, from 1991 up to '93 that was phase one. The war was in another phase starting from 1994.
Q. And how was it that these phases - what separated these two phases?
14:39:28 A. Well that first phase, when the Liberians came and went, that was the first phase when we were left alone. That was the other phase, because the war intensified. After it moved with - he called it - that was what the leader called it. He said that was phase two.
14:39:55 Q. I'm not going to ask you too many questions about this area, but you said you were detained in the same jail when he, that is Sam Bockarie, committed that crime. What crime do you refer to?
A. The soldier who he killed in Sierra Rutile. That was why 14:40:16 he was jailed.
Q. And why were you there? Why were you in the jail?
A. Well, I was charged with time factor. The leader called me and the time that I was supposed to have arrived I did not arrive at that time, so he changed me with time factor.
14:40:36 Q. How long did you spend in the jail?
A. I spent up to three days.
Q. Can I take you back, please, to when you went to --
MR MUNYARD: I'm sorry to interrupt and it may be my lack of knowledge of terminology, but before we move off that could 14:40:55 the witness explain what the offence of time factor is? I think, Madam President, from the look on your face it is my lack of understanding.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Well, we will have it properly recorded. What exactly do you mean by - you said you were supposed to arrive and you did not arrive. Make that a bit clearer, Mr Witness.

THE WITNESS: Yes, when you are called and they say you should arrive today, when they say today and you arrive tomorrow after 12 that means it's the other day and you will be disciplined for that.

MR MUNYARD: Thank you very much.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please proceed, Ms Baly.

MS BALY:

14:41:35 Q. Back at Giema you went there and you said Sam Bockarie was there as well, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. What was your position at that point, that is when you were in Giema?

14:41:52 A. Well, I went to Giema as a crack force commander when I left Peyama.

Q. What was a crack force commander?

A. Well crack force, those were people wherever an enemy wanted to infiltrate you were the people who would go there and 14:42:23 join with the others so that you would be able to put the situation under control. You hadn't any permanent assignment.

Q. What was Sam Bockarie's role when he was in Giema with you?

A. He went there and he joined me, because there was a problem there at that time. The enemies had advanced and so the leader 14:42:48 said we should join together to put the situation under control. We were there as senior officers.

Q. Who was the commander in the Giema area at that time?

A. Issa Sesay.

Q. For how long did you remain at Giema?

A. Well, I was in Giema up to the overthrow.
Q. And when you say "the overthrow", what do you mean?
A. When the AFRC overthrew the President of Sierra Leone.
Q. When you were in Giema, did you have occasion to meet with 14:43:37 Foday Sankoh?
A. Yes.
Q. And what was the nature of this meeting you had with Foday Sankoh?
A. Well, Foday Sankoh went to Abidjan to sign the peace accord 14:43:58 on our behalf. On his return, that was the time that I met with him.
Q. Were you the only person who met with him, or were there others who met with him at that time?
A. There were other people there. I was not alone.
14:44:19 Q. How many of you met with Foday Sankoh at that time?
A. Well, when he came at first he called for a formation. The soldiers with whom we were, officers and soldiers, we all assembled at the grounds for the formation.
Q. And what occurred at this formation?
14:44:45 A. Well he addressed us, told us about the peace that he had signed and he said he had done it in the interests of the movement, for all of us. That was what he told us at the formation.
Q. Did he tell you anything else about the peace that he had 14:45:07 signed?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did he tell you?
A. He said he has signed the peace on our behalf, but that does not mean the war has ended. He said during times of peace,

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter requires you to repeat the answer. Please pick up from where you said - the question was, "Where did you meet?" "At the ground." Continue from there, please.

14:47:47 THE WITNESS: Where he was staying, the EMG ground, where he always stays. Where he always stays, that was where we met.

MS BALY:

Q. Do you know what EMG stands for?

A. No, that was where the leader stayed. That was what we 14:48:06 always called it.

Q. And when you say "he stayed there", who are you talking about?

A. Foday Sankoh.

Q. When you assembled there, was Foday Sankoh present?

14:48:25 A. Yes, yes, that was his ground. That was where we met him. We came to him.

Q. And you said that it was the senior commanders. Can you tell us who was present at that meeting, apart from yourself and Foday Sankoh?

14:48:43 A. Well Mr Bockarie was there, Colonel Bockarie, that is Mosquito; Issa was there; Jungle was there; AB was there; FOC was there; Jackson Swaray was there; AB was there and other commanders; and I myself was also there.

Q. Now, you've referred to a person by the name of Jungle.

14:49:20 Did you know that person by any other name?

A. Well, that was his name. That was the name we knew. That was what we called him, Jungle.

Q. You've also referred to a person AB. Did you know what his full name was?

A. Well, it was Abubakarr. His name is AB.
Q. Abubakarr?
A. Yes, yes, yes.
MS BALY: A-B-U-B-A-K-A-R [sic]:
14:50:03 PRESIDING JUDGE: I think it's double R.
MS BALY: Thank you, your Honour, double R:
Q. And you've referred to a person FOC. Do you know what that person's full name was?
A. No, that was the name that I knew.
14:50:25 Q. Now this person, Jungle, had you ever seen Jungle before this meeting?
A. Yes, I had been seeing Jungle.
Q. Where you had been seeing Jungle?
A. Jungle, I saw him in Liberia since that time we were 14:50:49 pushed.
Q. Did you know where he was from?
A. In Liberia.
Q. And the person AB, what was his position?
A. Well, there was a security branch called IO. They reported 14:51:13 to the leader. He was heading that group.
Q. And the person FOC, what was his position?
A. He was the leader's bodyguard. He was one of his bodyguards.
Q. When you say "the leader", which leader? Who are you 14:51:34 talking about?
A. Foday Sankoh.
Q. And Jackson Swaray, what was his position?
A. He was a bodyguard commander. He was leading all of the securities.

Q. Now, at the meeting who spoke?
A. Well, Foday Sankoh spoke.
Q. What did he say?
A. Well in the first place we saw him hand over his satellite 14:52:14 to Mr Bockarie, Sam Bockarie.
Q. When you say "satellite", what is a satellite?
A. Satellite phone. Satellite phone.
Q. Did he say anything when he handed the phone - the satellite phone - to Sam Bockarie?
14:52:33 A. Well, in the first place he told us that we should take all orders from Sam Bockarie and at the same time he was going on a political tour. He said he was going to Libya and other areas. He said we should all take instructions from Bockarie while Bockarie should be taking instructions from Mr Ghankay. That was 14:52:57 why he gave him that satellite so that we would be having links.
Q. When you say, "He said we should all take instructions from Bockarie while Bockarie should be taking instructions from Mr Ghankay", who are you referring to? Who is Mr Ghankay?
A. That is the NPFL leader, Charles Ghankay Taylor.
14:53:23 Q. Did he say anything else when he was at the meeting?
A. Yes.
Q. What did he say?
A. Well, he introduced Jungle to us as Mr Taylor's representative for us there.
14:53:42 Q. Did he refer to Jungle in any particular way?
A. Well, he said he was the Pa's representative. They had been discussing that and so he was trying to introduce him to us. He said he was Charles Ghankay Taylor's representative, Jungle.
Q. Did Jungle say anything at the meeting?

A. Yes, he too buttressed what the Pa had said. He supported and he told us that he will do his level best to his ability.
Q. Was there anything else discussed at the meeting?
A. I think that is the most important thing that we discussed.
14:54:47 Q. Did Foday Sankoh say where he was going to go?
A. Yes.
Q. Where?
A. He said he was going to Libya.
Q. After the meeting, what did you do?
14:55:11 A. Well, all of us went to our various areas.
Q. Now, you said that you were in Giema until after the overthrow. What happened after the overthrow? Where did you go to?
A. After the overthrow we got an instruction from the same 14:55:40 Foday Sankoh, so I moved along with Sam Bockarie.
Q. And where did you move to?
A. At first I went to Pendembu.
Q. Where did you go after Pendembu?
A. I went to Daru.
14:55:57 Q. Where did you go after Daru?
A. We came to Benguema.
Q. And did you go anywhere after Benguema, or did you stay at Benguema?
A. That was where we were based. In the mornings we will go 14:56:20 with Mr Sam Bockarie to Freetown, we will spend the rest of the day there and we will return in the evening. That was what we were doing.
Q. Why did you go there? What was the purpose?
A. Where?

Q. Why did you go to Benguema? Why did you go to Benguema?
A. Well those who called us, that was where they told us about. That was where they lodged Sam Bockarie, because I was moving with him. That was where we were based. In the mornings 14:57:00 we would go to Freetown and in the evening we would return. It was our first base.
Q. And who were those who called you?
A. It was the AFRC.
Q. You would go to Freetown in the morning and what would you 14:57:17 do when you went to Freetown?
A. Well, we went there and sometimes we will go to the military headquarters at Cockerill. Sam Bockarie holds meetings with the senior men most times.
Q. What senior men?
14:57:39 A. Well those who made the coup, like Johnny Paul, SAJ Musa, Gborie and others.
Q. Did you yourself attend the meetings that Sam Bockarie went to?
A. No, it was just for the senior officers. The council
14:58:00 members.
Q. Whilst you were at Benguema, did you receive a different assignment?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was the different assignment that you received?
14:58:15 A. I was assigned to Bintumani Hotel.
MS BALY: Bintumani B-I-N-T-U-M-A-N-I"
Q. What were you assigned to do at Bintumani Hotel?
A. Well, that was an important area. It was a hotel. So Gborie requested me from Sam Bockarie, so I was handed over to him to keep security there.

Q. Who was the person Gborie you've referred to?

A. Well, those were the men who overthrew. He was the first man who went over the air after the overthrow.

14:59:12 Q. What do you mean by he went over the air?

A. He spoke on the BBC Worldwide.

Q. Did you hear him speak on the BBC?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you hear him say?

14:59:33 A. Well, he said they have overthrown. He said they have overthrown. He said they have overthrown the regime. That is the SLPP.

Q. Did you take up your position at Bintumani Hotel?

A. Yes.

14:59:50 Q. For how long were you there?

A. I was there for a month.

Q. And then what happened after the month?

A. Well Mr Bockarie, that is Mosquito, he was given a mission. He requested me from Gborie and Gborie handed me over to him.

15:00:20 Q. What was the mission that you were requested for?

A. Well, he said the road - Johnny Paul said the road should be cleared up from Bo to Kenema, because at that time that road was blockaded by the Kamajors. He said I should join him for us to run that mission.

15:00:47 Q. And who were you supposed to be joining?

A. Sam Bockarie.

Q. And what were you to do?

A. Well, I was to join him as one of the officers to be with the men that we were to move with.

Q. Did you remain in Joru?
A. No, we went back to Zimmi.
Q. Did you stay in Zimmi?
A. No.
15:10:18 Q. Where did you go to from Zimmi?
A. We continued and went to Bo Waterside, where we were to stop.
Q. Did you stop in Bo Waterside?
A. Yes, that was where we stopped.
15:10:34 Q. Did you receive a new assignment in Bo Waterside?
A. Yes, we left some men there and then we went on a patrol with Mr Bockarie to Wai and those villages which are motorable and after three days we returned to Kenema and I returned with him.
15:11:04 Q. I'm going to ask you to say what you said again, please, because it hasn't come out on the transcript. You said you left with some men there, then we went on a patrol with Mr Bockarie to Wai and those villages which ..." Can you just continue what you were saying from "which"?
15:11:25 A. Yes, we continued to Wai, we went on a patrol there and returned.
Q. Returned where?
A. We returned to Bo Waterside.
Q. What did you do after you returned? Did you stay in Bo
15:11:48 Waterside?
A. No, I went with Mr Bockarie again.
Q. Where to?
A. To Kenema.
Q. Whereabouts in Kenema?

A. In Kenema he was based at NIC. That was where he was based.
Q. What was at NIC?
A. Well, it's close to the Bank of Sierra Leone. That was 15:12:19 what I saw them calling it, so we called it that too.
Q. When you say "we called it that too", what do you mean by that?
A. Well those of us like I and Mosquito and others, that was what all of us called it. Even the people we met there, that was 15:12:44 what they were calling it.
Q. Did it have another name?
A. Well, that was the only name I knew.
Q. What did you do when you were at this place, NIC?
A. Well, we did not do any other thing at that moment. We 15:13:09 were there waiting for another mission.
Q. Did you get another mission?
A. Yes.
Q. What was the mission?
A. We had a mission to go and clear Tongo.
15:13:26 Q. What do you mean by "go and clear Tongo"? What do you mean by the word "clear"?
A. That is wherever your opponents were, your enemies, when you dislodged them from there that means you are clearing that place.
15:13:43 Q. And the full name of this place Tongo, is that it's full name?
A. Yes, that is it's name. Tongo. Tongo Field.
Q. What district is Tongo Field in?
A. Kenema District.

Q. What was your particular role to be in the mission of clearing Tongo Field?
A. Well, I was appointed as a commander to head that mission.
Q. Did you accomplish that mission?
15:14:30 A. Yes, the mission went through.
Q. When you went to Tongo Field, did you remain at Tongo Field for any period of time?
A. Yes.
Q. For how long?
15:14:50 A. I was there for a month.
Q. What did you do during that month?
A. Well, we were there and we were defending the area and at the same time we put some mining activities in place. We were mining.
15:15:09 Q. What were you mining for?
A. Diamonds.
Q. Who was doing the mining?
A. Well, it was the civilians who were doing it whilst we were securing and defending them.
15:15:25 Q. What do you mean by "the civilians were doing it whilst [you] were securing and defending them"? What were you doing?
A. Because there were enemies there. Wherever you dislodged the enemies and the civilians were there, you have to set up defences. So, we had to do that.
15:15:55 Q. And what were you doing in relation to securing the civilians? How did you secure them?
A. We kept defences to ensure that no gunshot was there at the time that I was there. I was there to ensure that there was no shooting there and, since that time that I was there, there was

Q. Who was the commander in charge of Tongo Field at that time?

A. Well, it was Sam Bockarie who was the senior commander who was taking care.

15:30:37 Q. Was there any commander who was in charge of the mining?

A. Well, the mining we handed it over to one man called Mopleh.

MS BALY: That's M-O-P-L-E-H:

Q. This person Mopleh, what group did he belong to?

15:31:15 A. Well, they were in between us and the civilians who were controlling the mining. He did not belong to a particular group to say that he was in this group, or that group.

Q. You said that the mining for the government would be for two days. What would happen for the remainder of the days?

15:31:43 A. Well for the rest of the days it was free for all, soldiers and civilians. Whoever could mine for the other four days, you were free to do so.

Q. Are you referring to days of the week?

A. Yes, yes.

15:32:05 Q. So there were two days mining for the government and four days free mining, is that what you're saying?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. And what about the seventh day? What would happen on the seventh day?

15:32:23 A. There would be no work. That is a day that is reserved. Nobody goes to work.

Q. During the two days that civilians were mining for the government, what would happen to any diamonds that were found?

A. Well if they found any diamonds they would just see it, but them, where were they taken to?

A. It was meant for the government. It was a government diamond.

Q. And where would the diamond go?

15:35:27 A. Well because at that time the AFRC were the bosses, so whatever diamonds we took from the civilians we would give to the AFRC.

Q. You're referring to "diamonds that we took from the civilians we would give to the AFRC". What would happen to those 15:35:54 diamonds that were given to the AFRC?

A. Well, we had somebody who kept the diamonds when it's accumulated.

Q. When do you mean by "when it's accumulated"?

A. Yes, it was not just a day that they did it. It was not a 15:36:24 day that somebody takes there - somebody who keeps their own diamonds.

Q. When the diamonds were taken, were they taken to any particular place at Tongo Fields?

A. Well, at first they would show them to me and I would see 15:36:46 them. The ones that were meant for the AFRC I'll give to that person who was to take care of them, and I would take them to Mr Bockarie and the person who was meant to keep them will keep them.

Q. When you say, "The ones that were meant for the AFRC I'll 15:37:03 give to that person", who was that person?

A. There was a man whom we called Mopleh.

Q. And then you said "... and I would take them to Mr Bockarie and the person who was meant to keep them will keep them". What do you mean by that?

A. Well every week there were two days for the government, they would excavate gravel for the government as the AFRC, so when they had the diamonds we will take it and bring those diamonds to Mr Bockarie.

15:40:00 Q. Are you referring here to RUF diamonds?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do, if anything, with the diamonds?

A. Like the first diamond that we had, we took that diamond and brought it to Mr Bockarie. That is Sam Bockarie, Mosquito.

15:40:28 Q. What did Sam Bockarie do with the diamond?

A. Well, he called me, Jungle, JR and Lion. We all assembled at his place.

Q. What was his place?

A. He was in a two-storeyed building in Tongo.

15:40:54 Q. This person JR, did you know what his full name was?

A. Yes, his name was Junior Vandi.

Q. And what position did he have, if any?

A. Well, he was a leader. He was Pa Sankoh's bodyguard and he attached him to Sam Bockarie.

15:41:22 Q. And the person Lion, did you know this person Lion by any other name?

A. No, that was the name I knew for him.

Q. And what happened when you went to this two-storey place, two-storey building, in Tongo? What happened to the diamond?

15:41:57 A. Well, we showed the diamond to Sam Bockarie. All of us were present and he thanked us a lot. That was the diamond. We counted those diamonds, parceled them and the diamonds were taken to Liberia.

Q. How did you parcel the diamonds?

A. Well, we put them - we checked them, put them in a paper, cellotaped it and we wrote the total on the envelope - on the paper, sorry.

JUDGE LUSSICK: I note, Ms Baly, this singular diamond has now mushroomed into diamonds plural.

MS BALY: Yes, your Honour:

Q. Can you tell us was it a diamond, or was it more than one diamond?

A. It was not one diamond.

15:42:50 Q. You said that you checked the diamonds. What do you mean by you checked them? What did you do?

A. Well, that's what I explained. I said we parceled them and we wrote the total on the paper.

Q. Can you remember what the total was?

15:43:13 A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?

A. The first one was 43 pieces of diamonds.

Q. After you parceled - packaged them and counted these 43 pieces, what happened to the package?

15:43:34 A. Well Mr Bockarie called Mr Taylor and informed him about the work that we have done, he told him about the total and he too told him that we should hand them over to Jungle who would in turn travel with them.

Q. And how did he talk to Mr Taylor?

15:44:11 A. Well, he sent a satellite. They spoke through a satellite. A satellite phone.

Q. Could you hear Mr Taylor's voice?

A. Yes, because a satellite phone is not like the other communication. When people are conversing you will know, and he told us that he had contacted him so the two of them were talking.

Q. Did you hear what Mr Taylor said?

A. Yes, he thanked him a lot and he told him to hand over the diamond to Jungle who would be able to travel with it.

Q. Did he hand over the diamond to Jungle?

A. Yes, when we handed the diamond over to Jungle they gave the mic - they handed over the mic to Jungle and Jungle confirmed the total to him.

Q. Jungle confirmed the total to who?

A. To Mr Taylor.

Q. What did he do after he confirmed the total?

A. Well, he told him that he should move with it.

Q. Move where?

A. Liberia, because Foya was always the station.

Q. The station for what?

A. That was where the helicopter would pick him up to Monrovia.

Q. Do you know whether Jungle left Tongo Fields?

A. Yes, Jungle left with an escort. Mr Bockarie gave somebody, that is CO Lion, who escorted him up to Foya.

Q. Do you know where he went after Foya?

A. Well, Lion stopped there. I was there when a helicopter picked him up and Lion returned and met us in Tongo.

Q. So, you also went to Foya?

A. At that time, no, I was in Tongo.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Does the witness say the helicopter picked up Lion in Foya - in Tongo Field?

MS BALY: I'm just going to clarify that:

Q. You said, "Well, Lion stopped there." Where did Lion stop?
A. Lion escorted Jungle up to Foya, where the helicopter picked up Jungle to Monrovia.
Q. And where did Lion go?
15:47:11 A. Lion returned. He returned to Tongo. That was where he met us.
Q. Was there ever another occasion when RUF diamonds were handed over to Sam Bockarie?
A. Yes, during that month that I was there it happened twice 15:47:38 when we brought diamonds to Sam Bockarie.
Q. You've told us about one time. I want to ask you to tell us about the second time it happened. This time how many diamonds were involved?
A. Well, the second one we met - by the time Jungle came back 15:48:07 we had got 18 pieces. Among them we had a big one, which was not among the 43 that was first taken.
Q. So you had 18 pieces, including a big diamond. What did you do with the 18 pieces?
A. Well, it was the same procedure. When Jungle came the 15:48:32 diamonds were shown to him at Mr Bockarie's place, because he too wherever - when he was doing it he would have a witness and they will be around when he does the handing over.
Q. Who would have a witness?
A. He, Bockarie. He did not do it alone.
15:48:52 Q. Did you do anything to those 18 diamonds?
A. Yes, we parceled it just like we did the first one, we wrote the total on it and we followed the same procedure as the first one.
Q. Were there any calls made on this occasion?

A. Yes, it's the same way. Mr Bockarie informed Mr Taylor and he told him the total and Jungle too confirmed the total [indiscernible].

Q. Could you hear this particular conversation?

15:49:48 A. Yes, sir, all five of us were in the same place. He told us that he was calling Mr Taylor and they were conversing. They were talking.

Q. When you say all five of you, who was there? Who were the five?

15:50:06 A. I was there, Mosquito was there, Jungle was there, Lion and Junior Vandi, who was Sankoh's bodyguard attached to Mosquito.

Q. What happened after the calls to Charles Taylor?

A. Well, they explained the same thing to him that they have got so and so amount and that we've parceled it. Then he said

15:50:37 they should give the parcel to Jungle, so they thanked the man a lot that he should keep it up.

Q. Who thanked the man?

A. Mr Taylor.

Q. And which man did he thank?

15:50:54 A. Sam Bockarie.

Q. And was the parcel given to Jungle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Jungle do with the parcel?

A. He was given the same escort to the border.

15:51:14 Q. Did Jungle return after he left Tongo Fields on that occasion?

A. Well Jungle came, but he did not meet us in Tongo. By the time he came back my assignment had been changed.

Q. What did your assignment change to? What was your new assignment?

A. Well, we came to Kenema. I and Mr Bockarie were now in Kenema. That was where we were based.
Q. When you say Kenema, whereabouts? Are you talking about 15:52:00 Kenema - whereabouts in Kenema?
A. Well, he was based at the brigade. That is the military headquarters. That was where he was based.
Q. And when you say "he was based there", who are you referring to?
15:52:13 A. Sam Bockarie.
Q. And where were you based?
A. Well, I was not based there at first. I was in Simbech. He made an appointment for me in Simbech and it was in the same town, but we were not in the same place.
15:52:40 Q. Can you just say that name again, that Simbech name?
A. Simbech. Simbech. It's a section in Kenema, Kenema Town.
Q. What was your assignment at Simbech?
A. Well, we were there keeping defence in Kenema. Sometimes if he wanted military operations, he would contact me.
15:53:16 MS BALY: Simbech is S-I-M-B-E-C-H:
Q. And when you say sometimes if he wanted military operations he would contact you, who would contact you?
A. Sam Bockarie.
Q. What rank did you hold at that time?
15:53:44 A. I was still a captain.
Q. Were there any occasions when you were contacted for military operations?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What operations or what assignments did you receive? What operations were you contacted for?

A. When we were in Kenema, at one time Kamajors came to Blama. He called me up, we assembled men and we went there and put that situation under control.

15:54:22 Q. What do you mean by "put that situation under control"?

A. Wherever your enemy was and you go there and capture that place, the mission had been accomplished. That means you've put the situation under control.

MS BALY: And Blama is the spelling that I have, B-L-A-M-A.

15:54:45 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Who is the "he" he referred to?

MS BALY: Yes:

Q. Who was the "he" that you've referred to?

A. Repeat that.

Q. When you were contacted for this military operation, who 15:55:01 contacted you?

A. Sam Bockarie.

MR MUNYARD: I'm sorry to interrupt and it may just be me, but I'm slightly losing track of the time that we're in now. Are we still in the AFRC period, or have we gone beyond that? Could 15:55:30 that be clarified?

MS BALY: Yes, I'll do that:

Q. Mr Witness, you told us that you were in Tongo Fields for about a month. Do you remember saying that?

A. Yes, yes.

15:55:39 Q. What year was it when you left Tongo Fields?

A. It was 1997.

Q. Are you able to say when in 1997 you left Tongo Fields?

A. I cannot tell now. I can't tell now. I'm unable to tell now.

Q. And you had gone to Freetown after the coup? That's so, isn't it?
A. Yes.
Q. And after that you had found yourself in Tongo Fields, correct?
A. Yes, yes.
Q. So it was some time after the coup and after you left Tongo Fields that you found yourself in Kenema Town, is that so?
A. Repeat that.
Q. Your evidence so far in relation to the timing is that you went to Freetown after the coup?
A. Yes.
Q. You were in Freetown for some short time, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And then you had your mission of clearing the road, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And then you were in Tongo Fields for about a month, you said, after that?
A. Yes.
Q. And it was after you left Tongo Fields that you were based in Kenema Town, correct?
A. Yes, yes, that was in the raining season.
Q. Were you in Kenema Town when the ECOMOG intervention took place?
A. Yes, yes, I was at that time in Kenema when intervention took place.
Q. And for how long, just approximately, had you been in Kenema Town when the intervention took place?

A. Well, I was in Kenema for up to three to four months before the intervention took place.

MS BALY: I hope that assists:

Q. And you were telling us about one mission that you accomplished when you were based in Kenema Town. Did you receive any other assignments, or missions, whilst you were based there?

A. No, that was where we were until the intervention.

Q. You've told us that Sam Bockarie was at Kenema Town as well. Were there any other commanders based at Kenema Town when you were there?

A. Yes, commanders were there.

Q. Who were they?

A. Well like the resident minister, he was there. He was a soldier, Eddie Kanneh.

Q. What do you mean by "the resident minister"?

A. Well after the overthrow, anybody who was sent to a region to take control over that area was referred to as a resident minister.

Q. What group was Eddie Kanneh with?

A. AFRC.

Q. Were there any other commanders at Kenema Town?

A. Yes.

Q. Who?

A. Captain Demo Musa was there as the OC secretariat.

Q. What was the OC secretariat?

A. Well, that was a place established after the overthrow where the problems of the soldiers and civilians were looked into.

Q. And what - this person, Captain Demo Musa, what group was

Q. As a captain, did you ever yourself do any training?
A. No, no, I was not involved in any training.
Q. Why did you leave Kenema Town?
A. Well, that was during the intervention that took place in 16:03:35 Freetown. That was the reason why we left, because ECOMOG were advancing from the Bo Waterside end coming towards Kenema.
Q. And where did you go when you left Kenema Town?
A. Well, when I left Kenema we went to Daru.
Q. When you say "we", what did Sam Bockarie do? Was he with 16:04:09 you, or did he stay in Kenema Town?
A. All of us moved together. We all withdrew together.
Q. Did you remain at Daru?
A. No, we were there for some time and then later we moved.
Q. Where did you move to?
16:04:34 A. We moved to Baima. That is seven miles away from Daru.
Q. Baima 7 miles from Daru, is that so? Is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And did you remain at Baima?
A. Yes.
16:05:10 Q. What was your position at Baima?
A. Well, at Baima I had an assignment there as battalion commander and promoted to a lieutenant colonel.
Q. Who gave you that promotion?
A. Mr Sam Bockarie, the acting leader.
16:05:45 Q. Acting leader of what?
A. RUFP.
Q. Why was he an acting leader?
A. Well the leader was not present and, since he was not present, he was acting. He was working as the acting.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Could I just clarify what is this RUFP? Mr Interpreter, did the witness say "RUFP"?

THE INTERPRETER: Yes, your Honours.

MS BALY:

16:06:20 Q. What was RUFP, please?

A. Well, I am sorry about the P. It should be removed from there. RUF, that is the Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone. The P later came, but at that time it was RUF.

Q. And you said that the leader was not present. Firstly, who 16:06:48 are you referring to when you say the leader was not present?

A. Foday Sankoh.

Q. And where was Foday Sankoh at that time, to your knowledge?

A. Foday Sankoh was in detention.

Q. How long did you stay in Baima for?

16:07:11 A. Well, I was in Baima just after the intervention and I was there up to 1999. The end of 1999.

Q. Where was Sam Bockarie based whilst you were based in Baima?

A. Well, Sam Bockarie was based in Buedu.

16:07:42 Q. And how far was Baima from Buedu?

A. Well, from Baima to Buedu is over 40 miles.

Q. At the time that you were based in Baima and Sam Bockarie was based in Buedu, did you have any occasion to visit him at Buedu?

16:08:16 A. Many times.

Q. Did you ever meet with him?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did you meet with him?

A. I met with him in Buedu Town itself.

out they will have it - those on paper, and after the main points were discussed they will have the AOB, that is any other business, and so if you had extra problems, target problems, if you had things that were disturbing you in your own area, like 10:05:41 personal things, the things that used to happen on the front line, shortages, shortages of ammunition. I spoke about shortage of ammunition in my own area and so many other men discussed things that were happening in their own areas, but the major items for which they called the meeting were those ones.
10:06:05 Q. You have referred to this particular meeting, this eight hour meeting, as "The first meeting we held". Was there a meeting - another meeting - after this first meeting?
A. Yes.
Q. How long after the first meeting was the next meeting?
10:06:34 A. Well, it did not take too long. It was within a short period, and it was the time after Mr Bockarie had travelled and returned that we held the meeting; after he had travelled to Burkina Faso and when he returned.
Q. How do you know that Mr Bockarie travelled to Burkina Faso?
10:07:05 A. Well, before he left he told us. He told us, those of us who were around. Especially those of us who were in the Kailahun District, some of the commanders, he told us that he was going to travel.
Q. And did he, as far as you know, travel to Burkina Faso?
10:07:35 A. Yes.
Q. How long was he gone for?
A. Well, that man he went - I think he spent up to a month before he returned.
Q. Did he tell you what he did when he was in Burkina Faso?

A. Well when he returned he did not actually convene a general meeting to tell us what he went for, but when he came the things that he brought that made us to actually believe that he went there because we had never received such items.

10:08:23 Q. What were those things that he brought?

A. He brought sufficient war materials: arms and ammunition, bombs, combats, boots and some other items.

Q. What quantity of arms did he bring?

A. Well I cannot estimate that now, because I was not present

10:09:01 when he arrived and before we arrived there everything was now stored in the ammo dump.

Q. Did you ever learn about what type of arms he brought?

A. Yes.

Q. What were they?

10:09:20 A. He brought AK-47s, he brought G3s.

Q. What are G3s?

A. It is an arm. The Nigerians call it Babangida. That is G3. He brought hand grenades. He brought mines. He brought RPG rockets. He brought the tubes - the RPG tubes. He brought G3

10:10:13 rounds and some other things, but for now those are the ones I can recall. The items were plenty. He brought combats and boots.

Q. What do you mean by combats and boots? What are they?

A. Well, that is what call somebody a soldier. The fatigues

10:10:45 that the soldier puts on are what is referred to as combat and the boots that they normally wear.

Q. Do you know whether Sam Bockarie went to Burkina Faso on his own, or with another person or other people?

A. Well according to him he said it was him and General

Ibrahim, because just as he told us in the first meeting it was the same thing that he told us later. He said he and General Ibrahim. Ibrahim Bah.

Q. Did he tell you at any stage what he had done in Burkina Faso?

10:11:41

A. Well he said he went and met with the President of Burkina Faso, because he went to him personally.

Q. And did he tell you what took place when he met with the President of Burkina Faso?

10:11:59

A. What happened?

Q. Yes, in the meeting with him and the President of Burkina Faso?

A. Repeat, repeat. I am not getting it clearly. I am not getting all.

10:12:24

Q. Did Sam Bockarie tell you what happened in this meeting that he had with the President of Burkina Faso?

A. No, he did not discuss that with me.

Q. Now, you said this second meeting that you held was after Sam Bockarie returned from Burkina Faso. My question is approximately how long after he returned was this second meeting held?

10:12:52

A. Well just as he returned, because it was in December that he returned and at that time it was almost little beyond middle way December, and it was in the same December that we held the meeting.

10:13:21

Q. And what year are we in?

A. It was in 1998.

Q. Where was this meeting - this second meeting - held?

A. At Sam Bockarie's house.

Q. Where was Sam Bockarie's house?
A. That is going towards Foya, Foya Road.
Q. What town was it in?
A. Buedu.
10:14:01 Q. Who was at the meeting?
A. Well, we were up to 12 in number present.
Q. Are you able to name the 12 who were present?
A. Well, I can try. I can try.
Q. Please do.
10:14:26 A. Well Mr Bockarie was present, Issa was present, Morris Kallon was present, Jungle was present, Eddie Kanneh was present, I was present, Major Francis was present, Matthew Barbor was present, Junior Vandi was present, Gbessay Gbobah who is normally referred to as Chucky was present and I think --

10:15:13 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: I am sorry, but could you repeat Chucky's name? Please repeat Chucky's name.

THE WITNESS: Gbessay Gbobah. Gbessay Gbobah.

MS BALY:

Q. Just before I turn to the spellings, can you recall if 10:15:32 anyone else was present?
A. Well, we were 12 in number that particular night that we were present. I don't know how many names I have made mention of, but we were 12 in number.
Q. Now, one person you mentioned who you have not mentioned 10:15:53 before is Major Francis. Was that his full name, or do you know his full name?
A. Well, that was how we used to call him. He was a Gambian, Major Francis.
Q. What was his position?

Q. The other person or another person that you have mentioned is Junior Vandi. Have you mentioned him before?
A. Yes.
Q. Did he have another name apart from Junior?
10:22:57 A. JR.
Q. And you gave some evidence about him yesterday, is that so?
A. Yes.
Q. And the final person you mentioned was this person who you knew as Chucky. I think you said his name - can you repeat 10:23:17 Chucky's actual name?
A. Gbessay Gbobah.
MS BALY: G-B-E-S-S-A-Y for the first name Gbessay. Gbobah, B-G-O-B-A-H [sic]:
Q. Where was Gbessay Gbobah from?
10:23:49 A. Well, he was RUF.
Q. Where did he come from?
A. He was a Sierra Leonean. He was born in Kailahun.
Q. Now what were the topics that were discussed at that particular meeting?
10:24:16 A. Well, firstly we discussed about trying to free the leader and in that case we were to re-attack Kono and go up to Freetown and then free our leader and take over power. We also discussed the disloyalty of SAJ Musa. We discussed that.
Q. In relation to this operation to trying to free the leader, 10:24:54 what leader are you referring to?
A. Foday Sankoh.
Q. You said that there was a plan to attack Kono and then to free the leader and to take power. I want you to explain in more detail what exactly this plan was.

A. Well, when Mr Bockarie came he called on us because there was no need for him to call all the officers again, so those of us who were closer to his location, he invited us. We came to Buedu and then he explained to us that he has brought ammunition, he has brought enough logistics so that we will be able to run any kind of mission. So he said we should now plan how to take the move and that the first target should be Kono, to Makeni, up to Freetown. And that the next target should be Segbwema and Daru, that is heading towards Kenema and to go to the southern province. So those were the things we discussed and the issue of SAJ Musa's disloyalty that he has been doing all along. That was also something we discussed.

Q. When you say the first target should be Kono, to Makeni, up to Freetown, what do you mean by that the first target was to be Kono?

A. Well, Kono is a mining area. In that whole country that is the place we know for high level productivity for diamonds, so we believe that if we were able to capture there first it would have been good for us. That was the reason why Kono - he said Kono should serve as the first target that we should capture.

Q. Were any particular commanders given the role of capturing Kono?

A. Well, yes.

Q. Who?

A. Well, Sam Bockarie told us that this plan was designed in Monrovia with Mr Taylor. He said it was designed in Monrovia so he only brought it to brief us, that this should be the way we should do things so that we will be able to succeed in the war.

Q. Who was it that was going to attack Kono?

A. Well, the commanders were there, Issa was there, Morris Kallon and Superman. They were the most senior men that were supposed to run this mission in those areas.
Q. When you say run this mission in those areas, which areas
10:28:34 are you talking about?
A. Kono.
Q. The plan was then to move on to Makeni, is that right?
A. Yes.
Q. What was to take place at Makeni?
10:28:49 A. Well, they should clear starting from Kono up to Makeni and those are towns that you cannot just jump over and go to Freetown, they were provincial headquarters, you have to pass through them first.
Q. What do you mean when you say, "They should clear"? What 10:29:16 do you mean by "clear"?
A. Clear in the sense - clear in the sense that when as you push forward you shouldn't spare any town, you shouldn't jump over any town, you shouldn't leave any town untouched. You have to pass through them all and make sure that they are under 10:29:41 control. That is what I mean by "clear".
Q. What commanders were given the role of clearing Makeni?
A. It was Issa who was the overall for that operation and Morris Kallon was his deputy and Superman was third in command.
Q. Then you said on to Freetown. Was anyone given the role of 10:30:23 moving on to Freetown?
A. Yes, they gave the mission to somebody.
Q. Who?
A. Well, Sam Bockarie sent the message to SAJ Musa even before they attacked Kono but he refused. He rejected the orders. He said he cannot take orders from him, so there was a heated argument over the issue.

Q. When you refer to this heated argument, did it take place in this meeting?

10:31:06 A. You mean whether the argument took place during the meeting?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, after the meeting he called him, but in fact the argument had started for a long time ago.

10:31:25 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, we did caution you about saying "he called him". Please use names so that we can follow. Please repeat your answer.

THE WITNESS: Okay. Well, repeat the question.

MS BALY:

10:31:43 Q. The question was when you were referring to a heated argument I asked you whether the heated argument took place in the meeting that you have been giving evidence about?

A. After the meeting, but there had been arguments even before the meeting, before this mission there had been an argument. 10:32:07 Just at the time Sam Bockarie sent the message to all the stations, right from that time SAJ Musa was not happy about it. He was disgruntled right up to this mission time and after they had held the meeting. He sent the same order to SAJ Musa and he refused even before the Kono thing.

10:32:32 Q. I am going to come back to this issue about SAJ Musa in a moment, all right? One of the things you said was that the next target was to be Segbwema and Daru.

A. Yes.

Q. Who, if anyone, was given the role of taking Segbwema and Daru?

A. I was.
Q. Now the second issue that you said that was discussed at the meeting was SAJ Musa.
10:33:21 A. Yes.
Q. What was it about SAJ Musa that was discussed at the meeting?
A. Well, Sam Bockarie told us that the complaint had gone up to Mr Taylor, that the man's complaints had been lodged about his 10:33:44 disloyalty towards the mission, and he too gave his own piece of advice just so that --
Q. Can I just ask you to pause there for a moment. Once again it's important that you use people's names. Sam Bockarie told you that a complaint had gone up to Mr Taylor, "That the man's 10:34:07 complaint", who is the man that made the complaint?
A. Sam Bockarie lodged the complaint to Mr Taylor against SAJ Musa regarding his attitude.
Q. What was it about SAJ Musa's attitude that he complained about?
10:34:30 A. He said he was a man who did not take any order from people. He was disloyal to the command.
Q. At the meeting was there any other discussion about SAJ Musa, apart from the fact that Sam Bockarie had made a complaint to Mr Taylor?
10:35:02 A. Yes, Mr Bockarie made us to understand that that man should not leave to tell the story and the only way we were to --
Q. What man?
A. SAJ Musa. SAJ Musa.
Q. SAJ Musa should not leave to tell the story. Continue from there?

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Not live. The record says "leave", but it is actually L-I-V-E, I imagine.

MS BALY: Yes:

10:35:34 Q. What did you say? Can you repeat your answer? You said, "Mr Bockarie made us to understand that that man should not ..." Can you continue from there?

A. He said we should go all out to ensure that that man should not live to tell the story.

10:35:54 PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Interpreter, what word did the witness use?

THE INTERPRETER: Live to tell the story.

PRESIDING JUDGE: L-E-A-V-E?

THE INTERPRETER: L-I-V-E.

10:36:04 MS BALY:

Q. And just so it is clear, what man should not live to tell the story?

A. SAJ Musa.

Q. Did Sam Bockarie say anything else about SAJ Musa not 10:36:21 living to tell the story?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Now, take it slowly and tell us what he said.

A. He said we should only be able to get him when there was a mission, when there was operation going on. He even made us to 10:36:43 understand that that was something he had been discussing with Gullit, that during any mission that man should not live. He should die because he was a traitor. He referred to him as a traitor.

Q. Did Sam Bockarie say how SAJ Musa was to die?

A. Well, in the military terms they say it should be during operations. You know, if they will mean arms. He should die during the battle. He should be shot.

Q. Did he say who should shoot him?

10:37:30 A. He just told us that he had spoken to Gullit and that the two of them had been discussing that even before Gullit went to where SAJ Musa was. That was what he made us to understand.

Q. He made you to understand that he had been discussing this with Gullit, is that what you are saying?

10:37:53 A. Yes, yes.

Q. Did he make you understand who was to do the killing of SAJ Musa?

A. It was the discussion that he had with Gullit. He did not specify who should do the shooting, but the discussion had been 10:38:13 going on together with Gullit.

Q. This particular meeting, how long did it go on for?

A. It was a very short meeting, just for three hours, because it was at night and we did not even want Johnny Paul to know.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Ms Baly, I am not clear from the record

10:38:41 when this meeting took place.

MS BALY: I think we actually have that. It is mid-December. He did give the evidence that the meeting took place in December of 1998 and he said around the middle, if I can just find it. I can clear it with the witness now:

10:39:12 Q. Mr Witness, I am going to ask you again when was it that this meeting - this second meeting - took place?

A. It was at night in December.

Q. December what year?

A. 1998.

Q. Are you able to say - and please tell us if you can't say - when in December the meeting took place, or when abouts?
A. I cannot recall the exact date now, but it was at night that we held the meeting. I cannot recall the date.
10:39:53 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Ms Baly, the witness mentioned a phrase that SAJ Musa was disloyal to the command. What command? I would like to know.
MS BALY:
Q. What command was SAJ Musa disloyal to?
10:40:10 A. The RUF command.
Q. Was he disloyal to the RUF command generally, or was it some commander in the RUF specifically?
A. Well, I believe in the RUF if somebody was disloyal to Sam Bockarie's command then that should be that you are disloyal to 10:40:35 the RUF command because he was the head.
Q. Thank you.
A. Thank you too.
Q. This meeting - this three hour short meeting - was there anything else discussed apart from the plan to attack Freetown
10:40:54 and the SAJ Musa issue?
A. Yes.
Q. What?
A. Well, at that time even the leader who had his revolution was there. That should be the first target, to go to Pademba
10:41:18 Road and to free - to release the leader, and second we were to go to State House and overthrow the President and if possible, if we met him there, we should kill him.
Q. Just so it is clear, what President was to be overthrown and if possible killed?

A. President Kabbah.
Q. And what leader was to be released from Pademba Road?
A. Foday Sankoh.
Q. The person Jungle who you discussed yesterday, was he at this meeting?
10:42:02
A. Yes, yes, he was part of this 12 man meeting.
Q. Did Jungle speak at the meeting?
A. Yes, later, after the plan had gone on, Sam Bockarie spoke to Mr Taylor about the plan, how the mission was to carry on, and -- 10:42:37
THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat his last answer?
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter asks that you repeat your last answer. Please pick up from the point where you said "... how the mission was to carry on". Continue from there.
10:42:48
THE WITNESS: They briefed President Taylor, the former President, about the plan how it was set. After that Jungle too buttressed the same topic to him, how the plan had been made, and he in turn thanked them and told them to carry on and that he said he would pray that the mission would be successful.
10:43:25
PRESIDING JUDGE: Just a moment. "Jungle too buttressed the same topic to him", who is him?
THE WITNESS: To Mr Taylor.
MS BALY:
Q. How did --
10:43:42
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Ms Baly, the question you asked previously was did this man Jungle speak at the meeting and then the answer that follows doesn't answer your question.
MS BALY: I will go back to that:

Q. My question - and just listen carefully to the question - is I am referring to in the meeting, this three hour meeting, during the meeting did Jungle speak?
A. Yes.
10:44:12 Q. What did Jungle say in the meeting?
A. Well, in the first place Jungle himself told us about the material that Mr Bockarie had brought and that we should not fear this time round and that there was no force that could withstand us. That was what he said in the meeting and he said he had 10:44:39 discussed it with the Pa in Monrovia even before they came.
Q. And did he say what the Pa had said in Monrovia?
A. Yes, it was just what Sam Bockarie told us. He just spoke about the same issues Sam Bockarie had spoken about, that the Pa had said our first target should be Kono before we should 10:45:13 proceed. That was what he too explained.
Q. When you are saying "he", "he too explained", who are you referring to? Who was the "he too that explained"?
A. Mr Taylor.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Well, Mr Taylor was not in the meeting.
10:45:40 MS BALY: I know, your Honour:
Q. The questions I have been asking you are about what Jungle said in the meeting and you have told us that Jungle said he had some discussion with the Pa in Monrovia about the plan. I am going to ask you - my question is did Jungle say in the meeting
10:46:12 what the Pa had said to Jungle in Monrovia?
A. Yes, that is what I explained. I said they were the ones who came, so he too told us about the materials that had been brought for the mission and that the Pa - that they had discussed with the Pa how the mission should go on. That is Pa Taylor.

MR MUNYARD: I am sorry, but now I don't know who the "they" is. I said, "They were the ones who came". Can we please find out from the witness who he is talking about at this stage?

MS BALY:

10:46:54 Q. Now what you said a moment ago was, "I said they were the ones who came". Who are "they" that came?

A. Jungle. Jungle.

Q. So, Jungle is one person?

A. And Sam Bockarie.

10:47:14 Q. And Jungle and Sam Bockarie you have already told us were both at the meeting, is that right?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Now apart from Jungle telling you that he had discussed the plan with the Pa in Monrovia, did Jungle say anything else at the 10:47:36 meeting? At the meeting?

A. Well, that is what he said. That is what he said.

Q. After the meeting, immediately after the meeting, what did you do?

A. After the meeting, I returned to my area of operation to be 10:48:09 able to start preparation for my own responsibility that was given to me so that I would carry it out.

Q. Before we go to that, this meeting you said was held at night. About what time in the night was the meeting held?

A. That meeting I will think it was 9 o'clock, or thereafter.

10:48:45 Q. It went for approximately three hours. Did it finish around midnight?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. On that night immediately after you left, or immediately after the meeting had finished, did you see Jungle?

A. After the meeting had concluded?
Q. Yes, immediately after.
A. Yes, yes. I saw Jungle.
Q. What did Jungle do immediately after the meeting?
10:49:34 A. Because that time was night all of us went to bed.
Q. You gave some evidence about five or ten minutes ago about Jungle --

MR MUNYARD: Can I ask my learned friend to be very careful not to lead. I am simply putting down a marker, that's all.

10:50:00 MS BALY: Thank you. I won't lead. I will turn to what he said. Just pardon me for a moment. Excuse me, I am just trying to find a certain place:

Q. You gave some evidence earlier when you used the phrase, "They briefed President Taylor".
10:51:21 A. Yes, yes, but the question that I heard just now was after, after the meeting. After the meeting and during the meeting are not the same questions. I spoke about after the meeting and after the meeting everybody went to bed. If you had told me during the meeting what everybody said --

10:51:39 PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness.

THE WITNESS: Yes, yes.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Counsel has a different question. Listen to the question, please.

MS BALY:

10:51:48 Q. The question is: Who briefed President Taylor?
A. First it was Sam Bockarie. He held the phone and spoke to the Pa. He briefed him about the arrangement we had done about the mission and later Jungle himself went on the same phone and spoke on the same topic to President Taylor, that we had arranged everything to run the mission.

Q. Where was this phone?

A. It was the same veranda at the back of Mr Bockarie's house. The veranda at the back. That was where the phone was.

10:52:39 Q. What type of phone was it?

A. It was a satellite phone.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Ms Baly, I am still unclear about this area. This witness, when you asked him what happened in the meeting, he then spoke about this testimony you are considering

10:53:04 and he says, "Yes, later after the plan had gone on Sam Bockarie spoke to Mr Taylor about the plan, how the mission was to carry on" and et cetera, et cetera. Now, this later, how much later was this after the meeting is what I would like to know and how this witness knew about this conversation I would also like to 10:53:28 know.

MS BALY:

Q. When you gave some evidence and Justice Sebutinde has just read out some of the things that you said about conversation with Charles Taylor by Sam Bockarie about the plan, where were you 10:53:53 when that conversation took place?

A. All of us were in the veranda where the meeting was held. I was at the veranda myself. I was part of the meeting.

Q. Did this conversation take place during, or as part of the meeting, or at the conclusion, or after the meeting?

10:54:24 A. About the time the meeting was to be ended. All of us, 12 of us were there.

Q. Are you saying the 12 of you were there when the conversation took place?

A. Yes, because the meeting had not ended yet so all 12 of us were still there.

Q. Just so that it's clear, who was doing the talking on the satellite phone?
A. I said first it was Mr Bockarie.
10:55:10 Q. Just so it's clear, and I know you have gone over this, but just take it one step at a time, what exactly did Sam Bockarie say at that time on the phone?
A. He told him about the mission that had been discussed in Monrovia. He said he had come and put it to the senior officers 10:55:37 and that was the meeting that was going on and that the same plan he had given to him was the same plan they had come to discuss.
Q. Same plan that they had given to who?
A. Sam Bockarie.
Q. After Sam Bockarie spoke you said Jungle spoke.
10:56:05 PRESIDING JUDGE: Who gave the plan?
THE WITNESS: Mr Taylor. Mr Taylor.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you.
MS BALY:
Q. After Sam Bockarie spoke, did anybody else speak?
10:56:17 A. Yes.
Q. Who?
A. Jungle.
Q. And what did Jungle say?
A. He repeated the same thing to Mr Taylor, because he was the 10:56:35 representative for him in the RUF, so he explained the same thing to him; that the plan they had discussed in Monrovia, they had come and put it to the senior officers and they had assured him that they would go ahead with the plan.
Q. How long did this conversation or did these conversations take?

A. They did not take long. It was just short conversations, just as what I have explained. It was not a long thing. I did not, for example, look at my watch to see how many minutes or 10:57:21 hours, but it was just a short conversation.
Q. After the conversation is that when you went to sleep for the night?
A. Yes, all of us went to sleep.
Q. The next day --
10:57:41 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Ms Baly, I would also like to know, and this is why I asked, how does this witness know about this conversation? I don't know how the satellite phone works but I can understand him listening to Bockarie and Jungle. How does he know who was on the other side?
10:58:00 MS BALY:
Q. Mr Witness, how do you know who was on the other side of the satellite phone who Sam Bockarie and Jungle were talking to?
A. Well, they told us that they were talking to Mr Taylor, that they were calling Pa Taylor. And when they called the 10:58:24 conversation was going on, we were not hearing what the other side, but when the other side was talking they were responding and the discussion was going on. They said it was Mr Taylor.
Q. During the actual talking that was going on did you hear Mr Taylor's name mentioned?
10:58:49 A. Yes, sir.
MS BALY: I hope that makes it clear how he knew:
Q. The next day what did you do?
A. Well, the next day he invited us again to go and see the armament that he had brought, the logistics that he had brought.

A. I moved and took them to my base at Baiima.
Q. What were the materials that Sam Bockarie had given you?
A. He gave me AK rounds and RPG rockets.
Q. Was there another subsequent occasion when you were 12:22:17 involved with obtaining arms and ammunition for the RUF?
A. Yes.
Q. When was this second occasion?
A. That was in 1998 still.
Q. When abouts in 1998?
12:22:48 A. Well after this mission, because this other one was around March to April, it was not too long. It was a short time. That was the time ULIMO and the LURD forces invaded Lofa.
Q. At the time that the ULIMO and the LURD forces invaded Lofa, where were you?
12:23:21 A. I was in Baiima at my battalion.
Q. And how did you become involved on that occasion in obtaining the arms and the ammunition?
A. The commander called me again - that is Mosquito - at the same place, Buedu, and explained the issue to me, that that was 12:23:57 what the Pa had told him that those men had invaded his men at Lofa County.
Q. Just pause there, please. When you say "that was what the Pa had told him", the Pa had told who?
A. He had told Mosquito.
12:24:20 Q. And who had told Mosquito?
A. Mr Taylor.
Q. Now you said that, "those men had invaded his men at Lofa County". Who were those men who invaded and who were his men?
A. The LURD forces.

Q. And who had the LURD forces invaded?
A. Charles Taylor.
Q. And what else did Sam Bockarie tell you?
A. So, he said we were to put men together and to go and help 12:25:02 to clear the enemy from that place.
Q. And what did you do when you were told to put men together and to go and help to clear the enemy?
A. Well, he gave me my own task that I was to go and prepare men in Kono and that Issa Sesay and --
12:25:30 THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat this.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Please pause, Mr Witness. You have to speak a little slower for the interpreter and he has asked you to repeat part of your answer. Go to the point where you said, "I 12:25:44 was to go and prepare men in Kono and that Issa Sesay", pick up from there, please.
THE WITNESS: I was to go and prepare manpower for that same mission and he said he had told Issa and Morris Kallon to do the same preparation in Kono.
12:26:08 MS BALY:
Q. Did you prepare manpower?
A. Yes.
Q. What did you do in relation to the manpower?
A. I brought them to Buedu.
12:26:22 Q. How many men did you bring to Buedu?
A. One platoon.
Q. How many in one platoon?
A. 62 in number.
Q. What did you do when you got to Buedu?

A. We waited for the troops. All the troops were brought together and we called a formation.
Q. After the troops came together and you called a formation, what happened then?
12:27:06 A. We divided the number into two groups and we divided them and told them that they were to enter at two flanks.
Q. Where were you to enter?
A. Well, Sam Bockarie and I were to enter by the Foya axis.
Q. Where were you entering into?
12:27:38 A. Foya. Foya.
Q. Where was the other flank to enter?
A. They too were to enter by Vahun.
Q. And did you and Sam Bockarie enter by the Foya axis?
A. Yes.
12:28:01 Q. What did you do?
A. We attacked the Foya Town.
Q. Who did you attack?
A. The LURD forces.
Q. Were you successful in attacking the LURD forces?
12:28:24 A. Yes.
Q. Where did the LURD forces go after you attacked them?
A. They went to Kolahun.
Q. And where did you go?
A. We chased them and we went to that same Kolahun.
12:28:43 Q. Where did you chase them to?
A. Voinjama.
Q. What happened when you got to Voinjama?
A. When we got there, that was their base. We fought against them for the whole day. Thankfully we were able to capture the place.

Q. When you say you thankfully you were able to capture the place, what place did you capture?

A. Voinjama.

12:29:16 Q. What happened after you captured Voinjama?

A. We had an order from Benjamin Yeaten to chase the men right to where they had come from.

Q. Where had they come from?

A. They said they had come from Guinea.

12:29:39 Q. Did you chase them to Guinea?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened after you chased them to Guinea?

A. We captured a town that was called Bayalo in Guinea.

Q. What did you do after you captured the town?

12:30:11 A. We received order to burn the entire town and that we did.

Q. Who did you receive the order from?

A. From Benjamin Yeaten.

Q. What happened after you had burnt the entire town?

A. We withdrew back to Voinjama.

12:30:36 Q. And what happened after you got to Voinjama?

A. We passed the night there and in the morning we put our men together and we returned to Foya. Then we left the Liberians there.

Q. Where did you go?

12:30:56 A. Then Sam Bockarie took me to go to Monrovia.

Q. Did Sam Bockarie tell you why you were going to Monrovia?

A. He said Mr Taylor had invited him for us to go and receive morale booster.

Q. Did you go to Monrovia?

A. Yes.
Q. Who went to Monrovia?
A. I went and Sam Bockarie went too and one of his bodyguards called Magazine. All of us went.
12:31:42 Q. You, Sam Bockarie and Magazine. Did anybody else go?
A. Well, we were the ones who went.
Q. How did you get to Monrovia?
A. That same military helicopter with the combat colour picked us from Foya.
12:32:08 Q. And where did you go when you got to Monrovia?
A. We landed at a field that I did not know. That is in the Monrovia city.
Q. Had you been to Monrovia city before?
A. No.
12:32:37 Q. When you landed in this field that you didn't know, where did you go to from there?
A. A vehicle came to receive us and we drove together with Benjamin Yeaten and we went to Benjamin Yeaten's place, White Flower.
12:33:03 Q. Where did you meet Benjamin Yeaten?
A. Well, this helicopter that came, all of us travelled in it.
Q. Where did you meet Benjamin Yeaten?
A. Foya. Foya.
Q. Had he come in the helicopter?
12:33:26 A. Yes, yes.
Q. You went to Benjamin Yeaten's place at White Flower. What did you do when you went to --
A. Yes.
Q. -- his place at White Flower?

A. We saw that the number was more than the number of people and we knew it would not be sufficient if we decided to distribute it amongst everybody, so we had wounded soldiers and we decided that, well, let the money be used to buy drugs for the 12:41:01 wounded soldiers so that they would be treated.
Q. You said that the money - that Sam Bockarie had said the money was for a morale booster. What do you mean by a morale booster?
A. Well when you do something and somebody's happy for you, 12:41:27 he's appreciative, in military terms whatever he gives to you as compensation is what we refer to as morale booster.
Q. Was there any other occasion when you were involved in obtaining arms and ammunition --
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Ms Baly, before you leave this subject, 12:41:45 what is it on this occasion that they were supposed to have done for Mr Taylor for which he was rewarding them?
MS BALY: Thank you. Thank you, Justice Sebutinde:
Q. What was it that you had done for which you received this morale booster?
12:42:04 A. The invasion that the LURD forces had done, when we had cleared them and those three big targets, that was the encouragement. A sign of encouragement for us.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: What three big targets? I'm sorry, I don't --
12:42:24 MS BALY:
Q. You've given some evidence earlier about when you fought the LURD and just now you mentioned that you had cleared them and those three big targets. What do you mean by the three big targets?

A. Foya was one of the big targets, Vahun was another and Kolahun. In fact it was four, sorry. Kolahun was another and Voinjama, which was the main target.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: And these are all places in?

12:43:05 MS BALY:

Q. Whereabouts are these places?

A. They were in Lofa County.

Q. And you gave some evidence not so long ago about fighting the LURD. Were these four places places that you fought the 12:43:23 LURD?

A. Yes, yes, yes, that was where we fought against the LURD forces first. The first target.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: It's also not clear to me this ammunition that was given, what it was for.

12:43:43 MS BALY: I was coming to that:

Q. The ammunition that you were given when you were in Monrovia, do you know what it was for?

A. For us to bring it to our zone when we would be returning, because we captured a large cache of ammunition for arms during 12:44:07 that attack.

Q. When you say "for us to bring it to our zone when we would be returning", what do you mean?

A. The RUF zone where we were. RUF territory.

Q. And where had you captured this large cache of ammunition

12:44:28 for arms during that attack? What do you mean by that?

A. That was their main base, Voinjama, and we captured the whole ammo dump.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: So these arms were to be brought to Voinjama, right?

MS BALY: No, your Honour, I'll clarify that:

Q. The arms that you captured, you captured from Voinjama. Is that so?

A. Yes, sir.

12:44:57 Q. And the ammunition that you got from Monrovia later and that you took back with you was to be used --

A. What?

Q. You gave some evidence that you got some ammunition in Monrovia from Charles Taylor?

12:45:24 A. Yes.

Q. What was that ammunition to be used for?

A. Already we had accomplished the mission. We had come to the base where we captured first, that is Foya. That was where they waited for us. It was for us to bring it to Sierra Leone, 12:45:51 that was why he gave it to us, because the mission had been accomplished there.

Q. And the mission that you're referring to is what mission that had been accomplished?

A. The four towns where the LURD forces had occupied, we had 12:46:11 already cleared the towns and they had returned to Guinea. That was the mission I was talking about its accomplishment.

Q. And it was during that mission that you captured the arms and ammunition from the Voinjama LURD base, is that so?

A. Yes, sir.

12:46:32 Q. And the ammunition that you got separately from Monrovia was also - was taken back to Sierra Leone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was it used for?

A. Well, at that time we were at war. That was not during peace time. We brought it to our bases - our base. That is Buedu.

Q. And was it left at Buedu?

A. Yes, the ones that the commanders were able to see we left them there and the ones that we were able to take to our various targets we did.

Q. Did you take any of the ammunition?

A. Yes, I too took some with me.

Q. And what did you do with that ammunition?

A. I was on the defensive. Whenever ECOMOG would attack, I would go to repel them using the ammunition.

Q. Was there a third occasion when you yourself were involved in obtaining arms and ammunition for the RUF?

A. Yes, I was involved in another one again.

Q. When was this other one?

A. That was 2000, after the May incident that occurred in Freetown.

Q. What was the May incident that occurred in Freetown?

A. There was some problem between RUF and the Government of Sierra Leone.

Q. What was the problem?

A. Our men and the UN had some clash in the Northern Province and a lot of the UN personnel were captured. That was the problem that went right up to Freetown. Even the civilians and the soldiers, the government demonstrated against the RUF who were in Freetown because that was their own zone. So, that was the problem.

Q. And when abouts in May did this incident take place, if you know?

THE PROSECUTOR OF
THE SPECIAL COURT
V.
CHARLES GHANKAY TAYLOR

TRIAL

TRIAL CHAMBER II

Before the Judges:	Justice Teresa Doherty, Presiding Justice Richard Lussick Justice Julia Sebutinde Justice Al Hadji Malick Sow, Alternate
For Chambers:	Mr William Romans Ms Sidney Thompson
For the Registry:	Ms Rachel Irura
For the Prosecution:	Ms Brenda J Hollis Mr Christopher Santora Ms Julia Baly Ms Maja Dimitrova
For the accused Charles Ghankay Taylor:	Mr Terry Munyard Mr Morris Anyah

MR MUNYARD: Yes, certainly. It is 8 May and I am looking at pages 9356 onwards at the moment. That's not right at the beginning of it, but I just want to be - I was really concerned about, or interested in, the use of the word "buttressed":

12:16:54 Q. You gave a list of the people who were there and --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Are we now talking about the Giema meeting?

MR MUNYARD: Yes, yes. Giema is the first of the three meetings. I think Ms Baly and I - I hope we can agree that's 12:17:12 right. Just so everybody understands, there is Giema, then there is Waterworks and then the third meeting is at a later stage. But in any event Giema first, Waterworks second and then there is another meeting which must be at Sam Bockarie's premises because

12:17:48 the evidence is that he goes and shows them materials brought from Burkina Faso stored near to his house. So I think we are agreed on that:

Q. I just want to ask you and I think you did say about - that it was Foday Sankoh who said although he had signed for peace that you still had to be prepared for war, but I am interested in 12:18:09 the use of this word "buttressed". Now it certainly is in here, I had it a moment ago and now it's gone. Do you agree, Mr Kanneh, that you used the word "buttressed" at page 9359, yes - did Jungle say anything at the meeting, foot of page 9358, "Yes, he too buttressed what the Pa had said." Now why was there 12:19:01 any need for this man Jungle to buttress what the Pa had said?

A. Well, Jungle - that was the first day that the Pa presented him that when he was going to present - give the promotion to Sam Bockarie Jungle would become Mr Taylor's representative in the RUF, so that was the reason, he has got a new appointment. That was the cause.

Q. So had you ever met Jungle before this particular date?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was he before he was made Mr Taylor's representative?

12:19:50

A. Jungle and others came with the war. He was NPFL. They entered.

Q. Yes, so he has been with you for some time, but are you saying he has now become Mr Taylor's representative?

12:20:19

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did Mr Taylor have another representative before Jungle?

A. No.

Q. So why did he suddenly need a representative in the form of Jungle?

12:20:39

A. Well I can't know that, because when the leader came from the peace accord he passed through there before coming, so I was unable to ask him about why he has made this man the Pa's representative.

Q. Did anybody --

12:20:59

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: I am a bit lost. Was it Foday Sankoh who made Jungle the Pa's representative?

THE WITNESS: It was Foday Sankoh who told us that he was the Pa's representative. Whether they arranged with the Pa or not I don't know, but he said that was the Pa's eye in the movement. Not Foday Sankoh's eye, but Mr Taylor's.

12:21:28

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Jungle, that is, who was the Pa's eye?

THE WITNESS: Yes, yes, Jungle. Yes, sir.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. And this is right at the beginning of 1997, or the very end of 1996 depending on which version of - which account one takes?
A. Take the end of 1996.
Q. All right, we will. How were relations between the RUF and 12:22:28 Mr Taylor between the years 1993 and 1997?
A. Well as far as I know from 1992 - in the middle of 1992 up to 1996 there was no relationship between the RUF and Mr Taylor, as far as I know. From 1993 up to the time that Sankoh came with this topic, there was no communication. There was no 12:23:05 relationship between us and Mr Taylor.
Q. And what changed that situation, as far as you are aware?
A. Well it was the infiltration by ULIMO into NPFL territory, when it took the border from Lofa up to Robertsport. So, it cut off all communication between us and Mr Taylor.
12:23:39 Q. Well, cut off physical connections between you. That would not cut off personal connections between you and Mr Taylor, would it?
A. Yes.
Q. In fact personal communications between the RUF and 12:24:02 Mr Taylor were cut off as well as the physical connection, weren't they?
A. Well except maybe it is between him and the leader personally, but what I know that was happening openly during my own time, that is what I am trying to talk about. That was 12:24:29 cutting off now. We were not having any material, or any other thing that I knew about.
Q. Are you familiar with the series of operations Tap 10, Tap 20, Tap 40 and Tap Final? Do you know anything about those, Mr Kanneh?

Q. Now before that meeting had you been getting arms and ammunition from Liberia for free, in other words without having to pay for them?

A. Well, I personally had not gone alone to Liberia to get 13:15:00 ammunition. I usually moved with commanders. I never knew how the transactions went on, whether they bought them or they gave them just like that. So I can't know that.

Q. All right. I am going to move on, please, to the next meeting. This is the third meeting that takes place at Sam 13:15:24 Bockarie's house. Now this is a meeting that takes place after Sam Bockarie came back from Burkina Faso. That's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when do you say this meeting occurred?

13:15:42 A. It was at night.

Q. All right. I am going to come on to the time of day, but, first of all, what time of year?

A. It should be around December.

Q. Right. At what hour of night --

13:16:09 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Of which year?

MR MUNYARD: I thought he'd said.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: He hasn't said. Mr Witness --

THE WITNESS: 1998.

MR MUNYARD:

13:16:23 Q. What time of night was this meeting?

A. Around 9 or 10.

Q. Well, you said when you were giving evidence earlier to the Prosecution that it started at about 9, lasted three hours and ended about midnight. Do you remember saying that?

A. Repeat that. Let me get it clearly.
Q. Do you remember telling the Court when you were giving your evidence to Ms Baly that this meeting started about 9, lasted three hours and ended about midnight?
13:17:09 A. Here? In this Court yesterday?
Q. Yes. And that's not actually right, is it? It started later and ended later, didn't it?
A. It started at 9 and when it ended we went to bed. That was what I made mention of here.
13:17:38 Q. Could it have started as late as 11 at night?
A. No.
Q. Page 44309, please, about halfway down the page we see a sentence that reads, "The following questions refer to the time after Sam Bockarie came back from Burkina Faso." Mr Kanneh, you 13:18:26 were asked a question, or it has been recorded at any rate that you were asked the question, "Was there another meeting at Sam Bockarie's house that took place at night?" Were you asked that question?
A. If at the time Sam Bockarie came whether there was a 13:18:48 meeting held in his premises?
Q. This is the interview of 1 November last year. Do you remember being asked, "Was there another meeting at Sam Bockarie's house at night?"
A. Yes, this is the meeting you are trying to talk about.
13:19:09 That is the meeting.
Q. And the answer that is recorded at the bottom of that page is, "Yes, it took place from 11 p.m. to 2 a.m." Did you say that?
A. Well, that was the time. The misunderstanding was with the time, whether it is 11 or 9, if I said so then I'm sorry.

Q. So you agree that it did take place from 11 p.m. to 2 am?
A. Yes, sir. Let's take the 11, the one that I had said before.
13:19:55 Q. Right. So you think that the answer that you gave nearer to the time of these events is likely to be more accurate than the evidence that you have given in court. Do you agree?
A. If it's this particular one the time is 11 at night?
Q. Do you agree that the answers that you gave to questions 13:20:29 that were asked nearer to the time of the events you were discussing are likely to be more accurate than your evidence in court if there is a disagreement between --
A. No, no.
Q. Hang on, if there is a disagreement between the evidence 13:20:46 you give in court and the answers that you appear to have given nearer to the time of the events?
A. No.
Q. And it was after this meeting ended that you all gathered round on the veranda and a phone call was made to Mr Taylor, yes?
13:21:11 A. Yes.
Q. So at 2 o'clock in the morning some time in December of 1998 your colleagues decide to ring up Mr Taylor in Liberia and wake him up, if indeed he was asleep, and give him the news of this meeting? Is that what you were telling the Court?
13:21:40 A. Our colleagues? Repeat starting from that side. That our colleagues woke up Mr Taylor, please repeat that question, sir.
Q. Are you telling the Court that at some time after 2 o'clock in the morning on a night in December 1998 your group of commanders telephoned Mr Taylor to give him the news of the decisions that were taken at that meeting?

A. It was not the commanders. It was Sam Bockarie. Sam Bockarie, yes, sir.
Q. All right, Sam Bockarie rang him at 2 in the morning to 13:22:28 tell him what had been decided, yes?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was Mr Taylor's job at this time, December 1998?
A. Mr Taylor was President of Liberia.
Q. Yes. Did Sam Bockarie discuss whether or not he should be 13:22:50 calling the President of Liberia at 2 in the morning, or perhaps it could wait until the next day? Was that discussed at all?
A. No.
Q. Did this telephone call take place at all, Mr Kanneh?
A. Yes, sir.
13:23:16 Q. Now this is the group of 12, isn't it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You told us on a number of occasions in your earlier evidence that there were 12 of you gathered together for this particular meeting, and were all 12 of you gathered on the 13:23:49 veranda for Mr Taylor to be given this information at 2 in the morning?
A. Yes, sir, it was during the meeting. All 12 of us were present, sir.
Q. You told us yesterday, or last week, that it was after the 13:24:18 meeting ended. Are you now saying it was during the meeting that this phone call was made?
A. We were not scattered. The meeting went - this call went on immediately after the meeting.
Q. How did you know it was Mr Taylor who Sam Bockarie was talking to?

A. Well, he told us that he called President Taylor for him to give him details about the meeting.
Q. Well you wouldn't need him to tell you that if you were all 13:25:17 gathered round while he is talking to Mr Taylor, would you?
A. Repeat that.
Q. Your answer just now was, "Well, he told us that he called President Taylor for him to give him details about the meeting." Why would he tell you that he called President Taylor if you were 13:25:45 all standing there when the call was being made?
A. I did not say he told us that he called Mr Taylor. He said he is going to call, he is calling Mr Taylor. I did not say that he did say he had called Mr Taylor.
Q. Well actually you did, because I have just read from the 13:26:25 transcript the very words you used, page 91, line 6, "Well, he told us that he called President Taylor for him to give him details about the meeting." There is no need for him to tell you that he called them if you were all there, is there?
A. No, he said he was going to call.
13:26:57 Q. And who was it who called him? Who was it who called Mr Taylor?
A. Sam Bockarie.
Q. Anyone else?
A. Well he spoke with somebody else, but he was the one who 13:27:23 called him.
Q. And the somebody else he spoke to was who?
A. Jungle.
Q. And this is Jungle doing another bit of buttressing of what the first person had said, is that right?

A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr Kanneh, can you help us with this. Why was it necessary each time someone said something for Jungle to buttress it?
A. Well for us to have confidence about what was said about 13:28:04 Jungle, that he was the Pa's eye there. I think that was just it. That was just the reason.
Q. Well I am going to come back to this in a second, but I just before we break for lunch want to go through the 12 people who were there and we can see the participants on page 44310.
13:29:01 PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard, I regret that I don't think you will have time. We are just about at the lunchtime adjournment time.
MR MUNYARD: We will deal with it --
PRESIDING JUDGE: If you have 12 names it will take a 13:29:15 while, I suspect.
MR MUNYARD: I think there may be more than 12 names, your Honour.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, we are now going to take the lunchtime adjournment. We will break for one hour and start 13:29:25 again at 2.30. Please adjourn court until 2.30.
[Lunch break taken at 1.30 p.m.]
[Upon resuming at 2.30 p.m.]
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard, when you're ready, please proceed.
14:31:18 MR MUNYARD: Thank you, Madam President. If you would bear with me for a second while I just adjust my LiveNote so that I can read it:
Q. Now, I'm going from my note, my handwritten note of your evidence the other day, Mr Kanneh, of Friday, of the people who you said were at the meeting at Sam Bockarie's house in December 1998 where you said there were 12 of you. I will try to find it on the transcript as well to make sure that I'm accurate in what I'm saying. Now, these were the people that you listed that I 14:32:27 made a note of: Sam Bockarie, Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon, Jungle. Just pausing there with those four, is that right? Do you agree that these were four of the people who you said were at the meeting? Is that right?

A. Four who were in the meeting?

14:33:07 Q. I'm just going through the names of the 12 that you told us about on Friday and I just want --

A. Yes, the four that you've named were in the meeting.

Q. All right. Then Eddie Kanneh, yourself, Major Francis and Matthew Barbue. Are those four correct also?

14:33:41 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you said Junior Vandi, someone called Chucky, who is also known as Gbessay Ngobah.

A. Ngobeh.

Q. Ngobeh, sorry, and I thought my note was wrong because it
14:34:18 doesn't actually go up to 12, but in your evidence those were the names that you gave us on Friday and then you said, "We were 12 in number that particular number that were present. I don't know how many names I've made mention of, but we were 12 in number." Do you remember saying that on Friday?

14:34:43 A. Yes. There were 12 of us in the meeting.

Q. Yes. Well, let us have a look, please, at what was recorded by the Prosecution when you were telling them about this meeting.

A. But before going there I would like to say something.

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, I'm in the Court's hands.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Is it in answer to the question, Mr Witness?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. I want to ask something. I want to get some clarification.

PRESIDING JUDGE: What is the clarification you need?

THE WITNESS: I would like to know if the total went up to 12, because I was not counting when I was calling the names.

MR MUNYARD: All right. I can answer that:

14:35:50 Q. Mr Kanneh, what you said was that, "We were 12 in number", and you gave the names that you could recall. I don't think you gave a total of 12 names in your evidence on Friday, but you were giving the names that you remembered and what you said was this:

"Well, we were 12 in number that particular night that we 14:36:12 were present. I don't know how many names I have made mention of, but we were 12 in number."

Do you see? You may not have remembered all of them on Friday, but you did it make it very plain that there were 12 of you.

14:36:28 A. Yes, sir. That's what I said, because when I called out the names later I said "and others".

Q. I'm going from page 9419 of the transcript. Now, let's see what the Prosecution have recorded by looking at tab 3, page 44309. I'm starting here simply to establish that we're talking 14:37:16 about the right meeting. Halfway down the page, "The following questions refer to the time after Sam Bockarie came back from Burkina Faso." You were asked, "Was there another meeting at Sam Bockarie's house that took place at night?", and your answer, "Yes, it took place from 11 p.m. to 2 a.m." Over the page, "Who was there?", and this was the answer that you gave then. We'll go through the answer and you can tell us if it's been correctly recorded, "Mike Lamin, SB [meaning Sam Bockarie], SYB Rogers, Gbessay Ngobeh" - have I got his name right or wrong? Gbessay

14:38:13 Ngobeh, sorry. "CO Lion, Jungle, Martin, Gaddafi (Foday), Issa Sesay, Jallow, Tom Sandi, Rashid Sandi, Junior Vandi, Sam Kolleh and Major Francis who was a Gambian."

Now, did you tell the Prosecution in November of last year that those 16 people were present at the meeting.

14:38:51 A. No, I spoke about 12 people and even yesterday I called SBY [sic] Rogers's name.

Q. I'm going to come back to SYB Rogers in a moment, but there's no mention of Morris Kallon in that list that we've just read out from the notes of your interview on 1 November last 14:39:22 year. Was he there, or wasn't he there?

A. Morris Kallon was there.

Q. There's no mention of Matthew Barbue there in that list. Was he present at the meeting, or wasn't he?

A. He was there, sir.

14:39:45 Q. There are, as I've said, 16 names listed there, not 12.

A. Well, in that meeting there were 12 of us.

Q. When this was read back to you did you correct it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?

14:40:07 A. Well, I did not know whether it had gone beyond 12, but I know we were 12, so - and I called out 12 names.

Q. Two of whom don't even appear in this list that I've just read out to you from the notes of that interview. When it was read back to you did you not point out to them that Morris Kallon and Matthew Barbue were there?

A. Well, I did not tell them that, but they were present.
Q. Sorry, you didn't tell them that Morris Kallon and Matthew Barbue were there? Is that what you're saying?
14:40:57 A. No, they were present in the meeting.
Q. Did you tell the Prosecution that in November last year?
A. Well there are some names in this list that I - I was not the one who gave them the names, but there was Morris Kallon and there was Matthew Barbue as well.
14:41:23 THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, the witness has called a name that he's referring as -- PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter did not hear a name clearly. Please repeat your answer. Pick up from where you said, "... but there was Morris Kallon and there was Matthew 14:41:38 Barbue as well." What was the other name you mentioned?
THE WITNESS: There was Morris Kallon and Matthew Barbue. I said he spoke about CO Lion and I did not mention his name for that 12 man meeting.
PRESIDING JUDGE: When you say you did not mention his name
14:41:59 are you referring to your interview with the Office of the Prosecutor, or are you referring to court?
THE WITNESS: Prosecution's office.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, are you saying CO Lion was not at the meeting?
14:42:21 THE WITNESS: Not at all.
MR MUNYARD:
Q. So out of this 16 we've got to cross out CO Lion, yes?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, let's go through this list and see who you say was there. Mike Lamin?

A. Yes, sir.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mike Lamin was there?
THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.
14:43:06 MR MUNYARD:
Q. I'm just going to your evidence from Friday. Now I know you couldn't remember all the names, but Mike Lamin was a very top level commander, general, within the RUF, wasn't he?
A. Well he did not get that rank, general.
14:43:37 Q. Let's not worry about the actual rank. He was one of the most senior figures in the movement, wasn't he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Somebody who spoke very strongly?
A. Yes, sir.
14:43:58 Q. How is it that you'd forgotten that he was there when you were giving us this list of those on Friday?
A. When I called out the names, I don't think the names were even up to 20. Maybe those were the ones I left out. The names were not even up to 12 and that's why I said "and others". So, 14:44:26 those were the others.
Q. All right, let's go through. Mike Lamin was there. Sam Bockarie was there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. SYB Rogers was there, or was he?
14:44:41 A. Yes, sir.
Q. Because you didn't mention him on Friday, I don't think. No, you didn't.
A. Friday I spoke about him.
Q. You might have spoken about him but when you were giving the list of names you didn't include him, but we can include him in, can we?

A. Well --

Q. Don't worry about it, Mr Kanneh. We can include him in, can we? What about - you did mention, and I'm not going to try for a third time, the man you know as Chucky. You did mention him to the Prosecution in November?

A. Yes, sir, he was there.

Q. CO Lion we cross out. Jungle?

14:45:39 A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mentioned Jungle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Martin?

A. Yes, sir.

14:45:51 Q. Was he there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was there, all right. Gaddafi also known as Foday, was he there?

A. No.

14:46:04 Q. So, we cross --

A. No, sir.

Q. Who is Gaddafi, also known as Foday?

A. He was one of the battalion commanders who was at the Joru axis.

14:46:24 Q. Right, so he wasn't there. Issa Sesay, you mentioned him on Friday?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What about this person Jalloh (MP)?

A. No, he was not there.

Q. Who is Jalloh (MP)?
A. He was a military police.
Q. Tom Sandi, was he there?
A. No, sir, at that time Tom Sandi was in Kailahun.
14:47:02 Q. Rashid Sandi, was he there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Junior Vandi, JR?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Sam Kollie?
14:47:23 A. Yes, sir.
Q. Major Francis?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What about Eddie Kanneh?
A. Yes, sir.
14:47:37 Q. He was there, was he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You mentioned him on Friday as being present, but you don't actually mention him to the Prosecution in November as being present?
14:47:56 A. I mentioned him. Maybe they did not write it.
Q. So they managed to forget that name, did they, when they were writing? As you were giving the list of names they've managed to lose that one, is that your evidence?
A. That they added and deducted, yes.
14:48:17 Q. All right. And then when it was all read back to you, what did you say about CO Lion, Gaddafi Foday, Jalloh and Tom Sandi being in the list of 16 when in fact they weren't there?
A. Well I don't know how they got it, but even myself I'm a little doubtful how these names are in this group - in this group now.

Q. Why are you doubtful?
A. Because I mentioned 12 names and now I am seeing some other names in the list, so I'm surprised.
14:49:06 Q. But, Mr Kanneh, how could these names, CO Lion, Jalloh, Tom Sandi and Gaddafi Foday have possibly been written down by the Prosecutors who were interviewing you if you hadn't actually told them these names?
A. I cannot tell how they managed to write it, but even today
14:49:42 you asked me about some other names and I was not the one who gave them those names. It was a statement. Maybe they got the names from some other place.
Q. When they were interviewing you back in November last year, did they have other people's statements in front of them and were 14:50:03 they asking you questions based on what other witnesses had told them?
A. Never. That had never happened.
Q. So where could they have got these names from, apart from you?
14:50:20 A. Even you yourself there were questions that you asked me and you mentioned names that I had not given to them, so I don't know how you people would manage to get names like those. I don't know.
Q. Well, I can tell you I get them from what the Prosecution
14:50:41 wrote down as you were listing the names. That is where I get them from, do you understand?
A. Yes, sir, but I would like to know if they had said I mentioned 16 names, if that is what they wrote on the paper.
Q. Are you telling us that you had not appreciated until now that that is exactly what they have said; that you mentioned those 16 names?

A. Well, I spoke about 12. All along I've been talking about 12 in my statements and even yesterday.
14:51:31 Q. We've been at this for the last 20 minutes. Are you saying that you didn't realise that the Prosecution got these names from you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And if it's right that these were the names you told them,
14:51:52 how is it that you told them the names of four people who were nowhere near that meeting?
A. Please repeat that.
Q. If they've got it right in recording these 16 names, how is it that you managed to give them the names of four people who 14:52:13 were nowhere near the meeting?
A. Well, I have not even accepted that I was the one who gave them those extra four names. The ones that I mentioned, I accepted to you that those were the names that I gave to them.
Q. You mean the ones that you mentioned in evidence and the 14:52:35 ones that you've agreed out of this list of 16, you accept that you gave those names?
A. No.
Q. I'm going to move on. Oh, I just want to ask you about one other person. Was Isaac Mongor at this meeting?
14:53:13 A. No.
Q. Are you quite sure about that?
A. Yes, sir, I did not see him.
Q. This is the meeting at which Sam Bockarie tells you about all these arms, ammunition and other items that he'd brought back from Burkina Faso, yes?

A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.
Q. And there was only one such meeting, was there, with these 12 senior figures from the RUF, plus Jungle?
14:53:53 A. Yes, sir.
Q. And this is the meeting at which SYB Rogers was present, is that right?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Even though you didn't list him on Friday. Do you agree 14:54:15 that you didn't list him on Friday when you were giving the list?
A. I called his name.
Q. Did SYB Rogers have anything to say at that meeting that you can now remember?
A. No.
14:54:34 Q. Did anyone praise Sam Bockarie for what he had achieved in bringing back these materials from Burkina Faso?
A. Amongst us, the 12 people who were there?
Q. Well, yes, not amongst anybody else who wasn't there.
A. Well, even if that could have happened maybe it is just 14:55:15 because I cannot recall now. I am not saying nobody said that or did so, but I cannot recall now.
Q. Were any photographs produced during this meeting?
A. No, there were no photographs.
Q. When do you say it was that you saw the materials that he'd 14:55:41 brought back from Burkina Faso?
A. After the meeting, the following morning.
Q. The following morning. Did you see any photographs then?
A. No.
Q. And, let me suggest to you, any photographs of a hotel in Burkina Faso where Sam Bockarie had stayed in the course of this trip?

A. No.

Q. Who did Sam Bockarie tell you he'd been to Burkina Faso with?

A. General Ibrahim.

Q. Did SYB Rogers say that he had been to Burkina Faso with Sam Bockarie?

A. If I said it or SBY Rogers said so? Please clarify that?

Q. Did SYB Rogers say that he had been to Burkina Faso with Sam Bockarie on that trip to collect materials?

A. Well, SB Rogers did not tell me that in that meeting. I did not hear that.

Q. Were you at the whole of the meeting from start to finish?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you saying that you never heard SYB Rogers say anything at all about him being with Sam Bockarie in Burkina Faso on that trip?

MS BALY: I object to that question. That is not what the witness said. He said if it was said, he didn't hear it.

MR MUNYARD: Well, I think I'm entitled to ask the question in any event. I'm a bit puzzled at the objection. He can give whatever answer he wants.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, I allow the question.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. Are you saying that you never - in fact, now I'm looking at it I did say "hear". I'm trying to read it, but I'm afraid I've got a piece of computer software blocking the line in question at the moment.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: The question was, "Are you saying that you never heard SYB Rogers say anything at all about him being with Sam Bockarie in Burkina Faso on that trip?"

MR MUNYARD: Thank you, your Honour. It's just emerged from behind the blockage now.

14:58:38

THE WITNESS: No, I did not hear that.

MR MUNYARD:

Q. So is this the position: That you are completely unaware that SYB Rogers was on that trip to Burkina Faso with Sam Bockarie?

14:59:04

MS BALY: Your Honour, I object to that question. There's no evidence.

PRESIDING JUDGE: This is cross-examination, Ms Baly, and counsel is entitled to put a question and not only to put their case, but to test the credibility of the witness. I allow the question.

14:59:18

MR MUNYARD: I don't know why my learned friend puts the objection in that way because there is evidence. It may not have come from this witness, but there's a significant body of evidence, I would submit, that Sam Bockarie went to Burkina Faso with SYB Rogers and came back, addressed a meeting of the senior commanders and SYB Rogers heaped praise on Sam Bockarie's leadership and the two of them produced photographs of the hotel they'd stayed in:

14:59:37

Q. Now, have you heard all of that, Mr Kanneh, that I've just been suggesting?

15:00:02

A. Well, you've asked all of these questions and I've said I did not hear that, or see a picture.

Q. Thank you.

A. Thank you too.
Q. All right, so much for Burkina Faso. Let's move on to something else that you say was discussed at that meeting: SAJ Musa.
15:00:36 A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was discussed about SAJ Musa at that meeting?
A. Well, Sam Bockarie spoke about SAJ Musa in that meeting. At first he described him as a traitor. He said he was a man who did not take orders. That was the first thing he spoke about SAJ
15:01:14 Musa. He said the only way that he would get him was to be during an operation. He said that and he spoke about the discussion relating to SAJ Musa that was between him and Gullit. Those were the things that he said. Even if there are some others that I cannot recall now, but those were the most 15:01:46 important ones.
Q. All right. Well, let's have a look at the record, in tab 3, starting at page 4431, of what was discussed about SAJ Musa.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Could you please give us the page again?
MR MUNYARD: 4431, your Honour. Sorry, 44311:
15:03:07 Q. Question at the top of the page, "Was there discussion of SAJ Musa at this meeting?" Your answer is recorded as, "Sam Bockarie said", and then there's nothing that follows that but another question, "Did you talk about how to enter Freetown?", and then you discuss the plan for two flanks.
15:03:42 The next question:
"Q. What was Sam Bockarie's reaction when SAJ Musa died?
A. He was very happy because SAJ Musa was preventing RUF success."
Now, were you asked what was Sam Bockarie's reaction to SAJ

Musa's death and did you give that answer?
A. No. At that time Sam Bockarie had not died yet.
Q. No, Mr Kanneh, please listen to the question. The question was: In your interview in November 2007 were you asked the 15:04:33 question, "What was Sam Bockarie's reaction when SAJ Musa died?" Were you asked that question in that interview?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And did you answer, "He was very happy because SAJ Musa was preventing RUF success"?
15:05:00 A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you asked the question, "Who killed SAJ Musa?"
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And did you give the answer, "There was a race between Rambo and SAJ Musa to get to Freetown. There was a big explosion 15:05:24 and SAJ Musa was killed"? This is what you heard, but you were not there. Is that the answer that you gave to the question?
A. Big what between him and Rambo? Please continue from there. I did not get that clearly.
Q. All right. I'll do it in two stages, "There was a race 15:05:48 between Rambo and SAJ Musa to get to Freetown." Did you tell them that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So they've recorded that correctly?
A. Yes, sir.
15:06:00 Q. Did you go on to say, "There was a big explosion and SAJ Musa was killed"?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And did you tell them that this is something that you'd heard, but you weren't actually there?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, I just want to go through the rest of the notes of what you were asked and what you answered about that meeting. On the next page, 44312, there is no mention of SAJ Musa. I'm going 15:07:01 to come back to that page in due course. If we go over to 44313 the interview was resumed at 2.30 in the afternoon and further to the night time meeting at SB's house there are some more questions and answers on that page. They don't deal with SAJ Musa, but again I will come back to those. Over the page, 44314,
15:07:55 there is more on that page, but again it doesn't mention SAJ Musa. Then just for the sake of completeness, the following page, 44315, deals with what are called general questions and they don't deal, as far as I can see at any rate, with SAJ Musa.
Now, in the course of your evidence you told us that rather 15:08:41 more was discussed about SAJ Musa at that meeting, didn't you?
A. They spoke about SAJ Musa's issue in that meeting and the mission that was to be undertaken.
Q. Well, one of the things that you told us when you were giving answers to the Prosecution was that Sam Bockarie had said 15:09:09 a complaint had gone up to Mr Taylor about SAJ's disloyalty and he had given his own advice, "he" being a reference, I believe, to Mr Taylor. Can you remember saying that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Why didn't you tell the Prosecutors that when you were 15:09:35 being interviewed more than a year ago and asked detailed questions about what was discussed in this meeting relating to SAJ Musa?
A. Well, the statements that they take from people, I think people - we only respond to questions that are asked of you.

They did not ask me a question about that. It doesn't mean that if they did not ask me the question at that particular time, I would not say something about it at some other time.

Q. Mr Kanneh, you were asked a question on page 44311, "Was there discussion of SAJ Musa at this meeting?" You were given a completely open ended opportunity to tell the investigators, and Mr Santora then, all about the discussion concerning SAJ Musa at that meeting, were you not?

A. Please repeat.

15:10:52 Q. You were given an opportunity to tell the Prosecutors everything about the discussion concerning SAJ Musa at that meeting at Sam Bockarie's house when you were interviewed in November of last year, weren't you? I think I said it was over a year ago. November last year?

15:11:19 A. Well, it was not at SAJ Musa's place. It was at Sam Bockarie's place. I did not mention it at that moment because I did not recall it.

Q. How could you possibly forget? When they asked you, "Was there discussion of SAJ Musa at this meeting?", how could you 15:11:41 possibly forget that you had decided you should go all out to ensure that SAJ should not live to tell the story if in fact that was said at that meeting?

A. No. I did not say that they asked me the question and I forgot to answer the question, no. You said it was an open 15:12:10 question. That is what you've just asked me. That is what I've refused - I said they did not ask about SAJ Musa's issue. You are asking me now that why did I not answer about SAJ Musa's issue because they asked me to say everything that I knew about SAJ Musa, but they did not ask me about SAJ Musa and I said, "No,

I don't know". They did not ask me that.
Q. They asked you, "Was there discussion of SAJ Musa at this meeting?" Why didn't you tell them in answer to that question that, "We discussed the complaint that Sam Bockarie had made to 15:12:49 Charles Taylor about SAJ, Sam Bockarie made us to understand that SAJ should not live to tell the story and that we should go all out to ensure that SAJ should not live to tell his story"? Why didn't --

MS BALY: Your Honour, I object to that question and if I
15:13:14 could just indicate why I object to it. The question that Mr Munyard has been asking the witness about appears at page 00044311. The question is, "Was there discussion of SAJ Musa at the meeting?" The answer is, "[Sam Bockarie] said", then there's nothing further recorded and then there's a further question
15:13:44 which is a very defined question, "Who killed SAJ Musa?" So, they're the two opportunities he's had during that meeting to answer questions firstly about what he said and there's nothing obviously - it's obvious from the document "SB said" and then there's nothing there, but it doesn't follow that the witness
15:14:06 said nothing. Then the second question "Who killed SAJ Musa?" is so specific that that's the question he answered, not any further thing about discussion at the meeting. So it's a bit, in my submission, unfair to put to this witness that he failed to answer that question when we don't actually know what he said
15:14:28 because it's not recorded.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard, your reply?

MR MUNYARD: Your Honours, taking the question - the recorded question and answer at face value, and that's the only basis on which we can proceed, "Was there discussion of SAJ Musa at this meeting?", and the answer, "SB said", nothing follows except another question about a different topic and therefore at face value the witness has said nothing else at that time. There is no suggestion by this witness that he told them all of this 15:15:17 and that they failed to write it down, or rather there's been none so far although I anticipate there will be, and so in my submission it's a perfectly fair question for me to put and explore. Equally, when we come to the specific question "Who killed SAJ Musa?", there again is the perfect opportunity to tell

15:15:41 the story about the plan, about how it was going to happen during an operation and all the other matters I haven't yet asked him about that arise from his evidence on Friday, the 9th.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I note that there is nothing on page 4431 that shows that what Sam Bockarie said that has subsequently been 15:16:08 adduced in evidence by this witness and, therefore, I consider that counsel for Defence is at liberty and is entitled to put the question he has put, so I allow that question.

MR MUNYARD: Thank you, your Honour:

Q. You see what you said on Friday the 9th, that's last 15:16:42 Friday, Mr Kanneh, you told us a great deal about SAJ Musa and what was discussed in the meeting about SAJ Musa and it starts on page 9425 at the bottom. Just after discussion of "What commanders were given the role of clearing Makeni?", that's line 21, "It was Issa who was the overall for that operation and 15:17:26 Morris Kallon was his deputy and Superman was third in command". "Then you said on to Freetown. Was anyone given the role of moving on to Freetown?" "Yes, they gave the mission to somebody". "Who?" "Well, Sam Bockarie sent the message to SAJ even before they attacked Kono but he refused. He rejected the orders. He said he cannot take orders from him, so there was a heated argument over the issue".

Then a question from Ms Baly:

"Q. When you refer to this heated argument, did it take place in this meeting?

A. You mean whether the argument took place during the meeting?

Q. Yes."

15:17:57

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honour, the interpreters are kindly asking counsel to go slowly for the witness.

15:18:09

MR MUNYARD: I am sorry. I am sorry. I'm trying to go as quickly as I can, but it's obviously too fast. Do the interpreters require me to repeat any of that, or can we proceed?

THE INTERPRETER: Learned counsel, you can repeat all of that because you were going too fast for us.

15:18:27

MR MUNYARD: Oh, dear. All right.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Interpreter, there must be some point where you've picked up.

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, we are interpreting from the Krio booth.

15:18:40

MR MUNYARD: Can I for these purposes not repeat that, but go to the point --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Perhaps paraphrase it, but ensure that the entire essence of the record is made. Put the issue, Mr Munyard.

15:19:02

MR MUNYARD: Yes:

Q. In your evidence on Friday you were talking about matters that were discussed in that meeting that we are now considering and you discussed, or you told us on Friday that the issue of clearing Makeni was discussed, who was in command of the operation and you also said that Sam Bockarie had sent the message to SAJ Musa even before they attacked Kono but he refused. Do you remember saying all of that?

15:19:41 A. That Sam Bockarie sent a message to Sam Bockarie? No, I did not say that.

Q. I didn't say Sam Bockarie.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Counsel said to SAJ Musa.

MR MUNYARD: No, it's not me this time. Right.

15:19:54 THE WITNESS: Well the interpretation, the man who was interpreting said "Sam Bockarie. That is what I heard.

PRESIDING JUDGE: We understand, Mr Witness, but in fact counsel please put that part of your question again.

MR MUNYARD:

15:20:07 Q. That Sam Bockarie sent a message to SAJ Musa even before they attacked Kono, but he refused. Do you remember telling us that on Friday?

A. Yes, sir, even before the mission commenced.

Q. He rejected the orders, you told us. He said he cannot 15:20:30 take orders from him and so there was a heated argument over the issue, do you remember saying that?

A. Yes. Yes, sir.

Q. You were asked by Ms Baly, "When you refer to this heated argument, did it take place in this meeting?" Your answer was,

15:20:48 "You mean whether the argument took place during the meeting?", she said, "Yes", and your answer was, "Yes, after the meeting he called him, but in fact the argument had started for a long time ago." Then Justice Sebutinde asked you to explain who "him" means and the question is then repeated by Ms Baly, "The question was when you were referring to a heated argument I asked you whether the heated argument took place in the meeting that you've been giving evidence about?", and your answer was, "After that meeting, but there had been arguments even before the meeting. 15:21:35 Before this mission there had been an argument just at the time Sam Bockarie sent the message to all the stations. Right from that time SAJ Musa was not happy about it." Do you remember saying that?

A. Yes, I said that, that he was not happy. It was from there 15:21:54 that the arguments started.

Q. Then Ms Baly asked you this, "Now, the second issue that you said that was discussed at the meeting was SAJ Musa. What was it about SAJ Musa that was discussed at the meeting?", and then you listed the following matters, "Sam Bockarie told us that 15:22:21 the complaint had gone up to Mr Taylor that the man's complaints had been lodged about his disloyalty towards the mission and he too gave his own piece of advice just so that ...", and you explained who you meant by the "he", there. "Sam Bockarie lodged the complaint to Mr Taylor against SAJ Musa regarding his 15:22:48 attitude. He was disloyal to the command." You told us that all of this was discussed at that meeting.

Then you were asked the question, "At that meeting was there any other discussion about SAJ Musa apart from the fact that Sam Bockarie had made a complaint to Mr Taylor?", and your 15:23:12 answer was, "Yes, Mr Bockarie made us to understand that that man should not leave to tell the story ...", is what it's recorded as saying, and you are asked, "What man?", and you say, "SAJ Musa".

There is then a question, "SAJ Musa should not leave to tell the story. Continue from there", and then Justice Sebutinde intervenes to say, "The record says 'leave', but it is actually 'live'", and Ms Baly confirms that the word that we all heard translated was "live". In other words, she then asks you, "What did you say?", and you said (I'm looking at page 9428, line 8), "He said we should go all out to ensure that that man should not live to tell the story." The Presiding Judge then confirmed with the interpreter that the word - that what you'd said was "live" and not "leave". In other words, you discussed the murder of Sam Bockarie at that meeting, didn't you?

15:24:43 PRESIDING JUDGE: It's SAJ Musa.

THE WITNESS: SAJ Musa. We did not discuss about --

MR MUNYARD: I am sorry.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Just for purposes of clarity put that short question again, please.

15:24:57 MR MUNYARD: Yes, I am sorry. I'm looking at the transcript and not the LiveNote:

Q. You discussed the murder of SAJ Musa at the meeting at Sam Bockarie's house in December 1998, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

15:25:29 Q. Not only that, but you discussed the circumstances in which he should be killed, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your evidence on Friday, continuing where I left off --

A. Yes, sir. Was:

15:25:45 "He said we should only be able to get him when there was a mission, when there was an operation going on. He even made us to understand that that was something he'd been discussing with Gullit, that during any mission that man should not live, he should die because he was a traitor. He referred to him as a traitor."

Do you remember telling us that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Question from Ms Baly, "Did Sam Bockarie say how SAJ Musa was to die?" Answer from you, "Well, in the military terms they say it should be during operations. You know, if they will mean arms. He should die during the battle. He should be shot."

Do you remember telling us that on Friday?

A. Yes, sir.

15:26:45 Q. And you went on to say that this had all been discussed with Gullit and that Gullit did not actually specify who should do the shooting, but that that was the plan. Now, that was a very important issue that was discussed at the meeting in December 1998, wasn't it: The murder of a very senior AFRC

15:27:30 figure?

A. It was one of the important ones. Everything that we discussed was important. That was one of the important ones. It was not the only important agenda item. It was one of the important things that we discussed.

15:27:50 Q. So why didn't you tell the Prosecutors that on 1 November last year when they were asking you the very open ended question, "Was there discussion of SAJ Musa at this meeting?", or when they asked you the more specific question, "Who killed SAJ Musa?"

A. Well, I'd like to know if when they asked that question if 15:28:28 I - when they asked me to say anything that I knew about SAJ Musa, I don't know whether that question was even asked to me. Did I say anything on that paper that you have? I don't think that question was asked of me, that they asked of me if I knew anything about SAJ Musa I should say it. If that was asked of me

- I don't think I ever was asked the question. Maybe you should watch your paper again.
Q. Mr Kanneh, I'm looking at the paper right now. The question that I've last asked you about, that was put to you in 15:29:01 November, "Who killed SAJ Musa?", you did give a reply to that.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You asked me just now, "Did I say anything on that paper that you have?", and the answer is --
THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat
15:29:27 that.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter did not hear you properly. Please repeat your answer and speak more slowly.
THE WITNESS: I said I heard the question that they asked me of who killed SAJ Musa. I gave them the response. I gave an 15:29:46 answer. It's not a lie.
MR MUNYARD:
Q. Well, the answer that you gave doesn't include anything about SAJ Musa being shot during an operation, does it?
A. But I believe that even Ms Baly asked - she said, "When SAJ
15:30:21 Musa died, what did they say?", and I said they said a bomb exploded and that was how SAJ Musa died. That was the information that came from the front line, that he had died from a bomb explosion, but that was the plan that was already in place before.
15:30:37 Q. I'm not asking you what Ms Baly asked. I'm asking you about the questions that you were asked in November of last year. Has anybody ever suggested to you that somebody took advantage of the explosion at the Benguema barracks to shoot SAJ Musa, in the head I think?

A. That question is confusing.
Q. All right, I'll ask it again. Have you ever heard, from any source, that around the time of the explosion at Benguema barracks somebody actually shot SAJ Musa and that was what led to 15:31:30 his death?
A. No.
Q. Now, the plan that you've told us about in your evidence was that during an operation, a military operation, someone was to shoot SAJ dead. That's right, isn't it?
15:31:55 A. It should be during a military operation that he should die and he died during a military operation.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, that is not quite the question that counsel asked.
MR MUNYARD: I'll come back to it, as it were, by my next 15:32:19 question.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well.
MR MUNYARD:
Q. "It should be during a military operation that he should die and he died during a military operation", and that was the 15:32:32 plan that you tell us was discussed at the meeting in December 1998, wasn't it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The very thing that happened: That something happened to SAJ Musa during a military operation that led to his death, yes?
15:32:56 A. Yes.
Q. The record of the interview says, "There was a big explosion and SAJ Musa was killed. This is what the witness was told. He wasn't there." Who was it who told you what happened to SAJ Musa?

A. Well, they sent a message to Sam Bockarie and all of us monitored it.
Q. Right, who is "they"?
A. Rambo. After he had got to Waterloo then he gave this 15:33:35 information. They were in Masiaka when they got the information, they sent it, because the incident happened in Waterloo, Benguema.
Q. Well, I note, Mr Kanneh, that the record of what you told the Prosecution is as follows, "There was a big explosion and SAJ 15:33:55 Musa was killed."
A. The big explosion killed SAJ Musa, according to the message that we got. You would plan something and something else happened and I was not there, but that was the plan.
Q. Right, I'm going to move on through the rest of that 15:34:49 account that you gave in November of last year. Over the page, 44312, please. The first question you're recorded as being asked on this page is, "At this meeting did Jungle or CO Lion say anything about Charles Taylor?" Now, can you remember being asked that question?
15:35:49 A. I can remember Jungle's.
Q. Mr Kanneh, why do you think the Prosecutors asked you about Jungle or CO Lion --
A. Maybe --
Q. Hang on. Why do you think they asked you a question about 15:36:13 Jungle or CO Lion saying anything about Charles Taylor if you had not told them that CO Lion was present at the meeting?
A. No, I did not mention CO Lion. I only mentioned Jungle. I cannot recall mentioning CO Lion.
Q. Well, you can't recall mentioning CO Lion is different from, "I did not mention CO Lion." Which one is it that you want these judges to believe: That you didn't mention him, or that you don't recall mentioning him?

A. I did not mention CO Lion.

15:36:58 Q. So when the question was asked at this meeting, "Did Jungle or CO Lion say anything about Charles Taylor?", did you say to them, "Well, hang on a minute, CO Lion wasn't there"?

A. Explain that again, I did not get it clearly.

Q. When you were asked the question, and this is the question

15:37:27 coming, "At this meeting did Jungle or CO Lion say anything about Charles Taylor?", why didn't you say to them, "Well, CO Lion wasn't there, he couldn't have said anything about Charles Taylor"?

A. Well, if they had asked if CO Lion and Jungle were there

15:37:50 together and if I heard the question I would have said no, CO Lion was not there, but they only asked about Jungle.

Q. I see.

A. So I explained about Jungle, that he was there.

Q. So they only asked about Jungle?

15:38:04 A. Yes, sir.

Q. They didn't ask you about CO Lion?

A. No, sir. Yes, sir.

Q. And they've invented - I'll try that one more time before I move on to something else.

15:38:14 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: If you could avoid speaking over each other. The record is completely messed up and I don't even think a replay is going to help you in this regard.

MR MUNYARD: Your Honour, I think you're right and I'll move on in that case. We'll leave that subject:

Q. Can I just ask you about something else at the foot of that page, please, 44312. You were asked this question, "During the meeting was there discussion about getting manpower support from Liberia?" Do you remember that, that question?

15:39:22 A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the answer that you are recorded as giving is this, "Jungle and Morris Kallon and Lion suggested that." Did you say that?

A. Well, the two men whom you have mentioned, I spoke about 15:39:49 them, but I did not mention Lion.

Q. Yes. Morris Kallon is not one of the 16 names that you listed earlier on, that we looked at on page 44310, when you answered the question, "Who was there?" So that would make 17 names if indeed you did say those first 16, wouldn't it?

15:40:37 A. Who is the 17th?

Q. Morris Kallon who has just appeared in this answer.

A. No, no. Even among that 12 people there is Morris Kallon's name and even the 16th name that you mentioned, there was Morris Kallon's name, and the 12 men that I called, Morris Kallon's name 15:41:05 is among them.

Q. The rest of the answer is as follows, "SB ...", that's Sam Bockarie, "... rejected this because of past problems when the NPFL came." Did you say that?

A. That he did not agree that a force would come from NPFL, 15:41:30 yes, I said that.

Q. Your answer is recorded on the LiveNote as, "That he did agree that the force would come from NPFL, yes, I said that". In fact the answer that's recorded here - here on the page of the interview notes - is that Sam Bockarie rejected the suggestion of manpower support from Liberia. "Sam Bockarie rejected this because of past problems when the NPFL came."

A. Yes, sir, I said that.
Q. That is what you said?
15:42:17 A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.
Q. And then it goes on to read, "SB ...", Sam Bockarie, "... was okay with ULIMO-K assistance."
A. He said he preferred ULIMO-K. He said he preferred them to the NPFL. That was what I mentioned.
15:42:44 Q. And were ULIMO-K still in existence in December of 1998?
A. No, at that time ULIMO-K was no longer in existence, but their members were still around.
Q. All right. So Sam Bockarie was basically saying that he did not want manpower support from Liberia, is that right?
15:43:36 A. From NPFL, yes, it's correct.
Q. And for NPFL in 1998 do you mean the Armed Forces of Liberia?
A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir. The Armed Forces of Liberia, Mr Taylor's troops.
15:44:05 Q. Thank you. So, Bockarie rejected the idea of support from Mr Taylor's troops?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Over the page, please, 44313. Do you have that page there?
A. Yes, sir.
15:44:50 Q. "Resume interview - 1430", that's 2.30 in the afternoon. "Further to night time meeting at SB's house", and then some more questions were asked and the first is, "Was there any discussion about civilians?" Your answer was, "No discussion about civilians". Were you asked that question and did you give that answer?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, I want to ask you a little more about the ending of the meeting. You said to us, when you were telling us about this 15:46:02 earlier in your evidence, that you heard Sam Bockarie and Jungle speak to Mr Taylor on the satellite phone. How did you know it was Mr Taylor?
A. Well, before the discussion Mr Bockarie already told us that he was trying to call Mr Taylor.
15:46:52 Q. Before the discussion?
A. Before he called, sorry, he told us that.
Q. Well, you've never said that before. I'll tell you what you said earlier, "They told us they were talking to Mr Taylor. We were not hearing the other side. They said they were talking 15:47:18 to Mr Taylor"?
A. But that is the same question you have just asked me that I have answered. I believe it's the same.
Q. If they were talking to Mr Taylor, why would they need to tell you?
15:47:44 A. Well, we were in a meeting and before he called he told us that he was now trying to call Mr Taylor. We were in the meeting, I was part of the meeting, and he was supposed to tell us.
Q. And by what name did they call Mr Taylor? How did they 15:48:08 address him?
A. They called him Mr Taylor, or Ghankay Taylor.
Q. Well, just give us an example of when they would refer to him as Ghankay Taylor. Just tell us what you heard them say.
A. The time they called him Ghankay Taylor? It was many times since the RUF started they would call him Ghankay Taylor, they would call him Mr Taylor, Charles Taylor. That happened many times.

Q. When they are actually speaking to him, you mean?

15:48:56 MS BALY: I object to that question. This witness has never said he was present when they were speaking to Mr Taylor.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Isn't there a reference to a phone call?

MR MUNYARD: That's what I'm talking about.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, that he was present then.

15:49:16 MS BALY: He was during the phone call, yes, but that should be made clear rather than present for another conversation.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Well if there's any doubt, Mr Munyard, please --

15:49:29 MR MUNYARD: Well looking at the LiveNote, if I can pause it for a second --

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: We've been following the evidence regarding this one meeting and I understand this question to relate to that meeting and everything around that meeting and 15:49:42 that phone call on the satellite phone.

MR MUNYARD: Yes. Your Honour, if I can just illustrate that very briefly, I asked and this is page 127 last line, 25, "If they were talking to Mr Taylor, why would they need to tell you?" Answer, "Well, we were in a meeting and before he called 15:50:06 he told us that he was now trying to call Mr Taylor". I then go on to ask, "And by what name did they call Mr Taylor? How did they address him?" "They called him Mr Taylor, or Ghankay Taylor", and I then asked for examples of how they would actually use the name Ghankay Taylor.

So just for my learned friend's benefit, I was only asking about the conversation that he claims to have overheard on a satellite telephone with 12 other people on a veranda at 2 in the morning.

15:50:38 PRESIDING JUDGE: That's clear now, so please put your question.

MR MUNYARD: Yes:

Q. I want to ask you now a series of questions about different matters.

15:51:01 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before I do there's one other matter relating to SAJ Musa that I want to ask you about and it is in tab 7, I think. Yes, it's in tab 7. This is the last time that you were interviewed by the Prosecutors here in The Hague and I'm looking at paragraph 15:51:52 3 of the proofing session on 23 April this year. Now, do you see there - well, sorry, I'll read it out to you, "SAJ Musa then left and went as far as Waterloo and he was trying to enter Freetown." Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, sir.

15:52:20 Q. "SB instructed IS ...", that's Sam Bockarie instructed Issa Sesay, "... to descend upon Masiaka and told them to keep the defensive ..." Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "... but SAJ Musa had gone on ahead and there was another 15:52:42 conflict between Musa and Bockarie." Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "He announced that he would take Freetown and that he would become president." Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, sir.

deal more about it on Friday. Did you tell the Prosecution more when you were first being interviewed, all this detail you gave us on Friday, when you were being interviewed about it in November?

09:52:39 A. Well, if I made any addition maybe they asked me this time about the death of BS more than that time, because even you, you had stopped elsewhere. And even when you give your statement now and later you will be asked why did this not happen so you will have to add or maybe deduct. It depends on the questions that 09:53:03 will be asked of you.

Q. Is what I have read out to you from that page all that you told them back in November about BS Massaquoi's killing or did you tell them more that hasn't been recorded?

A. The one that you've read is what I told them at that time,

09:53:33 the one that is on the document. Only that where there is some problem is where it states that Kpaka and that other man's escape was aided by that man, that was the contributing factor, I said no.

Q. I want to move on to something else, please. Again this is 09:54:01 the meeting in December 1998 at Sam Bockarie's house. You gave us evidence, again I think it was last Friday, about the Operation Free the Leader and you told us last week when you were giving this evidence that, "Sam Bockarie told us that this plan", that's in connection with free the leader, "Was designed in 09:54:37 Monrovia with Mr Taylor." Do you remember saying that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell the Prosecutors that when you were giving them a lot of detail about that meeting in the course of the interview in November?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, let's look at the account that has been recorded. Page 44284, still on tab 3. Now we looked at some of this yesterday and I am not going to go into great detail, I am just going to go through the topics with you because they are set out in numbered paragraphs. I will summarise what is said in each paragraph, Mr Kanneh, and if I am not summarising accurately in the view of the Prosecution then I invite the Prosecution to tell me to add more of what is written down there.

09:56:17 Paragraph 48, this is the first note of what you were telling them. We went through yesterday that's the names of all the people who were at the meeting and you disputed yesterday that you had ever mentioned some of these being there.

Paragraph 49: "The witness states that Sam Bockarie had 09:56:42 arrived back from Burkina Faso with arms, ammunitions and uniforms."

Paragraph 50: "The witness states there was a discussion of a major offensive known as Operation Free the Leader. The first targets were to be Kono and Makeni, to be followed by 09:57:06 Segbwema and Daru. The final target was to be Freetown. The purpose of the assault on Freetown was twofold: To take power in Freetown and free the leader."

Paragraph 51: "There was discussion of a two flank entry into Freetown. There was to be a future meeting between Issa and 09:57:29 the other front line commanders to discuss this plan."

Paragraph 52: "The witness stated that Jungle advised them that Taylor instructed that there could be no success without money. That was why they were to hit the main mining areas first."

Paragraph 53 we read yesterday. This was where some of the people present suggested getting additional manpower from Liberia, but Sam Bockarie rejected that suggestion due to past problems that had occurred when many NPFL members came into 09:58:11 Sierra Leone, but Bockarie preferred ULIMO-K assistance.

Paragraph 54: "Pademba Road was to be the first target of the offensive on Freetown."

Paragraph 55: "The plan was to execute Kabbah and Foday Sankoh would become president."

09:58:34 Then the final record of what you told the Prosecutors in November about that meeting is:

"The witness stated that after this meeting Jungle spoke with Charles Taylor about this mission. The witness stated he heard this conversation take place on Sam Bockarie's satellite 09:58:55 phone."

Then there is a reference to Charles Taylor taking satellite calls directly. That's all you told the Prosecutors when you were going into detail about this in November, Mr Kanneh. No reference in there to the fact that this plan was 09:59:16 designed in Monrovia with Mr Taylor. If that's the truth, the evidence you gave last Friday, why didn't you tell the Prosecutors that important fact when they were interviewing you last November?

A. Well, the story is on this document that Mr Taylor was 09:59:42 involved in that mission. Just come where Jungle said the Pa had said nothing would go on without money, so we should hit the mining area. So that alone proves that the Pa was involved, that Charles Taylor was involved. And thinking about what Jungle said and he was the representative of the Pa.

Q. Let's look at handwritten note of that. It is on page 44312, same bundle. In fact, we looked at this yesterday as well, the first line of it:

"Q. At this meeting did Jungle or CO Lion say anything about CT?" Charles Taylor presumably.

"A. Jungle said that CT said that there would be no success without money. That is why we were to hit the main mining areas first."

Nothing in there about Jungle saying that CT had designed this whole plan, it was all his idea, is there, Mr Kanneh?

A. There is something. If somebody said you should hit the main important mining area, what do you understand about that word, that expression? If somebody says hit this and this mining area, an important mining area, that expression and plan, what do you think are the differences if there is a mission to go on and somebody advises that you should do this? What do you think is different from plan?

Q. Back to paragraph 51 on page 44284: "There was to be a future meeting between Issa and the other front line commanders to discuss this plan", the two flank entry into Freetown. Did that future meeting ever occur?

A. Well, at that time they had gone to Kono. They gave the instruction in Buedu, Kailahun District. So after giving out the instruction and when you go near the target you will have to tell the commanders. So I cannot tell you whether the meeting was held, but the mission went on and it worked. So I believe that the plan went on.

Q. So this future meeting never did occur. Is that what you're telling us?

PRESIDING JUDGE: That is not quite what he said, Mr Munyard. He said he didn't know. He said, "I cannot tell."

MR MUNYARD: Well, I will leave it at that:

Q. Moving on to something else, are you someone who is in the habit of reading or having read to you United Nations Security Council resolutions? Tell me if there is anything in that question that you don't understand?

A. I don't understand the whole question.

Q. Right. Have you ever heard of any United Nations - well, have you ever heard of the United Nations Security Council?

A. No.

Q. Have you heard of the United Nations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first hear about the existence of the Special Court for Sierra Leone?

A. I heard it from about 2000.

Q. What did you hear from about 2000?

A. They said there was going to be a Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Q. Who is "they" who said this?

A. Well, I cannot get the particular person's name now, but I think it was on the radio, over the news.

Q. Yes, the BBC again presumably.

A. Well, it could be VOA, or BBC, or any other station that I cannot recall now, or FM.

Q. So you were in the habit of listening to these radio programmes, were you?

A. Yes, at that time if I met the news on, yes.

Q. What is COA?

TRIAL CHAMBER II

Before the Judges:	Justice Teresa Doherty, Presiding Justice Richard Lussick Justice Julia Sebutinde Justice Al Hadji Malick Sow, Alternate
For Chambers:	Mr William Romans Ms Sidney Thompson Ms Carolyn Buff
For the Registry:	Ms Rachel Irura
For the Prosecution:	Mr Stephen Rapp Ms Brenda J Hollis Mr Nicholas Koumjian Mr Christopher Santora Ms Maja Dimitrova
For the accused Charles Ghankay Taylor:	Mr Courtenay Griffiths QC Mr Terry Munyard Ms Sanela Trzin

Q. Where did the delegation go to?
A. They used the road through Kenema and Kailahun District from Freetown and they crossed into Liberia.
Q. Do you know where in Liberia they went?
13:17:33 A. Yes, they went to Monrovia, the city. At that time I don't know whether it was at the house or the office of Mr Ghankay Taylor. That was where they met.
Q. Okay. So now you discussed the initial call to Charles Taylor after the seizure of power followed by calls to 13:18:02 other leaders of other countries. Then you've discussed this phone call that Johnny Paul Koroma spoke about prior to sending a delegation to Liberia and you've discussed the Iranian embassy phone call. Are you aware whether there were other communications between Johnny Paul Koroma and Charles Taylor
13:18:22 during the period that the AFRC was in Freetown?
A. Yes, the calls were many, but the other one that I can recall was pertaining to the arms shipment, that a delegation was supposed to go again headed by Mike Lamin and Sam Bockarie recommended one General Ibrahim in a meeting for arms and 13:18:53 ammunition, that he would be able to go and facilitate it. General Ibrahim came, but he did not come to the supreme meeting after he had been recommended. Then --
THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat this.
13:19:15 PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter asks that you repeat. Take up your answer from the bit where you said, "General Ibrahim came but he did not come to the supreme meeting after he had been recommended." Continue from there, please.
THE WITNESS: After General Ibrahim had been recommended that he will facilitate the arms and ammunition movement, in the evening we came to the lodge and met General Ibrahim. He had come two days after. We met him at the lodge to chairman. That was where I saw him and that was where I knew him.

13:20:05 MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Was that the first time that you had seen this General Ibrahim?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what his nationality is?

13:20:20 A. At that time I did not know his nationality.

Q. Did you hear, or do you recall any second name, or was it just General Ibrahim that you know?

A. I only knew General Ibrahim. That was the name I knew for him.

13:20:38 Q. When you say you don't know his nationality, could he have been a Sierra Leonean? Do you know whether or not he was from Sierra Leone?

A. No, the way he spoke he had some Liberian English accent and he spoke some French too.

13:21:11 Q. After this delegation came did the delegation ever come to the Supreme Council? Or General Ibrahim, did he ever come to the Supreme Council meeting?

A. No.

Q. When you say a delegation was being sent, do you know again

13:21:27 where were they sent exactly?

A. The delegation that went to Liberia, from Liberia they went to other countries, Niger, Libya and Burkina Faso. That was the delegation headed by SYB Rogers, not the one headed by Mike Lamin. It was the delegation headed by SYB Rogers. From Liberia they went to some other countries.

Q. Thank you for that clarification and I'm sorry if I'm confusing these two with my questions. I now want to ask you about the delegation where you mentioned Mike Lamin. Do you know where that delegation - if it was sent anywhere and where it went?

A. Well, the delegation that went, there was Fonti Kanu, Mike Lamin, General Ibrahim, but after that we went to Magburaka airstrip and the ammunition arrived with a soldier who had a uniform on in green with a black hat and the crown on the hat was a Burkina Faso crown. That was the insignia. And Lieutenant Colonel Fonti Kanu came and the ammunitions were off-loaded and a soldier also called Musa --

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, you asked the witness if he knows where this delegation went. He has not answered that question. He is answering something else.

MR KOUMJIAN: Yes, thank you:

Q. Sir, you are getting a bit ahead of where I am and I want to take it slowly step by step, understand? We will go over the information you just provided, but first this delegation that you mentioned of Fonti Kanu, Mike Lamin and General Ibrahim. I want to ask you some questions about it. First of all, who was Fonti Kanu? The spelling I don't know if we need as I believe we have had it before.

A. Fonti Kanu was a lieutenant colonel in the Sierra Leone Army. I said that they went to Liberia with that delegation headed by Mike Lamin. They went to Freetown, Kenema, Kailahun and crossed into Liberia by road.

Q. Thank you. Can you explain to us that, when you discuss sending this delegation at the Supreme Council you mentioned, what was the purpose of the delegation's trip, do you know?

A. Well that particular delegation, which was headed by Mike Lamin, that went to Liberia was to go and obtain some arms and ammunition. That was why Chairman Johnny Paul Koroma assigned Fonti Kanu to go and tell them the kinds of ammunition we needed at that time.

Q. Thank you. Was there any discussion of how the arms and ammunition would be paid for, or obtained?

13:24:52 A. Well he just discussed in the meeting that they will give a parcel, but they did not discuss what parcel it would be in that meeting.

Q. The word "parcel", does that have a meaning to you? When you say "parcel", what does it mean?

13:25:15 A. Well, it has a meaning. At that time we hadn't money, we only had diamonds, so I believe that that was what they meant by parcel. That we meant, that Johnny Paul Koroma meant.

Q. Now, you have indicated that this was - am I correct that this was discussed at a Supreme Council meeting, is that right?

13:25:39 A. Yes.

Q. How long after that meeting did the delegation go, if you know? Go to Liberia?

A. The delegation left - between 48 and 78 hours they left for Liberia.

13:26:02 Q. Do you know if any arms or ammunition ever arrived?

A. Yes.

Q. How long after the delegation left did the arms and ammunition arrive, if you recall?

A. Between one to two weeks the arms and ammunition arrived.

Q. How did the arms and ammunition come to Sierra Leone?
A. They came on a flight, silver coloured, and it landed at night around between 7 and 9. It was dark already. We used our vehicles and we parked them far away from the flight so that they 13:26:57 could provide light. The arms and ammunitions were dropped. At that time Lieutenant Colonel Fonti Kanu and a soldier who had on the Burkinabe uniform and crown came down the flight.
Q. Where was it that the plane landed?
A. Magburaka airstrip.
13:27:22 Q. Do you recall approximately when this was that the plane came to the Magburaka airstrip?
A. It was very fast.
Q. But can you give an approximate month of when this was?
A. I can't recall the exact month now, because it has taken a 13:27:49 while.
Q. Do you recall the Conakry Accord?
A. Yes.
Q. Was it before or after the Conakry Accord?
A. It was before the Conakry Accord.
13:28:11 Q. Do you recall if it was - how long approximately before the Conakry Accord this plane landed?
A. I think it was within a month before the Conakry Accord.
Q. Thank you. Were you present when the plane landed?
A. Yes.
13:28:37 Q. Can you briefly give us - I don't know if we have time, your Honours? Is this the time to break?
PRESIDING JUDGE: It is very close to the time for the usual lunchtime adjournment, Mr Koumjian.
MR KOUMJIAN: Yes, okay, thank you.

THE WITNESS: If it's painful, I will stand up.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well. Please let us know and we will facilitate that.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

15:23:30 MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Witness, if you need to stand up just pull the microphone closer to you and speak into the microphone. Sir, going back to the plane that landed, did you see any individuals getting off the plane?

15:23:47 A. Yes.

Q. Who got off the plane?

A. Fonti Kanu and one Musa, whom I later came to know at the lodge of Johnny Paul Koroma. He was in the military uniform.

Q. What else came off of the plane? Was anything unloaded

15:24:08 from the plane?

A. Yes. Arms and ammunition, large quantity.

Q. Can you recollect any types of arms or ammunition that you remember seeing taken from that plane at Magburaka?

A. Yes, yes: RPG bombs, stinger missiles, AK rounds, G3

15:24:46 rounds, mortar bombs and the stinger missile bombs.

Q. Were there any weapons?

A. No, I did not see weapons.

Q. What happened to what you remember coming off the plane?

A. The arms and ammunition were all in something like a net,

15:25:28 so they dropped it and the plane took off. Musa, Lieutenant Colonel Fonti came down --

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat this?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter needs you to repeat your answer. Please start where you said, "It was in something like a net, so they dropped it and the plane took off." Please continue from there.

THE WITNESS: The net contained all of the ammunition.

15:26:03 PRESIDING JUDGE: I think I heard you say something about Musa and Colonel Fonti. Could you repeat that also?

THE WITNESS: Yes, Lieutenant Colonel Fonti Kanu came down and Musa; he hadn't any rank on him but he had a uniform and a crown from Burkina Faso.

15:26:25 MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Okay, sir, to clarify a few things, you said Stingers. Can you tell the judges what a Stinger is?

A. The Stinger missile was what we were supposed to use for the jet, which this Musa from Burkina Faso had come to train some 15:26:47 of the security officers at Johnny Paul's place, that you put on your shoulder to shoot at the jet, so that we would be able to drop the jet, but unfortunately when he came the bombs were not functioning.

Q. Okay, first, Mr Witness, thank you, try to speak a little 15:27:12 bit slower because it's difficult for the interpreters sometimes to keep up with you. The Stinger missiles that were fired from the shoulder, do you know how they were supposed to find the jet? What they used to find the jet?

A. Yes, because during the training we too were there at the 15:27:33 lodge. You put it on your shoulder, then there is the trigger in front, you put it on your shoulder, then you aim at the jet. While the jet would be - while the jet would have passed then you are supposed to shoot from the back, then it would trace the jet. The heat that follows the jet is what the Stinger would trace to meet the jet and put it down.

Q. Sir, you said this ammunition came in a net, or these arms and ammunition you said. How did that get off the plane? Was there a stairway on the side of the plane? How was the plane unloaded?

15:28:24

A. From the back. It opened from the back and everything came out and Lieutenant Colonel Fonti and Musa, all of them came out of the plane running from the back.

Q. Now, you said you learned about these Stingers, I believe you said at JPK's house, correct me if I'm wrong. Who was teaching you about the Stingers?

15:28:44

A. No, I didn't - I was not taught, but the security men for Johnny Paul Koroma, the chairman, some of his guys, his security men were taught. We stood by looking as to how things were happening.

15:29:06

Q. Who was doing the instruction on the use of a Stinger?

A. It was Musa.

Q. The Musa that you said came off the plane?

A. Yes, exactly.

15:29:22

Q. After the ammunition came down on the ground in the net, what happened to it, the arms and ammunition?

A. Well, after the plane had left, we rushed. Everybody took some and placed them in the vehicles fast, in order for us to leave quickly, to depart the airfield quickly.

15:29:47

Q. If you can just clarify one thing. You said that it was arms and ammunition and you've discussed a number of different types of rounds and Stinger projectiles. What are the arms that you're talking about as opposed to ammunition? What arms or guns did you see?

PRESIDING JUDGE: I didn't hear guns.

MR KOUMJIAN: He didn't use the word "guns", he used the word 'arms'.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I'm referring to your sentence, Mr Koumjian, and I didn't hear the witness use the word "guns".

THE WITNESS: Well, anti-aircraft rounds, AKs, G3s, mortar bombs, RPG bombs, Stinger bombs and the Stinger missiles, but no arms came. But in common we used to call them arms and ammunition.

15:30:41 MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Okay, thank you. Now, sir, you've talked about being sent to Kono and you said only for a short time because of the intervention. Can you now tell us what happened with what you called the intervention, from your point of view where you were 15:31:09 at? Sorry, excuse me. Your Honour, may I strike that question because I've failed to follow through on something on Magburaka. I've been meaning to you, sir, where did you actually take the ammunition that was unloaded from the plane? Where did it go?

A. We drove down to Freetown and straight to the chairman

15:31:40 Johnny Paul Koroma's residence at Spur Road.

Q. And then what happened to the ammunition?

A. We brought everything and afterwards it was distributed to each and every one of us, including the RUF high commands.

Q. Okay, thank you. Now going on to the intervention. Where 15:32:04 were you when you first heard of the events that you've called the intervention?

A. Well, I was in Kono around the start of February. I cannot remember the right date. Then the handset that I had was not functioning, it can't get to Freetown at the time. So we got a Q. Mr Kargbo, we are dealing with the second delegation. When the second delegation, who had gone you say to get arms and ammunition, came back, what did they tell you?

A. Well, when they came back they met us in Magburaka at that 13:21:57 time and they came on board a plane with the arms.
Q. How long after they had gone to Liberia did they return?
A. Within a week.
Q. So, they came back before the arms and ammunition came to Magburaka?
13:22:23 A. Some of them came on board the aeroplane.
Q. Who came on board the aeroplane?
A. I can recall Lieutenant Fonti Kanu and a guy who had on Burkina Faso military fatigue with head dress. They came down with the arms.
13:22:54 Q. Well the Burkina Faso man wasn't a member of the delegation that had gone from Freetown to Monrovia, was he?
A. He was not part of the delegation.
Q. No. I am asking you who went on the delegation and who came back on the plane and I also want to know who came back before 13:23:12 the plane?
A. SYB Rogers and others returned before the arrival of the aeroplane. Mike Lamin, Fonti Kanu and Musa were those who came on board the aeroplane.
Q. Right, so Mike Lamin doesn't come back until he lands with 13:23:36 that aeroplane with materials?
A. Yes.
Q. So put him on one side, when SYB Rogers comes back did he tell you what Mr Taylor had said?
A. By then he did not explain anything to the Supreme Council

Q. So everything on board was brought out in this net, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. And you actually saw that happen?
A. Everything was in a net, yes.
14:41:26 Q. Yes, you saw that happen, did you?
A. When the plane landed, yes, I saw it.
Q. You see Mike Lamin and two others get out of the plane and you see a net brought out of the plane. Who actually carried the net with all the materials out of the plane?
14:41:50 A. It was not carried by anybody. It was a large quantity. They opened the back and dropped everything, including the crews.
Q. Well when you say "including the crews", what do you mean?
A. I said the crews opened the back and they dropped the plane - sorry, they dropped the arms and ammunition that was in the 14:42:17 net. It was Mike Lamin and others who came down.
Q. And you're standing near the back of the plane to receive this, are you?
A. No, we were far off a little.
Q. Well, what was the point of you going there to get this 14:42:37 equipment with the likelihood of the ECOMOG jets overhead if you weren't right by the plane and ready to unload the equipment and go off with it? How close to the plane were you when this net of materials was emptied out of the back?
A. It happened very quickly. When the plane took off, we just 14:43:04 rushed and took everything and put them in our vehicles and took off.
Q. Right. And how many vehicles was this material put into?
A. I was unable to count the number of vehicles. I do not know the number.

A. When I came, I went back to Koindu. I went back to my ground in Koindu where I was deployed.
Q. Now when you gave the letter to Jungle, did you say - because you said that Jungle said that he had spoken with Sam 16:22:00 Bockarie. Did Jungle say how he had communicated with Sam Bockarie?
A. Well, I want to believe they spoke through radio sets because just as I got there he told me that he was expecting me. He was not actually specific to say that it was I that he was 16:22:26 expecting, but he only told me he was expecting somebody because he had already spoken with Sam Bockarie. But I did not actually meet him talking over the radio set, or I did not even know what they discussed, but he told me he was expecting somebody.
Q. Mr Witness, when did you first meet Jungle?
16:22:49 A. That was my first time to meet him in person, but I had been seeing him before in the RUF territory. He had come there either once or twice in the RUF territory. But for me to meet with him, one on one to speak with him, was the time I took that letter to him in Foya Tenga.
16:23:12 Q. How did you know before that he had come before to the RUF territories?
A. Well, like mostly when Jungle entered the RUF territory he was not somebody that used - he did not enter in secret. Normally when he came to the RUF territory people will feel 16:23:45 relieved and they always feel that he is somebody who brings materials and they will say that he must have brought some materials. He was somebody who travelled frequently between the RUF and Charles Taylor. He was travelling between Charles Taylor and Sam Bockarie frequently. Everybody knew about that. We all knew about it.

Q. Why were people feeling relieved when they saw Jungle in the RUF territories?

A. Because they will always feel that he must have brought some materials for us the RUF, because our major problem in the RUF was material, ammunition, arms and ammunition. That was our major problem in the RUF. So at any time we saw him, any time the RUF saw him, they will feel that he was coming directly from Charles Taylor because he was working directly with Charles Taylor. So at any time we saw him we will know that he must have brought some good information or materials for the RUF.

Q. When you said that Jungle was working directly with Charles Taylor, how did you know about that?

A. Well, just like I have said, my Lord, like in the RUF there were certain things that were open information, they were not hidden. Like the issue of Colonel Jungle was not a hidden issue and the securities close to Sam Bockarie would inform us at any time he entered. And even when there was pressure and when we got close to the securities they will explain to us. And even when that man would come with materials or any other thing that he brought, they will explain to us for us to grow our spirits so that we will be able to do our things. When we got the materials at any time we will be able to go and defend our grounds and we did not have any other means to get on to Charles Taylor.

Q. When you say that, "When that man would come with materials or any other thing he brought", who are you talking about, which man?

A. He, Colonel Jungle.

Q. When did he come with materials himself, Jungle, or any leave Guinea and they would change there. They would relieve the others who were there. Some would be coming and others would be going.

So when we had the reinforcement, when Colonel Harris and 10:57:07 others came with the manpower we bypassed them and set an ambush from where they were based on top of the hill to the riverside. So we suppressed them in an ambush. Each time they moved from the riverside to come to the hilltop we would allow them to pass through us. They were going to the riverside, they would fall 10:57:25 into our ambush, we would kill some of this them and run away.

That is what we did from June up to 24 December. Then they left the hillside, the hilltop, and came back down the riverside, but they did not cross over. They were deployed on the Sierra Leonean end under some mango trees. That was where they deployed 10:57:44 and up to now they are there. In fact that had become a problem between the Sierra Leonean government and the Guinean government because they are alleging that that was their place so they will never go across. So that's a diplomatic issue now. They are on that now for them to go over. Up to now as I am speaking they 10:58:00 are there.

Q. Thank you, Mr Witness. Now, Mr Witness, you told us about Rashid Sandy that you saw in this meeting in Buedu. Now when did you see Rashid Sandy again after that meeting?

A. Well, I saw Rashid Sandy in another meeting. I saw him in 10:58:33 two meetings. There was another meeting. When this pressure - as a result of this pressure, Sam Bockarie summoned a meeting of front line commanders, adjutants and clerks. We went there. Everybody explained the pressure that he was encountering on the front line. We went to this meeting and I met Rashid Sandy there

A. Chief of defence staff.
Q. And who was the chief of defence staff at the time of that meeting?
A. It was Sam Bockarie.
11:01:53 Q. And then you spoke about a GSO. What does GSO stand for?
A. GSO1. It was a unit that was for all combatants. He worked with the chief of defence staff. They made approvals of all deployment of soldiers, or approval for soldiers for promotion, or assignment. It was the GSO who prepared that, 11:02:27 signed and the CDS approved, or the GSO - the CDS sent instructions to him for him to make assignments for somebody, then he will do that, but those were not happening any longer. The adjutants and the clerks were promoting soldiers without the consent of those two personnel.
11:02:48 Q. Now, GSO1, was it known by another name at that time?
A. Yes, in fact we were not used to calling them GSO1. We were saying G1 in short. We called them G1 in short.
Q. Now, Mr Witness, I want to come back to the first meeting that you talked about and you said that Sam Bockarie summoned a 11:03:16 meeting for the front line commanders, the adjutant and the clerks. When did Sam Bockarie summon that meeting?
A. He called that meeting in Buedu in 1998. It was at that time that he called the meeting when we went and met him. So when everybody had explained his situation - in fact it was at 11:03:43 that time that he said that it looks like he himself should go, he himself should go and meet Charles Taylor to explain to him that that was the situation that was on the ground. By then that was - at that time we were approaching the end of 1998, October/November, around November, early November. It was at that time. I can remember that time, because when he went it was not too long. He left CO Issa in charge as acting CDS. It was then that the 4th Battalion in Koindu, we received our promotions approved by CO Issa. At that time Sam Bockarie was not there.

11:04:25 He had gone to Liberia to meet Charles Taylor.
Q. Mr Witness, you said that, "At that time he said that it looks like he himself should go." Who said that?
A. Sam Bockarie himself, that he himself should go, after he had got all the situation reports from the various front lines, 11:05:00 like Koindu was serious, Kono issued there was an attempt on Kono, but they were unable to capture Kono because RUF had run out of ammunition. They were unable to get Kono and we still needed Kono. So he, Sam Bockarie, said he himself should go and meet Charles Taylor so that he would discuss with him to be able 11:05:21 to explain to him what the pressure was. It was at that time that Sam Bockarie went.
Q. And how do you know that Sam Bockarie in that meeting said that?
A. I was at the meeting. I myself was at that meeting when he 11:05:42 was saying that.
Q. Now, Mr Witness, you said that it was a front line commanders' meeting. Who else, if you can remember, was in the meeting?
A. Like there was one front line commander whom we called CO
11:06:06 Eagle. He was at that meeting. The 2nd Brigade commanders came, like Superman also came at that meeting. Hi-Rash too was at that meeting. Augustine Gbao was at that meeting. Front line commanders of the various areas also came at that meeting.
Q. Mr Witness, Eagle, who was Eagle?

A. Eagle was a junior commando. That was his nickname. He was a junior commando. He was a tall man. He was a front line commander.

Q. Now, you told us previously about another meeting, the 11:06:57 important meeting where there were Ibrahim and Jungle. Where was Eagle during that meeting?

A. Eagle too was at that meeting. I said it that so many commanders came, but I can't recall their names, but as I go along I can recall some of their names. But Eagle too was at 11:07:24 that meeting because he was an important man in the revolution.

Q. Thank you, Mr Witness. Now, you told us about another meeting which was chaired by Hi-Rash and which was to address the adjutant and clerks and then you said that there was a written document to the adjutant and clerks. How did you know about this 11:07:57 written document?

A. The written document - he prepared a memo, a written memo document, where he stated the rank and files. If somebody was in this position, this was the type of rank you should get. If you were this, this is the rank you should get. That was the type of 11:08:23 list he prepared and gave it to us, the adjutants, that this was what we should carry, that we should not promote anybody if that person had not attained that position. That is what I mean.

Q. And did you see that document yourself?

A. Yes, sir, he gave it to me. He gave me a copy.

11:08:45 Q. And who gave you a copy?

A. Hi-Rash gave me that copy. He came with another assistant. They came together at that meeting, when they summoned us to that meeting. We called him TTK. He too was an adjutant, but his name was Tamba T Karimu. We used to call him TTK for short.

in 1998. If any, which other meeting in Buedu can you remember?
A. Well, I can remember another meeting after Sam Bockarie had gone to Liberia and returned, around the time CO Issa gave us these promotions. At that time Sam Bockarie was not there, he had gone to Liberia. The time he showed me those diamonds, that he was going to the father to discuss with him relating to the situation about the Kono incident, to take Kono.

So when he returned at that time we were still in Koidu and when Sam Bockarie came he convened a general meeting at Waterworks, but I did not attend the meeting when I was in Koindu because at that time we were under some pressure from the enemies in Koindu, so I was not able to attend that meeting. But I went to Buedu the day after the meeting and I heard about the meeting and what the meeting was about. That's how I knew about it, what happened in Buedu, the meeting at Waterworks, Buedu.

Q. What year did that meeting take place, Mr Witness?
A. The meeting took place after we had this promotion, after my promotion, this November '98 promotion. That meeting, I think it took place in '99. Early '99, I think so, because it was after my promotion anyway, because at that time we were in Koindu when that meeting was convened.
Q. Now you said that you went there in Buedu and you said that you heard about the meeting. What did you hear about that meeting?
A. When I went - the day after the meeting when I went to Buedu, just as usual when I will go I will go to my wife that night and the following morning I went to the ground to CO Mosquito's place on his ground and I met his bodyguards Shabado with the others who were there, Ray. At that time Ray was in Buedu. He too had come from Koindu and gone Buedu. When I went I met them there. They told me, "Abor, why didn't you come for the meeting?" I said, "You know that we had some problem there and I was part of the fighting." That was what I called problem. There was some pressure, those men wanted to advance and I said, "But we burnt down one of their war tanks from them, but we thought they would still attempt to advance on us so we were on a strong defensive, but we heard about the meeting so what was the meeting about?"

12:12:53 So Shabado, Ray and some other men explained to me that Master had come. They said he had come with ammo, a lot of ammo, and in fact he, Eddie Kanneh and others had come. One AFRC strong man who was called Eddie Kanneh, they said he came together with them. They said they went to Liberia to the father and the Pa - they crossed Liberia and they went to Burkina Faso and when they came from Burkina Faso they came back with a lot of ammunition and arms, and when they came back they were even drawing plans for --

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness slow down and repeat.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, you are going too fast again. You have speeded up. Please go back to where you said, "They came back with a lot of ammunition and arms and when they came back they were even drawing plans ..." Continue from there, speak slowly for the interpreter. Please proceed.

THE WITNESS: So Shabado and others told me that they had drawn a war plan in the meeting. A lot of people attended the meeting. They said almost all the front line commanders attended. He said, "You were the only people that we did not see, but then we understand that you had some pressure on you." He said they had drawn a war plan to go and attack Kono and Segbwema, Bunumbu-Segbwema axis simultaneously and that they were arranging for those men to go their own ammunition. I said, "How about the meeting? Who were the people attending the meeting?" They told me that Colonel Jungle was present and in fact Eddie Kanneh and CO Mosquito were there, the two of them came from the mission, that's the trip that they made to Liberia and Burkina Faso. They said the two of them came back. They said Colonel Jungle was there, General Ibrahim himself was there and Abu Keita and some other Liberians. He said all of them were there. In fact he said Abu Keita was to be with us for the mission. They said they had come. He said --

MR WERNER:

Q. Just pause, Mr Witness. First you talk - once you spoke about the Master, that Master came. Who did you refer to when you said Master?

A. Sam Bockarie. I had said it once or twice here in this Court that we used to call Sam Bockarie Master, so any time I use Master I will be referring to Sam Bockarie. Then Father, we used to call Charles Taylor the Father. So at times - I am still used to calling him that way, that's why. So they said they had come and they had drawn the plan and there was a big offensive at hand in the 2nd and 1st Brigades. Then he said, "Maybe they will even have to call you for reinforcement."

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Werner, I think your witness has strayed far away from your question.

MR WERNER: Yes, thank you, your Honour:

Q. You mentioned Eddie Kanneh, you said he was an AFRC strong man. What else, if anything, were you told about Eddie Kanneh at that time?

A. They said Eddie Kanneh and Sam Bockarie went to Liberia, right up to when they went to Burkina Faso and the two of them returned from Liberia into Sierra Leone, the two of them were in the meeting.

Q. Mr Witness, just try, if you can, to answer my question. What else about Eddie Kanneh himself? You said he was an AFRC strong man --

12:16:59 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Werner, the question you asked the witness was, "What did you hear about the meeting?" Now I personally am lost. All this evidence he is giving, is it a precursor to the meeting or is this something that happened in the meeting? There are like two big paragraphs, I don't know what they relate to. Certainly they don't appear to relate to the question you asked, "So what did you hear at this meeting?"

MR WERNER: Your Honour, the witness said that he was not at the meeting.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: About the meeting.

MR WERNER: Yes, your Honour.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: The answers he gives I do not think are related to what he heard about the meeting.

MR WERNER:

Q. So, Mr Witness, if you can set your mind to exactly what Shabado told you - Shabado and the other bodyguards told you about what happened in this meeting. Can you tell us just at that time when you went there what were you told about that meeting?

A. The bodyguards told me about the meeting, that Master and others had come, Master and Eddie Kanneh - I meant Sam Bockarie, they had come from Liberia with a lot of ammunition. So they called up for a meeting and so all front line commanders and senior vanguards were there at the meeting. They welcomed them and they explained how they travelled, where they went and how they had come and even the materials that they brought. They explained that in the meeting.

12:18:26

Q. Just pause there, Mr Witness. Who explained that in the meeting, how they had travelled? Who explained that, according to what you were told?

12:18:41

A. It was Sam Bockarie who was giving the report about how their trip was, what they went to do and what they had brought. That's what he was telling me. He said but there were a lot of dignitaries present in a meeting, even SYB Rogers, the War Council chairman, was present. The front line commanders too were in attendance. Then the Liberian government representative. He said Colonel Jungle and General Ibrahim were in the meeting. All of them were in the meeting together with Abu Keita. They called the name of a man called Abu Keita. He too came from Liberia, this Abu Keita.

12:19:10

12:19:36

They said Sam Bockarie explained about how they travelled, what they brought, whatever transpired during the trip and SYB Rogers, the War Council chairman, thanked them in his address whilst he was addressing the meeting and some other senior officers also spoke, like Morris Kallon. CO Issa too spoke and thanked them and they drew a war plan, how they were to attack Kono and Bunumbu-Segbwema.

12:19:58

Q. Pause there. You said that you were told about what they had brought. What did you mean? What was discussed according to what you were told? What was discussed in the meeting about anything being brought? Can you tell that again?

A. They brought arms and ammunition, RPG rocket, the bombs. They brought a lot of those for the missions that was consistent with the war plans that they had drawn for Kono and Kenema. Those are the materials. They said they brought a lot of them.

Q. Mr Witness, several times you said that they had drawn a war plan. What were you told about this war plan? How drew the war plan?

12:21:18 A. It was Sam Bockarie together with the other senior officers like Issa, Morris Kallon and others. They drew how the attack should go on, who should go to Kono and who should go to Kenema. They divided the officers and from that meeting everybody should go straight to his location where he had been assigned. You 12:21:45 should go with your materials and start your attack.

Q. Now you mentioned someone called Abu Keita. Who was Abu Keita?

A. Abu Keita was a Liberian fighter who came, whom they said came. They said he too was present at the meeting and they said 12:22:13 he, Abu Keita, was to be part of the mission to go and attack.

Q. Were you told anything about who had sent Abu Keita to Sierra Leone?

MR ANYAH: Objection.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, Mr Anyah?

12:22:35 MR ANYAH: I am objecting to the leading in the question.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, it is leading, Mr Werner. Rephrase it.

MR WERNER:

Q. Mr Witness, what, if anything, were you told about who had sent Abu Keita to Sierra Leone?

PRESIDING JUDGE: It is exactly the same. It is leading. It implies somebody sent him. How do we know he didn't walk on his own.

12:23:00 MR WERNER:

Q. Mr Witness, what else were you told about Abu Keita, if anything?

A. Shabado and others told me that Abu Keita came together with Colonel Jungle and others, that he came for that fight. 12:23:17 That his axis was to go by Bunumbu-Segbwema end, 1st Brigade. That was his deployment area that he should go when he will go on the offensive, Abu Keita. He came together with Colonel Jungle and General Ibrahim according to Shabado and others. That was what they told me in Buedu.

12:23:40 Q. Now, Mr Witness, you said that those men had to go to their own ammunition, so you told us that Issa Sesay was in the meeting. If you know, where did Issa Sesay go after that meeting?

A. The 2nd Brigade was Issa Sesay's deployment. He should go 12:24:11 to the Kono end. They went to Kono, 2nd Brigade.

Q. And if you know, who else went to Kono to the 2nd Brigade?

A. Superman, he too was in Kono. All of them went there. PB Vandy - all of them went with the 2nd Brigade to attack Kono.

Q. Now, Mr Witness, if you know - you told us about several 12:24:55 meetings in Buedu. Who, if anyone, was in charge of taking the minutes of those meetings?

MR ANYAH: Objection. It is a compound question in the sense that counsel has to lay foundation as to each meeting and who was present and who took the minutes.

Q. Now, can you remember the date of the attack by the 2nd Brigade?
A. No.
Q. How long was it after the meeting you were told about by 12:35:01 Shabado that you did not attend at in Buedu?
A. It did not take long then they launched the attack, then the 2nd Brigade launched the attack. It did not take long.
Q. Now, Mr Witness, what if anything happened in the 1st Brigade after the 2nd Brigade successfully attacked Koidu?
12:35:34 A. Well, the 1st Brigade too we heard that they attacked Bunumbu Teachers College in the Kailahun District, Peje West. They captured it, they advanced and captured Segbwema. They captured there, they advanced and went to Komende Station and they captured it. They advanced. That is on the way to Kenema, 12:36:06 the route to Kenema. They went to Jumu Kafabu. Jumu Kafabu too attacked and captured. That too we heard.

MR WERNER: Now, your Honours, I believe that Segbwema is already in evidence.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes.

12:36:22 MR WERNER: Komende would be K-O-M-E-N-D-E:

Q. Mr Witness, can you help us with Jumu Kafabu?
A. J-U-M-U Jumu, Kafabu K-A-F-A-B-U. Kafabu.
Q. Now, Mr Witness, where were you yourself at the time the 1st Brigade attacked Segbwema, Komende and Jumu Kafabu?
12:37:01 A. I was still in Koindu. That was where I was.
Q. Now, again could you tell us in which district is Komende?
A. Komende is in the Kenema District.
Q. And what about Jumu Kafabu?
A. Jumu Kafabu too is in the Kenema District.

Q. Now what if anything - what else, if anything, were you told about this attack on these places by the 1st Brigade?
A. Well after they had reached Jumu Kafabu, when they attacked and captured it Sam Bockarie changed my assignment, I and Colonel 12:37:56 Harris. He moved us from Koindu and we went as reinforcement to join them for that mission to attack Kenema. It was at Jumu Kafabu that we met the 1st Brigade troops. That was where they were. We met them there. We passed through Bunumbu, Segbwema, Komende Station and then we went to Jumu Kafabu. That was where 12:38:20 we met them. We met - the entire town had been burnt down; the entire Jumu Kafabu. It was a fairly big town. They burnt the entire town, but it had a very big mosque. A very big mosque was there because it was a Muslim dominated area. It was only the mosque that was spared in the town. The entire town was burnt.
12:38:42 That was where we met them. From there we joined them and we attacked Kenema.
Q. When you said that they burnt the entire town except the mosque, who burnt Jumu Kafabu?
A. RUF 1st Brigade fighters.
12:39:02 Q. And at the time you were there who, if anyone, did you see in charge of that offensive for the 1st Brigade?
A. Well, that offensive I met CO Eagle there, this Abu Keita that I was talking about, in fact that was where I saw him, at Jumu Kafabu. That was where I saw him, that Abu Keita that we 12:39:33 were talking about, because we went together with Shabado and others. Shabado too went on that attack. All of us attacked Kenema. Eagle was there.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, pause. This is not answering the question put, Mr Werner.

MR WERNER: Yes:

Q. So I asked you who was in charge of that offensive. Do you know who, if anyone, was in charge, Mr Witness?

A. It was Sam Bockarie himself who was in charge of that Kenema offensive.

Q. But on the ground when you went to Jumu Kafabu who, if anyone, was in charge on the ground?

A. It was CO Eagle I met there as commander.

Q. Now what happened to you after that, Mr Witness?

A. All of us advanced together and attacked Kenema. We attacked Kenema twice, but we did not succeed in capturing Kenema. The attack failed. It was during this attack that we lost Shabado. It was then that Shabado died, during this attack, and some other few men.

So the troop withdrew and came to Jumu Kafabu and Komende Station. That was where we stayed. That was where we based. That was where the RUF 1st Brigade stayed and set a defensive.

Q. When you say that you tried to attack twice Kenema, are you talking about Kenema Town or Kenema District?

A. Kenema township, Kenema Town.

Q. Then you said that you went back to Komende and set a defensive there. So how long did you stay in Komende then?

A. When we withdrew and based in Jumu Kafabu and Komende, Sam Bockarie withdrew some manpower from us. It was Harris who stayed in charge of that area, that battalion. That same Colonel Harris with whom I went. He stayed in charge of the command. We were there until the first disarmament that took place in 2000, in the year 2000.

Q. Mr Witness, do you remember the month of July 1999?

had done my shopping and I was moving around with Marzah, and it was the time that he came and when he came we made the trip to Burkina Faso.

Q. Okay, thank you. Mr Witness, you said "we made the trip to Burkina Faso", who did you travel to Burkina Faso with?

A. We were six in number: Myself, Sam Bockarie, Colonel Razak, Cisse Musa, Eddie Kanneh. We were six, including General Ibrahim, and that was the first time I knew him, General Ibrahim.

Q. What did you learn about General Ibrahim?

A. Well, I was made to understand that he was a Gambian by nationality, the way he spoke, and I was also made to understand that his boss was a personal friend of Foday Sankoh's and his boss was the one who accommodated Foday Sankoh in Ivory Coast. Those were some of the facts that I got from him and I experienced them and he also made me to understand that he was a man that had a wide range of experience in revolutions.

Q. What languages do you know that General Ibrahim spoke?

A. Well, I did not know whether he spoke any of the local languages in The Gambia, but he was somebody who spoke a very good French.

Q. What language did you speak to him in?

A. He also used to speak English. I used to manage to speak the Liberian English to him.

Q. You called him General Ibrahim. Did you learn what army he was a general in?

A. I only knew that it was in the Liberian army and even Colonel Marzah called him that way and even Pa Cisse Musa called him that way, General Ibrahim. So the same name they used to call him was what I also called him by, General Ibrahim.

Q. You've also mentioned Eddie Kanneh. Can you tell us what you know about the biography of Eddie Kanneh?

A. Eddie Kanneh was a man who was commissioned in the Sierra Leone Army as an intelligence officer that we referred to as MIB, 15:50:31 military intelligence, and he got his training in Cairo. He was a man who also spoke very good French and we were all in the same army until the time the AFRC took over and appointed him as resident minister of the Eastern Province. He was a friend of Sam Bockarie. He was a Mende by tribe.

15:51:10 Q. Thank you.

A. He was a Mende Mandingo.

Q. You've also mentioned a Colonel Razak and our spelling is slightly different than the pronunciation so I don't know if your Honours want me to spell it? Sir, what did you know about him?

15:51:37 A. Like I told the Court, he was an old struggler. He was one of the Special Forces who started the revolution. He was a man who used to limp. He limped a little bit and he had a problem with his right foot.

Q. Sir, how did you travel to Burkina Faso?

15:52:07 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, before you move to Burkina Faso, the witness keeps referring to this word "revolution". He referred to it when he said Charles Taylor told him if he was loyal to the revolution and he's also referred to it when speaking of persons in Sierra Leone. I'm not sure I understand 15:52:28 what this term means, "revolution".

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Sir, did anyone - well first of all, Charles Taylor, did he in any way explain to you what he meant when he talked about the revolution?

A. No, sir.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Yes, but when the witness himself says so and so was a struggler in the revolution, what does the witness mean by the term "revolution"?

15:53:07 THE WITNESS: The revolution, what they were trying to say is that they were referring to the rebellious force, because through discussions I was made to understand that even Foday Sankoh was a member of the Special Forces and when President Charles Taylor launched his revolution he was also fighting

15:53:39 alongside him. It was when they had succeeded in Liberia that he was also giving support to establish a base in Foya, that was called Sokoto base, where some of the Special Forces were trained and who were later referred to as vanguard. Like I told you, the junior vanguards were referred to people like Womandia, Peter 15:54:17 Vandi, Francis Musa, Issa Sesay and Sam Bockarie, so that was what they referred to as revolution.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Thank you. Sir, how did you travel to Burkina Faso?

A. It was by air. We took off from Roberts airfield. In the 15:55:02 morning hours Pa Cisse and I we slept in the same house, Sam Bockarie, Razak and Eddie Kanneh they also drove in their own vehicle and General Ibrahim was also driven in his own vehicle. We all met at the airport, because it was a special aircraft that was at the airport waiting and we did not go through any

15:55:57 protocols like going through immigrations, what or what not. We just came with the vehicles, we parked them closer to the track and we alighted from the vehicles. All of them alighted from their individual vehicles and we used the side steps of the aircraft and then we entered the flight, and on entering the door closed, we rode on the runway and then the flight took off to Ouagadougou.

Q. Sir, did you ever see who was flying the plane?

A. Yes. When we got inside the aircraft, the aircraft did not just take off like that. I saw one of the pilots. He came to the back. He was a tall, white man. He had a beard, but it was not all over. He had a moustache and I was made to understand that he was a Russian. The way I managed to know that he was a Russian was through discussions that took place between him and his colleague, and I used to come across Russians and even in our army in Sierra Leone we had some amphibian tanks that Strasser bought from Russia. That was the reason why the ammo and tank division was opened in the army and they were the ones who used to train us. So, that was how I was able to identify him as a Russian. They were two. They were two in number. They were the only two people we met on board the train.

MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, for the record in describing the facial hair he gestured to his upper lip and to his chin area.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Have counsel for the Defence seen that?

MR MUNYARD: I didn't see it.

PRESIDING JUDGE: There is a bit of a screen.

MR MUNYARD: Well I can hardly see from here, but it will be different when I'm questioning.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well.

MR MUNYARD: I'm quite prepared to accept counsel opposite's description of it, even though I had my head down at the time.

PRESIDING JUDGE: The record will show [microphone not activated].

MR KOUMJIAN: I believe it was a moustache and goatee.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: The witness used the word moustache, although it is misspelt.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

15:59:10 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Yes, he used moustache.

JUDGE LUSSICK: Mr Koumjian, the witness said he was able to identify this person as a Russian and then he said, "They were two. They were two in number." Does he mean two Russians, or just two pilots?

15:59:28 MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Sir, how many crew members did you see?

A. Both of them were the only crew on board the flight. There were no other people on board the flight. They were just two in number.

15:59:41 Q. You described one man as being tall with a moustache and a goatee. First of all, do you recall what colour hair this man had?

A. He had a golden coloured hair.

Q. And, sir, you said he was white. Was the other man a white 16:00:09 man, or an African man?

A. No, they were both white men. They were speaking to each other, the two of them. I think they were both the same people.

Q. Were they speaking English, or another language?

A. I am telling this Court that they were not speaking

16:00:42 English, and the reason why I knew that they were speaking Russian is I had said that Strasser bought amphibian tanks that we were using and the instructors who trained me as artillery officer were Russians so they were speaking Russian to each other.

Q. Sir, can you describe the airplane that you were on?
A. Yes, it had yellow, blue and red lines and at the tail it had something like - it had a logo that I will imagine it had something like a baseball logo at the tail of it. Although it 16:01:52 has taken a long time, but I can recall some of the things that I can use to identify it a little bit.
Q. Did the plane have seats for passengers, or did it not have seats for passengers?
A. It had seats for passengers. It had seats for passengers 16:02:26 and, even when we were now on board, we later ended up loading the ammunition boxes on the seats so that - and we fastened the belts over them. So after we had loaded on board the aircraft, some of the spaces - empty spaces - and some of the remaining seats were not loaded after the others had been loaded with the 16:03:13 ammunition boxes, so the remaining few seats, six in number, were not loaded at all. It was just on those seats that we sat.

MR KOUMJIAN: Okay. Your Honour, at this point I would like the witness to be shown some photographs. Perhaps the first one will be 21, already an exhibit in this case, 21A, 21B and 21D 16:03:53 if the Court Officer could bring those up.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Is that 21 in this bundle, or exhibit P-21?

MR KOUMJIAN: Exhibit P-21A, B and D.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Are they copied into this bundle, or not?

16:04:11 MR KOUMJIAN: They're not. I do have black and white photographs, but I think the screen will be a much better picture for your Honours to follow than the black and white copies I have. Starting with P-21B:

Q. Sir, do you recognise what's depicted? I see you're

Q. Who is Senegalese?
A. Well Senegalese when I knew him, at first when he went that evening that he arrived Bai Bureh told me that he was an STF and the STF whom I knew were the ULIMO fighters who were fighting
11:05:07 alongside the Sierra Leone Army in Sierra Leone. So, that was what Bai Bureh told me that Senegalese was STF. I surely knew him as a Liberian because he did not know how to speak Krio, he was speaking the Liberian English, and he said he was sent by Sam
11:05:55 Bockarie to come and join Superman with reinforcement, which was composed of 30 men, for them to go and attack - for them to launch the attack which Sam Bockarie had sent Superman to carry out, but when he got to Yomandu Superman was not there at the time. The next morning --
Q. I am sorry, before you go on -- 11:06:20 PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes. Mr Santora, this is getting somewhat confused.
MR SANTORA: That is why I was --
PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, "he joined the SLAs", "I told him we had arrived there." Did she tell Sam Bockarie, or Superman, or 11:06:39 who?
MR SANTORA: I am going to clarify that. I will clarify that portion first.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, there is another series of "he"s thereafter.
11:06:48 MR SANTORA:
Q. Mrs Witness, I just have to ask you a few questions about some of the things you have just mentioned, okay? Now first of all you said, "Sam Bockarie had given him an order to move to Kurubonla." Who did Sam Bockarie give the order to?

A. To Superman.
Q. "... to go to Kurubonla where the SLAs, headed by SAJ Musa, where they were based. He said he should go and attack them." Who said - who do you mean when you said, "He said he should go"?
11:07:28 A. If I speak the Krio, I mean Sam Bockarie told Superman to go to Kurubonla and attack SAJ Musa's men.
Q. "And that very day I was on the set when he sent a message to enquire if Superman had left to go", who sent that message?
A. Sam Bockarie.
11:08:01 Q. And then, "Superman had left that very day. He went to Yomandu." Who left to Yomandu?
A. Superman left me at Superman's ground and went to Yomandu.
Q. Now, later on when you were saying - I asked you what happened when you got to Yomandu and you said:
11:08:34 "When I got to Yomandu, Superman was not there. He had already left for Kurubonla, but when I got to Yomandu I communicated with him that I and his other bodyguards have arrived in Yomandu." Who did you communicate with when you arrived at Yomandu?
11:08:51 A. Superman.
Q. And then, "When he went to Kurubonla, the instruction which Sam Bockarie had given him he did not carry out", who is the "he" you are referring to?
A. I am sure it was Sam Bockarie who instructed Superman to 11:09:22 carry out an operation in Kurubonla and Superman did not carry it out.
Q. And then you said, "He joined the SLAs." Who do you mean by "he" there?
A. I am still referring to Superman.

Q. "They moved from Kurubonla to Kabala", who is "they"?
A. Superman and his men and SAJ Musa and his men.
Q. Then you said, "When I got to Yomandu and told him we had arrived there", who did you tell you had arrived there?
11:10:08 A. I told Superman that I and his bodyguards whom he had requested for us to meet him had arrived in Yomandu.
Q. Now, later on you said you passed the night and the next morning - the next day, I am sorry, "In the evening, one Senegalese met us at Yomandu." You went on to say - when I asked 11:10:37 you who Senegalese was you said in your response, "He was speaking the Liberian English and he said he was sent by Sam Bockarie to come and join Superman with reinforcement." When you say, "He was speaking the Liberian English", who were you referring to?
11:11:02 A. You asked me - how you asked me who Senegalese is and I am talking about Senegalese.
Q. Did you yourself have a conversation with Senegalese?
A. I spoke with him.
Q. Can you just say what he told you in that conversation?
11:11:28 A. That is what I have just said. When I first got to Yomandu, when Senegalese got to Yomandu, Bai Bureh told me that Senegalese was an STF. Senegalese himself told me that he had come from Liberia and that it was Sam Bockarie who had sent him to join Superman.
11:11:59 Q. So do you believe Senegalese was an STF, or not?
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Anyah?
MR ANYAH: Objection. The witness said - I think she said Bai Bureh told her that Senegalese was STF. Counsel is asking her if she believed or not and I object to the form of the question.

MR SANTORA: What is wrong with the form of the question?

PRESIDING JUDGE: She may have believed him, she may not have believed him. What is the nature of your objection?

11:12:39 MR ANYAH: She received the information from somebody and - well, I withdraw the objection.

PRESIDING JUDGE: At the end of the day whether she believed it or not doesn't go to the credibility of - sorry, does not go to whether he was an STF or not. What her belief is is 11:13:02 not relevant.

MR SANTORA:

Q. So, first you said you had a conversation with Short Bai Bureh and then you had a conversation with Senegalese. Do you believe he was STF, or not?

11:13:14 A. I did not believe that he was an STF.

Q. Why?

A. Because the STFs who joined the SLAs - I mean the AFRC and the RUF whom I saw and knew, they had taken a long time in Sierra Leone, they were speaking the Krio better, but Senegalese did not 11:13:54 speak a single Krio.

Q. Now, you said Senegalese himself told you that he had come from Liberia and that it was Sam Bockarie who had sent him to join Superman. Do you know where he came from in Liberia?

A. I did not know where he had come from in Liberia.

11:14:30 Q. And you said there was 30 men there as well. Who were these 30 men that you referred to?

A. The 30 men too were men who had arms and they were all Liberians. From what they spoke, the dialects they used, I did not know of in Sierra Leone.

Q. Did these men speak Krio, as far as you know?
A. No.
Q. Do you know where they came from?
A. I did not ask them individually, but their commander who 11:15:21 brought them, that is Senegalese, said they had come from Liberia.
Q. Did you recognise the language they were speaking, or the dialect?
A. I can still recall that there were some men among them who 11:15:53 were Kpelle, whom I saw and saw them talking with the STF, and some of the Liberians who were still within the RUF who were Kpelle I heard them talking the language.
Q. And do you know what language Senegalese spoke? Well, what language did you speak with Senegalese in?
11:16:26 A. It was only Liberian English. I did not hear him speak any particular language.
Q. Is there anything else you talked about in your conversation with Senegalese?
A. I have already told you what Senegalese told me and it was 11:16:58 Senegalese and I in the group that we were, that is the signal unit, which was composed of radio people or people dealing with radio, that we went around with when we were leaving Yomandu to go to Kurubonla.
Q. What happened after you met Senegalese in Yomandu?
11:17:41 A. We left Yomandu with Senegalese. I, Superman's bodyguards and Short Bai Bureh's men who were in Yomandu whom he added on to us, left Yomandu for Kurubonla. That was the next day, after Senegalese and the others had arrived. The next day we left Yomandu.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Santora, I'm not sure, this message, who she was sending this message to. She keeps saying "them" and I'm not sure if it's the people in Freetown, or Sam Bockarie at the base in Buedu. I'm referring to page 76 from line 2 where 13:19:46 she says, "I switched on the set the first thing I did was to call Buedu", passed on an information to them and - okay, so it was Buedu that she was passing this information.

MR SANTORA: I will clarify it, your Honour:

Q. So when you arrived in Yams Farm you said the first thing 13:20:07 that you did was call the Buedu station and, "I passed on an information to them that we were now at Yams Farm." So who specifically did you send that information to?

A. When I called the Buedu station it was to Sam Bockarie that I sent the message.

13:20:31 Q. Now, later on you were describing a communication going to Sam Bockarie that "... the ECOMOG had dislodged the men who were in Freetown and that the State House had been recaptured from our men who were there." I want you to continue - well, first of all, can you just start again explaining this communication 13:20:57 relating to State House?

A. The communication that I'm talking about, whereby it was Gullit who sent a message to Sam Bockarie over the radio saying that the ECOMOG had pushed them out of State House and that fighting was going on in Freetown at that time. I monitored it 13:21:34 when he was sending that message to Sam Bockarie, and after he had sent the message to Sam Bockarie he first - Sam Bockarie first asked Gullit if Gullit and others still had the prisoners with them and he answered "Yes". And when he said that fighting was going on in Freetown, Sam Bockarie told him that if the men, that is the ECOMOG, forced Gullit and others out of Freetown, they should burn the fucking place and that they should not spare anything. He said that verbally.

Q. And was there any response from Gullit?

13:22:56 A. He answered "Yes, sir" to him.

Q. Now, where exactly were you when you heard this communication?

A. I was at Yams Farm.

Q. And about how many days, if any, had passed when you heard

13:23:20 this from the point you reached Yams Farm?

A. Just a day.

Q. And can you describe the tone, if you recall the tone, of Sam Bockarie's voice when he sent this message?

A. He was angry as he spoke. He was speaking with power.

13:23:52 When he spoke, you knew that he was angry.

Q. Do you know what he meant when he said that they should not spare anything?

A. Well, if I can say what I mean, I am sure you too can say anything and nothing will result from it, be it property, a 13:24:31 house, be it a human being, anything, which means everything. That is what I mean. That is what I understood.

Q. Now, how long did you remain at Yams --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Just pause, Mr Santora. "You too can say anything and nothing will result from it, be it property, a house 13:24:59 ..." I'm not sure exactly what that means.

MR SANTORA: I will clarify:

Q. Mrs Witness, I asked you if you know what Sam Bockarie meant when he said that they should not spare anything and you answered:

Q. Black Jesus was also imprisoned at Pademba Road, yes?
A. I don't know.
Q. Well, how do you know Black Jesus?
A. I knew him, but I never knew that he was at Pademba Road
10:03:36 because they never gave me a list that these are the names of people who had been sent at Pademba Road. If I know about Martin, it was because he was my colleague operator.
Q. Do you know where Martin Moinama is today, Madam Witness?
A. I don't know if he is alive. I heard that he died.
10:04:00 Q. Who told you he died?
A. The men who were in Freetown.
Q. Did you hear that from Foday Lansana, Madam Witness?
A. No. Foday Lansana did not go to Freetown.
Q. Well, let me ask you this: You said you heard it from the 10:04:31 men in Freetown, when exactly did you hear it from the men in Freetown?
A. Yams Farm.
Q. And were you at Yams Farm about the time of the 6 January invasion?
10:04:56 A. I was in Lunsar, but I went to Yams Farm after 6 January.
Q. So you heard after 6 January that the same Martin Moinama who had been released from Pademba Road Prison had been killed.
PRESIDING JUDGE: I think the witness said died. That, to me, includes natural causes.
10:05:24 MR ANYAH:
Q. Madam Witness, did you hear whether or not Martin Moinama had been killed?
A. Yes.
Q. What exactly did you hear?

A. Lately I understood that Martin was killed because of the testimony that he gave against Pa Sankoh and I cannot say that I asked anybody who killed him or not. No, I did not ask that. But the person who told me also told me that it was Sam Bockarie who ordered his killing.

10:06:12

Q. So if your sequence of events is correct, they released him from Pademba Road Prison and, if this rumour you heard is correct, at the request of Sam Bockarie he was killed, yes?

A. Yes, according to what the person told me.

10:06:46

MR ANYAH: Madam Court Officer, can we go to page 29 of tab 1. The relevant paragraph is 172:

Q. Madam Witness, this is what you told the Prosecution about Martin Moinama, October last when you met with them. The paragraph reads:

10:07:36

"The witness has heard of Martin Moinama, also known as the Cat, and he is late. The witness believes that he was killed before the intervention. During the Freetown invasion the witness did not hear any radio message about the Cat."

Madam Witness, why do they have you telling them that 10:08:06

Martin Moinama was killed before the intervention?

A. I can answer to that. The question was if I knew Martin and I knew him, and again they asked me when did I know that he was missing and I knew when he got missing and that was at the time when the ECOMOG took over Freetown and his wife stayed with us and she told us that Issa arrested her husband and she was sure that he had been killed. That was what exactly I said. And I did not get any radio message about Martin, that he was taken to Pademba Road or not. I learned that from his wife, that he had died, because she herself did not see her [sic] after that time, but later I learned that he died after 6 January.

10:08:37

Q. Madam Witness, you are now telling us Martin Moinama's wife stayed with you, yes?
A. Yes.
10:09:32 Q. She stayed with you and she told you what had happened to her husband, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Indeed your answer just given in court - this is a reference to what you believed the Prosecution was asking you in 10:09:51 October last, you said:
"They asked me when did I know that he was missing and I knew when he got missing and that was at the time when the ECOMOG took over Freetown and his wife stayed with us and she told us that Issa arrested her husband and she was sure that he had been 10:10:15 killed."
This is what you've just said in court, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. When the ECOMOG took over Freetown, you're referring to the intervention in February 1998, correct?
10:10:31 A. Yes.
Q. Moinama's wife was staying with you at that time. She told you her husband had been killed, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Then why are you telling us in court that during the 6
10:10:47 January invasion in 1999 Martin Moinama was one of those released from Pademba Road Prison by the RUF invading forces?
A. I have said it here that the people who released those people from Pademba Road and when they came back from Freetown it was from them that I learnt that Martin had been killed, but I

A. The question I cannot answer directly, because the ULIMO and the STF, I came to know them when they joined the AFRC. So I can't tell whether they had been in Liberia at a certain point in time whilst they were fighting there at the time ULIMO was 12:20:43 fighting there, whether they were fighting amongst that group. So all the STF who came, when they said they were ULIMO, I don't know. Maybe they were the ULIMO who were fighting against Charles Taylor.

Q. You don't know, but we do agree that they were ULIMO -
12:21:05 ex-ULIMO fighters, to be precise, right?

A. Like you have said it, I will take it that way.

Q. Well, it's not like I said it. Have you told the Prosecution they were ex-ULIMO fighters in a previous statement?

A. Yes.

12:21:26 Q. Now you said something in court that you did not believe that the men with Senegalese were STF. Do you recall saying that?

A. Yes.

Q. And why did you not believe that?

12:21:43 A. They asked me and I said the STF who joined the AFRC that I knew about were speaking better Krio because they had stayed long in Sierra Leone. They knew the names of so many towns and villages. But in the case of Senegalese, when they came together with the other men I did not hear them speak proper Krio. They 12:22:10 were speaking pure Liberian tongue. So I don't think they were part of the STF that I knew that I saw amongst the AFRC.

Q. But let's start with Senegalese. Senegalese, as far as you knew, was through and through an STF member, right?

A. No.

Q. Have you told the Prosecution before that he was STF?
A. I said Bai Bureh told me that Senegalese is an STF.
Q. You did say that, but you have also told the Prosecution that some of the STF you knew were Colonel Wallace, yes?
12:23:13 A. Yes.
Q. Also known as Sea Never Dry, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. You said there was a Colonel Ngallah, N-G-A-L-L-A-H, yes?
A. Colonel Ngallah, yes.
12:23:36 Q. You said there was a Major Koroma, K-O-R-O-M-O [sic], yes?
A. Yes.
Q. And then you told them Senegalese. "He was very tall and spoke Liberian and French." You included him amongst the STF, did you not?
12:24:01 A. I included him. That is when they came and joined us when we were at Koinadugu, he was together with the STF because they spoke similar languages and they ate the same food.
Q. Where did you first hear the name Red Lion battalion, Madam Witness?
12:24:33 A. At Koinadugu.
Q. And in what context did you hear that name?
A. Like I have said before, I met with the Red Lion battalion in Koinadugu because Superman and others had already been in Koinadugu and they asked me about the groups that were there and 12:25:01 they were the SLA, the STF and the RUF, and the particular Red Lion was mostly comprised of the SLA, even before the new Red Lion was formed at the time I was in Koinadugu.
Q. Well, let's leave the new Red Lion for a moment. Your evidence is that the first time you heard the phrase Red Lion

A. We went to Hastings. There were no ECOMOG there. We occupied Hastings, both the airfield and the barracks, then we started advancing from Jui. When we went to Jui, ECOMOG was occupying one area of Jui while we were occupying the other side 12:55:55 in the barracks, the SSD barracks. RUF occupied the Jui SSD barracks. It was at that Jui we were told to man the checkpoints and so we manned the checkpoints at Jui, the main road.

Q. In that assignment at Jui, who was your commander - direct commander?

12:56:16 A. CO Kondewa, a Liberian NPFL fighter. An old NPFL fighter, CO Kondewa the late.

Q. Thank you. Now while you were in Jui, do you know where Superman was?

A. Superman was in Freetown.

12:56:36 Q. How long did you stay on the peninsula?

A. Why did they call peninsula? I don't understand.

Q. Thank you. How long did you stay in Jui?

A. I do not remember the actual time, but we stayed there for a long while and we were attacked by ECOMOG and we were flushed 12:57:05 out of there.

Q. When ECOMOG attacked you and you were flushed out, where did you go?

A. I went to Yams Farm near Hastings, very close to Hastings.

Q. How long did you stay at Yams Farm?

12:57:25 A. We were in Yams Farm for a long while. Hastings, Yams Farm, for a long while.

Q. Now during that time that you were in Jui, Hastings and Yams Farm, did you ever go to Freetown?

A. Yes, I used to go to Freetown to meet Superman and some of my friends.

Q. During that period of time, did you receive any assignments from Superman to go anywhere else?

A. Yes.

12:58:08 MR KOUMJIAN: Madam Court Officer, the witness --

PRESIDING JUDGE: We have that under control.

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, as you announced you have that under control, publicly I would like to know what it is we have under control.

12:58:44 PRESIDING JUDGE: The poor old witness is very cold and we are getting him a jacket.

MR MUNYARD: I am very grateful.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Sir, what was the - I see my LiveNote is still frozen, but 12:59:01 what was the assignment that Superman gave you?

A. Superman told us to go to Kenema District to meet Sam Bockarie.

Q. Now, did you go to Kenema?

A. Yes, we went to Kenema and we met Sam Bockarie. We went to 12:59:44 collect ammunition from Sam Bockarie, but when we got to Kenema Sam Bockarie told us that the ammunition have not yet arrived in Kenema and so he told us to continue the journey. He gave us a car. Salami was driving the car - the late Salami Kabbah - and he told us to go to Pendembu so that we will meet somebody there 13:00:08 that was called Jungle who was bringing the ammunition, but the car had a breakdown and so we went with another car to collect the ammunition.

We met Salami Kabbah - I mean Jungle and we met another man called Senegalese. He was a Liberian, a tall fellow. We met him, we explained the situation to him and then Jungle told us to get civilians around so that they will transfer the ammunition into the other car, so when we assembled the civilians we asked them to transfer the ammunition to the car.

13:00:44 After that, Jungle decided to join us to come down to Sam Bockarie and meet him in Kenema. So after all, when we got to Kenema Sam Bockarie asked us to get some of the ammunition to be carried to Superman in Freetown. That was the assignment given to us by Superman.

13:00:59 Q. Thank you. Now, Mr Witness, do you recall what year this was?

A. Yes, '97. 1997.

Q. You said, "We went to Kenema". Without giving us all the names, how many of you were sent to meet with Mosquito, Sam

13:01:26 Bockarie, in Kenema?

A. We went with some men to escort the ammunition, but I can't recall the actual figure.

Q. Can you give us some idea of the ammunition that you transferred from Jungle's car and took to Freetown? Excuse me, 13:01:53 I think I have misstated the evidence. Is it correct, Mr Witness, that you transferred the ammunition from Jungle's car? Where did you take it to after transferring it from Jungle's car?

A. We went with two pick-ups with us, so we transferred the 13:02:09 ammunition from Jungle's own car. Jungle brought with him a big truck, so we transferred the ammunition from the truck to the two Land Cruiser pick-ups. Salami Kabbah was driving one of them and our own driver.

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, the second name called by the witness was not clear to the interpreter.

PRESIDING JUDGE: You called two names, Mr Witness. One was Salami. What was the other name, please? Repeat it.

THE WITNESS: Jungle.

13:02:35 PRESIDING JUDGE: I think, interpreter, are you referring to the two drivers?

THE INTERPRETER: Yes, your Honours.

PRESIDING JUDGE: The second driver, Mr Witness?

THE WITNESS: The driver for Sam Bockarie's car that he 13:02:51 gave us from Kenema was Salami Kabbah. The other driver was Popay Jay [phon]. I did not actually know his actual name, but the first driver was Salami Kabbah.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Is that first name you are saying Papay, like father Papay?

13:03:13 A. Popay Jay [phon]. It was just a nickname, but I don't know. I don't know his actual name.

Q. So when you got the ammunition and put it into the pick-ups, where did you go?

A. We travelled back to Kenema and we turned the ammunition

13:03:38 over to Sam Bockarie.

Q. What was the type of ammunition that you had received from Jungle, do you recall?

A. Yes, we received GMG rounds in boxes, AK-47 rounds and RPG rockets. Those were the ammunition we received.

13:04:04 Q. Who was Jungle?

A. Jungle was in the SSS in Liberia. He was a member of SSS in Liberia. He was a bodyguard to President Taylor, close protection unit.

Q. Was this the first time you had met him?

A. That was my first time to meet him.
Q. Did you get to know him later, or no?
A. I knew him later and he became my personal friend, a best friend of mine. He was just like an elder brother to me. I was 13:04:52 very close to him now. He was with me until his death.
Q. Do you know where Jungle had got the ammunition which you then transferred to Sam Bockarie in Kenema?
A. The first time I met him we did not discuss that much, but when I got to know him later he explained to me how he used to 13:05:19 get the ammunition that he crossed with from Liberia. He told me that he used to take the ammunition from - sometimes the President used to send him to get the ammunition from White Flower, the Executive Mansion, to take it to Sam Bockarie and that was not his first time to cross over with ammunition.
13:05:47 Q. Now, Mr Witness, after you took the ammunition to Sam Bockarie, what became of the ammunition, if you know?
A. Sam Bockarie just got outside and looked at the ammunition and he told us not to delay. He said we should take the ammunition immediately to Superman in Freetown because they heard 13:06:11 that ECOMOG will soon be attacking us in Freetown, so we took the ammunition to Freetown to Superman and we turned them over to Superman.
Q. Just so we are clear, when you said Jungle was in a position with the President - I am sorry, I see the answer was he 13:06:39 was a bodyguard to President Taylor. Thank you. What did you do then after receiving this order from Sam Bockarie?
A. I don't understand that question.
Q. After Sam Bockarie told you to take the ammunition to Superman, what did you do?

A. We took the ammunition to Superman. We took the ammunition to Superman in Freetown.

Q. Now, you have mentioned Jungle. Do you know his real name?

A. Yes, Daniel Tamba.

13:07:28 Q. Did Jungle tell you whether he took anything back - you say he would take ammunition to Sierra Leone. Did he say whether he would take anything back to Liberia?

A. Yes, when I got to know him better later we were very close. Like he used to explain to me. He used to say that he

13:07:48 was the person that was serving as liaison between Sam Bockarie and President Taylor. He used to take diamonds to President Taylor and he will in turn give him ammunition to take it to Sierra Leone. Jungle told me that personally. But because he said he had a personal problem with Sam Bockarie - he used to 13:08:06 explain all of these things to me. Jungle was having personal problems with Sam Bockarie before his death.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Pause, Mr Witness, please. Mr Munyard.

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, I am having difficulty keeping up with the witness and I would point out that it seems

13:08:21 to me that even on the LiveNote that we are being broadcast from Madam Court Officer's desk there is a gap, because we have gone from some of the evidence - there was then a gap, he gave more evidence and then there was a question by Mr Koumjian that appears on line 13 of page 89 on my page. "Mr Witness, after you

13:08:44 took the ammunition to Sam Bockarie did Jungle tell you whether he took anything back?" I think that there is a gap there that the evidence hasn't actually been recorded. I know it will all be rectified in due course at the end of the day, but we are all struggling now with this rather faulty form of LiveNote. The

THE WITNESS: When Bockarie used to call on Benjamin Yeaten's satellite phone he used to complain and say, "Oh, my boy, I am straining here. Please, can you help me talk to Benjamin Yeaten. I want to talk to Benjamin Yeaten". And 13:13:35 sometimes I will come to Jungle and say, "Oh, brother, your boy is grumbling over there. He too is straining there now". I said what goes around comes around and sometimes he would say, "Oh", and that was the time he started explaining to me. He was grumbling and I used to say that is fine for him because he told 13:13:54 me the same thing, because when he came over he started side lining me, that was the same thing I used to tell you. I said to him that he should be patient. That was what I used to tell him.

JUDGE LUSSICK: Mr Witness, you seem to have ignored everything the Presiding Judge told you. You are speaking much 13:14:12 too fast. Not only the interpreter can't keep up with you, but the shorthand writers can't keep up with you as well and we are missing sections of your evidence. Now I would prevail on you to speak reasonably slowly. Nobody can possibly keep up with you at the pace you are going.

13:14:33 THE WITNESS: Okay.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Witness, we will come to these events that you are talking about later. Right now I am asking you about 1997 and this trip to Kenema. You mentioned somebody named Senegalese.
13:14:49 Who is Senegalese?

A. Senegalese was one of the Special Forces for President Taylor.

Q. You said that when you went to Kenema that Sam Bockarie was there. Do you know what was going on in Kenema at that time?

A. Yes, Sam Bockarie was based in Kenema at that time and he was supporting mining in Tongo. He was taking care of the mining in Tongo at the time.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Do we have a time frame for this period, Mr Koumjian?

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. When was it that Sam Bockarie was in Kenema?

A. '97. 1997.

Q. And are you talking about the time before the AFRC coup, or after the AFRC coup?

A. At the time we were running the government along with the AFRC, alongside the AFRC.

Q. How did you know about the mining in Kenema, in Tongo?

A. I knew about the mining because I had personal friends that used to go to Tongo, like Charles Gebeh who was the overall armoury commander for the RUF at that time. He used to come from Tongo, boys who were bodyguards to Issa Sesay --

THE INTERPRETER: Correction, interpreter: "Boise [phon] who was the personal bodyguard to Issa Sesay".

PRESIDING JUDGE: We are just correcting the record, Mr Witness. Do you have that finished, Mr Interpreter?

THE INTERPRETER: Yes, your Honour.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, pick up again. You were saying, "He used to come from Tongo" and you then said something about who were the bodyguards.

THE WITNESS: I said a personal friend of mine, Charles Gebeh who was the overall armoury commander for the RUF used to come from Tongo. He used to come from Tongo, Charles Gebeh, and he was a bodyguard to Issa Sesay who was called Boise, I have JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, you didn't give us a time frame for the Gbarnga visit. The whole idea of getting arms and ammunition from there, or ammunition, we need a time frame, please.

15:55:03 MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Witness, do you recall the month that you went to Gbarnga? Let me start this over. First, Mr Witness, do you recall what year it was that you went to Gbarnga?

A. Yes, I remember. It was in '98.

15:55:24 Q. Do you recall, Mr Witness, if it was dry season, or rainy season?

A. I think it was some time around the starting - the beginning of the rainy season.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: In which country? Rainy season of which 15:55:43 country?

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Witness, are the rainy seasons different in Liberia and Sierra Leone?

A. No, they are the same, the same. They are the same.

15:55:53 Q. So when you say the rainy season you are talking about the rainy season in what country, or countries?

A. In both of the countries, Sierra Leone and Liberia.

Q. Can you remember what month it was? If you can't, just tell us you cannot remember.

15:56:17 A. I can't remember the month.

Q. Did you take the ammunition to Superman?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any operation after you took ammunition to Superman?

A. Yes.
Q. Did that operation have a name?
A. Yes, yes.
Q. Can you tell us what was the name of this operation?
15:56:49 A. Yes, Fitti-Fatta.
Q. What was the objective, the goal, of the Fitti-Fatta mission?
A. To just go on the rampage and retake over Koidu Town.
Q. By the way, when you came back from Gbarnga to Buedu was 15:57:15 there anybody with you that hadn't been in your group that left Sierra Leone?
A. I don't understand.
Q. I'll try again. It wasn't very clear. You said you went with a number of people to Gbarnga - to Foya and then Gbarnga.
15:57:34 Were all the people you went with Sierra Leoneans? You mentioned Eddie Kanneh and some others.
A. Yes.
Q. When you came back did you come back only with Sierra Leone people, or was there anyone else with you?
15:57:50 A. Yes, Liberians were with us.
Q. Do you recall the names of the Liberians that were with you when you went back to Buedu from Gbarnga with the ammunition?
A. Yes. Jungle, Daniel Tamba, Sampson.
Q. Thank you. Was the Fitti-Fatta mission successful in 15:58:17 taking Koidu?
A. No.
Q. First of all, what were you using to transport the ammunition to Superman?
A. Escorted us to the crossing point at the Moa River. From whether you were able to carry any weapons to SAJ Musa and, if so, what were the weapons?

A. We carried a lot of weapons. We carried mortars, GMG, some RPGs that were captured, we took them along with us, and some other light weapons like pistols, AK-47s, we took them along with us.
Q. So these weapons that were handed over to SAJ Musa, do you know if they stayed with the SAJ Musa forces after the attack on Mongo?
16:24:52 A. Yes.
Q. Do you know if these weapons stayed with SAJ Musa forces after he left Kurubonla?
A. Yes.
Q. These weapons and ammunition that were captured in Mongo, they were captured using ammunition from where, Mr Witness?
A. The ammunition that we brought along from Gbarnga, Kono, I took some to Komba Gbundema in Wordu, it was the same ammunition that we were to use to attack Mongo Bendugu.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Where is Gbarnga, Kono?
16:25:48 MR KOUMJIAN: I believe those were two separate --
Q. Mr Witness, you said you took ammunition from Gbarnga and then you said Kono. Can you describe the route.
A. Yes, the ammunition that we collected from Gbarnga in Liberia, the President's farm, it was the same ammunition that we took along to Kono, Superman's ground, and Superman gave some of the ammunition to Komba Gbundema in Wordu and it was that same ammunition that we took to Kurubonla after the meeting. It was the same ammunition that we used to attack Mongo Bendugu.
Q. And it was in this attack that the ammunition and weapons were captured from the Guineans and taken to SAJ Musa?

A. Yes.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: It would also be helpful for us to have a time frame for the Mongo Bendugu attack, please.
16:26:42 MR KOUMJIAN:
Q. Mr Witness, I know it's difficult for you to get the exact times, but let's work together to try to get some idea. What year was it that you attacked Mongo Bendugu?
A. It was late '98. The ending of the rainy season we 16:27:12 attacked Mongo Bendugu. '98, I think so.
Q. Can you give us an approximate time in months, or not, for the end of the rainy season?
A. I do not remember the month.
MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honours, actually this would be a 16:27:32 convenient time for me to break. I'm moving to a different topic.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well, Mr Koumjian. Mr Witness, we're going to adjourn for today. We will be resuming court again tomorrow at 9.30. I have to inform you that now that you 16:27:47 have taken the oath to tell the truth here in the court, you are not to discuss your evidence with any other person until all of your evidence is finished. Do you understand this?
THE WITNESS: Yes.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Please adjourn court until tomorrow at 16:28:02 9.30.

[Whereupon the hearing adjourned at 4.27 p.m. to be reconvened on Tuesday, 24 June 2008 at 9.30 a.m.]

zones. ECOMOG was on one side and we were on the other side.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Thank you, that leads to my next question. In Jui were you - why were you unable to go through Jui. As you had mentioned earlier?

12:13:57

A. Jui was at that time one of the strong bases for ECOMOG, because in '97 they were based at Jui and Jui was very strong and it was one of the strongest bases. It was from Jui that they ran the intervention into Freetown, so ECOMOG was very strong at Jui.

12:14:24

Q. What ECOMOG forces were at Jui?

A. The Nigerian contingent.

Q. Was there any battle between your forces and the ECOMOG forces at Jui at that time before Rambo Red Goat was dispatched?

A. Yes.

12:14:49

Q. You talked about Rambo Red Goat going with a group. Can you tell us approximately how many men were in that group?

A. Yes, it can be estimated at roughly 60 to 65.

Q. Who were these men that were under the command of Rambo Red Goat?

12:15:21

A. Some RUF men, some SLA and some STF.

Q. How were they armed, if you know?

A. Everybody would be armed from his own commander. The STF were armed from General Bropleh, the RUF Issa Sesay and Superman, and the SLA Brigadier Mani and Colonel T at that time. So, they were well armed.

12:15:51

Q. And do you know where Rambo Red Goat's group went?

A. They entered the city into Freetown.

Q. Now, earlier you had mentioned a bridge. Where was that bridge?

Q. Thank you. How long were you at Yams Farm?
A. We were there I think for a week and we retreated.
Q. Now, you talked about these forces led by Bazzy and Gullit being in Freetown. Did you receive information about what was 12:18:55 going on while they were in Freetown in any way?
A. Yes.
Q. How did you learn about what was going on in Freetown?
A. At first they called and said that they had taken over the State House and, secondly, they called that they have got to 12:19:20 Pademba Road where the RUF and the AFRC were in jail that were captured by ECOMOG. The next time they called they said they had freed some of the men, including Gibril Massaquoi, and they reported that they had been attacked by different contingents, like the Guinean contingent, the Nigerian contingent and 12:19:48 different troops. That was the time that Sam Bockarie called. I heard Sam Bockarie talking over the BBC that any contingent that attacked his forces in Freetown he will command his forces to burn all the embassies down.
Q. Okay. Mr Witness, you began your answer by talking about, 12:20:09 "At first they called and they said they had taken over the State House." Just so we're clear, who was it that was calling and saying that?
A. Alfred Brown was the radio man and Gullit will always be in the radio room calling directly to Superman, calling Sam 12:20:29 Bockarie, and I was monitoring those calls directly. Alfred Brown, Gullit, Bazzy, sometimes Major CY.
Q. Do you recall these persons inside Freetown, aside from telling about their situation did they say anything else during these communications?

A. Yes, they were talking about burning down houses, putting motor tyres on the street and burning it and killing people. Those were all in the communication because they wanted to take over the Wilberforce barracks, but they said there was no way for them to do that so they were trying their best.

Q. How long did these forces stay in Freetown approximately, as far as you can recall?

A. I can remember two weeks.

Q. And what happened at the end of the time that they were in Freetown, do you know?

A. When they were retreating they started burning down houses, they abducted girls, so many girls who retreated with them, and they killed people whilst retreating. At that time ECOMOG was chasing them.

Q. Mr Witness, do you know why they had to retreat?

A. Yes, they said they went out of ammunition.

Q. Who did they say - to who did they say that they were out or running out of ammunition?

MR MUNYARD: I wonder if we could have a definition of who "they" are.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, Mr Koumjian, who is the "they" in question?

MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you:

Q. Mr Witness, you said that, "They said they went out of ammunition." Who was it that said that?

A. Sam Bockarie called Superman to protect Benguema barracks, Gberi Junction and Waterloo, because Gullit called him and said that they were running out of ammunition. He, Gullit and his forces, were running out of ammunition and that they would need the toe and given to the witness before or after the death of Superman, or at the time of death of Superman?

THE WITNESS: After the death of Superman, two days later.

JUDGE LUSSICK: So Philip Duo was the one that beat Superman down?

15:44:36

THE WITNESS: Yes.

JUDGE LUSSICK: He didn't shoot him, he beat him down, is that right?

THE WITNESS: Yes, he was the one that was able to knock him down and take the ring from his toe before they shot him.

15:44:45

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Again, Mr Witness, this is what Reflection told you?

A. Yes, Reflection.

Q. I just want to be clear about Benjamin Yeaten. Eventually you said Benjamin Yeaten told you some years later about the killing of Superman. Did Benjamin Yeaten indicate whose idea it was to kill Superman?

A. Yes, it was not --

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can he repeat slowly.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Start again from the beginning, Mr Witness, and take it slowly.

15:45:01

15:45:30

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. I believe you started by correcting me.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, that is correct. It was not 2002. Repeat your answer.

15:45:43

THE WITNESS: After the death of Superman, 2001, early 2002, Benjamin Yeaten, when the war was getting intensified in Liberia, he told me that he regretted the death of Superman because when Superman was alive the rebels never used to overrun

A. It was in '97.
Q. And what happened while you were at Waterloo?
A. After we had withdrawn from Hastings for Waterloo, we were there when Sam Bockarie's group came from Kailahun and they met 13:06:34 us there.
Q. And when you say you were in Waterloo, in what area were you based?
A. We were based at where they were training the soldiers. They called there Benguema.
13:07:02 Q. And what happened when Sam Bockarie and his group came to Benguema?
A. Well, those of us who first went to Freetown and after we had been dislodged, that was where they met us. That was where they came.
13:07:22 Q. Do you recall any of the people in Sam Bockarie's group?
A. Sam Bockarie came along with Issa Sesay and others I can't recall.
Q. How long did you remain in Benguema barracks?
A. Well, we were there - after the junta - when the AFRC
13:08:03 government invited Mosquito that after they would have formed the government they would want Mosquito to serve in the government, but Mosquito said that he was not going to work with the government. So from there Mosquito returned to Kenema.
Q. And what did you do when Mosquito returned to Kenema?
13:08:33 A. I went along with him. We went together.
Q. And what were your duties when you were with Sam Bockarie in Kenema?
A. Well, at that time Mosquito knew that I was a Black Guard, so I was with him to keep security and to report whatever that was taking place to him.

Q. And what happened after you went to Kenema?
A. When we got to Kenema he said that we should attack Tongo, Tongo Field, because the Kamajors were there. So we went and 13:09:18 attacked Tongo. All of us went, together with Mosquito. We captured Tongo and later he returned to Kenema.
Q. And did he tell you why he wanted to capture Tongo Field?
A. Yes, he said because it was a diamond area. We should not go - we should not just go and stay there, we should capture it.
13:09:45 Q. You said that Mosquito returned to Kenema. What did you do?
A. I stayed in Tongo.
Q. And what were your duties in Tongo?
A. I was there to - just so that if I got any information, I 13:10:12 was to send that information to Mosquito as security.
Q. While you were in Tongo, what activities were going on in Tongo?
A. Before Mosquito returned he appointed one person, whom they called Chairman, to head the diamond mining in Tongo.
13:10:42 Q. Who was this person Chairman?
A. This Chairman was a civilian, but that was what they used to call him, Chairman. So after Mosquito - after Mosquito and Eddie Kanneh had organised this mining, he was made head, that any diamond that they got were to be kept by Chairman and when 13:11:13 Mosquito came they were to give them to him. But when Mosquito and others returned and when the mining was going on, after they had got some diamonds the Chairman hid. After he had escaped, later Mosquito and others came back to Tongo. When they came back, after Chairman had escaped, Mosquito appointed another

Q. What happened after you went to Superman Ground?
A. When I had been at Superman's ground, later Sam Bockarie called Issa to go to Buedu, so I joined Issa Sesay and the two of us went to Buedu. He said we should try to recapture Koidu Town, so he was trying to go to Monrovia to meet the Pa, that is Charles Taylor, and that Issa Sesay was to stay in charge when he went. So we waited there until Mosquito went to Monrovia.
Q. Can you tell us when this was that Mosquito went to Monrovia?
15:32:00 A. This happened in October.
Q. Can you tell us what year this is?
A. It happened in 1998.
Q. You said that you went to Buedu with Issa Sesay. How long were you in Buedu?
15:32:29 A. We spent up to two months.
Q. And what happened then?
A. Later Mosquito came with a lot of ammunition.
Q. And what happened after he came with a lot of ammunition?
A. After he had come with these ammunition he said that the 15:32:57 Pa, that is Charles Taylor, had told him that we should try and capture Kono. He said we should try and capture Kono and other mining areas, so that we will be able to get diamonds and hence get more arms and ammunition. So he handed over these materials to Issa Sesay. Since then we moved to Koidu Town. Sorry, to 15:33:31 Superman's ground.
Q. You said he came back with a lot of ammunition. What kinds of ammunitions did he come back with?
A. He came with RPG bombs, he came with AK rounds, he came with GPMG rounds, he came with camouflage, he came with guns and others that I cannot recall.

Q. When you say he came with camouflage, what do you mean?
A. That is the clothes that a soldier puts on. That is combat.
15:34:34 Q. How was this ammunition and the camouflage and the other things, how was it brought to Buedu?
A. It was a vehicle that brought them.
Q. And can you tell us the size of this vehicle?
A. At that time they were brought in a pick-up.
15:35:08 Q. You said that Mosquito gave Issa Sesay these materials. Why did he give Issa Sesay these materials?
A. He said we should try and capture Koidu Town and the other areas which were mining areas, because the Pa, Charles Taylor, had said we should try and get these areas in order to get more 15:35:44 diamonds.
Q. And what was Issa Sesay's role in this operation?
A. Issa Sesay was to go and organise commanders. He was to become the commander to organise - to organise so that they can fight and capture these areas.
15:36:15 Q. And you said you took these materials to Superman Ground. How did you transport the materials to Superman Ground?
A. Well, Sam Bockarie ordered - captured some civilians around Buedu and the surrounding villages to carry these arms and ammunition, so that was what they did before we departed.
15:36:53 Q. What happened when you arrived back in Superman Ground?
A. When we got to Superman's ground, Issa Sesay called a meeting. At this meeting he called, Morris Kallon was at this meeting, Akim Turay was at this meeting, Banya was at this meeting, Gassama Mansaray was at this meeting, and other people to be in control of the diamond business. That was the understanding I got.

Q. And how did you get that understanding?

A. I knew when we returned to Freetown. He himself told me.

12:19:18 Q. Now, you said that Foday Sankoh left out of RIA airport. Who accompanied him to the airport?

A. I myself accompanied him to the airport, together with some Liberian securities. He was escorted to the airport. We were there when they departed. From there we returned to the 12:19:50 guesthouse, I and Mosquito.

Q. When you reached RIA airport, did you see any securities around the airport?

A. Yes, I saw securities.

Q. Did you know who those securities were?

12:20:08 A. They were SSUs. SSU securities.

Q. You said that "they departed". Who are the "they"?

A. Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma's group. All of them went.

Q. Now, you said that you and Mosquito went back to the 12:20:33 guesthouse after this departure. What happened after that?

A. When we returned to the guesthouse, Benjamin Yeaten came and collected Mosquito. He said they were to go and meet the Pa, Charles Taylor, to arrange about his return. So, they went and met Charles Taylor. Mosquito returned to the guesthouse and said

12:21:01 that the Pa had said he should try and return. The following day Mosquito and I and Benjamin Yeaten went to Spriggs field. When we went to Spriggs field to accompany Mosquito, we boarded the helicopter that was to take Mosquito. In this helicopter I saw Benjamin Yeaten - I heard Benjamin Yeaten saying, "Mosquito, these materials have been given by my dad, Charles Taylor, because as my brother Foday Sankoh was going to Freetown you should be keeping security and so you should take along this ammunition to Buedu." So, from there we alighted the helicopter.

12:22:09 Q. Now when you were in the helicopter, what did you see inside this helicopter?

A. I saw AK - I saw AK rounds in the tins. We used to call them sardine tins which contained the AK rounds. I saw up to 15. I saw --

12:22:41 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: You saw what? 15 what?

THE WITNESS: 15 of those tins. Then I saw RPG bomb with the TNT. It was - they were in the helicopter.

MS HOLLIS:

Q. Mr Witness, when you say you saw 15 tins, what were in 12:23:06 these 15 tins if you know?

A. They contained the AK rounds.

Q. What kind of helicopter was this that these materials were in?

A. Well, this time it was a helicopter that had a camouflage 12:23:40 colour. It had a camouflage colour.

Q. And did you know whose helicopter this was?

A. Yes, Benjamin Yeaten told us that it was owned by his dad, Charles Taylor.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Ms Hollis, could we have a clarification

12:24:05 of what the witness means by camouflage colour please.

MS HOLLIS:

Q. Mr Witness, you have said that this helicopter was a camouflage colour. Can you describe to the Court what you mean by camouflage colour?

A. That is the colour - it's camouflage, just like a combat, just like a military uniform, that's what it was like.
Q. Can you tell us what colours were on this camouflage?
A. Green, black, dark brown. It was a mixed colour.
12:24:53 Q. You indicated that you then got out of the helicopter and what happened after that?
A. When we alighted the helicopter I returned to the guesthouse while Sam Bockarie and others went.
Q. Can you tell us who these others were that went with Sam
12:25:18 Bockarie?
A. Sam Bockarie went with his bodyguards.
Q. What happened with Benjamin Yeaten?
A. Benjamin Yeaten did not go. He too returned to his house.
MS HOLLIS: Your Honours, this next line of questioning 12:25:46 I am going to ask for private session. It has to do with a unique position - two unique positions in fact that the witness held which would be identifying and the information the witness received because of these unique positions in combination would also be identifying.

because Charles Taylor was our big revolutionary father, so he said he went to him for him to give him advice.

Q. Tell us what advice he received, if he know?

A. Well, after Issa Sesay met the Pa Charles Taylor, he said he told him that he, Charles Taylor - he would request for the UN peacekeepers arrested by the RUF, for them to be released. So he said that will serve as a help to him to show to the world that when he says anything that thing will happen.

So after he returned the UN peacekeepers were released through Charles Taylor's command. All of them came to Foya and from Foya they were airlifted to Spriggs field.

Q. When Issa Sesay left Monrovia to go back to Sierra Leone, how did he travel from Monrovia?

A. They travelled on board a helicopter to go to Foya. It was at Foya that the helicopter dropped him and from there he took a vehicle to return to Sierra Leone.

Q. If you know, whose helicopter was it?

A. It was Charles Taylor's helicopter.

Q. Did Issa Sesay take anything back with him to Sierra Leone?

A. Yes, when Issa Sesay was going he took with him ammunition, but I can't recall the quantity that he took with him.

Q. How do you know that he took ammunition with him?

A. When Issa Sesay used to come to Monrovia, I will be with him for all the time until his return. I went with him to Spriggs field, I entered the helicopter and I saw the materials. That was how I came to know that he went with ammunition.

Q. Do you know from whom he received this ammunition?

A. At all times when ammunition were given Benjamin Yeaten will say that it is his dad Charles Taylor who provided them.

there and then they will fly it straight to Foya and if Benjamin Yeaten was not there, if there was another commander there like a commander who was called Amphibian Father, he will be there to organise to see that the ammunition moves across to meet Issa Sesay in Sierra Leone.

15:53:19

Q. Well, I am sorry, but it is a matter of some importance, so I will have to press you on this. Foya is in Liberia, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is the distance from Foya to the Sierra Leonean border?

15:53:43

A. There is a little bit of long distance. It is a little bit far. It is far.

Q. And Foya is also very close to the Guinean border from whence LURD attacked, isn't it?

15:54:10

A. Yes.

Q. So arms being airlifted into Foya would risk falling into the hands of LURD, wouldn't they?

A. No. Before the airlift would move, the securities on the ground would be deployed and they would deploy manpower and they will send information to Monrovia ensuring that the ground was safe before the airlifting will happen.

15:54:34

Q. But even once the arms and ammunition have been airlifted into Foya, they still have to travel by road to get across the border, don't they?

A. Yes, securities were deployed by day, because there is a river between Guinea and the Sierra Leone border in that area, so before ever a vehicle could travel there would be securities by the river bank, so if enemies were to cross over there, the securities must know about it.

moment. You said Benjamin Yeaten was overall in charge. Now, you have mentioned an Amphibian Father. Where did he fit in this chain of command, if you know?

A. Amphibian Father, what I knew was that he was controlling the Foya area and he was in control of a group called the navy group. He controlled that group, but what Benjamin Yeaten told us was that Charles Taylor appointed him as the joint chief of staff chairman and that he was the boss for all the other generals; he, Benjamin Yeaten.

14:52:40 Q. Mr Witness, Defence counsel also asked you questions about diamonds during your assignments 1 and 2. Defence counsel, I am referring to page 13121. The Defence counsel at one point asked you, "So, just so that I am clear, a portion of those diamonds, if I understand you, would go to Charles Taylor for safe keeping, 14:53:09 is that right?", and you answered, "Yes." Mr Witness, the diamonds went to Charles Taylor for safe keeping for whom?

A. For Foday Sankoh.

Q. To your knowledge, did Foday Sankoh ever receive those diamonds that were held by Charles Taylor for him?

14:53:36 A. At the time Foday Sankoh used to meet me in Monrovia he never told me that the diamonds that they had been keeping with Charles Taylor were given back to him by Charles Taylor.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, does that mean they were never given back?

14:54:11 THE WITNESS: Foday Sankoh did not tell me that he had received diamonds from Charles Taylor. He never told me that.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Did he tell you that the diamonds were deliberately kept from him?

THE WITNESS: When he came he said Mosquito and others told him that they kept diamonds with Charles Taylor for him, but he told me that he had not received any diamonds from Charles Taylor.

MS HOLLIS: Madam President, your Honours, at this time I have a series of questions I would like to follow up with the witness relating to the Defence counsel's question, or putting to the witness that he was gun running as a private enterprise of Ibrahim Bah. This will relate directly to the matters I said were most sensitive to this witness in that they would identify him because of his unique roles. So I would ask for a private session. It will be a fairly short private session for those particular follow-up questions.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Griffiths, you've heard the application?

MR GRIFFITHS: Without knowing what the questions will be I think through an excess of caution perhaps we ought to go into private session.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Court Attendant could you please implement that private session. Ms Hollis, if you wish to have a seat while that is being done. For members of the public who are listening to the proceedings, the next series of questions will be in private session. This is for reasons of security of the witness. It means you will not hear what is being said within the Court and likewise it will not be recorded or broadcast to the public through the internet.

on Sierra Leone territory after he had been cut off, himself and his troop had been cut off, by activities on the border?
A. Yes, sir, he almost - he took about a year with us in the jungle and later he crossed through Guinea and entered into 16:17:02 Liberia.
Q. And do you recall what time he went back - he crossed through Guinea and entered Liberia?
A. The only time I saw him was the time I was referring to, 1998.
16:17:25 Q. The question was whether you knew about what time he went back into Liberia, the time you said he went back through Guinea and into Liberian territory. Do you recall when this was?
A. To be specific, sir, I can't recall the month or the date, but he spent some time with us in the jungle before he left.
16:17:56 Q. The next time you saw him you say was in 1998. Is that correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where did you see him?
A. I saw him in Kenema at Sam Bockarie's house.
16:18:14 Q. And do you know why he had come to Sam Bockarie in Kenema?
A. Well the only message I heard from him was that he brought some ammunition and that the truck got stuck close to Buedu, but that he came ahead to inform Sam Bockarie.
Q. Did he say where he was coming from with the ammunition?
16:18:57 A. Well at that point in time I knew that he was coming from Liberia, but he did not say that he was coming from anywhere else.
Q. How did you know that he was coming from Liberia?
A. Since the time he left us in the jungle and went to Monrovia I knew that he had been there all along and that he was part of Charles Taylor's securities.

Q. Did you know who gave him the ammunition that he was bringing to Sam Bockarie?

16:19:52 A. Well at that point in time I was not actually taking good record about how, where or who gave - who directly gave him the ammunition that he brought at that particular time, but I knew that he wouldn't have had ammunitions all by himself in Liberia rather than getting it through the orders of Charles Taylor.

16:20:27 Q. You said he reported that he was coming along with this ammunition but the truck got stuck at a point before Buedu.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he reported this to Sam Bockarie, what particularly was he asking to be done about this situation?

16:21:06 A. That question is not that clear to me, sir.

Q. Did Sam Bockarie do anything about the ammunition that Jungle said he brought and was stuck somewhere before Buedu?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he do?

16:21:30 A. At the time Jungle came with the information coincided with the time I was just about to travel to Daru to visit my sick father and whilst in Daru I heard that Sam Bockarie's convoy passed through and went to that direction and I believed that they were going for those ammunitions, sir.

16:22:01 Q. Did you get any information about whether they got the ammunition at all?

A. No, sir. At that particular point, no, sir.

Q. Do you know how long Jungle stayed in Kenema on this visit?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you there when Jungle - did he leave Kenema at any point?
A. Well, at the time I was like almost trying to obtain permission to go and visit my sick father, that was the same time 16:23:00 he too was giving some parcel to take it back to Liberia, but I didn't know whether he left on that particular day and at that particular time.
Q. Now, just to be clear, about what time after Jungle's arrival was he given parcels that you just mentioned?
16:23:28 A. I'm referring to 1998.
Q. Okay. The question is how long after he had arrived in Kenema and reported that he had brought a truck full of ammunition which was stuck before Buedu, how long after that did he get, or was he given, a parcel of diamonds - a parcel.
16:24:04 PRESIDING JUDGE: A parcel.
MR BANGURA: A parcel. I'm sorry, your Honour.
THE WITNESS: I heard of his arrival let's say like last night and I met him in the afternoon when that happened.
MR BANGURA:
16:24:20 Q. So was it the next day?
A. Exactly, sir.
Q. Now, you said he was given a parcel. Who gave him a parcel?
A. Sam Bockarie gave him the parcel.
16:24:37 Q. And did you know what this parcel contained?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did it contain?
A. It contained diamonds, sir.
Q. How did you know that the parcel contained diamonds?

A. Well, at that particular time the diamonds were always referred to as - a parcel of diamonds were always referred to as a parcel and I saw the parcel myself whilst we were waiting and he was discussing with Sam Bockarie and I was there waiting to 16:25:25 obtain my permission to go and see my father.
Q. Were you present when the parcel was handed to Jungle?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did Sam Bockarie say anything when he handed the parcel to Jungle?
16:25:53 A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did he say?
A. He said, "This is what I have now for the old man."
Q. And when he said "the old man" who was he referring to?
A. When he was dealing with Jungle at that time he was 16:26:18 referring to Charles Taylor at that time.
Q. How did you know this?
A. I knew that earlier, beyond the rebel lines, and we used to refer to Foday Sankoh and Charles Taylor as Papay, or the old man.
16:26:41 Q. Now, when Bockarie handed this parcel to Jungle and said this was for the old man, did Jungle say anything?
A. I cannot remember any word actually, but I think it was appreciated.
Q. Now, this person called Jungle, did you know him by any 16:27:12 other name?
A. Yes, sir. He was Daniel. I think Daniel Falla [phon].
Q. You said that at the time that the diamonds - that the parcel was given to Jungle, you were also trying to seek permission to go somewhere. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where were you trying to go to at that point?
A. At that time --
PRESIDING JUDGE: He's made that clear. It's Daru to see 16:28:04 his sick father.
MR BANGURA: I take the point, your Honour:
Q. You said you were going to see your sick father. Did you eventually go?
A. Yes, sir.
16:28:22 Q. How long were you away for seeing your sick father?
A. Well, unfortunately when I arrived I stayed there until the AFRC overthrow - I mean the ECOMOG brought back Tejan Kabbah to power.
MR BANGURA: Your Honour, I'm about to embark on a 16:28:58 completely new area.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Indeed, Mr Bangura, we're just onto time, so that would be convenient to adjourn. Mr Witness, we are now going to adjourn for today. It's 4.30. We will resume court tomorrow at 9.30. I again remind you, as I did yesterday, that 16:29:17 while you're under oath you should not discuss your evidence with any other person. Do you understand?
THE WITNESS: Yes, ma'am.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well. Please adjourn court until tomorrow at 9.30.

referring to that made that request?
A. A large number of us in this group I am referring to that left Voinjama.
Q. And are you saying that that large group was a group that 14:54:43 made the request? That's the question. Who made the request?
A. Well, it was - the request was from every one of us who were in Voinjama.
Q. Now, you said you were given the option of going to be trained as security for President Taylor at that time. Is that 14:55:25 correct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were any other options discussed with you if you did not take the option of going to be trained?
A. Well, it was not until we had travelled for another one 14:55:51 week to Gbarnga, because the day we had - we left Voinjama to go we had a breakdown at Zorzor and so we spent another one week in Zorzor. So when we finally arrived in Gbarnga Sam Bockarie came and met us and some of us complained about the information we got, that is going to train in Liberia. And I was one of the 14:56:19 spokesperson for those that stayed behind and I made him to understand that we escaped from war and Liberia was strange to us, it was not our home country, so how was it possible for us to come and train as securities for a nation that we were not citizens of.
14:56:52 So in that respect Sam Bockarie responded that it was very important for us to be part of that training and that those who refused to go to the training will live on their own and if anything happened to them they will not give account of them. And there were other things he explained that instilled fear in us because of the security situation in the country at that time. And he said again that we should not even ask him for any help in Liberia in the form of supports to our families, so the only option left to us at that time was that we were forced to go and undergo the training.

Q. Now, you said that he explained certain other things to you regarding the security situation in the country at the time. What was the security situation at the time that you knew about?

A. From the complaint I gave to him concerning the order, I told him that I had decided to take my family to any of the refugee camps and then he said that, if I can recall, about a few months ago they had just driven the rebels that crossed from Guinea and attacked Kolahun and Voinjama and they were still threatening to come and re-attack.

MR MUNYARD: I am sorry to interrupt. Can I just be clear which country is the security situation we are talking about?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, in a few places there, Mr Bangura, he is speaking of Guinea, and Kolahun and Voinjama which is in Liberia.

MR BANGURA: Your Honour, I will get the witness to clarify, but they were clearly in Liberian territory at this point:

Q. Mr Witness, talking about the security situation here, of which country are we talking about?

A. I am referring to Liberia at this point in time.

Q. Thank you. Can you continue, please. Continue. Your evidence was interrupted, or are you done with that answer?

A. If it is clear, sir, then I have finished with that.

Q. You said you were reminded about recent events in Kolahun and Voinjama by Sam Bockarie and I am not sure whether you quite completed what you were saying. What recent events in Kolahun and Voinjama were you reminded about?

A. And, like I said, I said he reminded us about the attack that the LURD rebels - later we came to know them by that name - that came from Guinea and attacked those areas that we were occupying, I mean Voinjama and Kolahun. He said that the area was not that safe for anybody to go to the refugee camps in the area, so it was better for us to be in areas that were under the control of the government.

Q. So as a result of these discussions that you had with Sam Bockarie, what became your position, all of you?

A. There was no other option left. We were all taken to Gbatala base for training.

Q. Now, where was Gbatala base?

A. Gbatala base was about a few miles away from Gbarnga going towards Monrovia on the Monrovia-Gbarnga Highway.

Q. Can you recall when exactly you went to Gbatala base?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it?

A. That was in January 2000.

Q. And at this time that you went to Gbatala, are you in a position now to recall the number of you that went there who were in Sam Bockarie's group?

A. After our graduation, that of our group, we were about 100 - I mean about 120 who graduated in my own batch.

Q. Now, the question was how many of you actually went there initially. The number you have given us is of those who graduated. Was that the same number that went to Gbatala base initially?

A. What I am trying to say here is that the total number of men who left Gbarnga with us I cannot recall now, but when we entered Gbarnga - I mean Gbatala base, some other brothers who had gone ahead with Sam Bockarie to Monrovia were also brought to the base and whilst we were on the base I was not completely having control over our own men, because we were now mixed up with the Liberian brothers, but we only came to know ourselves after we had graduated because we wanted to know those who were all members of our group that came.
Q. Mr Witness, let me just again advise that you try and speak a little slowly when you give your answers. I noticed that you were getting quite too fast. Now, apart from your group that came across with Sam Bockarie, do you know whether any other people from Sierra Leone came across after you left; from the RUF I'm saying?
A. Yes, sir, people continued to cross into Liberia from the RUF to Sam Bockarie.
Q. And when you went to Gbatala to start training, did your group include those who came afterwards?
A. No, sir, after our graduation another group of people were - from Sierra Leone were also trained in the name of Sam Bockarie's group.
Q. How long was your training for at Gbatala?
A. Well, the first training I underwent generally with those with whom I went to the base was for three months and that one was referred to as the basic training, sir.
Q. And who was responsible for training you at Gbatala?
A. At that time we had white instructors and they had Liberian Court where Sam Bockarie was?

A. No, sir.
Q. Were you in any communication with Sam Bockarie at this point in time?
16:07:19 A. No, sir.
Q. When you got back to Monrovia - you were withdrawn from Bopolu and you came to Monrovia did you get assigned on to any other duty?
A. Yes, sir.
16:07:35 Q. What duty was this?
A. I was assigned to the 1st Battalion headquarters at the ATU and my company was responsible to secure and protect the Executive Mansion area.
Q. Now, did you get any assignment much later on outside of 16:08:04 Monrovia?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What assignment was that?
A. A few months after I had been assigned company commander protecting the Executive Mansion, an order was published at the 16:08:35 ATU headquarters ordering us, I mean the Sierra Leoneans who were in the ATU, to go for reassignment at Gbarnga in the Bong County.
Q. When you say an order was published, who published that order?
A. Well, at this time that I am speaking about it was - the 16:09:21 order came from the ATU high command at that time and at this point in time, 2002 I am speaking about, it was Chucky, the son of Charles Taylor, that had retaken over the ATU.
Q. Now, you said Chucky. What were his full names?
A. I didn't know whether he had any other full name, but the these other diamonds went, you claim that you know that Sam Bockarie gave Jungle diamonds and that those diamonds were for Charles Taylor, yes?

A. Yes, sir.

10:07:16 Q. You only saw Jungle the one time in 1998, didn't you?

A. No, sir.

MR MUNYARD: Would your Honours give me just a moment.

Q. Well, you were asked a question, "Do you know how long Jungle remained in Sierra Leone?", on page 13353, line 29. You

10:08:52 said, "Yes, sir, he took about a year with us in the jungle and later crossed through Guinea and entered Liberia." Then you were asked, "Do you recall when he went back?" You said, "The only time I saw him was the time I was referring to, 1998. I can't remember the month or the date, but he spent some time with us in 10:09:12 the jungle before he left." Then:

"Q. The next time you saw him you say was 1998, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you see him?

10:09:31 A. I saw him in Sam Bockarie 's house in Kenema."

You talk about that being an occasion on which his truck had got stuck. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were asked:

10:09:55 "Q. Do you know how long Jungle stayed in Kenema on this visit?

A. No, sir."

Then you were asked on page 13356:

"Q. Okay. The question is how long after he had arrived in Kenema and reported that he'd brought a truck full of ammunition which was stuck before Buedu, how long after that did he get, or was he given, a parcel of diamonds?"

At that point the Presiding Judge interrupted and said:

10:10:33 "A parcel.

MR BANGURA: A parcel. I'm sorry, your Honour."

Then you said:

"I heard of his arrival let's say like last night and I met him in the afternoon when that happened.

10:10:48 Q. So was it the next day?

A. He was given a parcel. Sam Bockarie gave him the parcel. It contained diamonds."

Of course you'd already been told that it was a parcel of diamonds in an earlier question. At that point you then went on 10:11:03 to say that the diamonds were handed to Jungle for Jungle to take for the old man and by old man you were referring to Charles Taylor. Remember telling us all of that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't have a clue what Sam Bockarie was giving Jungle

10:11:26 diamonds for, did you?

A. I only know that diamonds given to Jungle were for Charles Taylor and those diamonds were only sent to him for arms and ammunition as I later confirmed.

Q. You didn't know whether or not Jungle had brought any arms

10:11:53 and ammunition, did you?

A. I heard him telling Sam Bockarie when he arrived in Kenema. When I saw him in Kenema the night he arrived and the following morning that he brought ammunition and that the truck had got stuck in a bridge very close to Buedu. I heard him say those.

Q. So why is it that when the Prosecution were asking you in a detailed interview about all of this did you tell them that you didn't know what Sam Bockarie did with diamonds and when you saw Colonel Jungle coming to meet him in Kenema you didn't know if any diamonds were handed to him by Sam Bockarie and you didn't know if Jungle brought any arms and ammunitions at that time? Why did you tell the Prosecution that when they were asking you questions about Jungle, Sam Bockarie and diamonds?

10:12:43

MR BANGURA: Your Honours, again may I ask that I don't know whether counsel is referring to evidence that the witness gave in court and denied all this fact, or is he referring to the statement? I'm not too clear.

10:13:02

PRESIDING JUDGE: Counsel has put to the witness that in a detailed interview, so I take it from that that counsel is putting a prior statement or prior interview record.

10:13:19

MR BANGURA: May I have the reference, please, your Honour.

MR MUNYARD: I am and I will, but I want an answer to the question first.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I allow the question as put.

10:13:35

MR BANGURA: Your Honour, I don't quite understand the position.

PRESIDING JUDGE: He's putting a proposition, admittedly it is somewhat composite, and he's entitled to put that that there was a prior statement made to the Office of the Prosecutor in which those matters were as in the question and, as I understand Mr Munyard's response just now, the detail will be put in due course to the witness. Is my understanding of your response correct, Mr Munyard?

10:13:53

MR MUNYARD: Absolutely.

MR BANGURA: Your Honour, I was asking for the reference for our own purposes so that we know from what counsel is making these --

PRESIDING JUDGE: I see. Mr Munyard --

10:14:25 MR MUNYARD: It's coming, but I want to deal with the proposition generally first of all.

JUDGE LUSSICK: Mr Munyard has already undertaken to provide the reference once he gets an answer to this question and the Court has allowed the question, so what are we talking about?

10:14:43 MR BANGURA: Your Honour, I take the point, but I was --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Bangura, you will be given the information in due course.

MR BANGURA: Thank you.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I understand you're trying to get ahead

10:14:50 of yourself, but there is a ruling.

MR MUNYARD: I'll start again:

Q. Why did you tell the Prosecution in the course of a detailed interview that you didn't know what Sam Bockarie did with diamonds brought to him and you also - and that you didn't 10:15:23 know if any diamonds were handed to Colonel Jungle by Sam Bockarie and you don't know if Colonel Jungle brought any arms and ammunitions to Sam Bockarie at that time?

A. Well, if you are referring to a particular statement with a particular time frame during which I gave this type of 10:15:52 information I don't know actually, but in terms of in connection to the question asked about what Sam Bockarie did with the diamonds, the ones that were given to Jungle at that time, that is the answer I have given to you here that I knew that he sent it to Charles Taylor because I know that Jungle was the coordinator between Sam Bockarie and Charles Taylor at that time, especially in terms of the arms deal. But the other individuals who brought their diamonds, I don't know whether the specific diamond that the individual brought was the one given to Jungle and so I cannot say what Sam Bockarie particularly did with that diamond. That was why I said that I did not know whether it was those diamonds given to him or sent, because diamonds were meant for so many purposes, not just for that.

10:16:31

Q. Tab 4, please. It starts on page 26406. Now, I'm going to ask you if you remember this interview. You were interviewed over two days in December of 2006, a period of time closer to the events you were describing than we are in now, and you were interviewed by Magnus Lamin. Do you remember him?

10:17:26

A. I can remember an interview. I can remember that I was interviewed by Magnus.

10:17:58

Q. Yes, and also present was somebody called Shyamala Alagendra. Do you remember that person?

A. I remember her.

Q. Thank you. Because she interviewed you on more than one occasion, didn't she?

10:18:19

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now on 1 December 2006 in the course of your interview with her, if we look at page 26407 there are a number of unnumbered paragraphs but they have bullet points against them. I want you to look at the second paragraph, please, and I'm going to ask you if this is what you told them. You stated that: "When Sam Bockarie was based in Kenema he had his own group of miners, and so did the other RUF commanders."

10:18:55

You stated that: "The diamonds that were mined, he didn't see them himself, but is aware that they were brought to Sam Bockarie." You saw packages of diamonds being brought to Sam Bockarie in Kenema. You did not know what Sam Bockarie did with these diamonds that were brought to him.

10:19:33 Did you say all of that to the investigator and Ms Alagendra, the lawyer, or have they recorded that wrong?

A. No, I can remember that particular statement, yes.

Q. The third bullet point:

"He said he saw Colonel Jungle coming to meet Sam Bockarie

10:19:57 in Kenema. He does not know if any diamonds were handed to Colonel Jungle by Sam Bockarie and does not know if Colonel Jungle brought any arms and ammunitions at this time."

Did you tell them that?

A. No, sir, not directly in that information.

10:20:23 Q. Well, can you help the judges with what these two people have got wrong in bullet point 3? Just explain what is wrong with their record of interview. And this is not the people who you said yesterday had wrongly recorded your accounts of seeing Varmuyan Sherif. This is two other people now.

10:20:54 A. This is what I am now saying. In connection to the various groups that I heard had miners in Tongo at that time Sam Bockarie was in Kenema, you know, I said I knew that other people were bringing diamonds to Sam Bockarie, but I did not know what he did with those particular diamonds. I never made reference about a

10:21:23 specific one. I know his bodyguard commander, who I knew was working for him in Tongo, and I know that he brought diamonds. And later, when it came to the information regarding Jungle's coming to Kenema at that particular time, what I meant in that statement at that particular time was that I did not set eyes on the ammunition, but I heard him say that he brought - I heard him say that he brought the ammunition, but I did not set eyes on them. That was what I said. And the question asked of me at that time was whether I saw the diamonds given to Jungle, but at 10:22:02 that time I said it was a parcel. I did not see the diamonds with my eyes. That was what I understood about the statement I gave to them.

I think a question was asked of me about what I knew about the word "parcel" at that time. I said whenever Sam Bockarie 10:22:22 referred to a parcel at that time it meant diamonds at that time, but I did not set eyes on the particular diamonds to see. That was what I meant in that sentence.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, you must make an effort to slow down, please. We've told you this before many times in your 10:22:45 answers. Please make an effort to slow down.

THE WITNESS: I am very sorry, ma'am. Really I am finding it difficult with the interviews because I speak very fast. I am only trying, you know, because of my interviews with you, but really I speak fast.

10:23:06 MR MUNYARD:

Q. You're finding it difficult to tell the truth, I suggest, Mr Jaward. That's the difficulty you're facing, isn't it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then let's concentrate on what you've just told us, "The 10:23:25 question asked of me at that time was whether I saw the diamonds given to Jungle". You mean the investigators said to you, "Did you see the diamonds given to Jungle?" Are you telling us first of all that you can now remember out of dozens of - out of a dozen or so interviews you can remember a particular question that was asked to you on 1 December 2006?

A. You know, sir, I told you earlier that it is not that I had said that grammatically I will understand all what was said, but later on these questions when these statements were read to me I 10:24:21 understood that what was written was different from what I meant and so that is when corrections come in, but it's not like totally changing it by line.
Q. You went on to follow that, in the long answer you gave a moment ago, with this - I'll start from the beginning:
10:24:59 "And the question asked of me at that time was whether I saw the diamonds given to Jungle, but at that time I said it was a parcel. I think a question was asked of me about what I knew about the word 'parcel' at that time. I said whenever Sam Bockarie referred to a parcel at that time it meant diamonds at 10:25:16 that time."
Where is the word "parcel" in either paragraph bullet point 2, or bullet point 3?
A. If you are referring to this document here, I think if you were given all the - that is what I'm saying now. If you were 10:25:54 given all, I think, the interviews I had with the Prosecution at that time, especially in terms of this particular statement that is in front of me here, I think you will see where I made corrections when I referred to a parcel at that particular time, but I don't know whether the correction made would be this one,
10:26:17 but these were statements on which I made corrections in the following interviews.
Q. Where is the word "parcel" in either of those two paragraphs?
A. This is what I'm saying here. I don't know whether they made the correction directly in here, but this statement had been read to me before and I made the correction to the Prosecution before.

Q. Do you agree that the word "parcel" does not appear in either of those paragraphs?

10:27:00

A. I cannot find "parcel" in these two paragraphs here now.

Q. You see, you're picking up on the question that was asked of you a week ago, "What happened with the parcel of diamonds?" That's what you're picking up on, isn't it? You weren't using the expression "parcel" back in December of 2006 because nobody had suggested it to you by that stage, had they?

10:27:37

A. Nobody suggested anything to me and nobody ever tried to tell me what I am supposed to be saying here. I am telling you what I recall about those days. I'm not saying everything into details, but what I remember is what I'm saying, sir.

10:28:09

Q. So why is it that in December of 2006, much nearer to the events than we are now, when you're being asked about Jungle and diamonds you never mention Sam Bockarie giving Jungle diamonds. In fact you say quite specifically that you didn't know if any diamonds were handed to him by Sam Bockarie?

10:28:51

A. I cannot remember all of those except that you bring the statement, but my memory cannot recall all of those things to say that that was what I said particularly at that time.

Q. Your evidence to this Court, during the period of a week or more, amounts to this when it comes to diamonds: The only place you know diamonds ever went to from Sam Bockarie was to Charles Taylor through Jungle, through CO Jungle, yes?

10:29:20

A. That was what I - I mean that was what I saw - I mean I saw with my own eyes.

Q. Do you agree that that's the gist of your evidence to this Court: You don't know the destination of any of the diamonds that these other people gave to Sam Bockarie, you only know that Sam Bockarie gave diamonds to Jungle to give to Charles Taylor? That's your evidence in a nutshell, isn't it?
10:30:18
A. I heard of other diamonds given to other persons. Like I made mention in the evidence that a diamond was given to Issa Sesay which later I --
Q. I am going to stop you at this point. I've already been through your evidence about diamonds. Why is it that when you are asked in December of 2006 about Sam Bockarie, Jungle and diamonds you say you don't know if any diamonds were handed to Jungle by Sam Bockarie? Why did you say that to the Prosecutors in December 2006 unless it was the truth?
10:30:33
A. This is what I think I told you earlier, you know. Whenever a question was asked at that particular time, the true picture I had to - I had to rewind my memory for over 10 years from my history I knew behind the rebel lines at that time, before I can get the actual story and whenever we met I didn't have to leave that particular correct answer behind because I felt that I had already said something different before. I must have to bring that true story that although I said it, but this is exactly the true story that I can believe. This is exactly what was happening.
10:31:06
10:31:32
Q. And it doesn't matter when or where you now tell us Sam Bockarie gave diamonds to Jungle to give to Charles Taylor, because you had every opportunity on 1 December 2006, when you're being asked about Sam Bockarie and diamonds and Jungle, to say to the Prosecutors, well, on such and such an occasion, or occasions, and in such and such places, "I saw Sam Bockarie give Jungle diamonds." You had every opportunity to say that to them, didn't you?
10:31:51

A. Yes, I had that opportunity.

10:32:37 Q. Were you pressed later by the Prosecution to change your mind on this and say that you did actually see Sam Bockarie, or became aware of Sam Bockarie giving diamonds to Jungle for Charles Taylor?

A. No, sir.

10:32:56 Q. Are you quite sure of that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So why the change of story?

A. I think I said it earlier that even the records we're dealing with here now for the RUF behind the lines at that time, 10:33:26 it's so important in this case that my contribution here is one of the main thing, but I want to assure you that from 2000, from the time I spent, I was not even thinking about RUF issues any more. It was only when I got in contact with these people, I mean the Prosecution, that I knew that most of these records had 10:33:47 to be remembered before I started bringing some of these important points back to my memory. So whenever I had said something that I felt was not exactly how it was before I came to present it here, I must have to make that correction, no matter how it would look like.

10:34:07 Q. Talking of corrections, just explain to the judges, will you, what it is that the Prosecutors recorded wrongly in paragraph 3. When I first started asking you questions you said no, you hadn't said that to the Prosecution. Just explain what they got wrong, please.

A. When you're referring to paragraph 3 here, I don't know exactly what the paragraph 3 meant. Maybe if you can read it I will know exactly what caused the change in that particular paragraph, because there were - there are some paragraphs maybe it was because of either the way I felt about the situation and it was --

Q. I will read it to you now.

A. You can go ahead, sir.

Q. I'll read it and I'd like you to follow it, please. It's the third bullet point down from the top. Can you see that on the screen? Can you see it on the screen, Mr Jaward?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said that you saw Colonel Jungle coming to meet Sam Bockarie in Kenema. You do not know if any diamonds were handed to Colonel Jungle by Sam Bockarie and you do not know if Colonel Jungle brought any arms and ammunitions at this time. When I read that to you first and said, "Did you say that to the Prosecutors?", you said no, they've got that wrong. Just explain to the judges what is wrong about what they have recorded of your answer on that occasion.

A. I have just said it here. I said this particular statement, what I meant at that time was that I did not set eyes on the diamonds, on the diamonds themselves. It was only a parcel that was given to Jungle at that time and I knew that at that time when Mosquito said a parcel, there were diamonds in the parcel at that particular time. I also referred to Jungle saying - well, I don't know whether Jungle came with the ammunition at that time. I meant that I myself did not set eyes on the ammunition, but I heard that he brought the ammunition but that the truck got stuck in the bridge closer to Buedu at that time.

Q. Mr Jaward, most of your evidence consists of things that other people told you, or other people said they'd seen or heard. Why didn't you say to the Prosecutors when they read this back to 10:36:57 you, "Well, I was told about diamonds, although I didn't actually set eyes on them myself", or "I was told about ammunition, but I didn't actually set eyes on it myself"?
A. I believe it's not only here that I'm making this correction now. I think I have done this before and I believe a 10:37:26 similar thing that I have explained here was given to the Prosecution at that time.
Q. If you look at paragraph 3 they haven't even said that you claim to have seen arms and ammunition. All they say is that - all you told them then, according to this, is you don't know if 10:37:50 Jungle brought any arms and ammunitions. You don't have to see them yourself to be able to tell the Prosecutors, "I understand, from what I was told, he brought arms and ammunition", do you?
A. I do not understand that long question except you repeat it.
10:38:13 Q. You don't have to see something yourself to be able to tell the Prosecutors, "I heard", or "I learned", or "I understood", that he brought ammunition, or that he was given diamonds, do you?
A. That question is somehow - I cannot understand the 10:38:41 question, so it's difficult for me to just say yes or no. You can turn it any other way maybe so that I can understand it better.
Q. And just where were you living when you were working as Sam Bockarie's house boy and store keeper?

For the accused Charles Ghankay Taylor:	Mr Courtenay Griffiths QC Mr Morris Anyah

A. It was one morning when I went to Rambo, because he was my friend I went to say "hi" to him and when we were together he told me that Sam Bockarie had travelled and I said "To where?" and he said, "Sam Bockarie had travelled to Monrovia for 15:14:16 materials. When he would return Issa would have to come to Kono for us to attack Koidu Town." That was what he told me.
Q. How long approximately after you arrived at Guinea Highway did Issa Sesay arrive, if you know?
A. It did not take long. Just about two weeks. It did not 15:14:48 take long.
Q. When Issa Sesay arrived, do you recall if he brought anything with him?
A. Yes.
Q. What did he bring, if you know?
15:15:12 A. He brought materials and his bodyguards and some officers. They came together.
Q. When you say "materials", what do you mean?
A. I mean ammunition.
Q. Was this a small amount of ammunition, or how would you 15:15:40 describe it?
A. Well it was not that very small because people carried it, because that was what we used to capture the town even.
Q. After Issa Sesay arrived, was there any meetings held?
A. Yes, sir.
15:16:08 Q. Can you tell us what you recall about any meetings held after the arrival of Issa Sesay?
A. When he came they sent message to the other targets for all senior officers to report at the headquarters. That happened and they scheduled a date for a meeting and that too took place and the meeting was held and they discussed the Koidu Town attack. They planned it and they asked the senior officers, everybody expressed his own opinion. He organised the branches, the roads leading to Koidu Town, he said that those roads were to be 15:17:09 attacked by the commanders. That was the plan.

Q. Can you recall now any specific commanders that were given orders during that meeting?
A. Yes.
Q. Tell us what you remember about the meeting.
15:17:33 A. Like, for instance, Akim and Kailondo were given a place to attack and Rambo too was given Five-Five to attack where the head weapons were. Peleto, Issa, myself and some others were on the Guinea Highway and Banya was sent to Tankoro. That was how the manpower was deployed.
15:18:32 Q. Thank you. Mr Witness, the person that you just said was sent to Tankoro, can you say his name slowly?
A. Banya.
Q. Who was Banya?
A. He was a former SLA like Akim.
15:18:57 Q. Thank you, you anticipated my next question. Do you recall Akim's last name?
A. No, that was the name all of us knew for him, Akim.
Q. Who was Kailondo?
A. Kailondo was an RUF.
15:19:20 Q. You said that Akim was given a place to attack. Do you recall what Akim's assignment was during this offensive in Kono?
A. Yes, but I have forgotten the name of the place now, but later if I recall it I'll tell you.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, the witness mentioned - in describing the places that were assigned to attack, he mentioned Five-Five. Is Five-Five a name of a place?

THE WITNESS: Yes, yes, it's an area.

MR KOUMJIAN:

15:20:07 Q. And what we understood you to say is "At Five-Five where the head weapons were"? Can you explain what you meant, or if we understood you correctly? What did you say about Five-Five and weapons?

A. The place where heavy weapons were, where ECOMOG - what 15:20:34 actually strengthened ECOMOG were two places, Five-Five and Lebanon. Those were the two places that strengthened ECOMOG. That's why those strong commanders were assigned there. Rambo went to Lebanon and Five-Five. Those were the two places where the heavy weapons were.

15:20:54 Q. At this meeting with Issa Sesay, about how many people were present? Can you give us any approximation?

A. No, I cannot because I did not make a head count, but we were many.

Q. Was the meeting for all the soldiers, or was it a 15:21:21 commanders' meeting?

A. For all the soldiers and commanders, but not all the soldiers could come from far to attend the meeting, so the commanders represented them. Whatever the commander would hear from the meeting he would go and tell his soldiers.

15:21:43 Q. Was it discussed at this meeting what the objective of this attack was?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the goal of the attack?

A. One of the importance of the attack was that Kono was a stronghold and we had in mind that, if we attacked Kono, we would suppress the then government in administration and Foday Sankoh would be released. That made us to attack Koidu Town.

Q. In this attack that was discussed at the forum, did they discuss where the attack would stop? What areas were hoped to be captured in the total attack?

A. Yes, Koidu Town itself, to capture the town itself, and from there we should not stop anywhere. We should go straight to Freetown. That was our determination. We should go to Freetown and release Foday Sankoh. That was why it was code named Operation Free Foday Sankoh.

Q. Mr Witness, was there any discussion from the commanders to the soldiers about how the operation should be carried out?

A. Yes, the only piece of advice that was given to every soldier was that it was an operation do or die mission, or Operation Free Foday Sankoh. We should do everything possible to release Foday Sankoh.

Q. Was there any discussion about how either the enemy soldiers or the civilians in these areas being attacked should be treated?

A. The only piece of advice that was given was that nobody should sabotage the mission, that the operation should be made fearful so we should conquer the enemy. We should make the operation fearful.

MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you. Your Honour, I have a couple of documents now I'd like to have shown to the witness. Perhaps begin with tab 9 and the original, the best copy that the OTP has, is available.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Is this week 25, Mr Koumjian?

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Witness, thank you for your patience through all this. Sir, can you tell us was the attack in Kono District and on Koidu Town that was planned at the forum that you attended with Issa Sesay successful?

16:04:18

A. Yes.

Q. You've talked about Issa Sesay coming with some ammunition. Do you know where that ammunition came from?

A. Yes.

16:04:38

Q. What do you know about that?

A. At that time we did not have anywhere else to get ammunition from except Liberia from Charles Taylor. Sam Bockarie went to Liberia and Issa Sesay stayed in charge in Buedu as commander. So when Sam Bockarie returned to Buedu and he brought the ammunition and he handed them over to Issa, Issa took the ammunition to Kono for us to attack Koidu and every one of them was new, but before that Rambo had given me the information because he was the high command at the place.

16:05:06

Q. The forces that were defending Koidu Town and other parts of Kono District, were those forces well armed or not well armed?

16:05:38

A. It was ECOMOG. They were from all over. They were well armed.

Q. In your experience throughout this war, was this a strong defence force - relatively strong, or relatively weak, that was defending Koidu Town and Kono District during this attack?

16:06:08

A. The only thing was that because what we captured from them, they would tell you that they would be able to defend the ground but that they were not strong fighters. They had heavy weapons that would prove that if it were the RUF that had such weapons no other fighter would have been able to enter there.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, you asked the witness a question what does he know about where the ammunition came from and in his answer he says, "Issa took the ammunition from Kono for us to attack and every one of them was new." One of what? One of what?

MR KOUMJIAN: I didn't catch that as what the witness said, but I'll ask him to repeat it:

Q. Mr Witness, I'm going to go back to when you said Issa Sesay brought the ammunition. First of all, where was Issa Sesay coming from, if you know, with the ammunition?

A. He brought the ammunition from Buedu and he brought them to Kono, but we knew that it was Sam Bockarie who handed the ammunition over to him.

Q. And can you repeat, and perhaps give us more detail, how was it that you knew that the ammunition had come from Charles Taylor?

A. Even before Sam Bockarie - I mean, Issa Sesay left Buedu to come, like I said earlier, I got the information first from Rambo who told me that Sam Bockarie had gone to Charles Taylor, but at that time we never used to refer to him that way. We used to call him Father. He said he had gone to him for arms and ammunition and we were on that when Sam Bockarie arrived in Buedu and we got the information through radio communication that he had returned and after two to three days, Issa travelled to Kono and he met us there with the materials with many manpower. They in fact carried it on their heads because they did not use the motorway. So those were the ones we used for the attack on Kono and that was - those were the materials that they took.

A. No, I did not hear that.
Q. Did you ever hear from any other combatant that they had been ordered by a senior commander to rape women?
A. No.
14:41:26 Q. Did you ever hear from any other combatant that they had been ordered by a senior commander to burn down people's homes?
A. No.
Q. Did you personally ever amputate anybody's limbs?
A. No, sir.
14:41:55 Q. Were you ever ordered by anyone senior to you to amputate people's limbs?
A. No, it never happened.
Q. Did you ever hear from any other combatant during the 11 years that you remained in the RUF that they had been ordered by 14:42:23 a senior commander to amputate people's limbs? Did you ever hear that?
A. No, that never happened on our own side.

A. Yes.

A. Like in Kono when I was there and we attacked the town, after the attack the mining equipment that we gathered I can called Giema, but because we wanted to disguise the name of that town Giema we then called it Burkina Faso.

Q. Now those who fled to Libya, Pujehun District, do you know what happened to them?

15:26:58 A. The Kamajors forced them to cross into Liberia.

Q. And where did Zino go when Zogoda was overrun?

A. Zino and I were trying to fight our way to go to Burkina Faso, but he did not arrive there.

Q. And what happened to him?

15:27:37 A. Well, he lost his life on the way.

Q. Now after that happened to Zino, who was in charge of the RUF on the ground in Sierra Leone?

A. Well, when we got to Giema we met Sam Bockarie, Mosquito, there as the commander.

15:28:06 Q. Now, at this time I would like to direct your attention to the year 1997. Where were you at the beginning of 1997?

A. At the beginning of 1997 I was at Giema and later we went to Buedu and from there Koindu.

Q. And at the beginning of 1997 where was Foday Sankoh?

15:28:40 A. Well, by then we heard that he had been arrested in Nigeria.

Q. And how did you hear about that?

A. We heard that over Daybreak Africa on the BBC.

Q. After you heard of his arrest, did you receive any 15:29:05 communications from Foday Sankoh?

A. We got communication from Foday Sankoh, but it was not a direct communication.

Q. When you say it was not a direct communication, tell us what you mean?

A. Well, the communication was sent to Mosquito by somebody else and that person did say that it was Foday Sankoh who sent him to do so.

Q. And who was this other person who sent the communication to Sam Bockarie, to Mosquito?

A. We heard one Jungle who was called Daniel.

Q. Who was Jungle?

A. Jungle was an SSS in Liberia.

Q. When you say he was an SSS, what do you mean?

A. Special Security Services.

Q. And for whom did Jungle work, if you know?

A. He worked for Charles Taylor.

Q. Now what was this communication that Jungle passed to Mosquito?

A. Jungle passed ranks to Mosquito. The communication was about ranks.

Q. What do you mean it was about ranks?

A. Well, he promoted Mosquito, Issa and some other fighters, then he said that Charles Taylor had said Papay said Mosquito should take direct order from him.

Q. Mosquito should take direct orders from whom?

A. From Charles Taylor.

Q. Now you said he said Charles Taylor said Papay said. So who was it telling Mosquito that Charles Taylor had said something from Papay?

A. Jungle was the one who sent the communication over the VHF radio to Mosquito. He said it was from Charles Taylor. He said Charles Taylor had told him that he should send the message to Mosquito that Papay had promoted him to force commander and Issa was his deputy and then he promoted other commanders. And Jungle also said that Foday Sankoh had said that Mosquito should take instruction and command from Charles Taylor until he returned from Nigeria.

15:32:13 Q. Until who returned from Nigeria?

A. Until Foday Sankoh returned from Nigeria, if he would be released.

Q. Now to your knowledge, did Sam Bockarie obey that instruction?

15:32:31 A. Yes, he obeyed the instruction.

Q. Now you have told the Court about Foday Sankoh leaving Sierra Leone in 1996 to go for Abidjan Peace Accord and you have also testified that Foday Sankoh was arrested in 1997. Did you yourself ever see Foday Sankoh again after 1996?

15:33:04 A. I did not see Foday Sankoh again from after 1996 to 1999.

Q. In 1999 where did you see Foday Sankoh?

A. I saw him in Liberia, Monrovia.

Q. And do you know why Foday Sankoh was in Monrovia in 1999 when you saw him?

15:33:35 A. He came from the peace talks, when he returned.

Q. Do you know what peace talks he was returning from?

A. He said Lome Peace Accord.

Q. Now what happened when you saw Foday Sankoh in Monrovia in 1999?

15:34:05 A. Mosquito sent for me. He said Foday Sankoh had said I should go, because there was an infighting between him and Superman, so Foday Sankoh said I should go to explain about the infighting and some other development that had taken place in his absence.

proceeded to the Mansion Ground with the truck.
Q. And when you say this person appointed by Issa was left on the ground, what do you mean? Where were they left?
A. At the lodge in Congo Town, the lodge that was there for 16:24:18 the RUF.
Q. And you said Joe Tuah went to Mansion Ground with the truck. Again, what do you mean by Mansion Ground?
A. The Executive Mansion Ground where Charles Taylor was.
Q. And what happened after this?
16:24:41 A. From there the next morning when they were taken from the Weasua airport - they took them to the Weasua airport and they met the materials had already been loaded in the chopper and they went to Foya.
Q. And what kind of chopper was this that went from Monrovia
16:25:05 to Foya?
A. Weasua.
Q. And what happened once the materials arrived in Foya?
A. They were off-loaded and some were taken to Sierra Leone, to Kono, Koidu Town where Issa was based, and some were stored in 16:25:30 Foya. And later they came for the remaining and it was divided. Some stayed in Foya that was used there and the remaining was taken to Kono again.
Q. Where was it in Foya that this other material was stored?
A. They had a ground there that was called Tamba Taylor
16:25:58 Ground. There was a chief called Tamba Taylor who was in Foya. His house was what was used as the ground.
Q. Now the material that was taken back to Sierra Leone in this instance, how was that material used in Sierra Leone?
A. They used it to fight against the Kamajors and the happened to these arms and he said they were disarmed.

MS HOLLIS:

Q. Mr Witness, let's be clear on the record about this. When you say that the arms were disarmed, can you explain to the Court what you mean? What happened to those arms?

A. What particular set of arms are you talking about?

Q. You said that Issa Sesay went back and began to disarm the child soldiers and then you said that the arms were disarmed. What do you mean "the arms were disarmed"?

12:10:57 A. You did not get me clearly. I said after that grumbling when he went back he mobilised the child soldiers who had arms, who had their own rifles that they used to fight and he started disarming them, the ones who had rifles.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, you were then asked what 12:11:20 happened to the arms that were recovered from the child soldiers and you said, "Some of them were disarmed and others were to be returned to Liberia to Charles Taylor who had given them in the first place". So the question is what do you mean by those that were disarmed? What happened to those weapons?

12:11:49 THE WITNESS: The weapons that had been taken from them, the UN destroyed them. Just when the child combatants were disarmed, they will give your own very arm to you and they will give you a hammer to destroy it yourself.

MS HOLLIS:

12:12:12 Q. Now, Mr Witness, in your testimony you said, "It came a time when Benjamin Yeaten said to him that Charles Taylor had said the weapons and the remaining rounds were to be sent back to Liberia". Benjamin Yeaten said this to whom?

A. He said this to Issa. He said Charles Taylor had said that the arms he had supplied him with, those that he did not use he should not use them to disarm with because those arms belonged to him. He should not surrender those arms. He should bring them back because they belonged to him. He had given them to him.

12:12:57 Q. When you say those arms belonged to him, who are you referring to? The arms belonged to whom?

A. He was referring to Charles Taylor.

Q. And when you say that the arms should be brought back to him, to whom should the arms be brought back?

12:13:29 A. He said they should take the arms back to Benjamin Yeaten, they should meet Benjamin Yeaten in Vahun. At that time Benjamin Yeaten was in Vahun when the instruction came to Issa. He said Charles Taylor said the arms and ammunition that he had given to him, those that he did not use he should assemble them and bring 12:13:50 them to Benjamin Yeaten because Charles Taylor had said he was the one who had the weapons - he had given them the weapons. If he did not use them he should bring them back to him.

Q. Now what happened after Benjamin Yeaten had this conversation with Issa Sesay?

12:14:13 A. Immediately after that Issa called one of his securities and sent him to Tongo to bring the remaining arms from Gbarnga to Koidu Town.

Q. To bring the remaining arms from where?

A. The ones he sent - he sent his bodyguard to Gbarnga to - 12:14:45 for Banya to collect the heavy weapons that were there and the ammunition that he had in his possession to be brought to Lebanon. And the ones that he had in Lebanon, he put some into the truck and a jeep and took them to Vahun to Benjamin Yeaten.

Q. And who was Banya?

A. Banya was a battalion commander. Even though that is not part of my statement, he was a battalion commander in Tongo.
Q. And to what group did Banya belong?
A. Banya was an RUF commander.
12:15:29 Q. Did you know Banya by any other name?
A. That is no nickname. His real name is Banya. They usually call him Sama Banya, but we call it short, Banya.
MR MUNYARD: Madam President, can I just be clear that where we see in this particular passage he sent his bodyguard to 12:15:56 Gbarnga, we are talking about Banya.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, I was going to --
THE WITNESS: Not Gbarnga. He sent them to Banya in Tongo.
PRESIDING JUDGE: The witness has answered your question, Mr Munyard. It would appear that something was lost in 12:16:11 translation there.
MS HOLLIS:
Q. Now you indicated that Issa sent someone to collect the heavy weapons and that they were to be taken to Vahun. Did this happen?
12:16:33 A. Yes, he sent one of his bodyguards.
Q. And what exactly was taken to Vahun?
A. They went with ammunition and two Chinese 50 calibres and a GPMG, an RPG, an AK rifle and G3 rifles.
Q. Now when you say two Chinese 50 calibres, what is a 50
12:17:08 calibre?
A. It is a heavy weapon that people mount in vehicles. At times they mount them on the ground or at times in vehicles. It should be operated by a team of seven people that is whenever it is mounted. It is a Chinese made weapon, a heavy weapon.

Q. And what happened then when these materials were taken to Vahun?
A. The man who took them there, he handed them over to Benjamin Yeaten and the following day he returned to Issa.
12:17:56 Q. Now, Mr Witness, earlier you testified about Issa Sesay taking trips to Monrovia and giving diamonds to Charles Taylor. Where did Issa Sesay get the diamonds that he was giving to Charles Taylor?
A. He got them from Kono and Tongo.
12:18:27 Q. And did Issa ever say anything about how many diamonds he took to Charles Taylor?
A. He had said something about it some time in 2002.
Q. And what did he say?
A. In 2002 when RUF had been transformed into a political 12:18:56 party, the man who was appointed to be the presidential candidate of the RUF asked Issa what his account was and he said he hadn't any account, but that he had diamonds with Charles Taylor up to 5,000 carats and he had $150,000 that he had given to Charles Taylor for safekeeping and Charles Taylor had said any time
12:19:22 elections would be coming close he would assist the RUF and that was why he was keeping the diamonds.
Q. Now you testified that Charles Taylor had also said that he was going to hold on to the diamonds that were given to him by Issa and by Sam Bockarie to give to Foday Sankoh when Foday 12:19:42 Sankoh was released. To your knowledge, did Foday Sankoh ever receive those diamonds from Charles Taylor?
A. Well, he did not receive them in my presence and, in fact, he did not receive them because Foday Sankoh was not released. He died in detention.

Q. To your knowledge, did Issa Sesay ever receive those diamonds?
A. No, he did not receive them.
Q. To your knowledge, did anyone in the RUF receive those diamonds that Charles Taylor held?
12:20:23
A. No, nobody in the RUF received them.
Q. You have also testified about Issa Sesay meeting a person known as Alpha Bravo and on one occasion taking diamonds to Alpha Bravo. Were there any other times that diamonds were taken to Alpha Bravo?
12:20:53
A. Yes, but he did not go. He used to send one of his securities to Eddie Kanneh. Eddie Kanneh in turn would meet Five-Zero and they would take the diamonds to Alpha Bravo.
Q. Who was Five-Zero?
12:21:20
A. Five-Zero was a code name for Benjamin Yeaten. He was called Unit 50 again, Benjamin Yeaten.
Q. And how many times did that happen?
A. It happened about two times that I can recall now.
Q. Now you testified that when Issa Sesay took diamonds to 12:21:47
Alpha Bravo, Issa Sesay was given $300,000. On these other occasions when diamonds were taken to Alpha Bravo what, if anything, did the RUF receive in exchange for these diamonds?
A. When they took the diamonds, RUF could not receive anything. All what Issa got - heard was that Alpha Bravo had gone back to Belgium. He said he would come later.
12:22:21
Q. So on these other two occasions to whom were these diamonds given?
A. Eddie Kanneh said he gave the diamonds to Alpha Bravo, that he and Benjamin Yeaten went there.

TRIAL CHAMBER II

Before the Judges:	Justice Teresa Doherty, Presiding Justice Richard Lussick Justice Julia Sebutinde Justice Al Hadji Malick Sow, Alternate
For Chambers:	Mr Simon Meisenberg Ms Doreen Kiggundu Ms Sidney Thompson
For the Registry:	Ms Rachel Irura
For the Prosecution:	Ms Brenda J Hollis Mr Mohamed A Bangura Ms Leigh Lawrie Mr Christopher Santora
For the accused Charles Ghankay Taylor:	Mr Terry Munyard Mr Morris Anyah

Do you remember saying that?

A. I remember saying that.

Q. Can you explain to the Court what you mean by "according to the instruction, because it was according to instruction that we decided to infiltrate there".

A. The instruction that I mean was the instruction from Issa. He said he got an instruction from Charles Taylor that he should organise the troops to enter Guinea through Pamelap.

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat this last one.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Pause, Mr Witness, please. The interpreter asks that you repeat the last part of your answer. Please pick up from where you said, "He should organise the troops to enter Guinea through Pamelap". Please continue from there.

THE WITNESS: They should enter to Guinea by Kissidougou through Kono, not Koinadugu. Then he should send manpower to Foya to Benjamin Yeaten to be able to join the other forces who were there to enter through Guéckédou. That was why there was delay, the disarmament in that area.

MS HOLLIS:

Q. Now, Mr Witness, on 3 September you also testified about materials being brought by plane to Mayoroh which is near Magburaka, and you testified that the materials included GMG rounds, G3 rounds, stick grenades and AK-47 rounds. To your knowledge, what was done with these materials once they arrived at that location in Mayoroh?

A. Whether they brought, first they tried to take them from Mayoroh. They took some to Freetown to the Ordinance and some were taken to Makeni and some were in Magburaka. They were used to repel the ECOMOG troops who wanted to invade Freetown at that time.

Q. So these materials, once they were received, how were they distributed?

A. Some were left in Magburaka, some were taken to Ordinance and some were taken to Makeni.

Q. Mr Witness, you were also asked questions about General Ibrahim Bah and General Ibrahim Bah's involvement with Ukrainian mercenaries?

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Ms Hollis, sorry to interrupt, did the witness say a word "ordinance"? What is ordinance?

MS HOLLIS: Yes, your Honour, he did and I will clarify that:

Q. Mr Witness, you have used the word "ordinance". What does that mean, ordinance?

A. Ordinance, it's an a particular place that the military had in the Murray Town barracks where arms were stored. They called the place Ordinance.

Q. Now, Mr Witness, you were asked questions about General Ibrahim Bah and his involvement with Ukrainian mercenaries and you were asked about these Ukrainian mercenaries who were going to assist the RUF and you talked about having a last meeting in December that was held for you to go and capture Kono, and I am speaking here about pages 15294 all the way through to 15298. So you talked about a last meeting in December that was held for you to go and capture Kono and it was during that meeting that you saw General Ibrahim Bah and Mosquito said it was General Ibrahim who had helped him to pass through Charles Taylor to go to Blaise communications should go, that all call signs should call on that particular control station to know the present situation that obtained. If there were any instructions, so the instructions would be passed on to you directly.

12:23:54 Q. Who did the controlled station communicate with?

A. The control station communicated with various substations.

Q. You mentioned a special frequency. Was there one that the system operated on, the RUF radio system?

A. Yes, we had a special frequency which was the control

12:24:30 frequency, control station, which was 70110. It was on that particular frequency that every call sign, every radio station, should monitor or should present report or to receive instructions from.

Q. Now you mentioned call signs. Were there any particular 12:24:58 call signs to any particular radios that you recall?

A. Yes.

Q. Please go on?

A. We had Bravo Zulu 4. We had Mike November 1. We had Foxtrot Yankee on the other side. We had Base 1 on the other 12:25:39 side. We had many other frequencies we were call signs, but I cannot recall everything now.

Q. But, Madam Witness, you first of all mentioned on the other side. What do you mean by "on the other side"?

A. That is the Liberian side. That's what I meant. In 12:26:03 Monrovia and around Monrovia.

Q. You mentioned a few names of call signs and you said - you clearly said some were on the other side. Which ones of these were not on the other side, that is which ones were on your side?

A. Well, Mike November 5 was my own side, that was Sierra Leone, RUF station. Planet 1 was on the RUF station that was in Sierra Leone under RUF command. We had many others.

Q. Now where was Planet 1?

A. Well, Planet 1 was in Buedu. That was Sam Bockarie's station.

Q. You mentioned also Bravo Zulu 4. Where was that?

A. It was in Buedu again. It was the same call sign that we changed to Planet 1, because we used to change call signs.

Q. And you mentioned Mike November. Which call sign was that or for which radio was that call sign?

A. Well, it was in the same Buedu. In Buedu we had three different radio stations, all of them were under Sam Bockarie's command. We had Mike November 5, that was towards going to the airfield. Then we had Marvel, which was a mobile radio station that was mounted in a vehicle. Wherever Sam Bockarie would go that was the radio set he would move with. And Planet 1 was mounted right at Issa Sesay's veranda. That was the permanent radio that Sam Bockarie used.

Q. Now you have mentioned a number of names of radio stations, or call signs for radios that were used in Buedu. Can you give us the time frame when these different radios were in use, or these call signs were in use in Buedu? Let us start with Bravo Zulu 4. You said that was the sign before it was changed. When was it in use?

A. The time we came to Buedu when we had left Kenema, Sam Bockarie left Kenema to Buedu, from Kenema right up to - in Kenema it was Bravo Zulu 4, but when we got to Buedu that was the time we changed it. We changed it to Planet 1.

Q. From the time you changed Planet 1, about what period was it?

A. It was early 1998.
Q. And up until what time did you continue to use Planet 1 as a call sign for Sam Bockarie?
12:29:39 A. Up to the time that Sam Bockarie left for Monrovia, we were using Planet 1 right up to that time.
Q. And what about Marvel?
A. Marvel was his mobile station that he used whenever he wanted to go to the front line, like the Pendembu area, and 12:29:59 whenever he went to Monrovia. We used Marvel to go and escort him to the airfield, Foya airfield, for him to board a chopper to Monrovia.
Q. Within what period was Marvel used in Buedu? What time period?
12:30:19 A. It was around '98. From early '98 up until the time we went to Monrovia. We used that as an escort radio station. As an escort radio station. That was the mobile radio station.
Q. Finally you mentioned Mike November. For what period was Mike November also used as a call sign for a radio in Buedu?
12:30:54 A. It was the same time that we left Kenema for Buedu. It was the same early 1998. Mike November 5 was used to relay any information that any other call sign would want to pass to Planet 1 whenever that station did not get us. It was as well used particularly for 448, whenever 448 would be coming in Buedu or 12:31:23 any other RUF operational areas.
Q. Madam Witness, you just mentioned 448. What do you mean?
A. That is the ECOMOG jet. That was the code name for the ECOMOG jet that used to come from Liberia.
Q. Now you said that "whenever 448 would be coming in Buedu".

Can you explain that? What is the link with Mike November?
A. Well, that particular station was there for whenever 448 would be taking off from IRA, IRA in Monrovia, Roberts International Airport, we had an operator there who was called 12:32:18 Sky 1. He would come on the net and tell us that 448 had just left my location and during that time Planet 1 would instruct Mike November 5 saying that he should tell the MP commanders in Buedu to ring the bell. That was for Buedu, inside of Buedu. So Mike November 5 now would pass the information on to MP commander
12:32:47 so they would ring the bell. When they would ring the bell, everybody - anybody who was in the RUF in Buedu at that time and the surroundings, whenever he or she heard that bell everybody would know that ECOMOG jet was around and so everybody would go into hiding.
12:33:08 Q. Madam Witness, you mentioned earlier that Marvel was used as a mobile radio. Was any other radio at any time used as a mobile radio, apart from Marvel?
A. Yes, whenever Marvel had a problem we used Planet 1. That was up to us, the operators, to choose which call sign we would 12:33:40 use on that day. We were the ones who would choose the call sign we used on a particular day.
Q. Madam Witness, you started giving us names of call signs of radios, you said on the other side, and that means Liberia. Can you recall any more names? You gave us Foxtrot Yankee. First of 12:34:02 all where was Foxtrot Yankee based?
A. Well, Foxtrot Yankee was based in Foya, Foya airfield. And we had another radio station that was called Victor 1. That was in Vahun. And Lima Bravo in Base 1 - sorry, as well as Base 1, that was in Monrovia with 50. That was Benjamin Yeaten's call

Q. Thank you. Madam Witness, in your testimony on Friday you mentioned a particular message that was sent from --

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Bangura, sorry to interrupt. Mr Interpreter, did the witness say any radio station or every radio station?

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat it.

MR BANGURA:

Q. Madam Witness, I asked you about whether there was a logbook at Zogoda and you - your answer was yes and you talked about other radio stations. Can you repeat that answer, please?

A. I said each radio station had a logbook, not just Zogoda.

Q. Now on Friday you talked about 448 messages. You said 448 was a coded message that came from RIA. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you said it came from an operator at RIA. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now where was RIA to your knowledge?

A. Well, as far as I know, it is Roberts International Airport in Liberia.

Q. And do you know on whose behalf the operator was - the operator you mentioned, who was the operator again? Can you recall?

A. I said Sky 1.

Q. And do you know for what group Sky 1 was working at the Roberts International Airport?

A. What I know is that he was one of Charles Taylor's fighters.

Q. And are you able to tell the Court how he was able to communicate with radios within RUF territory?

A. There are times he will just come to the national which was 70110. He will just come up and say, "448 has just left my location heading for you location". Then the station would go 09:42:45 off.
Q. Madam Witness, when you say he would come to the national, 70110, what do you mean?
A. That was the control frequency.
Q. The control frequency for who, or which group?
09:43:02 A. For RUF station. That was the central control frequency for the RUF station.
Q. Was it only to the control frequency 70110 that he would communicate, Sky 1?
A. I said 70110, yes.
09:43:26 Q. Yes, the question is was it only to the control station, the 70110? Was it only to that station that Sky 1 would communicate 448 messages?
A. Well, that was the station we received the message from.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Witness, I think counsel is asking 09:43:52 did you get it from one station only, or from others? Is that the purport, Mr Bangura?
MR BANGURA: Thank you, your Honour.
THE WITNESS: Okay, it was not just one station. We got it from Foxtrot Yankee, that was Foya airfield, and we got it from 09:44:10 Base 1 which was Benjamin Yeaten's radio station which was based in Monrovia in Benjamin Yeaten's compound. We also got it from Vahun, which was Victor 1.
MR BANGURA:
Q. Thank you, Madam Witness. I believe you understood my question the other way round, but I will live with the answer that you have given. My question really was whether Sky 1 communicated these 448 messages to other stations apart from the control station 70110. Do you understand that?

09:44:53 PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Anyah?

MR ANYAH: I believe the witness said that 70110 was a control frequency as opposed to a control station.

PRESIDING JUDGE: That was the answer, yes, that it was a control frequency.

09:45:16 THE WITNESS: That was the national station for all the RUF stations, the 70110.

MR BANGURA:

Q. Madam Witness, 70110, we have frequency and we have station, what was it? Was it a station or was it a frequency, 09:45:34 can we be clear?

A. Well, it was not a station. It was a frequency, a selected frequency.

Q. You mentioned Foxtrot Yankee as one of the stations from which 448 messages came. Where was Foxtrot Yankee based?

09:46:05 A. It was based at Foya airfield in Liberia.

Q. Do you know who used this call sign, Foxtrot Yankee?

A. Well, there were radio operators there whose names I don't recall now.

Q. And do you know who controlled the radio at Foya that used 09:46:33 this call sign?

A. Well, the radio station was under the control of Charles Taylor's soldiers.

Q. And can you recall when these messages came from Foxtrot Yankee?

A. Well, I recall that at any time they saw the ECOMOG jet fly over their area, or heading towards our own area, they will also come over the net and tell us that, "448 has just passed our location" and that, "448 is heading for your location". Then the station will go off.

Q. Over what period? What period are we talking of here that these messages came from Foxtrot Yankee?

A. Well, from early '98 throughout.

Q. And when you say early '98 can you recall a month in '98?

09:47:58 A. Well, I cannot recall the month now because it has been a long time ago. I don't recall.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Bangura, if you could remember to switch off your microphone every now and then.

MR BANGURA:

09:48:14 Q. When you say "throughout", what do you mean? Throughout what period?

A. Up to 1999 when we left for Monrovia.

Q. What about the case of the messages from Sky 1 at RIA? Over what period did you get those messages?

09:48:50 A. Well, it was from 1998 at the time the ECOMOG jet was bombarding the RUF controlled zones.

Q. Up until what time?

A. Up to 1999, mid-1999, even before we left to go to Monrovia.

09:49:20 Q. Madam Witness, you also mentioned Base 1 as a radio that communicated 448 messages, do you recall?

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. And you mentioned Lima Bravo, do you recall as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Now where were those two radios located?
A. Well, those two call signs were just one radio station located in Benjamin Yeaten's compound in Monrovia.
Q. Do you recall who the operators were on this radio?
09:50:13 A. Yes, I still recall Sunlight and Dew.
Q. Madam Witness, in your evidence also on Friday you talked about mining that was going on in Kono. Do you recall that?
A. Yes.
Q. Now are you able to tell the Court what period mining was 09:51:05 taking place in Kono, over what period?
A. Well, I recall that it was - the one that was actually serious it was from 1998, early '98.
Q. Madam Witness, your evidence on Friday was that you were in Kenema when you learnt about mining going on in Kono. Do you 09:51:40 recall?
A. Yes, that was why I said that serious mining was actually in 1998. In '97 mining went on there, but it was not as serious as the one that started in 1998 at the time we were finally in Buedu.
09:51:57 Q. How did you know that mining was going on in Kono during the period 1997?
A. Well, Issa Sesay was in charge of Kono at that time. He used to bring the diamonds to Kenema to Mosquito, Sam Bockarie, because at that time he was in Kenema, he was based in Kenema.
09:52:28 So when they got diamonds from Kono, Issa Sesay would bring the diamonds and hand them over to Sam Bockarie in Kenema and at that time Sam Bockarie was based at NIC, so it was through that that I was able to know.
Q. Now when you say you were able to know, exactly how were commanders whenever they needed arms and ammunition.

Q. And did you know how Jungle brought these materials, the supplies, to Buedu?
A. Yes, I can say something about that, because Jungle's
10:56:42 driver was with him and he told me that they picked up the arms and ammunitions from White Flower at night and they will bring it to Benjamin Yeaten's house in a pick-up and they will off-load it and reload it in a truck for Buedu and he said they would move at night.
10:57:12 Q. Madam Witness, you said Jungle's driver, he told you this. When did Jungle's driver - what is the name of Jungle's driver? What is the name of Jungle's driver who told you this?
A. He was called Alpha.
Q. Did he have a surname?
10:57:42 A. Alpha Jalloh.
Q. You said that Jungle's driver, Alpha Jalloh, would tell you or told you that they picked up the arms and ammunition from White Flower. Where was White Flower?
A. It was Charles Taylor's house in Congo Town.
10:58:05 Q. Where?
A. In Monrovia, Congo Town.
Q. And he said that they would bring the arms and ammunition to Benjamin Yeaten's house in a pick-up. Did he tell you where Benjamin Yeaten's house was?
10:58:27 A. Yes.
Q. Where did he say it was?
A. It was in Congo Town, close to Charles Taylor's house. Charles Taylor's house was up the hill and if you go down the hill that was where Benjamin Yeaten's house was.

announce it. He will say it. He will discuss it either with Issa Sesay or with Eddie Kanneh, those two people. He will say it to them before ever he would convene the meeting. That was how I knew about the meeting.

12:46:44 Q. [Microphone not activated] this meeting, did Sam Bockarie discuss the idea of a meeting before the meeting took place with any of the two persons that you have mentioned?

A. Yes, he discussed it with Eddie Kanneh and in that same meeting they discussed about the Kono issue. From Kono they were 12:47:13 to advance to Freetown, because during that time --

Q. Witness, can I pause you for a while. We will get to --

A. Okay.

Q. Now when you say that this meeting was discussed with Eddie Kanneh, where was it discussed before the meeting I am referring 12:47:36 to - this is your evidence that this meeting was discussed, the idea of a meeting was discussed with Eddie Kanneh by Sam Bockarie. Where was it discussed?

A. Well, it was at Sam Bockarie's veranda where they were eating. By then they were serving them food, so he was 12:47:58 discussing that with Eddie Kanneh. That was how I heard it.

Q. When you say they were serving them food, who were the "they" who were serving them food?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Witness, did you hear the question?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

12:48:23 PRESIDING JUDGE: Can you answer the question?

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Bangura, I don't know. In private session this witness laid out a number of roles that she did not want the public to know she performed. Now this question you are asking, I don't know if it is one of those roles that you are

[Open session]

MS IRURA: Your Honour, we are in open session.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Witness, we are back in open session and I again remind you of your obligation to ensure that your answers do not reveal your security. Mr Bangura, proceed.

12:59:45

MR BANGURA: Your Honour, just to get the witness to be reassured that the series of questions which we have just had were actually in private session. I am not too sure whether the witness was quite aware of that fact. I may not have got the point:

13:00:16

Q. Madam Witness, we were talking about this meeting that took place and the point we last discussed was Sam Bockarie discussing the idea of a meeting with Eddie Kanneh. You said that during the meeting they also discussed something about Freetown, about moving towards Freetown. Do you recall saying that?

13:00:48

A. Yes.

Q. Can you explain clearly what they discussed at the meeting about Freetown?

A. He said they should discuss about how to go and attack Freetown during that particular mission and that they were at first supposed to clear up Kono and he said that Kono, Superman and Komba Gbundema and others should combine. It should be a uniform mission. They together with SAJ and others, because by then there weren't existing communication between them. He said after they and SAJ would have cleared up Kono they should go to Kabala and from Kabala they should proceed to Freetown. That was what he meant by "discuss", because by then there wasn't any communication between Sam Bockarie and SAJ.

13:01:46

Q. Madam Witness, the matters that you have just talked about, were they matters which were discussed at the meeting, or were they matters which Sam Bockarie discussed with Eddie Kanneh during the time they were having food together?

A. Well, what I have just explained to you was the discussion that took place between he and Eddie Kanneh whilst they were taking meal together.

Q. Do you recall where the meeting took place?

A. Well, it was in Buedu at Sam Bockarie's house.

Q. And do you recall the persons who were present at this meeting?

A. Well, Isaac was present, that is CO Isaac, Morris Kallon was there, Issa Sesay was there, Abu Keita was there, together with some other people.

Q. Now you mentioned Abu Keita. Who was he?

A. Well, he was a Liberian fighter. A soldier, I mean.

Q. How did you know he was a Liberian soldier?

A. Well, he only spoke Liberian English. He was not speaking Krio, nor English. He was only speaking Liberian English.

Q. And did you know why he was there?

A. Well, he was one of the fighters who had joined the RUF to fight.

Q. Do you know when he joined the RUF to fight?

A. Well, I only saw him in Buedu and I only came to know him in Buedu.

Q. Do you know where he came from before he came to Buedu?

A. Yes, he came from the Liberian side.

Q. And do you know what was decided or discussed at the meeting?

A. Well, I did not attend the meeting, but that was what I heard even before the meeting itself took place.

Q. Did you learn about what was discussed at the meeting later?
A. Yes, just the same thing I have explained, those were the 13:05:15 things they discussed. That is to go and re-attack Kono, that is the RUF fighters.
Q. Now back to Abu Keita. Do you know whether he belonged to any group in Liberia from where he came?
A. Well, I only knew that he was a Liberian fighter, but I did 13:05:41 not actually know to which group he initially belonged.
Q. Madam Witness, apart from Abu Keita, at this time do you know whether there were any other Liberian fighters in Buedu?
A. Yes, I later knew about one Senegalese.
Q. Who was Senegalese?
13:06:09 A. Well, he was a Liberian fighter too. He was a Liberian soldier. He was fighting in Liberia.
Q. When did you first see Senegalese?
A. Well, I saw him at first in Kenema together with Jungle at the time Jungle and others used to go there.
13:06:38 Q. And then after that did you see him anywhere else apart from this time that he was in Buedu?
A. Yes, I said I saw him at first in Kenema and all of us pulled out from Kenema before we went to Buedu.
Q. And do you know what nationality Senegalese was?
13:07:09 A. Well, he was a Liberian.
Q. How did you know he was a Liberian?
A. He was speaking Liberian English and he came from Liberia.
Q. Do you know whether he belonged to any group in Liberia?
A. Well, that I wouldn't tell. All I know is that he was a batteries, so it was only once in a while that their radio came on. So he spoke to Brigadier Mani and Brigadier Mani spoke to Sam Bockarie, and later Gullit came on because Brigadier Mani had spoken to Gullit that he would have to tell Sam Bockarie about 14:42:46 SAJ's death and later Gullit himself came up and told Sam Bockarie about SAJ's death. That was how they started talking and they spoke about where they had reached, their position and what they were going through. It was from that point that communication started between Sam Bockarie and Gullit.

14:43:15 Q. Was there any reaction from Sam Bockarie when he learnt that SAJ Musa had died?
A. Well for one reason or the other he said he felt it because he was his colleague strong man, but only that SAJ had refused his order. He objected going to Buedu because he had diamonds, 14:43:42 but - which means even if he died he would not feel it that much. He would feel it, but not that very much because he had rejected his orders because SAJ was not supposed to be in the front line at that time.
Q. You mentioned earlier that Sam Bockarie spoke through the 14:44:00 BBC.
A. Yes.
Q. Sam Bockarie spoke through the BBC saying that his troops would enter Freetown within a certain period. Do you know how Sam Bockarie was able to indicate a time frame within which the 14:44:22 troops would enter Freetown when he spoke to the BBC?
A. Yes, at that time he and Gullit had already spoken. Gullit had told him their position at that time. That was why he made the broadcast on the BBC. Gullit had already told him that they were entering Freetown.

Q. Did you yourself hear this broadcast on BBC radio?
A. I heard it, but I was from a distant point when he was talking.
THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness slow down and repeat.
14:45:04
PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Witness, you're going too quickly for the interpreters and the people that have to write your evidence. We would like you to speak more slowly, please, and pick up where you said, "I was from a distance when he was talking". Please continue from there.
14:45:19
THE WITNESS: I was in the distance when he was talking. After he had spoken, he came to the veranda. He said that he and Gullit had no problem. He said the problem was SAJ. SAJ was the one who had the problem, but as long as SAJ was now dead he and Gullit had no more problems. He said he trusted Gullit and he knew Gullit would make it up to enter Freetown.
14:45:55
MR BANGURA:
Q. Was all of this what Sam Bockarie said to the BBC, or was he saying this in some other context?
A. After he had spoken to the BBC, it was later when he was explaining further. That was when he explained this. After he had finished talking to the BBC, it was later that he explained discussing this in the veranda.
14:46:16
Q. Do you recall whether the troops entered Freetown? Gullit's troops?
A. Yes, later I understood that he had entered Freetown.
14:46:42
Q. How did you understand - how did you get to know that he had entered Freetown?
A. Well, it was over the FM radio that the rebels had entered Freetown.

Q. Which FM radio are you referring to?
A. It was over the SLBS.
Q. Do you recall whether anything happened - was there any 14:47:19 reaction from Sam Bockarie after the troops entered Freetown?
A. Yes, he came on the media and said he was a man of his word. He had given three days that his men would enter Freetown and indeed they had entered Freetown.
Q. When you say he came on the media --
14:47:48 A. Sam Bockarie came up and spoke.
Q. -- what media are you referring to?
A. I mean BBC. He came up again and spoke and said he was a man of his words. He had said that within three days' time his men would enter Freetown and indeed they had entered Freetown.
14:48:09 Q. How did you know this?
A. Well, he put the satellite in the veranda. It was there he said this, happily. The place was full of people. Everybody was dancing around.
Q. Madam Witness, when you say "satellite", what are you 14:48:29 referring to?
A. I mean the satellite phone.
Q. Do you recall any communication that went on between Sam Bockarie and anybody else during the course of the - during the times that these troops had entered Freetown?
14:49:01 A. Yes. Just after the announcement over the BBC we got a call from Base 1, which was Benjamin Yeaten's radio station, called Sam Bockarie's radio station, that is Planet 1, and the operator enquired if that news that they had got from the BBC was correct that Sam Bockarie's troops had entered Freetown. The operator responded happily, saying "Yes", and they asked for Sam Bockarie.

Q. Can I ask you to indicate who - you're talking of two operators. Can I ask you to indicate which operator was responding to whose call, or whose questions, please?

A. Well, the radio operator at Benjamin Yeaten was called Sunlight and was the one who called Sam Bockarie's radio station to the operator who was on duty that day. I cannot recall the name now.

Q. And you said that the operator answered or responded that --

A. Yes, he responded happily saying, yes, they had entered Freetown.

Q. Did anything happen after that?

A. Yes, they asked for Planet 1 - and that was Sam Bockarie - if he was around and the operator said, "Yes", so the operator said 50, which was Benjamin Yeaten, wanted to talk to Sam Bockarie.

Q. Which operator said they wanted to talk to Sam Bockarie?

A. Benjamin Yeaten's operator, who was called Sunlight, said his father, who was 50, Benjamin Yeaten, wanted to talk to our own father and that was Sam Bockarie.

Q. Madam Witness, how did you know this?

A. Well on that day, after the jubilation, I knew because the place was full of people. The veranda was in a veranda. When that thing occurred that day, the place was full. During the jubilation I too went to the radio room. I heard the operator asking.

Q. Madam Witness, just to clarify the last answer you gave, I will just read from what you said. You said, "Well on that day, after the jubilation, I knew because the place was full of people. The veranda was in a veranda". That's not so clear. What did you say about veranda? Can you say that again?

14:52:19 A. No, I said Sam Bockarie was in the veranda and the radio set - where the radio set was, Planet 1, it was in Issa Sesay's veranda opposite Sam Bockarie's veranda. There is a street in between them. The place was packed full with people. There were soldiers there, civilians, a lot of people jubilating. Everybody 14:52:39 was there. That was why I too came to the place and I saw Sam Bockarie and - sorry, I heard Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten talking on the phone.

Q. Madam Witness, you said that there were many people there, it was full and they were jubilating. Why were they jubilating?

14:53:05 A. Because of the recapture of Freetown, their entry into Freetown, the entry of the rebels into Freetown.

Q. Do you know whether any communication took place between Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten as had been --

A. Yes, as I said earlier - as I had said earlier after the 14:53:30 operator had asked for our own father, that was Sam Bockarie, that 50 wanted to talk to him, they called him, Sam Bockarie, and Sam Bockarie - 50 asked Sam Bockarie if the news which he had heard over the BBC was correct. Sam Bockarie replied joyously and he said "Yes", and 50 congratulated him and he said, "If that 14:54:01 was the case, if that is the case, then I will be there in two weeks' time and my father would want to talk to you", and he instructed him to switch on the satellite phone.

Q. Madam Witness, were you privy to this communication between Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten?

A. Yes.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Which of the two communications? The one on the satellite phone, or the one on the ordinary radio?

MR BANGURA: I am referring, your Honour, to the one on the radio, not the one on the satellite phone.

14:54:38

THE WITNESS: It was the one on the radio that I heard. After he had asked him if it was true that his men had entered Freetown and he said "Yes" happily, Benjamin Yeaten congratulated Sam Bockarie and he instructed him to put the 21 on, that was the satellite phone, and told him that his father would want to talk to him and if that was the case then he should expect him in two days' time.

14:55:01

MR BANGURA:

Q. Just before we talk about the satellite phone, the last part of your answer was that "If that was the case he should expect him in two days' time". Who should expect who in two days' time?

14:55:19

A. Sam Bockarie was to expect Benjamin Yeaten in two days' time.

Q. Who said this to who?

14:55:31

A. Benjamin Yeaten spoke to Sam Bockarie that if it was true that his men had entered into Freetown, Sam Bockarie should expect him, Benjamin Yeaten, in two days' time.

Q. Expect him where?

A. In Buedu within two days' time.

14:55:50

Q. Do you know whether Sam Bockarie had communication on the 21 with anybody after this conversation with Benjamin Yeaten?

A. Yes. Just as I am saying, just after he left the radio room he went straight to the open terrain and he spoke on the satellite phone.

Q. Who did he speak to on the satellite phone?
A. Well, he said he had spoken to Charles Taylor.
Q. Did you know he was speaking to Charles Taylor when he 14:56:38 spoke on the satellite phone?
A. Well, before he spoke on the satellite phone Benjamin Yeaten had instructed him to switch on the satellite phone because Benjamin Yeaten's father, Charles Taylor, had said he wanted to talk to him.
14:56:56 Q. Did you know what was discussed between Sam Bockarie and Charles Taylor on the satellite phone?
A. Well, that one I don't know what they discussed.
Q. Madam Witness, you said that Benjamin Yeaten promised to be in Buedu within two days - I believe, within two days - if it was 14:57:34 true that the troops had entered Freetown. Did Benjamin Yeaten come to Buedu?
A. Yes, he came to Buedu.
Q. When did he come to Buedu?
A. Well, after two days after the conversation had taken place
14:57:59 he came.
Q. How did you know Benjamin Yeaten came to Buedu?
A. Well, Sam Bockarie told us to prepare food for guests coming from Liberia.
Q. And who was that guest?
14:58:27 A. It was Benjamin Yeaten.
Q. Did you yourself see Benjamin Yeaten in Buedu?
A. Well, that was my first time to see him. I never knew him before that time.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Bangura, I note the witness answered the question in the plural, "guests" coming from Liberia.

MR BANGURA: Your Honour, I will get to that:

Q. Madam Witness, did Benjamin Yeaten come to Buedu alone?

A. No, he did not come alone. He came together with Sampson, Junior and Jungle.

14:59:09

Q. Do you recall how long they stayed at Buedu on this visit?

A. Well, they came, they spent the night and in the morning - early in the morning - they went to Kono together with Issa and others.

14:59:43

Q. Madam Witness, was this the only visit in your recollection that Benjamin Yeaten made to Buedu?

A. No, I can recall that Benjamin Yeaten went to Buedu twice that I can recall now.

Q. Was this the first time that he came to Buedu, or was it the second time?

15:00:13

A. Well, it was the first time. The second time was when Voinjama was cleared.

Q. I shall ask you about the second time later. You said that they went to - Benjamin Yeaten and the others who came with him went to Kono the next day. Is that correct?

15:00:36

A. Repeat that one.

Q. Your evidence is that - I asked you how long they stayed and you said, "They slept one night and the next day they went to Kono", and "they" referring to Benjamin Yeaten and Jungle,

15:00:57

Sampson and Junior. Is that your evidence?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what they went to do in Kono?

A. Well, at that time all of them went together with Issa. I don't know what they went there for because I did not go with

Q. Were you privy to this communication from Gullit to Sam Bockarie?
A. Well, I did not monitor the communication. Sam Bockarie was the one who used to discuss it. He was discussing it.
15:04:21 Q. Did Sam Bockarie give any orders in relation to that situation in Freetown at that time?
A. Yes, Sam Bockarie ordered Gullit that they should not challenge the ECOMOG troops. He said as long as the troop was too heavy for them they should not challenge them, they should 15:04:48 pull out of the town, but before they should pull out of the town they should kill many people and burn down many houses before they should leave the town. He said "If any bush shake, fire should blaze", but they should leave the town.
Q. What do you mean, or what did you understand from the 15:05:11 statement that, "If any bush shake, fire should blaze"? What did that mean?
A. Anywhere they heard gunshots from whatever angle they should fire towards that particular direction and they should kill many people from that direction and they should burn houses, 15:05:36 many of them.
Q. Madam Witness, how did you know that Sam Bockarie gave these instructions to Gullit in Freetown?
A. Well, that was right outside in the open because the radio station was not in a room. It was right outside in the veranda, 15:05:59 an open place. There was a street in between them. He stood there. He was a man without fears. He would just say anything in the open. He said, "Whoever wanted to hear, let that person hear". That was not his business, so he was standing in the open when he said that, because he was angry. He was extremely angry.

He said, "Whosoever wanted to hear, let that person hear it".
Q. Do you know what happened eventually to the troops in Freetown?
A. Well, finally they were pushed out of Freetown. The ECOMOG
15:06:39 forces pushed Gullit and his group out of Freetown.
Q. How did you know that the ECOMOG forces pushed Gullit and his troops out of Freetown?
A. That was the instruction that Sam Bockarie gave to him and he obeyed it. Brigadier Mani was the one who reported to him
15:07:10 that he had started receiving people, that Gullit and others had left Freetown, they had come, and later on the station came on and gave message to Sam Bockarie that they had pulled out of Freetown.
Q. Madam Witness, the earlier part of the answer you gave to 15:07:28 that question is not quite clear. The question was, "How did you know that the ECOMOG forces pushed Gullit and his troops out of Freetown?", and the earlier part of your answer goes as follows, "That was the instruction that Sam Bockarie gave to him and he obeyed it." It is not entirely clear. The rest of the answer 15:07:51 makes sense.
A. Well, I read it in the logbook that they had retreated from Freetown.
Q. What did you mean then when you said that was the instruction that Sam Bockarie gave to him and he obeyed it?
15:08:14 A. Sam Bockarie had said he should pull out of - that Gullit should pull out of Freetown, but before he should do that he should kill many people and burn houses and Gullit responded saying, "Yes, sir". And finally they retreated from Freetown, Gullit and others.

Q. Did you know whether Gullit carried out the orders that Sam Bockarie gave to him regarding what to do in Freetown?
A. Yes, we heard that over the SLBS that rebels had pulled out from Freetown, but they had killed many people and -- 15:09:02 PRESIDING JUDGE: Please pause, Madam Witness. Mr Anyah, you are on your feet.
MR ANYAH: Yes, it's just the use of the word, the plural, "orders", or I can't say the word perhaps, "orders", O-R-D-E-R-S. The question was whether the witness knew whether Gullit carried 15:09:19 out the orders in plural. Thus far, the evidence has led one to believe there was just the one order from Sam Bockarie to Gullit regarding the pull out from Freetown.
PRESIDING JUDGE: I see. Mr Bangura?
MR BANGURA: Your Honours, it's a matter of semantics, but 15:09:43 the point is that implicit in the order, which my learned friend is referring to, were specific acts and it could be said that those were individual orders and there were orders, an order to kill civilians, there was an order to burn houses, and so I believe I am quite right to talk about orders.
15:10:00 PRESIDING JUDGE: One thing that I do note that - I see your point, Mr Bangura, but were these at different times, or was it a consolidated order that contained several elements?
MR BANGURA: Your Honours, I will get the witness to say. I wouldn't say what my understanding is, but I will get the 15:10:22 witness to clarify:
Q. Madam Witness, you talked about Sam Bockarie giving orders. I find it difficult, your Honour, to keep myself to the singular. I will just continue based on the argument I've made --
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: The original word was "instruction".

According to the record, it was "instruction".

MR BANGURA:

Q. Madam Witness, the instruction which Sam Bockarie gave to Gullit about what to do in Freetown in the face of pressure from ECOMOG, can you simply tell the Court again what that instructions - instruction was?

15:10:51

A. Well, I don't know what your understanding is. Maybe our understandings are different, so maybe we would have to be coping with each other. What I understand by that is what he told him to do, he said as long as they had realised that the ECOMOG troops were heavy for Gullit's troop then Gullit should retreat from the town, but before Gullit should do that he should kill many civilians and burn many houses and after that he would pull out from Freetown.

15:11:18

MR BANGURA: I hope that answers the enquiry, or question, raised by -- 15:11:51

PRESIDING JUDGE: I think it does, yes. Does it deal with your objection, Mr Anyah?

MR ANYAH: Yes, and I think counsel made a valid point in responding to the objection. Thank you.

15:12:09

MR BANGURA:

Q. Madam Witness, the question that I had asked before the objection came was whether you knew whether the instruction given to Sam Bockarie [sic] was carried out.

A. I said yes, because the SLBS radio said that rebels had killed many people and burnt many houses down before ever they left Freetown. He said the civilians - sorry, the ECOMOG soldiers had pushed the rebels out of Freetown, but that the rebels burnt down many houses and killed many civilians. I heard that over the SLBS radio.

15:12:32

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Bangura, the instruction was given by Sam Bockarie, not to Sam Bockarie as you stated.

MR BANGURA:

15:13:21 Q. Madam Witness, the instruction to Gullit was given by who?

A. Sam Bockarie was the one who gave the instruction to Gullit.

Q. Did you yourself hear Sam Bockarie give these instructions to Gullit?

15:13:51 A. Yes, I said it was in an open place, outside in the veranda, not in the house.

Q. When you said in an open place, how did Sam Bockarie give this instruction to Gullit? By what means?

A. It was through radio communication set.

15:14:19 Q. After the troops had withdrawn from Freetown, did anyone come to Buedu from Freetown of the troops that withdrew from Freetown?

A. Well, it was very few who returned. Some of them stopped at Gullit's and others' place and some stopped in Kono and very 15:14:55 few of them came to Buedu.

Q. Apart from troops that came to Buedu, did any other persons come to Buedu from Freetown after the pull out?

A. Yes, Victor - they brought Victor Foh and the other people. Victor Foh and his group came to Buedu.

15:15:23 Q. When you say Victor Foh and his group, which group are you referring to?

A. I mean the ones who were at Pademba who were released. I cannot recall their names now, they were many, but I can still recall the name of Victor Foh.

would not allow you to monitor RUF operations?
A. Not all. That's why I initially said - it's in my statement that during operations, not all RUF operations, but during times of operations he would not allow that. He himself would come to the radio room and he would serve as operator for himself. Even for the men, he would be the one doing it.
Q. The point is there were times, as you say, during operations when you were excluded from the radio room because you were a woman, true?
15:19:56 A. Yes.
Q. And you have told the Prosecution that whenever it was operation time you were not involved much in communication, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. Madam Witness, you gave us the names of Sam Bockarie's
15:20:31 radio stations and you gave us the name Planet 1, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. You gave us the name Marvel, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Besides Marvel and Planet 1, did Sam Bockarie have any 15:20:58 other radio stations?
A. Yes, he had one other radio station that was called Mike November 5.
Q. Where was Mike November 5 based at?
A. Well, it was based in Buedu going towards the airfield -
15:21:27 the airfield in Buedu.
Q. Who were some of the radio operators assigned to Mike November 5?
A. Well, I can only recall one that was called Agama. The others I have forgotten their names.

Q. Did you saying Agama or Adama?
A. Agama. Agama. He was a male.
Q. Madam Witness, do you know how to spell this Agama?
A. Well, I don't know. The way I can spell it is A-G-A-M-A.
15:23:06 That is the way I spell it. I don't know if it is correct.
Q. Madam Witness, do you know whether or can you tell us whether Mike November 5 was a stationary or mobile radio station?
A. Well, it was stationary. It was not mobile.
Q. Planet 1, was it a mobile or stationary radio station?
15:23:57 A. Well, that one I can explain. Planet 1 was a radio station that was initially mounted. Marvel was the one Sam Bockarie used as his mobile. That was mounted in his - in a vehicle. But whenever Marvel had a problem that was up to us, the radio operators, to decide. Whenever Sam Bockarie would want to go 15:24:27 elsewhere whether it was Pendembu or to the front lines, we would use Planet 1 as his mobile station wherever he was.
Q. So your evidence is that Planet 1 was at the same time stationary and could be modified to a mobile radio station, yes?
A. Yes.
15:24:56 Q. And Planet 1 is the same radio in question that was once called Bravo Zulu 4, right?
A. Yes, initially.
Q. Have you ever heard of a radio station called Lemon?
A. What?
15:25:27 Q. In Buedu when you were in Buedu was there a radio station called Lemon, L-E-M-O-N?
A. Well, I never heard the name of that radio station, Lemon, in Buedu, no.
Q. Was there a radio station in Buedu through which RUF fighters would speak to other radio stations about personal family matters?

A. Well, it was that Mike November 5 that I knew to be the radio they used for that purpose.

15:26:17 Q. So Mike November 5 was never used for official RUF communications?

A. They used it as official and as well as the other way that you have just mentioned.

Q. Foxtrot Yankee you said was a radio station at Foya 15:26:47 airfield, right?

A. Yes.

Q. Who were the radio operators at that station?

A. I don't recall that one.

Q. It was located in Liberia, you say, correct?

15:27:06 A. Yes, in Foya airfield.

Q. Victor 1, another station you say was located in Liberia, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Vahun, Liberia, to be specific, yes?

15:27:28 A. Yes.

Q. Tell us the names of the radio operators at Victor 1?

A. Well, for now I don't remember any of the radio operators' names in Vahun.

Q. You said there was a radio operator at Roberts

15:28:05 International Airfield called Sky 1, yes?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the real name of this person?

A. Well, I don't know his real name. I only knew Sky 1.

Q. What was the call sign of the radio Sky 1 used?

A. I can't recall now.
Q. So you don't remember the call sign or name of Sky 1's radio, you don't remember the names of any radio operators in Vahun, you don't remember the names of any radio operators in 15:28:53 Foya. All you remember is Benjamin Yeaten's operators in Base 1. I am speaking of Liberia now.
A. Yes, because we lived together for a long time.
Q. Yeaten, how many radio stations did he have, Madam Witness?
A. Well, it was just the one that I knew for him.
15:29:37 Q. When you say just that one, are you referring to Base 1?
A. It's Base 1 that I knew for Benjamin Yeaten. I did not know any other radio station. If he had any other radio station, I did not know.
Q. Base 1, is it the same radio station as Lima Bravo?
15:30:03 A. Yes.
Q. It was first called Lima Bravo and then it came to be known as Base 1, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. When we say Base 1, that is the name of the radio. It's 15:30:30 its call sign, correct?
A. Well, I knew it as a call sign. That was the call sign I knew.
Q. And a call sign is a unique way to identify a particular radio, right?
15:30:58 A. Yes.
Q. A call sign can either be a name with alphabets, or it can be a number, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. When you spoke with the Prosecution in November last year

For the accused Charles Ghankay Taylor:	Mr Courtenay Griffiths QC Mr Terry Munyard Mr Morris Anyah

exchange was between myself and Madam Court Officer.

MR ANYAH:

Q. Madam Witness, when we left off yesterday we were talking about RUF codes in the possession of persons in Liberia. Do you recall that, Madam Witness?

09:37:21

A. Yes.

Q. During your testimony on Monday, the 8th, you spoke about ECOMOG jets that took off from Roberts International Airfield and attacked RUF positions in Sierra Leone. Do you recall that, Madam Witness?

09:37:44

A. Yes.

Q. There was a code you said was used in radio communications to alert RUF stations in Sierra Leone that these jets were coming. Can you tell us what that code is again?

09:38:04

A. I recall that I said it was 448.

Q. And this is code 448 you said was relayed or transmitted by a radio operator at Roberts international by the name Sky 1, yes?

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, your Honours --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Witness, please pause. Yes, Mr Interpreter?

09:38:41

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, the gender of Sky 1 has not been made clear to the interpreter.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well. Madam Witness, I want you to continue with your answer, but say whether Sky 1 was a man or a woman.

09:38:55

THE WITNESS: Sky 1 was a man.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please continue with your answer, Madam Witness.

THE WITNESS: Like I said, at Roberts International Airport

Sky 1 was a male. He was the one that used to give us the information from there.

MR ANYAH:

Q. And the information Sky 1 gave you from Roberts International Airport was about the 448, correct?

09:39:28

A. Yes.

Q. At the time that Sky 1 gave you this information, was it when you were in Buedu between the early part of 1998 through December 1999?

09:39:55

A. Well, from early 1998 up to 1999, but it was not in December. It was mid-1999 that the jet stopped attacking the RUF positions.

Q. So it would be fair to say that for about two-thirds of the period while you were in Buedu, early January 1998 through mid-1999, Sky 1 was the one providing you with this information about the 448 jets, right?

09:40:20

A. It was not just Sky 1 that used to send the information to us. We used to get it from various locations in Liberia, but Sky 1 was the number one person, or he was the person that relayed the information to us from IRA.

09:40:51

Q. Madam Witness, at this time ECOMOG was both in Sierra Leone as it was in Liberia, correct?

A. Well, yes.

Q. This Court, Madam Witness, has found as a fact that on 29

09:41:25

August 1997 ECOWAS, Economic Community of West African States, extended the mandate of ECOMOG troops in Liberia to include Sierra Leone. Are you aware of that, Madam Witness?

A. Well, I don't know about that.

MR ANYAH: Your Honours, for the record it is judicially noted fact Z:

Q. Where were there ECOMOG jets taking off from Lungi in Sierra Leone and attacking RUF positions in other parts of Sierra Leone during this period of time, Madam Witness?

09:42:11 A. Well, I do not know about that.

Q. In your opinion, Madam Witness, is it the case that the code word or the code numbers 448 were only relative to jets taking off from Liberia and attacking Sierra Leone?

A. Well, the code name, that code number 448 was referring to 09:42:48 an ECOMOG jet. Whether it took off from Sierra Leone or from Liberia, that was the code name for the ECOMOG jet bombers.

Q. That is fair enough. My question is, to rephrase it, were you aware of ECOMOG jets, also known as 448, taking off from Lungi International Airport in Sierra Leone and attacking RUF

09:43:17 positions within Sierra Leone?

A. Well, that I do not know about.

Q. You are only aware of those jets taking off from Roberts International Airfield in Liberia. Is that your evidence, Madam Witness?

09:43:38 A. I knew about jets and I got information from IRA whenever an ECOMOG jet took off from there to come and attack RUF positions, but I did not know about any other jet that took off from anywhere else in the world to attack RUF positions. The 448 generally meant ECOMOG jet. Whether it took off from where or 09:44:06 where not that was really not the concern. The code name was 448 for jet bombers.

Q. And, just like you said in Court this morning, you told the Prosecution out of court that separate and apart from Sky 1 in RIA, RUF were warned of approaching 448 jets by radio stations in Vahun, Foya and elsewhere in Liberia, correct?

A. Well, I informed the Prosecution that we used to get information from Vahun, Foya airfield, about 448.
Q. The radio station in Vahun is Victor 1, yes?
09:45:09 A. Yes.
Q. You also told the Prosecution you got information about 448 from Foxtrot Yankee in Foya, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. And in respect of these radio stations you referred to them
09:45:23 as NPFL radio stations, right?
A. Well, I did not tell the Prosecution any specific name regarding that. All I know is that those radio stations were deployed there under Charles Taylor's government.
Q. Madam Witness - and for counsel's benefit this is in tab 2
09:45:58 of the Defence bundle. This is the set of documents handed out by us yesterday. Your Honours, the relevant page is page 7 going into page 8, starting at the bottom of the page.
Madam Witness, just to be quick about this, in November last year between the 19th and the 27th speaking of these events
09:46:41 you told the Prosecution you recall that there were communications between the RUF and a Liberian radio station in Foya called Foxtrot Yankee and another in Vahun - I'm now on the next page, page 8 - called Victor 1 and they had you saying these were NPFL stations located on the border. Did you use the words
09:47:04 or the acronym NPFL in association with these radio stations, Madam Witness?
A. Yes.
Q. Are you aware of the fact that there was no such entity as the NPFL starting towards the end of - in fact, in the middle of 1996, Madam Witness?

A. I did not understand that question.

Q. I will repeat it. During the time you were in Buedu, indeed as far back as when you were in Kenema, there was no entity or organisation in Liberia at that time called NPFL. Are you aware of that, Madam Witness?

A. Well, what I know is that under Charles Taylor's government they had the NPFL.

Q. There was something called the National Patriotic Party, but it was not the National Patriotic Front of Liberia. Are you aware of that, Madam Witness?

A. Well, I do not know that difference. I don't know.

MR ANYAH: Madam Court Officer, with your assistance could we produce Defence exhibit D-25. Thank you, Madam Court Officer:

Q. Madam Witness, this is a document already exhibited before this Court, Defence exhibit D-25. You see at the top it says "22 November" and that should be 1996 through January - sorry, through 12 February 1997. At the very top it says "Liberia demobilisation sites" and that is the map of Liberia. Have you ever seen the map of Liberia before, Madam Witness?

A. Well, no.

Q. But you have been into Liberia a number of times, right?

A. Not so many times. I only went there at the time I went there with Sam Bockarie and the area where I went to I stopped at the border. That was - the first time I went there I stopped at the border, so I have not been there for many times. I went there twice.

Q. Since you left Liberia in the early 2000s, I think you said it was 2003, have you ever gone back to Liberia, Madam Witness?

Q. Madam Witness, this map which comes to us from the World Food Programme, a UN entity, United Nations entity, it is written at the bottom of the map, shows various parts of Liberia, including Vahun, Voinjama, Gbarnga, Camp Naama, Camp Schefflein, 09:56:48 Tubmanburg, and it shows numbers in respect of each of those areas. And if you look in the centre of the map at the bottom near Harper, Liberia, it is written there "Total number of soldiers disarmed and demobilised 21,315."

Are you aware of the fact that between November and 09:57:10 February - November 1996 and February 1997 there was what was called DDRR, Disarmament, Demobilisation, Reintegration and Rehabilitation taking place in Liberia?

A. Well, I don't know about anything like that. I don't know anything about what you have said.

09:57:38 Q. But your evidence is some time in 1997 through 1999 ECOMOG jets were taking off from RIA and NPFL radio stations in Vahun and Foya were alerting RUF positions in Sierra Leone, yes?

A. Yes.

Q. Madam Witness, have you heard the name --

09:58:13 MR BANGURA: Your Honours, I think the answer has gone through now, but I believe my learned friend has gone back on the time period that he initially put to the witness about 448 from Liberia. The evidence before was '98 from the witness, but that question was from '97. The witness's testimony has been that 09:58:36 when she was in Buedu and that was from '98.

MR ANYAH: If I may be heard?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, Mr Anyah, I am just looking at the record as I do recall the witness saying some time the jets stopped. Mr Bangura, you have finished your objection?

MR BANGURA: Yes, your Honour.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, Mr Anyah?

MR ANYAH: I see the point counsel is trying to make but there are a number of issues here. One, it's cross-examination and I can have some fluidity in going back and forth. Two, the witness did say earlier in the sequence of questioning that even before she went to Buedu they used to receive 448 alerts and some of my prior questioning included her time in Kenema and I can use this map for a variety of purposes; the present purpose being to show the witness that ECOMOG was present in Liberia at a particular point in time, disarmament was taking place in Liberia and to use that context to pose specific questions about ECOMOG jets.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I have no problem at all about your right to cross-examine and put questions. I am just bearing in mind that you said "your evidence has been" and I want to ensure that there is an accuracy in those dates. That is the only point I wish to check, Mr Anyah, and I am looking at a question - perhaps it would be best, Mr Bangura, since you have raised the objection, that you refer us to the prior evidence of the witness.

MR ANYAH: Madam President, I appreciate the objection and your Honour has said that I prefaced my question with the words that the witness's evidence has been such and such.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes.

MR ANYAH: That being the case, I am more than willing to reformulate and proceed.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Very well. That would save time and you put your point to the witness, Mr Anyah.

MR ANYAH: Thank you, Madam President:

Q. Madam Witness, the map I have just shown you indicates that after February 1997 there was disarmament in Liberia. Do you agree?

10:01:04 A. Well, I don't know about that. I have no knowledge about the Liberian disarmament.

Q. It is your evidence, is it not, that at the time when you were in Buedu there were still radio stations affiliated with the NPFL in Foya and Vahun alerting RUF positions in Liberia about 10:01:37 incoming 448 jets, yes?

A. There was a radio station at Foya and there was a radio station at Vahun that always informed RUF positions about the 448 at the time I was in Buedu.

Q. And these radio stations would have been in Liberia after 10:02:02 the period of time that I proposed to you disarmament took place, yes?

A. Well, I have said it that I do not know about disarmament. In early '98 when I was in Buedu I did not know whether they had disarmed before I went to Buedu. I don't know about that.

10:02:31 Q. This radio operator at RIA, Sky 1, did you tell the Prosecution that he was a brother of Superman?

A. Yes.

Q. Superman was Liberian, yes?

A. Yes.

10:02:52 Q. I mean Liberian by nationality, yes?

A. Yes.

Q. And you do not recall what the call sign or radio name for Sky 1's radio was, yes?

A. I don't recall, not at all.

Q. Have you ever heard the name Vandy Gbamayaji?
A. Yes.
MR ANYAH: Your Honours, part of this name have been given before in prior evidence but I could spell it V-A-N-D-Y and 10:03:39 G-B-A-M-A-Y-A-J-I:
Q. Madam Witness, in what context have you heard that name?
A. Well, that particular name, I heard that particular name and I know the person. He was a radio operator who operated the SLA radio station at that time in 1997 when Sam Bockarie and I
10:04:23 and others were in Kenema and he was even working at the brigade headquarters in Kenema. So at the time we pulled out of Kenema, that is Sam Bockarie pulled out of Kenema, all of us went together with Vandy Gbamayaji. So he was a radio operator and Sam Bockarie assigned a radio set to him. That was a Thompson
10:04:56 radio set. He was in Buedu monitoring the ECOMOG communication in Buedu.
Q. Gbamayaji you said was a radio operator for Sam Bockarie in Buedu monitoring ECOMOG communications, yes?
A. Yes.
10:05:27 Q. He first became a radio operator associated with Sam Bockarie when you were in Kenema, yes?
A. No, he was at the brigade - the Kenema brigade. That was where he was working.
Q. He was an SLA, as in a member of the Sierra Leone Army,
10:05:49 yes?
A. Yes.
Q. And when we say SLA in this context, you mean the SLA that became the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council, AFRC, yes?
A. Later, yes.

Q. When you refer to him as SLA he was no longer an SLA that was loyal to the Government of Sierra Leone, right?
A. That I do not know, but he was an SLA. He was a soldier.
Q. You said his role was to monitor ECOMOG communication in 10:06:30 Buedu. Was that the only thing he did when it came to monitoring, Madam Witness?
A. Well, that was the assignment I knew for him.
Q. What was the call sign of the radio he operated?
A. The radio did not have a call sign. They just installed
10:06:59 the radio. He did not call from that radio. He was just there to monitor the ECOMOG net.
Q. You mean there was a radio in Buedu that did not have a call sign?
A. Yes.
10:07:21 Q. Is it your evidence that radios that are used only for monitoring do not always have call signs?
A. Some had call signs. Those that they could use to communicate had call signs. Those that were used for monitoring did not have call signs.
10:07:51 Q. What was Gbamayaji's code name as an operator or his, shall we say, nickname?
A. Well, I did not know any nickname by which he was called. That was the only name I knew for him.
Q. Gbamayaji also monitored communication about ECOMOG jets, 10:08:23 or 448 jets. Do you agree, Madam Witness?
A. Not a day did I know about that, that he monitored the operations of the ECOMOG jets. I do not know about that and I do not recall that.
Q. Do you know what a Morse - M-O-R-S-E - code is? Morse code, have you heard that?

A. Well, I have heard that before, but I was not taught the Morse code.
Q. In what context have you previously heard Morse code being 10:09:06 referred to?
A. Well, I only heard that there was a code known as the Morse code for radio operators. They said it was - it made a sound like "pin pin", something like that, but I don't know much about that anyway. I do not know anything about Morse code, because I 10:09:39 was not taught Morse code. I was not taught. I don't know.
Q. Morse code was a code used by AFRC former SLA radio operators. Do you agree, Madam Witness?
A. Well, that I don't know.
Q. There were AFRC radio stations in Buedu that transmitted
10:10:05 information to the RUF about approaching 448 jets. Do you agree, Madam Witness?
A. I don't understand that question.
Q. I will repeat it. In both Kailahun and Kono Districts post intervention, that is post February 1998, there was some 10:10:31 collaboration between AFRC and the RUF in alerting each other about approaching ECOMOG Alpha Jets. Do you agree, Madam Witness?
A. Well, I do not know about that.
Q. Do you know who Perry Kamara is, Madam Witness?
10:10:58 A. I know about King Perry, but I do not know who is Perry Kamara.
Q. Have you ever heard King Perry being referred to as Perry Kamara?
A. Well, I do not know his Perry Kamara name. I do not know about that. I heard about King Perry, but I do not know the name Perry Kamara.

Q. King Perry was one of the senior RUF radio operators when you were with the RUF, right?

10:11:45 A. King Perry was a senior RUF radio operator.

Q. During the time you were with the RUF, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. King Perry was in the company of Gullit and others when they entered Freetown on 6 January 1999, correct?

10:12:10 A. Well, at this time he was with Gullit. At the time they entered Freetown he was with Gullit.

Q. Madam Witness, I am going to read you what King Perry testified to before this Chamber earlier this year. For counsels' benefit this was in open session on 6 February 2008.

10:12:59 The relevant pages are 3222, 3223, 3224 and I will jump from page to page, but try and give an indication of where I am so everybody can follow. Line 15, page 3222:

"Q. During the course of your journey to Rosos were there any communications which updated you on the threats that 10:13:40 you were faced with?

A. Yes, communication was going on. Besides the troops, which were the government forces and the Civil Defence Forces, ECOMOG used to attack us from the air - air raid. The jet was coming from Lungi and attack our positions and 10:14:04 it was not only us. They were attacking positions like Kailahun, Kono, Koinadugu and also even as we were moving it used to attack our positions, but this attack that this jet was doing in our communication we had two areas how we could communicate. We had radio operators. They were just there to monitor on the radio the activities of ECOMOG."

Pause there. Madam Witness, a couple of questions. King Perry told this Court that ECOMOG jets used to take off from Lungi to attack their positions. Do you agree?

10:14:48 A. Well, I do not know. I wouldn't - I can't tell, because I did not move with King Perry and others. I was in Buedu. I don't know.

Q. King Perry told this Court that they had radio operators who were just there to monitor on the radio the activities of 10:15:11 ECOMOG. Do you agree, Madam Witness?

A. Well, that I don't know. Maybe it happened where he was. We were not at the same location, so I don't know about that.

Q. On the next page, same transcript, 6 February this year, page 3223, starting line 3 a question is posed:

10:15:44 "Q. Now, in what form was this information passed on to you about ECOMOG air raids?"

And then Perry Kamara or King Perry gives his responses starting at line 7, that is where I will read from:

"A. For example, when the jet was coming from Freetown or 10:16:02 Lungi we had a particular code name for that. We called it 448."

Then if you go down to line 13 he said:

"The word 448 means jet has moved or it has attacked our location."

10:16:20 On the same page, line 26, the question is posed:

"Q. Where were these messages coming from?

A. As I was talking about monitoring communication set we had a particular radio set in Buedu monitored by the AFRC, that was the former SLA. That group was monitoring and the name that was given by TF1-516, the other name of a radio operator called Atati, A-T-A-T-I? Have you heard that name before?

A. I do not recall.

10:25:12 Q. Are you persistent in maintaining that you are not sure whether or not Gbamayaji monitored 448 because you want this Court to believe that the monitoring of 448 was only done in Liberia?

A. Well, I will still say this: Gbamayaji was monitoring

10:25:33 ECOMOG activities in Sierra Leone and at the end report to Sam Bockarie. Maybe he monitored about the ECOMOG jets and reported it, or maybe he reported some other things that he monitored. I do not want to point specifically to that. All I know is that he monitored ECOMOG activities and at the end report

10:26:01 to Sam Bockarie.

Q. And the reason you do not wish to be specific, I am putting it to you, Madam Witness, is because you want this Court to believe that monitoring was only done in Liberia; true or false?

A. Well, I will not just agree with you and I will not

10:26:22 disagree with you like that, but I know that Gbamayaji monitored ECOMOG activity and in the end would report to Sam Bockarie and that might be the ECOMOG jet or whatsoever movement that ECOMOG undertook that he reported to Sam Bockarie, as well as - and I want to assure the Court that we used to get reports about the 10:26:47 448 from Monrovia, or from Liberia to Sierra Leone.

Q. I am not arguing with you whether or not you used to get these reports from Liberia. I am suggesting to you you want this Court to believe you only got them from Liberia and not from within Sierra Leone. Do you agree?

A. I have answered that question and you are still pushing me there. You are confusing me. I have already answered that question.
Q. Do you know Zedman, Sahr James, right?
10:27:35 A. I know him.
Q. Another senior RUF radio operator, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. At one point Zedman was based at Lungi monitoring ECOMOG jets. Do you agree, Madam Witness?
10:27:54 A. Well, I don't know. I never heard about that. I am only hearing that from you now.
Q. Well, let me rephrase that because I might stand to be corrected. Do you agree with this proposition, Madam Witness, that at some point Zedman had the responsibility of monitoring
10:28:17 the flights of ECOMOG Alpha Jets that were taking off from Lungi International Airport in Sierra Leone?
A. Well, I do not know about that.
Q. Have you heard the name Victor Malu before, Madam Witness?
A. Well, I do not recall any more.
10:29:00 Q. Was there a radio operator by the name of Sita, S-I-T-A, that you know of?
A. Well, I do not recall.
Q. You have heard the name Abu Keita before, have you not?
A. Yes.
10:29:22 Q. Who is Abu Keita, Madam Witness?
A. Well, I came to know Abu Keita in Buedu as a ULIMO, but I do not know who he was.
Q. Abu Keita was ULIMO. You agree with that, yes?
A. That was what I heard.

Q. Abu Keita was Mandingo, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. Abu Keita testified before this Court in January of this year. On 23 January of this year he said something about ECOMOG
10:30:20 Alpha Jets. I will read it to you from - your Honours, for everyone's benefit, the transcript of 23 January 2008 at page 2024, at line 12 - actually at line 18 the question was posed to Abu Keita:

"Q. Was there any strategy involving radios?
10:30:55 A. The strategy was the monitor. Zedman monitored the radio stations from the Nigerian ECOMOG who were based in Lungi. Also, Memunatu and Sita, they monitored from Monrovia. If a jet takes off from Monrovia on the RIA because Victor Malu who was the first commander was staying
10:31:21 in Monrovia, so they will call 448 so the radio operator would ring a bell and everybody would escape. That was the only strategy that I knew about."

Did you hear what I just read as said by Abu Keita, Madam Witness?
10:31:38 A. Yes, I have heard it.
Q. Abu Keita is saying that jets also flew from Lungi airport and that Zedman monitored the flights of those jets. Do you agree?
A. Well --
10:31:57 PRESIDING JUDGE: Pause, Madam Witness. Are you asking the witness if he said that, or are you asking if there was monitoring of the flights, Mr Anyah?
MR ANYAH: I understand the distinction:
Q. Do you agree with what Abu Keita has said that there was monitoring of flights taking off from Lungi International Airport?

A. Well, I cannot just agree with that. That was what he said and that is his statement and in fact all what he said there, I do not know anything about it, but that is his own statement. That was what he said in Court here. I am not saying he lied. And what I know and what I heard is what I am telling the Court. I do not know anything about what Abu Keita said or what he knew.

Q. Do you agree with Abu Keita when he says that Zedman used to monitor the flights of jets from Lungi airport?

A. That was what he said, but I do not know anything about that.

Q. Have you ever been to Roberts International Airfield in Monrovia, Madam Witness?

A. I have never been there.

Q. Have you ever been to any airport, Madam Witness?

A. I have been to the Lungi airport and - why are you smiling? And I have been to Brussels airport.

Q. You did fly on a plane to get here, right, Madam Witness?

A. Yes.

Q. At Lungi airport, using it as an example, when a plane takes off if someone were somewhere in a farm near Lungi would they be able to see that plane taking off?

A. Farm? Which farm are you referring to?

Q. Let's forget farm as an example. If you were in the terminal of Lungi airport, or somewhere in the premises of Lungi airport, and you saw a plane taking off - rather and a plane took off or landed, would you be able to see it?

MR BANGURA: Your Honours, I am not sure where we are going, but it seems like we are dwelling in the realm of speculation here now. The witness has not said that she - I don't know whether counsel wants to lay that sort of foundation, but we do not have the witness in any situation where she says 10:35:03 she has been standing and seeing a plane take off. We are dwelling on speculation.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I think counsel is entitled to put that question. He is asking something that she may or may not have done, but he is asking her to say if she could have seen if she 10:35:23 was in that situation. She has already told us she was at Lungi, so I think counsel is entitled to put that question.

MR ANYAH: Thank you, Madam President:

Q. Madam Witness, when you were at Lungi did you see any planes take off or land at that airport?

10:35:45 A. The day when I said I was at Lungi, it was at the time that I was coming here that I entered Lungi. That was my first time of going to Lungi. I have not lived in Lungi before. I was passing through.

Q. My question is not whether you have lived there. My 10:36:03 question is not whether you were passing through. My question is not whether that was the first time you were there. My question is this time you were there did you see any planes take off or land?

A. I can only come out to see or want to see if I had any 10:36:29 interest over that particular plane.

Q. I am not asking you whether you had an interest in a plane landing or taking off.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Madam Witness, the question is not difficult. You have told us you were at Lungi. When you were there, did you see a plane take off from the airport or did you see a plane land at the airport?

THE WITNESS: Well, I cannot remember that.

MR ANYAH:

10:37:03 Q. Have you ever seen a plane take off or land anywhere else before, whether it be Lungi, Brussels or when you arrived here in Holland at another airport?

A. Repeat that question.

MR ANYAH: Madam President, to be fair to the witness it

10:37:23 may be possible that she did not arrive at Schiphol, so I will rephrase the question:

Q. Madam Witness, have you ever seen a plane take off or land in either Lungi or Brussels airport?

A. Well, because I saw myself in, I entered the plane and we 10:37:44 took off and then we landed.

Q. When someone is at Lungi airport is there anything obstructing their view of the runway that planes land and take off from?

A. Well, I can't tell that. I do not know about that.

10:38:06 Q. When you were at Lungi were you able to look out and see the runway on which planes take off or land on?

A. Except at the time when we came out to board the plane. My attention was not there. My attention was just on my travel. I was not even thinking about all of that. I was not paying 10:38:35 attention to all of that.

Q. When Abu Keita says Memunatu Deen and others monitored Alpha Jets at Roberts International Airfield, do you agree that that in fact did take place?

A. Well, I don't know that.

sign name for that station.
Q. So are you saying that this particular station's name changed?
A. Yes.
12:04:27 Q. And, if you remember, which name was it first and which name did it change to?
A. At first it was Lemon and later it became Mike November 5.
Q. Now earlier in your description of your training you referred to some of the things you were trained in, such as 12:04:58 coding, frequencies, logbook and other aspects of your training. During the time you were in Buedu, were you following along with the protocols that you learned in this prior training?
A. Yes.
Q. Can you describe typically what a day would consist of for 12:05:29 you in your assignment while you were in Buedu at this time?
A. Yes, because I used to monitor all the stations and particularly so Marvel and Planet 1. In the morning I would go to Planet 1 and I would try to get reports from the various stations, and we would go down to the ground to Planet 1 because 12:06:05 at the time Sam Bockarie would be on the ground we operated that radio. Marvel will just be there to monitor, because if we had any messages to be sent we would send them there and if some other messages came from various areas that was where we received them.
12:06:24 Q. Okay. Just to understand your last reference, you said, "Marvel would just be there to monitor. If we had any messages to be sent we would send them there and if some other messages came from various areas that was where we received them." Can you just clarify your answer. You said Marvel and Planet 1 were both in Buedu. Is that correct?

A. Yes, both stations were in Buedu. In the morning Marvel was the ground station, by that I mean the base station for Buedu, and Planet 1 was Sam Bockarie's mobile station. It was 12:07:12 mounted in a vehicle and once Sam Bockarie was on the ground he was the commander. We would always be with him and at any time we received situation reports in the morning from the various stations, at that time the operators at Planet 1 would be there and I and Zedman would be at Marvel to monitor what the situation
12:07:39 report was. We would go to the ground. All of us would go there. We would sit with Sam Bockarie. At times we would take Marvel to a house going towards Foya, it was something like a hut, because we used to get threat from the jet and we used that hut to install the radio. That was where we used to work.
12:08:09 Q. So when you received a threat from the jet, which radio would you take to this hut?
A. During those times when the jets persistently disturbed us we used to get calls from Sunlight from Monrovia at any time the jet wanted to move, because by then the ECOMOG base was in 12:08:39 Liberia and the jets will move from Monrovia and at any time the jet will move from Monrovia he will tell us that the Four-Four-Eight or the iron bird is moving from Monrovia and so we would inform all our stations to be alert.
Q. Okay, but my question to you was when this alert would come 12:09:08 over you said that - actually, I withdraw the question. I realise it's answered. It actually is answered. I apologise. And what's a Four-Four-Eight, Mr Witness?
A. That is the jet, or the iron bird.
Q. Now, you said that also from Buedu you were communicating

Q. Now you earlier said that periodically during the time you were in Buedu at the time after the intervention to December 1999, that Sam Bockarie would regularly bring back ammunition. Is that correct?

13:09:52 A. Yes.

Q. Now in this instance you're saying you recall that the meeting took place - "It was when Sam Bockarie went to Monrovia and came with that ammunition".

A. Yes.

13:10:12 Q. What are you referring to?

A. I have not understood that question.

Q. Let me simplify the question a little bit. You said that, "This meeting, it was when Sam Bockarie went to Monrovia and came with that ammunition". What ammunition?

13:10:42 A. The ammunition that was in the truck that he came with. That was the heaviest ammunition that he had come with in all his travels to Monrovia.

Q. And when was this ammunition brought?

A. It was in 1999, but I cannot recall the precise month. But 13:11:13 when that ammunition came, when the commanders came, the attack on Kono took place immediately.

Q. Now are you familiar with an incident in Sierra Leone referred to as the January 6 attack on Freetown?

A. Yes.

13:11:41 Q. Did this ammunition arrive before or after that incident?

A. That ammunition arrived after we had captured Kono, Makeni up to Waterloo. It came before the January 6.

Q. Let me ask you your last answer again, Mr Witness. You said, "That ammunition arrived after we captured Kono, Makeni, up to Waterloo. It came before January 6." When do you recall the ammunition arriving in terms of what you earlier said was an attack on Kono that led up to Freetown?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Did the witness actually say the Kono attack led to Freetown?

13:12:39

MR SANTORA: Not in this particular answer but earlier back on the record he did say, in referring to this - referring to the meeting, that there was an attack on Kono that led to Freetown. I can look for the reference if --

13:12:57

PRESIDING JUDGE: If you assure me it's there then I will accept it, Mr Santora. Please proceed.

MR SANTORA: Thank you:

Q. Now I'm going to ask you the question again, Mr Witness. This ammunition, this large shipment, did it arrive - when did it arrive in terms of what you've earlier described as an attack on Kono that led up to Freetown?

13:13:16

A. The ammunition arrived, it was that ammunition that we used to attack Kono. It was that ammunition that we used to attack Kono, Makeni, up to Lunsar, that ammunition. Even before we thought about January 6.

Q. So to clarify, are you saying this ammunition arrived before January 6?

A. Yes.

Q. Now taking you back now, first of all, what did you observe in terms of this ammunition arriving?

13:14:11

A. When the ammunition arrived we were happy on the ground because we knew that the threat from the enemy was over, so Sam Bockarie gave a message for us to send to call the commanders and Issa, especially those who were on the defensive, so that they can come and sit together and plan for the attack. So they came and held a meeting behind Issa Sesay's house.

But I was not present at that meeting. It was Zedman who attended that meeting. After the meeting when we came back he explained to me that they had held the meeting and that they were to attack Kono. Morris Kallon was to use a bypass to cut off a supply line between Kono and Makeni so that Issa, Rambo, Banya and the other commanders would hit on Kono. He said that was the plan. And the next morning they were to take off - they were to take off to go.

13:14:59
13:15:28

Q. Now you said you yourself did not attend this meeting?

A. Not at all.

Q. Do you know who did attend the meeting?

A. I said Zedman attended. Zedman attended. He attended the meeting. He was one of the operators. He gave me this information.

13:15:49

Q. Do you know anyone else that attended the meeting?

A. Yes, CO Issa came, Morris Kallon came, Amara Peleto came and they had come for that meeting.

MR SANTORA: Your Honours, just as a point of clarification, because I did misspeak on the record and I just looked back at the reference, the actual phrasing that the witness used with regards to that meeting and the ammunition was that "we used to attack Kono up to Freetown". The word "led" was not there and I apologise for that and I apologise, counsel:

13:16:15
13:16:35

Q. Who was Amara Peleto?

A. Amara Peleto was one of the front line commanders and also a bodyguard to Issa. Later he became the mining commander, the diamond mining commander.

along with Jungle and others.

Q. I should rephrase it. Did anybody you recall who left with Sam Bockarie, who left Buedu for Liberia - do you remember anybody else - anybody - if anyone left with him?

13:20:23 A. Yes, when he was going he went with the operators. He went with this boy, Pascal. CO Lion who was with him too went and his bodyguards, Foday - he did not go alone.

Q. Now you've mentioned the name Abu Keita. Who is he?

13:21:09 A. Abu Keita, from the information we got, he was a ULIMO general in Liberia. Later he joined the NPFL. So when this operation that they were talking about, this Guinea operation, commenced, they were all there. So Abu Keita, Sheku, Sidibay, the three of them were in their group when they came.

Q. Who is Sidibay?

13:21:41 A. Sidibay was a Guinean national. He used to speak Mandingo.

Q. Now you yourself - you said you did not attend this meeting you've referred to behind Issa Sesay's house. Is that correct?

A. Yes, I was not there.

Q. Why not?

13:22:14 A. I was on duty. I was monitoring the radio.

Q. After this meeting did anything happen to you?

A. After that meeting, after they had organised all the ammunition and everybody had gone and they've attacked Kono, Makeni, Lunsar and other areas, at one time - at one night Sam

13:22:50 Bockarie took the radio up at MP because I was in a vehicle - it was in a vehicle and they were communicating from there. I had come from one of my friends and I passed by, but at that time one of his bodyguards whom he had made an operator, Pascal, it was Pascal who was on duty for the whole day till that night. continue to describe what you observed in terms of the communications between the radio room in Buedu and the men in Freetown?

A. Yes. Every day communication went on up till night. When the enemies suppression had become really intense, that is, the enemies had cut off our supply lines from our men who were in Freetown, they cut off the supply lines in Waterloo, Rambo who was sent at that time could not go through. The supply lines had already been cut off by the enemies and Gullit was sending the complaint to Sam Bockarie and he in turn told him to move with the prisoners who had been released from Pademba Road, that is JS Momoh and others, and he said when we would be going with them he should do so at night because of the jet. And the following day there was communication again between him and Sam Bockarie and he said they could not withstand the tension any more and they had to withdraw, so Sam Bockarie told him that if they were to leave the town they should make the area fearful, they should be destroying so anybody who would go there thereafter would know that there had been fighting in that area and Gullit replied that as long as he had told them to pull out he would go according to his instruction and that very night they left Freetown and passed through Tombo where they were received by Rambo at the crossing point.

Q. Now you said that, "Sam Bockarie told him that if they were to leave the town they should make the area fearful." What do you understand that to mean?

A. From my understanding that meant the destruction. To make an area fearful during the wartime, we meant to destroy completely and leave the place.

the entire movement.

Q. Now you also said - you were speaking of a conversation between Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten during the time of the Freetown invasion. First of all, can you just describe generally who, if anyone, was Sam Bockarie in communication with during the time of the Freetown invasion?

10:03:46

A. Sam Bockarie communicated with Benjamin Yeaten and he used to communicate as well with Charles Taylor, but for the communication with Charles Taylor that one he used the satellite phone. And the capture of Freetown, that was not even a hidden thing that he would go to a corner and discuss like he used to do, that one he did in an open place when he was trying to inform Charles Taylor that our men were in Freetown. He did that in the open because the RUF was happy, that was a joy to the RUF that they had entered Freetown.

10:04:12

Q. Let's start, first of all, what did you observe in terms of communications between Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten during the time of the Freetown invasion?

A. There had been communication between them for a long time. It was - let me say it was a sisterly or brotherly operation that we had. So whatever good or bad information that we had from any of the ends we should share that with each other.

10:05:08

Q. Before you continue, I'm specifically asking you in terms of at the time of the Freetown invasion what was the state of communication - what did you observe in terms of communication between Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten?

10:05:36

A. What I observed, it's just like for example when you and your subordinates would be doing something you would be giving him instructions or orders and that was the way I observed. Like were you referring to when you said "you"?

A. Benjamin Yeaten was the "you" and the subordinate was Sam Bockarie.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Santora, another area I think you might clarify is when the witness said that one of the communications he noticed was the satellite phone conversation. I would like to know the basis of his knowledge of this.

MR SANTORA: I was going right to that area. I was starting out with the radio communications, but I will go right to that right now actually:

Q. Mr Witness, you also - when I asked you if Sam Bockarie was in communication with anyone outside of Sierra Leone you've discussed some conversations with Benjamin Yeaten and you also said that Sam Bockarie was in communication on a satellite phone with Charles Taylor. Before you explain that, first of all, how do you know that?

A. That was not any hidden thing, particularly with regards to communication, that was not hidden to me particularly because I was in charge. Once when Sam Bockarie went to Liberia he brought a satellite phone, just like handset that people use, that security guards use. That was what he communicated with always whenever he wanted to talk to Charles Taylor. When he would want to talk to Charles Taylor he would tell like me or the operator who would be on duty to tell Sunlight because Sunlight was the one who worked at Charles Taylor's radio station, the Mansion Ground. He would say tell Sunlight that I want to talk to Father because we used to call him Father or Pa, so he would say I want to talk to Pa or Father. So Sunlight would tell Charles Taylor that Sam wants to talk to you and he would switch on the phone and call. At that time, Sam Bockarie would be on the standby. It was not any secret. It was not hidden or that the satellite phone was not there. No, he had it. He used to hang it on his pants walking around with it. It was not hidden. And for communications it was - I would either be present or not, but I will know.

Q. Now I'm going to ask you to focus though on the time of the Freetown invasion. Now you've spoken generally about Sam Bockarie using the satellite phone, but I'd like you to be specific. At the time of the Freetown invasion, how do you know he was - Sam Bockarie was in communication with a satellite phone with Charles Taylor?

A. All along communication on the VHF went all other commanders, but the satellite phone communication went on directly to Charles Taylor. The night that the dialogue took place, that was at the MP headquarters in Buedu, the operator who was on duty, Tiger, Sam Bockarie told him to tell Sunlight to tell his Pa that he wanted to talk to him, and that is Charles Taylor, and that very night Tiger passed a message to Sunlight. And where the satellite would receive call radios up at the MP and Sam Bockarie went into the vehicle and they went. That was the Planet 1 and the - we too were at the --

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please pause, Mr Witness. The interpreter needs to clarify and catch up with you. Would you go back to your answer and pick up again where you said, "That was Planet 1 and ...", and then continue from there, please.

THE WITNESS: Sam Bockarie I said he went into his vehicle that was - that was having the mobile radio. We referred to that radio as Planet 1. The base radio, that was Marvel, too was in a vehicle and we went into that vehicle. We and the - myself and the other operators and some bodyguards, we went to the MP. That was where we were that night when he called and this discussion took place.

10:13:43

MR SANTORA:

Q. Okay, Mr Witness, I'm going to ask you to focus specifically on the incident you just described. First of all, were you present when Sam Bockarie made this call?

10:14:00

A. I was present. I said it was up at the MP station, because there is where you - there was the hill and that was where the satellite got coverage.

Q. Now who else was present in this particular instance when Sam Bockarie made this satellite call, if you recall?

10:14:26

A. I was present, Tiger who was on duty was present, Pascal who was with Planet 1, that is Sam Bockarie's station, was there. His bodyguard commander Foday too was there.

Q. Now in terms of when this particular call took place, do you know when it occurred?

10:14:56

MR GRIFFITHS: I hesitate to interrupt my learned friend, your Honours, but the Pascal mentioned at line 14, is that the same Pascal who was in Foya because unless he was beamed over, as on Star Trek, he couldn't be in two places at the same time?

PRESIDING JUDGE: I understood that the Pascal in Foya was corrected to Mortiga and that Pascal was actually in Buedu. I need to go back to give you a reference.

10:15:18

MR SANTORA: Do you want me to look for the reference on that? I also recall the same thing.

MR GRIFFITHS: I'm sure it's my fault. I may have mistaken something.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I have to concede, Mr Griffiths, that this particular identification of this person in Foya was - there was at least twice it was said Pascal and then it was at least twice said Mortiga.

10:15:56

MR GRIFFITHS: I'm sure it's my fault, your Honour.

MR SANTORA:

Q. Mr Witness, now I'm referring to this particular instance where you say that you were present when Sam Bockarie made a satellite phone call. Do you know approximately when this was?

10:16:11

A. The day that the communication occurred between Buedu station and King Perry in Freetown, it was that very night that the communication took place.

Q. Do you know what was discussed in this communication?

A. The one that I heard Sam Bockarie tell Charles Taylor was that our men had entered Freetown, they were advancing and they had even captured State House.

10:16:51

Q. Did you learn anything else about what was discussed?

A. He was just laughing while they were talking. He will say, "Yes, sir. Yes, sir".

10:17:28

Q. Who was laughing?

A. Sam Bockarie. Sam Bockarie.

Q. Now, how do you know he was speaking with Charles Taylor?

A. The communication for - even for them to talk came directly from our station, Buedu. He said he wanted to talk to Charles Taylor and, when the response came, that was why we even went to the MP to talk to Charles Taylor.

10:17:57

Q. Now, were there any other communications during this time that you have information about involving Sam Bockarie and the

A. I spoke to them in two minds. One I spoke to them hesitantly and, two, some areas I actually gave correct information.

Q. Does that mean in some areas you gave them incorrect information?

14:47:33

A. Some areas, yes.

Q. Now when you gave such incorrect information, did you do so deliberately and knowingly?

A. I did not do it deliberately the way you are saying it. I did it for my security.

14:48:06

Q. Whether you did it for your security or whether you did it for any other reason, my question is very simple. Did you know what you were doing in giving them incorrect information and, despite that knowledge, did you deliberately go on and provide them with that incorrect information? That's the simple question.

14:48:28

A. No.

Q. So help us, please. How did it come about that you gave them inaccurate information?

A. There are certain areas that they asked me about and I thought about my security, where I was. I knew - I said, well, this, I wouldn't be safe, my security would be at risk if I spoke on that particular issue.

14:48:51

Q. Let's try my question again and it's very simple. Did you give them incorrect information, yes or no?

14:49:18

A. I said I gave them information, but not all of them that I gave was correct. Some of them were correct and some of them were not correct.

Q. So the answer to my question is, "I did give them some incorrect information". Is that right?

A. Yes.
Q. Now, I am not interested in why you did that. What I am interested in is when you did that did you know what you were 14:50:06 doing?
A. Well, I did not really know.
Q. What caused you to have problems recognising what it was you were doing?
A. Why I didn't understand what I was doing, this was just 14:50:39 something like when somebody comes and you ask him questions and the person responds and that was it.
Q. Let me try once again. As you sat there with those two men and you opened your mouth and spoke, knowing that what you were saying was incorrect, did you do that willingly?
14:51:10 A. I did it, but I was - my mind was juggling in between whether I should do it rightly or not. I was thinking of my security.
Q. I am going to try once again. I understand why you did that. You did it for what you felt was self-preservation, didn't 14:51:38 you?
A. Yes.
Q. And can we just be straight with each other for a moment. Putting it bluntly, you lied to them to help yourself, didn't you?
14:52:03 A. Yes, for my life. Yes.
Q. Thank you. And having lied to them on what you say was that first meeting, did you ever tell any lies to them thereafter?
A. No.

Q. So we can take it then that everything you said to them after that initial meeting was the truth, can we?
A. Yes.
Q. And you are a Muslim, aren't you?
14:52:49 A. Yes.
Q. You appreciate it is wrong to lie, don't you?
A. I would say yes, but there is a condition in the Koran. It says you can tell a lie to free yourself from danger.
Q. Thank you. So you were merely following your faith in 14:53:19 lying to those men to free yourself? Did you hear my question?
A. No, repeat it.
Q. So you were merely following the faith of Islam when you told lies to help yourself?
A. No, I was not following Islam, but I think in difficult 14:54:13 situations, especially things that have to do with human life - because everything that we are doing now, it's because I'm alive. If I was not alive I wouldn't have been here giving evidence.
Q. Now, help me with this: Did you purposefully choose those parts of your account which you would lie about?
14:54:48 A. Pardon?
Q. Did you purposely choose those things you would give inaccurate information about?
A. That area had something to do with my security.
Q. Help us then, please. What were the topics upon which you 14:55:27 gave those investigators inaccurate information in February, you tell us, 2007? What were the areas?
A. It was the Freetown attack.
Q. So you lied to them about the Freetown attack, did you?
A. Yes.

Q. What other things did you lie about?
A. They asked me about the Freetown attack, but I tried to disassociate the RUF from the attack, but actually RUF partook in the attack. It was because of what happened in Freetown and at 14:56:23 that time I was based in Freetown and then the government of the day, the SLPP government, was not taking things easy. So that was the reason.
Q. Did you lie about anything else?
A. That is what I can recall now that was not correct among 14:56:52 the information that I gave to them.
Q. Now, just so that I can understand why you told that lie, you told that lie because you knew that the Freetown attack was a notorious event, didn't you?
A. Yes.
14:57:14 Q. And in effect you wanted to suggest that you had nothing to do with it?
A. Yes.
Q. And so you decided that you would lie to the investigators about it?
14:57:41 A. When they asked me, I did not say the truth about that.
Q. Very well. Was there anything else that you told lies about, anything at all?
A. That was the only one.
Q. So can we take it then that apart from Freetown everything 14:58:07 you told them in that interview in February - everything else is the truth? Can we take that as read?
A. Yes, what I told them was the truth.
Q. Very well. So, apart from Freetown, everything else is the truth, is it?

network. This is what I am trying to express. Where Sam Bockarie's house was and where we had been doing our operation when the radio was there that mobile handset, it did not have any coverage there except if he went up to the hill, there he would be able to get coverage.

12:15:18

Q. Mr Kabbah, not just in Kailahun, in this very building you have black spots where you can't get a mobile phone network, so we totally understand that. And so what Mr Bockarie had to do was he had to go up a hill to get - up by the MP station you said, to get coverage, to get the network, yes?

12:15:43

A. Yes.

Q. And also with those satellite phones you had to use them outside because within a building you didn't get a network?

A. Network in a house at times it would be there. It all depends on the weather.

12:16:07

Q. But for the most --

A. Certain - certain areas like today I would come here and I would go and stand at this place I would not be able to get coverage. Tomorrow I would come to the same place and unexpectedly there would be coverage. So coverage is not something that is stagnant. It's not something that is stagnant.

12:16:20

Q. Sam Bockarie would normally use his satellite phone outside?

A. Yes, he used to use it outside. You see, we would not spend the night together.

12:16:43

Q. Thank you. Now, we are still on this same point that I have been labouring and what I would like you to do is to go, please, now to page 19 in the same document, third paragraph:

"Kabbah never saw or heard a conversation between Charles

Sam Bockarie."

Now, I just want to clarify that a little in light of other things which you have said in the past. Can we go behind divider 1, please. Let's look at the fourth paragraph in that page together:

15:24:47

"Kabbah does recall seeing a radio message from Benjamin Yeaten recorded in the logbook that Johnny Paul Koroma should be taken to safety in Kangama, in Kailahun District. Kabbah says that Sam Bockarie did not 'take orders' from Benjamin Yeaten because Bockarie would have seen Benjamin Yeaten as 'inferior' in rank."

15:25:13

I'm going to read out the rest of the paragraph before anyone complains, but let me just pause there for a moment. Is that the way that Sam Bockarie thought?

15:25:32

A. Yes.

Q. So in one sense he felt that Yeaten was inferior to him?

A. He did not take him to be his senior. Just like the way he was thinking because he thought that he was a whole - he was a leader in his own right, so Benjamin Yeaten was not senior to him.

Q. And just to put it in context:

"However, a message like the one from Benjamin Yeaten referred to would have been followed by Sam Bockarie [and others] because it 'had to have come from Charles Taylor'. Even though such a message would not refer to Charles Taylor, Kabbah said that it was understood in the RUF that if it came from Benjamin Yeaten it had to have come from Charles Taylor."

15:26:26

And was that the thinking?

A. Yes.

Q. And so so long as Benjamin Yeaten said anything everyone assumed without any evidence that it must have come from Charles Taylor, is that the position?

A. Yes, because they said he was his right-hand man and so 15:27:04 whatever he said he must have discussed that with the Pa.

Q. But there was no evidence to support it. It's just what people assumed, is that the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. Now, I want to ask you about another topic and 15:27:31 it's this. Jungle was a Liberian, wasn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. Now there came a time, did there not, when Jungle and a group of Liberians because of the incursion by ULIMO into Liberia became isolated in Sierra Leone?

15:28:09 A. From 2000 - from 1992 to 2000 - from 1992 to 1997, yes, they hadn't dealings.

Q. Because what had happened was Jungle had become cut off from Liberia and he was effectively thereafter fighting with the RUF, wasn't he?

15:28:42 A. Jungle - Jungle was there with their remnant renegades, not with the RUF. They were together with Fayia. They were in the bush in their own separate jungle. He was with General Fayia, the one who was in charge of Foya at that time.

Q. But he effectively became a part of the RUF, didn't he?

15:29:18 A. Yes, he used to come to us the time Fayia wanted us to go to Monrovia.

Q. The reason I am asking you about this is this. Yesterday when you were giving evidence you said this:

"A. Jungle even at the time of the intervention while our

Q. It was after they had captured a large quantity of arms and ammunition in Kambia and again captured a further quantity in Benguema that they launched the attack on Freetown. That's right, isn't it?

10:13:48

A. You would be correct, because if somebody had ammunition it was meant to fight with it.

Q. I now want to remind you, please, of something you told us - let me find the reference first - on Friday last week. What you told us was this. It's page 16149 of the transcript for the assistance of my learned friends. You told us this:

10:14:12

"The struggle had reached a point when these bits and pieces of ammunition that we were getting from Liberia was dwindling because the area of the struggle had become large and, you know, it is ammunition that fights war. So when Sam Bockarie returned it was at that time that he spoke about that, that he had discussed that with Charles Taylor that we should try and get Kono and when we would have taken Kono we would get ammunition because when we get Kono we will get diamonds and it will help us to get ammunition. That was the discussion, the retaking of Kono so that we can mine and get enough ammunition, because the bits and pieces that he's been giving us used to help us."

10:14:43

10:15:07

And then again at page 151 at line 14 you were asked to clarify "because the bits and pieces that he's been giving us used to help us", and you went on to say that it was from Charles Taylor.

10:15:39

Now let's put to one side for the minute the reference to Bockarie coming back and saying that he'd had a discussion with Charles Taylor about taking Kono, because you will recall that arising from some of the matters that you just discussed when my learned colleague the Defence counsel was asking you questions. Okay?

A. Yes.

16:12:05 Q. Was anyone ever punished for raping you, Mrs Witness?

A. When I was captured?

Q. At any time was anyone punished for raping you?

A. No, nobody was punished.

Q. How old were you when you first were raped?

16:12:29 MR GRIFFITHS: She has told us that on a number of occasions. I don't know why we are revisiting this particularly horrendous situation.

Q. Mrs Witness, on several occasions when you were answering questions from Defence counsel, in regards to the first statement you gave to the Office of the Prosecution in October of 2003 you 16:13:06 said that you were not willing to talk them. Explain what you mean you were not willing?

A. Okay. Why I said I did not want to explain to them was because I had taken it that whatever had happened to me, let it just stay within me, right up to the time maybe I would console 16:13:34 myself and get into something else. And in fact I had a fear that maybe what if I come and talk to these people, what will be the consequence or what would happen as a result of my testimony. Q. How long did you remain with Yeaten in Gbanga?

A. I was with Yeaten. My assignment never changed. I was with Yeaten from Gbanga and later after the SSS training, because he sent me for training - a private training, SSS. It was not 10:47:00 recognised, but it was responsible to safeguard the lives of Mr Taylor and his family. So, when he sent me for this training and when I graduated he assigned me to the mansion in Gbanga. I was assigned to the mansion in Gbanga.
Q. Sir, do you recall to the best of your recollection
10:47:23 approximately what year that was that you were assigned to the Executive Mansion in Gbanga?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Anyah?

MR ANYAH: Well, he didn't say "Executive". He said "The mansion in Gbanga".

10:47:37 PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes.

THE WITNESS: I said Executive Mansion.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, please do take care in not leading the witness.

MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you:

10:47:58 Q. Sir, what exactly was your assignment at the mansion?
A. My assignment at the mansion was that I was assigned and we were running three shifts: in the morning, in the afternoon and in the evening at night. We would go in the morning at 8 o'clock and you would be changed at 4 and another shift will come and 10:48:25 take over by 12. So, we were running three shifts. I was assigned directly to the mansion in Gbanga.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Koumjian, as what?

THE WITNESS: SSS. I said it. I said it was the SSS at that time. It was not recognised when Mr Taylor took over as President, but it was SSS.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Witness, at that time - well, first of all can you tell us what does SSS stand for?

10:49:05 A. Special Security Service. Special Security Service.

Q. Did you have any rank at that time while you were in Gbanga within any force?

A. When I took up that assignment I was an agent in the SSS - an agent. We call it agent in the service. That meant you did 10:49:37 not have a rank.

Q. And tell us what were your duties as an agent in the service there in Gbanga?

A. My duty was that when I reported for work I would meet my commander and he will assign me to either the gate, the fence, 10:50:02 the entrance, to enter the mansion. When guys were coming I would open up. Anybody who was coming to see Mr Taylor I would ask them their mission. That was my responsibility, to give protection.

Q. Did anyone live --

10:50:18 MR ANYAH: Madam President, there was a question posed by learned counsel opposite regarding what year the witness was assigned and we never got an answer to that question. It appears on page 37 at my lines 11 through 14.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Koumjian, I don't think we do have a 10:50:48 year, do we? There was a year mentioned, but in a different context.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Witness, do you recall approximately what year it was that you took up your duties at the mansion in Gbanga?

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Now, Mr Witness, at what - did you ever leave Gbanga and receive an assignment somewhere else?

A. The particular supply that I am talking of, the ammunition that I am talking about, we used to take that and return to duty, so I never left Gbanga to take up assignment anywhere. We only used to take the ammunition along and return.

Q. My question is what was your next assignment after Gbanga? After being based in Gbanga, were you based anywhere else?

A. No, I was never based anywhere else apart from Gbanga. I was with Yeaten and we left and went to Grand Gedeh. This is the Eastern Region where we were fighting LPC at the time. That was where the --

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can he kindly repeat the unit.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the name of the unit, the interpreter asks you to repeat that please.

THE WITNESS: Jungle Fire.

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honour, can he repeat the motto of Jungle Fire. It's not clear.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I am sorry, Mr Interpreter? I can't hear you clearly.

THE INTERPRETER: The motto.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Oh, the motto.

THE INTERPRETER: He said Jungle Fire had a motto.

THE WITNESS: "Men moving, men dropping".

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. What did that mean, "Men moving, men dropping"?

A. It means there is fighting. Anybody who -- night he gave us place to sleep, then we went to bed.

Q. Did General Mosquito ever indicate whether he had any plans for using that ammunition?

A. Yes. He said, "I'm very happy for the coming of this 12:28:18 ammunition because I was under serious attack."

Q. Did he say where this attack was going on, if you recall?

A. Really, I never went to his front line. At any time I went there I stopped at Buedu. I never went to the front line. But I was there when some of his commanders came from the front line 12:28:51 the following day and he was giving them instructions, so they started dividing the ammunition and that was across the Moa River.

Q. How long did you, approximately, did you stay in Buedu?

A. I spent two days in Buedu and I left. I went back to 12:29:20 Monrovia.

Q. Did you ever make any other trip to Sierra Leone or trips?

A. Yes, yes. The second time was with Zigzag Marzah, Jungle Daniel Tamba, Sampson Weah and I. When we drove to Benjamin Yeaten's house, and Yeaten told us to follow him to the warehouse
12:29:54 and we followed him to the warehouse, and that was right at Mr Taylor's house, that is on the left-hand side of the house, that was where they had the warehouse. We went there and Yeaten took a list of those things that we were supposed to carry and he presented it to the G4 section. The commander there was Moses 12:30:19 Duoh, and we also received another supply of ammunition, mortar guns, RPG rockets, LAR, AK rounds and that was Zigzag, Sampson, Jungle and I, we left and we went to Buedu, along with three bodyguards who were on top of the car and one of them was called Enforcer, so we went there.

MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honours, the witness said Moses Duoh. The spelling is D-U-O-H:

Q. Sir, you said this second trip began, you said you went to Benjamin Yeaten's house. Where was Benjamin Yeaten's house?

12:31:11 A. Benjamin Yeaten's house was right at the back of Mr Taylor's house, sloping down the hill. No sooner you slope down the hill you see the house on the right-hand side. It was a storeyed building. That was Benjamin Yeaten's house.

Q. And then you said you went to the warehouse. Can you tell 12:31:34 us where the warehouse was?

A. I said the warehouse was attached right on Mr Taylor's house. That is when you come to the front side of the house, by the left-hand side you will see the warehouse.

Q. I'm going to ask you to repeat it because I thought I heard 12:32:00 the witness say "down" and I didn't hear that interpreted. Sir, can you repeat where was the warehouse? Just slowly describe it.

A. This warehouse is right at Mr Taylor's house, the left-hand side of Mr Taylor's house. When you stand at the front of the house, you watch at the left side, you just walk by the side of 12:32:27 the road, then you go down and you will see the warehouse and it was attached directly on Mr Taylor's house.

Q. When you say you go down, what do you mean?

A. There is a little slopey hill. You just go down there and you see the warehouse.

12:32:57 Q. When Yeaten presented, you said a list of those things that we're supposed to carry, when he presented that to Moses Duoh do you recall any conversation?

A. He presented the list to Moses and he got back into his car and left and we stayed there. We started going through the list so that we received those supplies of ammunition.

Q. How did you travel on that second trip?

MR ANYAH: Madam President, I realise we can ask these questions on cross-examination, but it would be helpful to know the year this took place. For the first trip all we have on the record it's in September of some year that the first trip took place, and the witness said it was when they were fighting at Camp Johnson Road. That's as precise as the timeframe got. Now we are on the second trip and there is no year on the record.

12:33:42

12:34:02

PRESIDING JUDGE: That would be helpful, Mr Koumjian.

MR KOUMJIAN: Thank you:

Q. Sir, how long after you returned from the first trip did you go on the second trip, approximately?

A. When we returned from the first trip it took about a month before I did my second trip. Like, let's say two months before my second trip.

12:34:22

MR ANYAH: Madam President, is it being assumed that the witness doesn't know the year of the second trip and the question now is how long was the difference in time between the first and second trip. Perhaps the witness could be asked if he knows the year for the second trip.

12:34:43

MR KOUMJIAN: Your Honour, counsel is welcome to do that in cross-examination. The witness has indicated, when I asked him originally, he did not know the year of the first trip and he's given the approximate time between the two. He said it was during Mr Taylor's presidency. He has also given us some information about who was the commander of the RUF at the time and I'm satisfied. If counsel wants to ask further questions on his cross-examination that's exactly what cross-examination is

A. They call them the gendarmes.

MS HOLLIS: Your Honours, we would spell that as G-E-N-D-A-R-M-E-S, plural:

Q. You also mentioned Dr Barrie. Who was Dr Barrie?

13:28:08 A. Well, Dr Barrie was a civilian. He was one of those whom we captured at Sierra Rutile, but he was in Monkanji, as a doctor he had the hospital there. But he had more international corridor. That is, he was well known outside. So when we brought them to Zogoda, the Pa made him join Fayah Musa and 13:28:45 others outside for them to represent us outside. So he was a member of the RUF.

MS HOLLIS: Madam President, this could be a good time to break.

PRESIDING JUDGE: That would be convenient, Ms Hollis.

13:29:03 There is about a minute or so to go.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please proceed, Ms Hollis.

MS HOLLIS: Thank you, Madam President:

Q. Mr Witness, before the lunch break you had told the Court that Mike Lamin was arrested. What did you do after Mike Lamin 14:29:36 was arrested?

A. I escaped and I returned to Danané.

Q. How long did you remain in Danané?

A. I was in Danané about a week.

Q. While you were in Danané were you aware of any communications being received in Danané?

A. Yes.

Q. What were you aware of?

A. After I had left Abidjan and had come to Danané, the house where Philip Palmer was at Bellevue One Protocol Yard - the reason why it was referred to as Protocol Yard, according to what I was told by Philip Palmer and others, there was another house nearby, just about 15 yards off the house where Philip Palmer was. There was a man there called Pa Musa Cisse. This Musa Cisse man was the protocol officer for Charles Taylor. So the house where Pa Musa Cisse was in relation to where the RUF base was where Philip Palmer was was a short distance. That's why I said I estimated it to be a 15 yard distance. So this Pa Musa Cisse had a radio man and that radio man, we referred to him as Action Man. He was a Sierra Leonean, this Action Man, but he had left the RUF for a long time and he was then with the NPFL. So Action Man had been with Pa Musa Cisse as a radio operator.

Just when Foday Sankoh and Mike Lamin were arrested when I came to Danané, the following day at night Action Man went to us at the house and he invited us at Musa Cisse's house and he told me that in fact he had had communication with Foday Sankoh. That was two days after - after Foday Sankoh had been arrested in Nigeria. He was then in detention.

He said he had heard information. He said he had had contact with Foday Sankoh and Foday Sankoh had told him to contact Mosquito so that the two of them would be linked up and he would give him some pieces of advice and order. And he told him that he should tell Mosquito to take advice from the other side. And we came. After he had told us this we were there and the following night --

Q. Mr Witness, before you move on to the following night, let me ask you some questions about what you have just told the Court. First of all, Action Man, did you know him by any other name?

14:35:00

A. Well, this Action Man, I did not ask him about any other name of his. I don't know.

Q. And you mentioned Mosquito. Who was Mosquito?

A. Mosquito was a Sierra Leonean. He was Sam Bockarie who was taking care of RUF, whom Foday Sankoh had told to take care of the RUF in Sierra Leone.

14:35:28

Q. And who was it who said to take advice from the other side? Who said that?

A. It was Foday Sankoh.

Q. And who was it who was to take advice from the other side?

14:35:48

A. Mosquito, Sam Bockarie.

Q. Did you understand what was meant by "the other side"?

A. Yes, that is just what I am about to say. The next night Action Man called me, together with CO Brown. We went to the house where Pa Musa Cisse was and we sat there. We were about two yards away from where Action Man was sitting, but it was in the same room. We saw him contact Mosquito and I heard Foday Sankoh's voice and Foday Sankoh asked about Mike Lamin. Action Man replied that he had been arrested. He spoke to Mosquito.

14:36:34

Q. Who spoke to Mosquito?

14:37:33

A. Foday Sankoh. He told mosquito that - he told Mosquito that Mosquito should not take anything from Fayah Musa and others. He said even the detention that he was in, Fayah Musa and others had hands in that, so the only thing that he was telling him was that he should take advice directly from Charles Taylor in Liberia.

Q. Now, who was saying to take advice directly from Charles Taylor in Liberia? Who said that?

14:38:37 A. Foday Sankoh told Mosquito, Sam Bockarie. He said Sam Bockarie should take advice from Charles Taylor in Liberia. He said even before he was arrested in Nigeria, he said he had spoken to Charles Taylor, that is Foday Sankoh, he said he had spoken to Charles Taylor, for his Sierra Leonean fighters who had

14:39:14 been with the NPFL and fought alongside the NPFL. He said, being that Mike Lamin had crossed over with a lot of his fighters into Liberia, he will want those fighters who had been fighting for a long time alongside the NPFL to find ways to be transported back to Sierra Leone to Mosquito to continue the fight and therefore 14:39:58 he should take advice from Charles Taylor. I heard that. And from there we left the room and returned to our house.

Q. Now, Mr Witness, you said that you were there with a person you called CO Brown. Who was CO Brown?

A. Well, that CO Brown was a Liberian. He was a vanguard for 14:40:36 the RUF, but they said he was a Liberian, and I too saw him that he was a Liberian. And he himself, CO Brown, told me that he was born in Gbarnga.

Q. Now, you have told the Court what it was that Foday Sankoh told to Sam Bockarie. Do you recall did Sam Bockarie give any 14:41:05 reply to what Foday Sankoh had said?

A. Exactly. He accepted it and he said he would like to support Foday Sankoh as the leader and until he would see how his detention would end up, but so long as he was still under detention he should only be praying to God for his life and the movement which - that is the RUF which he had left Mosquito in charge of - and the pieces of advice that Pa Sankoh had given to him he, Mosquito, he said he would adhere to them.

Q. Were you aware of any other communications other than these that you have just told the Court about?

A. Those were the two main things that were discussed that I was present.

Q. You said you were in Danané for about a week. How did it happen that you left Danané?

A. Well, we had been in Danané within those few days this protocol, that is Pa Musa Cisse, called CO Brown. According to CO Brown, Pa Musa Cisse gave him money and I saw the money. He said it was Charles Taylor who had sent that money for us, those of us who were in the Ivory Coast after Pa Sankoh had been arrested and those of us who were in Danané, so we could use the money to sustain ourselves. So CO Brown, even before nightfall, on that day he escaped with the money and went to Gbarnga in Liberia and he left us there and went. It was only one lady who was at the house who told us that CO Brown had gone to Gbarnga. That was what she told us. And we too said CO Brown went to Gbarnga without telling us and he has something for us? So while we were there Action Man also told us that the money that had been taken away that Mosquito said that he had told Jungle - CO Jungle - for him to pick you guys up from there to go with you so we will look for ways to go with you to Sierra Leone where he was, Mosquito, and we were happy.

But while we were there we didn't get sufficient food to live on and there wasn't communication, not particularly when we wanted to have communication, not at the times that we wanted it,

Q. Now, you have told the Court that you yourself were mining there. Did you find diamonds?
A. Yes.
Q. What did you do with the diamonds that you found?
15:56:04 A. I used to sell it, because I was not lucky to get a diamond which weighed above five carats, so if I got one carat or two carats, it was for me. I will sell it for myself.
Q. Where would you sell these diamonds?
A. I used to sell some in Tongo, but maybe if it was above one 15:56:44 carat I will travel with it to Kenema.
Q. When you went to Kenema to sell diamonds, did you see anyone while you were in Kenema?
A. Yes.
Q. Who did you see there in Kenema?
15:57:10 A. Eagle. Eagle himself, who was based in Tongo, he used to go to Kenema, I used to see him there. I used to see Manawa there, I used to see Mosquito there because he was in fact based there, so at any time I travelled there I would go to he, Mosquito, where he was residing.
15:57:34 Q. The times that you went to Mosquito in Kenema, do you recall any visitors with Mosquito when you saw him?
A. Well, it was at one time when I went there, this same Colonel Jungle, I met him there. He was sitting together with Mosquito at NIC, where Mosquito was residing in Kenema. And I
15:58:21 also saw Eagle there, I saw Manawa there, together with other soldiers and officers. And like I said, I saw Jungle there. He was sitting there. And when we entered there Manawa and I, I saw them there. All of us sat there and Mosquito told us, he said, "Have you seen this man who has come here?" He said, "It is Charles Taylor who sent him for us to give him some parcels of diamonds." I met them there and I had seen this Jungle before, so from there we stayed there when Mosquito, Colonel Jungle, Captain Eagle, they boarded a vehicle and went towards Tongo. So 15:59:59 that was what he told us.

Q. While you were in Tongo during this time period, to your knowledge was mining going on in any other areas?

A. Yes.

Q. Where?

16:00:20 A. You know that in Sierra Leone we have two diamondiferous towns and one is Tongo and the second is Kono.

Q. What did you know about the mining going on in Kono?

A. Well, the mining went on just as it was going on in Tongo, but they told me that the PLO-2 that we had there, they said 16:01:06 there was a PLO-1 but he was based in Kono.

Q. And did they tell you the name of this person based in Kono?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the name?

16:01:24 A. Gullit.

Q. Who was telling you this?

A. The PLO-2 who was there, the OC secretariat Yamao Kati, all of them had told me that, and even some of my RUF officers like Mosquito himself and even Captain Gweh, you know, most of the RUF 16:02:02 officers.

Q. Tell us again about how long you remained in Tongo?

A. We were in Tongo for roughly one to two months. I cannot give you a clear estimate now anyway, but I was there up to that two months.

that, but I did not directly see where Mosquito was handing over those things, but Mosquito himself used to tell us that I am paying with diamonds or VS [sic] for those things that were coming, money.

12:58:57 Q. Now, you said he said Mosquito was giving diamonds. Who was it who said Mosquito was giving diamonds?

A. He said he was giving them to Jungle. Jungle always said that he took those diamonds directly to - for those things to Charles Taylor. I never went with them to Monrovia, but I used 12:59:28 to see what was happening and what they used to tell me.

Q. You have told the Judges that while you were in Baiima you would go often to Buedu to your family. While you were in Baiima did you attend any meetings in Buedu?

A. Yes.

12:59:58 Q. What meetings did you attend?

A. Well, like in the morning all of us would assemble at Mosquito's place because all of us were senior men, officers, and he was head of all of us as commander. So at one time, it was at the end of 1998 and we were going towards 1999 then, he told us

13:00:54 he himself was tired of staying like that in Buedu. He said he was fed up with all of us staying in Kailahun District. He said he's got something at hand. He said he was trying to go to Liberia to Charles Taylor where he will get our needs. When he comes back he said we will try to do what really he wanted to do,

13:01:40 he Mosquito. He was going to seek advice from Charles Taylor in Liberia. Then from there and the meeting was over, I went to my assignment and then he went. He, Mosquito, we heard that he went to Liberia. That was - it was a long time. We were now in 1999 because it took some time before he went. I cannot just estimate continue destroying.

Q. Now, Mr Witness, you have been talking about what Mosquito said and I'm looking at, on my font, page 77 starting with line 11. "So he said they were contact him and he will demand". So, 13:16:08 first of all, who is saying this? "They will contact him and he will demand", who is saying this?

A. That is Mosquito.

Q. And who is the "they" that will contact --

A. He said the international committee would want to have 13:16:25 talks with him because he was leading the RUF and he said whenever the international committee contacts him, he said the only thing that he will tell them was to free Foday Sankoh before we go to peace. He said without Foday Sankoh there will be no peace. That was Mosquito saying that.

13:16:55 Q. Mr Witness, were you to have a role in this plan that Mosquito gave you?

A. Yes.

Q. And what was your role to be?

A. I was to go back to Baiima together with the brigade 13:17:24 commander CO Denis whom we called Monkey Brown. We were to Baiima to Eagle and Manawai. The command was to attack Bunumbu, Segbwema, Daru, Tondola, Bendu Junction, Jomukafebu, Kumbema all the way on to Kenema. So that was my own part of the operation.

Q. Now, this second meeting, how many people attended this 13:18:23 second meeting?

A. We were up to 35 to 40, around that, the officers.

Q. Now, Mr Witness, you said that the areas that you were to attack and including Bunumbu, Segbwema, Daru, Tondola, Bendu Junction, Kumbema, all the way to Kenema. You named one other location. Do you remember what that location was that you were to attack? It was something like Jomukafebu. Can you tell us that location again?

A. Yes, I said Tondola --

13:19:16 Q. Just the one location, sir. Something that sounded like Jomukafebu. What was this location?

A. Yes. That's the same, Jomukafebu.

MS HOLLIS: Your Honours, our phonetic spelling for that would be J-O-M-U-K-A-F-E-B-U:

13:19:39 Q. So after this second meeting then what did you do?

A. Mosquito came back to Buedu. At that time the reinforcement that he had come with from Liberia were at the MP in Buedu. Then we, the commanders who were to go with this mission, like Manawai, Eagle, CO Denis and myself, then he 13:20:28 provided Abu Keita and his reinforcement to us for us to attack the various areas that he had mentioned. From there he gave us arms, ammunition, medicines. That was Mosquito who gave us all these things.

Then he told CO Denis as the brigade commander for us to 13:21:02 move ahead on this mission. I saw him give arms, ammunition, medicines to Issa, Issa Sesay. He said Issa Sesay should go across to Kono together with Akim and others and Soriba, who were AFRC soldiers, to join Superman, CO Rambo for them to attack Kono and from there Akim should go and attack Tongo while Issa and 13:21:49 Morris Kallon would advance all the way on to Makeni.

Q. Mr Witness, you have mentioned someone CO Denis. You said he was a brigade commander. What brigade was he the commander of?

A. Well, he was the 1st Brigade commander in Kailahun.

Q. And I believe you said CO Denis, Monkey Brown. Is that the same person or different people?
A. It's the same person.
Q. And what was the nationality of CO Denis?
13:22:42 A. He's a Sierra Leonean.
Q. And what group did he belong to?
A. The RUF group.
Q. Now, Mr Witness, after you had received the reinforcements and you had received the arms and ammunition and other supplies 13:22:56 did you move to carry out your mission?
A. Yes.
Q. Were you able to capture Kenema?
A. We were unable to capture Kenema.
Q. When you carried out your mission did you follow Mosquito's
13:23:19 instructions about spare no soul?
A. Yes.
Q. What did you do?
A. We killed civilians, we burnt down villages that we had captured.
13:23:44 Q. Now, when you were unable to capture Kenema where did you go?
A. I came back to Segbwema because that was where we had captured.
Q. And how long did you remain in Segbwema?
13:24:10 A. I was in Segbwema until the Lomé Peace Accord.
Q. While you were in Segbwema did you receive information about any events in Freetown?
A. Yes.
Q. What information did you receive?

For the accused Charles Ghankay Taylor:	Mr Courtenay Griffiths QC Mr Terry Munyard Ms Amina Graham

A. I was with him for communication purposes, to coordinate communication.
Q. Who were you in communication with?
A. I communicated with stations in the various front lines, like when Issa and others were towards the Freetown area together with Superman, Johnny Paul and the others who were retreating. And I was communicating also with stations in Monrovia. I communicated with a particular station, to be specific, in Monrovia.
10:56:52 Q. What station was that?
A. The station was Base 1. Base 1, which was operated - actually there were two operators who were there, but the one that I can recall now was operator Sunlight. Sunlight. Sunlight was Benjamin Yeaten's radio operator.
10:57:27 Q. Now, the time we were discussing was this period when the day after you stayed in Pendembu and you were travelling with Sam Bockarie to several locations, including Daru, Kuiva. Now, I am asking you specifically about this time period. Who were you in communication with?
10:57:55 A. I was in communication with the entire RUF radio stations, including a radio station in Liberia, Monrovia.
Q. This communication you are referring to with this station called Base 1, was this the first time you were in communication with this station, if you can recall?
10:58:30 A. Well, yes, I can recall that Base 1 - it was from Pendembu. It was from Pendembu that I started communicating with Base 1. From Pendembu.
Q. And what was the content of this communication, the communication between you and Base 1?

A. When we arrived in Monrovia, we were - Benjamin distributed us to - Jungle took some people and he lodged them at a particular place, and I was at Benjamin's house with Sunlight and Mosquito. Mosquito too went to a different place. That was 11:17:09 where he slept. And early in the morning he came.
Q. I was going to ask, because I am not sure I understand your answer exactly. You said that you arrived in Monrovia and Benjamin "distributed us. Jungle took some people and he lodged them at a particular place." Who are you referring to? Which 11:17:31 people did Jungle lodge at a particular place?
A. The securities that Mosquito went with.
Q. Later you said, "I was at Benjamin's house with Sunlight and Mosquito - Mosquito too went to a different place". What do you mean? Was Mosquito with you or not?
11:17:50 A. Well, Mosquito was just with us during the day, because when we arrived at that night we arrived late in the night, and so we needed some rest and so everybody went to where he was to sleep. So early in the morning Mosquito came and met with Benjamin Yeaten and I gave him updates from the various front
11:18:13 lines and Mosquito, Benjamin and one Rashid, they went out and they left me at Benjamin's house that morning. Rashid, Mosquito and Sellay - Sellay. Rashid, Mosquito, Sellay and Benjamin Yeaten. There were four who went out that morning and they left me at Benjamin's house.
11:18:48 Q. Now you said you gave Sam Bockarie an update from the front lines - various front lines. Is that correct?
A. Yes.
Q. How were you able to do that?
A. Well, that was the purpose why I travelled with Mosquito to monitor the front lines and give him updates. When I arrived that very night I contacted them and in the morning - very early in the morning - I went to the radio room, that is Base 1. I even used the Base 1 radio to contact that morning, and I 11:19:28 contacted the various front lines to get updates. Then I fed Mosquito with the information.

Q. Who did you contact on the front lines?

A. Almost all the front lines. I contacted Issa's station, I contacted the various stations, Superman and others, I contacted 11:19:58 Eagle - I contacted Eagle's station. There were other stations that I contacted. I contacted many stations and I collected information from the various front lines.

Q. Do you remember what information you passed on to Sam Bockarie? Do you remember what was the content of that?

11:20:30 A. Well, at that time Issa and others were retreating from Freetown, that is Issa himself and others, Johnny Paul, Superman and others, they were on their way from Freetown. They were on their way from Freetown while retreating and in the defensive areas I asked Eagle and others and they said they had no problems 11:21:00 with the various defensive positions that particular morning.

Q. Now you said that you --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Santora, Issa is Issa who?

MR SANTORA:

Q. Who do you mean when you say Issa, Mr Witness?

11:21:14 A. Issa Sesay, aka Survivor, or Senior Solar System.

Q. What was his position at this time?

A. At that time Issa was - he was battle group commander supposedly, but battle group.

Q. Now, you said you went to Benjamin Yeaten's house. Where exactly was this house?

A. It was one area in Monrovia called Congo Town. That is at the back - that is behind Mr Taylor's place where Mr Taylor was. They referred to the place as White Flower. That was where BY 11:22:24 was.
Q. Which place did you refer to --
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr --
THE WITNESS: Mr Taylor - Mr Taylor's residence.
MR SANTORA:
11:22:36 Q. Mr Witness, will you please look at the judges when you give your responses, okay?
A. Mr Taylor's residence.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Who is BY?
THE WITNESS: Well, it is Benjamin Yeaten that I am 11:22:57 referring to, please.
MR SANTORA:
Q. So you said that when you got to the house then that - well, first of all, you also have referred to a location that you contacted the front lines from Base 1. Where was Base 1 located?
11:23:19 A. Base 1 was at Benjamin's house. It was at Benjamin's house that Base 1 was. It was a radio station that was called Base 1.
Q. And can you describe this radio station. Well, when you saw it, was this the first time you had seen it?
A. That was the first time. It was a VHF radio set. It was 11:23:50 in one of the rooms at Benjamin Yeaten's back yard. In Benjamin's compound, that was where it was. There was a radio set with stationery and the radio set was a Yaesu radio set.
Q. Now you said that Sam Bockarie, Jungle, Rashid and Benjamin Yeaten went off somewhere that day and you remained. Is that correct?

A. Yes.
Q. So when you say you remained, you remained where?
A. I remained in the radio room at Benjamin's house.
11:24:42 Q. Do you know where those four individuals went?
A. Well, they told me that they were going to meet with the Papay directly. Master told me that - I mean Mosquito. He told me that they were going to see the President. At that time it was Mr Taylor.
11:25:05 Q. Now you yourself, you have also - who was in the radio room? Who was in Base 1? Who was there besides yourself?
A. That morning - that particular morning - I was in the radio room with Sunlight. I was in the radio room with Sunlight that particular morning.
11:25:35 Q. Was this the first time you met Sunlight?
A. Yes, yes.
Q. Do you know his real name?
A. No.
Q. So you said that Sam Bockarie and the others left. How 11:25:51 long were they gone for?
A. They were out for almost the rest of the day. It was around 7 - 6 going to 7 that Mosquito and others returned to the house at Benjamin Yeaten's.
Q. What happened after they returned?
11:26:23 A. From there Mosquito told me to pack up and that we were to return to Sierra Leone.
Q. And so go ahead. Continue.
A. From there Mosquito told me to pack up my things and we were to return to Sierra Leone, so after I had completed packing

A. It was Mosquito who directly told me.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Santora, the witness was about to tell us which year this December was and he didn't finish.

MR SANTORA: I apologise:

10:03:05 Q. Again just to - clarify the time frame again?

A. 1998.

Q. Now go ahead and I won't intervene. Just go ahead and sequentially say what happened. So you arrived in Monrovia and what happened then? Where specifically did you arrive to?

10:03:37 A. When we got to Monrovia I was at Benjamin's place throughout the trip waiting for Mosquito. I waited on him in Monrovia and he went and returned. I was in Monrovia at Benjamin's house using Base 1 to collect information from the front lines, because I was coordinating with the front line all

10:04:10 of the times, and Mosquito used to call on the phone, on the telephone line, to get information from me directly pertaining to what was going on at the front line and that was the reason why Mosquito travelled with me to go to Monrovia; so he would be getting information.

10:04:39 Q. Where was Mosquito calling you on the phone from, do you know?

A. From --

MR MUNYARD: I may be wrong but I'm not sure that he said Mosquito was calling him. He said Mosquito used to call on the 10:04:55 phone, on the telephone line. Yes, he did say to get information from me. I'm sorry, I've missed it.

MR SANTORA: It's okay:

Q. Do you know where Mosquito was calling you from?

A. Yes. Mosquito was calling me from Burkina Faso.

Q. And how do you know that?
A. He told me. When he arrived, that is Mosquito, he called on the telephone and he spoke with Sunlight and Sunlight called me and I spoke to him directly. He said he had reached his 10:05:40 destination. And even before he left he had told me that they were going to Burkina.
Q. Now, I just want to clarify again what exactly - how did it happen that the course changed?
A. Well, that one is for those in the higher echelons because 10:06:04 I don't know exactly why the course was diverted.
Q. So when you first arrived in Monrovia where did Sam Bockarie go, when you first arrived?
A. When we arrived in Monrovia I was at Benjamin's and Sam Bockarie and Benjamin used to go out. They would go out for the 10:06:32 whole day and sometimes when he would return he would tell me that they met with Papay briefly and sometimes - when we were in Monrovia even before he would go out he will not come back to Benjamin for the whole day at times, except the following morning, because we spent up to 72 hours in Monrovia before Sam
10:07:01 Bockarie took off for Ouagadougou.
Q. When you say we spent up to 72 hours, who spent up to 72 hours in Monrovia before taking off to Ouagadougou?
A. Myself, Rashid - myself, Rashid, Shabado and some of Mosquito's bodyguards with whom he travelled.
10:07:36 Q. Who specifically actually went on the trip with Sam Bockarie, do you know?
A. Well, from the RUF side I recall late Pa Rogers and Eddie Kanneh. They were the ones who travelled with Sam Bockarie.
JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Is that to Ouagadougou or to Monrovia initially? Travelled to where?

MR SANTORA:

Q. I'm asking you about the trip that Sam Bockarie took to Ouagadougou. Is that what you're referring to - well, go ahead and say the people that you know travelled to Ouagadougou.

A. The people who went with Sam Bockarie to Ouagadougou were the late SYB Rogers and Eddie Kanneh.

Q. And anyone else?

A. Those are the two I know of from the RUF. If any other person was there I don't know about that person.

Q. And how long were they gone for?

A. They spent up to a week. They spent up to a week in Ouagadougou.

Q. And during that week where did you stay?

A. I stayed in Monrovia at Benjamin Yeaten's house.

Q. And you said that you were receiving calls on the phone from Sam Bockarie during the course while he was on this trip to Ouagadougou. How often was that happening?

A. He called me about three times from Ouagadougou. About three times.

Q. And were there any other discussions aside from what you've already said about reporting the situation?

A. Well, during his stay in Ouagadougou, is that what you mean? During his stay in Ouagadougou most of the discussions we had was for me to give him updates from the front lines. If there was any problem I should tell him where there was that problem or where there was no problem. That was the topic of discussion.

Q. How were you getting information to send to Sam Bockarie about the front lines at this time?

A. I communicated on the RUF radio net every day. Every day I communicated on the RUF radio net. I followed the various activities in the front lines.
10:10:37 Q. Now, you said they were gone approximately a week. What happened when they returned? Describe what happened.
A. Well I stayed at Benjamin's house right up to the time Mosquito and others returned and, when they returned, he returned at night. On that very night I did not see him and the following 10:11:16 day he came to Benjamin's house in the evening. He was sitting in the studio for a short time, that is at Base 1, to get information from me, and he called Issa and the two of them spoke and Mosquito gave me instruction to send a message to the front line to some of the commanders to come and meet him in Buedu - to 10:11:52 come and meet him, Mosquito, in Buedu. From there, that very evening we took off together with Mosquito. All of us who had come with Mosquito took off again to go back to Buedu.
Q. Okay, before you go on, before you actually left, when the group returned from Ouagadougou who was in the group, do you 10:12:25 recall?
A. Well at Benjamin's house, where they met me, Mosquito was in a group with Benjamin, Eddie, General Ibrahim.
Q. Who is General Ibrahim?
A. General Ibrahim, I knew him to be a Gambian who used to 10:13:12 help Foday Sankoh coordinate the RUF affairs outside of Sierra Leone since 1996 during the Abidjan accord - even before the Abidjan accord.
Q. Do you know why he was present at this particular moment when the group returned from Ouagadougou?

saw two trucks, two big trucks, that is at the outskirts of Monrovia, that was loaded with ammunition of different types and all of us --

Q. Before you continue, who was present with you when you left Benjamin Yeaten's house in the two vehicles?

10:19:00

A. When we were moving I was there, Sam was there, Rashid was there, Zigzag Marzah was there, Jungle was there and some of Sam Bockarie's securities, all of us who had come with Sam. Like for the securities, we met them on the way with the ammunition. They were ahead.

10:19:33

Q. Who was ahead? Who did you meet on the way?

A. We met Sam Bockarie's securities, together with Jungle, on the way. That is on the outskirts of Monrovia to go out of Monrovia. That was where we met me.

10:19:55

Q. You also made a reference to Zigzag Marzah. Did you meet him, or did he leave with you from Benjamin Yeaten's house? Which one?

A. Zigzag was not with us at Benjamin's house, but it was all of us that moved together where they were waiting for us with the ammunition and so we moved together. Zigzag, Jungle and others were with the ammunition and Sam Bockarie's securities, those of whom he had travelled with.

10:20:19

Q. Just so we don't lose track, where was Pa Rogers at this time?

A. Pa Rogers met us at Benjamin's house before all of us took off. He met us at Benjamin's house before all of us could take off.

10:20:37

Q. And you said you met these two trucks on the outskirts of Monrovia. Can you be a little bit more specific? Do you know where more specifically?

A. Well, I did not see where they were. I just saw them and --
THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, can the witness repeat this.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, the interpreter is not able to keep up with you. Please speak slowly and just pick up where you said, "I saw them". Continue from there.
THE WITNESS: Myself, Sam Bockarie and others met the trucks while we were going on the road. That is at the outskirts of Monrovia towards Kakata. Then while we were going, while we were in the vehicle, Sam and others were discussing, and even before that at the time we were moving that was the time Sam Bockarie told me that the trucks were loaded at RIA. That is before we took off from Benjamin's house. I asked him, I said, "Master, where is the material that you went for?", and he said, "They are on the way. They were loaded from the airport". That was what he explained to me, that the trucks were loaded at the Roberts International Airfield, and we continued our journey.
MR SANTORA:
Q. Now you said you met them with these two trucks, so is it correct that you had four vehicles total? Is that correct? Two vehicles that you left with and then two trucks?
A. Yes.
Q. Now you went then - where did you go after you met up with the trucks?
A. It was in Buedu. We went to Buedu directly.
Q. Did Sam Bockarie discuss anything else? Well, first of all where exactly were you within this convoy? Who were you with?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Have we actually determined that they went in convoy? For all I know, their jeep could have passed the trucks.

MR SANTORA: Okay:

10:23:33 Q. How did you proceed from - from the moment when you met up with the trucks, how did you proceed to Buedu?

A. I have said it. I said all of us went together. We went in a convoy. All of us went together.

Q. Where were you within this convoy?

10:23:51 A. Initially from the house at Benjamin Yeaten's I was in the same vehicle as Sam Bockarie, but when we got to where the trucks were I transferred into one of the other vehicles and Zigzag Marzah transferred to Sam Bockarie and they were all in the same vehicle and we continued the journey.

10:24:26 Q. Now during the course of your journey from Benjamin Yeaten's house to meet the trucks, did Sam Bockarie discuss anything else?

A. You know, I cannot remember everything that we discussed, but one important thing that we discussed in the vehicle was 10:24:50 about the ammunition that he had gone for that all of us were expecting. That is what I asked him about. I said, "Master" - that is Mosquito. That was another name that we referred to him casually, "Master". And he told me - he, Mosquito, told me - that the ammunition was on the way. They had loaded them at the 10:25:12 Roberts International Airport.

Q. Okay. Now, what happened when you arrived back in Buedu?

A. When we arrived in Buedu, the commanders that Mosquito had sent a message for we arrived together with some of them almost at the same time. Issa came - no, Issa came after Mosquito had information, he had information already at hand. Actually there had been some minor problems that had been existing between us and Gullit, that is RUF and the AFRC. That was Sam's concern. That was the only time that he was grumbling. Even before they 12:13:43 entered Freetown and even when he received the message in the morning, that was when Sam was saying that. He said maybe Gullit and others would want to - maybe they would change this time around to cooperate if at all they didn't go there to seize power, they wouldn't want to be greedy and take power on their 12:14:07 own.

And Sam Bockarie assured Gullit that Rambo was very close to him on his way to join him in the city and that Rambo was on his way to join him in the city and at that time late Rambo and others were around the Masiaka area, going towards Freetown.

12:14:38 Q. On that broadcast there was an individual named TAB Yaya, former PLO-2. Do you know who that is?

A. No, I don't know him in person and I don't know much about him.

Q. Now, there is a reference to Pademba Road prisoners. What 12:15:05 do you know about Pademba Road prisoners during the 6 January invasion?

A. After Gullit and others had captured Freetown, it was the following morning that he sent a message and it was King Perry who transmitted the message that they had released many people 12:15:35 from the prisons and that they had released many of the political detainees who were held prisoners, together with some other people. But when they got to Pademba Road they could not see Pa Sankoh, but that they were able to release some other people but they did not see Pa Sankoh. The message was sent to Mosquito.

After Mosquito received the message he told Five-Zero, I mean Benjamin, that the men had entered the city but they could not see the Pa, I mean Pa Sankoh, and that they did not know where Pa Sankoh had been taken to. Among the people who were released were like the late ex-President Momoh, Victor Foh and others among other renown Sierra Leone politicians who were in the prisons.

12:16:24

And Mosquito informed Benjamin about the people who had been released and he also informed him that they could not see Pa Sankoh in the prisons and he requested for more ammunition so that they will be able to defend the city. He was asking Benjamin to send ammunition for us.

12:17:00

Q. Now, you said that Gullit sent a message through King Perry to Sam Bockarie - sent to Mosquito - about the prisoners from Pademba Road. Is that correct?

12:17:32

A. Through King Perry. I mean that King Perry was the one who transmitted the message as a radio operator.

Q. Then you said that after Mosquito received the message he told Five-Zero, meaning Benjamin, that the men had entered the city but they couldn't see the Pa, meaning Pa Sankoh. About how much time transpired between the time Bockarie received the message from Gullit through King Perry to the time he contacted Benjamin? How much time transpired between?

12:17:54

A. It was that very morning just when Sam Bockarie got the message, because at that time, while the 6 January operation was going on, we moved a bit from Sam Bockarie's house. We were no longer seated at Sam Bockarie's house where we used to sit, opposite that house. We went down towards Dawa Road. There was a barri, an old barri, where we used to sit because of air raid because there was frequently air raid by the Alpha Jet. The Alpha Jet used to raid Buedu and other areas.

12:18:20

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, did you listen to the question? The question was about time.

12:19:08 MR SANTORA:

Q. Again I will ask you to further describe things as necessary, but just this question here, I am just asking you the time that passed - the time that elapsed from the moment Mosquito received the message from Gullit through King Perry to the time 12:19:26 he contacted Benjamin. You said, "It was that very morning just when Sam Bockarie got the message because at that time" and then you started talking about something else. How much time transpired?

A. It was not up to one hour. It was not up to one hour.

12:19:48 Q. And how in this particular instance did Sam Bockarie make contact with Benjamin?

A. It was through the sat phone.

Q. How do you know that?

A. All of us were sitting together in the barri where we 12:20:10 operated in the radio room.

Q. And you have described what he said - some of the things he had said to Benjamin. How do you know some of the things that he said?

A. He was sitting in the chair that was not far. If you can 12:20:29 allow me I can estimate the size of the barri. It's like from where I am sitting here to the exit at the back of the Prosecution lawyers. That was the size of the barri where he was sitting. The sat phone was - the sat phone was at one edge, one corner of the barri. And we were, that is the radio set was in the other corner of the barri.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Counsel has seen the witness's indication. Mr Munyard, have you seen the witness indicate from where he is sitting to the door behind Mr Koumjian?

12:21:12 MR MUNYARD: I didn't, but I heard him say it so I am quite happy with that.

MR SANTORA: If we can stipulate a distance, that's fine. I just don't know if we have measured this before. I would be happy to stipulate an estimate.

12:21:27 PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, can you estimate the distance you have just referred to?

THE WITNESS: Estimate by what means? What do you mean? I don't think I have any professional means to estimate that besides the approximation that I have made, the visual example 12:21:45 that I have set.

MR SANTORA: It could either stand on the record or we could ask for a stipulation of perhaps 20 metres.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I don't think so.

MR MUNYARD: Can I, who also has no sense of distance - can

12:22:06 I make a suggestion that at some point somebody probably from Court staff using the tape measure just measures the distances between the witness box and various points in the courtroom so that we will have an accurate record for the future of what these distances are and that will save - apart from anything else it

12:22:27 will save the Court staff wandering up and down with the tape measure every time it is done. Then we can use it as a template for the future.

PRESIDING JUDGE: We will implement that, Mr Munyard, but in the meantime --

JUDGE LUSSICK: In the meantime, Mr Santora, for what it's worth I would estimate the distance to be about ten metres, but I would also point out that it's not very helpful evidence of how big that barri was because theoretically it may be ten metres in that direction and it might be 50 metres wide. We just don't know, so really that particular distance from the witness to the door doesn't tell us anything about the size of the barri. It just tells us perhaps the width or the length of the barri.

MR SANTORA:

12:23:20 Q. Can you just describe the barri that you're referring to, describe it in terms of the dimensions?

A. The barri is in a square form, almost the same length and width. The length and the width are almost the same, like the distance I gave to you.

12:23:43 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: If I understood the evidence properly, the witness is estimating the distance between where he was sitting at the radio --

THE WITNESS: I am sitting here.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: -- and where the satellite phone was on 12:23:54 which Bockarie was speaking in order for us to understand how he heard the conversation on the sat phone. That's what he is trying to do, I think.

MR SANTORA:

Q. How far away were you from where Sam Bockarie was using the 12:24:11 satellite phone?

A. I was sitting near the radio and he was using the satellite phone. Like after where the last chair is, at the back of the last chair at the edge of this hall. Like where I am sitting now, that is where I was and he was sitting on the other end like at the back of the last chair at the end of this hall.

Q. You mean the empty chair at the back?
A. Yes, yes, the empty chair at the back. And how I knew also was after he had spoken to Benjamin they spoke for some time.
12:25:01 After some time Benjamin came back to Mosquito and called him on the sat phone and he gave him instructions to make sure that he told Gullit and others to dispatch all those big names that he had mentioned, to call for them to be with him in Buedu at the headquarters, that they should not be at the front line. He said
12:25:29 that was the instructions from Mr Taylor. And Mosquito told the operator in charge - that was one Mohamed Kabbah, I can recall, and on that very day he was the one on duty and he sent the message. I was there when Mohamed Kabbah encoded the message and sent it to Gullit and others for them to send back those people 12:25:56 to the rear for safety.
Q. Mr Witness, before I go on - and this goes with Mr Munyard's suggestion - that dimension will be - at some future moment there will be given a distance to the dimension, but for the record he pointed from his seat to the empty seat in the back 12:26:11 corner of the Prosecution side of the courtroom.
MR MUNYARD: Just to be completely accurate he said, "The back of the chair at the rear of the courtroom".
MR SANTORA:
Q. Mr Witness, just to be - you said that - first of all, how 12:26:32 did you know he was speaking to Benjamin Yeaten? How did you know Mosquito was speaking to Benjamin Yeaten?
A. After he called Benjamin and I was sitting at the other extreme edge of the corner, he asked, "Is this Five-Zero?", and he said, "Yes". He explained to him the development at the front lines and when he was talking to him he used to respond, "Yes, sir". When they were discussing, he would respond to him directly, "Yes, sir. Okay, okay, I will do that". And when Mosquito finished he told the operator directly that he had had instructions from Benjamin from above, that is Charles Taylor through Benjamin, that Benjamin had told him that the Pa had said that they should make sure that those people who had been released from Pademba Road should come to Buedu.

12:27:24

Q. Mr Witness, when you were giving your last answer you said the following. You said, "After some time Benjamin came back to Mosquito and called him on the sat phone and he gave him instructions to make sure that he told Gullit and others to dispatch all those big names that he had mentioned to call for them to be with him in Buedu". I am going to take that down, because you used a lot of words without calling out names there, okay? First of all, starting with, "After some time Benjamin came back to Mosquito and called him", meaning who?

12:27:47

12:28:14

A. And called Benjamin. It was Benjamin who came back on the line, on the telephone line, and called Mosquito. Benjamin called Mosquito back on the sat phone.

12:28:40

Q. Then you said, "He gave him instructions to make sure that he told Gullit and others to dispatch all those big names that he had mentioned". When you say, "He gave him instructions", who are you talking about?

A. It was Benjamin who sent the instruction to Mosquito for Mosquito to call for the people who had been released by Gullit and others from the Pademba Road Prisons to send all of them to Buedu, including ex-President Momoh.

12:29:01

Q. "He told Gullit and others to dispatch all those big names that he had mentioned". What do you mean when you say "all those big names"?

A. Yes, all the big names. You know, like there was one Steve Bio among them. Steve Bio, Osho-Williams - Osho-Williams, Victor Foh. You know, really I cannot recall all of the names now, all of the names of the people who were released from Pademba that were named, but there were about 20 prominent people in Sierra Leone who were among the list.

Q. And then you said, "To call for them to be with him in Buedu and that they should not be at the front line". Who are you referring to when you say "to call for them"?

A. That is the detainees who Gullit and others had released from Pademba.

Q. "To be with him in Buedu". Who do you mean "him"?

A. To be with Mosquito in Buedu.

Q. "That they should not be at the front line". Who is "they"?

A. That the released detainees from Pademba Road should not be at the front line.

Q. Then you said, "He said that was the instructions from Mr Taylor". Who said that?

A. It was Mosquito who said that that was the instruction.

Q. Who did he say that to?

A. It was the operator to whom he was explaining. Mosquito was now explaining to the operator about his conversation with Mr Benjamin Yeaten.

Q. Now then you said that Mohamed Kabbah, who was the operator, sent this message to Gullit. Is that correct?

A. Yes, yes.

Makeni. While they were coming one renowned one, Steve Bio, died on the way from one of the bombs. According to a message, he died on the way from an enemy bomb fragment. Then while they were in Freetown for some time, the exact days of which I cannot 12:34:41 remember, when the AFRC and RUF spent in Freetown when they were flushed out I cannot recall, but during that period ECOMOG pressurised Gullit to flush - Gullit and others to flush them out of the city. While ECOMOG was pressurising Gullit and others to flush them out of the city, they started retreating towards the 12:35:04 east. They started retreating.

I can remember on one occasion when I left the monitoring station I monitored a live conversation between Mosquito and Gullit when Mosquito was giving direct instructions to Gullit for Gullit to - for Gullit to tell the men, I mean the RUF and the 12:35:29 AFRC combatants, to cause a lot of mayhem in the city. That is like to destroy some important government buildings and to tell people to take their hands off the war and to cause real damage whereby the international community - whereby the international community would show more concern about the RUF until they 12:36:04 released Foday Sankoh. He said if it is possible - Mosquito said if it is possible to chop off anybody's arm, he said - no. He said if it is possible to give anybody short sleeves or long sleeves, meaning to amputate anybody, he said that wouldn't be any problem. He said that they should raise alarm. He said 12:36:25 Gullit and others should raise alarm to the level of the international community so that they can come in. Maybe that would force the government to peace talks whereby Foday Sankoh would be released.

Q. Where were you when you heard this communication?

A. I was in the radio room. That is the barri - the court barri - that I had described here where the radio was.
Q. And you said that you don't remember the exact date. Can you approximate during the course of Freetown [sic] when this 12:37:27 was?
A. That is what I have said. I cannot remember the exact date that this incident took place. When that particular dialogue took place, I cannot remember the exact date.
MR MUNYARD: If we are moving on, can I have clarification
12:37:55 about some "he"s in an important passage here? On my font it's page 69. Just after the words "until they released Foday Sankoh", we then have - it's line 3 on page 69 of my font. "He said if it is possible - Mosquito said if it is possible to chop off anybody's arm, he said - no." Who is the "he" who is saying 12:38:28 no?
THE WITNESS: I cannot recall.
MR SANTORA: I was just waiting for Madam President to get the reference there.
PRESIDING JUDGE: I have - on mine, Mr Santora, it's around 12:38:45 page 69.
MR SANTORA: I have the reference too.
PRESIDING JUDGE: You have it.
MR SANTORA: I actually thought you were looking, sorry.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, I did find it and there are a few 12:38:54 "he"s there that are unclear.
MR SANTORA: I had it and now I've lost it:
Q. Mr Witness, you said that - well, you were describing the content of this communication from Sam Bockarie to Gullit during the course of the Freetown operation and you were saying that Sam

Bockarie - you were describing the content and you said in the course of your answer:

"He said if it was possible - Mosquito said if it is possible to chop off anybody's arm, he said - no. He said if it was possible to give anybody short sleeves or long sleeves, meaning to amputate anybody, he said that wouldn't be any problem."

Now, I am going to ask you again that you called out the word "he" several times when you said, "He said if it is possible - Mosquito said if it is possible to chop off anybody's arm"?

12:39:53

A. Yes, it was Mosquito who said that. He said if it was possible. That was why I said no. Why I said no, because I wanted to quote exactly what Mosquito said in that dialogue. He said if it were possible to give them short sleeve or long sleeve, that meant that to chop off the people's arms. I mean, those who were - that was one of the slangs that was well-established in the revolution, short sleeve and long sleeve. That is, to chop off people's hands.

12:40:14

Q. Further then, the next part of your response says is that he said no. Who are you saying when you said he said no?

12:40:40

A. I wanted to quote exactly what Mosquito said. I have repeated that. When I said it I wanted to quote exactly what Mosquito said, because he was speaking on the radio, he was speaking on the radio, and while he was talking on the radio we heard the way we talked to understand each other.

12:41:00

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, who is the "he" that said - who is it?

THE WITNESS: It was Mosquito who said Gullit should give - Gullit and others should give the civilians short sleeves and long sleeves and equally burn down houses including some important government buildings. Like the oil refinery, he passed a direct instruction that if it was possible, if they had the chance, they should set it on fire. That is Gullit and others should set it on fire.

12:41:43

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Witness, nobody has asked you all that. We are just tussling with one sentence, "He said no". As far as I am concerned you were correcting yourself, wanting to quote exactly what I think Mosquito said directly instead of saying, "If it is possible to chop off anybody's arms", you corrected yourself and then you said, "If it was possible to give anybody short sleeves and long sleeves". Is that correct?

12:42:03

THE WITNESS: You are right, my Lordship.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: In other words there should not be a full stop after the words "he said no". It should be, "He said - no. He said if it is possible". There shouldn't be a full stop between the word "no" and "he". I think that is what is confusing everybody.

12:42:33

MR SANTORA: I think that's right and I was initially confused myself. Thank you, Justice Sebutinde:

12:42:50

Q. Now, Mr Witness, you've described communications related to - communications between Sam Bockarie and Gullit and the respective radio operators and you've talked conversations - communications related to the Pademba Road prisoners, communications related to a possible reinforcement and communications now related to orders to - direct instructions to cause - to burn buildings and to also raise the level of awareness of the international community. Do you recall any other communications between Sam Bockarie and Gullit -- there were three trucks, according to all the statements that I had made before. To the best of my memory there were three trucks in my statements.

Q. Yes, there's three trucks of arms and ammunition at some point that later on turn into two or three trucks, but I'm asking you about your evidence; what you've been telling this Court last week. Why do four vehicles, two jeeps and two trucks, suddenly turn into five vehicles in the space of a week?

A. Well, it's not a matter of a week, but before it had been three trucks, that is stated clearly in all my testimonies that you have read here. You yourself have seen that in all my testimonies that you have read here.

Q. Yes, I have. "Three trucks of arms and ammunition" in some of them, but not in all of them. Certainly there's - just bear with me for one moment. Well, I'm going to move on in fact.

Do you remember telling us in the course of your evidence last week about you hearing Sam Bockarie on the phone to Benjamin Yeaten on one occasion when you were sitting in a barri and we had a lot of discussion about distances using this courtroom as a way of assessing the distance you were from Sam Bockarie to Benjamin Yeaten - sorry, you were from where you were sitting to Sam Bockarie where he was on the satellite phone? Do you remember telling us about that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you said to us when you were asked a question:

"Q. How do you know he was speaking to Benjamin Yeaten?

A. After he called Benjamin, and I was sitting at the other extreme edge of the corner, he asked, 'Is this Five-Zero?', and he said 'Yes'."

The "he" there means - the latter "he" meaning Benjamin Yeaten. Are you saying you can actually hear the other person on the end of the satellite phone speaking?

A. I heard Sam Bockarie talking over the satellite phone. That was what I said. I heard him and I saw him.

15:44:48

Q. Are you saying you can hear the person on the other end of the satellite phone speaking into it?

A. No, I did not hear that person.

Q. Right, thank you. So it's not correct to say that when he, Sam Bockarie, asked "Is this Five-Zero?", you heard he, Benjamin Yeaten, say "Yes"?

15:45:10

A. Say again.

Q. It's not correct to say that you could hear Benjamin Yeaten say "Yes"?

A. Well, I recall that I told you that I heard Mosquito asking questions and he asked whether, "Is this Five-Zero?", and I think it was a message that he had received that he was trying to discuss with Five-Zero that we discussed about. He, Sam Bockarie himself, told me what he discussed with Five-Zero.

15:45:33

Q. I don't want --

A. And whilst he was talking to him, anything he said to him I heard him answer to him, "Yes, sir".

Q. It is a short point. I simply wanted to understand from some evidence you gave last week on page 21586 at lines 27 to 29 whether you were claiming you could actually hear the person on the other end of the satellite phone speaking, because the answer you gave was, "After he called Benjamin, and I was sitting at the other extreme edge of the corner, he asked, 'Is this Five-Zero?' and he said 'Yes'." You're now saying, "No, I can't actually hear what the person on the other end of the phone was saying"? That's all I want to establish.

15:45:55

A. Well, you got me wrong. I heard Mosquito ask, "Is this Benjamin?" - I mean, sorry, "Is this Five-Zero?" That is what I'm telling you. I heard that. I heard Sam Bockarie ask. He said, "Is it Five-Zero?" That was what I heard. I did not tell you that I heard Five-Zero talking.

Q. I'm not querying that. I'm querying your evidence that Five-Zero said, "Yes", therefore you could have heard that. That's all.

A. No.

MR SANTORA: Objection. The transcript at the reference that my learned colleague gave does not say that Benjamin Yeaten said "Yes". It's a, "He said 'Yes'", and then later on there's a reference to "he" saying "Yes" and "Yes, sir". So the transcript itself is not - there's no specific instance in the transcript where the witness said that he heard Benjamin Yeaten say "Yes". I'm referring to lines 27 to 29, going on to the next page, and that's the same --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Well, Mr Santora, if you look at page - well, my font page 129, line 4, "He asked, 'Is this Five-Zero?', and he said 'Yes'". Who else could it be, but the person on the other end of the phone who said "Yes"?

MR SANTORA: I'm sorry, I was specifically referring to the - I understand. I was specifically referring to his question that it was said in the transcript specifically that Benjamin Yeaten said "Yes". In my submission, the transcript is very ambiguous as to who said "Yes". It's a "He said", "He said", "He said".

PRESIDING JUDGE: I get the point, but I'm allowing the question on the basis that it's a follow up from the previous answer. Please continue.

MR MUNYARD:

15:48:25 Q. Ambiguous it may be, but commonsense suggests, does it not, Mr Fornie, that when someone says, "'Is this Five-Zero?', and he says, 'Yes'", you're talking about Five-Zero saying "Yes", correct?

A. I did not tell you that it was Five-Zero. I did not tell you that I heard Five-Zero answer. I did not tell you that. I said it was Mosquito who asked. He said, "Is this 50?" It was Mosquito who asked. He said, "Is it 50?", and then they continued talking and whilst they were talking he was answering to him, "Yes, sir. Yes, sir".

15:49:03 Q. Well, you have picked that up from Mr Santora.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Who was answering, "Yes, sir"? Who was answering?

THE WITNESS: It was Mosquito.

MR MUNYARD:

15:49:13 Q. That is later in your answer. That's later in your evidence on the next page, but I'm not going to pursue this. I want to go on to something different, please. Can you remember telling this Court last week that during the Freetown invasion, 6 January '99 onwards, that you monitored:

15:49:39 "... a live conversation between Mosquito and Gullit when Mosquito was giving direct instructions to Gullit for Gullit to tell the men - the RUF and the AFRC combatants - to cause a lot of mayhem in the city, that is like to destroy some important government buildings and to tell people to take their hands off

"Communication/lost wages/transport Assistance to Investigations"? Do you have any recollection of what it was that was involved in that? I make it quite clear that you were interviewed on 26 November 2007.

15:38:58 A. Well, on different occasions I have told you that I gave help to Prosecution. I helped the Prosecution. I gave them map on locations regarding call signs during various years, those things, and I recall that I gave them different other assistance. We drew the Sierra Leone map, I showed them different locations

15:39:26 where radio stations where - where they were, when and at what time within Sierra Leone - and I spent sometimes two days or three days on those things. From there the other time they called me again to go for some verification, so --

15:39:48 presumably wrote down where you were showing them on these occasions when you were showing them where radio stations were and so on? They'd have to make a note of it, wouldn't they, otherwise they might forget because it wasn't them who had identified them, it was you, do you agree?

Q. And what kind of vehicle were those?
15:38:03 A. They were the same vehicles.
Q. Please give me just a second after I finish the question to answer.
A. Okay.
Q. Could you see whether there was anyone inside those 15:38:16 vehicles?
A. Well, inside those vehicles there were young men and young girls. They were shouting, they are going, they are going. So I was trying to go to my house. When all of the vehicles have passed, I went straight to the house.
15:38:40 Q. Okay. When you say that these three vehicles were ECOMOG vehicles, were they automobiles, were they pick-up trucks? How would you describe the vehicle?
A. They were big trucks which the ECOMOG were using before and these were vehicles that for the ECOMOG they will have carried 15:39:04 about 20-30 people. But for our situation they will even carry 90-100 people.
Q. Approximately how full were these vehicles that you saw?
A. They were really full with young men and young girls.
Q. Could you see if any of them were armed?
15:39:28 A. Yes, they were armed, those who were sitting at the back door. Because there were tarpaulin, but those at the back were with guns.
Q. Now after you returned to Makeni did you see any other ECOMOG vehicles besides these three trucks that you've described?

A. Well, after that night there was also an announcement from the People's Army that the people of Makeni should go to Teko and see their might, what they have done to ECOMOG, that a good number of them have been killed. Well people went there and I also went there, but when I looked at the first vehicle and saw the dead bodies packed there I decided to come back home without proceeding. Some of the other friends who came later, they told me there were also other two - why I didn't go so far. I said, "No, I can't bear the sight", and so I came back. They told me there was other two vehicles, but I saw the one loaded with the dead bodies.

Q. Could you identify anything about the bodies that were in the ECOMOG truck?

A. Well from what they, the RUF themselves, announced in Makeni that they were the bodies of the ECOMOG soldiers.

Q. Were the bodies in uniforms?

A. Some of them were in uniforms.

Q. Before Makeni was attacked in December 1998, do you know whether or not ECOMOG or the loyal SLAs had any armoured vehicles?

A. They had. They had many armoured vehicles, because they were going up and down.

Q. Did you see any of those vehicles after you came out of the bush on 28 December?

A. One was burnt very close to the compound of MCA secondary school.

Q. Did you see any other ECOMOG vehicles after you returned to Makeni?

A. A good number of them. A good number of those vehicles vis-a-vis through Sam Bockarie? We suggest that the evidence on the record shows the contrary.

In respect of the Freetown invasion your Honours have already determined as an adjudicated fact in this case that the 10:53:24 RUF troops played little or no role in this invasion. I am referring to the recently issued decision on 23 March this year. Indeed, I should cite the relevant portions of that decision.

One of the facts that were adjudicated is adjudicated fact number 15 which says, "Following heavy assaults from ECOMOG, the 10:54:05 troops were forced to retreat from Freetown. This failure marked the end of the AFRC offensive as the troops were running out of ammunition." We pause there. The troops in Freetown were running out of ammunition.

Another witness says Charles Taylor had sent ammunition to 10:54:26 Sam Bockarie. Your Honours have as an adjudicated fact the troops in Freetown were AFRC. I continue reading adjudicated fact 15:

"While the AFRC managed a controlled retreat engaging ECOMOG and Kamajor troops who were blocking their way, RUF 10:54:48 reinforcements arrived in Waterloo. However, the RUF troops were either unwilling or unable to provide the necessary support to the AFRC troops."

The law requires that Charles Taylor aid and abet a certain specific crime. What is the crime at issue vis-a-vis this 10:55:12 alleged armament and reorganisation of a group of soldiers? The soldiers apparently did not make it into Freetown. At least we submit that the Prosecution has not rebutted the presumption that an adjudicated fact is entitled to under these circumstances, so how can it be said that this allegation amounts to aiding and abetting?

Adjudicated fact number 1 makes the point that, "As the founders of the AFRC belonged to the Sierra Leone Army and therefore had been fighting the RUF since 1991, the coalition between the two factions, following the 1997 coup, was not based on long-standing common interests. Both factions officially declared that they were joining forces to bring peace and political stability to Sierra Leone."

Let's pause there. The coalition between the two factions was not based on long-standing common interests. That signifies that these were two separate armed groups. Other evidence adduced confirms that it was the AFRC who went into Freetown. The adjudicated fact and other evidence confirmed that the RUF troops never made it past Waterloo.

So what is the specific crime that Charles Taylor is said to have aided and abetted in the context of the 6 January invasion of Freetown? It is the case that there are parts of the indictment that suggest that Charles Taylor would equally be responsible for the actions of the AFRC. The problem that the Prosecution has is that the evidence connecting Charles Taylor to the AFRC is extremely limited in this case, very tangential at best.

One witness spoke of a meeting in Liberia - and this is at page 8504 and 8506 - a meeting in Liberia with Johnny Paul Koroma, Daniel Chea, the defence minister for Charles Taylor, 11 other AFRC troops including the witness, where President Taylor said he had mobilised most of the SLAs who had come to Liberia and sent them back as reinforcements with arms, ammunition and food and that he continued to do so until the ceasefire.

MS HOLLIS: Yes, Mr President, we understand that.

unable to reinforce their troops in Freetown.

There is additional evidence about the alliance in the north. TF1-143 testified at pages 8970 to 8985 that in September 1998 he was captured in Koinadugu District. He was 12 years old at the time. Others were captured, including boys and girls. And that after they were captured they were marked by their captors and that the first one who was marked was marked with an "AFRC" on his forehead and "RUF" on his chest and that this witness was marked with an "RUF" on his chest and they were told that now they were captives and they were now members of the group. The witness testified that those that captured him were under SAJ Musa and they were mixed AFRC and RUF and that Superman was also there with the group.

TF1-028 at pages 9205 to 9210 testified about the command structure at Eddie Town in Bombali District, including Colonel Eddie, Five-Five, Gullit and others and also Mohamed, indicating that is an RUF person, Mohamed's third group for Superman and that Superman was sending reinforcements to this group with a good amount of ammunition for the Freetown mission. He says there were more - there were about 100 and more RUF sent as reinforcements and that everyone was happy about this because now they had enough ammunition to go to Freetown.

Now the move on to Freetown, the attack on Freetown, this multi-facetted approach, there is also evidence of the alliance in place, both for the group that moved from the north to Freetown and the group that moved through Kono, Makeni on to the Freetown area.

There is ample evidence that RUF forces were among those who actually entered Freetown, in addition to the RUF who were released from Pademba Road and joined the forces in Freetown. TF1-275 testified at pages 4548 to 4552 about this RUF and AFRC plan for the coordinated attack. He testified he was in the north and after he and his group had received information that 10:22:52 Foday Sankoh was condemned in Freetown that Sam Bockarie gave instructions to Superman to march on Freetown. He told Superman to get ready to go to Makeni and from there to Freetown.

Sam Bockarie also said that he had been in communication with Gullit and Gullit would move on Freetown and Sam Bockarie 10:23:13 had prepared Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon to move on Koidu Town and then on to Makeni.

The witness said that based on these instructions from Sam Bockarie Superman organised troops, went to Makeni and there on instructions of Sam Bockarie attacked Makeni, and he explained 10:23:31 that the group that captured Makeni included Superman's group and another group headed by Boston Flomo, that is Rambo as he was otherwise known, and he said that there were communications between Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon's group in Kono, communications with Superman, there were communications from the 10:23:51 group at Rosos to Superman, the communications were flowing back and forth.

TF1-584 testified at pages 12277 to 12278 that on 7 January 1999 she received a radio message in Lunsar from Sam Bockarie to Superman and RUF Rambo to join the men who had entered Freetown 10:24:17 and captured State House and that they left for Freetown with 200 combatants and ammunition arriving in Hastings on 9 January but then retreated to Yams Farm.

TF1-375 testified at pages 12608 and 12611 that at Waterloo Superman, Issa Sesay, Komba Gbundema and other senior officers distributed the troops and that Colonel Babay and other commanders went to Benguema Barracks while RUF Rambo, and Rambo Red Goat and other commanders successfully cleared Hastings but got stuck at Jui. Issa Sesay then sent an order to RUF Rambo to 10:25:07 send Rambo Red Goat's group to Freetown to meet up with their brothers there while the rest of the group tried to clear the main road. Rambo Red Goat's group, which consisted of about 60 to 65 men from the RUF, the SLA and the Special Task Force successfully crossed into Freetown.

10:25:27 TF1-375 testified at page 12610 that the men in Rambo Red Goat's group were armed from their own commanders so the RUF in the group were armed from Issa Sesay and Superman and again reiterates that this group crossed successfully into Freetown.

TF1-360, an RUF member, testified at pages 3185 to 3186, 10:25:59 3213 and 3221, that he travelled with the group from Rosos - to Rosos from Koinadugu and that in the group were AFRC members, about 60 RUF members and Special Task Force members and that the RUF fighters were divided into the Red Lions, the big umbrella unit of the RUF, and a Cobra battalion. And the witness told you 10:26:24 this was part of the planning for the joint military operation to attack Freetown and that he and his group were part of the group that entered Freetown on 6 January and he worked communications after he entered.

At page 8288 and 8298 TF1-334 told you there were RUF among 10:26:45 those in Freetown and NPFL men as well, which we will discuss in a moment, and he told you of the radio broadcast of FAT Sesay that the AFRC and the RUF had taken over the State House. Prosecution exhibit 262 is that broadcast.

Now, in argument Defence counsel, at page 24080, discussed with you a citation for a witness saying that the witness had testified that none of the senior RUF commanders were involved in the 6 January 1999 invasion of Freetown. If you look at page 2813, you will find that the witness was asked that question, whether any senior RUF commanders were involved in this invasion, but the witness's answer was that "involved" is vague. Involved in what sense? And then the witness clarified that as combatants, as fighters firing, none of the senior RUF commanders entered Freetown.

10:27:56 TF1-516 at pages 6943 and 6947 testified that Sam Bockarie gave instruction and strategy to those in Freetown during this Freetown operation and that when commanders were given ammunition for the operation of Freetown the AFRC and RUF were all mixed up together.

10:28:25 Now, in terms of the SLA's involvement in Freetown, TF1-334 at pages 8503 to 8516 talked about a meeting after Lome, a meeting where former SLA delegation including himself went to talk to Charles Taylor at Charles Taylor's request and that they met with Charles Taylor and Charles Taylor said - now this is 10:29:04 post-Lome - that he wanted to end the division between the RUF and the AFRC. He said he had been assisting the movement and he had mobilised most of the SLA who came to Liberia and sent them to Sam Bockarie in Kailahun so they could assist and reinforce the 6 January 1999 invasion. He said he was assisting both 10:29:23 groups and he said he was assisting them so they can remove the government in Freetown and the focus should be on putting the AFRC and the RUF in the seat of power, not on disputes. So Charles Taylor is telling this witness that he has SLA in Liberia and he is sending them to Sam Bockarie. The alliance is alive and well.

Now, there was a question, and it is a legitimate question, why would Charles Taylor meddle, if you will, at this point? It is post-Lome. Why would he meddle? If we look at the situation post-Lome it is quite easy to understand in the context of the JCE why he would "meddle". Post-Lome there was a general amnesty. The RUF had positions in the government, including Foday Sankoh as the chairman of strategic resources, and the RUF had control of the diamond areas, so Charles Taylor benefited that there be no overt disruption of Lome, although there is indications that we will talk about later that they were covert efforts related to Lome.

Now, Defence Counsel also spoke about the SAJ Musa invasion of Freetown and, of course, that is not correct because SAJ Musa was killed prior to the invasion of Freetown and after SAJ Musa was conveniently killed Gullit took over and it was Gullit who was in command on the ground when those forces entered Freetown and when Gullit was in command he recommenced communications with Sam Bockarie and he followed the instructions of Sam Bockarie during the Freetown invasion. TF1-274 told you that at page 21726 to 21728, 22255.

We also have evidence of the large body of RUF who moved to Freetown to reinforce those who were fighting in Freetown and TF1-567, at page 12910 to 12911 and 12918, talks about that body. Prosecution exhibits 93 and 149 also talk about that body of fighters and the efforts to join up with the fighters in Freetown.

At page 6162 to 6163, TF1-532 told you that Rambo's forces fighting ECOMOG in Hastings - in the Hastings area - that was important because eventually it allowed the men, when they retreated from Freetown, to use the forest to come towards their colleagues at Waterloo and he also told you that during this time the AFRC and the RUF had a cordial relationship. They had an understanding. They were together as one. There were no problems.

10:32:25

In relation to the overall situation between the AFRC and the RUF after the junta was pushed out, Prosecution exhibit D-85 is also of assistance to you. This is a comprehensive report to Foday Sankoh from Major Francis Musa, and at page 00009766 the report indicates that the consultation, coordination and cooperation among senior officers and other ranks brought about the recapture of Joru Jungle, Kono, Makeni, Magburaka, Segbwema, Tongo Field, Western Jungle and Freetown and many other places from the end of 1998 to early 1999, and at page 9767 he told you that about 95 per cent of the SLA brothers, including Akim Turay, Soriba, Dumbuya, Bakarr, Leather Boot and many others are loyal to the movement.

10:32:43

10:33:12

So the RUF and the AFRC, this evidence shows, continued to work together to regain control of the country after the junta were forced out. Both were involved in the movements to Freetown from the various axes were part of the group that entered Freetown, but even if it were not true that RUF were actually among those who entered Freetown, liability would still lie for the crimes committed in Freetown because of the continuing existence of the alliance of the participants in this joint criminal enterprise including AFRC and the RUF.

10:33:38

10:33:57

Now, this plurality also included people who were more directly subordinate to Charles Taylor and it included those from the very beginning. Now, in terms of who was the leader of the NPFL, there is a lot of evidence about that, but perhaps we should look at the evidence of TF1-561 at pages 9804 to 9807, 9814 to 9815.

10:34:43 This witness told you that Charles Taylor, by his own words, made it very clear he was the leader of the NPFL and he talked about first seeing Charles Taylor in Libya, that there was a meeting Charles Taylor introduced himself and said, "I am Charles Taylor. This is my organisation." He said he was the 10:35:03 biggest man in the organisation. He was the only one that they would report to. Nobody else. And the organisation is named the National Patriotic Front of Liberia and he told you no-one would have questioned Charles Taylor's authority because the NPFL was a military organisation and you don't query authority. Everyone 10:35:26 called him chief.

Confidential exhibit P277 at page 14 shows that most of the initial fighters who went to Sierra Leone were Liberians, including hard core Charles Taylor fighters.

And now at page 4806 to 4807 you were also told about 10:35:57 Charles Taylor's initial involvement. That he arrested Sierra Leoneans, gave them over to Foday Sankoh, that he gave NPFL to Foday Sankoh for use in Sierra Leone and to train Sierra Leoneans, that he gave facilities and materials and supplies for training.

10:36:16 P54, the command chart, also shows the involvement of the NPFL early on.

At page 5669 TF1-532 told you that he was given to Foday Sankoh by Charles Taylor not just to go to Sierra Leone to fight, but also to train at Camp Naama.

and foreseeable consequence of it, might be perpetrated by a member of the group or by a person used by the accused or another member of the group.

The accused must willingly take the risk that the crime might occur by joining or continuing to participate in the enterprise. The Trial Chamber can only find that the accused has the requisite intent if this is the only reasonable inference on the evidence.

Planning. Planning implies that one or several persons contemplate designing the commission of a crime at both the preparatory and execution phases. Responsibility is incurred when the level of the accused's participation is substantial, even when the crime is actually committed by another person. The actus reus requires that the accused, alone or together with others, designed the criminal conduct constituting the crimes charged. It is sufficient to demonstrate that the planning was a factor substantially contributing to such criminal conduct.

The mens rea requires that the accused acted with direct intent in relation to his own planning, or with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime would be committed in the execution of that plan. Planning with such awareness has to be regarded as accepting that crime.

Instigating. Instigating means prompting another to commit an offence. The actus reus requires that the accused prompted another person to commit the offence and that the instigation was a factor substantially contributing to the conduct of the other person or persons committing the crime.

The mens rea requires that the accused acted with direct intent, or with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that Africa reports, which are Prosecution exhibits P-263, P-348A and B, P-349A and B, P-350A and B, P-354A and B, P-356A and B, 357A and B and 358A and B, which exhibits were admitted into evidence regarding the crimes committed in Freetown in January 1999, together with the evidence of Witness TF1-561 and TF1-406 who testified that the accused listened regularly to the BBC.

10:14:23

The Trial Chamber is therefore satisfied that the Prosecution has adduced evidence capable of supporting a conviction against the accused on Counts 1 through 11 of the indictment based on his participation in a joint criminal enterprise.

10:14:48

Having so found, the Trial Chamber is not required by Rule 98 to consider whether there is evidence capable of supporting a conviction against the accused on any count based on any other form of criminal responsibility.

10:15:09

The Trial Chamber emphasises that a ruling that there is evidence capable of supporting a conviction on a particular count does not necessarily mean that the Trial Chamber will, at the end of the case, return a conviction on that count. This is so because the standard for determining sufficiency under Rule 98 is not evidence on which a Trial Chamber should convict, but evidence on which it could convict.

10:15:30

Having said that, for the reasons stated the Trial Chamber dismisses the Defence motion in its entirety.

10:16:00

Q. Did you thereafter provide any military assistance to the RUF?

09:45:55 A. None whatsoever.

Q. Were you thereafter aware of atrocities being committed in Sierra Leone?

A. Well, I put it this way: There is no one on this planet that would not have heard through international broadcasts or 09:46:29 probably discussions about what was going on in Sierra Leone. I would be the first to say yes, we did hear of certain actions that were going on in Sierra Leone that we - that were a little strange to us because those things did not occur in Liberia.

Q. What things?

09:46:51 A. Well, we heard that people were getting killed, women were getting raped and different things, and we couldn't understand it. I could not understand it, because these are things that we did not tolerate in Liberia and so for me it was unacceptable. But then again we had no way of verifying whether, you know,

09:47:17 these were true because we did not have anyone in there to tell us because, you know, these days when you see reports on television - I'm seeing on television this morning that I ordered people to cannibalise people in Sierra Leone, and when you begin to look at the different slants in the news, well, you hear them,

So all this stuff here that he is talking about, while it is true but I do not think he is forthcoming and he and I always used to have some tough arguments, so it's not new today. But the fact of the matter is Liberians did go back into Sierra Leone with their arms and don't let's forget we're talking about still this forest region on the border and going into Sierra Leone with guns really at that particular time, because of the conflict, would not have been a big issue. So they did return, yes.

13:16:42

Q. And as far as you're aware, Mr Taylor, did those people who returned receive any training in Sierra Leone?

So anyone coming from across the border here in this section coming all the way including this Guinean part, the Mende Mair people they have lost 12:08:11 the essence of the full language, but the different languages as broken down, you can understand a little bit of what everyone is saying. I couldn't attach a percentage. I would say 20/25. It is sufficient to get by; that is the point I am trying to make.

Q. Right. Now, Mr Taylor, you mentioned earlier the Poro 12:08:37 society. What is that?

A. The Poro society is a traditional social structure that is in place by the Mende Mairs. It is the same in Guinea; it is the same in Liberia; it is the same as Sierra Leone. Only Mende Mair are part of the Poro society, so people in the Nimba range coming 12:09:02 all the way down here, that is why Moses Blah could say here that he was not a member of the Poro, because he is from a different sector and so they are not a part of this Mende Mair social structure. That is why he was not. But there are - for official purposes, let's say, if you are a senior member of government and 12:09:24 because the Mende Mair are a group that constitute the majority of Liberia, and let me tell you what I mean by that. Because when you look at the Bassa, Grand Bassa, this entire region, when you look at Bong, Lofa, Grand Cape Mount, Bomi, when you look at here, most of the tribes in this section of the country

Let us pause there. Now, Mr Taylor, you see there at the beginning of that paragraph reference to the Committee of Four being set up to try and find a solution to this problem and negotiating directly with Johnny Paul Koroma, yes?

15:25:35 A. That is correct, yes.

Q. Now let us jump forward a little bit. When you or when Liberia became a member of an expanded Committee of Five, what were you mandated to do?

A. When I was put on this committee I was immediately made the 15:26:03 point individual on Sierra Leone and let me explain what I mean by point. When we go back to the Committee of Four, we will find out that la Cote d'Ivoire became the point country on the Committee of Four. That is they hosted the meeting that led to the agreement in November and so la Cote d'Ivoire is the point.

15:26:26 Immediately I come on I am now made the point man on Sierra Leone.

Q. And just give us a little preview, what does being the point man involve?

A. Well, you are almost like a mediator. I can only - the 15:26:51 best description in today's world is to look at what is happening I would say with the six party talks on North Korea where China is considered the point country in dealing with. So if you have messages, if you have any points to make, that individual is then to put things together and keep the committee informed for 15:27:29 finally giving it to the entire ECOWAS. You become the lead person in the crisis, so to speak.

Q. And help us. Here we have a situation where sanctions are proposed on the AFRC regime; furthermore, it has been decided as far back as June that the regime should not be recognised, but Charles Normah.

Q. And AWOL?

A. That looks like Ericson C Mason; Francis Nye; Prince Heina; Albert Harris; Andrew Koinah; Sabentos Kamara; Normawolee Kollie. If you look at the first note, counsel, these people, they were sent to base for retraining. So they --

Q. And numbers 8 and 9 are who?

A. Under B?

Q. Under C.

A. I didn't look. I'm sorry, your Honour. I didn't look on the other side of the page. That is Terrino Kollie and Harris Paye.

Q. And the note at the bottom of the page, for completeness?

A. You have Helen Trygo as not being fit.

Q. Right. Let's look at the final page. Well, the penultimate page, yes? All fairly self-explanatory, but I'm interested in number 5 at the bottom of the page, Arms and Ammunition. Now, if we read that paragraph collectively, "Inspector Alex Y Francisco will request the below-listed items to enhance his assignment, Maryland County," and then amongst the items requested is arms and ammunition, yes?

A. Yes.

Q. So how did the system operate? Did a request have to be made in this way for arms and ammunition to be dispensed?

A. Oh, definitely. Any Secret Service personnel having possession of arms and - definitely listed the arm, the arm number, even the number of rounds of ammunition assigned to you, and even if you have - you have to account for those at every time of inspection and if you discharge one round, you have to tell why it was discharged and you must report it.

Q. Now help me. From where did this arms and ammunition come?

A. The Secret Service have their own arsenal. They have their own weapons. They keep them, different types of weapons. They 10:55:50 are listed, but kept within their own custody.

Q. And for good reason I ask, Mr Taylor: Where was that Secret Service armoury?

A. The main armoury was at the Executive Mansion.

Q. Now, on the question of armouries, taking things slowly,

10:56:22 who was in control of that armoury at the Executive Mansion?

A. I really don't know who was in control of the armoury. I don't know, but I know who would be authorised to get anything from the armoury. But I don't know from time to time who is in charge.

10:56:45 Q. Well, who would be authorised?

A. Well, at that particular level the Director of SSS, what you call the head of the Secret Service, would have the ultimate powers to remove material from the armoury or authorise the removal.

10:57:05 Q. And whilst we're on the question of armouries, was there an armoury at White Flower?

A. At all of the White Flowers there was - I wouldn't call it an armoury. Arms were kept at White Flower A, B and C, that is, Monrovia, Arthington and Gbarnga. When - and it's important

10:57:34 because of your question, counsel. When the motorcade that is mentioned here, for your Honours, this motorcade, when the motorcade is travelling with the President, they travel with whatever they need to protect the President. It is not just sidearms. For the sake of the Court, historical fact, if we - in fact, some people in the United States were caught a little short when the terrible incident happened when former President Reagan got shot, unfortunately. People in America, as though they did not know, were shocked when they saw machine guns coming out of 10:58:24 Secret Service guards, and people were like: Oh, my God, we didn't know. But the Secret Service takes along what it needs to protect the President, so that goes along. But on the ground - on the ground where the President may be most of the time or some of the time, you have a certain amount of arms and ammunition, 10:58:44 especially ammunition, kept there. For example, it is kept there that - say the President came under attack. The Secret Service will have to fight off that attack until a larger force like the army moves in. So they keep extra ammunition and different things on the ground in addition to what they travel with just 10:59:08 for protection, yes.

Q. And who would be in charge of those armouries at the three White Flower locations?

A. Well, when you say who would be in charge, there would be an inspector and those responsible for armoury. But in terms of 10:59:26 order for those armouries, the Director of SSS has the ultimate authority for those armouries.

Q. And who's that?

A. Benjamin Yeaten.

Q. Now, before we finally leave this document, Mr Taylor, we 10:59:49 have ad nauseam gone through the various names. Now, can I ask you this: Did you see the Joseph Zigzag Marzah anywhere on that list?

A. No, Marzah - these were not people that were considered Secret Service people. I mean, you may have people like - and Yeaten.

Q. How do you know about these communications?

A. I was in the radio room when the communication was going on."

11:16:03 Now, Mr Taylor, taking things in stages, did Benjamin Yeaten have a radio operator called Sunlight?

A. I don't know. He very well could have. I don't know, counsel. I don't know.

Q. Are you aware of communications, radio communications
11:16:20 between the RUF and Benjamin Yeaten through his radio operator at or about the time that Koidu and some Nigerian soldiers were captured?

A. No. But to be factual about it, I would not dispute that - well, the first thing is that Benjamin Yeaten, I mean, he as 11:16:49 director would have a radio operator. I don't know his code. The second thing factually is that I would not dispute the fact that the operator of Benjamin - because of Benjamin coordinating the security, it would not be out of reason for his operator to call Sam Bockarie, okay? So I don't - but I don't know the name
11:17:13 of the operator. So I wouldn't have the details, and so I don't have a quarrel with the fact that maybe there's communication. I don't.

Q. Well, help us with this, Mr Taylor: The witness speaks of the capture of Nigerian soldiers. Do you recall an incident when 11:17:33 some Nigerian soldiers were captured in Sierra Leone by the RUF?

A. No. There was no specific incident like that I recall, no.

Q. I ask because you were involved at some stage in the release of some UN hostages, weren't you?

A. Yes. But they were mostly - to the best of my

Q. Now, you said that Foday Sankoh left out of RIA airport. Who accompanied him to the airport?
A. I myself accompanied him to the airport, together with some Liberian securities. He was escorted to the airport. We were there when they departed. From there we returned to the guesthouse, I and Mosquito.
Q. When you reached RIA airport, did you see any securities around the airport?
A. Yes, I saw securities.
Q. Did you know who these securities were?
A. They were SSUs. SSU securities.
Q. You said that 'they' departed. Who are 'they'?
A. Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma's group. All of them went.
Q. Now, you said that you and Mosquito went back to the guesthouse after this departure. What happened after that?
A. When we returned to the guesthouse, Benjamin Yeaten came and collected Mosquito. He said that they were to go and meet the Pa, Charles Taylor, to arrange about his return. So they went and met Charles Taylor. Mosquito returned to the guesthouse and said that the Pa had said they should try and return. The following day, Mosquito and I and Benjamin Yeaten went to Spriggs field. When we went to Spriggs field to accompany Mosquito, we boarded the helicopter that was to take Mosquito. In this helicopter, I saw Benjamin Yeaten - I heard Benjamin Yeaten saying, 'Mosquito, these materials have been given by my dad, Charles Taylor, because as my brother, Foday Sankoh, was going to Freetown, you should be keeping security and so you should take along this ammunition to Buedu.' So from there we alighted the helicopter.

Q. Now, when you were in the helicopter, what did you see inside this helicopter?

12:38:26 A. I saw AK - I saw AK rounds in the tins. We used to call them sardine tins which contained the AK rounds. I saw up to 15. 15 of those tins. Then I saw RPG bombs with the TNT. It was - they were in the helicopter.

Q. Mr Witness, when you say you saw 15 tins, what were in 12:39:01 these 15 tins, if you know?

A. They contained the AK rounds.

Q. What kind of helicopter was this that these materials were in?

A. Well, this time it was a helicopter that had a 12:39:14 camouflage colour. It had a camouflage colour.

Q. And did you know whose helicopter it was?

A. Yes, Benjamin Yeaten told us that it was owned by his dad, Charles Taylor."

Pause there. Do you see what's being suggested there, 12:39:33 Mr Taylor?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. It is being suggested that, on the one hand, whilst Johnny Paul Koroma and Foday Sankoh were leaving Monrovia amidst much fanfare, and we've looked at the various press releases, haven't 12:39:54 we, you were at the same - on the other hand, providing arms in a helicopter for Mosquito to take back to Buedu. Did you do that?

A. I did not do that. And if that happened, then there must be complicity on the part of the UN because the helicopter that is being used to ferry RUF people, whether they're going to Vahun or whether they're going to another place, the only helicopter that is available is a UN helicopter.

Q. But you've told us earlier, Mr Taylor, that UN helicopters are painted white.

12:40:30 A. Yes.

Q. The witness is suggesting this is a camouflage helicopter.

A. We do not have a helicopter. That's the point I'm making. We do not have a helicopter at this time with any camouflage. We don't have one.

12:40:41 Q. We're talking about October 1999, aren't we?

A. Yes.

Q. Early, 2nd, 3rd of October 1999.

A. Yes, that's what we're talking about.

Q. Did the Liberian government own a helicopter with 12:40:56 camouflage livery?

A. Yes, we owned one.

Q. At that time?

A. No, not at that time.

Q. When?

12:41:02 A. In 2000, we did. In 2000.

Q. Now, I need to clarify something you mentioned earlier, Mr Taylor. You said earlier that Sankoh, Joe Tuah, Yeaten and Mewon had trained together in Libya. This is at page 87 of the transcript, lines 1 to 7. What did you mean by "trained 12:41:35 together"?

A. Well, okay, that's a good question. They trained in the same camp. Not as a unit, okay. They trained in Tajura and they knew each other. They trained in Tajura.

Q. Now, as far as you're aware, Mr Taylor, were the Sierra Leoneans and the Liberians in Tajura being trained together as a unit?

A. No, they never trained together as a unit, no.

Q. How do you know that?

12:42:18 A. Because I would have been told. I would have been told by my commander that they were training together with the Sierra Leoneans. After training they knew each other, and I think that's where Foday Sankoh made friends with some of them, but they did not train as a unit, no.

12:42:37 Q. Now, Mr Taylor, this is a serious allegation being made by this witness that you were, in the months immediately after Lome, in flagrant breach of the terms of that agreement you were providing ammunition and rocket propelled grenades to the RUF. Were you doing that, Mr Taylor?

12:43:05 A. No, I was not. It's a blatant lie. That is not true. That is not true.

Q. And then he continues:

"When we alighted the helicopter I returned to the guesthouse whilst Sam Bockarie and others went.

12:43:33 Q. Can you tell us who these others were that went with Sam Bockarie?

A. Sam Bockarie went with his bodyguards.

Q. What happened with Benjamin Yeaten?

A. Benjamin Yeaten did not go. He too returned to his 12:43:51 house."

Now, let's deal with something else. Question, page 12986 of the transcript:

Q. Being radio operators, they are the eyes and ears of the organisation, and this man, this radio operator, is saying that through that role he learned that you were the hidden hand behind all of this. Now, what do you say to that allegation, Mr Taylor?
10:22:26 A. That is totally untrue. I was not the hidden hand. And that's why some of these radio operators and [indiscernible], he talked about a lot of this being in log books. From the log books presented before this Court probably it would be good to go through to see. I don't know as to whether they have all of 10:22:45 their log books to see if some of these major allegations, he said that they were recorded, he learned some from log books. I don't know if we can probably go through those log books to see if this is true.

But this is one of the problems that you have with some of 10:23:01 these kinds of situations. Here is a radio operator someplace, not knowing what's going on, Sam Bockarie goes to Liberia. Now I am telling you, and everybody else, during the period that I mediated for ECOWAS in dealing with the RUF I tell this Court if I had given Sam Bockarie rice it would have been within my right
10:23:35 to do so. In fact, I would have felt that it was a good thing to do. And there would be nothing about that to hide from this Court, that I gave Sam Bockarie rice.

That period I did not give Sam Bockarie rice. I have even testified before this Court that during the very tough period I 10:23:57 permitted RUF injured persons to take treatment in Liberia, okay. So what would be rice? Of course, non-lethal thing as rice if I give it to them why would I say I didn't?

Sam Bockarie then came to Monrovia, they did a lot of shopping. They did a lot of shopping. They came to Monrovia,

A. No. At any time we had serious wounded fighters, they would take them to Liberia for treatment. Those who had problems would be taken to Monrovia, Liberia. The helicopter would take them to Monrovia."

Is that true?

11:04:48

A. Well, he's got the - part of the information true, but he's got it all mixed up. We don't get a helicopter until about 1999, and so in 1999, just before we finally organise this final beginning of April meeting in Lome, as a part of that pacification we do let some wounded RUF individuals and some other Sierra Leoneans civilians that were injured to be treated in hospitals in Liberia. So if he is talking about a helicopter, he is talking about 1999, so - and this happened, I would say - I would put it to about February/March 1999, and all of these little pacifications helped to get that April process going where we begin to move people to Lome to start something. So this is 1999. This is what they do. He has some information, that he ties it up to a different story to make people know that he is a little radio operator someplace that knows everything is in senior staff meetings. I don't know, but there are RUF people that are brought to Liberia in 1999, yes.

11:05:18

11:06:08

Q. Now, Mr Taylor, if that is right, then there seems to be a certain congruence between what you are saying and what this witness is saying. Because what the witness is saying - remember the sequence - Bockarie goes to Monrovia. He is given a plan. He returns and organises a meeting. Part one of the plan is Fitti-Fatta, you provide a herbalist. Part two is Freetown invasion. But also part of the arrangement is any serious wounded will be taken to Monrovia. Now, you are telling us that in February/March 1999, i.e. just after the Freetown invasion, wounded soldiers were being taken to Monrovia. Do you see?

A. Well, no, I don't see. I don't see the congruence that you describe, no. By February/March 1999, in fact, the individuals - there are civilians, I say, and RUF people that are being treated in hospitals, okay, that we, for humanitarian purposes, bring them over. It's got nothing to do - I am not sure if the RUF - from all information that I have, the RUF was not involved in the Freetown invasion. I am explaining that here is a situation where you have two sets of facts: You have one fact that yes, during the period of my mediating, we let some wounded individuals come to hospitals in Liberia. That's a fact.

There is another fact, that there is an invasion in January. So somebody takes that information. It's like saying Charles Taylor, as President of Liberia on a date, got in a black jeep and he drove to a football stadium, and while at the football stadium he saw the game, but while watching the game, he saw X number of persons. Now, there are several facts in there, but not all of them are true. Yes, Charles Taylor went to the football game, but Charles Taylor didn't see those people that the person described.

So what I am saying about this witness here - and this is why I am here to tell the Court exactly what happened and I am not here to - I am already in jail. I am not here to hide information. I am saying here that when you look at the fact of a helicopter, the Liberian government does not have a helicopter, okay, before 1999. So if he says that a helicopter is evacuating wounded, this has been to be in 1999. So 1999 at this particular period, February/March, we are busy now trying to tie some final pieces in getting Lome together. So for me, whether they are civilians, bringing some cases to Liberia for humanitarian purposes that we needed to do to pacify the RUF, I say we did. I didn't ask whether - because I know the RUF was not involved in 11:09:43 Freetown. I didn't ask how they got hurt or where they got hurt. If you were a civilian individual and you had a case where we felt that could be done in a hospital, we assisted.

So we don't have any problems with that. We provided fuel for hospitals to keep light going for injured civilians and other 11:10:00 people. So he has got some information, but he's got it mixed up. This is not because of some arrangement that Sam Bockarie comes and gets instructions and he carries it out. I was not involved in any planning of any invasion in Freetown. And I tell you, you know, one would have to know maybe the mindset of 11:10:25 individuals in dealing with some of these matters with some of these simple, simple lies.

Look, in 1996 if Charles Taylor had planned with any human for an invasion of Freetown, there are several questions, to even believe this story, that would have to be asked. Number one, 11:10:54 what would Taylor do? I would want to make sure that the mission would be successful. You understand me? Because we are talking about a time in 1999, I am already President for almost two years. I would definitely make sure that there are - that they have the capabilities of carrying out such a mission. That would 11:11:20 that would be the first thing that any sensible person would want to do. I have heard stories here --

Q. Are you talking about 1996, Mr Taylor?

A. No, 1999. Okay? 1999. So any sensible person would be, yeah, I have it here, Charles Taylor makes a plan to invade

Q. Was there a great deal of radio traffic between you and Bockarie and the RUF in that period?
A. By "you" - not personally, but there was communication. Not by me now.
14:52:01 Q. Not by you, I understand that. Was there communication between the Government of Liberia and Bockarie in that period?
A. Yes. In January of 1999 there was communication I would say immediately after the Freetown invasion and into the negotiation for the ceasefire which occurred, I would say, around 14:52:23 the middle of January. Yes, there were communications.
Q. So during that period there's communication going on?
A. Yes.
Q. But no visit?
A. No visits, no. Strictly communication.
14:52:33 Q. So then we come down to April, and there's a lot of activity and a visit by Bockarie?
A. Yes.
Q. Yes?
A. Yes.
14:52:40 Q. Then we have June, July: Lome?
A. Yes.
Q. August, Johnny Paul Koroma comes to Monrovia?
A. That is correct.
Q. Then we know Sankoh comes to Monrovia in September?
14:53:00 A. That is correct.
Q. Bockarie comes then, you tell us?
A. In September. He does come, yes.
Q. That's number five?
A. Yes.

Q. When did you discover that he had been to Libya?
A. Upon the return, my protocol officer briefed me that - because I wanted to find out why did the trip take so long. He said no, they were not in Burkina Faso. Sam Bockarie left them 15:09:24 and he went to Libya and came back.
Q. Did Musa Cisse accompany Mosquito, Sam Bockarie, to Libya?
A. No, he did not go to Libya.
Q. Now, on his return did he stay long in Monrovia?
A. No, no, no. Sam Bockarie came back and he continued on to 15:09:43 Sierra Leone. They came back a little early. He came and he met with me to thank me for, you know, sending Musa and - you know and helping in arranging this trip with the - you know, to make it possible with the chairman of the OAU and that they had had very fruitful discussion and he was on his way. He left the same 15:10:08 day for Sierra Leone.
Q. Now, when he returned, Mr Taylor, did you demand from him a debrief?
A. No, no, no, no, no. I didn't. No, no. There was none. If I wanted to know anything, I would have found out from the 15:10:26 chairman himself or from Musa Cisse. And as a matter of fact, let me just add, when Sam Bockarie came back, I was not - I was not in Monrovia. I was not in Monrovia itself. I was on the outskirts of Monrovia. At this particular time if my recollection is correct, I was involved in the polio - I was 15:10:59 involved in the polio campaign in Liberia at that time. So it was just they came to the location where I was and, you know, thanked me because I was very busy - it was during the polio campaign time - and then he continued.
Q. Now, bearing all of that in mind, Mr Taylor, let us now

A. He was away for longer than a week. Two weeks, to be exact. Bockarie was out of my presence and my information for two weeks. Because if he had come back, I would have known. Like I say, I was dealing with the polio vaccination campaign at the time of the return. But it was about two weeks.

Q. Now, were you aware that whilst he was away in - outside of Liberia, that he was in regular contact with a radio operator in Monrovia?

A. No, I wouldn't know. I didn't know that.

15:31:55 Q. Would it surprise you if he was?

A. No, it wouldn't surprise me. If Bockarie had no contacts in Sierra Leone on getting information behind him, then it's possible that he could have had somebody, that his radio operator in Monrovia, he could call and provided the radio operator had a second satellite telephone. I don't know how they work out their arrangement, but I will be fair and say it's possible that he could have called his radio operator in Monrovia, and the radio operator in Monrovia, having access to radio communication in Sierra Leone, could tell him what happened. I don't fuss with that possibility.

Q. Now, let's pick up the account following Bockarie's return to Monrovia. Page 21547, line 18:

"Q. Okay. Before you go on, before you actually left, when the group returned from Ouagadougou, who was in the group, do you recall?

A. Well, at Benjamin's house, where they met me, Mosquito was in a group with Benjamin, Eddie, and General Ibrahim.

Q. Who is General Ibrahim?

A. General Ibrahim, I knew him to be a Gambian who used to Tuah during the Freetown fighting?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know when the Freetown fighting occurred?

A. It started in January. It was on 6 January that they called from the State House saying they were in control of the State House.

Q. What year?

A. That was in 1999, sir."

Now, Mr Taylor, you understand the implication of that, don't you? That senior members of your regime were in contact with Bockarie during the Freetown invasion. Is that true or false.

A. I would say totally false, because they would have no reason to be in touch with Sam Bockarie during the Freetown invasion. None whatsoever. I would say it's false.

Q. But he continues. Page 2022:

"Q. What did Bockarie tell you? What did you hear him say to Benjamin Yeaten?

A. I heard Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten conversing about the progressive move that RUF has made. I didn't hear any instruction from Benjamin Yeaten to Bockarie to say do this or do that at the time.

Q. During the fighting in Freetown in the January offensive did you play any part in that? What was your assignment?

A. I told you I was assigned to Segbwema, Bunumbu just in case any wounded soldier came. I will take that wounded soldier to Buedu where he could be treated at the rear. Even Mano, I made civilians to make a hammock so they can were from Nimba and you learned that Ganta was under attack, of course the chances are that you would join the fight. I would - I'm in no position to say that that did not happen. Yes, it could have happened.

10:33:23 Q. Now, the final matter I want to give you an opportunity to deal with is this: Now, the witness says that she learnt that Sam Bockarie and his family had been killed, and the account unfolds in this way. I am looking at page 15769, line 20:

"Q. Did he tell you who had killed Sam Bockarie and his family?

10:34:00 A. Well, he told me that it was 50, but he said it was an order from Charles Taylor.

Q. When you spoke to Toasty, this is the person who supplied this information, and he also - he confirmed this 10:34:17 information to you, did Toasty tell you who killed Sam Bockarie and his family as well as all the other fighters that he told you had been killed?

A. Yes, he told me it was 50, but it was Charles Taylor's order."

10:34:32 Taking matters in stages: Firstly, who is Toasty?

A. I have no idea. I do not know a Toasty.

Q. Did you give an order for Sam Bockarie to be killed?

A. The last person on this planet that I wanted killed was Sam Bockarie. I never gave any such order. Sam Bockarie's death

10:34:57 hurt me. Sam Bockarie was someone that I actually liked, and I can tell the world about this, and I did not want him dead. And let me just go further, because I really want it to be clear. Even if Sam Bockarie had been arrested and brought to me, I had no intention of giving him to Kabbah, okay? So this nonsense I have been hearing about Sam Bockarie being ordered - I never wanted that boy dead. I liked him like a son. I never wanted him dead, and I never intended to give him to Tejan Kabbah either. I would have brought Sam Bockarie to Monrovia and to 10:35:36 expel him back out of the country. Never gave any such order that Sam Bockarie should be killed. Never.

Q. Well, Mr Taylor, let us be blunt about it, because we need to deal with this suggestion. The suggestion clearly is that you decided to kill Bockarie because he knew too much and you were 10:36:00 killing him, in effect, to silence him. Do you follow?

A. Yes, I follow that, but that --

Q. Well, deal with that.

A. That's nonsense. Well, who knows more than Issa Sesay? Who knows more than all of the RUF people - the senior RUF people
10:36:16 that are on trial in Sierra Leone, who knows more than them? Sam Bockarie was not - in fact, the person that dealt even longer with the crisis, Issa Sesay dealt with the RUF issues longer than Sam Bockarie. Sam Bockarie left in 1999; Issa Sesay stayed all through, okay? But we've heard all kind of mention - remember
10:36:34 there's a witness that sat here that is a protected witness whose name I cannot call that said he shot Sam Bockarie dead centre in the forehead. Nonsense. We know from the autopsy he was never shot in the head. There have been different versions of people being brought over here to lie and carry on. What did Sam
10:36:53 Bockarie know that all the other senior people do not know? What? Nothing.

Q. Well, the cynic would say, Mr Taylor, you didn't have an opportunity to kill the others, but you had one to kill Sam Bockarie. What do you say to that?

A. Well, when did I leave Liberia? I left in 2003 and by the time I left Liberia, remember, Sam Bockarie was not even in Liberia when the Sierra Leonean court started. He was not in Liberia. Issa Sesay visited Liberia many times throughout 2001, 10:37:23 2002. Why didn't somebody kill him? This is total nonsense. You know, I know lawyers - and this is not - you know, lawyers are well trained and they are trained to turn black to white and white to black. That's what --

Q. Does that include me?

10:37:41 A. Well, you know, I mean, no, not directly. But I mean, you know - but this - you know, sometimes it's just so - look, I loved that boy and I am saying - you didn't ask me this question; I volunteered. I would have never turned him over to Tejan Kabbah, you understand me? And I have my reason, and we'll get 10:38:04 to it, and I will talk about it.

So this thing about wanting Sam Bockarie killed, there was no such thing. I was upset - very, very upset about the death of Sam Bockarie when Moses Blah came and brought the body to Monrovia and reported to me that Sam Bockarie had been killed, 10:38:18 because I sent him there to prevent the killing of Sam Bockarie. I sent him there to prevent that. You go, you are an experienced man, you're the Vice-President, you're a soldier; go and make sure that this matter is done calmly, and you bring Sam Bockarie to Monrovia. If I wanted Sam Bockarie killed, I would have never 10:38:36 sent Moses Blah to Nimba. That lie he told here about he was just in the area, it's a blatant, blatant lie. He was sent by me there to prevent this very situation. I did not want that boy killed.

Q. Very well. That's all I'll ask you about that - the were ammunitions and the ammunitions were handed over to the G4 in Buedu called Captain Felix."

Yes, Mr Taylor?

A. Totally no. At the time - except the helicopter he is talking about is a bird, as in a real bird. Because by this time in 1999, early - because the invasion of Sierra Leone is January 1999 - the Liberian government, my government, does not have a helicopter at this time. So I don't know what helicopter he is talking about. We do not, N-O-T, do not have a helicopter at this time, so that's got to be a lie. We don't have a helicopter at this time, no.

Q. Well, there is a couple things there, Mr Taylor. Did you receive a visit from Sam Bockarie at or about the time of the Freetown invasion, January 1999?

A. No, did not receive a visit from him in January.

Q. And did you provide Bockarie with ammunition in or about that time?

A. No, not at all. No.

Q. And again with this witness, Mr Taylor, when we go to page 6976, line 17 of the transcript, we see this allegation again being made against you:

"Q. When you say he", that being Sam Bockarie, "could come on the radio and give instructions, what do you mean by 'could'?

A. Bockarie used to come on the radio to issue instructions relating to strategy.

Q. Do you recall specifically what orders Bockarie gave at any particular time?

A. Yes. When the forces of the AFRC/RUF entered Freetown, after some time they went under serious pressure by the ECOMOG forces and they were out of ammunition, so the commander who was leading that group, Gullit, decided to retreat a little bit to a particular location and to collect materials, ammunition. So the other forces were left at a particular position in Freetown and reported that they were persistently attacked and Sam Bockarie came on the radio and told Gullit to instruct the men to burn down areas, in fact the government buildings, so that will raise alarm in the international community."

Now, what do you know about that, Mr Taylor?

A. Absolutely nothing. Absolutely nothing.

Q. Because it continues, you see, this vein:

"Q. Now, this communication which Bockarie had with Gullit, my question was, do you recall a situation where after communicating on a two-one with 020 in Liberia, do you recall a situation where Bockarie came back and gave an order?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall any other communication that Bockarie had during this period with 020?

A. Communication was going on with 020 and base 1 and some of those communications were like one I have explained and the other was the instructions to Gullit to report with the POWs who were released were the prison. I mean the prisoners who were released from Pademba Road prison, that they were to be taken to Bockarie's location."

Now, Mr Taylor, was it you ordering Bockarie to do all of those things?"

A. No. I was not in contact with Bockarie at all, no.
Q. Now, going on to page 6999, line 8:
"Q. You mentioned a name this morning as one of those who also brought supplies from Liberia, Sampson Weah. Do you recall?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who was he?
A. Sampson Weah was assigned to Benjamin D Yeaten.
Q. As what?
A. He was a soldier assigned to Benjamin Yeaten and besides Sampson Weah was a brother of Benjamin Yeaten, that was what I got to know when I crossed into Liberia."
Now, you have told us that to be true, haven't you, Mr Taylor?
A. That's correct, yes.
Q. Now, the witness goes on:
"Q. Now, who else was assigned to Benjamin Yeaten of the men who brought supplies across to Liberia apart from Sampson Weah? Was there anybody assigned to Benjamin Yeaten?
A. He had bodyguards that I knew, but those who came with materials to - I mean with ammunitions to Buedu, the only person I can recall is Sampson.
Q. Now these are other names that you mentioned of men who brought material to Buedu, do you know on whose instruction they were acting when they brought this material? You mentioned Zigzag Marzah, you also mentioned Dopoe Menkarzon and you mentioned Roland Duoh?
A. Those were Liberian soldiers and they operated under regarding some Sierra Leoneans. The issue of any member of the black race getting citizenship in Liberia is a matter of 48 hours you can obtain it, and you are to be given land immediately. Upon gaining citizenship you can even be given up to - I think 13:03:14 it's 15 acres of land for resettlement from any part of the world.

Q. Mr Taylor, even with this procedure you're talking about, this executive order, it requires some additional steps before that person is granted citizenship, does it not?

13:03:29 A. No.

Q. There has to be a formal hearing, does there not?

A. No.

Q. And someone has to attest that the person is of good moral character, isn't that correct?

13:03:40 A. No. The executive order that is issued by the President under the constitution of Liberia does not require any hearing, because good moral is a question - for example, there was a resettlement of individuals from the Caribbean islands. The constitution of Liberia - I'm sure at some point it can be 13:03:59 produced - is very, very, very clear. The constitution was set up - Liberia was set up as a place of asylum for the black man. So if you came from any part of the world, it was not a matter of moral. If it was felt that you were being persecuted in any way, you could be given citizenship, and that was the prerogative 13:04:20 under the constitution of the President of Liberia. It's been used by the present President of Liberia regarding Sierra Leoneans that have been given citizenship and given land in - I think right now it's in - it used to be called Bensonville in Liberia. They've been resettled and granted citizenship. It's

Q. So your testimony is while you were President, by executive order there was no requirement of a formal hearing and there was no requirement of an attestation that the person was of good 13:04:57 moral character?
A. That is my testimony, yes.
Q. What sort of documentation was a person given when they were awarded this citizenship?
A. Once you are awarded the citizenship, the executive order
13:05:11 was published. You could follow up. If you wanted to, you could follow up and go and ask for a certificate, or some people really never bothered to get - to go and get a formal - you know, a certificate of citizenship. Some people never went to get it. You could also use a copy of the order just in case you were 13:05:35 asked, and it depends on the period of time. Some people never followed through with it.
Q. So in relation to Sam Bockarie, you issued an executive order awarding him citizenship?
A. And his men, yes.
13:05:48 Q. All of his men?
A. All of his - and they were informed.
Q. And their families?
A. And their families, and they were informed.
Q. Did you keep copies of those executive orders in your 13:05:57 archives?
A. I didn't bring a copy of it in my archives. I'm sure if they search properly in the mansion, there should be one. I hope they can - it's there.
Q. Were these people required to have any sort of proof of amputations, correct?

A. It depends on when. You've been switching me between '99 and '98. February, the intervention - you've been switching me between the intervention and the 6 January invasion and so it 11:14:23 depends on now - by the intervention time, if you read the Secretary-General's report - because I know of that report. We've presented copies here. Following the intervention - most of the issues that came up following the intervention that Liberia was concerned with was the presence of Liberians and 11:14:47 that's what we were seized with at that time. So I'm not aware of the details. Following the 6 January '99 situation, yes, that's a different story. We begin to get more details based on even what - if you read the Secretary-General's report, what we all received, that's what I'm talking about.
11:15:09 Q. So in your role as a contact person with the parties to the conflict - do you accept that word? I'll use whatever you choose. Point man. Which word would you like me to choose, Mr Taylor?
A. Yeah, I would like to say the point President, yeah, 11:15:26 responsible.
Q. Point President?
A. Yeah.
Q. Sir, as the point President in the negotiations, wouldn't it be important to understand who you're dealing with on the 11:16:05 various sides?
A. Yes, it would be very important.
Q. So did you read up about what the RUF - who they were and what they were doing?
A. Yes. Whatever reports came I read the reports from ECOMOG,

yes.
Q. And did ECOMOG give you reports that the RUF were a good organisation, that they were kind to civilians?
A. No, that was not - that type of comment was not - being 11:16:31 kind was not one of the comments that ECOMOG used to describe the RUF.
Q. In fact, didn't they report that they were committing atrocities against civilians?
A. I'm not disputing that, Mr Koumjian.
11:16:41 Q. Mr Taylor, isn't it interesting: Didn't you notice that throughout the conflict in Sierra Leone even though, as you say, ECOMOG had committed some offences, the civilians are always fleeing to ECOMOG and away from the rebels? Have you noticed that?
11:16:56 A. By "notice", no. I didn't notice that. But it would be clear to say that from what we were told that yes, they went to the Kamajors and they went to ECOMOG, so we - I mean, ECOMOG was supposed to be a last resort, I would say, yes.
Q. Can you remind me when it was that you were appointed the 11:17:21 point President? It was after your election?
A. I would put that all the way back to 1997. Late 1997.
Q. Approximately when in 1997?
A. I said late 1997.
Q. Thank you. Sir, then it was only about two years after the 11:17:38 Dayton Accords - and I know you're very knowledgeable on world affairs, so you're certainly aware of the Dayton Accords --
A. Dayton, Ohio.
Q. -- and the negotiations to end the war in Bosnia?
A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall that the President of Serbia, who was not a party to - supposedly - claimed not to be a party to that conflict - was invited to Dayton because of his obvious influence over one of the warring parties, the Bosnian Serb entity? Do you 11:18:07 recall that?
A. Yes, if you are speaking about Mr Milosevic?
Q. Yes.
A. Yes.
Q. Was that the President that caused you to be selected as 11:18:15 the point President to deal with the RUF?
A. I would say no. I would say totally no. I think I was invited for several reasons. What my colleagues said - and I have told this Court - my colleague said to me, "Well, you're a former rebel. You know how to deal with rebels, so we want you 11:18:37 to come on this committee to help us, because you would know how to deal with them." In the case of Milosevic, from my understanding of Milosevic, Milosevic, being President of Greater Serbia, was brought in because of his military prowess and his capacity as leading Serbia at the particular time. Two different 11:19:03 reasons.
Q. Well, he was the President of the former Yugoslavia. He had never been in the army, sir, but he certainly had influence over military affairs, and there's plenty of precedents of that, aren't there?
11:19:16 A. No, well --
Q. Civilian Presidents with influence over military affairs?
A. Well, most civilian Presidents - in fact, the whole essence of democracy means that the military submits to the civilian head. That's the essence of the democratic process.

Q. Did you read the United Nations reports about atrocities committed in Sierra Leone?
A. Yes, the Secretary-General's report, I read them, yes.
Q. Did you read reports or get summaries of reports of the 11:19:51 international human rights community, people like Amnesty, Human Rights Watch, and their reports that of the atrocities that were being carried out by the RUF and its allies in Sierra Leone?
A. No, no, I did not. I only read the Secretary-General's reports.
11:20:09 Q. Did you read the reports in Liberian newspapers about the atrocities being committed against the civilians in their neighbouring country, Sierra Leone?
A. Well, I received briefings on the reports. I did not very rarely grab up a whole bunch of papers to read. I had people 11:20:25 that would summarise the important issues. But I received reports of what was reported in the papers as being reported in the international media, yes.
Q. Let's look a little bit at that situation after the intervention. The RUF was on the run, isn't that right?
11:20:47 A. When you say "on the run" --
Q. Thank you. That's a fair question. I'll try to clarify it. The RUF is militarily weakened?
A. Well, I would say I don't know. The intervention was against the junta and if you want to ask me if the junta - well, 11:21:09 your question was the RUF. I don't really know, Mr Koumjian, if they were weakened or not.
Q. Was the junta weakened?
A. Well, I would say yes, they were destroyed.
Q. They were destroyed. In fact, the AFRC and the RUF, the allies, had lost most of their heavy weapons that were in Freetown during the intervention. You knew that, didn't you?

A. No, I did not know.
Q. As the point person on peace, wasn't it important to understand the strategic situation?
11:21:30
A. Well, one could say that. But if your question is did I ask how many guns, how many pieces of artillery did they lose, I didn't get into that. For ECOWAS, driving the junta out of power was something that was agreed upon by ECOWAS. So for me strategically I did not ask for the military and intricacies of loss of equipment. I didn't really get into that.
11:21:49
Q. You understand strategically the junta, the RUF and its AFRC allies, were retreating and weakened, correct?
A. Definitely. We received reports on that, yes.
Q. Sir, let me ask you this: At this point - let's even get a date so it will be clear to you. Let's say by April 1998, was it clear to you that anyone who continued to provide support to the RUF and the AFRC would be supporting a group engaged in a campaign against the civilian population of Sierra Leone?
11:22:11
A. Well, I would say no because I was not aware that - I was not aware of anyone that was giving - as you put the question, giving support to be aware that anyone that would continue. So I really don't know how to answer this question. To the best of my knowledge from reports that reached to the Heads of State, we did not get an indication that they were receiving support from outside.
11:22:32
Q. Sir, my question is: Would anyone who gave support to the RUF be giving support to a force that was carrying out a campaign of atrocities against civilians as of April 1998?

A. Not exactly. Probably I did, but I relied on news briefings that would come.
Q. Do you recall, for example, the recording from Focus on Africa played in this courtroom where from the State House 14:50:59 Colonel Sesay announced the takeover and he was asked by the BBC announcer, I believe it was Robin White, who has taken over, and he said the combined forces, the combined force of the RUF and the AFRC? Do you recall that, hearing that?
A. I heard the tape here in this courtroom, yes.
14:51:24 Q. Do you recall hearing that in 1999?
A. No. I don't listen to Focus on Africa, really. That was not my - Focus was the simplest thing for me, no. I never listened to Focus on Africa.
Q. Did your national security adviser advise you that morning
14:51:42 the RUF and the AFRC have invaded Freetown?
A. I have just answered that, yes.
Q. Did you receive reports from any means, your national security adviser or otherwise, Sam Bockarie was on the air threatening to burn various parts, embassies, in Freetown?
14:52:00 A. Well, I got a report that Bockarie had made some statements on the air, yeah. I don't remember the exact details, but I did get a report that he had spoken on the BBC.
Q. And what did you, the President point man for peace, do about this while Freetown was literally burning?
14:52:18 A. Nothing. What did you expect me to do except contact other colleagues to find out what was their take on it, what was ECOMOG doing. That's all I could have done.
Q. Well, you told us you thought Sam Bockarie was a very reasonable man, correct?

chairman of ECOWAS, was speaking to him. I had my task. I performed my task. My task was to help in whatever way that I could and get them - there was no reason to get to him. None. Others were speaking to him.

10:32:02 Q. Because you were so close to Sam Bockarie, the person in charge of the military machine for the RUF, correct?

A. No, no. What do you mean by "so close"? I was not so close.

Q. You loved him like a son?

10:32:14 A. Well, in our African way, we take everybody to be a son.

Q. You loved him like a son?

A. Yes, in an African way. Not maybe in another way. I don't know what you mean, but I am speaking strictly in an African sense. We're like people - like sons and brothers. People that 10:32:34 are not even blood related, we call them our brothers.

Q. Mr Taylor, when was the next time you saw Sam Bockarie?

A. After Lome, when Foday Sankoh arrived in Liberia in September 1999, Sam Bockarie came to Liberia. And by the way, on this issue on yesterday you asked me questions about it and you 10:33:02 tried to infer that - when I say Sam Bockarie reported to Sankoh, you tried to infer that the report had been written in Liberia. I said no such thing. He returned in September 1999 to meet his leader.

Q. By the way, did you meet with your Defence team last night?

10:33:30 A. No, I did not meet with them. Neither this morning. And if I had met with them, if you are trying to infer that they would coach me, I think I am better than that.

Q. What was the - sorry, let me go back to your answer. So in September 1999 you met with Sankoh and Bockarie in Monrovia. You Prosecution what evidence is capable of not only impeaching the credit of the accused but of going to proof of his guilt. You're all lawyers and you can see that without being told and we simply say that documents falling in that category should have been served. That's our order. Now, I'm not going to argue about our decision now. We've told you you can't use it because it hasn't been served and you can move on.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. Mr Taylor, you told us last week about bribing officials in foreign governments in order to allow arms to transport those countries; do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Who were the people that you used to bribe the foreign officials you used to convey the money to them?

A. I've said I gave the money to the defence officials at the time and I don't know who they used specifically. In terms of names, I don't know the names.

Q. My question, if I wasn't clear, was: Who did you use to carry out to convey the money or to arrange the bribe from your government? You didn't do it yourself. You didn't hand money yourself?

A. No.

Q. Who did you use?

A. Well, I gave the money - the money went through my chief protocol to the Defence Department, you know, to pay for whatever they wanted to do.

Q. That is Musa Cisse?

A. Yes.

Q. What years did Musa Cisse carry out this task for you?

MR ANYAH:

Q. And was that an official Government of Liberia building?

A. No, that building was rented.

Q. Rented for what purposes?

13:08:25 A. It was rented to serve as warehouse and to serve as office for the SSS around the White Flower.

Q. Were its occupants employees of the Government of the Republic of Liberia?

A. They were members of the SSS, yes, employees of the 13:08:44 Republic of Liberia.

Q. You said there was a warehouse there?

A. Yes.

Q. And you said there were offices there?

A. Yes, the SS had an office there - has offices there I 13:09:01 should say.

Q. What was contained in the warehouse, if you know?

A. A lot of things were contained in the warehouse.

Q. Things like what?

A. Things like food, clothing, supplies for the SSS.

13:09:14 Q. What sort of supplies besides food and clothing, if you know?

A. You have supplies like arms and ammunition supplies for the SSS.

Q. During your tenure as assistant director did you have 13:09:27 occasion to go into that warehouse?

A. Yes, I had occasion to go into the warehouse.

Q. Are you familiar with the interior of that warehouse?

A. It's just any normal warehouse. It's just a big warehouse.

Q. Are you familiar with the interior of that warehouse?

A. Yes, I'm familiar with the interior of the warehouse.
Q. Did the warehouse have a superintendent or somebody who oversaw the warehouse?
A. Yes, the warehouse had a - yes, you had somebody - there 13:09:55 were people that were taking care of the warehouse, yes.
Q. What was the protocol to obtain supplies from the warehouse for SSS personnel?
A. The protocol would be supplies for the SSS would be by the director - the director would make a request before any supply 13:10:15 could be given.
Q. Could an assistant director make a request for supplies from the warehouse?
A. No.
Q. Could a --
13:10:25 PRESIDING JUDGE: Could the witness repeat, "The protocol would be supplies for the SSS" would be what? Who would make a request?
THE WITNESS: He asked the question whether supplies for the SSS - I said the director of SSS would make that request.
13:10:45 MR ANYAH:
Q. And to whom would the request be sent or directed?
A. The request would be sent to President - he would sent the request to the President. I mean it's approved, he would go and get the supplies.
13:11:02 Q. If the director wanted to obtain a single uniform from the warehouse would that type of request be sent to the President of the Republic of Liberia?
A. No, he could just go there and just request for it from the managers of the warehouse.

struggle?
A. Come again?
Q. You needed the RUF arms to survive, to gain territories, correct?
15:27:41 A. Yes, we need the arms to gain territories.
Q. It was the arms and ammunition that allowed you to control territories, correct?
A. Yes, in some cases. Not in all cases. Because there are certain cases where you - you can go, you scare the enemy and the 15:28:00 enemy goes off, then you don't need no arms. You just come and control that area without even firing two, three shots. As soon as they hear that the RUF is coming, by virtue of the perception that they have heard about the RUF, that they are murderers, they are rapists, you see, they abandon their post. And then if you 15:28:22 come, there is no need - we did not have supply lines for bullets or ammunitions coming from any other - where it was virtually what we capture from military or army or other troops that were around helping the government.
Q. So that's why it would help to make an area fearful, 15:28:44 because when an area is fearful, there is no opposition, the people run away, correct?
A. They had already a fixed perception, you see, about the RUF. But those who lived with the RUF, they knew their only difficulty was maybe attacks from government helicopter, gun 15:29:05 ships, fighter jets, you know, and lack of other facilities. That was the only problem with people living in RUF areas. Like medicines were not easy to come by, you see.
Q. So that's why civilians kept running to the ECOMOG lines, away from the RUF, correct, because of this reputation that you said that they had been brainwashed with?

A. Yes, that was one of the reasons.
Q. Where do you think they got this information, this fear of the RUF?
15:29:41 A. Maybe from the soldiers.
Q. The ECOMOG were even foreigners, correct? They weren't even from Sierra Leone.
A. Of course. But before they come to Sierra Leone, they must talk with - before they go into the forest of Sierra Leone, they 15:30:00 are guided by Sierra Leoneans.
Q. And some of those ECOMOG soldiers or even their officers, they didn't treat civilians so great. They even stole from the civilians, correct?
A. I cannot say for them because I was not there.
15:30:15 Q. But still the civilians ran towards these foreigners, away from the RUF, isn't that true?
A. There are people who are afraid of ECOMOG, even in Freetown.
Q. Sir, let's go back to the document. First, before I do
15:30:39 that, sir, what is the term "food-finding mission"? Are you familiar with that term?
A. It's to go in search of food to eat.
Q. Is that something that would be organised?
A. You have to - any programme or anything - even if you have 15:30:59 the food, before you cook it, you need to organise yourself. So you cannot be going to find something that you have not kept, you did not organise yourself.
Q. Let's take a look at this list that's on page 25589 at P-51. We see - I'll just read a few names and correct me if I in Tongo?

A. Yes, my Lord.
Q. Are you able to help us with when this was?
A. That was around June, around June, around May - from 12:01:02 May - from May to June. From May to June, anyway. Around that.
Q. Well, you told us where you were on 25 May when you heard news of the coup and from there you moved over a short period of time to Freetown.
A. Okay. No, no. May 25, June in Kenema - June to July. It
12:01:35 was in the rainy season that we entered Tongo. It was in the rainy season. I do not know the time now, but it was raining at that time.
Q. I didn't actually ask you when you say you cleared the Kamajors, in the course of clearing the Kamajors did you capture 12:01:56 anything from them?
A. There were some SSDs, some single barrels and some SSD personnel. The SSDs who were there surrendered to us including all their weapons. They were with us.
Q. And the SSDs are who?
12:02:19 A. They are the Sierra Leone police.
Q. So what weapons did you get from them when they surrendered to you?
A. They had LAR and RPG. Just that.
Q. Did you get anything other than those weapons when you
12:02:51 cleared the Kamajors away?
A. Except - those are the materials, even the men and their weapons. We did not disarm them. They surrendered to us. The single barrels - we got the single barrels from the Kamajors but the single barrels did not material - they were not important to

Q. So why were you moving from one place to another?
A. I was trying to go to Kono where most of my brothers were.
Q. Did you eventually get to Kono?
A. Yes, my Lord.
13:11:15 Q. Are you able to recall now when that was?
A. I think it was somewhere in 1998. It was in 1998 because we have completed '97. We are now in '98.
Q. Can you help us with when in 1998 you got to Kono after you had retreated from Hastings?
13:11:52 A. I can't tell you the date.
Q. Was it the dry season, the rainy season, or was it after the rainy season?
A. It was in the - it was during the dry season.
Q. So you finally get to Kono. And what happens when you get 13:12:13 there?
A. Well, I met Superman in Kono. They said they met Kamajors in Kono and they attacked them and dislodged them from Kono. There were a lot of RUF personnel in Kono when I went there.
Q. Were there any AFRC personnel there when you went there?
13:12:42 A. Yes. They too were there.
Q. Now, you have told us Superman said that they had dislodged the Kamajors. Did that mean that Kono was safe for you or not?
A. Well, when I knew that the men were there, Kono was safe for me because Superman had dislodged them from there. There 13:13:12 were no enemies there. Kono was safe then.
Q. Were you attacked at all while you were in Kono?
A. Yes.
Q. By whom?
A. ECOMOG jets.

Q. And what did the ECOMOG jets do?
A. It was dropping cluster bombs.
Q. Where were they dropping cluster bombs?
A. Those areas where AFRC lodged, the houses where AFRC people
13:13:55 lodged. That was where the bombs were dropped.
Q. Is this in a town, a village or what?
A. In the main Koidu Town, the town itself. That was where the bombs were dropped. That is Koidu.
Q. And were these bombs only landing on AFRC lodging houses or 13:14:19 were they landing on other places as well?
A. They were landing at different locations. Some places where civilians were, it landed there. And some where AFRC were.
They were launching at every place in Kono.
Q. And so what did you all decide to do as a result of being 13:14:45 bombed by the Alpha Jets?
A. I decided to take all my family from around me to the bush.
Q. And where did you go? To what part?
A. I sent them to the Guinea Highway.
Q. Did you go with them?
13:15:15 A. I just left them there and came back to Koidu because of the jets raid.
Q. Did you continue to stay in Koidu or did you move to some other place?
A. We left Koidu --

Q. Thank you, Mr Vincent. Now going back to this vanguards meeting - or this meeting involving vanguards, you said it was called by Sam Bockarie and it took place in Buedu, yes?
A. Yes.
10:48:21 Q. Was there a particular place in the vicinity of Buedu or within Buedu that this meeting was held at?
A. This meeting was held in an area called Waterworks. It is an area where water purification was done. That was where water was supplied to the surrounding villages or towns. That was 10:48:53 where this meeting was held.
Q. How many persons, to your knowledge, were in attendance at this meeting?
A. In the meeting we were well over 200.
Q. Was Issa Sesay present at that meeting?
10:49:16 A. Yes. I said a meeting of all vanguards.
Q. And when you refer to vanguards, are you referring to those who were trained at Crab Hole?
A. Yes, those who were trained by Mr Sankoh himself.
Q. What was discussed at this meeting?
10:49:45 A. Well, the discussion at this meeting was that we should launch a serious offensive, because at that time our leader was not with us. I'm talking about Mr Sankoh now. So two days' offensive, probably the international community would know and intervene so as to bring peace and Sankoh would be released. So 10:50:24 it was an operation to free Sankoh.
Q. Was the release of Foday Sankoh the only objective or purpose of this meeting?
A. Yes, yes. Because during the discussion at the meeting we planned to attack and make sure that we captured major areas that will cause some concern for the international community.

Q. What were some of those major areas that you were planning to capture?
A. As far as Makeni. Kono, Makeni.
10:51:18 Q. Did the plan to capture major areas include a plan to capture Freetown?
A. No, that was the initial stage so we could not have gone to Freetown, so that was the first mission - target that was set. So when we would have gotten Makeni, the next place would have 10:51:38 been to go close to Freetown or to Freetown itself.
Q. But the question I'm asking is at that meeting when you were planning these operations, was there on the table a plan to attack Freetown in addition to Kono and Makeni?
A. No.
10:52:03 Q. Where was the RUF getting its arms and ammunition at this particular time in 1998 when this meeting took place at the Waterworks?
A. At this time there were many ways that we went about it. Selling produce, that is cocoa and coffee. We had other people
10:52:34 who were making deals at the Guinean border. We were getting arms and ammunition from them also. There was some NPFL territory that we were getting these things from. That was the deal that was going through Timothy Fayah. He used to help us too. He used to get some things for us and we would give him his 10:53:01 own share and he would give us whatever he was able to give us. Because at that time General Timothy Fayah was the one taking care of Foya.
Q. Mr Vincent, please pause and just remember to go slowly. Let's consider some of what you have said. You mentioned Timothy threat in November 1998, weren't you?

A. Well, now you've come to the point that I want when you've mentioned Foday Sankoh. I know that Sam Bockarie can - would even say more than this. The date Foday Sankoh was captured he 10:56:19 made that threatening remark against the country, yes. Now that you've mentioned Foday Sankoh, yes, Sam Bockarie would do that. Yes, he said that. He would do it.
Q. Indeed, Mr Ngebeh, that wasn't the only threat that Sam Bockarie made to attack Freetown in 1998, was it?
10:56:39 A. Yes, I told you Sam Bockarie - I told you that since '97 he was a bad leader. I told you. I told you in my statement. He was a bad leader. He can make any remark. Even those of us who were fighting, he threatened us. Who else? Now that you've called Pa Sankoh's name I have got the gist of it. He just made 10:57:02 that statement.
Q. In fact, Mr Ngebeh, several times in December 1998 Sam Bockarie threatened to attack Freetown. Isn't that correct?
A. Hey mama, I don't want to tell lies. I have taken an oath. I have seen - I have heard Sam Bockarie say words even more than 10:57:26 this. Let's go ahead. He was a wicked commander.
Q. Mr Witness, answer the questions that I give to you. In fact, Mr Witness, several times in December 1998 Sam Bockarie threatened to attack Freetown. Isn't that correct?
A. Yes, he used to attack not just Freetown. Kono, 10:57:47 everywhere, he said until Foday Sankoh is released. He said they should release Foday Sankoh. If anything happened to Foday Sankoh he will not spare anyone. He said that. He said because he was the leader, he brought the war, if they wanted peace they should release the Pa. He said that.

Q. And, indeed, at this forum and this briefing, he indicated that this mission would be referred to as a Do or Die mission, correct?
A. This mission hadn't a code name, because that code name, we 11:00:33 used it once and it was not good for us. We just used it to capture Kono by all means, not to do or die, because Fitti-Fatta had failed us. I did not know any code name for that last mission in Kono. I did not know it.
Q. Mr Witness, you were at this forum, were you not?
11:00:55 A. I have told you that I was at the forum. The code name that you've given for this mission, I don't know about it. I don't know.
Q. And Issa Sesay also referred to this mission as Operation Free the Leader. Isn't that right?
11:01:15 A. Yes. We were to fight to free Pa Sankoh, yes, to free our leader.
Q. At that time where was Pa Sankoh?
A. Pa Sankoh was in Nigeria in prison.
Q. In December 1998? Are you sure about that, Mr Witness?
11:01:39 A. 1998. I knew that Pa Sankoh, after the coup, we negotiated for him to come. They did not bring him until the time we retreated. He was in jail. It's the time that you've called. You know, I was not recording dates, but it was in Nigerian prison.
11:02:01 Q. That's not true, is it, Mr Witness? In fact, by December 1998, Foday Sankoh had been brought back to Sierra Leone, tried and found guilty. Isn't that right?
A. I knew that Foday Sankoh was in prison. I knew that.
Q. But you didn't know where?

2nd Brigade adjutant?
A. You are correct.
Q. Now, while you had this forum for this operation, you were given some directives related to this operation. Isn't that 11:10:29 correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And one of these directives you were given was that no looting would take place until the mission was accomplished. Isn't that right?
11:10:41 A. You are correct.
Q. You were also given a directive that all government properties should be reported to the mission commander. Isn't that right?
A. That's correct.
11:10:55 Q. And it was the 2nd Brigade commander who was the overall commander for this mission. Isn't that right?
A. Correct. Rambo.
Q. And the object of that operation was to go all the way to Freetown. Isn't that right?
11:11:26 A. Correct.
Q. Now, you have told the Court that after Koidu was captured, the operation continued to Makeni through Masingbi and other places. Do you remember telling the Court that?
A. Yes.
11:11:45 Q. And at Masingbi, RUF and AFRC fighters had already taken the town. Isn't that right?
A. You are correct.
Q. In fact, the CDF fighters had surrendered to the combined AFRC and RUF forces. Isn't that right?

he became a very senior person. That was where he started becoming the devil he was.

Q. You describe him as a devil.

A. Yes, I do. Yes.

15:40:56 Q. Why?

A. Because when I persuaded that man to respect the Abidjan peace process by taking over from Foday Sankoh when he was arrested in Nigeria, he took that as a betrayal of his boss and he arranged to have me arrested, Mr Deen-Jalloh - he arranged to 15:41:42 have me arrested, Mr Deen-Jalloh, Juliet Gbessay James; Gbessay is G-B-E-S-S-A-Y; Dr Mohamed Barrie, B-A-R-R-I-E; Philip Palmer, and the then ambassador - the then Sierra Leone ambassador to Guinea, Mr Jabbi. I and the four others were with him, for two and a half years, from March 29 --

15:43:30 Q. Which year?

A. 1997.

Q. Until?

A. August 1999. And during that period we underwent a lot of punishment, torture. We were tortured almost every day, both 15:44:01 mentally and physically.

Q. On whose orders?

A. On Mosquito 's orders, that's Sam Bockarie.

Q. Now, we'll pause there for a moment. We'll deal with something now whilst - and then we'll come back to your account 15:44:26 of that period later. Now, for now, as a result of the punishment you received from the man you call the devil, Sam Bockarie, do you today bear any scars?

A. Yes, I do. It was to show these scars I decided to wear my short sleeve today. There was a day when - there was a day when President Kabbah called Mosquito on the field radio and attempted to persuade him to have us released. After the conversation, Mosquito came to ourselves and asked us to tell him how much money President Kabbah and the United Nations had given us to 15:45:47 betray Foday Sankoh because they were saying that we were responsible for Foday Sankoh's arrest.

Q. Where?

A. In Nigeria. I told him, "If this is the moment for us to die, then we are more than prepared for that. But there is no 15:46:22 way we can decide to tell you the wrong thing. We are simply behind you people to honour the peace accord." So he told his boys to tie us. We were in tie-bay. We were tied for almost four hours.

Q. You were in?

15:46:50 A. Tie-bay.

Q. How do you spell that?

A. They used to spell it T-A-B-E.

Q. And what does that mean?

A. When you are tied. They tie you with cord.

15:47:01 Q. How do they tie you with cord?

A. They tried to put our elbows together and tie it completely until the rope entered my skin and I started bleeding. But I was lucky because my - the thing did not effect my nerves. It was only my bones. My bones were dislocated. This one there, up to 15:47:22 now it's like that.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, you said you wanted to show your scars, but I can't see the scars.

THE WITNESS: The black scar is here.

PRESIDING JUDGE: No, it's okay. You don't need to - just pull your sleeve back. Yes, perhaps we can see.

THE WITNESS: This black thing.

PRESIDING JUDGE: And on the other side?

THE WITNESS: This one here. Here.

15:47:49 PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes. I think the witness is showing two black scars around the joint --

MR GRIFFITHS: Inner circumference of his elbow, both elbows.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Exactly.

15:48:08 THE WITNESS: That is not the only place I have scars. I have scars on my back too. There was another day Mosquito and Issa Sesay went to the village where we were imprisoned in Kangama. When they went they told Johnny Paul Koroma, whom they had also arrested, they told him to give them instructions to 15:48:35 kill us. Johnny Paul told them he would not do that. He said there is no way he would do that because he was of the SLA and we were in the RUF, so he would not risk his own name. He would not place his own name at all at risk by giving him instructions to kill us. So they went to the place. It was a court barri.

15:49:00 So they told myself, Palmer and Mr Deen-Jalloh to go and hold the pillar, the pillar of the barri, and then they asked one of the soldier, because by then they were mixed, AFRC and the Sierra Leonean RUF, they told an SLA soldier, a Sierra Leone government soldier, they told him to beat us with the military 15:49:36 belt, the belt that has the iron at the end. We were beaten until our backs could get soaked - until our clothes could get soaked. So if you see my back skin you will see that my skin at the back looks like a tiger.

MR GRIFFITHS:

Q. Maybe you might want to take off the headphones, put them down and go closer to the front bench, with your Honour's leave, so that your Honours can see what you're talking about.
A. We were beaten that day until the shirt that we wore got 15:50:28 soaked in blood.
Q. Can you indicate where the scars are? Can you yourself point to them?
A. The scars are all over. The scars are all over. Wherever you see the skin is coloured different.
15:50:42 PRESIDING JUDGE: Perhaps the witness could also go to the Prosecution side. It's not very clear. Some of my colleagues have seen the scars, but perhaps the Prosecution would like to see. It's more like a mild discolouration that we saw.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes. Thank you, Mr Witness. Please take your seat again.
MR GRIFFITHS:
Q. So your final assessment of the man who did that to you,
15:51:28 Sam Bockarie.
A. Sam Bockarie, I have started and I will end with this: He is - he was a devil.
Q. Now, I want to clarify one matter with you before we go on to one or two other individuals. And, Mr Fayia, if you are cold 15:51:49 you can put your jacket back on. Although, if you're comfortable with it off --
A. It's okay.

discuss how to maintain the ground.
Q. Well, let's talk about this meeting Sam Bockarie held. You said it was the first meeting he ever called. Was it before the two meetings at Superman Ground, or was it after those two 10:48:37 meetings?
A. After all our two meetings at Superman Grounds, that was the time that he called the meeting - the general meeting. The general meeting was held in Kailahun - I mean, in Buedu at Waterworks.
10:48:57 Q. Now, this is the third meeting, you said, held in Kailahun. That is Kailahun District, yes?
A. Yes.
Q. You referred to a place called Waterworks. Is that a place that is different from the Dawa crossing point, or are they one 10:49:15 and the same area?
A. Dawa crossing point is far off, but it's the same road from Buedu Town to Waterworks, it's just like from here and outside. But Dawa crossing point is far away.
Q. We have now talked about three meetings, maybe four, and I
10:49:37 want to clarify. You have mentioned two meetings amongst commanders at Superman Ground; you have mentioned a general meeting called by Sam Bockarie in Buedu, Kailahun District, in the vicinity of a place called Waterworks. Was there a fourth meeting held at the Dawa crossing point in relation to the 10:50:01 re-taking of Kono?
A. The fourth meeting we had was in Kono for the recapture of Kono.
Q. Well, let's talk about the Waterworks meeting. Sam Bockarie called this meeting. Did you go for that meeting?

A. I went there. I was not the only person who went. We were many who went.
Q. Who were some of the senior RUF commanders present at that meeting?
10:50:35 A. John Vincent, some AFRC soldiers like Leather Boot, Akim, Superman, Issa Sesay. A lot of commanders went. Because all the commanders wouldn't leave their front line, some stayed behind to maintain the situation.
Q. What happened at the meeting?
10:51:15 A. Sam Bockarie called this meeting. We all assembled there. We passed the night, and the following morning we went to Waterworks on the road leading to Dawa crossing point. The purpose of this meeting was how to re-attack Kono.
Q. Why did you and the others in the RUF want to re-attack
10:51:58 Kono? Why?
A. We wanted to be based in the town, and we were based there before and we were dislodged, so we want to recapture there. It wasn't just Kono. We wanted to advance as far as Makeni and Lunsar.
10:52:20 Q. Very well. What was the significance of Kono? You wanted to be based there, but was Kono of some particular significance or importance?
A. Kono, as people know, is a mining area. When you talk about capturing Kono, people would only think that you want to 10:52:54 mine diamond. But Kono was a target ahead of us. We cannot jump over Kono and go to Makeni. We had to start from Kono to establish a base before we spread out. That was the more reason why we wanted to capture Kono first.
Q. You said you also wanted to advance as far as Makeni and Lunsar. What was the purpose of advancing to both of those places?

A. We wanted to gain grounds. We controlled the ground before and we were pushed out, so we needed to regain it from the enemy. That was what we were fighting for.

Q. Thank you, Mr George. Was an attack on Freetown discussed at this Waterworks meeting?

A. No, no, no, no.

Q. Where were you to get the arms or ammunition - well, arms and ammunition - to re-take Kono? Was that discussed at this meeting?

A. I said it was one of the most important things for the meeting. What we were to do to capture Kono, where would we get the arms and ammunition from to capture Kono? Because we had a lot of arms. We had captured from it from the enemy, but we needed ammunition. That was the most important part of the meeting.

Q. And what was said in relation to ammunition that was to be used to re-take Kono during the meeting?

A. During the meeting I met a guy - we met a guy. It was not me alone, because it was a meeting called by Mosquito. He was called Abu Keita, a former general for ULIMO or Alhaji Kromah's general. We met him at that meeting.

Q. Meeting this fellow Abu Keita at that meeting at the Waterworks, had you met him before whilst serving with the RUF from 1991?

A. That was my first time of meeting him, because he never fought for my unit, so I did not know him. I was not used to him. It was at that meeting that I got to know him and other the north Colonel Banya and the SOS. We went to receive the ammunition but these officers went by road whilst I and SO Williams were airlifted by the helicopter from Cockerill to Magburaka at the airfield.

09:58:36 Q. Now, one other detail I want you to help us with. Who arrived on the aircraft at Magburaka?

A. Well, when we landed at the airfield we met - I met our own RUF commander Kailondo from Makeni, he was the RUF commander in Teko Barracks. We also had Rambo.

09:59:06 Q. Which Rambo?

A. Daniel Wankay, that is Foday Sankoh's bodyguard commander - former bodyguard commander. He was the commander in Magburaka. So the two of them were at the airfield with me. So when the plane landed at the airfield, I saw Fonti Kanu, Ibrahim Bah.

09:59:27 They came with the crew of the plane.

Q. And the crew of the plane were from which country?

A. Well, they looked like Russians, because they did not speak English. They just said hi. I did not talk to them.

Q. How many truckloads of cargo were brought by that flight?

09:59:56 A. When the cargo arrived, we off-loaded. When we off-loaded - there were two trucks anyway, but when we off-loaded - when the flight was leaving, about five minutes later the Alpha Jets appeared. It was after the Alpha Jet had bombarded that we were able to load the arms and ammunition into the trucks. Two 10:00:19 trucks there were.

Q. So the Alpha Jets came from Lungi and bombarded what?

A. It bombarded the airfield.

Q. Was the aircraft which brought the arms and ammunition still on the ground when that bombardment took place?

A. No, there were no rockets or bombs. The only ammunition the RUF used to have at this time, from the ammunition they bought from Voinjama, from the ex-ULIMO fighters, and those ammunition did not contain bombs. They were only ammunition, G3 rounds, AK rounds, and HMG rounds.

16:06:12

Q. Now, at this time - and bear in mind this is the time where the Guinean troops have crossed the border in Kailahun, were you able to trade across the Guinea border to buy ammunition at this time?

16:06:33

A. No. At this time, it was not possible. It was not possible because the Guineans had crossed over to Yanga and into Mafindor. We repelled them from Mafindor and they crossed again into Kono.

Q. So at this time, what was the source of ammunition for the RUF?

16:06:54

A. At this time, it was difficult, except when we would set ambush and we would capture ammunition from there. Those were the things that - things that Mike Lamin went and bartered that machine to get ammunition.

Q. And remind us, when did he do that?

16:07:19

A. Mike Lamin? It was around August - no, around September. But I also used to leave Pendembu to go to Vahun to the commander who was there. He was called Major Tengbeh. I used to buy one or two or three sardine tins from him, at times one box or two box. We used to buy that from him because he was the commander there from Vahun until Masabulahun. He was the commander there. So I used to come from Pendembu, drive my pick-up, and I would go to Bomaru and meet him and I would buy those little amounts of ammunition and I will buy some other basic things and I would return to Pendembu.

16:07:43

Q. Carrying on:

"In the light of this, sir, I am hereby appealing and requesting that you please meet the President and explain things to him in detail for his immediate attention."

16:08:21

Now, Mr Sesay, can you help as to why that paragraph is written in that way:

"I am hereby appealing and requesting that you please meet the President and explain things to him in detail for his immediate attention."

16:08:55

So where it says "explain things to him," who is the "him" from your understanding of this letter?

A. This, except if you say we should go through what - what is in this document, but I can tell you that at the time that they wrote this document I was in Pendembu. But if you say I should comment on what they have written in this document then that wouldn't be a problem.

16:09:19

Q. So who is the him being - explain things to him. "Him" who?

16:09:34

A. Well, the letter was addressed - he sent the letter to the President, then I think they are referring to the President for the protocol to talk to the President for him to understand the situation. Something like that.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Griffiths, allow me to interrupt. The witness was talking of buying sardine tins from a commander in Vahun. This commander was a commander of what group? I'm looking at page 148 at the beginning.

16:10:00

Mr Sesay, commander from what group?

THE WITNESS: This commander was a company commander for AFL. He was working under the battalion commander of Lofa. They called him Major Tengbeh.

MR GRIFFITHS:

Q. And who was the battalion commander of Lofa?

16:10:34 A. At this time it was a former old Doe soldier called Colonel Togba. He was the battalion commander in Lofa.

Q. And help us, this transaction that you had with Major Tengbeh, describe what kind of transaction was that? Was Major Tengbeh acting on behalf of someone, was he ordered by someone, 16:11:15 or was he doing this in a private commercial capacity with you? Which?

MR KOUMJIAN: Objection. Leading.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Griffiths, you could have asked in what capacity, without suggesting the various capacities that 16:11:32 exist. Rephrase, please.

MR GRIFFITHS: I gave him a choice.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Rephrase the question, please.

MR GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr Sesay, help us, please. What was the nature of that 16:11:46 deal you were having with Major Tengbeh? Help us.

A. Major Tengbeh's business, I and Mike used to go to Vahun. It was purely Major Tengbeh who was doing it undercover on his own. The ammunition that they were giving him for the borderline, that was what he was selling to us. So he was doing 16:12:10 it secretly and he didn't want his colleagues to know about it. So it was like --

Q. Which colleagues?

A. Like his soldiers who were deployed on the ground with him. It was a small border - it was only his small brother who knew the business when he was selling the ammunition to us, but the other soldiers like his deputy, his clerk, they only knew that we were going to buy condiments with which Tengbeh was assisting us with, including fuel. But Tengbeh was keeping it secret so that 16:12:51 people would not know. That was a personal deal that he was making.

PRESIDING JUDGE: When the witness says buying sardine tins, I assume these were tins of sardines, fish.

THE WITNESS: No, my Lord, the ammunition - sorry, my Lord. 16:13:09 The ammunition, one box contains two tins. Those are the tins we refer to as sardine tins. Sardine tins of AK round, sardine tins of HMG rounds. It's not sardine to be eaten. It contains ammunition.

MR GRIFFITHS:

16:13:34 Q. When you refer to condiments, Mr Sesay, what are you talking about?

A. I'm talking about salt, Maggi.

Q. And help me, that phrase "sardine tins" as used by combatants in the RUF, does it refer to tins of fish or does it 16:13:58 refer to something else?

A. No, this was sardine tins that contained ammunition in them. Because the tin was sealed. When you open it - when you open it you would see the ammunitions in packets. Each contained 20 rounds. One sardine tin contained some boxes - some sardine 16:14:25 tins contained 30 and others 35 and 40, sometimes 20 rounds in each packet.

Q. Those things they call sardine tins that you've just described, what material are they made out of?

A. It's a tin. It's metal. When you open it just like sardine, you open it, you turn it and it rolls. But it's a thick metal.

Q. And what do you use to open this sardine tin as described?

A. It had its key that could be plugged on its side and you press it and it opens the tin and it gets to the edge, then you open it.

Q. Is it like those keys that they have on sardine tins which do contain fish?

A. No, it's different. This one that had the sardine that had fish, you have somewhere to hook it up and turn it and roll it. It's not like that. This one has - the key is an eye and you plug it on the side of it, you hit it, it would make a hole in the tin, then you start moving it until it cuts it right around and it would open up.

Q. And when you pull it open does it open like a sardine tin which contains fish? Do you pull it back?

A. Yes, when you open it it opens like this and it would open flat. Sometimes you would cut it out and remove the entire top and the tin would be left open and you can take the ammunition out.

Q. And what kind of ammunition would come in such a sardine tin?

A. AK rounds, G3 rounds, HMG rounds. They used to be in such sardine tins. And even BZT rounds could be in those sardine tins.

Q. And tell me, what were you buying from Major Tengbeh, sardines or ammunition?

A. Ammunition. AK rounds. We used to buy them. Sometimes when I go there I get one or two sardines, I and Mike Lamin would bring that to Pendembu up to the time that he transacted that business with the battalion commander for Bomi Hills when the two of them met at ULC camp.

Q. How did you first establish that contact with Major Tengbeh?

16:17:20

A. Well, before this time after the retreat before I was posted to Pendembu business was going on at the border between the RUF security and Tengbeh's men. Civilians were doing business in that Vahun area.

16:17:40

THE INTERPRETER: Can he kindly repeat the two places he has just spoken about.

MR GRIFFITHS:

Q. Pause there. Civilians were doing business in that area, and you named two places. What are they?

16:17:49

A. Folima in Liberia. That's the last village from Liberia to enter Sierra Leone. Bomaru is the last village in Sierra Leone to go - when you cross the border that's the last village, Bomaru. So at the border where there are no villages that's where they used to meet to transact those businesses.

16:18:16

Q. Pause. That village, the last village in Liberia, what's it called?

A. F-O-L-I-M-A.

Q. And just give us a time frame for when that trading began?

A. I think that business started around - around March, ending

16:18:45

April they were doing that business.

Q. Which year?

A. 1998. Because when you look at the people who were along that border, on the Sierra Leonean side they were Mende people. When you cross into Vahun they were Guma Mende people. They were the same Mende people. They were transacting business along that border.

Q. And how did you personally come to meet Major Tengbeh?

A. Well, when Bockarie posted me and I was now in Pendembu, in May I went to visit Bomaru and I met the commander in Bomaru and I asked him how the business was along the border and he said the business was going on well, there was no problem. So he told me that he had met with the company commander that was in Vahun, that they have met there two or three times.

16:19:43 Q. What was the name of the company commander in Vahun?

A. I said his name was Major Tengbeh.

Q. Thank you. Go on?

A. While the commander who was in Bomaru for the RUF was Vandy Kosia, so it was Vandy Kosia who sent Tengbeh when the two of us met after had I come from Pendembu. So we met at the border, we became friends. Then I told him that I would like to be buying two or three items. Then he said whenever you want to come to Vahun, the only thing that you would do is to come late in the evening and when you come late in the evening I wouldn't have any problems. So we used to come late in the evenings. After we had bought what we wanted to buy then we would return at night. Sometimes we would come around 7 o'clock and we'll be there until 9 o'clock then we would return. Tengbeh used to send his younger brother called Patrick. He used to come and spend two to three, four, five days with us in Vahun and then he would return.

Q. And what was the cost? How much would you pay for a sardine tin of ammunition?

A. Well, I at that time used to talk to the RUF in Pendembu who had retreated with bikes, generators. Those were the things we used to give - those were the things I used to give. Because if you had a bike in Pendembu and you do not have petrol and you were in Baima, the area was small and you couldn't use it. So we would talk to you to sell it so that we can have basic items for the front line and the soldiers used to agree to that. Those are the things we used to use, I and Mike, to sell in exchange.

Q. Mike being who?

A. Mike Lamin. Who used to meet me in Pendembu and the two of us used to go to Vahun.

16:21:43 Q. Let's go back to the letter, shall we. The document in front of you. This Alhaji Musa Cisse, is he related to you?

A. Oh, no. He's not my relation.

Q. I think we had reached the fourth paragraph:

"We appreciate the assistance we have been receiving and we 16:22:23 want you to believe that we have nowhere else to go to cry to for help besides you and His Excellency."

Pausing there, Mr Sesay, were you aware of any assistance being provided by either Alhaji Musa Cisse or Dr Charles Ghankay Taylor prior to this letter of June 1998?

16:22:57 A. No, I was not aware of any assistance that Mr Taylor had given us before this time. The only time I was aware of was in 1991, 1992 after the withdrawal of the Liberians. I did not know of any other assistance up to this time of this letter.

Q. "We usually receive materials without bombs and not even up 16:23:24 to 20 boxes which makes the operation to capture and defend any strategic point difficult."

Who were you receiving materials from at this time?

A. Well, I understand - I did not know if he was receiving material. The ammunition that we used to buy --

Q. And can you assist before we dispense with this document as to why it's unsigned? Can you help us?
A. I don't know, because if it was Bockarie who sent the letter, he would have appended his signature. Because you saw 16:26:40 the salute report that he sent to Mr Sankoh, he signed it. So if he was going to send an important letter in relation to the shortage of ammunition and his signature is not on it, I don't seem to understand this letter.
Q. Because let's look again, please, at - let's put that one 16:26:58 away and look at exhibit D-9. Let's look at the last page of that document. We've looked at this document on several occasions and we know that it's a salute report from Sam Bockarie to the leader. Whose signature is that?
A. This is Bockarie's signature.
16:27:54 Q. Now, knowing Sam Bockarie as you did, Mr Sesay, would Sam Bockarie write to the President of Liberia through Musa Cisse, the chief of protocol, and not sign the letter?
A. No, I think if it was a letter that he himself sent it, he would have signed it. And if you look at the letterhead, it said
16:28:26 from the brigade commander from brigade headquarters Buedu. Buedu was not the brigade headquarters at this time. At this time people were calling Buedu - everybody in the RUF was calling Buedu as defence headquarters, not brigade headquarters. By this time in June brigade headquarters was to be Pendembu but not 16:28:49 Buedu because Buedu was defence headquarters, not brigade.
Q. Finally before we depart from these matters, the dealings with Major Tengbeh, Mr Sesay, was that something you were directly involved in, or was that something you were told about?
A. I used to go to Vahun, I and Mike went to Vahun on different occasions. The only one that I was not involved in was when Mike went to the machine from Baiwala and sold to Dixon at ULC. But I and Mike used to go to Vahun. Because we used to go there to buy condiments and ammunition from Tengbeh.

16:29:48 PRESIDING JUDGE: What machine is this that he is referring to that Mike sold?

MR GRIFFITHS:

Q. What machine did Mike sell, Mr Sesay? Remind us?

A. My Lord, it was a machine that used to dig water wells. A 16:30:06 machine that used to dig water wells, but I did not know its name but I had seen the machine at Baiwala when it was parked there.

Q. And when was it taken by Mike to Liberia?

A. I said Mike took it to Liberia around September when he transacted that business.

16:30:26 Q. With whom did he transact that business?

A. With the AFL battalion commander for Bomi Hills, Bob Dixson.

Q. Was that a person who Mike Lamin knew from before?

A. I believe that Mike had known him before.

16:30:53 Q. From where?

A. Well, Mike withdrew in October 1999, went through Liberia and disarmed to ECOMOG and went to Monrovia. So he passed through Gbarnga and went to the Ivory Coast, then he came back, passed through - even at the time that he was coming in that 1997

16:31:21 it was through Bomi Hills that he passed and crossed into Kailahun, Baiwala, then he entered Sierra Leone. So I believe that he had known Bob before that time.

MR GRIFFITHS: Thank you very much. Would that be a convenient point?

A. Yes, Senegalese, yes.
Q. What was that link?
A. Well, Senegalese was at the Mano River with the ULIMO-K forces, the time the RUF crossed around that November 1996, when 11:54:41 Mike Lamin and others surrendered to the ULIMO. That was the first time Senegalese had a contact with the RUF. So in 1997, when Mike Lamin left Liberia to come, he came along with Senegalese to Sierra Leone. From that time, Senegalese was in Kenema with Sam Bockarie during the AFRC period. And when the 11:55:09 intervention happened, Senegalese withdrew with Sam Bockarie to Kailahun, and he was in Kailahun before we arrived there. If you see in that report that Sam Bockarie wrote to Mr Sankoh, that salute report, he said he had sent people to Superman to receive ammunition that he captured during the Fitti-Fatta attack, and 11:55:40 Superman seized the people. Senegalese was among that group. He was in that group, and he went to Superman. He was with Superman until December. Senegalese came to Makeni with Superman, and I was in Makeni when Superman went to Lunsar. So Senegalese was in Sierra Leone from 1997, before this invasion in Freetown which 11:56:12 occurred in 1999, January.
Q. The second question: Have you heard of a Red Goat Battalion?
A. Yes. That battalion operated with the Mani group in Koinadugu. I heard about that name in December 1998 when we met 11:56:47 at Makeni.
Q. Who made up that Red Goat Battalion?
A. They were the RUF soldiers.
Q. Were they Liberians?
A. No.

A. I remember.
Q. And you told us that the border remained closed until when?
A. I said after Ibrahim Bah passed through the border, from December it was only Ibrahim Bah who had passed there. From 15:05:37 December 1999 to May 2000 that border was closed.
Q. Thank you. Now, in May --
PRESIDING JUDGE: Excuse me, Mr Griffiths. How does this witness know, unless he was stationed at the border? How does he know it was only Ibrahim Bah who passed through that border? How 15:06:01 can he tell that?
MR GRIFFITHS:
Q. Well, you answer that question, Mr Sesay. How do you know that?
A. Well, my lord, the commander in Buedu used to report to me,
15:06:12 and, secondly, when Mr Taylor called me in late May 2000, I understood from even the Sierra Leone civilians who were refugees across the Liberian border, that they wanted to go back home but the border was closed, and even the civilians who were in Buedu who had their family members in Liberia, who wanted to return to 15:06:43 Sierra Leone, they told me, when I got to Buedu - and I was the first person who used a vehicle on that road from that time that Ibrahim Bah left the border. So the border was closed.
JUDGE LUSSICK: What's the connection with the border being closed with Mr Taylor phoning the witness in late May 2000?
15:07:04 MR GRIFFITHS: I am coming to that:
Q. In late May 2000, Mr Sesay, did you speak to Mr Taylor?
A. No, I did not talk to Mr Taylor. I spoke to Mr Taylor when I went to Monrovia.
Q. In late May 2000, did you speak to anyone?

A. No, on telephone in Liberia, no, no.
Q. How did you come to cross the border, as you told the learned judges, in May 2000?
A. After the incident, that is the arrest of the UNAMSIL
15:07:56 peacekeepers, I was in Makeni in late May 2000 because the incident happened early May. I was in Makeni when I got the radio message from the commander who was in Pendembu, and he was called Denis Lansana. Now, he sent a radio message to me.
Q. To do what?
15:08:17 A. He said a helicopter had landed in Pendembu and the person that landed in Pendembu with the helicopter was Benjamin Yeaten. He said when he came, he asked for him, the commander, and he told him - he asked for me and the commander told him that I was in Makeni.
15:08:37 Q. Go on.
A. Benjamin in turn told him that he should inform me that President Taylor wanted to see me, so I should come because President Taylor wanted to see me. That was how I got the information and travelled to the border from Makeni.
15:08:54

JUDGE LUSSICK: Look, I definitely heard the witness say, "When Mr Taylor called me in late May 2000," and when you tried to expand that, Mr Griffiths, the witness said, "I did not talk to Mr Taylor."
15:09:09 MR GRIFFITHS:
Q. Well, when you said --
PRESIDING JUDGE: Can I refer you precisely to the text? That is at page 109, at line - it begins at line 18.
MR GRIFFITHS: 109.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Yes, line 18, where the answer is: "Well, my Lord, the commander in Buedu used to report to me and, secondly, when Mr Taylor called me in late May 2000. I understood from even the Sierra Leone civilians who were refugees," et cetera, et cetera.

15:09:53

MR GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr Sesay, let us clarify this. When in answering that question, you said, "When Mr Taylor called me," What did you mean by "When Mr Taylor called me"?

15:10:15

A. What I mean, when he sent for me, when he sent for me, because that was the only means Mr Taylor used to call me when he sent for me to go to Monrovia.

Q. Now, just so that we are clear about this, because I don't want to go into the details of this now, I want to deal with things sequentially. When Sam Bockarie left in December 1999, did he take his satellite phone with him?

15:10:39

A. Yes, he went with the satellite phones.

Q. After Bockarie left in mid-December 1999, did you, Issa Sesay, have a satellite phone?

A. Yes, Mr Sankoh sent a satellite phone for me in January 2000 in Makeni with his bodyguard. He was operating a satellite phone.

15:11:06

Q. Now, this was the satellite phone - because you remember a few days ago we discussed satellite phones; do you remember?

A. Yes, I remember.

15:11:26

Q. Was this the satellite phone which you tell us had no credit on it?

A. That's the phone, yes. It was only Mr Sankoh who called me on that phone until that May incident when he was arrested, and there was no credit in the phone for me to make a call. That's the phone.

Q. Right. And the reason why I don't want to open up this issue of you going to Monrovia in too much detail is because we need to deal with the issue of Sankoh's arrest and deal with matters sequentially. So, just to clarify this issue: That satellite phone which Sankoh gave you in January 2000, as far as you were aware, did Mr Taylor have the number of that phone?

A. No, no, he did not have it.

Q. Did Mr Taylor ever call you on that phone?

A. Never, he did not call me on that phone.

Q. So when, in late May, you say Mr Taylor called you, what did you mean?

A. Well, I mean that he sent someone to invite me because, honestly speaking, had Mr Taylor had my satellite phone number or if any of his commanders had my satellite phone number then there would haven't been the need for Mr Taylor to send a helicopter with Benjamin to come to Pendembu to invite me. But it was Benjamin who used the helicopter. He landed in Pendembu and told the commander, Denis Lansana, to call me, saying that Mr Taylor wanted to see me and that was the only means by which they could reach me. So Denis sent a radio message to Makeni and that was the reason why I travelled to the border.

THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, could the interpreter just make the something clear. The word "call" in Krio could either mean invited me or called me. So that was where I think the misunderstanding was. But in this sense he is talking about invitation.

JUDGE LUSSICK: I'm just trying to make sense out of the the other operations that we had undertaken because we want to make sure that we take Freetown and hold on to power.

Q. Mr Witness, are you telling us now when you talk about the plan for a fearful operation, that this is what Bockarie told you he discussed with Charles Taylor?

A. Yes, that was what Sam Bockarie said."

Now, what do you understand by the use of the word "fearful", Mr Sesay?

A. Well, fearful - fearful. Fearful is to do terrible things beyond expectation, that is what you call a fearful thing, because the context in which "fearful" is used is to go and fight, the way he used it.

Q. So if you made an operation fearful, what kind of operation would that be?

A. Well, that was - here it was committing crimes against the people, the civilians and even against the troops that you are fighting against. Because if you said to go and make something fearful at the battlefront, that is what it means; destruction.

Q. Now, you have learnt, have you not, Mr Sesay, even though you were, yourself, not present, that some fearful things were done in Freetown during the invasion in January 1999. You know that, don't you?

A. Yes, yes. I know that.

Q. Now, I want you to understand what this witness was telling these judges, so let's put it together, shall we. One, the plan to attack Kono, Makeni and on to Freetown came from Charles Taylor, brought by Sam Bockarie; Liberians were also supposed to be involved in this operation; and the operation was to be made fearful and, again, that was a suggestion originating from 12:50:36 A. Well, I cannot append my signature when my name is being spelt wrongly. Since I was going to school, since primary school I knew that I used to spell my name with an "I", not an "E", so I cannot look at my name being spelt wrongly and then I append my signature there, no.

12:51:06 Q. Now, Mr Sesay, was it practice in the RUF to sign operational orders or documents before any attack?

A. My dad, this is my first time of seeing this kind of thing. That in the RUF operation to say before the operation commenced you will write a document and sign it, but throughout the RUF we 12:51:36 did not have such a system. We have a meeting, we plan the operation and we give orders to the commanders before - the commanders who carry out the operation, that was the period. But we did not make documents, append our own signatures. For instance, Mr Mr Sankoh was within the RUF, when he was at Zogoda,

12:51:54 he used to direct the war at that time, if it was for the northern jungle, the Kangari Hills, if he wanted Mohamed Tarawalli to attack Kabala he will send a message, a coded message, he will say attack so and so place, but we did not append signatures on documents to carry on with operations, no.

12:52:16 Q. We are talking in general terms. Let's talk about the time that you were leader of the RUF. Did you ever sign any operational order relating to any attack during the time that you, Issa Sesay, were the leader of the RUF?

Ivory Coast with Maada Bio to the peace talks, so they left us." Go on, continue from there.

A. Yes. I said they left me in Abidjan and they were on their way to Libya, Mr Sankoh, Fayia Musa, Deen-Jalloh, Peter Vandi and others. So, when they got to Burkina Faso, Mr Sankoh said Peter Vandi should return, because at that time Peter Vandi was the area commander for the Kailahun District. So, Peter Vandi returned to Abidjan where he met me, and Mr Sankoh communicated with Dr Barrie, saying that he should provide transportation for myself and Peter Vandi, that we should come through Guinea and to return to Kailahun, Sierra Leone, because he had given an assignment to Peter Vandi to do. That was the first time Peter Vandi came. When Peter Vandi came we started to construct the field in Buedu.

15:25:04 MR GRIFFITHS:

Q. Mr Sesay, tell me, in or about May of 2000, did you have a satellite phone?

A. May 2000, yes, I had the phone that Mr Sankoh had given to me in January 2000.

15:25:20 Q. That phone that you had in or around May 2000, did it come from Liberia?

A. No, no. It was the phone that Mr Sankoh gave to me.

Q. Well, not according to this witness; 5 February 2008, page 3083, line 13:

"Yes, the time Sam Bockarie left and went to Liberia to Mr Taylor, and again when Foday Sankoh was arrested in Freetown during the May incident 2000, Issa took over as a leader, as acting leader of the RUF. During that time again, Issa had a satellite phone through Liberia. So he himself was talking to Mr Taylor, so whatever they discussed, he would do the same thing by sending messages to all commanders through field radio communication, and even if the RUF spokesman or whomsoever was representing BBC Focus on Africa or the VOA, they would use the same satellite phone to talk."

Is that true?

A. That is a lie, because that person testified against me as Prosecution witness, but he did not say that at the time that he was testifying against me, no. And I did not have a satellite phone in - from Liberia in May 2000. All of those things that he was saying that I communicated with Mr Taylor on the telephone, he testified against me as a Prosecution witness, but he did not mention those.

Q. Now, were you given - ever given any order by Charles Taylor, and I mean you personally, Mr Sesay, to hold - to organise - to reorganise in Kono?

A. No, no. Mr Taylor never gave me such orders because, from the time RUF captured Kono, that was how it was up to the time of the disarmament, so how could we have reorganised? I did not receive such orders from Mr Taylor.

Q. Page 3102 testimony of 5 February 2008, line 10:

"Immediately we got to Koidu, there was a now communication between the authorities, Issa Sesay, Superman and Sam Bockarie for them to reorganise and base in Kono. For us not to lose captured in Kono was what we used to enter Makeni, and the material and ammunition that we captured in Teko Barracks, yes, those are the ones we used to go to Masiaka and Waterloo, but not Freetown.

14:47:57 Q. Thank you. And you said you went to Waterloo because you were going to Freetown, that was the seat of power. That's what you told the Court, correct?

A. Yes, that was what I said.

Q. So this attack aimed at Freetown that reached all the way

14:48:12 to Waterloo came through the ammunition that Sam Bockarie brought back from Liberia. We agree on that, don't we?

A. Well, the ammunition that Bockarie brought, we used that in Kono. That one got finished in Kono. The ammunition that we captured in Kono was what we used to go up to Makeni.

14:48:37 Q. Because you told us the RUF was desperate for ammunition before that time, you didn't have any before Bockarie brought back this ammunition, correct?

A. Yes. In '98, we had ammunition constraints.

Q. So all that attack on Koidu Town, Kono, Magburaka, Makeni, 14:48:58 all the way up to Waterloo, none of that would have happened without the ammunition Sam Bockarie brought back from Liberia, correct?

A. Yes. I know that people used to fear Sam Bockarie.

that SAJ Musa is dead, so Bockarie now saw that, because Gullit was his friend, he was ready to work with him. And he said, "If SAJ Musa is dead, so wait there, let me tell my men in Makeni so all of you could meet up together to go and attack Freetown." But Gullit did not wait and he went ahead to go and attack Freetown, my Lord.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Okay. Thank you.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. I would like at this time to ask the witness some questions. Did you hear about a radio broadcast and I'm just --

JUDGE DOHERTY: Mr Koumjian, just before you do.

Mr Sesay, counsel asked you a question, I'm referring here to page 88, line 8. "You sent Rambo to Waterloo." And your answer is, "Rambo came to Waterloo." Did you send him or did he go on his own, a frolic of his own?

THE WITNESS: My Lord, after the failed attack on Port Loko, at that time the AFRC were in Freetown. It was Bockarie who gave the instructions that Rambo and others should go towards Waterloo. And when Rambo and others went to Waterloo, they met the ECOMOG there, the Guineans, and they fought for two weeks before they could get Waterloo. And when they got Waterloo, it was in February and when the AFRC was retreating from central Freetown.

JUDGE DOHERTY: Mr Sesay, I'm asking about the order. Are you saying now that you didn't order Rambo, but Sam Bockarie ordered Rambo?

THE WITNESS: My Lord, the instructions came to me from Sam Bockarie for Rambo to go to Waterloo.

PRESIDING JUDGE: And you, in turn, ordered Rambo to go,

yes?

THE WITNESS: Yes, my Lord, yes.

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. And the instruction, Mr Sesay, was, "Go to Freetown. Take Waterloo and go to Freetown." Correct?

A. Well, the instruction was, you know, if you could get Waterloo then you could go to Freetown. But if you could not get Waterloo you could not go to Freetown. And even when we got Waterloo we could not go because ECOMOG was in Hastings and in Jui, so they could not go further than that.

Q. The purpose of attacking Waterloo was to get to Freetown, to seize the capital, the seat of power, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was the order you gave to Rambo that came from Sam Bockarie, correct?

A. Yes.

MR KOUMJIAN: Could we please play a radio clip, P-279, the transcript is - that's 279A is the radio clip and B is the transcript.

And while that's being done, we played a video, December '98, and I'd ask that video be marked for identification. Also we had a satellite photograph 16H, in tab 16H, where Port Loko and surroundings areas, Lungi and Conakry, are depicted --

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Koumjian, first of all, in relation to that video clip, we are not agreed as to what that video clip depicts. I asked you and you still wouldn't tell me. So unless and until I understand what it is we are admitting in evidence, I can't admit it in evidence. What does that video clip depict?

behind Hastings, he was based there. Because ECOMOG was in Hastings so he withdrew to behind Hastings towards Rokel, he was there with his men.

Q. The RUF camp and the AFRC - or the Gullit camp at Benguema, it was just a ten-minute walk in between, correct?

16:02:11

A. Where the RUF was in relation to where Gullit was is more than a ten-minute walk. Benguema and the area in Waterloo where they were, like where Rambo was, it was long - it could be around 30 minutes, around that, over 30 minutes' walk because Superman too was across the street in Waterloo, in the town, so it was a bit far, it's about a 30-minute walk.

16:02:43

Q. Before we leave this document, I just want to briefly touch on something you said. You said someone was based in Makeni. You're talking about Major Mannah, he was based in Makeni, correct?

16:03:06

A. Yes. It's Major Mannah, the late Major Mannah.

Q. But we see in this report, this is a report approved by Major Mannah and it's signed by Lieutenant Raymond Kartewu, do you see that?

16:03:26

A. Yes, I've seen it.

Q. Just as you would approve a report by Rambo but you were based in Makeni, correct?

A. Well, yes, I could approve report for Rambo when I was in Makeni but the Raymond that I knew as a Black Guard was assigned with Kennedy, he was with the mining unit. He did not come to Makeni during the fighting. He was part of the mining, with Kennedy in Kono.

16:03:51

Q. When the - Rambo and Superman fought for two weeks against these ECOMOG troops in the Waterloo/Hastings area, they were trying to get to Freetown. That was the mission given Rambo and Superman, correct?

A. Yes. That was the purpose of the mission, but they could not gain control over Hastings. Hastings remained in the hands of ECOMOG, including Jui, until the time the AFRC attackers withdrew from Freetown.

Q. Now, one group did get through to Freetown, that was with the Rambo and Superman forces, and that was a group of men under the command of Rambo Red Goat, correct?

16:05:01 A. Well, I did not know about that, because I did not send anyone.

Q. Did you know that Rambo Red Goat reached Freetown with some troops?

PRESIDING JUDGE: You mean Rambo Red Goat?

16:05:21 MR KOUMJIAN: I thought I said Rambo Red Goat.

Q. Rambo Red Goat. Did you know that Rambo Red Goat commanding some soldiers reached Freetown?

A. Well, at that time, I did not know. It was only during my trial that one of the AFRC junior commanders who were in Freetown

16:05:51 said that during the time they retreated from Congo Cross Bridge to Calaba Town and to Allen Town, that was the time Rambo Red Goat met them in Calaba Town, so all of them joined troops to leave Freetown but during the time they came there, they entered there, I didn't know, at the time they came and met the AFRC at 16:06:22 Allen Town because that was almost out of Freetown. He said that was where they met them.

Q. Well, this Rambo Red Goat was one of those responsible for some of the worst atrocities in Freetown. You heard that, didn't you?

the first page or what?

MR KOUMJIAN: At this point, your Honour, could we just mark the first page, the photograph, please?

MR KOUMJIAN:

Q. I want to try to read two witnesses' testimonies to you, Mr Sesay, and see if we can do this before the end of the day. On 6 October 2008, page 17977, and I'm going to start reading from the bottom, from about five lines up, thank you, line 25:

"Q. What happened when you got there to Issa's house?

A. Well, they took us there, they assembled us there, and our number increased and they provided trucks in which we were loaded to be taken. Three trucks. When we got to Lunsar, our own truck, one of them, stopped there. That was where we disembarked, and we stayed there together with Superman. They said those who had come from Kabala should stay, so we stayed while others went ahead."

And then he was asked to go over the answer a bit. He was asked:

"Q. Before you left Makeni, did anyone tell you where you were going or what the mission was?

A. Yes. Issa, in front of his house, that was where we were assembled and that was where he told us.

Q. What did Issa say?

A. He said we should take reinforcements to Freetown.

Q. Did all the trucks go together, the three trucks to Lunsar?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened at Lunsar?

A. Well, when we got to Lunsar we were stopped there, they said those of us who had come from Kabala should stay, stop there and other truck with some people went ahead and one of my friends, they went. He was asked the name of the friend.

A. Rubber Rubber. He was asked if they knew where they were going and he said 'they went to Freetown'."

16:30:48 Going to the next page, in the middle of the page, he was asked at line 11:

"Q. What did Rubber Rubber tell you after he returned about what happened?

A. He said well when he came I asked him, I asked him 16:31:08 about the mission they had taken along, and he said they went but they stopped at Waterloo. He said not all of them were able to go to Freetown. He said they took - they used a bypass and went to Freetown. He said when they went, they met Five-Five and others. At the time that they went 16:31:28 SAJ Musa had already died."

Mr Sesay, is that correct, that in Makeni, you sent trucks of reinforcements, three trucks, and they went to Lunsar, one went to Lunsar and two went on to Waterloo?

A. No, Mr Lawyer. I did not send any reinforcement and this 16:31:54 witness testified against me. He testified against me. It was the same witness that said that he saw me - even when he had not known me at that time he said he saw me kill five people. This same witness testified during my trial, but it's not true. I did not send any reinforcements to Freetown.

do this time because you were doing what Charles Taylor told you to do, isn't that correct?

A. No, no, no. I totally disagree because I knew that during the Lome Accord the ECOMOG mandate had been changed, especially the Nigerians from a fighting force to a peacekeeping force. So the Nigerian leader at that time, President Obasanjo from the Lome Accord, he had interest in seeing peace prevail in Sierra Leone. And he had interest in the Lome - to see that the Lome Accord is - were able to accomplish the peace mission in Sierra Leone. So that was not to say when I was fighting against them in '98 I should continue, because their mandates had changed. So I was still supposed to continue working with them.

Q. Mr Sesay, you could contact any of them by telephone, you had a satellite phone, didn't you?

A. Yes, I had a sat phone but --

Q. Go ahead.

A. But before these meetings, my sat phone did not have credit.

Q. Well Charles Taylor gave you another satellite phone, didn't he?

A. Well, that was during Abuja II, when I went to escort the delegation was the time he gave me that phone - I mean, sorry, Abuja I.

Q. If you needed credit, you could purchase credit from Freetown or from Monrovia. There was --

A. Well --

Q. Excuse me, let me just start again. The satellite phones, the credit you got from scratch cards; is that correct?

A. Well, they used to buy it for me. I never bought it to know the procedure, how it was being filled, because at the time Mr Sankoh gave us the phone, it hadn't any credit, and I never used to buy credit for it.

Q. If you were going to go and visit Monrovia - you told us about a total of five trips, is that correct, Mr Sesay, that you made to Monrovia? Would it be right to say you claim that you made three trips - well, let's go through them. You said you went one time in May 2000, regarding the peacekeepers, correct?

A. My Lord, I think I said I made six trips.

15:14:27 Q. Okay. So after the appointment as interim leader at the second meeting at RIA, when you came back, when they had the letter, you made three more trips?

A. Well, the meeting at RIA was the third trip.

Q. What trips did you make after that?

15:14:56 A. After that, I made the Abuja I trip, and after the Abuja I trip, I made another trip during which Mr Taylor invited me, regarding Sam Bockarie's return, and I also made another trip in March of 2001, but by then I did not see Mr Taylor.

Q. So on - you made three additional trips after being the 15:15:24 leader, but you're saying that you maintained a permanent presence of RUF in Monrovia and a house for you to stay just so you could come three times to Monrovia? Wouldn't it have made more sense to stay at a hotel?

A. Well, a hotel would have been expensive than to pay rent, 15:15:59 because every day you pay in the hotel, but when you rent a house, people will stay there.

Q. Mr Sesay, how many days did you spend in Monrovia after becoming the interim leader?

A. Well, like the trip for Abuja I, I was in Monrovia until Honours wanted to pose.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Well proceed, Mr Anyah.

MR ANYAH:

Q. Mr Witness, a couple of clarifying questions about what you have just said.

A. Yes.

Q. Before the question that was first posed by his Honour, Justice Lussick, I had asked you about whom you meant by, "These people" that Musa Cisse had been in contact with and you said Musa Cisse had been in contact with Sam Bockarie or the RUF, this was through Jungle.

Now a couple more questions. You referred to secret deals. You said, "Mostly the selling of ammunition to Sam Bockarie for cash."

A. Yes.

Q. To your knowledge in which year and in which month did these secret deals begin?

A. Okay. In late 1998, like I said, after Sam Bockarie's first visit to Monrovia, Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten were very close and Benjamin Yeaten will send ammunition using Jungle or Sampson. Jungle or Sampson will take the ammunition to Sam Bockarie and sometimes they were picked up from Benjamin Yeaten's yard and sometimes they were picked up from Musa Cisse's yard at night. Everything they did, sometimes we discussed about it, like especially me, most times Jungle told me about these things.

Q. Remember to go slowly, Mr Witness, we are following you.

A. I am sorry, if I am going too fast.

Q. Now, what sorts of ammunition?

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Anyah, just before - the witness said, or he referred to what he called the first visit by Sam Bockarie to Monrovia.

Mr Witness, how do you know that this was Sam Bockarie's 12:33:58 first visit to Monrovia? Is it possible that he could have visited before? Was this the first visit that you were aware of or could there have been earlier visits than late 1998 that you didn't know about?

THE WITNESS: Jungle, who was the runner for Sam Bockarie 12:34:26 was the one who told me that it was Sam's first visit, so I got to know that. So I believe that his first visit was that of September.

MR ANYAH: Madam President, I don't know if that satisfies your Honour.

12:34:41 Q. Now, Mr Witness, you referred to the ammunition being taken at night from either Benjamin Yeaten's house or Musa Cisse's house. What amount of ammunition are we talking about?

A. Okay. For the one that I saw, at the time they were leaving I saw something like five boxes of AK-47 rounds and few 12:35:24 RPG rockets in rice bags. And Jungle said this is what we would take - we would carry later. And the movement was always done at night by Sampson and Jungle because these were the people that Benjamin Yeaten normally sent. And sometimes there - they would be escorted by Zigzag Marzah, who was one of the drivers.

12:35:59 Q. What sorts of cars would they use to transport this ammunition?

A. Sometimes they used Ben's pick-up and some of the time they used a Nissan pick-up, it had four tyres. It was a pick-up four-wheel drive.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please continue.

MS HOLLIS: Thank you.

Q. Now, Mr Witness, just to be sure the document can stand on its own, if you would, in fact, draw another line from the Thuraya sat phone and write that on the side margin, please.

Now, could you bring that down, please, so that we can see the cap again.

Mr Witness, is there any rank shown anywhere on that cap?

09:46:51 A. I can't identify the inscription on the cap, so what is written, I do not recognise it. It is not clear.

Q. You have written "General Benjamin Yeaten". When you say "general" what do you mean? Was he a brigadier general at this time, a major general, a lieutenant general, a general?

09:47:22 A. He was a general at this time and a lieutenant - lieutenant general.

Q. And then if you could take that again and put "lieutenant general" and you can simply put "LT" before "general".

PRESIDING JUDGE: Ms Hollis, when the witness says "at this 09:47:45 time" what time are we talking about?

MS HOLLIS: That's what I'm going to follow.

Q. And when you say "at this time", Mr Witness, what time are you talking about?

A. I am talking about from '99 up to 2003.

09:48:04 Q. And this rank of lieutenant general, it went with what position that he held?

A. He was the general front line supervisor.

Q. A general front line supervisor for whom?

A. For the Government of Liberia.

A. Yes, it is a satellite phone.
Q. Thank you. And, Mr Witness, if you could on the back of that photograph put DCT-008 and today's date.
MS HOLLIS: Madam President, I ask that that be marked for identification.
PRESIDING JUDGE: The photograph with the serial number P-0000877 that has now been marked by the witness is marked MFI-5.
MS HOLLIS: Thank you, Madam President.
09:51:58 Q. Mr Witness, you said that the radio operators at the Executive Mansion in Monrovia after Charles Taylor was President, that those radio operators worked in shifts. Do you remember telling the Court that?
A. A point of correction. I did not say - the shift started - 09:52:26 I did not say the shift started after Charles Taylor became --
THE INTERPRETER: Your Honours, could the witness be asked to repeat this area slowly.
PRESIDING JUDGE: Please pause. Mr Witness, the interpreter cannot keep up with your speed. Please slow down and 09:52:41 repeat your answer. Start from the beginning.
THE WITNESS: Okay. I said the radio operators at the Executive Mansion of the Republic of Liberia were running three shifts, but I did not say after the elections of Charles Taylor, but I said they were working in shifts. Three shifts.
09:53:11 MS HOLLIS:
Q. Well, Mr Witness, do you know whether they worked in shifts before the election of Charles Taylor?
A. I got there when the shift was in place. Yes, they were working in shifts before the election of Charles Taylor because I met the system in place.

Q. And during the presidency of Charles Taylor at the Executive Mansion, these radio operators worked in shifts, is that correct?
09:53:42 A. Please say that again.
Q. Certainly. During presidency of Charles Taylor, the radio operators at the Executive Mansion worked in shifts, correct?
A. Correct.
Q. And how many operators would work on each shift at the 09:54:00 Executive Mansion?
A. I know about my shift that I served during the time.
Q. So how many worked on your shift?
A. Well, for my shift, at times we were four, at times three, and at times five. It was somehow irregular.
09:54:32 Q. Now, did you always work on the same shift, for example, the day shift, or did you rotate shifts?
A. It was rotational.
Q. And when you worked on any of these shifts you would have sometimes four, sometimes three, sometimes five. Is that 09:54:54 correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And what about the other shifts; do you know how many worked on the other shifts?
A. No.
09:55:06 Q. Wasn't there some sort of roster that showed shift assignments?
A. They had assignment listing, but I was concerned with my assignment and the time I work.
Q. So your story to the judges is you didn't know how many

Q. When the RUF came to Monrovia, did they have identification cards that would have allowed them to enter the Executive Mansion?
A. Repeat your question.
10:15:40 Q. Certainly. When the RUF came to Monrovia, did they have identification cards that would have allowed them to enter the Executive Mansion?
A. When they came to Monrovia, at what time?
Q. Let's talk, first, about 19 - the end of 1999, mid-December 10:16:05 and thereafter.
A. The RUF that entered the Executive Mansion Grounds were people - were those that had already been enlisted into the security forces and they had ID cards.
Q. And what about in 1998?
10:16:26 A. I - 1998, when, like, the trip that Sam Bockarie made to meet the President in relation to the peace process, it was - I don't know how to say it - it was diplomatic or what, so I don't - there was security in place in order to permit them into the Executive Mansion, but it was official.
10:17:04 Q. So VIPs or others who were visiting in an official capacity, they would have access to the Executive Mansion?
A. VIPs or foreign guests who visit the Executive Mansion would be escorted by the security of the Republic of Liberia who would identify them to let them in.
10:17:35 Q. So if a person was being escorted, and this person did not have an identity card, this person would have to be identified to the security personnel at the Executive Mansion before they were allowed into the Executive Mansion, is that right?
A. In the first place, before a guest or an official - a foreign official enters the Executive Mansion, the Government of Liberia had - is already aware that that person is entering the country officially or legally. So the Government of Liberia provides security to that official and the security is the one who leads the official in. I don't know whether he or she had identification, but the Government of Liberia is made aware and the Executive Mansion is made aware of the appointment.

10:18:16

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Witness, I'm going to remind you to slow down again, because what you are saying is being recorded as well as interpreted. Don't forget that.

10:18:37

MS HOLLIS:

Q. So when this guest came into the Executive Mansion, it would have to be verified that they were a member of a group or that they individually were known to be an official guest before they could enter the Executive Mansion, is that correct?

10:19:04

A. What I am saying is that any official or foreign guests or officials who visit the Executive Mansion on an official visit, the Government of Liberia is made aware of the person, so the Government of Liberia provides security for that guest; and, if the guest had to visit the Executive Mansion, the security provided by - provided by the guest from the Government of Liberia, and then a system is put in place in order to allow the guest in. There was a system.

10:19:31

Q. So when they came to enter the Executive Mansion, the guard or the supervisor there, would have some type of written document indicating that this person was allowed to come into the Executive Mansion, is that right?

10:20:00

A. At least there would be a document to show that this person was visiting the Executive Mansion.

Q. And would the escort of the visitor have that document that would have to be shown or would the guards at the Executive Mansion have that document?

A. The escort for such a guest is the one who would explain to the guys at the Executive Mansion that this is the VIP, this is the official that I'm travelling with, and he is here for so and so reason, and this is the document to show that he is here for so and so reason; I believe that this is the system.

Q. So they would show them the document which would allow this person to enter the Executive Mansion? The escort would show the guards the document which allowed the guest to enter the Executive Mansion, correct?

A. Yes, the escort would do everything that he should do in respect of his duty, and he will go by whatever instruction that he'd had from his boss or that he was performing in accordance with his duties.

Q. Now, let's go back to this document, section 2.41, Appointment and duties of Director, and we see the first sentence says:

"The President, with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint an administrative head of the service who shall be designated as the director".

And in Mr Taylor's time, that was Benjamin Yeaten, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this section goes on to say:

"He", meaning the director, "shall be responsible to the President through the Director General of National Security for the administration of the Special Security Service but shall report directly to the President should the President so direct."

who is saying the truth or who is not saying the truth.
Q. Well, Mr Witness, during the direct examination on many occasions you said that a certain person giving evidence, that that information wasn't correct or it wasn't the truth. So why 12:49:32 can't you say that now?
A. I am saying I am not in a position to judge when somebody says Sampson and Marzah did not carry ammunition, that would be his testimony, that would be his view, but what I'm sure of and what I know, as far as my knowledge is concerned, Sampson and 12:49:58 Marzah transported - they were used by Ben to carry this particular consignment that I spoke - that I saw and spoke of.
Q. Zigzag Marzah, he was notorious in Charles Taylor's forces, wasn't he?
A. I don't know what you mean by that. Please come again.
12:50:28 Notorious in terms of what?
Q. In terms of his conduct.
A. His behaviour, such as what?
Q. Well, Mr Witness, he had a reputation as being wicked and practising cannibalism, didn't he?
12:50:59 A. I don't know whether it was known within the government but I personally, I observed him of being someone who practised cannibalism because I saw it.
Q. That wasn't my question, Mr Witness. Mr Witness, Zigzag Marzah had a reputation as being wicked and practising 12:51:25 cannibalism, didn't he?
A. Yes, he had that reputation because I saw it.
Q. You understand what a reputation is, Mr Witness?
A. Yes.
Q. And he had that reputation, isn't that correct?

Q. Let me just see if I fully understand that. You've told us before that you were sent to Manowa Ferry as a senior adviser in relation to some artillery pieces, yes?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you say by 6 January 1999 you moved to Pendembu and were based there and you come back to Manowa and you were based there. Do you mean you had two bases and you moved between them?

A. Yes, my family were at Pendembu, I come there and go back to the riverbank.

Q. And by the riverbank what do you mean?

A. Manowa Ferry.

Q. Thank you. So on 6 January 1999 you tell us you were in Pendembu. Were you with your family there?

A. Yes, I said my family were there. I go there and go back to the river. I was in Pendembu with my family, yes.

Q. Right. Now, from your knowledge did you hear anything about an invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999?

A. Yes.

Q. And what did you hear about it and how did you hear about it?

A. Well, Johnny Paul from the army in Kangama and Mosquito with some other loyal AFRC officers and soldiers that were in Kailahun like Akim and Leather Boot, they all were in Kailahun where they plan general attack, then they instructed Issa and Rambo, Morris Kallon. While the discussion was going on in Kailahun they were giving the update to them in Makeni to move to Freetown and then when they moved to Freetown, SAJ Musa had already been ahead.

Q. Sorry, pause there. Who moved? You say when they moved to Freetown.

12:55:09 A. When they were moving to Freetown.

Q. Who were moving to Freetown?

A. The RUF. When they were on their way going to Freetown SAJ Musa from the north, the northern province, because earlier when we retreated he went on his own and he and Mosquito were not 12:55:28 friend.

Q. Pause there for a moment. I want to know from whom you've heard this? You're in Manowa Ferry and Pendembu between the two, how did you get this information about what went on in January of 1999.

12:55:53 A. I had a radio assigned with me and don't forget the RUF, the communication was their most powerful weapon so for every time anything goes on everybody gets around the radio. So it was from the radio or monitor.

Q. Let's just look at what you've said then. You've said that 12:56:23 Johnny Paul from the army in Kangama. What did you mean Johnny Paul from the army in Kangama. What did you mean by that?

A. Johnny Paul Koroma, he was residing in Kangama.

Q. And Mosquito with some other loyal AFRC officers and soldiers that were in Kailahun?

12:56:47 A. No, Buedu.

Q. Well I'm just reading what you said a moment ago.

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. They were in Kailahun where they plan a general attack, yes? When you say they were in Kailahun, which part of Kailahun?

A. In Buedu.
Q. They plan a general attack, they instructed Issa and Rambo, which Rambo is this?
A. Rambo from the RUF.
12:57:17 Q. Morris Kallon. While discussion was going on in Kailahun and they were giving the update to them in Makeni, who are the people you describe as them in Makeni?
A. Rambo, Issa, Morris Kallon and other officers.
Q. So those people are in Makeni and what group do they belong 12:57:46 to?
A. They were the RUF.
Q. You went on to say then when they moved towards - they were moving to Freetown. You then went on to mention SAJ Musa?
MR KOUMJIAN: Excuse me, counsel misread a little bit the 12:58:05 answer. It wasn't they were moving. It said update to them in Makeni to move to Freetown.
MR MUNYARD: He then went on if you look at the next line - I corrected myself because page 105, line 6 - well, I'll start at line 4 actually. Sorry, pause there. Who moved. You say when 12:58:25 they moved to Freetown. The witness then said they were moving to Freetown.
THE WITNESS: I said they were moving to Freetown.
MR MUNYARD:
Q. Yes, you did. Now who was it --
12:58:38 A. The RUF.
Q. -- who was moving to Freetown?
A. Rambo and others were instructed to move.
Q. Right. At that point on page 105 you then said SAJ Musa from the north, the northern province, because earlier when we question. We are not asking for a stay of these proceedings, we are asking for an adjournment of them. I have not, on behalf of the Defence this morning, addressed at all the second issue on the agenda for today.

11:56:48 PRESIDING JUDGE: We will come to that in due course, Mr Munyard. I should say that in my view, and I made it clear in the directive, that Mr Griffiths, on the day, was refused permission to withdraw and he was subsequently directed to sit down and he left in defiance of those two directions or orders.

11:57:11 However, I do see merit in the fact that he has a right to be heard and a right to have his views taken into account. I agree there is no clear procedural mechanism laid down in the rule. However, there is an overriding right in any person or counsel to be heard fully in a matter that may lead to a disciplinary or may 11:57:43 not - I am not making any conclusions - he was requested to give a apology and similarly, as you have alluded to it would have been dealt with as in August, you have given me the date. However, I see merit in your application and I will defer this matter for two weeks. I will now - sorry.

11:58:10 MR MUNYARD: We are very grateful for that, Madam President.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Now, that means I have to set a date. Today is Friday, the 11th. Two weeks is a period, I presume calendar weeks, of 14 days. What date do you have in mind?

11:58:25 MR MUNYARD: That would be the 25th, if I've got my sums correct.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I have been helpfully reminded by our senior legal officer that there are Special Tribunal for Lebanon hearings possibly scheduled. I will therefore provisionally set it for the 25th. I will seek assistance of our Registry and staff to ensure that that date is available, and if it is not, the parties will be informed accordingly.

MR MUNYARD: Certainly.

11:59:07 PRESIDING JUDGE: This matter is therefore - I have not lost sight of the fact, Mr Munyard, that it is imperative to have this dealt with expeditiously as it involves a right of appearance. I will now move to the second item on the agenda, which is the application by counsel for the Prosecution - for the 11:59:33 Defence, and I quote, "A request for ancillary relief in conjunction with the Defence motion seek leave to appeal."

We note, my learned colleagues and I, that the Defence at paragraph 5 of that document requests the Trial Chamber to stay the proceedings pending resolution of the motion for 11:59:52 certification, and further on, in the same paragraph, refers to "and/or related decisions by the Appeals Chamber."

There is some ambiguity and I would ask you first to clarify what exactly you are seeking before I invite a reply by the Prosecution.

12:00:10 MR MUNYARD: Very well, thank you, Madam President. What we are seeking by our motion seeking ancillary relief in the form of a stay is first and foremost an order from this Court that until such time as either you refuse leave or, if you grant leave, the Appeals Chamber decides - reaches its decision and

12:00:43 indeed if it reaches a decision in our favour, any timetable it then sets down, that we are asking the Court not to proceed to close the case because, as your Honours will be aware, rule 87(A) provides, "After presentation of closing arguments, the Presiding Judge shall declare the hearing closed."

I will also direct, in the light of that decision, that the Defence expeditiously as possible file their leave to appeal, if they so decide - excuse me, their appeal, I correct myself, I'm grateful for that, their appeal as expeditiously as possible, and 12:25:17 that if they so decide to pursue it.

In the light of the submissions, the Trial Chamber will stand over the proceedings until the Appeal Chamber have delivered their verdict.

Accordingly, this hearing is adjourned sine die.

12:25:44 MR MUNYARD: Madam President, before the Court leaves, can I assure you that we will do everything in our power to be as expeditious as possible. We to do not want the trial lasting a day longer than it needs to. And hollow though those words may sound in the light of events over the past three years, they are 12:26:07 nevertheless genuine. And I'm grateful for your decision.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you.

[Whereupon the proceedings adjourned sine die at 12.25 p.m.]

[Open session]

[In the presence of the Accused]

[Upon commencing at 9.47 a.m.]

09:48:36 PRESIDING JUDGE: Good morning. I will open the Court by noting that Justice Sebutinde is not here with us. I have her authorisation to read a notification, which I received this morning from Justice Sebutinde, and I will read it out verbatim:

"This is to notify you that in view of the recent 09:49:09 developments in the Trial Chamber, and consistent with my earlier views and opinion on this matter, both in Chamber and on the Bench wherein I dissented from the directive to lead counsel, I will on principle, not attend Friday's hearing."

I will therefore, first, invite appearances, and secondly - 09:49:38 I haven't added the words end of quote.

In the light of this, I will first invite appearances and, secondly, I will ask counsel if there is any matters which he wishes to make before proceeding.

09:50:03 MR MUNYARD: Good morning, Madam President, your Honours, and Ms Donlon, who is the Deputy Registrar, who's here in court, that's the first appearance that I note.

Madam President, on the Defence bench is Courtenay Griffiths QC, Morris Anyah, Logan Hambrick, myself, Terry Munyard, and beside me is counsel Mr Peter Robinson, who is 09:50:31 here to represent Mr Griffiths this morning, following your order granting Mr Griffiths right of representation of two weeks ago.

Unless there is anything further you wish to hear from me, I propose now to hand over, first of all, to Mr Robinson.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Munyard.

MR ROBINSON: Thank you, Madam President. It's a privilege to appear before your Court and a real honour to represent Courtenay Griffiths. I'd like to speak to you for a few minutes, if you don't mind, about the issue of sanctions under rule 46 that were mentioned.

09:51:07

PRESIDING JUDGE: Prior to you proceeding, Mr Robinson, on that, I did invite comments, first, on the question of the constitution of the Court, in the light of the matter I have just read, and in the light of Justice Sebutinde's absence. I must dispose of that first, prior to hearing any submissions on the issue before us.

09:51:30

MR ROBINSON: Very well, Madam President, since we hadn't had any notice of that, would you mind giving us a few minutes to consult among ourselves before we address that issue?

09:51:45

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please do so.

MR ROBINSON: Thank you.

[Defence counsel confer]

MR ROBINSON: Yes, thank you, Madam President, we would like to invite the Chamber to invite Justice Sow to participate, so the Bench is constituted of three regularly constituted judges.

09:52:25

JUDGE SOW: Let me make this very clear: This Bench is regularly composed with three judges sitting, as it shows. Two judges cannot sign decisions. When the Bench is sitting, it's sitting with three judges, not two judges, and I don't know what. I'm not here for decoration. I am a judge. This Bench is regularly composed, as everybody can see. I don't know how people can think that two judges - I don't know where in this world you will see two judges sitting. It's not possible. This

09:52:41

Bench is regularly composed with three judges. This is my comment. No matter how parties will look at it, it shows and it's apparent that this Bench is composed with three judges. We are three judges sitting.

09:53:34 PRESIDING JUDGE: The Articles governing the composition of this Court and the Trial Chamber mandate that it is to be composed of three judges. This is not a situation where rule 16 applies. Accordingly, in our view, this Trial Chamber is not properly constituted and we consider we have no alternative but 09:53:59 to adjourn this hearing today. The matter is adjourned for a date to be fixed.

Please adjourn the Court.

TRIAL CHAMBER II

Before the Judges:	Justice Teresa Doherty, Presiding Justice Richard Lussick Justice Julia Sebutinde Justice El Hadji Malick Sow, Alternate
For Chambers:	Mr Simon Meisenberg Ms Erica Bussey Ms Doreen Kiggundu
For the Registry:	Ms Fidelma Donlon Ms Rachel Irura Mr Alhassan Fornah Mr Dereque Davies

is why we are addressing these concerns. But in any event, Madam President, as highlighted by Mr Koumjian this morning, we have dealt with these issues in the opening paragraphs of our closing brief, and so consequently do not see the need to repeat all of those arguments here, because we submit that they've been comprehensively set out in our closing brief.

12:00:19

But returning to our theme, Madam President, which is that this Prosecution is political, we also submit, so far as this Prosecution is concerned, that they have acted dishonestly in paying witnesses, some of them extravagantly, out of a fund obtained by the first Chief Prosecutor, David Crane, from the Government of the United States. No similar fund was ever provided or requested by the Defence, and despite repeated requests by a number of bodies, the Prosecution have never come clean as to how these monies were acquired and, indeed, how they were spent. Again, we will deal with that issue and have dealt with it in our final brief, and I anticipate that Mr Munyard tomorrow will be turning to it in a little bit more detail, so I'm merely highlighting that fact now.

12:00:48

12:01:13

Now, having introduced my topic, Madam President, can I now turn to the evidence in this case?

12:01:36

We have never denied that serious crimes were committed in Sierra Leone. We've never denied that. And neither were those crimes committed solely by the RUF, the AFRC or indeed the CDF. I would like us to remind ourselves, please, of a clip from a film shown in closed session, so it's confidential, taken from exhibit D-5A.

12:02:15

PRESIDING JUDGE: Are we going do view it, Mr Griffiths? And do we have to do it in closed session in the light of what

Not so, it would appear.

I do now come to conclude, Madam President. The fact is a criminal trial is not a beauty contest. We are not asking this Court to like Charles Taylor, no. However, when a fact-finder comes to decide upon evidence it is a useful guide to such a person to consider how you would want another fact-finder to approach the evidence if the situation were different and it was a member of your family, a friend, or a colleague, who was on trial. What standards would you expect such a fact-finder to apply? We submit that this man, however he has been painted in the public, deserves nothing less than that, and we submit that when this indictment is approached in that independent, reasonable, unemotional way, there can only be one verdict on all these counts, and that is a verdict - and those are verdicts of not guilty. Thank you for listening so intently.

PRESIDING JUDGE: I recall you mentioned Mr Anyah would be addressing tomorrow; is that correct?

MR GRIFFITHS: No, Mr Munyard.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard. It's the other way around. Actually, I didn't note that when we resumed that Mr Anyah was not with you.

MR GRIFFITHS: Oh, I failed to mention that. I apologise.

PRESIDING JUDGE: If there is no other matters, just pause a moment, please. We will adjourn the Court until tomorrow morning at 9. Thank you. Please adjourn the Court.

Whereupon the hearing adjourned at 4.26 p.m., to be reconvened on Thursday, the 10th day of March, 2011, at 9.00 a.m.

TRIAL CHAMBER II

Before the Judges:	Justice Teresa Doherty, Presiding Justice Richard Lussick Justice Julia Sebutinde Justice El Hadji Malick Sow, Alternate

For the Registry:	Ms Fidelma Donlon Ms Rachel Irura Mr Alhassan Fornah
For the Prosecution:	Ms Brenda J Hollis Mr Nicholas Koumjian Mr Mohamed A Bangura Ms Maja Dimitrova
For the Accused Charles Ghankay Taylor:	Mr Terry Munyard Ms Salla Moilanen

involving grave charges against Mr Taylor, the accused, we say that in this case, there are so many examples of egregious implausibility, and in a number of cases, downright lies by particular Prosecution witnesses. We submit that it is 09:06:06 appropriate, in the circumstances of this case, to completely put aside several Prosecution witnesses altogether. And we say, quite boldly, forget the exercise of looking to see if there is support for something that that witness says from other witnesses. If there is, then rely on those other witnesses
09:06:31 alone. In our submission, some of these Prosecution witnesses have been so damaged that no reliance should be put upon them.

Their evidence, in short, is such that their credibility is so seriously undermined as to render them wholly - wholly - lacking in credibility.

09:06:56 Now, another element of credibility is the whole question of payments to witnesses. And, indeed, to potential witnesses. Now, let me try to put that into some kind of context.

All the ad hoc criminal tribunals that we are aware of operate a witness and victims section, which provides services to 09:07:37 witnesses once they are formally declared as a witness, including reasonable expenses to meet the expenses that they have incurred by cooperating with whichever branch of the Court it may be. Those expenses may include the cost of security and protection to vulnerable witnesses and their dependents, including, in some 09:08:10 cases, relocation expenses. And we have no difficulty with that. Inevitably, witnesses in cases of this sort are going to have to be, from time to time, relocated, moved, given certain kinds of protection, all of which cost money. Inevitably, witnesses are going to have to travel, in some cases, in order to be interviewed by the Prosecution, or for that matter, the Defence. That is going to cause them costs, it may involve them in loss of earnings. All of those are legitimate expenses.

However, we say that some of the evidence in this case
09:09:01 demonstrates, very clearly, that some Prosecution witnesses have been rewarded, have, to put it bluntly, profited from their connection with the Prosecution. The Prosecution, as you are aware, has its own fund, in complete contrast to the Defence, has its own fund from which witnesses are paid money or out of which 09:09:39 witnesses' expenses of one sort or another are defrayed, not necessarily given directly to the witness but some expenditure on the witness's behalf has been made.

This is a fund whose provenance has never been disclosed, the Prosecution have never said where they get the money from,
09:10:04 they've never said how much it is, and, indeed, although they claim to have established clear criteria as to the categories of money that can be spent, the criteria are, we submit, very vague and often disputed by the witnesses in question. To take but one example a witness on a number of occasions in this trial has said
09:10:32 they were paid money, which we see in the documentation is said to be for loss of earnings, when the witness has said, well, I wasn't earning anything at the time. That's just one example. The Court has many such examples in the evidence. We say that in some cases it is clear beyond doubt, that this fund, this money,
09:11:00 has been used to encourage witnesses to give evidence rather than simply to put them in a position where they are not economically disadvantaged or their security at risk by their cooperation with the Prosecution.

Put bluntly, in our submission, this fund has been used in such a way, on occasions, as to taint the testimony of some of the Prosecution witnesses.

By lavishing funds on witnesses which go well beyond compensating them for their actual expenses or losses consequent on their giving time to the Prosecution, this money, we say, has been used to pollute the pure waters of justice and the court cannot turn a blind eye to the effect that such financial rewards are likely to have on the evidence, and we invite the Court, when considering each and every witness about whom you have heard evidence of receipt of monies, to look very carefully at that witness's evidence. If there are obvious inconsistencies between what they have said previously to the Prosecution and what they've said, either in court or in the run-up to their testimony in court, look, we submit, look at the way in which they have been financially rewarded for their cooperation with the Prosecution.

Now, it is, of course, completely and utterly naive to expect any witness to say, "Well, this money that the Prosecution spent on me, or spent on me and my family, made me more willing to tell them what they wanted to know." Life, frankly is not like that. You, as judges, bring your experience of the world and your common sense to bear on the evidence that you are assessing. You, as the finders of fact, of course, apply good sense to the whole picture.

The very practice of giving handouts which go way beyond the actual cost of the witness's expense, itself strikes at the heart of justice, and it does so in a particularly insidious way, precisely because no witness is ever going to admit as much and in some cases may not even recognise that they have been affected by the largesse that has been lavished on them. We invite the Court to say that where there are examples of this practice, and I'm going to turn to some in due course, where there are examples, the Court should disregard the evidence of witnesses involved, unless there is strong and real corroboration from other sources.

09:14:20

And may I then move to the way in which this fund has been operated in practice and take the Court to a particular account.

I'm going to do so by reference to a witness who wasn't actually called but was a potential witness in this case, a potential Prosecution witness, and indeed, as is the case with a number of witnesses in this trial, also a potential Defence witness. There are other examples that I'm going to come to in due course, but we submit that when you look at the way in which money has been doled out, it clearly indicates that the Prosecution have been willing to encourage people to cooperate with them by financial handouts.

09:14:50

09:15:22

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: I'm sorry, Mr Munyard, the computers seem to have frozen, the LiveNote.

MR MUNYARD: Yes.

09:15:55

MS IRURA: Your Honour, I will get a technician to assist.

MR MUNYARD: Madam President, normally when this has happened the Court officer has been able to stream her LiveNote on a screen. Like Mr Koumjian, I've now forgotten which button to press to get that, but no doubt we'll receive some assistance.

09:16:18

JUDGE LUSSICK: If you press "transcript".

MS IRURA: Your Honour, my transcript is being broadcast but we will not be able to view any exhibits while that is happening because we are using one screen.

PRESIDING JUDGE: We'll deal with that problem when we come to it, but if you can broadcast yours to the counsel and the bench, please, so we can proceed.

Mr Munyard, I understand Madam Court Officer's is now being broadcast, so if you can please proceed.

MR MUNYARD: I'm happy to proceed. I can't see anything on any of the array of screens in front of me that shows the transcript.

MS IRURA: Counsel would need to switch to the courtroom button on his computer away from his present screen, which is probably his LiveNote.

MR MUNYARD: Can I say - ah, there it is.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please keep going and if there is a need for exhibits, as I said we will deal with them when it arises.

MR MUNYARD: Yes. May I, before I start taking the Court through examples, make this point? Where a culture has arisen where witnesses expect to be paid sums of money, not merely their expenses, but a very generous amount of money in relation to their expenses, what is the effect of that on the administration of justice, of such a system? And let me illustrate that with an anecdote. If people expect to be paid to give evidence, then it can lead to a bidding war. I think everybody's seems to be now - yes.

And I want to tell the Court an anecdote, I'm not giving evidence as such; it's simply an illustration, in our submission, of the effect of this system of doling out money to people to cooperate with the Prosecution.

At an Outreach meeting in Freetown that I went to and spoke on behalf of the Defence at, this question of witness expenses and money paid to witnesses was raised, and I made the point that I'm making now, the Prosecution have a fund out of which they pay witnesses, to which came the immediate rejoinder from a member of the audience, "Well, what's the problem with that? Why don't the 09:20:04 Defence offer more money to the witnesses?" And that - that vignette captures perfectly the effect on the administration of justice of making sums of money available that go way beyond the actual expense to the witnesses themselves.

And let us consider the realities of life in Sierra Leone 09:20:29 and Liberia. Desperately poor people in a country still devastated by civil war, by the effects of civil war, ten years later. People managing their best, but, as we all know, struggling to survive, struggling to make ends meet, large numbers of people without regular employment. Some who do have 09:20:58 regular employment not regularly paid, teachers is a well-known example of that situation in Sierra Leone. And finally, what is an insignificant sum to someone from Western Europe or from North America, what would amount to loose change in their pocket, in fact, can make a huge difference in the hands of a poor person in 09:21:29 Sierra Leone, someone who has a family to support. 10,000 leones, three United States dollars a year or two back, is a significant sum of money that can help to buy food and to put someone in a better position than they would otherwise have been to a Sierra Leone citizen. Whereas to somebody such as many of 09:22:01 those in this courtroom now, it's a sum of such trifling order that they wouldn't even notice if it was lost.

Now, may I turn then to illustrate first of all the way in which the system has been operated and then I will go to some specific examples of witnesses. And I'm going to deal with the situation relating to a potential witness who ended up with the - the anonymous title of DCT-032.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please clarify, Mr Munyard, are you saying this witness was not called and did not give evidence before the Court?

09:23:00

MR MUNYARD: Yes, but he -

PRESIDING JUDGE: How can you adduce evidence in relation to what he said or did?

MR MUNYARD: Because you have it, Madam President, I'm going to come to that. You have it actually in the form of certain documents admitted under rule 92 bis. And there is a history here that is illustrated by the documents admitted through the Appeal Chamber under rule 92 bis. This was a witness who eventually came to the attention of the Prosecution in the middle of 2008. Now, the timing and the way in which the Prosecution dealt with this potential witness is very interesting. On the 12th of March 2008, a man called Zigzag Marzah gave evidence in this Court in public session, and he mentioned the witness - I'll call him the witness, because although he didn't give evidence he was a potential witness - he mentioned 032 in the course of his evidence, and it was in a significant context. Then, on the 15th of May 2008, Moses Blah, a former President of Liberia, gave evidence, and I've no doubt the Court has his evidence very much in mind still. He also gave evidence about the incident that Zigzag Marzah had given evidence about in which Marzah named this particular person. On that same date, the 15th of May, the Prosecution interviewed a person, Witness TF1-375 who actually did give evidence. They interviewed that witness for the 17th time on the 15th of May 2008. That

09:23:12

09:23:43

09:24:15

09:24:47

witness had never, prior to that date, talked at all about the incident in which 032 was said by Marzah to have been involved, but on that day, the 15th of May, 375 suddenly came out with an account of the same incident, naming 032.

09:25:53 Now, the Prosecution then approached 032, and we have, in the exhibits, confidential exhibits, and so I'm not going to go into them in any great detail, but we have confidential exhibits D-479 and D-480, that both relate to witness 032. And I don't believe that - I don't want them put up in any event because they

09:26:40 are confidential, but D-479 shows a long list of disbursements, that means quite simply money paid either to or on behalf of 032, starting on the 8th of June of 2008, going through on nine different occasions during June, when he was paid several hundred United States dollars, and when I say dollars - I'm not going to

09:27:29 say United States dollars, all the time, if I use the expression dollars throughout my submissions then I refer to the United States dollar and no other country's dollar. He was seen nine times - sorry, he was seen 11 times or paid 11 times in June. He was paid eight times - nine times in July of 2008. In August

09:28:07 2008, he was paid two amounts of money. And in October 2008, he was paid more money on three different occasions. And that came to in excess of $3,000.

Now, that money was -

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: These being payments from which unit?

09:28:34 MR MUNYARD: Oh, from the Prosecution's fund.

That money was paid to him whilst he was said to be providing information, and it covers transport, lost wages, but essentially it is for information and support, financial support, to him.

I should say that on the 5th occasion when he was paid that money, he was also given a letter of immunity from Prosecution should he give evidence in this trial.

Now, what was interesting about that was that he was 09:29:34 clearly a confidant of witness TF1-375. Witness 375 started to give evidence in June of 2008, and he gave evidence in June 2008 about the very incident that he had only suddenly remembered the previous month when being interviewed by the Prosecution. In the meantime, he had to be - his evidence had to be interrupted. He 09:30:20 was sent back to West Africa and returned here to resume his evidence in August of 2008. Throughout all that time, the Prosecution are lavishing this large amount of money, over $3,000 over a matter of a few months, on this friend, contact, of 375, 09:30:57 who they were clearly, in our submission, clearly hoping to persuade to give evidence. And there can be no better illustration of that fact than the letter of immunity from Prosecution that he was given as early as June of 2008.

So here is somebody who is put into the hands of the Prosecution as a result of other evidence that was given in this 09:31:27 case, who is provided with a very considerable sum, and the sweetener of the offer of immunity from prosecution. He, in our submission, is a clear example of the process that has been followed in financial support for witnesses who the Prosecution are hoping to persuade to come to court and give evidence. As 09:32:13 you know, he himself didn't but his friend, 375, did come to court to give evidence and I'm now going to turn, if I may, to that particular witness. I should say that we have touched on this witness in paragraphs 1410 to 1423 of the final trial brief and I'm going to just highlight some of the relevant evidence of that witness.

Now, this was a witness who was seen in total, I think I'm right in saying, 24 times by the Prosecution, certainly it was a figure in that order, interviewed many, many times by the Prosecution. He was seen between September 2005 and May 2008, and in that time he was provided by the Prosecution with over $4,000 and 825,000 leones, and he did not come into the protection - sorry, he came into the protection of the Court, that's to say he was also under the care of the witness and victims service from the 20th of August 2006. So the Court will appreciate that from the 20th of August 2006 up to May of 2008, he was being paid monies, expense was being incurred on his behalf by both the Prosecution and by the witness and victims section, and as we saw in the course of his evidence, the witness and victims section, from the 20th of August 2006 to the 15th of August 2008 spent a total of 38,359,200 leones, that's roughly speaking at that time I think about $10,000, bearing in mind the exchange rate at the time. That included 13 million, nearly a third of that, was subsistence allowance and a category called miscellaneous of 3 and a half million leones, over that period of time. Miscellaneous being explained by him as payment for an expensive computer course that he was sent on. But while he's in receipt of $10,000 worth of court money, he's also in receipt, for most of that same period of time, of over $4,000 worth of Prosecution money, as well as 825,000 leones.

Now, what was the money spent on? Why was he given this money? He is somebody who told the Court in the course of his evidence that on one occasion at least he was paid $50, $50, for taking another witness to see the Prosecution on his motorbike, a distance of five minutes.

When asked, "Have you been paid $50 for spending that small amount of gasoline in your motorbike before?" He said, "Yes, they have been giving me gas more than that before."

09:37:35 He was also - he also told the Court that he wasn't satisfied with being given only $50 for a five-minute motorbike ride and was then given a hundred dollars for a second visit to the Prosecution and on that second visit, in fact, on both of those visits he admitted that he hadn't even told the Prosecution

09:38:01 the truth when he'd seen them on those two visits.

And yet, he didn't even know what the money was for. He told this Court, in August of 2008, that he received in June 2006, $100 on one occasion. Bear in mind that, of course, by that time he's also in the care of the witness service. He

09:38:37 received a hundred dollars from the Prosecution. "They gave me money, the money, I accepted it, I didn't know what it was for. I knew it was for the same transport purpose but for the meantime I took this amount of money, I can't remember what it was for."

And he went on to say when his actual expenditure was

09:39:01 analysed in the course of cross-examination, he went on to accept that he'd made a $90 profit on that particular occasion. Now, just pause there for a moment. What is $90, US dollars, worth to a Liberian or a Sierra Leonean, your average Liberian or Sierra Leonean, when in Sierra Leone your average decent hotel

09:39:32 receptionist earns roughly about $88 a month? What is $90 pure profit, not subject to tax, worth in the hand of someone in one of those countries?

Regularly, this man was being paid these round sums, and we see these round sums all the time, the evidence is littered with examples of round sums. Only occasionally will you actually see 97,000 leones or $28.50 or some obviously specific expenditure. Most of the time they are round sums. And inevitably, we submit, inevitably, those round sums represent not just the cost to the 09:40:30 witness, but a reward for attending. Even, in our submission, even the most innocent and impartial witness is bound to feel a sense of obligation to the party paying him or her money of that sort, particularly when the money is being paid regularly and in some cases over a period of years.

09:41:03 And indeed sticking with 375, he also said that, on one occasion, when returning from a trip from one country to the neighbouring country, for which he was paid $200, he was given an additional $100, which he said was an appreciation from the Prosecution for him to use for his family.

09:41:38 Well, what, I ask rhetorically, is an appreciation, if it's not a gift?

He is also a witness who described - or agreed that the $50 that he was paid for, in effect, crossing the road, he agreed that - sorry, he took the view that that wasn't enough.

09:42:17 Now, how does the Court assess the impact of that sort of payment, or those sorts of payments, on witnesses? It is, in our submission, inevitable that it is going to have an effect on the witness, and where you find, as you will have seen in his evidence, where you find that there are a number of 09:42:53 inconsistencies in the evidence of the witness, a number of brand-new pieces of evidence coming out, a number of wholly implausible pieces of evidence from the witness, in our submission you will be driven to the conclusion that by coming out with all of this additional evidence, all of which of course

hostile to Mr Taylor, the accused, you will be driven to the conclusion, we say, that the financial benefits have had an impact, whether desired or not, on the testimony of the witness. And in his case, I need give you no better example than something 09:43:56 that he said about a witness who was involved in the killing of Sam Bockarie. Now, I'm being very careful in the way in which I phrase this: That witness told you -

MR KOUMJIAN: Excuse me. All of this evidence was brought out, I believe the subject counsel is getting to, was in closed 09:44:27 session so I suggest we do this in private session.

MR MUNYARD: I -

MR KOUMJIAN: One of the reasons we have to pay money to witnesses is to protect their lives, and it would exacerbate things if we put people at risk by saying information in open 09:44:45 session.

MR MUNYARD: Can I simply reiterate that I'm being -

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Munyard, you know what you're going to say, we don't, but are you going to quote something that was in closed session?

09:44:57 MR MUNYARD: I'm going to quote something that a witness said. It was said in closed session and if you wish me to go into closed session for this, then I'm happy to do so. It won't take long.

PRESIDING JUDGE: The question is one of identification.

09:45:13 MR MUNYARD: Yes.

PRESIDING JUDGE: You consider it could identify?

MR MUNYARD: Well, the way I was hoping to phrase it, I don't think it would, but I think it's going to be clearer if we go briefly into closed session and I deal with it in that way.

PRESIDING JUDGE: In that case, we will have a private session. And for purposes of record and the public, this short private session will enable people in the gallery to see but not to hear, and it is for the protection and security of a protected witness. Madam Court Officer, please put the Court into private session briefly.

[Open session]

MS IRURA: Your Honour, we are in open session.

MR MUNYARD: And my last point on that witness is just as he starts to talk about 032, so the Prosecution then start to lavish money and attention on 032. The link is obvious. The method is the same.

Now, I'm going to mover to a completely different witness now by way of further example, of the way in which money can impact on a witness's testimony, and this is a witness called Suwandi Camara, TF1-548. This is the witness who you may remember was engaged in heavy weapons training in Dr Manneh's bedroom. In the Mataba, which I think was in Tajura, a suburb of Tripoli about which we have been hearing a great deal in recent days. Suwandi Camara, of course, was called to bolster the Prosecution's argument that appeared to be live for quite a long time in the case that the whole joint criminal enterprise had started off in Libya. I think you'll search long and hard before you find that repeated or referred to at all in the Prosecution final trial brief, but they called evidence about Libya, as a result of which we had to call evidence in due course, and Suwandi Camara was called to say that he'd seen Foday Sankoh and Charles Taylor together at the Mataba.

No doubt in the intervals what he'd emerged from Dr Manneh's bedroom and left the heavy weapons behind. He is the man, uniquely, of the witnesses in this case, who purported to claim a connection between those two, Mr Taylor and Mr Sankoh, whilst in Libya. He was in regular receipt from the Prosecution of nice round sums of $100 a time, for his travel expenses. He told you, and we'll look at it in a moment, he told you how he used to hire a car to go and see the Prosecution, to be interviewed. And he'd get travel expenses. And the car turned out to be, in local currency, dalasis, turned out to vary, the car hire turned out to vary from anything between about 30 cents to just under a dollar.

09:55:21

Now, let's give him the benefit of the doubt. Let's assume when he told you about that that he was talking about one way only. Let's assume - let's take the higher sum because he said at a later stage the hire car cost went up. So let's assume he had to pay two whole dollars out of his hundred dollars. What's his profit? Well, he said that he was given a hundred dollars once for a list of items, including loss of wages, that he was adamant that he hadn't lost wages. He said, They regularly - they usually give me $100. And when we looked at the amounts that he was being given, sometimes the heading would be, "loss of wages and transportation" and so on, and sometimes it would be for "meals, transportation and communication". Now, when he was asked about $100 that he received for "meals, transportation and communication", he said he didn't know how much the phone calls, that's communication, he didn't know how much the phone calls that he had to make cost, he said he thought they were expensive. But why is it, again, I ask rhetorically, because you know the answer, I would suggest, you would hardly need me to tell you, why is it he's being given these handouts of $100 at a time? Because clearly in each and every case he's not just receiving his legitimate expenses, he's also being rewarded. This was the witness you may recall who constantly demanded that I should not use the expression "you were paid $100". In his culture, being paid had a different connotation from simply receiving or being

09:55:42

09:56:21

09:56:46

09:57:09

given assistance, if that helps you to identify him in your minds.

In any event, he was given a similar amount of money under the heading, "Security." Well, he couldn't really work out what 09:57:59 the security was that he was given the money for. He started off by saying to you, "I think it was because when people from the Prosecution came to see me, I took them on a cultural tour," and he seemed to be implying that that was what the $100 for security was all about. And then he said, "Well, actually, I did ask them
09:58:24 for money to put a fence around my orchard."

When he was asked if he'd actually done it, if he'd put the fence around his orchard, he said, "Well, I'd started it by the time I left for The Hague." I mention that in case it's in your minds that the security that he needed putting a fence around his 09:58:54 orchard, was somehow to protect his premises from potential people who would do him no good because of his cooperation with the Prosecution. But it's perfectly plain that it was nothing to do with that. He wanted a fence around his orchard, he hadn't even completed it by the time he left for The Hague, having had 09:59:16 the money some good time before.

Now, that is an example of someone else who was paid handsomely for the evidence that he was going to come to court and give, evidence which, as I said, was unique in this case in that it put Mr Taylor and Mr Sankoh together, meeting together, 09:59:45 in the Mataba in Libya. As it happens, that aspect of the case, that aspect of the Prosecution's case, appears to have fallen away over time, and you do not see it reflected in their final trial brief. But that isn't the point. My point is, another witness, who, we submit, very clearly and very obviously, has received financial incentives to tell stories that are favourable to the Prosecution.

And my final note on Suwandi Camara was this: When he was asked about receiving regular payments of nice round sums of a 10:00:35 hundred dollars a time, he said it meant very little to him because, as he put it, "I'm used to being given far more than $200 by people, brothers" who he met presumably at home in the Gambia. That was actually his evidence to you. Oh, a hundred from the Prosecution to me is nothing. People give me far more 10:01:06 than that all the time.

Clearly, someone you may think who is prepared to make it up as he goes along and presumably, because he's had the advantage of these rewards.

Now, I want to turn, then, to Isaac Mongor, 10:01:45 Witness TF1-532. Now, this is a classic example, in our submission, of a witness who we say the Court should exercise such a degree of caution about as to completely disregard his testimony. From start to finish, Isaac Mongor is somebody who contradicted himself, who told obvious lies, who couldn't 10:02:20 remember from one day to the next what he'd told you in the course of his testimony, and who, of course, was another one who was a beneficiary of the generous largesse of the Prosecution fund. He was somebody who we established at the outset had a good command of English. In 24 interviews, he only had an 10:02:50 interpreter present on five occasions. He had had schooling in English, up to a late age. He attempted to answer my questions before I had finished asking them, and therefore before they had been fully translated. And answer my questions in English. And if you want an example of that, and it's a particularly questions.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Munyard. That is all we have from the bench and I will therefore restate that we will adjourn now and resume court tomorrow at 9 o'clock.

11:39:54 Please adjourn court.

[Whereupon the hearing adjourned at 11.40 a.m., to be reconvened on Friday, the 11th day of March 2011, at 9.00 a.m.]

THE PROSECUTOR OF
THE SPECIAL COURT
V.
CHARLES GHANKAY TAYLOR

FRIDAY, 11 MARCH 2011

TRIAL CHAMBER II

Before the Judges:	Justice Teresa Doherty, Presiding Justice Richard Lussick Justice Julia Sebutinde Justice El Hadji Malick Sow, Alternate
For Chambers:	Mr Simon Meisenberg Ms Erica Bussey
For the Registry:	Ms Fidelma Donlon Ms Rachel Irura Mr Alhassan Fornah
For the Prosecution:	Ms Brenda J Hollis Mr Nicholas Koumjian Mr Mohamed A Bangura Ms Ruth Mary Hackler Ms Ula Nathai-Lutchman Mr Nathan Quick Ms Maja Dimitrova left Kailahun to join SAJ Musa, and so far as the latter is concerned, ample evidence to demonstrate his antipathy towards the RUF.

Justice Sebutinde asked a question regarding witnesses paid by the Prosecution at the time when WVS should have paid all expenses. We draw attention to rule 39(2) which states, "In the conduct of an investigation," and we stress that, "the Prosecutor may take all measures deemed necessary for the purpose of the investigation including the taking of any special measures to provide for the safety, support and assistance of potential witnesses and sources."

The Defence position is that only WVS may provide for witnesses after the investigation stage. Rule 34(A) provides for WVS to provide such assistance. And we submit it is an abuse of the Prosecution's discretion under rule 39(2) for the WVS and the Prosecution to pay a person at the same time, because the person is either a potential witness or a witness. The person can't be both at the same time. An individual - and individuals who fall into this category of overlapping payments include: TF1-274, TF1-362, TF1-334, and that list is not exhaustive. But if your Honours require further assistance in that regard, we may be in a position to provide that in writing.

Next point: The reason why we have dwelt on JCE in detail is that it lays the basis for all the alleged interactions between Charles Taylor and the RUF, or the RUF/AFRC, and it therefore establishes the factual basis for all other modes of liability. That's why it's so central to this case.

Finally this, your Honours: When in July of 2007 I took over as lead counsel for Charles Taylor, it was on the basis that thank those opposite for their endeavours ensuring that this trial has proceeded smoothly, and it has been a personal honour for me to have been involved in this trial. Thank you very much.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Griffiths, I would like, on behalf of 13:32:18 myself and my learned colleagues, to first deal with the matter that you raised personally concerning the apology and your willingness to give that and to draw a line. And we will proceed in that way and we will hear you out.

MR GRIFFITHS: Well, I do apologise to the Court.

13:32:37 PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you. That will draw a line under that matter and bring it to an end.

As there are no other matters from the parties, I therefore, in accordance with the provisions of rule 87(A) of the rules of procedure and evidence declare the hearing closed 13:33:01 and that the Trial Chamber shall now deliberate in private.

The parties will accordingly be notified when a judgment is to be delivered.

I, too, take the opportunity, on behalf of my learned colleagues and myself, to thank counsel, the court management 13:33:20 service, our own Trial Chamber staff, the interpreters, transcribers and the many others who have worked throughout this trial, for their dedication and their contribution.

The Court will be adjourned to a date to be fixed.

Please adjourn the court.

Thank you, Mr Taylor, you can sit down now.

13:13:34

Now, we come to the sentencing process.

Firstly, I remind the parties of their obligation under Rule 100, which provides for the submission of information relevant to sentencing by the Prosecution no more than seven days after conviction and by the Defence no more than seven days after the Prosecution's filing. This seven-day period runs from the date of conviction, which is today. By the Trial Chamber's calculation, in order to comply with Rule 100, the Prosecution's 13:14:14 filing under Rule 100 must be made by close of business Thursday, 3rd of May. The Defence filing under Rule 100 on the Prosecution -- on the Trial Chamber's calculation must be no more than seven days after that, which would be by close of business Thursday, 10th of May.

13:14:40 Under Rule 100, the parties can provide information relating to factors that affect sentencing, which would include written submissions and testimonials, if any. The extensive judgement summary that is being delivered today will suffice for this purpose, since it is a reasoned opinion of the Trial Chamber 13:15:03 which sets out comprehensively the grounds for convicting Mr Taylor.

Now, secondly, the Trial Chamber considers that this is an appropriate case to fix a sentencing hearing, and fixes such hearing, which will be for additional oral arguments only, for 13:15:27 Wednesday, 16th of May, at 9.30 a.m. At the sentencing hearing, the Prosecution shall limit the length of its sentencing submissions to a time not exceeding one hour. The Defence shall limit the length of its sentencing submissions to a time not exceeding one hour.

13:15:56 If Mr Taylor wishes to address the Court prior to being sentenced, then this will be his opportunity to do so, and he shall limit the length of his address, if any, to a time not exceeding 30 minutes.

Thirdly, a sentencing judgement will be pronounced on Wednesday, 30th of May, at 11.00 a.m.

Lastly, the accused is remanded until Wednesday, 16th of May, at 9.30 a.m., for a sentencing hearing.

The Court is hereby adjourned to that date.

THE PROSECUTOR OF
THE SPECIAL COURT
V.
CHARLES GHANKAY TAYLOR

Wednesday, 16 May 2012
09.30 a.m
SENTENCING HEARING

TRIAL CHAMBER II

Before the Judges:	Justice Richard Lussick, Presiding Justice Teresa Doherty Justice Julia Sebutinde
For Chambers:	Ms Doreen Kiggundu Ms Diana Goff Ms Helen Worsnop Ms Yael Rothschild Ms Elizabeth Budnitz Ms Rebecca Browning
For the Registry:	Ms Fidelma Donlon Ms Rachel Irura Ms Zainab Fofanah
For the Prosecution:	Ms Brenda J Hollis Mr James C Johnson Mr Nicholas Koumjian Mr Mohamed A Bangura Ms Nina Tavakoli Ms Ruth Mary Hackler Ms Leigh Lawrie Mr Christopher Santora Ms Kathryn Howarth Ms Ula Nathai-Lutchman Mr James Pace Mr Cóman Kenny Ms Danielle Fritz
Office of the Principal Defender:	Ms Claire Carlton-Hanciles

first matter is the delivery of the full judgement, which is a huge judgement. The Trial Chamber had aimed at having it published last Monday. However, the technicians who were formatting the judgement for publication have had challenges due to the voluminous size of the judgement, and they was not able to meet the Monday dead-line.

However, they have guaranteed that the judgement will be ready for publication before close of business this Friday.

Now, the second matter is as follows: Before proceeding today, it gives us no pleasure to have to place on record some explanation for the extraordinary situation which occurred at the end of the previous sitting of the Trial Chamber on 26th of April, 2012, on which date the Trial Chamber delivered its summary judgement.

On that date, at the conclusion of the proceedings, the Alternate Judge, without any notice to the Trial Chamber, proceeded to deliver his own opinions from the bench on the judgement that had just been delivered on these proceedings and on the Special Court itself. What the Alternate Judge did was in contravention of the agreement, the Statute, and the Rules which govern this Court and amounted to misconduct.

The purpose of attaching an Alternate Judge to a Trial Chamber is that he can be designated to replace a sitting Judge if that Judge is unable to continue sitting. See Article 12 of the Statute. No such designation has been made in the present case. Further, during the proceedings, the Alternate Judge may pose questions through the Presiding Judge, but there is no other entitlement for an Alternate Judge to speak during court proceedings. See Rule 16 bis (B). Moreover, an Alternate Judge does not have any say in decisions of the Trial Chamber. He is obliged to be present during deliberations off the Trial Chamber, but he is not entitled a vote thereat. See Rule 16 bis (C). It follows that it was wrong for the Alternate Judge, who has not been designated to replace a sitting Judge, to offer an opinion, whether dissenting or concurring, on a judgement of Trial Chamber.

09:37:15

The behaviour of Judge Sow was referred by the Council of Judges to a plenary meeting of the Judges of the Special Court. We three Trial Chamber Judges abstained from voting at that plenary.

09:37:34

I will now read onto the record the resolution of the plenary.

Resolution on complaint by Trial Chamber II against Justice Malick Sow. The Judges of the Special Court for Sierra Leone sitting on the 7th and 10th of May, 2012, in the 17th plenary of Judges, pursuant to Rule 15 bis (B) of the Rules of Procedure of Evidence of the Special Court which mandates the Council of Judges who refer an allegation of unfitness of a Judge to sit to the plenary if it determines that, one, the allegation is of a serious nature, and two, that there appears to be a substantial basis for same.

09:38:27

Pursuant also to Rule 24(iii) of the Rules, which provides that the Judges shall meet in plenary to decide upon matters relating to the internal functioning of the Chambers and the Special Court, seized of the complaint by the Judges of Trial Chamber II, dated 26th of April, 2012, against Justice Malick Sow, Alternate Judge, considering the response of Justice Malick Sow, dated the 1st of May, 2012, to the complaint, having also considered the views and recommendations of the Judges on the matter and the response of Justice Malick Sow to those views pursuant to Rule 15 bis (C) have reached the following conclusions:

09:39:39 1. The plenary declares that Justice Malick Sow's behaviour in court on the 26th of April, 2012, amounts to misconduct rendering him unfit to sit as an Alternate Judge of the Special Court.

2. The plenary recommends to the appointing authority 09:40:03 pursuant to Rule 15 bis (B) to decide upon the further status of Justice Malick Sow.

3. Pursuant to Rule 24(iii), the plenary directs Justice Malick Sow to refrain from further sitting in the proceedings pending a decision from the appointing authority.

09:40:28 Done in Freetown, Sierra Leone, this 10th day of May, 2012, for and on behalf of the plenary, signed by the President Justice Jon Kamanda.

Now, Ms Hollis, you have one hour to address the Court and that will start from now which will bring you up to 20 to 11.00 09:41:05 you must complete your address.

MS HOLLIS: Thank you, Mr President. May it please the Court. In arriving at a sentence --

PRESIDING JUDGE: I'm sorry. I didn't see you standing there.

09:41:13 MR GRIFFITHS: I apologise to my learned friend. Your Honour, can I ask -- raise two matters, preliminary matters, regarding the timing of the proceedings today. I don't know whether Your Honours were considering have a mid-morning break at some stage, but it would perhaps assist us if that were to be African leaders took the initiative to convince him to resign, as stated by then president of Ghana, John Kufuor. And that is found at Exhibit D408, page 13.

Mr Taylor's alleged lengthy public service to his country is also not worthy of mitigation. Their argument relies on the case Renzaho and that case is distinguishable. Here, Mr Taylor's convictions are for crimes committed against civilians in Sierra Leone, not in Liberia where he lived and served and worked as president. Thus, his alleged acts of good character and lengthy leadership in Liberia, even if true, bear no relevance and have no positive impact on the lives of his victims in Sierra Leone. On this basis alone, this alleged mitigation should be rejected.

But these arguments also ignore that Mr Taylor used Liberian security forces as conduits in his links with the RUF and AFRC forces, using them to take arms back and forth and to bring diamonds to him. It also ignores that Mr Taylor provided the RUF with a guesthouse, providing communications equipment, security, and domestic staff in Monrovia, a guesthouse from which he sent arms and ammunition to Sierra Leone and that he used to obtain diamonds from Sierra Leone.

These assertions also ignore evidence of Mr Taylor's exploitive and despotic rule in Liberia, including Prosecution Exhibits 449 and 450, showing that the Carter Centre closed its office in Monrovia, publicly criticising Mr Taylor's government for no longer sharing the goals of a democratic society, citing to reports of serious human rights abuses, the use of funds for extra budgetary purposes, the intimidation of journalists and others in Liberia, and criticising Liberia's role in the

Mr President.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Now, we'll adjourn and we'll come back at 15 minutes from now. Say at 25 minutes to 11.00.

[Break taken at 10.25 a.m.]

10:42:59 [Upon resuming at 10.43 a.m.]

PRESIDING JUDGE: Please go ahead, Mr Griffiths.

MR GRIFFITHS: May it please Your Honours.

Again can I express my gratitude for the time allowed to consult with Mr Taylor. Equally, we are grateful for 10:43:14 Your Honours's indication this morning as to when the final written judgement will become available. Although it's still a matter of concern to us that we are here at this sentencing hearing without the benefit of Your Honours' written reasons.

For this reason -- for example, during the course of my 10:43:38 learned friend's Ms Hollis's address this morning, in effect a factual issue was raised as to the evidence supporting the finding of planning in relation to the Freetown invasion, and without the assistance of the final written brief, of course, that creates difficulties for all the parties in our submission.

10:43:59 But in any event, we submit that what emerges from Your Honours' summary judgement is a more modest vision of Mr Taylor's involvement in the Sierra Leonean conflict than that originally suggested by this Prosecution. We need to remind ourselves that as recently as April of last year, David Crane, once Chief

10:44:39 Prosecutor of this Court, was still maintaining, and I quote:

"The civil war in Sierra Leone ripped apart an entire region of West Africa, spawned by the president of Libya, Colonel Muammar Gaddafi, and supported by President Blaise Compaoré of Burkina Faso, and Charles Taylor of Liberia. This take-over of an entire country for their own personal criminal gain was a rare event in conflict not seen since the Middle Ages."

The West African joint criminal enterprise was designed to support the geopolitical take-over of West Africa by Gaddafi, where surrogates such as Compaoré and Taylor, amongst others, would control the region on his behalf.

10:45:25

Now we need to remind ourselves that that was the paranoid mindset which created the indictment in this case. This overblown claim has been rightly rejected by this court. What this Court has found - and for which Charles Taylor is to be sentenced - is that he was assisting combatants, combatant factions, in the foreknowledge that they was perpetrating atrocities in another country.

10:45:52

Now, a distinguished professor of law, and one of the commissioners on the Sierra Leonean Truth and Reconciliation Commission, has remarked as follows in respect of this Court's finding - that's Professor William Shabas:

10:46:14

"The conclusion of the Trial Chamber in Charles Taylor seems based on uncontroversial principles. He or she who provides significant assistance to a participant in a conflict, knowing that the participant is perpetrating atrocities against civilians, is guilty of aiding and abetting such crimes. This is straightforward, and it leads in an interesting direction."

10:46:38

Atrocities were perpetrated on all sides in the Sierra Leone conflict. This emerges from the case law of the Special Court as well as from the report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. It was notorious at the time in 1998 and 1999. So what are we to make of those who supported the other side in the conflict? For example, the Blair in the 10:47:06

United Kingdom provided assistance and support to the pro-government forces. The pro-government forces had their own sinister militia involved in rapes, recruitment of child soldiers, amputations, cannibalism, and other atrocities. Two of 10:47:51 those involved were convicted by the Court, and a third, who was a minister in the government supported by the United Kingdom, died before the trial completed. What is the difference between Blair and Taylor in this respect?

Moving beyond Sierra Leone, can we not blame the French
10:48:09 government for aiding and abetting genocide given its support for the racist Rwandan regime in 1993 and 1994? The crimes of the regime were well publicised, not only by an NGO commission of inquiry but also by Special Rapporteurs of the United Nations, and yet the French continued to provide assistance in personnel, 10:48:35 arms, and ammunition to the Habyarimana regime.

What about those who supported the various sides of the war in Bosnia, or in Sri Lanka? Are American officials who backed Saddam Hussein when he perpetrated atrocities in Iran during the 1980s also guilty of aiding and abetting in war crimes and crimes 10:48:57 against humanity?

What of those Western states that continued to bolster the apartheid regime in South Africa during the 1970s and 1980s when they were fully aware of the racist system that has been characterised as a crime against humanity? But it doesn't end 10:49:19 there, because as recently as the 10th of May of this year, Human Rights Watch, no great friend of Charles Taylor, published an article by Reed Brody in which he said:

"In Taylor's case, the Court found that he knew of the atrocities being committed against civilians by Sierra Leonean allies and of their propensity to commit crimes. Nevertheless, the Court said Taylor continued to ship arms to the rebels and provide them with political and moral support and encouragement."

The principle is akin to giving more ammunition to an armed 10:49:59 man on a killing spree. It's striking that the very same legal reasoning could apply to those in Washington, Moscow, or elsewhere, who provide military assistance to abusive forces half a world away.

Take, for example, the case of former US Secretary of State 10:50:24 Henry Kissinger and East Timor. Declassified documents revealed that after the Timorese declaration of independence from Portugal in 1975, Kissinger and President Gerald Ford, fearing that the new country would become a communist outpost, gave Indonesian President Suharto the green light to invade the island in a 10:50:46 Jakarta meeting the day before the invasion. The United States were then supplying Indonesia's military with 90 per cent its arms, and Kissinger himself described their relationship as that of donor/client.

Now, I refer to these articles, Your Honours, for this 10:51:10 reason, because they remind us of the danger of telling a single story. In our submission there must be a balance of stories. However, the reality is that though the decision of this Court in convicting Mr Taylor of aiding and abetting the conflict in Sierra Leone has been trumpeted, and again this morning, are 10:51:42 sending a non-equivocal message to world leaders that great office confers no immunity, the fact is that really two messages are being sent.

The first message is, if you run a small, weak nation, you may be subject to the full force of international law; whereas if you run a powerful nation, you have nothing whatsoever to fear. Thus, Staff Sergeant Robert Bales, a US soldier, premeditatedly killed and burnt the bodies of 17 unarmed civilians in Afghanistan, yet we have not seen one article in the newspapers or one report in the Western media that brands this crime with the condemnation it demands by labeling it either a war crime or a crime against humanity.

This is because the fact is that acts are defined as criminal because it is in the interests, or at least not against the interests, of a ruling class to define them as such. We, therefore, submit unequivocally that there is nothing universal about Western states' claims to support universal human rights. Rather, the claim is based on the assumption that some states are more civilised than others. Thus, when the former British Foreign Secretary, the late Robin Cook was asked on the BBC shortly after the United Kingdom became a signatory to the Rome Treaty whether the newly constituted ICC thereby created might one day indict Western leaders for their decision to go to war in Iraq for a second time, he retorted, outraged and indignant, and I quote:

"If I may say so, this is not a court set up to bring to book prime ministers of the United Kingdom or presidents of the United States."

So we ask, who was it set up for, then? Who was it set up for? We submit that the answer is plain to see because it is notable that the guardians of international justice have yet to find a single crime committed by a great, white, northern power against people of colour. That is because in reality, international criminal justice is governed by the law of gravity.

It always travels from top to bottom, from north to south.

And in this regard, we return to a point we have consistently made. That is the centrality of selectivity in this process, Selectivity of denunciation, selectivity of investigation, selectivity of prosecution, and we also submit selectivity of immunity. That is why we were driven to introduce our closing written submissions in this case with these words from which we do not for one moment seek to resign. The Prosecution of Charles Taylor before the Special Court for Sierra Leone has been irregular, selective, and vindictive from its inception. Examined from any vantage point imaginable, the case against Taylor has as its core political roots and motives and the inexorable determination of the United States and Great Britain to have Taylor removed and kept out of Liberia at any cost.

Indeed, this case directly raises the question of whether the judicial process can be fashioned into a political tool for use by powerful nations to remove democratically elected leaders of other nations that refuse to serve as their handmaidens and footstools.

From the outset of these proceedings we have denounced this trial as being political. We have labeled this Prosecution as riddled with hypocrisy and untruth, and we are not about to stop now. At each stage of these proceedings we have been consistent and we are not about to reject any aspect of our case at this point, not for one instance.

But it is against that background that we should view the Prosecution's demand for a sentence of 80 years' imprisonment for a 64-year-old man.

But again, there is nothing surprising here. I remind myself of the contents of Defence Exhibit D481, a leaked code cable attributed to the US ambassador in Liberia. However, the best we can do for Liberia is to see to it that Taylor is put away for a long time. And we cannot delay for the results of the present trial to consider next steps.

So it seems that interests other than that of the people of Sierra Leone are being served by this demand for 80 years. Throw away the key.

Now, there are three matters that I would like to deal with at that stage in respect of the submissions made by my learned friend this morning.

First of all in relation to the question asked by Justice Doherty, we have found an ICTY authority called Blaskic, dated 1996, and it provides the legal basis for our submissions other than the English legislation to which we have referred in our written submissions. Where relevant at paragraph 17 and 18, the authority provides as follows:

"Close scrutiny of the various national legislations shows that states tend to uphold the same basic concept of house arrest and, in addition, lay down similar preconditions for the imposition of such measures."

By contrast, the requirements to be fulfilled by the person detained under house arrest vary greatly, all the more so because they are normally set out by individual judges for specific cases and in the light of the specific circumstances of each case.

As for the basic concept of house arrest, there is broad agreement that it covers detention in one's home or within the confines of the house or place outside a prison. It is widely specified in national legislation and held by courts that house arrest is a form or class of detention. For all purposes, including the right to impugn the legality of detention, and the right to have this period spent under house arrest taken into 10:59:47 account for determining the penalty, credit should be given to the convicted person for the period, if any, during which the convicted person was detained in custody pending his surrender to the Tribunal or pending trial or appeal should also apply to such form of pre-trial detention.

11:00:10 And the final point we make in this regard is this. In a customary careful way, my learned friend went through in detail the submissions made by the Defence in regard to that issue of house arrest in Calabar. One important omission, however, was the statement by David Crane, a Prosecutor -- the Chief 11:00:45 Prosecutor, who himself characterised Taylor's period in Calabar as house arrest.

The second matter that I would like to address which arises from my learned friend's submission is this. The Prosecution's concerns about Annexes G, J, and U as containing information 11:01:12 going to the acts and conducts of the accused is misplaced. The rules for admission of information by the Defence at the sentencing phase does not have a restriction similar to that of Rule 92 bis, which deals with the admission of written evidence at trial.

11:01:39 In any event, the information contained in the annexes does not, in our submission, go to proof of the acts and conduct of the accused in relation to the commission of the crimes charged, and so, in our submission, should not be excluded.

The third and final matter which arises from my learned friend's submission which I would like to address is this. Now, the point was made that at this stage there is no absolute certainty as to the geographical location where Mr Taylor will serve any sentence imposed by this Court. This consequently 11:02:30 leaves open this possibility: Your Honours could, we submit, take on board our submissions as to the aggravating nature for an African to be serving a sentence thousands of miles away on a different continent. And Your Honours could take that into account in, for example, providing in your sentence for 11:02:58 alternative sentences, so that if the sentence is to be served in the United Kingdom, these considerations apply; if elsewhere, then different considerations may apply. That, of course, is a basic, we would submit, sentencing exercise.

Now, My Lord, turning now to the mitigating factors which 11:03:24 we have set out in detail in our written submissions, and I assure Your Honours that I will not be going through all of those in detail, but I do appreciate that the art of mitigation is to establish here, in this court, on a balance of probabilities, certain mitigating circumstances.

11:03:50 As I say, we have set these out clearly in our written sentencing brief, and we did so whilst appreciating that international sentencing law and practice is not yet defined by exact norms and principles and, as yet, there is no body of international principles concerning the determination of 11:04:17 sentence, notwithstanding the huge volume of sentencing research and the extensive modern debate of sentencing principles. Moreover, international judges receive very little guidance in sentencing matters. This situation can lead to inconsistencies and may increase the risk that similar cases will be sentenced in different ways.

This is particularly the situation in this unique situation, what is described as being an important historical moment with very little precedent. There is very little guidance for Your Honours in this unique situation.

But turning onto other matters beyond those principles, we have, from the outset, conceded that crimes were, indeed, committed in Sierra Leone. That Your Honours have found this to be the case is therefore hardly surprising because the issue was not, of course, whether the atrocities were committed but, rather, the role played in them by Charles Taylor.

Nonetheless, for almost five years we in this trial shared a collective experience. We have relived lost lives. We felt the pain of lost limbs, the agony of not only rape in its commonly understood sense, but also the rape of childhood, the rape of innocence, possibly the rape of hope. We have recorded the destruction of homes and communities. All the consequences of war, whenever waged, whatever the countries involved, for war causes men and women to lose their infancy as they become infantrymen and women, an English word. So child soldiers is not a recent phenomena, and it's not -- it's certainly not restricted to Africa. It has a very long pedigree indeed.

So in that regard, we ask you to contrast two situations: Firstly, a child soldier, forcibly recruited, enduring bitter experiences in the denial of his or her childhood, left militarised, uneducated, with few life chances, abandoned to a life of rejection, pain, and possibly crime, exacerbated, no doubt, by the effects of post-traumatic stress disorder. Now, contrast that with a drone controlled from a bunker in Nevada which fires a missile into a compound in Northern Pakistan, killing entire families indiscriminately, including babies. They have no time to feel pain in such clinical PlayStation-type destruction.

11:08:09 Is there a choice between the two in terms of their criminality? Are they not both crimes equally worthy of human condemnation? Consequently in this sentencing exercise, we should beware of applying double standards.

Now, for the purposes of these submissions I propose to 11:08:37 address four matters and four matters only. Firstly, in terms of mitigation, the period of offending as set out diagrammatically at Annex 4 of our sentencing brief. Secondly, Charles Taylor's role in bringing peace to Sierra Leone. Thirdly, his voluntary departure from office. And finally, his age. I also intend to 11:09:10 point to a potential pitfall in the sentencing exercise.

So, first of all, the period of offending. Now, My Lord, I'd inquired of the Court Manager whether our Annex F, which is this chart, could be put up on our screens. Yes.

Now these -- this diagram --

11:10:17 PRESIDING JUDGE: We don't have it on our screen yet, Mr Griffiths.

THE REGISTRAR: Your Honours, if the parties and the Chamber could please press the "Evidence" button, they would be able to view the chart.

11:11:27 MR GRIFFITHS: Your Honours, to save time, could I hand out three copies, because I should be able to manage without it.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Griffiths. I've just been handed a copy, so that should do.

MR GRIFFITHS: Your Honours, sometimes looking at a diagram helps to focus the mind more clearly as to what the true issues are, and we can see here that the bulk of the offending occurs within this period in the middle of the diagram, and it basically covers a roughly 12-month period, that is about from March 1998 to February 1999.

11:12:12

That period of madness, triggered by the ECOMOG intervention, culminating in the Freetown invasion. The only two crimes for which he stands to be sentenced which endured for an extended period of time during the indictment period were the recruitment and use of child soldiers and enslavement, which are these two long lines here. But you will see that the other crimes are, for the most part, concentrated within that time-scale.

11:12:35

Now we submit that that fact must have certain consequences in terms of sentence.

11:13:01

Moving onto Mr Taylor's role in the peace process. We boldly submit that peace would not have come to Sierra Leone but for the efforts of Charles Taylor. In this regard, we point in summary to four critical interventions by the president of Liberia: His facilitation of the Lomé Peace Accord; secondly, his efforts in securing the release of the captured UNAMSIL personnel; thirdly, his brokering of the cessation of hostilities by the West Side Boys; and finally, his role in the appointment of Issa Sesay as acting leader of the RUF, thereby ensuring the continuation of the Lomé Peace Accord.

11:13:36

11:14:31

These are all well documented, as highlighted in our sentencing brief at paragraph 122, and were all central and essential for the bringing of peace to Liberia's neighbour, which Mr Taylor has oft repeated was essential for stability in his own country.

Now, I appreciate that this Court has found that in making these efforts, Mr Taylor was acting like a two-headed Janus. We, of course, note the contents of paragraph 119 of the summary judgement. However, in our view, for sentencing purposes, the following factual propositions are true:

One, we submit that the Trial Chamber should concentrate on what was objectively achieved by Mr Taylor's involvement, and we do maintain that but for Mr Taylor's involvement, peace would not have come to Sierra Leone.

The second proposition which we would ask Your Honours to adopt is this: It should be further noted that after the retreat from Freetown in early 1999, there was no further major outbreak of violence in Sierra Leone so that any assistance provided were not used to break the peace in that country.

Further, Mr Taylor has not been convicted of having planned any actions in Sierra Leone after 1999. Thereafter, the most that can be pointed to is the use of the RUF to fight against LURD after their incursions into Liberia, which we would describe as an act of self-defence.

Thirdly, voluntary resignation from office. His voluntary resignation from office is a further matter we would seek to emphasise. Contemporary events in Syria informs us that power is not easily relinquished. By stepping down, Charles Taylor saved Liberia and prevented the contagion of further warfare spilling over into neighbouring countries and thereby further destabilising the sub-region. There is, we say, an important lesson here for which he should be given credit.

Finally, the age of the offender. We only have to do the math. We all recognise that to sentence a 64-year-old man to 80 years in prison is, in effect, a guarantee that he will die in prison. In fact, if not in name, what is proposed is a life sentence, a sentence which cannot be imposed by this Court. Even 11:18:29 a sentence of 40 years would, in this case, in all likelihood have the same consequence.

Now, we would submit that it's a basic sentencing principle that the possibility that an accused person will not live to be released is a matter which should have a major impact on a 11:18:56 sentencing decision; thus, the Court may think it would be proper to adjust the sentence to do what it reasonably can -- can do to avoid the possibility of Mr Taylor dying in prison.

Now I mentioned earlier a possible pitfall in this sentencing process. Now, we say that the Court should be mindful 11:19:28 of its rejection of the joint enterprises pleaded by the Prosecution and also the rejection of the notion of command responsibility. Conscious of those important findings, the concept of planning should not be expanded into a surrogate for those rejected modes of liability; that is, the limits of the 11:19:56 concept of planning should not be extended to encompass all the underlying crimes.

I come, then, to conclude, Your Honours. In conclusion we remind ourselves that the Statute which established this court provided that this court shall have the power to prosecute 11:20:24 persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since the 30th of November, 1996, including those leaders who in committing such crimes have threatened the establishment of and implementation of the peace process in Sierra Leone.

We say that by seeking a sentence so offensive to logic and reason, this Prosecution endangers that peace. People in Liberia quite justifiably, in our submission, are asking the question: How can our former president be sentenced to 80 years in prison, while next door, in Sierra Leone, former President Kabbah goes free? Many Liberians regard this as being vindictive.

Did he, too, not share the greatest responsibility? We submit this has the potential to increase tensions between those two states. In short, such a sentence as demanded is, we say, erroneous in principle and endangers the very peace this Court was established to maintain.

And finally we say this. Retribution should never be the sole criterion in sentencing, neither deterrent. Every accused, in our submission, must be left with some hope, must be able to see the light at the end of the tunnel, however long that tunnel must be. And we submit that should be a guiding consideration in this sentencing exercise.

Thank you.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Griffiths.

JUDGE DOHERTY: Mr Griffiths, I've heard your submissions and also, obviously, read your submissions. Two questions.

In your submissions, both oral and written, you again speak of the selective prosecution of Mr Taylor, notwithstanding that the Trial Chamber stated in their decision with regard to the issue of selective Prosecution, the Trial Chamber finds that the accused was not singled out for selective prosecution. I therefore ask if your submission is by way of relitigating, and if not relitigating, how I must consider that submission as a mitigating factor.

MR GRIFFITHS: Of course, Your Honour, we are aware of the Trial Chamber's finding in that respect. We are aware of it. And we are not seeking at all to relitigate that issue. But I made it plain in introducing that particular topic that we remain consistent in our approach.

11:23:41

Now, even though this is a sentencing exercise, it doesn't mean that the Defence necessarily must, in order to mitigate, relinquish all aspects of their case. In our submission, that is not required. And so we may disagree with the finding of the Court, but in our submission that has no moment so far as sentencing is concerned.

11:24:01

JUDGE DOHERTY: My other question was to seek clarification of a submission you make in your written submissions.

If I could direct you to paragraph 102, in which you draw comparison to illustrate a point concerning the genocide in Rwanda and the killing over ten years, I quote:

11:24:26

"... the 10-year onslaught in Afghanistan ..."

Again, I am not quite sure how I adopt this comparison when considering mitigating factors that you are submitting to us.

11:25:05

MR GRIFFITHS: Well, what we are submitting there, Your Honour, is the question of scale and duration, both factors which I sought to address, for example, by means of the diagram which we submitted before the Court. And it seems to us that it's perfectly legitimate for a Court in this sentencing exercise to look at other situations in weighing that central issue of gravity.

11:25:31

JUDGE DOHERTY: Thank you. Those were my questions.

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: Mr Griffiths, when Ms Hollis was submitting a while ago, she alluded to the sentences that were imposed on Mr Sesay, the leader of the RUF, and on Mr Brima, the leader of the AFRC, and she cited just these two people. Of course, there are more convicts that we are all aware of.

11:26:22 My question is: Do you think that these the sentences meted out to the leaders of the AFRC and leaders of the RUF should have any bearing on our considering of the sentence to be imposed on Mr Taylor?

MR GRIFFITHS: The short answer, Your Honour, is no. And I

11:26:40 say no for this reason: That Mr Taylor stands in a completely different position vis-a-vis his liability for those crimes than the two examples provided to the Court. They was direct participants in the commission of those crimes, unlike Mr Taylor who has been convicted on the basis of aiding and abetting.

11:27:07 We submit that there is a basis for saying that there needs to be a distinction between a principal actor in the commission of a crime and a secondary party such as an aider and abettor. So to that extent, we would submit that the answer to -- with respect to Your Honour's question is no.

11:27:30 JUDGE SEBUTINDE: But if you say there should be a distinction, then by definition we should take them into account, wouldn't you agree?

MR GRIFFITHS: Well --

JUDGE SEBUTINDE: If only to distinguish Mr Taylor's

11:27:43 sentence from that of the people that have gone before him.

MR GRIFFITHS: Well, that of course is perfectly legitimate, but to use that tariff, if our submission, as, for example, a starting point, we submit would be illegitimate because it would not take into account the mode of liability in respect of which Mr Taylor is being convicted.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Griffiths.

Now I understand Mr Taylor would like to address the Court before we proceed to pass sentence, and he understands, does he not, that he will be limited to 30 minutes.

11:28:34

MR GRIFFITHS: He does. He does, Your Honour.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Taylor, you wanted to use the witness-stand, so if you would please come forward.

MR GRIFFITHS: Your Honour, Mr Taylor will be reading from a written document. I wonder if he might have the assistance of the lectern.

11:28:52

PRESIDING JUDGE: If there is one handy there.

MR GRIFFITHS: Well, he can take mine.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Mr Taylor can come down to the witness-stand.

11:30:04

THE ACCUSED: Thank you, Your Honours.

Mr President, Justice Lussick, Justice Sebutinde, Justice Doherty, members of the Registry here, the Prosecutors past and present, members of the Defence past and present, the visiting gallery, and may I say the world's audience, the last six years have been challenging years for all of us. Judges, Prosecutors, Defence lawyers, victims, and their families, me and my family, and the peoples of Sierra Leone and Liberia. And now this process is at its end and I am grateful that this Court has extended me the opportunity to be heard at this time.

11:30:58

11:31:39

The observations which I make today are deeply felt and are not limited exclusively to the legal issues of this case. I am aware of my rights, and without prejudice to any of those rights, I hereby make the following observations.

It seems to me, as an economist and a layperson not a lawyer, that Your Honours were dealt a difficult hand, sitting at the helm of a Court whose rules allow a low threshold requirement for the presentation of evidence. The presumption is that 11:32:34 everything is admitted into evidence regardless in about 98 per cent of the time.

Your Honours were also handicapped by not having the benefit of the full contextual picture of why and how I ended up before this court. That contextual matrix is uniquely political 11:33:03 and not legal in nature, and having ensnared Charles Taylor at this time, only time will tell how many other African heads of state stand to be destroyed in its continued wake.

These handicaps were not the fault of Your Honours, to be sure, in the sense that you could not be asked to know of so much 11:33:31 that was never meant to ever see the light of day. Despite obstacles to ascertaining the truth, what was clear beyond a shadow of a doubt, as I understood the summary of the judgement, was that Your Honours critically determined, in fact, that I could not be held responsible for the substantial charges of 11:33:57 joint criminal enterprise as a pure responsibility, as had been pleaded by the Prosecution.

Now, following the civil war in Liberia, I stood before the Liberian people and apologised and expressed the deep regrets and contrition for the loss of lives and limbs and the overall 11:34:24 effects of the civil war. I stated that no words, no matter how polished and sincere, could heal the scars and pains all suffered.

I was not alone as a leader of a faction that fought during the civil war when I took it upon myself to express those sentiments while aspiring for the presidency, but I did. There are many like me who owed an expression of sympathy and regret for what happened to the Liberian people, indeed, none other than the current president of Liberia, Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, was 11:35:09 identified in the Liberian Truth and Reconciliation Commission report as somebody from whom such expression of regret and sympathy for what happened in Liberia should have been forthcoming, since she was one of the three principal leaders of the NPFL along with me.

11:35:31 Additionally, I said that wars were terrible. That there was no good war. That there are no just wars, whether carried out by underdeveloped countries whose peoples are still deeply entrenched in tribal, ethnic, and cultural conflicts, or by the worlds only military superpower.

11:36:04 President Bush in 2000 tried to play the just card war -- excuse me, the just war card. A card that goes pack to the 1st Century BCE when Rome's Marcus Tullius Cicero theorised on the justified use of armed forces, jus ad bellum, and he lost that argument. Scholars still debate the concept today with no 11:36:38 clear agreement.

But as wars are no good, I condemn all atrocities across the world, whether by bombs that are dropped by powerful nations from aeroplanes or cruise missiles fired from ships, submarines, and aircraft and/or drones that kill women and children by 11:37:00 blowing off legs, arms, and leaving mangled bodies scattered all over the place, only to be justified as collateral damage. That, too, is wrong. These are crimes also.

Now, following the verdict of 26 April, the Prosecutor in the press release said the following:

"Today's historic judgement reinforces the new reality that heads of state will be held to account for war crimes and other international crimes. This judgement affirms that with leadership comes not just power and authority, but also responsibility and accountability. No person, no matter how powerful, is above the law."

Now, I could not agree more. President George W. Bush not too long ago ordered torture and admitted to doing so. Torture is a crime against humanity. The United States has refused to prosecute him. Is he above the law? Where is the fairness?

Terrible things happened in Sierra Leone, and there can be no justification for the terrible crimes. During the war in Liberia, I punished people responsible for crimes against others. Factual evidence presented before this court proved that several NPFL soldiers were put on trial for violent crimes. Some were executed for rape, murder, and other serious crimes. Witnesses from both sides testified to that fact.

Let me be very, very clear about one thing: I do not condone impunity in any shape or form. Let me say in the strongest term, that I, DahKpannah Dr. Charles Ghankay Taylor, did not, could not have ever, and would never have knowingly and with responsibility and/or authority to prevent, stop, or punish someone from carrying out acts of atrocities fail to do so.

Now, I say all of this not just in the context of Sierra Leone and the charges against me, but also in the wider context of the impunity, whether in Africa or the rest of our global community. There has to be a mechanism which is developed, embraced, and perfected by the global community to deal with impunity in a way that is consistent with the history, custom, practice, and cultures of the people inconsonant with their spirit as an independent people.

The Rome Statute is a Western document that does not take into account citing customs, cultures, and other sensitivities unique to certain regions of the world. The practice of one size fits all within the legal context is unfair and unjust.

I say with respect that though I disagree with your findings of guilt, it is easy for me to see how the absence of the contextual framework in which this case was put together by the Prosecution seemingly contributed to your findings. Sadly, I am saddled with those findings today as you consider what sentence to impose.

A starting point for the contextual framework to which I'm referring is the issue of money, the purchasing of witnesses' evidence with money. Money played a corrupting, influential, significant, and dominant role in this trial. Money, in this case, cumulatively prejudiced my rights and interests in an irreparable way.

The Prosecution received millions of dollars from the United States government outside of the official funding process of the court administration. The Prosecution has never fully accounted for how those monies were spent, who received how much, or for what purpose or purposes. Witnesses were paid, coerced, and in many cases threatened with prosecution if they did not co-operate only to extract statements and not confessions. Families were rewarded with thousands of dollars to cover costs of children's school fees, transportation, food, clothing, medical bills, and given cash allowances for protected and non-protected witnesses in a country where income is less than a dollar a day.

The question then comes to focus: What was the Prosecution buying?

Abu Keita testified openly and never felt it necessary to 11:43:19 demand any type of protective measures from this Court, and yet, within a few weeks of having testified, it became public knowledge that he successfully coerced the Prosecution and the Witness and Victim Section, WVS, to relocate him overseas. The details are sketchy because the Prosecution and WVS have refused 11:43:48 to provide any details regarding the extortion by Abu Keita. Evidence of his own threats are shown in Exhibit D468.

A more important point for the contextual framework to which I am referring is the role politics played. With regime change -- excuse me, Your Honours. When regime change in Liberia 11:44:19 became a policy of the United States government, President George W. Bush, in May of 2001, signed a second of two executive orders, number 13213, Defence Exhibit D310, in which it was stated, and I quote:

"The government of Liberia's complicity in the RUF's
11:44:54 illicit trade in diamonds and its other forms of support for the RUF are direct challenges to the United States foreign policy objectives in the region as well as the rule-based international order that is critical to the peace and prosperity of the United States. Therefore, I find these actions by the government
11:45:21 of Liberia contribute to the unusual and extraordinary threat to the foreign policy of the United States described in executive order 13194," with respect to which the president declared a national emergency.

This executive order did not say "the alleged complicity."

It concluded "the complicity." The conspiracy was born. All systems put into motion. And here I stand today. I never stood a chance.

This is the broader contextual matrix that regrettably did not and still has not seen the light of day in these proceedings despite the gallant efforts by the Defence to unearth and reveal the contextual framework behind the charges against me.

Now, with the two executive orders, the dogs were let out, so to speak. What followed was a dispatch of the attack pack led by Lieutenant-Colonel David Crane, defence intelligence 30 years, prosecutor. He, Crane, unlawfully unsealed the Court's sealed indictment to his handlers, senior US government officials at the US embassy in Freetown, and was never held to account.

The rest of the operational team are Colonel Brenda Hollis, Defence intelligence, CIA, US Air Force, senior trial counsel, and now Prosecutor. James C. Johnson, US Army, expert 20 years on conventional and special operations, chief of prosecutions for the SCSL. Allen White, 30 years Defence intelligence, recalled from retirement to head up investigations at the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Stephen J. Rapp came on board as Chief Prosecutor for a short time with experience from Capitol Hill where he served with a US Senate Judiciary Subcommittee sometime before. It came as a surprise to me that as a reward of sorts for Stephen Rapp's diligence in execution of US foreign policy objectives through these ad hoc tribunals, he was appointed US ambassador-at-large for war crimes issues.

In support of the contextual framework of politics, on February 8, 2006, Lieutenant-Colonel David Crane, Prosecutor, appeared before a US Congress subcommittee on Africa, Defence Exhibit D04, and spelled out in clear terms the decision taken in support of regime change in Liberia and what needed to happen to solidify that process. There was no mention, if any, in his testimony about Sierra Leone. And here is what he said:

11:48:58

"I posit that five years from now, when the international community is challenged by other crises, Taylor, in Calabar, under the protection of Nigeria, will make his move. We will wake up one morning and watch on CNN as Taylor rides triumphantly down the main street in Monrovia to the executive mansion, daring all of us to come and get him. Unless he is handed over to the Special Court for Sierra Leone, this scenario is not out of the realm of possibility ..."

11:49:31

He then asked:

"How to do we assure Liberia's future?"

11:49:54

And he answers that. Ultimately he says:

"What we do about Taylor in the next several weeks will determine the fate of Liberia and the new administration of its president, Ellen Johnson Sirleaf."

11:50:18

Crane then sets out several plans, two of which I will state here. He said:

"First, hand Charles Taylor over to the Special Court for Sierra Leone for a fair trial."

His kind of trial.

11:50:32

"This takes him out of the local and regional dynamics that is West Africa ..."

"Second, tie any financial and political support to good governance in Liberia."

Time does not permit, but the exhibits are present.

Not even the Nigerian nation was spared from threats and intimidation as explained by Femi Fani-Kayode, press secretary to President Obasanjo, the Nigerian head of state, who was with him in Washington when President George W. Bush promised, and I 11:51:13 quote, "to bring Nigeria to its knees" if Taylor was not turned over to the Special Court.

And what happened? Obasanjo buckled and capitulated. Now, this demonstrates the significant pressure that was brought to bear on President Obasanjo irrespective of his personal and 11:51:45 leadership obligations to the West African sub-region. And therein lies the dilemma for current African heads of state and government, how to enter into binding commitments and obligations with their African peers and remain steadfast, resolute, and unyielding in their fidelity to those agreements in the face of 11:52:03 such unrelenting and punishing pressure from powerful Western leaders.

Evidence, as we know, can be deceiving. The world watched General Colin Powell, a man of honour and respect, mislead the United Nations Security Council and the world about weapons of 11:52:24 mass destruction in Iraq, and I believe it was unintentional. There were drawings of mobile laboratories for the production of gases and other nerve agents for use in weapons of mass destruction. None of this was true.

Intelligence experts, we were told later, had relied on 11:52:47 informers who deliberately lied or misinformed experts and analysts. Not even the world's only superpower knew what was actually obtaining on the ground in Iraq.

What happened afterward over a period of ten years under the iron fists of the United States and Great Britain caused the murder, the rape, maiming, torture, and mutilation of around 1.5 million Iraqis, not to mention the 1 million Iraqi babies that lost their lives as a result of crippling sanctions.

Now, this tragedy, I believe, are consequences not 11:53:35 anticipated of a policy that set out - and may I say rightly so - to prevent the development and use of weapons of mass destruction against civilians. But what happened? It ended up a total disaster costing around a trillion dollars and a massive loss of lives and limbs on all sides, unfortunately.

11:54:02 What I did to help bring peace to Sierra Leone was done with honour. Foremost on my mind at all times was to help solve the problem because I was convinced that unless peace came to Sierra Leone, Liberia would not be able to move forward. I pushed the peace process hard and used known mediating methods in 11:54:33 trying to draw the parties close and gain their confidence and trust. This is a strategy used universally in mediation efforts. Indeed, my approach to peace in Sierra Leone was neither unique nor new.

All major activities leading to peace in Sierra Leone,
11:54:56 except for the final signing of the Lome Peace Agreement, were done in Monrovia. Following that historic signing we brought Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma to Monrovia. When Bockarie threatened the disarmament process, we extracted Sam Bockarie to give the disarmament process a chance to take hold. We invited
11:55:15 Issa Sesay to meet my colleagues and me in Liberia to get new leadership to the RUF to advance the peace when Foday Sankoh was arrested in Freetown, putting the whole process under strain.

Contrary to how I have been portrayed before this Court, and what is now reflected in the summary of the judgement, respectfully, I was not and could not have been a two-headed Janus, ever. In the context of my effort for peace in neighbouring Sierra Leone, I, Your Honour, too believe in honour and integrity. These are seriously complex situations and are 11:55:59 not just cut and dried as one may want to make them appear.

I was president of Liberia. I was not some petty trader on the streets of Monrovia or in the general market. Liberia was still recovering from war, where at least five warring parties had come together for peace but still with divided loyalties. My 11:56:25 personal security was still threatened as things were still fluid in the country. For anyone to believe that I had to be everywhere, know or be told everything, and monitor whatever little corrupt ex-combatant, crook or petty hustler did at some check-point or border post is unfortunate and disturbing.

11:56:52 National security briefings to leaders the world over are brief and intended to inform the leaders on strategic matters and not a journal to occupy the leaders' schedule. Sadly, right here in this court building, according to classified documents leaked, an individual or individuals spied for and reported to the 11:57:19 US embassy here in The Hague, and I suggest Your Honours may still not know who did the spying.

How, then, could any reasonable person suggest that any of what was happening within the frontal view of the president, he had to know? It simply defies logic, with respect.

11:57:47 I say without stupor that my actions were genuine and done with one thing in mind: Helping to bring peace to Sierra Leone, thus providing an enabling environment for progress in both countries, Liberia being my constitutional responsibility as president.

Unfortunately, and as a result of the efforts on the part of my government for peace in Sierra Leone, there now appears to have been collateral activities undertaken by some unsavory individuals that led to consequences that I was entirely unaware of and could not have ameliorated or prevented.

11:58:27

As I have done before many times, I do again here and now. I express my sadness and deepest sympathy for the atrocities and crimes that were suffered by individuals and families in Sierra Leone. I too have experienced pain and sadness and know what it is. I lost my father, my oldest brother, my youngest brother, and a host of other relatives, friends, and acquaintances during the war in Liberia, as well as peace-loving Liberian citizens.

11:58:57

I am 64 years old, not young anymore. I am the father of many children, grand-children and great-grand. I am of no threat to society. In Liberia I commenced the process of healing by putting into place a peace and reconciliation commission modelled after that of South Africa. I say with respect, reconciliation and healing, not retribution, should be the guiding principles in Your Honours' task.

11:59:19

Thank you very much.

11:59:49

I would just like to say before I sit that I did not have the opportunity to congratulate Justice Sebutinde for her election to a position in the International Court of Justice. Now, some may say, well, you should not accept it, Your Honour, from a convicted war criminal. I'm sorry, I probably should have done this in February but I didn't have the opportunity.

12:00:16

But I would like to do so now. I think that all women in Africa are very proud of you. And for the other Judges that will, I'm sure, sure move on to other greater and better things, please accept my congratulations in advance.

Thank you.

PRESIDING JUDGE: Thank you, Mr Taylor.

THE ACCUSED: May I leave now?

12:00:52 PRESIDING JUDGE: Before we adjourn, we would like to thank both the Prosecution and the Defence for their very comprehensive written briefs and also for the additional oral arguments presented today. We have much to consider.

The delivery of judgement -- a Sentencing judgement date

12:01:22 has already been fixed for the 30th of May, Wednesday, the 30th of May, at 11.00 a.m. So Mr Taylor is remanded until that date for a sentence, and I will now adjourn the court.

[Whereupon the Hearing adjourned at 12.03 p.m.]

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF FOUR ON THE SITUATION IN SIERRA LEONE

ABUJA, AUGUST 26, 1997

THE SITUATION IN SIERRA LEONE

On 25 May, 1997, a section of the military in Sierra Leone violently overthrew the legitimate government of President Tejan Kabbah. This was an unfortunate event for Sierra Leone. The coup d'etat was tragic in nature and consequence for, upon seizing power, the elements broke into prisons and threw open the gates thus releasing all sorts of criminals and convicts. The rebellious RUF members were invited by the coupists from their bases in the jungle into Freetown. In the general mayhem which ensued, massive looting of property, murder and rape became the order of the day. Vital national assets were not spared as they too were vandalised and looted.

This situation also threatened the stability and security of the neighbouring countries and indeed the entire sub-region. Hundreds of refugees fleeing from the situation in Sierra Leone constituted additional burden on the economies and societies of neighbouring countries, especially Guinea. This situation also posed a special threat to peace in Liberia for which our sub-region had laboured for several years.

REACTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY

The coup d'etat in Sierra Leone took place on Africa Day when the leaders of the continent were gathered in Harare, Zimbabwe on the eve of the 33rd Ordinary Summit of the OAU. The leaders roundly condemned the seizure of power and called for the immediate restoration of constitutional order to the country. They urged the international community not to recognise the illegal regime in Sierra Leone and called on the leaders of ECOWAS to take the lead in restoring constitutional order to the country. The Secretary-General of the UN who was in Harare endorsed the OAU position, including the restoration of the legitimate government. This was reinforced by a statement by the President of the UN Security Council, two days after the coup, which unequivocally condemned the coup d'etat.

Meanwhile, in our sub-region, the Chairman of ECOWAS had commenced measures aimed at resolving the Sierra Leone crisis. His consultations with the leaders of the sub-region resulted in the convening of a meeting of ECOWAS Foreign Ministers in Conakry on 26 June, 1997. The meeting reviewed the situation in Sierra Leone and recommended ways and means of achieving a speedy restoration of constitutional order to the country. It identified three objectives to be pursued by ECOWAS in Sierra Leone. These were:

(i) the early reinstatement of the legitimate government of President Tejan Kabbah;

(ii) the return of peace and security; and

(iii) the resolution of the issue of refugees and displaced persons.

The Foreign Ministers recommended a combination of three measures to be applied in the pursuit of these objectives. These were dialogue, imposition of sanctions/embargo; and the use of force. Furthermore, the Foreign Ministers established a Ministerial Committee of Four, comprising the Foreign Ministers of Nigeria, Guinea, Cote d'Ivoire and Ghana, to be joined by representatives of the OAU and ECOWAS Secretariats. This Committee was charged with implementing the recommendations and decisions on Sierra Leone.

BRIEFING OF THE CHAIRMAN OF ECOWAS

After the Conakry meeting, the newly established Committee of Four on Sierra Leone submitted a report to the Chairman of ECOWAS in Abuja on 6 July, 1997. The Chairman endorsed the recommendations of the Foreign Ministers and considered it appropriate that ECOWAS position should be conveyed to the Secretary-General of the UN and the UN Security Council, by the Committee of Four.

VISIT TO NEW YORK

On 11 July, 1997, members of the Committee visited New York and briefed the Secretary-General of the UN and the UN Security Council on ECOWAS perspectives on the gravity of the situation in Sierra Leone as well as the need for prompt and concerted action by the international community. The Foreign Ministers restated, in clear and unequivocal terms, the need for the illegal regime to comply fully with the demands of ECOWAS, the OAU and the international community and return power to the legitimate government of President Tejan Kabbah. Following the briefing of the Security Council, a meeting of the Council was convened, at the instance of the ECOWAS Ministers, on the situation in Sierra Leone. At the end of the Council's deliberations, a Presidential Statement was issued which expressed deep concern about the continuing crisis in Sierra Leone and reiterated its view that the attempt to overthrow the democratically elected government of President Kabbah was unacceptable. The Council also welcomed the mediation efforts of ECOWAS and expressed full support for the objectives of these efforts, as set out in the Final Communique of our meeting in Conakry on 26 June, 1997.

DIALOGUE AND NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE ILLEGAL REGIME IN SIERRA LEONE

In accordance with the mandate given to the Committee of Four, we established contact with the elements in Sierra Leone and invited the leader, Major Johnny Paul Koromah, for a meeting in Guinea. However, in their response, the regime in Freetown indicated a preference for Cote d'Ivoire rather than Guinea as venue for the proposed meeting. The Committee of Four had no difficulty with this proposal. They recognised that Cote d'Ivoire was not only a member of the sub-region but also of the Committee of Four on Sierra Leone. Indeed, Cote d'Ivoire had been actively engaged in the search for peace in Sierra Leone which culminated in signing of the Abidjan Peace Agreement of 30 November, 1996 between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front (RUF).

The first meeting with the illegal regime in Sierra Leone took place in Abidjan from 17-18 July, 1997. Major J.P. Koromah was not present but he was represented by a 12-member delegation led by Mr. Alimamy Pallo Bangura. The delegation included politicians such as Dr. Karefa Smart, Dr. Abbass Bundu, some RUF members and a section of the Sierra Leonean military. The Committee of Four presented to the Sierra Leonean delegation, the contents of its mandate, endorsed by the Chairman of ECOWAS, the OAU and the UN Security Council, including the early reinstatement of the legitimate government of President Kabbah. For their part, the Sierra Leonean delegation presented their views on the situation in their country. They expressed their readiness to work towards the early restoration of constitutional order.

Discussions were held in an atmosphere of cordiality and frankness. The representatives of the illegal regime agreed with the views expressed by the Ministers for the resolution of the Sierra Leone crisis. They were however concerned that any solution proffered, should be such that would preserve the dignity of all sides. Consequently, the meeting decided:

(i) to resolve all issues related to the Sierra Leone crisis peacefully, in the best interest of the people of Sierra Leone, the sub-region, Africa and the international community as a whole;

(ii) that all hostilities should cease and therefore a ceasefire be immediately established throughout Sierra Leone while all efforts are deployed towards the peaceful resolution of the crisis;

(iii) to work towards the early restoration of constitutional order including the reinstatement of the legitimate government of President Kabbah; and

(iv) to allow the Sierra Leone delegation sufficient time to return home and hold further consultations with the regime in Freetown in order to facilitate a consideration of the detailed modalities for the return of constitutional order to their country.

From 29-30 July, 1997, the second meeting between the Committee of Four and the representatives of Major J.P. Koromah was held again in Abidjan. This time, the composition of the delegation of the illegal regime, had changed substantially from what it was at the first meeting. Some of the politicians were dropped and the ranks included more RUF members. The Ministers requested the delegation to present their proposals on the modalities for the restoration of constitutional order in their country. Regrettably, the representatives of the regime reneged on the agreement reached at the first meeting on the question of the reinstatement of President Tejan Kabbah. Moreover, while the meeting was in progress, the Foreign Ministers were alerted to an announcement by the illegal regime in Freetown to suspend the constitution of Sierra Leone and remain in office illegally until the year 2001. The implication of this announcement was not lost on the Ministers. They therefore considered that further dialogue with the representatives of the illegal regime, at that point, would serve no useful purpose. Accordingly, the Ministers decided to recommend to the Chairman of ECOWAS the formal introduction of the regime of sanctions and embargo, which are a part of the measures earlier agreed, to ensure the early and full implementation of the mandate of the Committee of Four.

The Chairman of ECOWAS has since asked for a full-scale application of sanctions and embargo against Sierra Leone, while not foreclosing the option of returning to negotiations, as a way of resolving the crisis peacefully. The Chairman has also renewed his call for the support of the international community for the ECOWAS initiative in Sierra Leone.

ACCRA MEETING

The Foreign Ministers of the Committee of Four convened in Accra, Ghana from 14-15 August, 1997 to review the developments in Sierra Leone in the aftermath of the abortive meeting of 29-30 July, 1997 in Abidjan. At that meeting, they were informed of the new initiatives on Sierra Leone being undertaken by the President of Guinea, H.E. General Lansana Conte and which had the potential of facilitating the peaceful resolution of the crisis in line with the ECOWAS objectives. The initiatives involved a proposed meeting between President Lansana Conte and the leader of the illegal regime in ~~a Guinea~~ Sierra Leone. The facilitator of this process was the former Head of State of Sierra Leone, Major-General Joseph Momoh. Under the circumstances, the Ministers decided to adjourn for a few days and to reconvene in Abuja on 25 August, 1997, in order to allow time for the ~~final~~ initiative to take place.

Meanwhile, it was agreed that details of sanctions and embargo to be applied against the regime in Sierra Leone should be prepared in readiness for submission to the Chairman of ECOWAS, before the commencement of the Summit of the Heads of State and Government of ECOWAS scheduled for Abuja, from 28-29, August, 1997.

CONCLUSION

The situation in Sierra Leone remains a matter of serious concern to our sub-region and our organisation. However, in order to keep our efforts and interests focussed and productive, there is need to take appropriate measures to counter the various machinations of the regime in Sierra Leone who seem more interested in hanging on to power at all cost rather than seek a peaceful negotiated solution to the crisis.

In pursuit of our overall objectives in Sierra Leone, the support of the international community, including the OAU, the Commonwealth and the United Nations, remains important. It is necessary therefore that we keep in close contact with these organisations and institutions, in particular, the UN Security Council. It is noteworthy that the final communique of the meeting of the ECOWAS Foreign Ministers in Conakry and the declaration issued by the Committee of Four at the end of their first meeting in Abidjan with representatives of the illegal regime from 17-18 July, 1997, have been adopted as documents of the Security Council. The Security Council is actively seized with the matter. We express our profound appreciation to members of the international community which have all refrained from according recognition to the regime in Sierra Leone.

Furthermore, whilst the use of force remains an available option to ECOWAS in resolving the crisis in Sierra Leone, sanctions and embargo will first, have to be vigorously applied. The details of sanctions and embargo which were prepared in Accra from 14 to 15 August, 1997, have been prepared, taking into consideration the experiences in other countries where sanctions have been similarly applied. There can be no doubt that in the application of sanctions and embargo, some measures of force may be required. In consideration of this, together with the need to assure peace and security in Sierra Leone and the sub-region, consideration should be given immediately to the extension of the present mandate of ECOMOG, to cover the situation in Sierra Leone.

Nevertheless, in line with our original intention and position, we must keep the door open for the regime in Sierra Leone to carry out realistic negotiations if and when they decide to do so. The application of sanctions should be seen as part of the pacific measures to be taken by ECOWAS against the illegal regime. The main interest of ECOWAS in this case is mainly to ensure the return of peace and stability to Sierra Leone.

The sixteenth meeting of the ECOWAS Chiefs of Staff commenced with a welcome address by Major-General A.A. Abubakar, Chief of Defence Staff of the Armed Forces of the Federal Republic of Nigeria.

In his address, he conveyed to the meeting the sincere greetings and best wishes of the Head of State, Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, current Chairman of ECOWAS, General Sani Abacha for successful deliberations.

Major-General A.A. Abubakar recalled that at the occasion of the 19th Summit of the Authority of Heads of State and Government held in Abuja last year, where the state of collective security and stability in the sub-region was reviewed, the meeting's primary concern was with the slow progress in the realisation of durable peace in Liberia, particularly in the aftermath of the renewed violence of April 1996.

He however observed that despite of all obstacles placed on its way and by dint of total commitment, dedication and perseverance, ECOWAS has succeeded in putting in place a democratically elected civilian government under the presidency of Mr. Charles Ghankay TAYLOR, and has established peace, security and order throughout Liberia.

Major-General A.A. Abubakar, on behalf of ECOWAS Chiefs of Staff, congratulated President Charles Taylor on his election as the 21st President of Liberia wishing him divine guidance in the formidable task of building a virile and prosperous nation.

He stated that the ECOMOG experience has been hailed as a new initiative in sub-regional conflict resolution the world over.

He paid a well deserved tribute to the ECOMOG High Command and to all the brave men and women under the able leadership of the Force Commander, Major-General SVL Malu and his predecessors for their courage, sacrifice and professionalism in the face of difficulties.

At this juncture, a moment's silence was observed in honour and memory of all those who made the supreme sacrifice by laying down their lives in order that their Liberian brothers and sisters may live a fulfilling life.

The Chairman recalled the recommendation made at their 13th and 14th meetings for the restructuring and training of the Armed Forces of Liberia, Police and security agencies, as part of the revised schedule of the Abuja Agreement.

For this reason he stated,, an ad hoc committee had been set up to provide the necessary framework. He expressed the hope that the report of that committee which would be rendered in the course of the meeting would be considered frankly, to enable Chiefs of Staff to come up with resolute ideas on how to conduct the tasks set out.

The Chief of Defence Staff noted with regret the events in neighbouring Sierra Leone involving the violent overthrow of the legitimate government of President Tejan Kabbah on 25 May 1997 which poses a serious security threat to sub-regional peace and is capable of reversing the gains that have been made in Liberia.

He observed that with the intransigence of the illegal regime of Major J.P. Koromah who has not only reneged on an initial agreement to work towards early reinstatement of President Kabbah but has also announced the regime's intention to remain in office till the year 2001, it becomes necessary for the meeting to review the situation in Sierra Leone.

He stated that from all indications, peaceful resolution through dialogue had failed and the next option without recourse to the use of offensive action, was the enforcement of santions/embargo on the regime through an economic blockade.

He implored the meeting to proffer solutions on how best to conduct whatever mission might be assigned to ECOMOG to ensure the restoration of democracy in Sierra Leone and subsequent relative peace in the sub-region.

In conclusion, Major-General A.A. Abubakar stressed the need for closer ties, cooperation and consultations between the Armed Forces of the Member States, as the future and destiny of all within our sub-region are indeed interwoven.

The Chief of General Staff of the Armed Forces of Niger, Colonel Moussa Djermakoye, expressed his gratitude to His Excellency General Sani Abacha, current Chairman of ECOWAS and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, and to the military authorities. He paid tribute to the Federal Republic of Nigeria for its commitment and leadership role, a testimony to the importance that country attaches to the ideals and solidarity of the sub-region. He thanked all the Chiefs of Staff of Member States for their peace initiatives in Liberia. The Chief of General Staff of the Armed Forces of Niger expressed his appreciation to the ECOMOG Force Commander, General Victor Malu, for the able manner in which the assignment was executed.

Colonel Djermakoye presented a brief background to the Liberian crisis and outlined the various actions undertaken by ECOWAS in that country. He recalled, in particular, the decision taken on 17 August 1996 by the Heads of State and Government to strengthen ECOMOG. In this connection, he informed the meeting that his country had dispatched a contingent of 320 (three hundred and twenty) men to Liberia.

The Chief of General Staff of the Armed Forces of Niger expressed the wish that the meeting would draw lessons from the joint deployment of the sub-region's armed forces in Liberia. He, specifically underscored the need to capitalise on the experience of ECOMOG in order to evolve a common strategy for effective action against the banes of society such as religious fundamentalism, ethnic strife and power struggles which were likely to cause conflicts.

Colonel Djemarkoye listed the factors which had paralysed the actions of ECOMOG and retarded the accomplishment of its mission. He was of the opinion that ECOMOG should consolidate peace before disengaging totally from Liberia where the newly-restored peace still appeared to be fragile.

Finally, he touched on the distressing situation in Sierra Leone following the military coup d'état of 25 May 1997 and appealed to the junta for a return to democratic rule.

Delivering a statement, His Excellency, Mr. Joe Blell, the Sierra Leone High Commissioner to Nigeria, representing the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone headed by Ahmad Tejan Kabbah, expressed his country's appreciation and gratitude to ECOMOG. He praised the efforts made by the ECOWAS Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Four on Sierra Leone to return his country to democracy and the rule of law. He reiterated his country's support for ECOWAS objectives in Sierra Leone and reminded the meeting that without peace in Sierra Leone, the recently-won peace in Liberia would continue to be threatened. He therefore called on ECOWAS to act decisively in Sierra Leone and put an end to the crisis.

LT-Gen. Prince C. Johnson II, the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces of Liberia, in his statement expressed deep appreciation for the reception and hospitality accorded to his delegation since their arrival in Abuja.

He reflected on the genesis and the extent of the work done by the Chiefs of Staff; the financial, human and material resources invested in the Liberian crisis over the past seven years in the search for peace in Liberia and in the sub-region as a whole.

He also pledged the whole-hearted support of the Government and people of Liberia for all decisions taken, by the body.

On the issue of security in Liberia, Lt.-Gen. Prince C. Johnson II stated that Liberia depends largely upon ECOWAS through ECOMOG for its security until the Armed Forces of Liberia is restructured and re-armed to assume its constitutional role of protecting life and property.

He informed the meeting that the President and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Liberia had expressed concern about security in Liberia, largely because of intelligence reports received in Liberia which indicate that:

a) The Kamajors fighting the military junta in Sierra Leone have retreated along the Liberian border areas to launch their attack, with the threat of a possible spillover effect into Liberia;

b) Ex-combatants of the just-ended Liberian crisis are being armed to fight for the Kamajors. Furthermore, security is being undermined by the rising incidence of armed robbery in the city of Monrovia and its environs.

For all these reasons, he stated, it had become imperative that the Armed Forces of Liberia be restructured as soon as possible to enable the army join ECOMOG in its task of providing security in Liberia.

In conclusion, the Liberian Chief of Staff, pledged the support of the Armed Forces of Liberia to all decisions taken by ECOWAS, OAU and the UN to restore the elected Government of Sierra Leone to power.

CLOSED SESSION

Prior to the commencement of its deliberations behind closed doors, the meeting was briefed on the situation in Sierra Leone by Hon. Chief Tom IKIMI, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Federal Republic of Nigeria and Chairman of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Committee of Four on Sierra Leone. Present at the briefing were other members of the Committee of Four, namely the Foreign Ministers of the Republics of Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana and Guinea and the representatives of the ECOWAS Secretariat. Also present was H.E. Ambassador Kalomoh, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations in Liberia.

Chief Tom Ikimi began by thanking the Chiefs of Staff for permitting the Foreign Ministers of the Committee of Four to brief them on the situation in Sierra Leone. This, he said, was necessary in order to properly acquaint Chiefs of Staff to enable them make appropriate recommendations to the Heads of State.

Chief Ikimi observed that the coup d'état of 25 May 1997 had very peculiar characteristics. It was not only very bloody but was followed by massive looting and widespread vandalisation of public and private properties. The putschists opened up prisons and let out all categories of hardened criminals. They also invited the elements of the RUF into the city of Freetown, thereby disrupting the peace and tranquility of that city. These RUF elements had since assumed and taken over the role of the national army.

It was worth noting that the coup took place on OAU Day and on the eve of the OAU Summit. The OAU therefore wasted no time in condemning the coup. It called for the immediate reinstatement of the legitimate government of Ahmad Tejan Kabbah; urged on the world to support ECOWAS and declared that none of its Members should recognise the junta in Sierra Leone.

Thereafter, following consultations by the ECOWAS Chairman and his colleagues, a meeting of Foreign Ministers was held in Conakry on 26 June 1997. At the end of its deliberations, the meeting agreed to pursue the following objectives:

1) early reinstatement of the legitimate government of President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah;

2) the return of peace and security; and

3) the resolution of the issues of refugees and displaced persons.

These objectives were to be achieved by a combination of three measures, namely dialogue, imposition of sanctions and enforcement of an embargo, including the use of force. In order to increase the effectiveness of the above meansures, the Ministers recommended prior consultations at the highest level.

The Ministers also established an implementation committee comprising the Foreign Ministers of Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea and Nigeria.

These proposals, Mr. Ikimi said, were endorsed by the ECOWAS Chairman and the UN Security Council. To date, no government had recognised the junta in Sierra Leone. The OAU, UN, Chief Ikimi said were in constant consultations with ECOWAS.

The Committee of Four immediately decided to implement the first option of dialogue. The first meeting with representatives of the junta was held in Abidjan where some modalities to achieve the objectives were agreed upon. A second meeting with the junta on 29 and 30 July 1996, also in Abidjan, however ended in failure following the announcement by the junta of its intention to stay in office until the year 2001.

Subsequent attempts at dialogue taken by some ECOWAS States also failed, leaving ECOWAS with no other option but to implement sanctions and total embargo.

Chief Ikimi ended by calling on Chiefs of Staff to make appropriate recommendations on modalities for the imposition of the embargo / blockade within international standards.

Upon the departure of the delegation of the Committee of Four on Sierra Leone, the meeting continued its deliberations behind closed doors.

Giving a situation update on ECOMOG operations, Major-General Victor Malu, the ECOMOG Force Commander provided the meeting with a progress report on the Liberian peace process, which had culminated in the holding of transparent, free and fair elections and the subsequent inauguration of His Excellency, Charles Ghankay Taylor as the 21st President of Liberia.

His report dwelt extensively on ECOMOG's contribution towards the successful conduct of the electoral process and its new role of creating an enabling security atmosphere to consolidate the peace process.

Since the completion of the disarmament exercice, ECOMOG had continued its efforts at creating the necessary environment for the return to normal political activities, social order and lasting peace and tranquility. Its cordon and search operations had led to retrieval of over 6000 weapons, most from obscure places such as graves and swamps. All in all, ECOMOG had recovered from the beginning of the disarmament exercise, about 35,000 weapons including: machine guns, assault rifles, bombs, artillery guns, anti-aircraft guns, anti-tank guns and rocket propelled guns. It had also recovered over 4 million assorted small ammunition.

Upon creation of a conducive environment, ECOMOG next switched its energies to assist in the electoral process. It provided the necessary security to IECOM, presidential aspirants, other party functionaries, ballot boxes during and after the elections, registration, voting and counting centres, as well as to others and electoral officials.

In the area of transportation, ECOMOG assisted in the movement by road and air of election materials, lifting of IECOM officials, international observers, ballot boxes etc...

ECOMOG also provided assistance in the area of communications. In the area of man-power and logistics support for ECOMOG, Major-General Malu reported that ECOMOG had received, after the disarmament exercise additional troops from Benin, Burkina Faso, Ghana, Mali and Niger, thereby increasing its total strength to about 11,000 all ranks. Côte d'Ivoire also provided a medical team, and certain members of the international community provided logistics support.

The Force Commander continued by defining the post election role of ECOMOG as:

i) aiding and supporting the Government to maintain and consolidate the peace by providing necessary security;
ii) conducting military operations to rid Liberia of arms;
iii) protecting VIPs and key installations
iv) restructuring and training of the armed forces, police and other security agencies.

To achieve these objectives ECOMOG personnel were redeployed in adequate numbers, all over the country and along the Liberia/Sierra Leone border to prevent any spill over effect. In addition, a National Security Council, with the President of Liberia, as Chairman was constituted. The Council, the meeting was informed, meets regularly and constantly monitors the security situation in the country. The ECOMOG Force Commander is a member of the Council.

The 20 miles embargo zone along the Liberian coast was lifted to allow ships to come in without hindrance and without the hitherto required war risk insurance.

On the important issue of the restructuring of the AFL, the Force Commander reminded delegates that the Liberian crisis had factionalised the Liberian army, necessitating its complete restructuring together with the police and other security agencies. He emphasised the need to have a disciplined, well equiped armed forces that would be capable of carrying out its functions. Major-General Malu called on the meeting to make appropriate recommendations that would successfully guide the conduct of this vital and important exercise.

The restructuring of the armed forces was behind schedule and so a decision should be taken on the matter without further delay. When formulating appropriate proposals, Major-General Malu said, the meeting should bear in mind that the presumption that ECOMOG troops would remain in Liberia for 6 months after the inauguration of the elected government was not correct; as contributing countries had different timetables for their troops. Whatever the case, Major-General Malu cautioned, it was unlikely that a trained National Army would be in place before the six-month period expired. He therefore called on the meeting to make appropriate recommendations so that an acceptable level of ECOMOG troops is kept in Monrovia for the training and restructuring exercise, and even beyond.

Major-General Malu proposed the training of an army of brigade strength. He also proposed that 4 ECOMOG battalions with a strength of about 600 men each would be ideal for a stay beyond the 6 months approved, in addition to 2 training battalions.

The Force Commander called for a gradual and programmed withdrawal of ECOMOG troops that would not threaten the security of the country and new government.

Although the Executive Secretariat's memorandum dwelt on Liberia and Sierra Leone, the Acting Executive Secretary, Mr. Mahamadou Ouhoumoudou presented issues relating only to Liberia as the situation in Sierra Leone had already been reported upon by H.E. Chief Tom Ikimi.

Mr. Ouhoumoudou reported on the successful end of the disarmament exercise which paved the way for the conduct of elections. Members of the Independent Elections Commission (IECOM) were appointed and conducted into office on 2nd April 1997. The Supreme Court was restructured.

IECOM prepared an electoral package consisting of the special elections law, an electoral package, and elections budget and a code of conduct for contending political parties.

The elections law provided for a single constituency for the whole of Liberia while a budget of $4.7m was approved for the elections.

Following extensive and detailed preparations, elections were held on 19 July, 1997 at which Liberians showed their eagerness and determination to put an end to their ugly past by turning out in large numbers to vote. The exercise was conducted under a peaceful atmosphere and at the end, it was declared by both local and international observers to have been free, fair and credible.

The elections results, as released, declared the NPP of Mr. Charles Taylor the overall winner.

Mr. Ouhoumoudou called for the articulation of appropriate modalities to ensure the conduct of free, fair and transparent elections in all Member States of the ECOWAS sub-region. The Liberian example, he said, should be a model and a lesson for all.

He concluded by stating that ECOWAS would continue to collaborate with the Government of Liberia to consolidate the peace as well as help in the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the Liberian society.

On his part, Major-General Sikandar Shami, the UNOMIL Chief Military Observer briefed the meeting on the post disarmament deployment of ECOMOG and UNOMIL personnel throughout Liberia. Additional troops for ECOMOG enabled it to deploy to 48 locations all over the country; thus necessitating an increase of UNOMIL's presence from 10 to 16 sites.

The strategic deployment of both ECOMOG and UNOMIL personnel provided the requisite atmosphere for elections.

Major-General Shami went on to inform the meeting of the relatively peaceful and voluntary disarmament exercise except for an incident in Kanweakehn where a group of ex-fighters had surrounded and threatened the UN compound there. However, as this first challenge to ECOMOG's authority since the end of official disarmament exercise was quickly controlled through prompt and effective action by the local ECOMOG commander, it sent the correct message throughout Liberia.

With the successful completion of the disarmament exercise, both ECOMOG and UNOMIL shifted focus to the conduct of the elections. While ECOMOG provided security and logistics support, the UN Military Observers (MILOB's) assisted in preparing grounds for the observation and verification of the electoral process. They provided necessary and vital information on the terrain infrastructure, population shifting patterns, customs and other local conditions in the hinterland of Liberia. This information, which was shared with IECOM officials and ECOMOG became the basis for the planning of the 1997 elections.

He gave further concrete examples of the high degree of cooperation and collaboration between ECOMOG and the MILOBs during the preparations for the elections.

Major-General Shami paid tribute to officers and men of ECOMOG under the able command of General Malu.

The Chief Military Observer also reported on the very important issue of humanitarian assistance and the manner in which the various UN agencies, USAID and the EU coordinated their efforts to provide basic necessities of life to over 15,000 ex-combatants and civilian war victims. Food was provided, schools reopened and the agricultural sector assisted.

Major-General Shami concluded by expressing satisfaction of the success of the Liberian peace process. He emphasised that this has been the first ever joint operation by the United Nations and sub-regional organisation in which the sub-region had the primary responsibility for ensuring peace keeping. In spite of the fact that there were no guidelines to fall back on, with experience, a close-knit partnership had evolved that definititely enhanced the Liberian peace process. The elections were universally adjudged as having been free, fair and credible.

The leader of the delegation from Ghana representing the Chief of Staff of the Ghana Armed Forces who was said to be unavoidably absent, extended warm felicitations from the Chief of Defence Staff and from all the officers, men and women of the Ghana Armed Forces.

He stated that the Ghana Armed Forces were happy that after seven years of destruction of life and property, the Liberian crisis had come to an end adding that Ghana was indeed proud to be part and parcel of the Force that made possible the restoration of peace and security to Liberia, proving the skeptics wrong.

In this regard, he commended the Force Commander Major-Gen. Malu and all the officers and men of ECOMOG for the excellent job done and thanked the Chiefs of Staff of the ECOWAS Member States for their support for ECOMOG.

He thereafter stated that in furtherance of the Abuja II Accord, Ghana was committed to assist in the consolidation of peace and the restructuring and training of the Armed Forces in Liberia and other security services of Liberia and that Ghanbatt 13 which was launched in February this year in fulfillment of their pledge made at the last meeting will be retained, whilst Ghanbatt 12 will be rotated with Ghanbatt 14 between 22nd September and 10th October 1997.

Finally, he added that ECOMOG Ghanbatt is ever-prepared to undertake any tasks that would facilitate the consolidation of peace and the nurturing of the nascent democracy in Liberia.

OUTCOME OF DELIBERATIONS

In their consideration of the various reports before them, the Chiefs of Staff devoted particular attention to the following:

- evaluation of ECOMOG performance in Liberia
- restructuring and training of the Liberian Armed Forces
- extension of the ECOMOG mandate in Liberia
- sanctions and the Agreement between ECOWAS and Liberia on the status of ECOMOG Forces Agreement

The Chiefs of Staff held constructive discussions on each of these items. Below is a summary of their deliberations.

EVALUATION OF ECOMOG PERFORMANCE IN LIBERIA

The Chiefs of Staff expressed satisfaction at the achievements of ECOMOG Forces in Liberia. They declared that they had followed with pride the activities of the West African force and congratulated the Force Commander, General Victor Malu.

The meeting reiterated its gratitude to the Heads of State and Government of ECOWAS, to Member States and to international organisations whose support made it possible to implement the ECOWAS Peace Plan.

RESTRUCTURING AND TRAINING OF THE LIBERIAN ARMED FORCES

The Chiefs of Staff recalled the different agreements which had provided for the restructuring and training of the Liberian Armed Forces and defined the role ECOWAS was expected to play in that regard.

They noted, however, that it had not been possible to restructure and train the forces before the installation of the elected government, due to the large number of assignments given to ECOMOG as part of the preparation and organisaiton of the elections.

The Chiefs of Staff agreed that the aim of the restructuring exercise would be to establish a truly national army comprising Liberians from all ethnic groups in the country.

They were also of the opinion that the elements of the Liberian armed forces to be trained would include not only recruits but also future instructors. They felt that while the officers might need to go to neighbouring countries which have qualified instructors and adequate training facilities, the recruits could be trained locally. This is all the more feasible since, given its current situation, Liberia needs only a modest force about the size of a brigade. In that connection, the service chiefs observed that the team of instructors must come from anglophone countries, to facilitate communication with Liberians whose official language is English. However, any francophone country which so desired could provide support for the training programme.

The Chiefs of Staff were of the view that the restructuring and training of the Liberian armed forces would serve to ensure security and consolidate peace in Liberia, and would thus constitute the second part of ECOMOG's mission in that country.

EXTENSION OF THE ECOMOG MANDATE IN LIBERIA

The Chiefs of Staff recalled that the understanding up till now had been that ECOMOG would withdraw from Liberia six months after the swearing in of the elected President.

They acknowledged the delicate nature of a withdrawal which could not be assessed in all its ramification on account of the numerous problems which still need to be addressed within the framework of beefing up security and consolidating the peace in Liberia. The Chiefs of Staff agreed that following ECOMOG intervention during its first mission, extension of its mandate had become an imperative on account of recent political developments in Liberia. They were of the opinion that the length of ECOMOG continued stay should be determined bearing in mind its new duties of strengthening security and keeping the peace; the tasks devolving from these objectives and the resources available.

AGREEMENT ON ECOMOG STATUS OF FORCES

The Chiefs of Staff expressed the view that rather than signing the Status of Forces Agreement with the Government of Liberia, it is the Memorandum of Understanding that should be looked into.

EXTENSION OF ECOMOG'S MANDATE TO SIERRA LEONE

The Chiefs of Staff agreed that a final settlement of the Liberian conflict of necessity demanded a definitive solution to the Sierra Leonean crisis. Having being informed by the Chairman of the Committee of Four, the Honourable Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, Chief Ikimi, that the phase of dialogue with the junta in Sierra Leone had failed, the Chiefs of Staff concluded that implementation of the other measures envisaged for achieving ECOWAS objectives had become inevitable. In this regard, they noted that ECOMOG's mission in Sierra Leone would be possible and effetive only if its scope of operation and mandate were duly extended to cover that country.

SANCTIONS

The Chiefs of Staff took note of the two types of sanctions proposed by ECOWAS to force the junta to restore the legitimate government of President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah. They pointed out that no distinction could be made between an embargo and the use of force because both of these would give rise to closely inter-related problems. According to them, extreme poverty and other socio-economic factors would inevitably lead to the appearance of numerous factions, putting Sierra Leone at risk of disintegration. Under such conditions, the Chiefs of Staff stated, they were convinced that application of the embargo would inevitably lead to the use of force. Their conviction was corroborated by available reports which indicated that the illegal regime in Freetown would be unable to withstand an embargo, if effectively applied. For this reason, the Chiefs of Staff requested a full briefing on the status of forces in Sierra Leone. Having obtained this information, the Chiefs of Staff decided to recommended imposition of an enforced embargo for four weeks after which an evaluation would be carried out and appropriate recommendations made to the Heads of State and Government. The service chiefs recognised that Member States must show firmness, real cohesion and sincerity. These conditions must be fully met if the sanctions agreed jointly were to succeed.

RECOMMENDATIONS

At the end of their meeting, the Chiefs of Staff made the following recommendations to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs:

i) a) ECOMOG should be authorised to restructure and train the Liberian armed forces.

b) Funds and logistics for this exercise should be sought from ECOWAS Member States and friendly countries.

ii) a) ECOMOG's mandate in Liberia should be extended by at least one year.

b) The ECOMOG Force Commander should be instructed to prepare a detailed time table for the orderly withdrawal of ECOMOG forces from Liberia.

iii) ECOMOG's field of operation should be extended to Sierra Leone and its mandate expanded to include the strict enforcement of the sanctions recommended.

iv) a) ECOMOG should be mandated to enforce the embargo for a a period of four weeks initially.

b) At the end of that period, the Committee of Four should assess the level of application of the sanctions and, if necessary, make appropriate recommendations to the Heads of State and Government on further actions to be taken.

c) In order to ensure the effective and successful application of the embargo Member States should contribute troops and equipment as necessary.

ANY OTHER MATTERS

The Executive Secretariat submitted to the meeting a memorandum which it has received from the Liberian Government calling for the lifting of sanctions imposed on the parties to the Liberian conflict by ECOWAS and the United Nations Security Council.

Having considered this request, the Chiefs of Staff expressed the view that since Liberia's security was being ensured by ECOMOG, there was no immediate need for the country to import military hardware. They pointed out that since the embargo decided upon by ECOWAS and the United Nations concerned the supply of arms, amunition and military hardware, it was neither necessary nor expedient to recommend that this measure should be lifted.

The Executive Secretariat also submitted to the meeting a memorandum concerning an ECOWAS special documentation project on the peace process in Liberia. The project which involved the production of an authoritative report on the peace process in Liberia, was considered favourably by the Chiefs of Staff who expressed the desire to see it through and therefore recommended to the Community decision-making bodies to adopt the measures contained in it.

Finally, the representative of the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone, Ambassador Joe Blell, proposed the establishment by ECOWAS of a conflict prevention and resolution unit. The meeting called on the Executive Secretariat to examine the issue.

ADOPTION OF REPORT

This report was adopted after amendments.

CLOSING SESSION

In his closing remarks, General Abdulsalami Alhaji Abubakar expressed gratitude to the Chiefs of Staff and their representatives for the quality of their contributions to the discussions and for the frank manner in which they had addressed the issues. On behalf of His Excellency General Sani Abacha, Head of State, Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, he commended all those who had contributed to the restoration of peace to Liberia, despite the limited resources at the disposal of their countries. He requested the Chiefs of Staff to convey the gratitude of the Chairman of the Authority to their troops and Heads of State for the invaluable contribution each had made to the peace process in Liberia.

The Chairman of the 16th meeting of the Chiefs of Staff prayed that peace would reign in Liberia and in the whole of the sub-region.

General Abubakar expressed the hope that the friendship which had existed between the Chiefs of Staff all through the Liberian crisis would continue to grow. He called on the Chiefs of Staff to reflect on ways of strengthening the solidarity and fraternal relations between the armed forces of Member States not only in the military field but also in the areas of sporting activities and the training of officers and men.

He thanked UNOMIL for the assistance which it had given to ECOMOG towards the effective implementation of the peace process in Liberia.

Finally, General Abubakar wished all participants a safe journey back to their respective homes.

DEFENCE

Draft 1

My dear Friend and Brother:

February 22, 1999

I present my compliments and, in consideration of our mutual desire to find a common and permanent solution to the problems besetting the peace and security in our sub-region, hasten to seize this opportunity to bring to your urgent attention the 1986 Non-Aggression and Security Cooperation Treaty between Member States of the Mano River Union which, inter alia, obliges them in principle and substance to be their brother's keeper and to cooperate in mutual security interest of each other. The relevant Articles of the treaty which are operative in the current sub-regional circumstances are Articles V., VI., VIII. and IX.

In this connection, I wish to refer to Article VIII, which provides that any member of the military or paramilitary forces found within the Territory of a High Contracting Party without proper leave of absence, prior clearance, entry permit and travel document shall be (arrested and) kept in custody. Further, the Government concerned shall be immediately notified.

According to Article IX., the establishment of a Joint Security Liaison Committee consisting of three (3) representatives from each High Contracting Party, shall have the responsibility to liaise on the subject of fugitive criminals, dissidents as well as subversive activities of citizens of their respective countries in the territory of each other, exchange information, investigate reports affecting the security of the High Contracting Parties with a view to maintaining the desired peaceful co-existence.

REVOLUTIONARY UNITED FRONT OF SIERRA LEONE

DEFENCE HAEDQUARTERS.

2nd December, 1998.

FORUM WITH THE EXTERNAL DELEGATES LED BY THE OF DEFENCE STAFF.

This meeting was summoned by the High Command Brigadier Sam Bockarie (CDS-RUFSL) inorder to acquaint members present with report on the external mission they went on. Venue-water works and time was 1323 HRS GMT.

In attendance were:

1. Brigadier Sam Bockarie
2. Mr. S.Y.B Rogers
3. Col. Edward Kanneh
4. Maj. Lawrence Womandia
5. Major Junior Vandi
6. Maj. Mohamed S. Banya
7. Lt. Col. Rashid Sandi - External delegates

. Col. I.H. Sesay RFC and members of various units were also in attendance. The meeting was opened with a short Muslim and Christian prayers.

The Chairman CDS- Brigadier Sam Bockarie welcomed every one who attended the forum. He told us all that the forum was intended to brief us on the mission they had gone through. The CDS appointed Mr. SYB Rogers to give a salute report about the mission.

Mr. SYB Rogers extended his heart felt thanks to all persons in attendance. Pa Rogers wasted no time to tell us the mission was a very big success through our blessings and co-operation. A ccording to Mr. SYB Rogers, this plan of sending out people to seek our welfare at the international front at hand. Many of these people failed us but God Almight blessed this very outstanding effort made by the CDS and indeed the success was very great interms of what they were able to receive. Mr. SYB Rogers stated further that since the 1997, May 25 coup, RUFSL was invited to join our brothers(AFRC)but he lamented that the MERGER was unsuccessful because there was no common understanding or ideology. He reiterated that indeed "God is behind our movement so that we shall not be disgraced". He admonished that we must reckon with the efforts played by the high command when it deserves praise. It is the sole right of the senior command structure and all combatants to defend the civilians. This is the reason why he, as Chairman of the Peoples War Council and an elder among us he esnfirmed it as his primary duty to advise and educate the higher authorities as to what they must do. Let no one feel or say that Brigadier Mosquito is doing things on his own, we must come together and consult even with ourselves and the high command on problems we don't understand". Pa SYB Rogers pledged his sincere thanks and credit to the CDS for his leading role in the external mission they went on: Indeed the CDS' effort was very excellent. Pa SYB Rogers noted with profound gratitude the effort applied by our host govt. on the other side for granting us the in-let and exit facilities even with escort. It was very suprising to note that according to Pa SYB Rogers, most heads of States have been thinking that the RUF/SL had been in disaray since the kidnapping of our Dear Leader. It was therfore good and a blessing in disguise to us all that the young Brigadier himself, who has held the garrison strongly aganist the enemies went to see some of the Heads of State in person. According to Pa Rogers, both the CDS and himself paid a courtesy call on his Excellency C.T.T. To every body's delight, there are friendly countries who have been wishing to receive serious minded people that will seek RUF/SL interest abroad.. Pa Rogers lamented that we were disappointed by most of the past external delegates who squandered RUFSL funds and made no head way so as to open our way to success . 'They have met their fate' says Pa. Rogers. "The people's Sin has fallen on them". The mission extended to Burkinafasso where they (delegates) were warmly received and attended to. All discussions with the Burkinabey authorities were highly fruitful. There was however a diplomatic test on the CDS to prove his ability and seriousness as commander on the ground. The CDS behaved excellently and maturedly to the admiration of his excellency Campore . The Brigadier has done a very historic job for the RUFSL movement. He has signed a rich contract for us and with our support, given to him and the movement, we shall do every thing possible to promote this struggle. The WAR COUNCIL Chairman made it public that people have been meeting him on the note that the CDS is intending to take the leader's power. According to Pa Rogers, he advised every one not to think of the CDS in that way. He Pa SYB Rogers told us that he has examined the Brigadier in and out and has not suspected the least of such intention in the Brigadier. We must give the Brigadier all fervent support, so as to encourage him (Brigadier) for his great sacrifice. Pa Rogers concluded by thanking Col. Issa Sesay the RFC/Ag. CDS and all autherities who held the ground and frontlines strongly while the CDS and delegates were out.

BRIGADE HEADQUARTER - BUEDU

24th June, 1998.

To: His Excellency,
The President of Republic of Liberia
Dr. Charles G. Taylor.

Through: The Chief of Protocall
Republic of Liberia
Alhaji Musa Sesay.

From: Brigadier Sam Bockarie (Mosquito)
Chief of Defence Staff RUFSL.

Subject: INFORMATION AND REQUEST:

Be informed that the Guinean government in collaboration with the Nigerian led Ecomog troops are carrying out a cross-border attack on our position at Koindu and Kailahun. This attack has been going on since June 15, this year and is still continuing on our ground by the river bank.

Furthermore, we are trying our best to resist their intention which is to occupy Koindu and Foya, but because of the heavy bombardment we have not been able to send them back across the border, and we do not have rockets or bombs which are badly needed to handle the situation. We are merely managing the small ammunition we have at hand as at now, but we would not want to wait till we completely run out of ammunition which may cause a big set back for all of us.

In the light of this, sir, I am hereby appealing and requesting that you please meet the President and explain things to him in detail for his immediate attention.

We appreciate the assistance we have been receiving and we want you to believe that we have no where else to cry to for help besides you and His Excellency.

We usually receive materials without bombs and not even up to twenty (20) boxes which makes the operation, to capture and defend any strategic point difficult.

To conclude sir, in the light of all the above, we are appealing that you please discuss the matter with His Excellency for his timely intervention of the situation on the ground.

Also, we hope to receive some cash for the welfare of the men as we have presently run out of cash to purchase medicine, food and morale boosters for the men.

The bearer of this letter, Prince Rennie, will explain to you in detail on situation on the ground.

May God Almighty continue guide protect and bless you always.

Your obedient son,

Signed:

BRIGADIER SAM BOCKARIE - CDS RUFSL.

FROM: THE BLACK REVOLUTIONARY GUARDS
SUBT: SITUATION REPORT

Sir, on behalf of the entire Black Guard uni se are hereby taking this opportunity to make a ummary report to let you know or understand the ituation on the ground.

To start with, we thank the Almighty God as er your previous concentization programmes to he entire movement that this is a Holy war which verybody within the movement have realised, because n your absent the struggle continues with lot of developments.

Sir, as you left us in 1996 to go and sign the bidjan accord, lot of enemy pressure (Kamajors) as mounted on us, but due to the dedication and loyalty of the Command you left on the ground, we ere abled to contain situation untill the A.F.R.C
Cour'de fat, wherein you instructed the High-Commar or us (R.U.F) to join the brothers in other to for he people's Army, and defend the soverignity of our Mother land.

The external delagates who were with you in bidjan also went over the media that they have pple the leadership of the R.U.F, and went to extend of insighting people, but due to the witness and the security existence of the High 0000967?

Command, we were abled to trick them to come on the ground for us ~~to~~ work out all necessary modalities. They came through the Guinea/Sierra con? boarder (Nongowa Ferry) and were finally arrested by us and brought on the ground in a lock'd up.

Furthermore, when we join the brothers, some of our senior officers and elders were given ministerial positions in the A.F.R.C Government. All the same things were not working well with the R.U.F members ~~while~~ in which the High-Command even decided to leave the city Freetown and decided to base in the provinces. Things were not put in a proper shape as the so called Honourables were left doing things as they like. There was no proper Command and control untill Ecomog decided to make a final strike into Freetown, in which they succeeded in driving the entire A.F.R.C from the city.

When Freetown fell in the hands of Ecomog, High-Command therefore decided at once without any delayance as there was no command and control to move straight to our original base (Kailahun) and position the R.U.F Combatants to the old former 1991 defensive points, which were KENEMA, BONBOHUN and JOJOIMA. These positions were seriously defended untill when the Ecomog advance to Kenema and Daru. From then, the forces had tried there level best to penetrate the defensive position, but no chance had being given to them. In the North, the enemies captured Makeni and tried to advance to Kono. Our men retreated and defended part of Kono.

Due to the security situation, the High Command therefore instructed the then B.G.E. Brigadie Issah Sesay to try by all means to report with the former A.F.R.C Chairman J.S.K to Kailahun. As a result, J.S.K ~~was~~ and his body guards were brought to Kailahun as per instruction. They were welcome by the High-Command and elders.

It, at this stage, the High-Command, J.S.K, Senior officers, Junior Officers and the entire Combatants held a forum and finally agreed to continue the struggle under one structure and Command.

Immediately Freetown and the provincial Headquaters fell in the hands of ECOMOG. The High-Command was call to report by the president of Liberia Mr Charles Taylor wherein the president seriously briefed the High-Command and gave him the confidence that he should not give up but to keep up the struggle and uphold the Revolution until the Leader returns. The president gave full assurance to the High-Command and promise to give its maximum support to the R.U.F. The president also took an oath that he will never betray his brother (late Foday Sankoh). From that point, the President gave huge quantity of logistics (Ammunition to the High Command for us to start repelling the ECOMOG advancement or to contain situation.

To this development when the High-Command returned from Liberia, he briefed J.P.K pertaining to the latest development, and met him personally to give a helping hands with diamonds or any foreign currency he had brought from Freetown for him to impress President Taylor. As a result, J.P.K denied bitterly that he had brought no diamond with him whereas the High Command had gathered informations that J.P.K has brought lots of diamond with him, but he wants to keep it on his own without financing the movement as we are now under one umbrella therefore. The High-Command gave instruction to Brigadier Issah Sesay and Brigadier Mike Lamin for them to properly search J.P.K for diamond. After the searching lots or large quantity of diamonds was taken from J.P.K and his body guards. Later the parcels of diamond was given to Mr Ibrahim (General) and sister Memuna for them to travel with the forces directly to President Taylor.

To this development, the High Command was able to recieve the first satellite phone from General Ibrahim which he was use to do some important contacts with.

After General Ibrahim returned back to Burkina-Faso, the High Command also received a good carriage of diamond from Kono. He also [illegible] to Send another good parcel to General Ibrahim in Burkina-faso for Ammunition and Arms as he had started making some important Contacts for materials. The High Command therefore decided to hand-over the said parcel of diamond to the B.G.C Brigadier Issah Sesay inother for him to pass through Monrovia and make his way to Burkina-faso and meet General Ibrahim to work out fast modalities to get some needed materials for us.

00089674

Brigadier Issah Sesay left the base and travel along with Col Jungle and some Liberia securities to Monrovia. He did not make his way through as he only stop in Monrovia, and Information was later recieved by the High-Command that the parcel of diamond has droped from Brigadier Issah He therefore return on base and gave the same report to the High-Command.

The joint security therefore ~~Foced~~ investigated the B.G.C and took statement from him.

Later a forum was held pertaining this issue, and the senior officers and elders suggested to suspend the issue until the arrival of the Leader.

Moreso, President Taylor Continues to give arising hands with logistics which involves food stuff and materials. The High Command was call in every month to report to Monrovia for briefing.

The High Command later called Brigadier Denis Mingle (Superman) on a forum for a mission to be carried-out to capture the whole of Kono. They came up with an agreement to apply some guerilla tactics to overun the strategic positions in Kono district. A plan was drawn, but superman never went with the plan and the ~~ex~~ mission fail without capturing Kono and over thirty (30) M.I.A on our side. and also K.I.A.

08009677

After this said mission, superman was able to put some man-power together and proceed to Kabala axis and erected a jungle there.

In Sept 1992 the High Command called a Vanguared forum. He addressed the forum, and made all the Vanguards to understand that they should tighten up their belts and officiate themselves as Vanguards of this Revolution. Also as to how best they should operate to promote the good image of the struggle. In this forum the High Command met to constructively criticize the way superman is behaving. The High Command made superman available over the communication for a dialogue. In their dialogue, He criticize superman for putting a Lebanese woman behind him which is delaying the operation. Infact to this, the High Command therefore instructed superman to report for a better plan-up, but he responded that he will not report to the call from that point superman started operating on his own without taking any instruction or Orders from the high Desk.

In October, the High-Command was again call by president Taylor. We therefore went along with him to Monrovia. The High Command was instructed by president Taylor to move to Burkina Faso and meet with the Burkina president.

The High-Command, the War Council chairman and one S.L.A representative Col Eddy Sankeh took the trip to Burkina faso. They met president Blaise Campoare, and they were highly welcome. They took two weeks in Burkina faso. They were given words of confidence and assurance by president Blaise that he will not let Col Eddy Sankeh down atall. The president told the High-Command to be very hard in Commun to withhold the movement until the arrival of the Leader. Infact he instructed the High Command to forward the R.U.F Issue to the O.A.U as he is the current O.A.U Chairman.

On their return, they were given huge quantity of materials for serious offensive to support a Campaign for the release of our Leader. The delegation return back to monrovia in November. The delegation return back to base and held an immediate forum for a serious offensive to Commense.

All the Combatants were happy and agree to start the operation in Capturing Kono district for reunion — was given to the B.F.C Brigadier Issa Sesay. huge quantity of material was given to the B.F.C and he immediately left for Kono. They also held a brunt in Kono and succeeded in overunning the entire Kono district and capture some artillery weapons and huge quantity of Arms and Ammunition. The whole operation was therefore given to the Late Col Rambo who further extended the operation to Tonkolili and advance to Makeni. After the fall of Makeni, the Late Col as per instruction went and recieve Brigadier Superman to join the operation.

They therefore extended the operation to Port-Loko as far as Waterloo and Kamboia axis.

Furthermore, Col Rambo also tried his level best to link up with the other brothers that entered Freetown, but the Freetown operation was not Co-ordinated as the said Commander Blacks-Tah was not going by the instruction from the High Command. When they retreated from Freetown, the L.F.C met them and told them to present a Comprehensive report pertaining the whole Freetown operation, but they deliberately fail to do so.

According to the Black Guards security information, they brought some diamonds and lot of foreign Currency from Freetown, but they never presented anything to the High Command.

The late Col Rambo even arrested six hundred thousand (600:000) U.S dollars from some of the men from Freetown, and presented the said sum to the B.F.C Bridgadier Issa, and also some diamon

Again there was instruction from the High Desk for Lt Col Gibril Massaqoi to report for important enquiry and briefing, but he refuse the call for over four (4) good times.

As a result, there was an instruction from the High Command to the B.F.C for Lt Col Gibril Massaqoi to be arrested and turn over.

The B.F.C further went along with the Late Col Rambo and some Black guards as per instruction to arrest Lt Col Gibril and Maj Nya.

During this process, superman and his men put in stiff resistance and even open fire and launc some RPG Bombs, therefore scatter the whole group and killed some men and went to the extend of advancing to makeni and attack the residence of the B.F.C and vandalize the whole compound and took every thing in the compound including the materials for operation and enough foreign currency and diamond. He even extended in raising the compounds of some other senior men officers.

After some days, he came for the second time and attack makeni and killed Col Rambo amste some security personnels, were some people and but they missed to kill the B.F.C and chase him all the way to makali and missed him the second time.

According to security findings, most of the senior officers can not give any advice on how to contain that situation. Instead they keep on sighting to spark the situation.

According to SUPerman, he has vowed not to ever take command from the High Command.

In regards to the mining process, it is only recently that the authorities has given the go ahead for mining to be going on. Lt Col Kennedy is the overall mining Commander. They have being getting some small small pieces which is in our big record books.

Another development is that one businessman from Cuba by the name of Carlos offered to movement one F.M radio station, and the station itself has being built up a hill in Dodo Bottom.

Also in ~~Dece~~ January, the High Command organise an operation for ~~the~~ Segbwema to be Captured in other to cut the supply between Daru Barracks and Kenema. The said operation went in smoothly but unfortunately fail to capture. We in fact left another operation at hand to attack Kenema.

In Conclusion Sir, we are hereby suggesting that the issue of Superman should immediately be put under Control before he try to mislead some of our struggle brothers.

Faithfully Submitted

Bickerton: Rebels enter Freetown, Sierra Leone – have they captured State House? Municipal workers on strike in Nairobi and much more, including what progress has the UN made towards a ceasefire in Angola? Tonight in Focus.

Music plays.

Bickerton: It's been an extraordinary day in Freetown, the capital of Sierra Leone. After days of skirmishing outside the city between ECOMOG forces and RUF rebels, the worst nightmare for many citizens began to come true in the early hours of this morning when rebels entered the city from the Kissy District out to the east. This was the advice given by the Information Minister, Julius Spencer, to the citizens of Freetown:

Spencer: I'm telling them to stay calm, particularly to stay indoors and not to be frightened. That the situation is going to be brought under control, and that the rebels want people to panic, and they thrive on that, so we are advising everybody to stay calm and stay indoors and the situation will be dealt with. Anybody who is found on the streets will be considered to be a rebel. So everybody should stay on the streets and allow the security forces to deal with the situation, because people on the streets only add to the confusion and makes it difficult for the security forces to deal with the situation.

Bickerton: The suggestions of Sierra Leone Information Minister Julius Spencer as rebels entered Freetown.

Well, we called our correspondent, Winston Ojukutu-Macaulay, and asked him what had happened in the city since then.

TIME: 01:41

Macaulay: Well, information has been very hard to come by because everybody has actually been indoors—we've all being staying indoors, but we've been communicating via the telephones. And what I can say to you is that by the telephone calls I've had, there are reports that Pademba Road Prison has been broken into, that the rebels are at State House—these two cannot be confirmed—and that they are dressed in black overalls and they're being deployed in strategic places inside the city. These are all information via the telephone. What the Minister did say over the radio a few hours ago was that the rebels are in town and that ECOMOG was pursuing them.

White: So how much firing has there been?

Macaulay: There has been some heavy shelling towards the Stadium end from where I am staying. I can actually tell that they...they have been shelling the Stadium, and I had a telephone call from someone who confirmed that ECOMOG was shelling the National Stadium very close to the swimming pool where they had several hundreds of surrendered soldiers kept there for the past week or so.

White: These are soldiers who are suspected of siding with the rebels?

Macaulay: Yes and they were fighting alongside ECOMOG, but after recent attacks at, in Kono, Makeni, Masiaka, Lunsar and Hastings, they were recalled and brought down to Freetown and kept at the swimming pool White: Have they managed to escape from the stadium?

Macaulay: Yes, that is information I have, that the rebels who entered Freetown last night went to the stadium and break the stadium and let loose those surrendered soldiers.

White: So what's the point of ECOMOG shelling now?

Macaulay: I think there are still some surrendered soldiers at the stadium resisting ECOMOG, and ECOMOG has been shelling the stadium to actually get rid of them.

Bickerton: Our Freetown correspondent, Winston Ojukutu-Macaulay.

TIME: 03:33

Bickerton: Well just over a half an hour ago, we got a call from an RUF rebel commander calling himself Colonel Sesay. He said he was one of the people who entered Freetown this morning and claimed to be calling from State House itself. He talked to Robin White.

Sesay: This is just to inform you that we have again overthrown the SLPP government about four hours ago this morning.

White: When you say we, what do you mean?

Sesay: We, the combined forces of the AFRC and the RUF forces.

White: And where are you speaking from?

Sesay: Directly from State House, directly from State House.

White: Presumably they will regroup and drive you out?

Sesay: Not at all. We'll not allow that again, we'll not allow that again, oh!

White: What about Lungi where there are also lots and lots of ECOMOG troops?

Sesay: As I am speaking to you, if you can overhear over the telephone, there is a complete bombardment going on presently at Lungi, but I'm not getting information from that battlefront Commander yet, over.

White: So you haven't captured Lungi?

Sesay: The- the- the motion is on the way to capture Lungi.

White: Now, are you claiming to be the new leader of Sierra Leone, or is that going to be somebody else?

Sesay: I cannot tell you now. I cannot tell you now, because it is a combined forces, a combined forces. We have the RUF, you have the AFRC, the former Revolutionary Council, over.

White: But were you yourself leading the assault on Freetown today?

Sesay: I have my, I have my brigadiers that were leading us, my Brigadiers that were leading us.

White: So who was actually in charge today?

Sesay: The most senior brigadier for this operation is Brigadier TAB Yaya, TAB Yaya, former PLO2.

White: Now assuming that you are not driven out of Freetown, what will be your next step after that?

Sesay: If we are not driven at all from Freetown, our most aim now, what is important for the people of Sierra Leone is to get peace, everlasting peace for this country.

White: Now what about members of the government? Do you know what's happened to them?

Sesay: Precisely speaking, I've not set an eye on any one of them yet.

White: But the Minister of Information has been out and about all day. He's been broadcasting on the radio.

Sesay: That is a mobile, a mobile radio – that is 98.1. You know, what happened the last time, it's a mobile radio that he's speaking from, not the national radio that he's speaking from.

19 November: The Revolutionary United Front will destroy "every living thing" if anything happens to their leader, Corporal Foday Sankoh, RUF commander Sam "Maskita" Bockarie told the newspaper For di People in a report published on Wednesday. Sankoh is currently being held at Pademba Road Prison in Freetown where he is preparing an appeal against his conviction and death sentence on treason charges. "I am a ruthless commander," Bockarie said in a telephone interview. "I am ready to damage but I am waiting until something happens to Sankoh. When I take Freetown I shall clear every living thing and building. To my God, I'll fight. I'll kill and kill, and the more they tell me to stop, the more I'll kill. Only Sankoh can tell us to stop." Bockarie rejected a call by United States Special Envoy to Africa Rev. Jesse Jackson for the RUF to lay down its arms. "(The U.S. is) a big hypocrite whose intention is to steal our natural resources rather than bring peace to the country," he said. "America and the world should know that we shall not lay down arms, because only a defeated man can do so."

ECOMOG troops on Monday attacked suspected rebels on Tasso Island, 12 miles from Freetown, and captured 35 of them, an ECOMOG officer said on Thursday. Witnesses who fled the island said at least five rebels had been killed in the raid. "The rebels had suddenly re-emerged on the island, training and planning to carry out attacks on Freetown," one ECOMOG commander said. "We captured 35 of them and inflicted casualties." He gave no further details.

ECOMOG officers said Thursday they were committed to ending the Sierra Leone conflict militarily, and displayed five "hard core" rebel leaders captured recently in Lungi. Among them was a Lieutenant Kargbo, a member of the disbanded Sierra Leone Army, who had opposed disarming the army after the signing of the Conakry Peace Accord.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) said Tuesday it had suspended the airlift repatriation of Sierra Leonean refugees from Kissidougou, Guinea on November 13 after discovery of several cases of meningitis in refugee camps in the Prefecture of Gueckedou, where candidates had registered for a return to Freetown. The UNHCR had begun a second phase of the operation on November 11, returning 305 persons on several flights. All returnees undergo medical screening before returning to Freetown. The operation, for which 1,800 persons have registered so far, will be restarted if no further cases of meningitis are identifled in the refugee camps.

President Kabbah raised the possibility Thursday of an amnesty for five key rebel leaders if they would lay down their arms and agree to leave Sierra Leone for a period of time. In an ECOMOG security briefing, Chief of Defence Staff Brigadier-General Maxwell Khobe identified the five as Captain SAJ Musa, Sam "Maskita" Bockarie, Eldred Collins, Dennis "Superman" Mingo, and AFRC Chairman Major Johnny Paul Koroma. Kabbah said he would be willing to consider allowing them to depart "to a third country that is not neighboring Sierra Leone for awhile," and to later be resettled in Sierra Leone. "But I cannot do that as long as they go on committing the crimes that they've been committing, and chopping off people's limbs, and all the rest of it, burning homes, and above all always threatening, just a bluff, bluffing that they're going to kill everybody in this country," Kabbah told the BBC. He stressed, however, that rebel leaders who "have committed very, very serious crimes will have to face the law." General Khobe confirmed at the security briefing that the government has been in constant contact with rebel leaders, particularly with Captain SAJ Musa. He said the entire sub-region was interested in peace in Sierra Leone, and if what was needed was to provide safe passage for rebel leaders to depart so that Sierra Leoneans could live peacefully, the entire sub-region would be prepared to provide refuge for them. Minister of Information, Communications, Tourism and Culture Dr. Julius Spencer stressed that no negotiations had taken place. He said the rebel leaders must be prepared to lay down their arms, and that then the possibility exists for them to live elsewhere in the sub-region.

HEADLINE: POLITICS-SIERRA LEONE: NO LAWYER WILLING TO DEFEND REBEL LEADER

BYLINE: By Lansana Fofana

DATELINE: FREETOWN, Sep. 7

BODY:

No Sierra Leonean lawyer appears willing to defend Cpl. Foday Sankoh, Sierra Leone's rebel leader who has been charged with treason here.

Most lawyers contacted by IPS today, and who declined to be identified, said they would not stick out their necks to defend the rebel leader, who is widely regarded here as Sierra Leone's "enemy number one".

Sankoh, who is in his mid-sixties, was extradited from Nigeria about six weeks ago on allegations of illegally entering that country with ammunition.

Two weeks ago, 16 people -- including five journalists -- were sentenced to death for collaborating with Sierra Leone's defeated military junta.

Immediately after the judgment, Sierra Leone's exiled opposition described the trial as flawed, claiming that no "independent" lawyer was allowed to defend the accused. But the government has rejected the claim.

Sankoh, who was paraded before a magistrate here in handcuffs last week, questioned Sierra Leone's legal system, and the peace which the government claims is now prevailing in the west African country. "Is this the peace you are persecuting me for?" he asked, after court registrar Mildred Solomon, read out the charges against him on Sept. 4.

Attorney General Solomon Berewa appeared for the state and would be leading the prosecution when the rebel leader makes another appearance on Sept. 11.

Sankoh started his rebellion in March 1991, attacking Sierra Leone's eastern border towns from Liberia, with his Revolutionary United Front (RUF), allegedly backed by the former National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL).

Within four years, the rebels succeeded in advancing 48 kilometers to the Sierra Leonean capital of Freetown, with the rebellion spreading into Sierra Leone's three provinces of the east, south and north. The trail of destruction left behind is colossal as rebel forces burned down towns and villages.

An estimated 15,000 people are believed to have died since the war broke out and about a quarter of the country's 4.5 million population forced into exile in neighboring countries.

However, in November 1996, a peace accord was signed in Abidjan, Cote D'Ivoire, between president Ahmed Tejan Kabbah and the rebel leader under the auspices of the international community.

Although the deal was meant to end hostilities between Sierra Leone's belligerents, RUF rebels intensified their military campaign mostly against civilian populations in the interior of the country, prompting the peace accord to collapse.

The situation deteriorated when renegade soldiers of the now-disbanded Sierra Leonean army overthrew the government of President Kabbah in May 1997, and invited RUF forces from the bush to help form a government.

The rebel/military alliance, known as the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC), headed by Maj. Jonny Koroma, ruled for nine months, before it was toppled by a Nigerian-led West African peacekeeping force, "ECOMOG", in February.

Sankoh, who was then in detention in Nigeria was named vice chairman of the AFRC. He never served that junta as he arrived in Sierra Leone after the junta's overthrow, and as a prisoner.

Even as Sankoh was being whisked from the courtroom, to an undisclosed place of detention, on Sept. 4, RUF's second in Command Col. Sam Bockarie, alias "Mosquito", threatened to wage a campaign of genocide, if the rebel leader was not immediately released.

"I will order my troops to kill every living thing including chickens if our leader is not released," he was quoted as saying by a leading European radio station, monitored here.

Refusing to be intimidated, presidential spokesman Septinus Kaikai told journalists last week that: "Cpl. Sankoh is a Sierra Leonean and like all else, he is subject to the laws of this country. He would be tried and if found guilty, would be dealt with accordingly".

Kaikai also ruled out negotiations with the rebels. "ECOMOG and the pro-government forces are currently on top of the war situation and by all indications, rebel elements still holding out in the bush will soon be flashed out," Kaikai said.

His hardline stance has been welcomed by most Sierra Leoneans here. "Foday Sankoh should be tried and killed", said Joseph Tucker," a government official here. "His wrists should first be amputated, his eyes gouged out and then butchered with a machete, as his rebels have been doing to innocent civilians".

Ismail Sillah, a businessman here, wondered, "why the government has to go through this legal waste of time?", instead of having "this monster publicly tortured and executed".

No wonder lawyers are unwilling to defend Sankoh, who today warned that he would not make any statement to the police or in court if international monitors were not present to witness the legal proceedings.

The government has assured that international observers would be allowed to monitor the trial.

12. Given that every material factual finding is based to some degree on these systematic errors, the precise relief sought for each of the Grounds of Appeal below is to quash all convictions, whether on the basis of planning or aiding and abetting. Alternatively, the Appeals Chamber is requested to review the evidence in accordance with the correct evidential standards, and in conjunction with the specific errors identified in Parts II and III of this Notice of Appeal.

i) GROUND OF APPEAL 1: The Trial Chamber erred in law by relying on uncorroborated hearsay evidence as the sole basis for specific incriminating findings of fact.

13. Relying decisively on uncorroborated hearsay evidence to make a finding of fact that is essential to a finding of guilt is an error of law. The Trial Chamber therefore erred to the extent that it did not qualify its broad pronouncement "the testimony of a single witness on a material fact does not require corroboration".[15] The Trial Chamber repeatedly committed this error, indicating a systematic disregard as to the proper legal standards governing the assessment of hearsay, and a consistent failure to assess this evidence with the caution required.[16]

14. All factual findings based on this error of law are invalid.[17]

[17] See e.g. Judgement pp. 2086-2087, para. 5944, where the Trial Chamber relied decisively on the Exhibits P-18 and P-19 to make a finding that the Accused "bore some responsibility for the movement of diamonds through Liberia". The mentioned exhibits however contain uncorroborated and unsourced evidence (Para. 63 of Trial Exhibit P-18 states that "full details of the sources will not be revealed, but the evidence is incontrovertible"). Several ICTY Trial Chambers and the Appeals Chamber have repeatedly excluded uncorroborated and unsourced hearsay evidence, including Trial Exhibits being a report prepared by experts. See e.g. in the Gotovina case, where the Trial Chamber considered a trial exhibit "to be unsourced hearsay that does not warrant further consideration here", Prosecutor v. Gotovina et al, Case No. IT-06-90-T, Judgement, Volume II of II, 15 April 2012, fn. 2861. See also Prosecutor v. Gotovina et al, Case No. IT-06-90-T, Judgement, Volume I of II, 15 April 2012, para. 51; Prosecutor v. Popović et al, Case No. IT-05-88-T, Judgement, 10 June 2010, para. 1532; *Prosecutor v. 120. The grounds of appeal in relation to the Sentencing Judgement, as set out below, are independent of whether the relief sought in any of the above grounds is granted.

121. For each of the Grounds of Appeal set out in Part V, the precise relief sought as a result of the Trial Chamber's abuse of its discretion, is the quashing of the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber, and the imposition of a new and appropriate sentence.

i) GROUND OF APPEAL 42: The Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law when it imposed on Charles Taylor a sentence of 50 years imprisonment, which is manifestly unreasonable in the circumstances of this case.[141]

122. Trial Chamber abused its discretion as no reasonable trier of law and fact, having assessed the totality of the evidence on the record, could have imposed such a harsh punishment, which is manifestly excessive in the circumstances of this case.

ii) GROUND OF APPEAL 43: The Trial Chamber committed discernible error when it noted Sierra Leonean law on sentencing practice when Mr Taylor has not been convicted of any offences under Article 5 of the Statute.[142]

123. Trial Chamber's discernible error had a significant effect on the determination of the sentence imposed on Charles Taylor.

iii) GROUND OF APPEAL 44: The Trial Chamber committed a discernible error when it considered proprio motu, aggravating factors that the Prosecution did not plead and, consequently to which, the Defence has not had the opportunity to respond.

[141] Sentencing Judgement, p. 40, Disposition.
[142] Sentencing Judgement, p.16, para. 37 citing: Section 1 of the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861, which applies in Sierra Leone, cited in The State v. Archilla and Others, March 16, 2009, para. 4.

v) GROUND OF APPEAL 5: The Chamber erred in law by disregarding the principle that substantial payments to witnesses, in itself, requires that their testimony be treated with caution.

22. The Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that it need not treat the testimony of witnesses who had received substantial payments from the Prosecution unless these incentives "appeared to influence [their] testimony" or "influenced [their] testimony" in some palpable manner.[31]

23. All factual findings based on this error of law are invalid, necessitating a de novo review by the Appeals Chamber and the quashing of any convictions that rely on factual findings arising from this error.

II. ERRORS WHICH INVALIDATE THE PLANNING CONVICTIONS

24. For each of the Grounds of Appeal enumerated in this Part II, the precise relief sought is the quashing of Charles Taylor's convictions for planning the crimes set out in Counts 1 to 11.[32]

(a) Errors Relating to Planning: General

i) GROUND OF APPEAL 6: The Trial Chamber erred in fact and law in finding that the Prosecution had successfully challenged the truth of Adjudicated Fact 15 from the AFRC trial, thus requiring the Trial Chamber's re-consideration of the matters in question

25. The Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in finding that the Prosecution had successfully challenged Adjudicated Facat 15, particularly given that the challenge

[31] Judgement, p. 91, para. 234; pp. 100-101, para. 260; pp. 109-110, para. 287; pp. 126-127, para. 344; p. 131, para. 357.
[32] Judgement, pp. 2476-2468, para. 6994 (b).

during this operation and the retreat from Freetown.[41] As such, the Chamber's error is material to all Counts, invalidates the convictions based on liability for planning, and occasions a miscarriage of justice.

iv) GROUND OF APPEAL 10: The Trial Chamber erred in fact and law in finding that SAJ Musa's plan to attack Freetown was abandoned

33. No reasonable trier of fact having assessed the totality of evidence could have concluded that SAJ Musa's original plan was abandoned.[42] The Trial Chamber's error arises from an improper evaluation of the evidence, including its systematically-erroneous evaluation of the evidence, as set out in Part I.

34. The Trial Chamber relied on this finding to erroneously conclude that Gullit's movements then became incorporated into the Bockarie/Taylor plan, and as such found Charles Taylor liable for the crimes committed by Gullit's forces.[43] These errors are material to all Counts, invalidate the decision, and occasion a miscarriage of justice.

v) GROUND OF APPEAL 11: The Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in convicting Charles Taylor for crimes committed during the implementation of a different plan from the one it erroneously attributed to him

35. The Trial Chamber erred in law in convicting Charles Taylor of crimes which occurred during the implementation of a different plan than the one the Chamber erroneously found he devised.[44] Finding that an accused could be liable for an "evolving" plan, on the basis that this evolution had been "contemplated" is an error of law.

[41] Judgement, pp. 2461-2465, paras. 6958-6971; pp. 2476-2468, para. 6994 (b).
[42] Judgement, p. 1230-1, para. 3480; p. 1232, para. 3486; p. 1281, para. 3611(xiii).

36. This error of law was the basis for the Trial Chamber's finding that Charles Taylor is liable for the crimes in Counts 1 – 11[45], despite having found that attempts to carry out significant elements of his plan were unsuccessful.[46] As such, the error is material to all Counts, invalidate the decision, and occasions a miscarriage of justice.

vi) GROUND OF APPEAL 12: The Trial Chamber erred in fact and law in finding that Charles Taylor received daily updates as to the implementation of the "evolving" plan and in finding him liable on the basis of these updates

37. No reasonable trier of fact, having assessed the totality of evidence could have concluded that Charles Taylor received daily updates as to the implementation of the "evolving" plan.[47] The Trial Chamber's error arises from an improper evaluation of the evidence, including its systematically-erroneous evaluation of the evidence, as set out in Part I. The Trial Chamber also erred in law in finding that receiving updates about an "evolving" plan gives rise to liability as regards the evolved plan.

38. The Trial Chamber relied on this finding to erroneously conclude that the plan allegedly devised by Charles Taylor and Sam Bockarie substantially contributed to the RUF/AFRC military attacks leading to and involving the Freetown invasion and subsequent retreat, and as such found Charles Taylor liable for the crimes committed during this operation.[48] As such, the Chamber's error is material to all Counts, invalidates the convictions based on liability for planning, and occasions a miscarriage of justice.

vii) GROUND OF APPEAL 13: The Trial Chamber erred in fact and law in finding that Sam Bockarie exercised effective command and control over Gullit whether before, during or after the capture of State House and Pademba Road Prison in Freetown rights of little boys and girls, the men and women, the mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters of this great republic."[254]

173. In an effort to improve the health and well-being of children in Liberia, he also, with the cooperation of international partners, such as the International Committee on polio eradication[255] or the United States Agency for International Development, instituted a program to vaccinate all children under five years to eradicate polio from the country.[256]

174. Even before Mr. Taylor became President, when he was leader of the NPFL, he was involved in charitable initiatives. Even though there is evidence that the NPFL committed atrocities against civilians, there is also evidence that the NPFL played a protective role in relation to civilians, including orphans and refugees from Sierra Leone.

175. There were several orphanages in operation in NPFL controlled territory. The largest orphanage was located in Gbarnga;[257] another was at Totota. The NPFL would actually take orphaned children to stay there.[258] Mother Young, who has run an orphanage in Liberia for 42 years, has stated that Mr. Taylor gave significant assistance and protection to several orphanages during the conflict and during his Presidency.[259]

Mitigating Factor: Regret and Sympathy for Victims

176. As indicated herein, Mr. Taylor does not accept responsibility for the crimes for which he has been convicted, and he seeks to appeal this Judgement. But he does evince a "real and sincere" [260] sense of regret and sympathy for the victims of the Sierra Leonean conflict, the Liberian conflict, and indeed any other conflict involving civilian casualties.

177. The SCSL, ICTR and ICTY Appeals Chambers have held that an accused can express sincere regrets without admitting his participation in a crime, and that this is a factor that may be taken into account in mitigation.[261] As the ICTY Appeals Chamber held:

> an accused can express sincere regrets without admitting his participation in a crime. In such circumstances, remorse nonetheless requires acceptance of some measure of moral blameworthiness for personal wrongdoing, falling short of the admission of criminal responsibility or guilt. This follows from the ordinary meaning of the term remorse as well as the approach taken in the few cases where expressions of remorse made by accused who maintained their innocence have been accepted in mitigation.
> However, beyond such expressions of remorse, an accused might also express sympathy, compassion or sorrow for the victims of the crimes with which he is charged. Although this does not amount to remorse as such, it may nonetheless be considered as a mitigating factor. The Appeals Chamber notes that such expressions of sympathy or compassion have been accepted as mitigating circumstances by Trial Chambers of both the ICTR and this Tribunal.[262]

178. In the CDF Appeal Judgement, however, the Chamber noted that in only a minority of cases have trial chambers found that an accused's expressions or regret or empathy for victims, without acknowledgement of responsibility for the crimes, constituted a mitigating factor.[263] The Defence notes that subsequent to the CDF Appeal Judgement, the ICTY Brđanin Trial Chamber considered regret as a mitigating factor even where the accused did not admit participation in the crime nor make any statement to this effect. It was found to be sufficient that there were a few instances when, through defence counsel, he told witnesses that he felt sorry for what they suffered.[264]

At the time, it seemed as if the ICTY Trial Judgement of Orić was the only case in which a convicted person received credit for offering expressions of sympathy for the victims without acknowledging criminal responsibility. In Orić, an expression of sympathy made by defence counsel to the victim witnesses during the trial was considered as a mitigating factor even though the accused made no statement.
[264] Brđjanin Trial Judgement, para. 1139.

179. Nothing said by Mr. Taylor nor his counsel, in his defence, was ever intended to minimize the great harm that befell the people of Sierra Leone during its civil war. As Lead Counsel said during the Defence Opening Statement:

> "We consequently do not and never have taken issue with the fact that terrible things, atrocities, were committed in Sierra Leone. We've never done that. We still cannot therefore understand why more than half of the witnesses called were so-called crime base witnesses to prove a fact not in dispute."[265]

180. Another counsel for Mr. Taylor, on behalf of the Defence and the accused, expressed his sympathy for the victims of the conflict, when he stated before cross-examining one crime-based witness:

> Sir, first of all, can I express to you on behalf of the Defence our sympathy and understanding at the violence that you have seen in your life and we can certainly inform you now that it's not because of us that you have been brought here to speak about these events that you observed nearly 10 years ago.[266]

181. Mr. Taylor has always been a religious man. He grew up in the Baptist church.[267] While in detention, Mr. Taylor has continued his spiritual journey, meeting routinely with a rabbi and studying and observing the tenants of faith and practice.[268] He is a student of the Jewish Holy books. These disciplines have strengthened his sense of compassion for the victims of the Sierra Leonean conflict and other wars. Given that the character of an accused subsequent to the commission of the alleged crimes should be considered in mitigation,[269] the Defence submits that these expressions and feelings of sympathy for those who suffered should be given due weight.

On several occasions, Defence Counsel have also addressed the Court when Mr. Taylor needed to be absent on account of observing a Jewish holiday. For example, TT, 30 Sept 2008, p. 17551; 26 Jan 2010, p. 34060; and 8 Sept 2010, p. 48305.

182. In light of the expressions of regret and sympathy expressed by the Defence on behalf of Mr. Taylor throughout the trial, as well as Mr. Taylor's own contemporaneous statements condemning the atrocities in Sierra Leone,[270] the Chamber should not outrightly dismiss - as the Prosecution suggests[271] - any further expression of remorse or sympathy that Mr. Taylor may make during the Sentencing Hearing.[272]

183. As the SCSL Appeals Chamber has held that it is not an error to take such expressions of sympathy into account, even in the absence of an acceptance of guilt by the accused person, and so the Defence requests that the Trial Chamber attach due weight to this mitigating factor.

Mitigating Factor: Family Circumstances, Health, and Advanced Age

184. Contrary to the Prosecution's claims,[273] Mr. Taylor's age, health and family circumstances may constitute mitigating factors as they go to the essence of his personal or individual circumstances envisaged in Article 19(2) of the Statute. Individual circumstances are exactly that: any consideration personal to the convicted person, which might move the Trial Chamber to impose a lesser sentence. What weight the court may attach - a distinction lost on the Prosecution - is however a different issue.

185. Mr Taylor is now 64;[274] a ripe age, dwarfed only by the 80-year sentence requested by the Prosecution. Clearly, the design to "put Taylor away for a very long time", is, in practice, a euphemism to sentence him for a life term.

186. Indeed, it is the practice of this court to consider the advanced age of a convicted person in mitigation. Trial Chamber I, for instance, held that Augustine Gbao's age of 60 years significance, are the Trial Chamber's findings that Mr. Taylor supplied or facilitated arms and ammunition which were "indispensable for the RUF/AFRC military offensives"[14] and "materiel [which was] critical in enabling the operational strategy of the RUF and AFRC".[15] This strategy was "characterized by a campaign of crimes against the Sierra Leonean civilian population, including murders, rapes, sexual slavery, looting, abductions, forced labour, conscription of child soldiers, amputations, and other forms of physical violence and acts of terror."[16] Indeed, the centrality of Mr. Taylor's support to the AFRC/RUF is highlighted by the finding that their other "sources of materiel were of minor importance in comparison to those supplied or facilitated by the accused" and that they "in fact heavily and frequently relied on the materiel supplied and facilitated by the accused."[17]

7. Mr. Taylor's positions both as President of Liberia and within the West African regional bodies distinguish him from any other individual that has appeared before this Court. Mr. Taylor's abuse of his authority and influence is especially egregious given that West African leaders repeatedly entrusted him with a role to facilitate peace. Crucially, the findings reveal the reality of Taylor's role in the peace process, noting that "while the accused publicly played a substantial role in the Sierra Leone peace process ... secretly he was fuelling hostilities between the AFRC/RUF and the democratically elected authorities in Sierra Leone, by urging the former not to disarm and actively providing them with arms and ammunition, acting ... as "a two-headed Janus.""[18]

8. Considering the extreme magnitude and seriousness of the crimes that were committed against the people of Sierra Leone for which Mr. Taylor has been found responsible and Mr. Taylor's "instrumental",[19] "critical"[20], "indispensable"[21] and continued role in their commission, the Prosecution recommends that Charles Taylor be sentenced to a prison term of no less than 80 years.

52. Diamonds were a particular focus of Mr. Taylor.[141] Far removed from the suffering in Sierra Leone, Mr. Taylor sent critical advice, instructions, materials, personnel and supplies to the AFRC/RUF forces so that they could gain control over Kono, the most diamondiferous area of the country.[142] Mr. Taylor's support enabled the perpetrators to carry out the bloodiest operation in the campaign of atrocities against the civilian population of Sierra Leone. The people in Kono District endured widespread burning of their homes, killings, rapes, and being held as sexual slaves.[143] Particularly brutal amongst the harrowing acts committed against civilians were the large scale amputations of limbs and the carving of words onto bodies.[144]

53. Contemporary reports indicate the scale of the atrocities being committed in Kono by the very troops Mr. Taylor was supporting. Amnesty International reported:

> Many hundreds of men, women and children of all ages have suffered mutilation and crude amputations of their arms, legs, lips or ears, lacerations and gunshot wounds. Women and girls have been raped or suffered other forms of sexual assault. [...] The UN Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief [...] said that the brutal treatment of civilians by the AFRC and RUF was unlike anything he had seen in 29 years of humanitarian work".[145]

> More than 650 bodies, many of them women and children, were reported to have been buried following fighting in the area around Koidu in mid-June 1998. With these attacks came reports of mutilations. [...] By October 1998 estimates of the number of victims of mutilations since February 1998 were put as high as 4,000.[146]

54. Witnesses also testified about the scale of destruction in Kono. Sahr Charles testified about what he saw when he returned to Tombodu:

74. It was not just assistance in physical form which arrived at strategically significant moments. Mr. Taylor's advice and encouragement were also provided at critical junctures, their content particularly potent. The Trial Chamber found that Mr. Taylor: "advised Sankoh to participate in the Abidjan peace talks in 1996 in order to obtain arms and ammunition for the RUF"; "instructed the RUF to open a training base in Bunumbu in 1998 and to construct an airfield in Buedu"; "instructed the AFRC/RUF to capture Kono and subsequently advised them to hold and recapture it, as a source of revenue through diamonds that could be used to secure arms and ammunition."[227]

75. The Trial Chamber's findings clearly establish that Mr. Taylor was one of the conflict's primary protagonists, shoring up the RUF/AFRC's foundations by the regular supply of support and ensuring it did not collapse by providing vital assistance at key moments. It can be inferred from the Chamber's findings that the support provided by Mr. Taylor was the lifeblood of the Sierra Leonean conflict. The pervasive quality of the support he provided to the ARFC/RUF throughout the Indictment period combined with its scale and significance increases the gravity of his criminal conduct to the highest level.

C. Aggravating Circumstances

1. Length of Time during which the Crimes were Committed

76. The individual crimes Mr. Taylor has been found guilty of planning, and aiding and abetting lasted for months and, in some cases, years. Indeed, Mr. Taylor's crimes, taken as a whole, span more than 5 years with crimes being committed in at least one or more parts of Sierra Leone throughout this period. This aggravating factor, alone or in conjunction with the other factors detailed below, justifies the imposition of the suggested term(s) of imprisonment.

77. Specifically, Mr. Taylor's involvement in the murder of civilians lasted over two years, from 25 May 1997 to 31 January 2000.[228] During this period, widespread acts of

2. Mr. Taylor's Willing and Enthusiastic Participation in the Crimes

79. Mr. Taylor had detailed knowledge of the atrocities being committed against civilians in Sierra Leone by the AFRC/RUF forces from at least August 1997.[239] In fact, the Trial Chamber found that Mr. Taylor's knowledge of the RUF's criminal modus operandi dated back to the early years of the war in Sierra Leone.[240] Given Mr. Taylor's positions as leader of the NPFL and then President of Liberia, it cannot be argued that he was "merely following orders" or directions from superiors. He participated willingly and enthusiastically. Such participation in the commission of mass atrocities over such a considerable number of years represents an aggravating factor.

80. As found by the Trial Chamber, from 1997, Mr. Taylor received daily press and intelligence reports, as well as "numerous reports" from ECOWAS about the crimes committed by the Junta forces.[241] The Trial Chamber found that Mr. Taylor was informed "in detail" by such reports which documented massive looting of property, murder and rapes, as well as amputations and killings of civilians.[242] In the face of these reports, however, Mr. Taylor and his subordinates facilitated the Magburaka arms shipment which was delivered in late 1997.[243]

81. In April 1998, as Mr. Taylor testified, there were news reports of a horrific campaign being waged against civilians in Sierra Leone.[244] Mr. Taylor himself admitted that by April 1998 if "someone was providing support to the AFRC/RUF" he "would be supporting a group engaged in a campaign of atrocities against the civilian population of Sierra Leone."[245] In fact, in July 1998, Mr. Taylor publicly condemned the "horrendous atrocities" being committed.[246] However, even after this public condemnation, Mr. Taylor increased his support, supplying Sam Bockarie with arms and ammunition

"unprecedented in volume" flown in from Burkina Faso to enable the late 1998 offensive culminating in the Freetown Invasion.[247]

82. Perhaps the most telling example of Mr. Taylor's willing and enthusiastic participation is that, even in the face of the unimaginable cruelty and crimes inflicted upon the people of Freetown during the "January 6" invasion which he planned, Mr. Taylor responded by continuing to support the AFRC/RUF.[248]

3. Mr. Taylor's Leadership Positions and Betrayal of Positions of Trust

83. Throughout the Indictment period, Mr. Taylor held senior leadership roles, both nationally and internationally. He became President of Liberia in August 1997,[249] a position he still held when hostilities ended in Sierra Leone.[250] In addition, Mr. Taylor joined the ECOWAS Committee of Five shortly after his election.[251] As identified by the Trial Chamber, these positions imbued Mr. Taylor with an "inherent authority"[252] and "substantial influence over the leadership of the RUF, and to a lesser extent that of the AFRC."[253]

84. Rather than using his positions for positive change, Mr. Taylor abused his authority and influence. Mr. Taylor gave extensive advice, direction and guidance,[254] and "by virtue of his position", Bockarie deferred to him and generally followed his instruction.[255] The Trial Chamber further found that Mr. Taylor, as "an elder statesman and as president of Liberia," was accorded a certain deference by other AFRC/RUF leadership, which meant "his advice was generally heeded by them."[256] At no time did Mr. Taylor exert this influence over the AFRC/RUF high command to alleviate the suffering of the people of Sierra Leone. Rather, he deliberately used his authority and position to fan the flames of conflict and to continue the perpetration of the crimes.

85. In addition to these general findings, the Chamber made many particular findings on Mr. Taylor's authority and influence relating to the period February 1998 to February 1999, a time that coincides with the perpetration of a significant proportion of the crimes. The Chamber referred to several discrete instances in which Mr. Taylor specifically exercised his influence over the AFRC/RUF.[257] These instances are characterized variously as "ordering", "instructing", "advising", "emphasizing", "communicating", or "telling". Regardless of the characterization, all are demonstrations of Mr. Taylor abusing his position of "inherent authority"[258] in relation to the AFRC/RUF.

86. Mr. Taylor was also a President who demonstrated a disregard for the international community's efforts to protect international peace and security. He deliberately flouted ECOWAS and UN arms embargoes practically from the first moment of their imposition.[259] While "the Junta was perceived by the international community as a threat to peace ... and it was recognised that military support could facilitate the commission of [257] In relation to the immediate period after the Intervention, the Trial Chamber found that "[t]he Accused and his subordinates communicated to the AFRC/RUF forces the imperative to maintain control over Kono" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49639, lines 8-10), Taylor "told Koroma to capture Kono" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49639, lines 15-18), and "[a]fter the first failed attempt, the Accused gave instructions for a second attack" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49639, lines 18-21). The Chamber also found that, once recaptured, "the Accused told Bockarie to be sure to maintain control of Kono" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49639, lines 21-24). Further, the Chamber found that in June 1998 "[t]he accused advised Bockarie to recapture Kono following its loss to ECOMOG" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49639, lines 25-26) and, in relation to the late 1998 offensive and the Freetown invasion, "the Accused emphasised to Bockarie the need to first attack Kono" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49640, lines 11-12) and "told Bockarie to make the operation 'fearful'....as well as use 'all means' to get to Freetown" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49640, lines 12-15). The Chamber also noted that Bockarie's invitation to Musa was "[c]onsistent with discussions with the accused" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49640, lines 22-23) and that "[t]he accused gave advice to Bockarie and received updates in relation to the progress of the operations in Kono and Freetown" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49641, lines 10-12). The Trial Chamber also found that the Accused instructed Bockarie to transfer some of the Pademba Road prisoners to Buedu (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49641, lines 20-21). Other findings bearing out the Accused's authority over the AFRC/RUF during this period include that the Accused "instructed Bockarie in 1998 to open a training base in Bunumbu, Kailahun district" (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49646, lines 4-6), as well as the finding that the decision to incorporate the Scorpion Unit into Bockarie's command was approved by the Accused through his subordinate Daniel Tamba (T. 26 April 2012 p. 49651, lines 4-8).

[259] T. 26 April 2012 p. 49661, lines 28-29 to p. 49662, lines 1-3 ("Following a coup on 29 August 1997, ECOWAS decided to place a total embargo on all supplies of petroleum products, arms and military equipment to Sierra Leone. Similarly on 8 October 1997, the United Nations Security Council decided to impose an embargo on arms and ammunition to Sierra Leone").

the crimes",[260] Mr. Taylor and his subordinates were already busy circumventing the embargoes by facilitating the above mentioned Magburaka arms shipment.[261] In addition, the Trial Chamber found that the "facilitation of road and air transportation of materiel as well as security escorts played a vital role of the operations of the RUF/AFRC during a period when an international arms embargo was in force."[262] As the embargo was in place during the Indictment period,[263] this finding applies equally to all instances where Mr. Taylor either provided or facilitated the provision of arms and ammunition to the AFRC/RUF in defiance of the international ban. Clearly, Mr. Taylor's acts ran directly counter to the purpose of the arms embargo. Rather than shorten the conflict and stabilise the region by denying weapons to those threatening international peace and security, Mr. Taylor sought to deliberately but clandestinely defy the international community and to prolong and exacerbate the war. These actions undertaken by a serving head of State are particularly reprehensible and blameworthy and should be recognised as such when sentencing Mr. Taylor.

87. The most egregious example of Mr. Taylor's abuse of his positions of leadership relates to his role in the Sierra Leone peace process which he actively worked against. As established by the Trial Chamber's findings, from Abidjan to Lomé and at all points thereafter, peace in Sierra Leone was never a genuine goal for Mr. Taylor.[264] While Sierra Leone literally burned, Mr. Taylor paid lip service to peace, deliberately deceiving all those who placed much store in his "considerable influence over the warring factions in Sierra Leone."[265]

88. During his Presidency, Mr. Taylor attempted to play the role of the concerned humanitarian. In a July 1998 statement, he strongly condemned the rebel activities and horrendous atrocities being committed in Sierra Leone.[266] While telling the ECOWAS Chairman and UN Secretary-General that he would "cooperate to promote an end to the fighting in Sierra Leone and to foster peace and security in the sub region",[267] he was in reality a "two-headed Janus".[268] At the same time as making such laudable statements, Mr. Taylor was coldly calculating how to ensure he continued to benefit from Sierra Leone's diamonds.

89. In relation to Mr. Taylor's "active role in the Lomé peace negotiations", the Trial Chamber found that Mr. Taylor "was engaged in arms transactions at the same time that he was involved in the peace negotiations in Lomé, publicly promoting peace ... while privately providing arms and ammunitions to the RUF."[269] As regards Mr. Taylor's participation in the ECOWAS Committee of Five (later Committee of Six) via his Presidency of Liberia, the Trial Chamber found "strong evidence showing that while publicly participating in regional efforts to broker peace in Sierra Leone, the accused was secretly fuelling hostilities between the AFRC/RUF and the democratically elected authorities in Sierra Leone" and was, thus, clandestinely "undermining ... the peace process".[270] Finally, Mr. Taylor's dealings with Issa Sesay in 2000 were also determined by the Trial Chamber to be part of Mr. Taylor's continued efforts to prolong the conflict. In May 2000, the Trial Chamber found that Mr. Taylor "had significant influence over the RUF decision to release the UN peacekeepers and that in his meeting with Issa Sesay, Taylor promised him assistance 'in the struggle.'"[271] Further, in July 2000, when it was proposed that Sesay take over the RUF leadership, the Trial Chamber found that, at a covert meeting held late at night, Mr. Taylor "privately advised Issa Sesay to say that he would disarm but 'not do it in reality.'"[272] The Chamber also found that "[a]t that time, the accused was supplying Sesay with arms and ammunition, and also calling on the RUF to send forces to help him fight his own enemies together with the AFL in Liberia and in Guinea."[273] deliberations for judgment in this important trial and all charges against Taylor be dismissed as a consequence thereof.

Discretionary Payments and other Inducements to Witnesses by the Prosecution

23. Not much changed in the OTP's approach to the investigation and prosecution of Taylor after Crane's departure and during the respective tenures of all successor prosecutors up to the current one. This Court will recall the Defence's request for disclosure and an accounting by the OTP of payments made in cash and kind (allegedly totaling $30,000 United States Dollars) to prospective witness, DCT-097.[41] In noting that seventeen Money Gram receipts provided by the Defence linked the Prosecution to the payments made to the witness, the Court observed that, "The payments do not appear to have been made by the Witness and Victims Service of the Special Court (WVS) and on the face of it, appear to be beyond that which is reasonably required for the management of witnesses or victims."[42] The Court found that evidence of the payments was exculpatory material which the Defence had demonstrated the Prosecution failed to disclose[43]; it went on to hold that the payments should have been disclosed by the Prosecution as evidence which may affect the credibility of Prosecution evidence under Rule 68(B).[44]

24. The Defence took exception in its Contempt Motion to inducements (monetary bribes, offers of relocation, etc.) that were offered and/ or provided to potential witnesses and sources by the Prosecution's Witness Management Unit (WMU) in exchange for cooperation and testimony. [45] The payments were independent of, and distinct from, those made to both Prosecution and Defence witnesses by the Court's Witnesses and Victims Section (WVS). The Defence argued and provided supporting documentation to demonstrate that the WMU payments/ inducements (i) were contrary to the letter and/ or spirit of Rule 39(ii),[46] in that some were impermissible under that Rule, while those that were permissible were demonstrably exorbitant and irregular (ii), were duplicative and supplemental to payments made by WVS, (iii) occurred pre-trial and throughout the life of the trial, and (iv) were deliberate and designed to influence the cooperation and evidence of potential witnesses, witnesses, suspects or sources, and to otherwise interfere with the administration of justice.[47]

25. In its Decision on the Contempt Motion, this Court observed that the "question of discretionary payments and a possible abuse of that discretion under Rule 39(ii) in that the payments might not have been necessary for the safety, support or assistance of the potential witnesses and sources..." would "only be considered at the stage of final deliberations, taking into account the evidence adduced and the cross-examination of the witnesses in question"[48] Accordingly, and bearing in mind the proximity of those deliberations and the finality of these submissions, the Defence renews with vigor, all averments and arguments made on this issue in the Contempt Motion and incorporates the same herein by reference, as if set out in full below.[49] Additionally, and as and when appropriate below, the Defence addresses the contaminating impact that these payments/ inducements had on the reliability and credibility of specific Prosecution witnesses and on the Prosecution's case as a whole. At a minimum, an adverse inference (if not presumption) should be drawn vis-à-vis the reliability and credibility of Prosecution evidence in those instances where the payments/ inducements to particular witnesses are objectively unreasonable and/ or excessive. In appropriate circumstances of egregious and unmitigated abuse of discretionary payments/ inducements by the Prosecution, the Court should exclude the evidence of the applicable witnesses in their entirety.

26. To be sure, a clear and regrettable case of prosecutorial abuse of process has consequently been made out[50] with one inescapable consequence being the deprivation of a fair trial to the Accused at bar.

[46] Rule 39(ii) indicates that a Prosecutor may, in the conduct of an investigation, "[t]ake all measures deemed necessary for the purpose of the investigation, including the taking of any special measures to provide for the safety, the support and the assistance of potential witnesses and sources."

Taylor was involved in the shipment. Once, again, this is clear evidence that prosecution witnesses were keen to link Taylor with arms and ammunitions dealings even when they knew full well he was not involved. It is also evidence that prosecution witnesses cannot be relied upon as evidence of Taylor's involvement.

1053. In conclusion, given the inconsistency of the evidence surrounding the organisation of the shipment, there is not sufficient evidence to impute to Taylor any involvement in the Magburaka Shipment.

1054. The materiel delivered at Magburaka was taken to JP Koroma's house in Freetown and then distributed from there.[3037] Some of the material was given to the RUF.[3038] One of the heavy weapons, whether it was a heavy machine gun or an anti-aircraft gun (the evidence seems to suggest there was a least a gun), was given to Bockarie.[3039]

1055. The evidence suggests material obtained from the Magburaka Shipment was used in fighting ECOMOG in Freetown in February 1998.[3040] However, it is not clear how much then was left over or used in subsequent operations or used in the commission of crimes. The fact that both the RUF and AFRC often struggled with ammunition supplies throughout 1998 may suggest the ammunition obtained from the Magburaka Shipment did not last long, but this is of course conjecture, as no conclusions can properly be drawn as to what ammunition actually arrived or to what use the ammunition obtained from the Magburaka Shipment was put after February 1998.[3041]

1056. There is some evidence that the trade with former ULIMO combatants continued throughout 1997, though it is not at all clear as to how significant trade was during this period. For instance, Lamin, Varmuyan Sherif, Mohamed Kabbah and Issa Sesay suggest the trade continued into 1997.[3042]

1057. There is a small amount of evidence that the trade with Guinea continued, though it is not at all clear as to how significant trade was during this period. Several witness have allegedly introduced the herbalist to a group of fighters in Buedu at the same time as he explained that Taylor had given him the "plan" for how the Fitta-Fatta mission and the attack on Freetown should go.[3403] Bockarie threatened to kill anyone who refused to participate, and thus the herbalist carve little marks into the fighters arms and backs and rubbed a concoction on their bodies.[3404] King Perry subsequently testified that Fitti-Fatta was a failure despite these "protections".[3405] Alice Pyne belatedly supported the evidence that the herbalists were sent by Taylor in regard to this operation; however, she admitted that she only linked Taylor to this account regarding the herbalists about 10 days prior to testimony (previously she had told the Prosecution that Bockarie hired the herbalists).[3406] The Defence submits this is an inconsistency solely designed to implicate Taylor. Pyne's testimony was directly refuted by John Vincent[3407] and Issa Sesay,[3408] though Sesay does agree that herbalists came from Liberia and were sent by a man named Titus, who was known to Bockarie.[3409]

1194. This inculpatory evidence also is composed entirely of hearsay accounts of herbalists being sent by Charles Taylor to support troops, and as such it is no stronger than that relating to other forms of assistance allegedly sent by Taylor. Additionally, there is evidence that the RUF used herbalists and juju well before Taylor allegedly sent these herbalists from Liberia,[3410] thus there would have been no need for Taylor to send such (and he did not believe in juju anyway).[3411]

Conclusion on Aiding and Abetting

1195. The complete paucity of anything but circumstantial and hearsay evidence of Taylor's aiding and abetting the RUF or AFRC/RUF during the Indictment period is striking and troubling. The majority of the evidence upon which the Prosecution relies for a conviction is based on second-hand stories told and retold by combatants and insider witnesses who have embellished their accounts to implicate Taylor. conclusion, that there is indeed smoke but no fire, is confirmed by a code cable, dated 19 June 2000, from Downes-Thomas of the UNOL in Monrovia to Prendergrast of the UN in New York.[3412] Therein, Downes-Thomas states that the crucial aspects of the "omnibus allegation" against Taylor are: that he provides arms, ammunition and training and personnel to the RUF; that he is able to assist the RUF because the RUF supplies him with illicitly mined diamonds for personal profit; and that he has a vested interest in the continuation of the crises in Sierra Leone as the maintenance of the status quo promises the continuation of the lucrative arrangement.[3413]

1196. However, Downes-Thomas goes on to acknowledge that while Western newspapers have carried stories on this matter they have only provided "generalized snippets of related information which only whets the appetite but offers nothing truly substantive". He goes on to note that the evidence underlying these crucial allegations is unknown and unavailable to the United Nations Office in Liberia, which he suggests means that the evidence does not in fact exist.

1197. Likewise, the Defence submits that the fabricated and generalized stories of Taylor's alleged aiding and abetting of the RUF and/or AFRC/RUF as presented by the Prosecution may whet the Trial Chamber's appetite for a conviction, but offer nothing truly substantive to upon which the Trial Chamber can rely beyond a reasonable doubt to support a conviction.

Diamonds in Exchange for Assistance

1198. The Prosecution contends that the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF gave Taylor diamonds obtained from Sierra Leone in exchange for arms, ammunition and other supplies.[3414] Taylor denies all such allegations.[3415] The Prosecution called "diamond expert" Stephen Ellis as its first witness. Following that act, the Hollywood phenomenon of "blood diamonds" and the late infusion of a Supermodel helped to raise the profile of the Prosecution case against Taylor, but in the end, all that glitters is not gold. The hype did little to substantiate the underlying allegations. Of more than twenty linkage witnesses that testified to the effect that the RUF and/or AFRC/RUF gave diamonds to Taylor, only two of them give a first-hand account of the alleged transactions. One of those two witnesses is ZigZag Marzah, who drew the Trial Chamber a picture[3416] material. There can be little reason to fail to accept such evidence. The prosecution has produced no such evidence in this case. There is then hearsay which comes from a witness so proximate to the source of the statement that there may be an initial temptation to accept it. Unfortunately such evidence in this case tends to emanate from individuals who are themselves accomplices and thus independent of the care which must be exercised in treating hearsay evidence there is the added urgency to corroborate the tainted source. There is then the hearsay which is little more than tittle tattle or general gossip. Such evidence, in our submission can never carry sufficient weight to be regarded as proof.

1395. Returning to the point about the impact of prior inconsistent statements, and keeping in mind the above arguments with relation to hearsay and accomplice evidence, the Defence submits that a "material discrepancy" would certainly arise where the witness has given multiple previous statements to the Prosecution, and yet, it is not until that witness has been in the "care" of the Prosecution and its Witness Management Unit that the witness makes any mention or link to the Accused. The Trial Chamber should be vigilant in ascertaining when and if this has happened.

1396. Furthermore, with regard to payments of witnesses, the Defence appreciates that all witnesses appearing before the Special Court are entitled to receive compensation from the Witness and Victims Section of the Registry for legitimate travel expenses, lodging, meals and other expenses incurred as a result of his/her cooperation with the Special Court. The Practice Direction on Allowance for Witnesses and Victims is meant to balance the Special Court's interest in encouraging cooperation by minimizing pecuniary harm to witnesses with the need to prevent the parties from providing financial benefit to their witnesses in exchange for favourable testimony. Where payments made to witnesses by the Prosecution are challenged here, it is the Defence's assertion that such payments exceeded the level of financial support authorized by the Practice Direction, or came from a different source entirely: the Prosecution. The Appeals Chamber has recently noted that the issue of improper payments and inducements to witnesses or potential witnesses and sources is a live issue in this trial.[3808] Payments received by prospective witnesses and witnesses have tarnished the quest for truth. While in some instances, the sums involved have on occasion been small, when viewed through Western eyes, but must be viewed in the context of the developing nations of Liberia and Sierra Leone.

TF1-276 Abu Keita

Excessive financial compensation

1397. Abu Keita was paid a substantial sum of money to testify in the trial of the Accused and appears to have been influenced by the debt he feels that he owes to his benefactors to alter his testimony to support hyper-specific Prosecution charges. Abu Keita was primarily provided funds for excessive travel expenses. While some payments were directed toward legitimate travel costs, the large amount of "other expenses" covered by the Prosecution damage Keita's credibility. Between 20 June 2003 and 23 June 2003, the Witness Management Unit provided $2,180 US for travel and hotel expenses, and an additional $322 US for unspecified "other expenses."[3809] In this case, while only $57 US were required for hotel expenses, it is difficult to understand the necessity of $322 US for "other expenses." Similarly, a $793 US plane ticket was accompanied by over $1,000 US for "transportation expenses."

1398. In a vacuum, such large payments may not suggest an issue with a witness's credibility. However, when coupled with a number of very specific propositions and considerable inconsistencies in his testimony, Keita cannot be considered to be a reliable witness.

Inconsistent and self-aggrandising statements

1399. With this financial history in mind, consider Abu Keita's claims that on the very first introduction to Ibrahim Bah, Samuel Bockarie and Charles Taylor the following events occurred: Bah spoke with him about diamond transactions, Bockarie showed him a jar full of diamonds and Taylor spoke directly to him about supporting the RUF.[3810] Given the magnitude of those assertions, it is difficult to understand why such issues would be brought up without a prior relationship. The suggestion that all three individuals chose the same day to express such specific opinions, about issues so pointedly related to the Prosecution's case against Taylor, to a perfect stranger strains credulity. Moreover, Keita's meeting with the Accused was omitted from his early occasions to bring diamonds to Charles Taylor;[3820] Keita further denying from his 2003 interview that he sat near Issa Sesay and Charles Taylor as they spoke in 2000 about diamonds.[3821]

Keita's credibility in light of other evidence

1404. Keita's credibility is seriously undermined when viewed in the light of other Prosecution witness testimony. Keita himself claimed that he was sent to Sierra Leone following his imprisonment and subsequent release after his role in the Camp Johnson Road Incident of September 1998. However, he omitted to mention that he had previously been in contact with and known to the RUF as one of the ULIMO Generals from whom the RUF had purchased arms.[3822] He omitted to mention that he was independently close to the RUF as his girlfriend's father was a senior advisor for Sankoh.[3823] Indeed, Ellie Mabey, TF1-516, testified that Abu Keita came to join the RUF after the disarmament in Liberia in 1996 or 1997.[3824] Ellie Mabey saw him in Kenema in 1997 (the suggestion he was with Bockarie) at about the time Taylor was inaugurated as president.[3825] Samuel Kargbo, TF1-597, claimed that Keita was present in Buedu in March 1998.[3826] This evidence, when taken together, presents the picture that Keita was involved with the RUF long before he claimed he was sent to join the RUF by Taylor. It completely undermines his allegation that he was sent to join the RUF by Taylor and his general credibility as a witness.

TF1-375 Edward Joseph Woody

1405. The testimony of Joseph Woody must be seen in light of two crucial issues. First, that he received exorbitant amounts of money from the Prosecution and the WVS and, second, that his statements to the Prosecution and a substantial portion of his evidence changed to fit the narratives of other witnesses immediately after they testified against the Accused. While Woody denied having ever heard other testimony, his inclusion of specific facts at an extremely late date in his interviews, coupled with his inability to explain why such issues were not discussed sooner, suggests that his longstanding and beneficial relationship with the Prosecution influenced his testimony.

Excessive payments

1406. Before setting out the multiple inconsistencies in his testimony, it is necessary to look at the excessive payments made to Woody by the Prosecution and WVS, in his capacity as both a witness and a source of information.[3827] The Defence submits that these payments, as well as payments made by the Prosecution and an indemnity letter written to DCT-032,[3828] led to High Command and Moses Blah giving a fabricated account of the alleged death of Johnny Paul Koroma. That part of High Command's testimony should be disregarded entirely. Indeed, the bulk of his evidence should be viewed with great caution in light of this fabrication and his willingness to lie to the Court.From September 2005 to May 2008 the Prosecution paid the witness 4,325 USD and 825,000 Leones.[3829] In addition, Woody was provided 13,122,800 Leones for general living fees by the WVS.[3830] Woody's medical expenses totaled 775,000 Leones.[3831] Rent, maintenance and utility bills were covered for 19,750,000 Leones.[3832] Not surprisingly given the massive expenditure of funds, Woody was unable to provide justification for over 3,000,000 Leones labeled as "miscellaneous," except to explain that the Special Court also paid for him to go to an expensive computer school.[3833] All told, in addition to money received from the Prosecution, Woody was given or had paid on his behalf 38,359,200 Leones by WVS.[3834]

1407. These payments to Woody are problematic given his understanding of the purpose of the payments, and his explanation for their use. It is important to note that Woody was given money on a consistent basis by the Prosecution which he viewed not as payment for expenses incurred as a result of conducting interviews, but as a means to support his large family in an unfamiliar city.[3835] While arguing these were not payments for information, Woody provided inconsistent answers and occasionally admitted they were done solely as a favour to him. Specifically, he stated that he was not satisfied with being given only 50 USD for a five minute motor bike ride during his first visit, and was then given 100 USD for a second visit, when during both visits

he gave them false information and was generally uncooperative.[3836] Woody admitted that he had no transportation costs related to that day's meeting. Later, in June 2006, Woody stated that the Prosecution "gave me money and I accepted the money. I didn't know what it was for. They gave it me and I accepted it. I knew it was for the same transport purpose, but for the meantime take this amount of money. I can't remember what the money was for".[3837]

1408. Woody was also used at times purely as a source, such as on 22 July 2006 when he was given 25 USD to collect someone else and bring them to the Prosecutors.[3838] During the course of 2005 and 2006 the witness continued to receive payments of 100 USD for interviews that contained little information.[3839] Upon returning from a trip from Monrovia to Freetown, for which he was paid 200 USD, Woody was given an additional 100 USD which he stated was an "appreciation" from the Prosecution, for him to use for his family.[3840] It is difficult to understand how a payment of 50 USD for "crossing the street" and taking up some of the witness's time is to be viewed other than as inducement for the witness to testify or provide information.[3841]

1409. Woody attempted to justify his earnings by claiming that money received from the Prosecution was a paltry sum. He stated that he earned money from the Sirleaf campaign as well as money from a house rental and motor bike rentals, and from the Sierra Leonean embassy.[3842] Woody claimed that the money from the Prosecution was pocket money compared to his own earnings.[3843] Additionally, Woody made the dubious claim that he earned 175 USD a month from the Sierra Leonean embassy for a two year period for making a total of three trips to the border of Sierra Leone and Liberia.[3844] Despite these objections, it is clear that Woody received a far greater living allowance from his work with the Special Court.

Specific Choice to Include Testimony after Zigzag Marzah's Hearing

1410. Particularly troubling in light of the payments made is Woody's inclusion at trial of several claims corroborating the testimony of Zigzag Marzah, despite failing to make covering up his own concern that his synchronization of testimony with Marzah's would be blatantly obvious.

1470. In addition, Seiatoe admitted that he kept visiting the defence office, while crucial Prosecution witnesses were giving testimony, even though he had already decided to give evidence for the Prosecution.[3983]

1471. When coupled with Seiatoe's decision to lie about the defence office in open court, Seiatoe's testimony becomes hard to view as credible or without bias.

Payment schedule

1472. Finally, Seiatoe's payments, and the lack of identification of their purpose in the Prosecution records, provide another basis to assume his testimony may have become more favourable to the Prosecution. In total, he was provided over 2,345 USD.[3984] Seiatoe was paid 150 USD on three occasions for transport and lost wages at the end of March and again in the beginning of April 2008, following Zigzah Marzah's testimony, despite no interview being scheduled.[3985] While there is no associated payment schedule, Seiatoe is insistent that an interview occurred and notes were recorded.[3986] Claims that the Prosecution would take notes on a subject, so close to the testimony of Marzah and after a recent visit to the defence office, should raise suspicion of the highest concern of, at a minimum, the witness's credibility and interests in testifying in this trial.

1473. Seiatoe further claims that his meetings during this period were for "security" concerns, which also lacks credibility, as he had been giving 500 USD the previous year to fix up his aunt's house for the purposes of relocation. He also states that the payments in March and April of 2008 were for this purpose, despite not having any apparent connection to security issues.[3987] Another 500 USD was paid in June to Seiatoe for relocation of his family, although the money was actually used to move him for business purposes and for his mother to travel home to Guinea.[3988] Again in August, Seiatoe was paid 250 USD for family assistance.[3989] Seiatoe can provide no explanation, whatsoever, for this 250 USD, although he tried to explain that it was for lost wages or transportation despite having already been reimbursed separately for those items.[3990] Yet again, one week later, Seiatoe was paid 100 more USD.[3991]

1474. Seiatoe obsessively provides the same explanation over and over, that the payments were "for business," without providing any explanation and despite the fact that lost wages were included.[3992] Even more problematic, Seiatoe claims that a group of many meetings during August and September were all for the sole purpose of discussing travel, and no other discussion ensued, despite the apparently large losses in "business" he was suffering.[3993]

After Bockarie's death

1475. Seiatoe stated in court that he went into hiding for one week after Bockarie's death and was shortly thereafter ordered to conduct a mission by Benjamin Yeaten. In his 2007 statement, however, Seiatoe stated that he went into hiding until 2004, after Yeaten left the country.[3994] The statement is very clearly worded and absolutely contradicts Seiatoe's testimony. Seiatoe admits that he had the opportunity to correct his statement on this issue, but chose not to, preferring to wait until he could do so in court.[3995]

TF1-337 Mustapha Mansaray

Payment of unauthorized allowances

1476. Contrary to the intention of the Practice Direction, the Prosecution covered significant medical costs for both Mansaray and his wife in such a manner as to cast doubt on his credibility as a witness. Mansaray was made aware during the course of his interviews that he would be provided funds for medical expenses.[3996] Mansaray described the arrangement as one where he would be provided funds for family medical expenses upon request, saying "sometimes in 2006 my family members could get sick and even my wife at a point underwent an operation. I had a cellular phone, I called them, told them my problems, and at that time I was unemployed, I hadn't any money and so they assisted me to pay the medical bill."[3997] At times, Mansaray viewed these medical issues as being life-threatening.

1477. In July 2006, Mansaray was given a total of 330,000 Leones for his wife's surgery, paid by the Special Court to the government hospital at Pujehun.[3998] Mansaray was given a separate total of 260,000 Leones in early December 2006 for emergency surgeries on his eye and teeth.[3999] Mansaray was paid an additional 450,000 Leones in February 2007 for medical assistance for himself and his wife[4000] and 150,000 more in further medical expenses in July 2007[4001]. Through all of this, Mansaray acknowledged that "I wouldn't have been able to pay because I hadn't the opportunity to get set [sic] money".[4002] This payment history, when coupled with Mansaray's testimony that he felt comfortable calling the Prosecution and informing them that he needed money for his family's medical care, casts significant doubt on the witness's ability to testify independent of the Prosecution's influence.

Favourable testimony given at trial which is at odds with prior statements

1478. It with this series of extraordinarily generous acts by the Prosecution that Mansaray's testimony, often inconsistent and heavily favourable to the Prosecution, should be viewed. His inconsistencies are specific to portions of his testimony which pertain to the indictment and the allegations against the Accused.

years of being questioned may be attributed to a feeling of indebtedness following the extraordinarily generous medical allowances paid to Mansaray and his family.

1480. Mansaray's testimony concerning the execution of miners who attempted to escape the diamond fields also changed as he continued to receive payments from the Prosecution. In his May 2006 statement, Mansaray reported that he did not witness any executions personally, but only heard of them indirectly.[4006] When given an opportunity to correct this statement in 2008, Mansaray specifically stated that he had been told by others that killings had occurred at the Kaisambo and No. 11 mining sites, but did not provide any direct evidence that he had witnessed executions.[4007] At trial, however, Mansaray claimed that he had personally witnessed individuals being executed, and that his earlier statements were simply a mistake on his part.[4008] Mansaray seems to be unable to distinguish between directly witnessing the killings and hearing about them from others.[4009]

TF1-588 Stephen Smith

1481. Stephen Smith, while being an expert at journalistic reporting and French-speaking Africa, is not an expert on Sierra Leone or Liberia and has spent little time in those countries during the period relevant to the indictment. Smith has written thirteen books and presented at nearly twenty conferences and never has Sierra Leone or Liberia been the primary subject.[4010] Smith claims that his books generally focus on issues in Africa, pointing out that few of his books focus on only one country, but this is a misleading assertion. As noted by counsel during cross-examination, many of his books are only said to deal with a single, French-speaking country because Smith invokes the concept of "Franco-African" relations.[4011] It should be clear that even large scale studies of "Franco-African" relations have absolutely no bearing on Smith's understanding or experience with issues related to Sierra Leone or Liberia, and yet, when evaluating Smith's CV, his various lectures, and his many books, they predominately focus on French Africa.[4012] Smith's closest direct work, besides a few war.[4033] Consciously or subconsciously, there is the danger that he has moulded his own account to include what he was told by those other prisoners. Perhaps one instance is the fate of Martin Moinama: in November 2003, he told the Prosecution he did not know Moinama's whereabouts; yet in January 2007, he was able to inform the Prosecution that Moinama had been killed in 1999.[4034] Though he denied he heard this story while at Pademba,[4035] it is suspicious that his recollection of this occurred while he was imprisoned with the very man who had killed Moinama.[4036] Equally, in an interview in November 2003, the witness stated that he obtained the information about the group that entered Freetown in January 1999 from the other inmates at Pademba; though, he denied this in court.[4037]

1491. The witness had a clear motive to help the Prosecution's case, since he owes his early release from Pademba Road Prison to the Prosecution (he even told another witness, Seibatu Jusu, that the Court released him from prison).[4038] Indeed, this debt continues as the Prosecution promised the witness that it would take care of him and his family,[4039] including supporting them when sick, paying his children's school fees, and providing school uniform for them.[4040] There is therefore the danger that the witness may have been motivated to tailor his testimony to aid the Prosecution.

TF1-584 Alice Pyne

Inconsistencies

1492. Alice Pyne like many prosecution witnesses, has a tendency to link Taylor with the events in Sierra Leone despite saying otherwise in previous statements. Her testimony regarding the herbalists supposedly sent by Taylor provides a case-in-point. In her statement of October 2007, Pyne stated it was Bockarie who hired the herbalists; in her statement of March 2008, it was Taylor.[4041]

1493. Though there are numerous examples of inconsistencies in her testimony, the Defence draws the Trial Chamber's attention to the following two, as representative of first her

Other matters going to credibility

1502. TF1-516 displayed a great reluctance to agree with previous statements made to the Prosecution that were exculpatory in nature. The most telling example is when he was asked whether he agreed with his previous statement that he never heard a directive from Taylor or Yeaten concerning the Freetown Invasion.[4082] He tried to dodge the question, and only after an intervention from Justice Lussick did he confirm the statement. This example is representative of his testimony as a whole. He was not interested in telling the truth, but in providing a inculpatory testimony.

TF1-274 Dauda Aruna Fornie

His evidence for the period 1991 to 1992

1503. There is evidence to believe that while DAF may have been in Liberia for a time in about 1991 to 1992, he understood little of the events going on about him. In that respect his hearsay evidence from this period should be treated with caution.

1504. For instance, his treatment of Black Gadaffa is brief and unsupported by corroborative evidence. He claimed Black Gadaffa was a unit composed of "Sankoh recruits", i.e. Sierra Leoneans, with a Liberian known as Kpelle Boy for its leader,[4083] dating the creation of this unit to the time he was in Liberia, which was about mid-1991 (the rainy season) to late 1992.[4084] This forms a rather cursory description of the Black Gadaffa situation, given all the detail supplied by other witnesses, suggesting that DAF did not know much about it, which in turn would suggest he is not the most reliable informant on the matter. That is not quite the end of the story, however, since it emerges in cross-examination that, in a previous interview with prosecution investigators, DAF had stated that the leaders of Black Gadaffa were rumoured to have connived against Taylor, including Kpelle Boy, Dixon Wolo and Yegbeh Degbon.[4085] This, of course, would support Taylor's own position regarding Black Gadaffa, and suggests that DAF knew a good deal more than he was willing to admit; but knew also that such an account would undermine his own credibility and his own account of how Black Gadaffa came into being. Perhaps that is why he seemed to recant what he said in that interview, and deny the leaders of Black Gadaffa connived against Taylor.[4086] Either way, his evidence about the episode comes across as unreliable: at best he is poorly informed; at worst he is disingenuous.

1505. Another reason one may wish to treat his account of this period with caution is his lack of knowledge of the command structure of the NPFL. Despite the fact that it was well-known that Oliver Varney commanded the sixth battalion of the NPFL, DAF failed to mention him, testifying instead that it was a man known as One Man One.[4087] Given that Oliver Varney had his base in Tubmanburg, also known as Bomi or Bomi Hills, and that DAF claimed to be in that same location at the precise time Varney was also there, one again comes to the conclusion that DAF is poorly informed.

1506. DAF is certainly poorly informed about other events, such as Top 20, Top 40 or Top Final; this time by his own admission.[4088]

1507. Now while it might seem insignificant as to whether the witness recalled specific details from a long time ago, such as the above, it is important when taken into context with DAF's main allegation from the period in question, namely his account that Taylor came to Kakata together with Sankoh just before Operation Octopus in 1992; and that Sankoh spoke to the Sierra Leonean fighters present.[4089] That the witness should remember so little of certain key events from this period and yet recall such a fleeting episode should perhaps provide our first note of caution; if so, it is the first note of many. For DAF never saw Taylor present, despite the fact he claimed he "saw" Taylor in his evidence;[4090] he was told Taylor was in the vehicle,[4091] which is not the same thing. Now one might be prepared to be generous and put the confusion down to semantics, but the witness continued to try to buttress his evidence by speculation: at first he supposed the windows of the vehicle were down,[4092] though then he claimed not to recall,[4093] before claiming to "recall well" that the windows were closed, but only after his previous evidence that they were closed had been put to him.[4094] At best, this is forgetful, at worst it is dishonest; either way it renders his testimony in this area unreliable. It also adds a more sinister note: that is a conviction to cement a link with Taylor, and shape the evidence around that conviction. That is another reason to distrust the witness, not just for the period 1991 to 1992, but for the entirety of his evidence.

Radio operations

1508. The witness testified about radio communication between Taylor and the RUF. However, there are major holes in his evidence which make it unreliable. For instance, DAF testifies about the need to exchange codes between the NPFL and RUF, and later between the Liberian government and the RUF, by hand delivery.[4095] However, he does not explain how such codes were exchanged during the periods in which the borders were sealed and the supply line was cut.[4096]

1509. So he testified that the first RUF code was prepared in late 1992, and that this was sent to Gbarnga,[4097] and seems to have been hand-delivered by Sankoh.[4098] However, while there was no standard time for the RUF code being changed, it seems to have usually been changed every few months.[4099] This means that for the RUF to have been in effective radio contact with the NPFL, the new codes would have had to have been delivered by the RUF to the NPFL every few months. However, as even DAF has testified, there were periods in which the border was cut off, and there was no way for the either the NPFL to supply the RUF, or the RUF to supply the NPFL.[4100] Thus, there seems to have been no way for the RUF to deliver new codes to the NPFL,[4101] and thus it would have been impossible for the RUF and NPFL to communicate effectively during such periods.

1510. This should be seen alongside the lack of evidence for contact between Top Final and the AFRC coup, and that all allegations of radio or satellite phone communication in that period are unsupported by corroborating testimony.

Period at Tongo

1511. DAF testified he spent about 3 months in Tongo, as a radio operator, arriving in 1997.[4102] He remained there until late 1997.[4103] However, there are serious question

[4100] See e.g. TT, DAF, TF1-274, 5 Dec 08, p. 21785-6 in which he testified that between 1993 and 1996 there was no supply to the RUF from Taylor, and that there was little direct contact either.
[4101] Of course they could have come up with a new method of delivery, but there is no evidence of this, and so it cannot simply be assumed.
[4102] TT, DAF, TF1-274, 2 Dec 08, p. 21419-20.

marks over his claim to be a radio operator at this time. Firstly, during evidence-in-chief, his testimony focuses on mining, and not radio communications.[4104] Secondly, in a previous interview, he does not say anything about radio communications.[4105] Thirdly, because he did not tell his interviewers in the interview he was a radio operator, but told them it was following his time in Tongo that he was assigned by Bockarie to be a radio operator at Buedu.[4106] The witness tries to get around this by claiming that it was out of fear of being prosecuted that he did not tell them he was a radio operator in Tongo, only to undermine his own argument by being preparing to tell the same interviewers in the same interview that he was a radio operator in Buedu.[4107] So his argument changes: he claimed he only told them he was a radio operator in Buedu, but not Tongo, because his interviewers only asked him about that,[4108] which is hardly credible in itself, but made even weaker by his marked volte-face 1512. The suggestion put to him is that he was only in Tongo for personal mining,[4109] which is why he is knowledgeable about mining at the place rather than radio operations, and that it was only in Buedu, as he initially told his interviewers, that he became a radio operator.

Bockarie's trip to Liberia

1513. DAF claimed Bockarie was called by Sunlight and that through him and Yeaten, it was Taylor's instruction for Bockarie to travel to Monrovia.[4110] This was in early 1998, at the time of the ECOMOG Intervention, while Bockarie was retreating from Kenema to Buedu.[4111]

1514. However, there are serious problems with this account. Firstly, and most fundamentally, it is in complete contrast to the Prosecution's other account of Bockarie's first trip to Monrovia following the ECOMOG Intervention, as presented in the testimony of Varmuyan Sherif. There Varmuyan Sherif testified that he was sent by Taylor to pick up Bockarie and take him to Monrovia. In DAF's account, there is no Varmuyan Sherif, and there is no need for anyone to fetch Bockarie, since Bockarie is in communication with Yeaten and Taylor via Sunlight and Base 1. Neither are these separate accounts of different trips undertaken by Bockarie, since both make clear the trip was made during the ECOMOG Intervention while Bockarie was retreating from Kenema. They are thus describing the same trip in completely different terms, in such a way that one, if not both, of them must be mistaken; indeed, one, if not both, must be lying.

1515. Secondly, DAF claims to have met Jungle in Voinjama along the way, but makes no mention of this in a previous interview in May 2006.[4112]

1516. Thirdly, DAF claims to have stayed at Base 1 during the trip. Sunlight testified that Base 1 was not set up at this time, but even if one ignores that DAF describes Base 1 as the radio room outside Yeaten's house, despite the fact that Base 1 was originally set up inside Yeaten's house and it was only later that it was moved into the outhouse.

1517. Fourthly, DAF is extremely inconsistent about the number of trucks and ammunition he meets coming back from Monrovia following the journey.[4113]

1518. Fifthly, the radio message came from Sunlight for Bockarie to travel to Monrovia, but DAF himself testified the Liberians were only given the RUF radio code when he took the code to them on Bockarie's second visit.[4114] So how was Sunlight, or any Liberian operator, able to communicate with the RUF?

Radios in Buedu

1519. DAF testified that there were three radio stations in Buedu: one, a monitoring station; two, a station with the call sign Lemon, later Mike November 5; three, Bockarie's radio station known as Bravo Zulu 4; there was also a mobile radio known as Planet 1.[4115] These radios operated during DAF's time in Buedu from 1998 to about April 1999.[4116] This testimony is in contrast to that of TF1-516, who testified that there was one radio in Buedu, known as Bravo Zulu 4, which was then supplemented with two additional radios following an operation undertaken by the RUF in 1999: one known as Planet 1, the other as Marvel.[4117] One again this is a major inconsistency between witnesses that goes to the reliability of the evidence; given that Taylor's intermediaries were supposed to be exchanging messages on these radio stations, it does matter which radios were in operation at any given time, since if a particular radio only came into being at a specific time, then Taylor cannot be responsible for any crimes linked to him through that radio for earlier periods.

Satellite phones

1520. Bockarie obtained a satellite phone from JPK, and later from Taylor.[4118] Bockarie obtained JPK's phone when JPK came to Buedu in early 1998.[4119] Taylor gave Bockarie the satellite phone on his second trip to Monrovia,[4120] this was in mid-1998.[4121] However, in cross DAF stated for the first time that Taylor gave Bockarie more than one satellite phone.[4122] Once again this seems to be an attempt to discredit Taylor. Other witnesses have testified that Bockarie only had one satellite phone. For instance, Mohamed Kabbah testified that he only ever saw Bockarie with one satellite phone.[4123] Perry Kamara testified that Bockarie had a satellite phone from Liberia.[4124]

Additional inconsistencies in his evidence

1521. DAF testified that the RUF's supply lines were cut when they came to Kailahun, which was in early 1993 to mid-1993.[4125] However, later he stated that the first attempt to cut off the supply route came while he was at Sandeyalu, which was from mid-1993 to late 1993.[4126]

1522. DAF's account of being freed by Kamajors is highly suspect.[4127] In examination-in-chief, he testified that he was released in mid-1997 following hearing Sankoh's broadcast on the radio telling the RUF to join with the AFRC. In cross-examination, he was unable to explain how he escaped, and his account does not co-incide with the RUF and AFRC union.[4128]

1523. DAF testified that Jungle was one of Sankoh's men in about 1993.[4129] However, no other witness placed Jungle with RUF so early on in the war. Indeed, TF1-516 testified that Jungle was trapped by ULIMO in a separate jungle.[4130]

12) TF1-532's allegation that the plan for the Freetown invasion was Taylor's idea contradicts the witness's other evidence that during the meeting at Buedu in late 1998, Bockarie called Taylor from his bedroom and told him about the plan. The question is, why Bockarie should Bockarie have called Taylor (by other witnesses' accounts, in the middle of the night), to simply tell him of a plan that he (Taylor) had already planned.

13) Concerning the invasion itself, it is interesting to note that TF1-532 did not implicate Taylor in any way in the Invasion in his initial interviews with the Prosecution. As argued in the JCE section, TF1-532 suggested that he had not mentioned the issue to the Prosecution because he did not trust them and feared that they might later turn against him. The witness however could not explain how withholding evidence on this issue would have assisted his cause. Further, the witness at that time had been given an indemnity latter anyway.[4269] In fact in another statement clarifying the first, the witness had gone on to state categorically that the Freetown invasion was largely an AFRC affair.[4270] So hopeless was the witness on this issue that the court even observed that he was being evasive.[4271]

14) In assessing the witness's credibility, further to the fact that witness is an accomplice at the highest level; by his evidence, one of the top dozen, the Trial Chamber must also bear in mind other incentives that were given to the witness by the Prosecution, including indemnity from prosecution as well as other financial benefit such rent, subsistence and medical allowances.

1556. For all the foregoing reasons, the Trial Chamber must therefore reject the witness's evidence in toto. At the very least the evidence must be approached with utmost caution.

TRIAL CHAMBER II ("Trial Chamber") of the Special Court for Sierra Leone ("Special Court");

RECALLING that on 8 February 2011, Lead Counsel for the Accused, Courtenay Griffiths, evinced an intention to withdraw and leave the court hearing submitting, inter alia:

> [...] We feel it is our professional duty to withdraw pending a decision on our motion to appeal yesterday's decision which will be filed today. We cannot, in our professional view, bearing particularly in mind Articles 5, 8 and 14 of the Code of Conduct for Counsel of this Special Court for Sierra Leone, adequately represent the accused's rights within the permitted six hours of oral argument allowed us tomorrow and the two hours on Friday, given the vast volume of transcripts and exhibits and the complexity of the issues that we have analysed in our written submission which two of you have refused to accept. And also, volume of material which has been adverted to by the Prosecution on more than one occasion. In our submission, our very presence in court is incompatible with our duty to protect Mr Taylor's interest and it is our intention, both myself and Mr Taylor, to leave court at this point.[1]

CONSIDERING that following an exchange between Mr. Griffiths and Judges of the Trial Chamber, and after hearing the submissions of the Prosecution, the Presiding Judge issued the majority order of the Trial Chamber, Justice Sebutinde dissenting, holding that:

> I have not heard any arguments that amount to exceptional circumstances that would enable this Court to exercise a discretion under Rule 46(E) [sic] to permit counsel to withdraw. Accordingly, the trial will continue. There have already been too many delays in this Court, many of them emanating from the accused's decisions and the court will proceed in – as directed. The accused and counsel will remain and hear the evidence and the submissions of the Prosecution as scheduled.[2]

CONSIDERING that following this order, Mr. Griffiths nevertheless attempted to leave the courtroom, at which point the Presiding Judge stated:

> Mr Griffiths, please sit down and remain as directed by the Court. If you continue to remain on your feet, and prevent counsel for the Prosecution speaking by doing so, then I will be obliged to consider that your conduct is verging on a contempt.[3]

CONSIDERING that, contrary the express warning of the Presiding Judge, Mr. Griffiths left the court room and absented himself from the proceedings on that day and subsequently did not appear for the Defence closing arguments scheduled for 9 February 2011;

HEREBY, by majority, Justice Sebutinde dissenting;

DIRECTS Lead Counsel for the Accused, Courtenay Griffiths to attend court on Friday 11 February 2011 at 11:30 and warns Lead Counsel that unless he apologises for his behaviour on 8 February 2011 the Trial Chamber may impose sanctions pursuant to Rule 46 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. On 17 December 2010, the Guardian News and Media, Ltd.,[1] published two United States embassy cables relating to the ongoing trial against the Accused at bar, which were leaked through WikiLeaks.[2] The first cable, dated 10 March 2009,[3] makes it clear that the United States Government ("USG") wants to keep Charles Taylor out of Liberia at all costs. Confirming the position of the USG, the United States Ambassador to Liberia, Linda Thomas-Greenfield, states in that cable that "...the best we can do for Liberia is to see to it that Taylor is put away for a long time and we cannot delay for the results of the present trial to consider next steps. All legal options should be studied to ensure that Taylor cannot return to destabilize Liberia".[4] The second cable, dated 15 April 2009,[5] reveals that sensitive information about the trial has been leaked to the United States Embassy in The Hague by unnamed contacts in the Trial Chamber, the Office of the Prosecutor (OTP) and the Registry.[6]

2. On 23 December 2010, a Liberian newspaper, the New Democrat, published an article titled, "Sorry for the Leaks: Pres. Sirleaf Acknowledges US Ambassador's Apology".[7] Therein, it states that Liberian President Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf says the United States Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield has "apologized for the WikiLeaks classified cables emanating from the American embassy regarding key political developments".

3. The Defence seeks permission to re-open its case for the limited purpose of seeking admission of the following documents into evidence pursuant to Rule 92*bis*:

Ms. Thomas-Greenfield was reacting to public statements made by then Special Court prosecutor, Stephen Rapp, regarding funding shortfalls at the Court. References by Ms. Thomas-Greenfield to the results of "the present trial" were to the outcome of the trial at bar. No reference was made by Ms. Thomas-Greenfield to the Accused's guilt or innocence regarding any alleged crimes in Sierra Leone.

a) portions of the March 2009 cable;[8]

b) the entirety of the April 2009 cable; and

c) the first paragraph of the New Democrat Apology article.

4. The documents meet the requirements of Rule 92*bis* and are relevant to the Defence theory of selective prosecution, in that the prosecution of Mr. Taylor was politically-motivated and deliberately designed to keep the Accused out of West Africa.

5. The Defence simultaneously files a Motion for Disclosure and/or Investigation of United States Government Sources within the Trial Chamber, the Prosecution and the Registry Based on Leaked USG Cables.[9] The Defence incorporates all of the arguments made therein, especially with regard to Section II, "Background".

6. The Defence seeks urgent adjudication of this matter given the advanced stage of the proceedings and the current filing schedule for the Final Brief submissions.[10] The Defence attempted to file this motion during the judicial recess on 31 December 2010,[11] but was refused permission by the Registry[12] and subsequently by the President.[13]

II. APPLICABLE LAW

7. United Nations Security Council Resolution 1315 (2000), which called for the creation of the Special Court, emphasized "the importance of ensuring the impartiality, independence and credibility of the process, in particular with regard to the status of the judges and the prosecutors".[14] Consequently, Articles 13(1) and 15(1) of the Statute unequivocally state that the organs of the Court must act independently and impartially, and without instructions from any Government or other source.[15]

Re-opening of Defence Case

8. The Rules do not contain any provision for a party to re-open its case. However, the Trial Chamber has previously determined that the party seeking to re-open a case must meet a twofold test: "Firstly, the party must meet the threshold test of establishing that the evidence could not, with reasonable diligence, have been obtained and presented during its case-in-chief. Secondly, and if the first prong of the test is met, the probative value of the evidence must not be substantially outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial".[16]

9. The discretionary test, whether the probative value of the material is substantially outweighed, as such, is typically determined by whether it is fair to the accused to admit the material late in the proceedings.[17]

*Admission of Documents pursuant to Rule 92*bis

10. The core requirements of Rule 92*bis* – that the information (of fact, not opinion) sought to be tendered in lieu of oral testimony must be relevant; that the information must not go to proof of the acts and conduct of the accused;[18] and that the reliability of such information must be susceptible of confirmation in due course – are well-established. The Defence respectfully refers to the statement of law pertaining to Rule 92*bis* from the Trial Chamber's recent Rule 92*bis* decision of 5 October 2010.[19]

[18] The disputed aspects of this prohibition, as outlined in the Defence Rule 92*bis* Appeal filed on 10 December 2010, do not arise in the instant request for admission of the Cables, given that any information potentially relating to acts and conduct of the accused and/or his subordinates has been redacted from the March 2009 cable and the Apology.

III. ARGUMENT

The Defence Should be Allowed to Re-open

11. The Trial Chamber should grant the Defence's request to re-open its case for the limited purpose of seeking admission of the Cables and the Apology, pursuant to Rule 92*bis*.

12. The Defence meets the threshold that the evidence could not, with reasonable diligence, have been obtained and presented during its case in chief. The Cables are confidential and classified documents of the USG. The publication of the Apology was in consequence of the leak and publication of the cables. No amount of diligence on the part of the Defence could have resulted in these Cables being disclosed or given to the Defence. It is through sheer luck that the Cables were obtained by the Wikileaks website and published in the Guardian on 17 December 2010, five weeks after the Defence had closed its case.

13. The probative value of the evidence in the Cables is significant and is not outweighed by the need to ensure a fair trial. In fact, the Defence submits that the admission of the evidence contained in the Cables and the Apology is critical to ensuring that Mr. Taylor receives a fair trial. The Cables clearly indicate, inter alia, two things: 1) the USG's desire to ensure that Mr. Taylor does not return to Liberia;[20] and 2) proof that there is and have been contacts between the Trial Chamber, the Prosecution and the Registry, respectively, and agents of the USG outside the official lines of communication.[21] This, it is submitted, raises grave doubts about the independence and impartiality of the Special Court's prosecution of Charles Taylor. Viewed objectively, the evidence could lead to the reasonable conclusion that the indictment and trial of Mr. Taylor by the Special Court is no more than an extension of United States foreign policy interests in West Africa, with there being no genuine connection to any alleged crimes in Sierra Leone.

[20] March 2009 cable, paras. 11, 13 and 14.

[21] April 2009 cable: communication from a source in the Trial Chamber, para. 7 ("one Chamber contact believes that the Trial Chamber could have accelerated the Court's work by excluding extraneous material and arguments"); communications from sources in the Prosecution and Registry, para. 7 ("contacts in the Prosecution and Registry speculate that Justice Sebutinde may have a timing agenda. They think she, as the only African judge, wants to hold the gavel as presiding judge when the Trial Chamber announces the Taylor judgment. Reportedly, her next stint as presiding judge begins in January").

14. Should the Trial Chamber grant the application to re-open the Defence case, there would be limited delays to the trial proceedings, as the Defence does not request any viva voce testimony, but rather the admission of three short documents pursuant to Rule 92*bis*.

*Admission of Documents into Evidence under Rule 92*bis

15. Should the Defence be granted leave to re-open its case for the limited purpose of seeking admission of the redacted March 2009 Cable, the entire April 2009 Cable, and the first paragraph of the Apology, the Defence further submits that all of the documents sought to be tendered meet the requirements of Rule 92*bis*.

16. In terms of relevance, the Cables and the Apology support the Defence position that the prosecution of Mr. Taylor is in fact political and his indictment was deliberately selective.[22] It will be recalled that Lead Defence Counsel submitted during the Defence's opening statement that Mr. Taylor was only indicted and arrested because of the USG's interests and pressure.[23] Mr. Taylor subsequently testified that the USG had a vendetta against him and sought to remove him from power through various means, including by demonizing[24] and destabilizing his government,[25] giving military support to opposition LURD rebels,[26] and working to install Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf as President.[27] Mr. Taylor also testified that the United States also attempted to oust him in furtherance of U.S. commercial interests in the sub-region.[28] Other accounts imply the USG targeted Mr. Taylor because of unsubstantiated evidence linking Liberia to Al Qaeda and the attacks on U.S. Embassies in 1998.[29]

17. When the Prosecution called Hassan Bility, a Liberian journalist, as a witness, the Defence challenged him on the basis that he was acting in cahoots with the United States Government.

[29] See Exhibit D-392, an article written by Douglas Farah, a Washington Post investigative reporter.

During cross-examination of Bility, Lead Defence Counsel suggested that Bility was serving as a spy for the USG during the conflict in Liberia. Bility denied being a spy, but did say he had dinners with political counselors and one human rights officer of the United States Embassy in Monrovia, during which they "talked like friends" and would "share opinions".[30] Bility also cooperated with the United States Government's Federal Bureau of Investigation in its investigations of Charles Taylor and his son, Chucky.[31] Furthermore, while in the hospital, Bility was visited by a US Embassy official whom Bility refused to name (for no appreciable reason) until compelled by the Presiding Judge to do so.[32] Mr. Taylor testified that Bility was an intelligence officer for the United States embassy in Monrovia[33] and Defence Witness DCT-190 subsequently testified that Bility served as a source of information for LURD.[34]

18. In short it is submitted that the contents of the Cables further suggest that the Special Court has been used to pursue "war by other means", thus corrupting international law and justice in pursuit of a particular state's enemy. The Apology generally authenticates the contents of the March 2009 cable. The April 2009 cable exposes the fact that there are persons in the Trial Chamber, the Prosecution and the Registry, giving information to the United States Government, outside the official channels of communication.

19. The reliability of the Cables and the Apology are susceptible of corroboration in due course, in regard to each other and in regard to the evidence already on record, such as that described above.[35] The reliability of the contents is further bolstered by the fact that they emanate from United States diplomatic posts. Furthermore, the Apology as argued above, authenticates the March 2009 Cable.

20. The portions of the Cables and the Apology for which the Defence seeks admission do not go to proof of the acts and conduct of the accused. The selected portions of the March 2009 cable and the Apology have been chosen to ensure that even evidence relating to acts and conduct of alleged subordinates of the accused has been excluded from consideration.

21. Furthermore, the information contained in the Cables are facts as reported by the United States diplomatic personnel and do not constitute opinion evidence. The Defence does not now make any claim as to the veracity of the reported information but simply wants it on record that the information was in fact reported. The New Democrat article containing the apology from the U.S. Ambassador to the Liberian President can in no way be considered opinion evidence.

22. Thus, the selected portions of the Cables and the first paragraph of the Apology meet the requirements of Rule 92*bis* and should be admitted.

V. CONCLUSION & RELIEF REQUESTED

23. Given the seemingly compromised impartiality and independence of the Special Court for Sierra Leone in light of its connection to the USG as alleged herein, the Trial Chamber should allow the Defence to re-open its case and admit the selected portions of the March 2009 cable, the entirety of the April 2009 cable, and the first paragraph of the Apology into evidence pursuant to Rule 92*bis*.

24. The Defence further requests that the issue be considered on an expedited basis, given the advanced stage of the proceedings.

Respectfully Submitted,

Classified By: Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield for Reasons 1.4 (b) a nd (d).

Summary
A US ambassador warns that a cash shortfall could jeopardise the case against the former Sierra Leone president, stirring up old resentments in Sierra Leone and Liberia. Key passages highlighted in yellow.

1. (C) Summary: The recent remarks by Special Court for Sierra Leone prosecutor Stephen Rapp suggesting Charles Taylor may go free because of budgetary reasons caused alarm within the GOL and has emboldened Taylor supporters. Communication inside the Taylor camp remains intact, and those in leadership roles continue to be active and unrepentant. Should Taylor be acquitted in The Hague or given a light sentence, his return to Liberia could tip the balance in a fragile peace. The international community must consider steps should Taylor not be sent to prison for a long time. We should look at the possibility of trying Taylor in the United States. End Summary.

RAPP'S COMMENTS RAISE CONCERN WITHIN THE GOL

---

2. (C) Chief Prosecutor Stephen Rapp's ill considered announcement in the press February 24 that Charles Taylor may walk free because of a supposed budget shortfall for the Special Court for Sierra Leone, where Taylor is presently on trial, made headlines in the local press, and raised anxiety here about Taylor's imminent return. The GOL was alarmed enough that President Sirleaf called Ambassador on February 28 to raise her concerns. Sirleaf pointed out that Liberia's stability remains fragile, and such remarks reverberated throughout the country, as people are still traumatized by Taylor and the war.

3. (C) The press accounts out of The Hague have also emboldened the pro-Taylor factions here, including his extended family members, financiers and National Patriotic Party (NPP) loyalists, raising their hopes that Taylor might be acquitted soon. Despite their rhetoric about "moving on," they have thus far refused to appear before the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) to account for their activities, and those on the UN Sanctions lists continue to request delisting on the basis they have done nothing wrong rather than demonstrating what they have done to provide restitution for their activities.

GOL TREADING CAREFULLY WITH TAYLOR FACTIONS

4. (C) The government itself is caught in the middle. There is quite little the GOL can do legally to arrest, prosecute or freeze assets of those who were close to Taylor, even if the political will were there, which remains an open question. The TRC has recommended a domestic war crimes court be set up, but under statute an Independent National Commission on Human Rights (INHCR) would implement the recommendation, and the Legislature (some of whom had close ties to Taylor) has thus far failed to establish the INCHR. The Legislature has also refused to pass any law that would allow the GOL to freeze assets of those on the UN sanctions list, and the Supreme Court has ruled that any confiscation of property can be done only after a trial.

5. (C) The Accra Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA) of August 2003 that ended the 14-year civil war, did not require the NPP to disband and in fact permitted the NPP to participate in the transitional government and in the 2005 elections. The NPP now holds seven seats in the Legislature (which may be one reason the legislation is being blocked). As well, none of Taylor's properties have been seized by the government and they remain in good shape and remarkably free of squatters, as no one dares to take the risk of retribution.

COMMUNICATIONS AMONG TAYLOR SUPPORTERS REMAIN STRONG

---

6. (C) The pro-Taylor forces still have the ability to organize themselves. An NPP rally in December 2008 gathered a sizeable crowd, and Taylor supporters in June 2008 succeeded in preventing FBI investigators from entering Taylor's residence "White Flower" to obtain evidence for the Chucky Taylor trial in Florida. The most recent example was their effort on March 7 to disrupt the International Women's Colloquium. Taylor remains popular within many rural communities, especially in Bong, Lofa and Nimba counties, and is seen as someone who was able to unite Liberia's different ethnic groups. We also suspect there is some sympathy within the Americo-Liberian population who saw him as their deliverance from their losses following the 1979 coup. While we do not suggest they would want Taylor to return, we are sure that they do no want too many rocks to be turned over.

7. (C) Although we do not have any direct evidence to support the belief that pro-Taylor factions are behind much of the armed robbery on the premise that crime will keep the government weak and the country unstable, the GOL is certainly convinced of this, and has taken steps to counteract the threat. The most recent act was to put Taylor-era head of police Paul Mulbah into the LNP as an "advisor" that some accuse (and the government denies) was in order to placate the Taylor people in advance of the March 7-8 International Women's Colloquium. That the Taylor crowd can still motivate such a reaction in the government is a testament to their influence.

8. (C) Lines of communications within Taylor's faction, the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL) remain intact. To be sure, the disarmament of the factions following the CPA has been extremely successful, and we have thus far been unable to confirm the existence of any large weapons caches, despite the persistent rumors. But the reintegration of the ex-combatants is far from complete. Former NPFL commanders Roland Duo (the only senior Taylor supporter to have testified before the TRC), Christopher "General Mosquito" Vambo and Melvin Sogbandi (none of whom are on the sanctions lists) remain in contact with the ex-combatants, and would have the capability to organize an uprising or even criminal activity.

9. (C) Certainly, the same is true for the other factions, the Liberians United for Reconciliation and Democracy (LURD) and the Movement for Democracy in Liberia (MODEL). While apparently unarmed and not active in Liberia, we continue to receive reports that LURD is recruiting ex-combatants for militias in Guinea and MODEL is doing the same for Cote d'Ivoire.

THREAT OF TAYLOR'S RETURN ADVANCES THEIR CAUSE

10. (C) XXXXXXXXXXXX

11. (C) The threat of a return of Taylor strengthens their hand and for now they see no need to give in at all. However, if Taylor is put away for a long time, the government may feel a bit bolder in recovering assets and bringing Taylor backers who committed war crimes to justice.

12. (C) The international community has just a few tools to pressure the Taylor people into accepting the new reality. The UN sanctions appear to have the intended effect of keeping them somewhat marginalized and fearful of further attempts to strip them of their ill-gotten gains. However, we have regularly heard of travel outside Liberia of those on the travel ban list without prior approval.

NEXT STEPS FOR THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY

13. (C) However, the best we can do for Liberia is to see to it that Taylor is put away for a long time and we cannot delay for the results of the present trial to consider next steps. All legal options should be studied to ensure that Taylor cannot return to destabilize Liberia. Building a case in the United States against Taylor for financial crimes such as wire fraud would probably be the best route. There may be other options, such as applying the new law criminalizing the use of child soldiers or terrorism statutes.

14. (C) The peace in Liberia remains fragile, and its only guarantee is the robust and adaptable UNMIL presence. The GOL does not have the ability to quell violence, monitor its borders or operate independently to fight crime. A free Taylor could tip the balance in the wrong direction. THOMAS-GREENFIELD

Summary

US officials wonder why a special court judge might be interested in slowing down the prosecution case against the former Sierra Leonean president. Key passages highlighted in yellow.

-- SUMMARY: SCSL MEETS A KEY MILESTONE, BUT FACES UNCERTAINTY IN TERMS OF TIMING, FINANCES, AND COMPLETION ISSUES --

1. (SBU) On February 27, 2009, the Special Court for Sierra Leone (SCSL or Court) took another step toward completing its work when the Prosecution rested its case against former Liberian President Charles Taylor -- the last SCSL case at the trial stage. The Court could potentially complete its work before the end of 2010. A number of open issues, however, may affect timing, including the start date and length of the Taylor Defense case. Timing may be particularly important given expected funding shortfalls and the possible loss of courtroom space this coming September. Additionally, the current Registrar, Herman von Hebel (Netherlands), has resigned effective June 1, and his successor will inherit a host of difficult issues and a complex transition during the final days of the Court,s operations.

--BACKGROUND: A SMALL COURT WITH SEVERAL FIRSTS --

2. (U) A Trailblazing Court. The hybrid SCSL, created in 2002 through an agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone (GOSL) and funded entirely by voluntary contributions, has jurisdiction over those who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in Sierra Leone after November 30, 1996. Although established almost ten years after the creation of the International Criminal Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda (ICTY and ICTR), the SCSL is poised to complete its work before these tribunals. The SCSL has also been the first internationalized criminal tribunal to: 1) issue an indictment for an African head of state (Liberian President Charles Taylor); 2) enter convictions for the crime of recruiting and using child soldiers; and 3) successfully prosecute forced marriage as a crime against humanity and intentional attacks on U.N. peacekeepers as a serious violation of international humanitarian law.

3. (U) Last Trial Standing. In 2003, the SCSL indicted Charles Taylor, the leader of the National Patriotic Front of Liberia from 1989 to 1997 and the President of Liberia from 1997 until the 2003 indictment. The indictment alleges Taylor,s deep involvement in the Sierra Leone conflict including his role in arming, training and acting in concert with the RUF and in trafficking the Sierra Leonean &blood diamonds8 that fueled and financed the fighting. The SCSL charged Taylor with eleven counts, including, inter alia, terrorizing the civilian population, unlawful killings, sexual violence, abductions and forced labor, and conscripting child soldiers.

))TIMING: TAYLOR TRIAL'S LINK TO CLOSING SCSL))

4. (SBU) Status of Trial. As the only ongoing SCSL trial, the Taylor trial is the linchpin to the SCSL completing its work. From April 6-9, 2009, the Court held the &judgment of acquittal8 hearing, with Defense arguing for acquittal on all of the charges. (Comment: In the &judgment of acquittal8 hearing, the Court considers whether Prosecution Qacquittal8 hearing, the Court considers whether Prosecution has presented any evidence that could sustain conviction on the charges, acquitting only if Prosecution has presented &no evidence8 to sustain the charge. End Comment.) In this hearing, Defense acknowledged that crimes had occurred in Sierra Leone but argued that the Prosecution had failed to 1) present evidence linking Taylor to those crimes and 2)establish that Taylor had been part of a joint criminal enterprise (JCE) because, if a JCE existed, it existed before November 30, 1996, the date at which the temporal jurisdiction of the SCSL begins. The Prosecution responded to these arguments by summarizing Taylor,s responsibility for the crimes and pointing to Taylor,s liability for JCE crimes committed after November 30, 1996, even if the planning of the JCE took place before that date. (Comment: The Court will most likely not issue its Rule 98 decision in April, especially since the Judges may recess through May. An acquittal does not seem likely. End Comment.)

5. (SBU) Next Up: Defense Case. A contact in the Registry has indicated that Defense will likely request three months to prepare for trial and four months to present its case. If the Court grants this request, the Defense case may start at the end of August. However, the same Registry source predicts that the Trial Chamber may order Defense to begin its case as early as June, working through July and August with a possible recess in September. One wild-card factor, however, is the Defense,s pending interlocutory appeal arguing that the Prosecution failed to properly plead the JCE theory of liability. The Trial Chamber may not schedule the Defense case before the appeals decision so the Defense knows which mode(s) of liability it must defend against. (Comment: Currently, the Registry,s budget milestone document projects an October 31 trial termination date, a March 2010 judgment, sentencing in April 2010, and the conclusion of appeals in October 2010. If, however, the Defense case starts in August, the timeline could be pushed back by approximately two months. End Comment.)

6. (U) Spill-Over Timing Effects. A delay in the timing for the Taylor trial may create additional challenges. First, the International Criminal Court (ICC), the location of the Taylor trial, has informed the SCSL that it will need its second courtroom as of September 2009. (The ICC scheduled its second trial to start September 24th, and will likely need the courtroom prior to September 24th for pre-trial work). Back-up options explored by the Registry include finding other space or working during gaps in the ICC schedule. Second, according to Registry sources, each additional month of trial time costs approximately one million dollars.

))THE JUDICIAL FACTOR))

7. (C) Judges Slowing Things Down? Further muddying timing predictions, Court employees have intimated that the Trial Chamber could work more expeditiously. The Taylor Chamber consists of three judges who take turns presiding: Justice Richard Lussick (Samoa), Justice Teresa Doherty (Northern Ireland) and Justice Julia Sebutinde (Uganda), along with an alternate judge, Justice El Hadji Malick Sow (Senegal). A couple of Court employees have grumbled that when the last Prosecution witness testified on January 30, 2009, the Court still had 11 outstanding motions, some over a year old. Additionally, one Chamber contact believes that the Trial Chamber could have accelerated the Court,s work by excluding extraneous material and arguments. Moreover, contacts in Prosecution and Registry speculate that Justice Sebutinde may have a timing agenda. They think she, as the only African judge, wants to hold the gavel as presiding judge when the Trial Chamber announces the Taylor judgment. Reportedly, her next stint as presiding judge begins in January.

8. (SBU) Expedited Appeals? The Appeals Chamber, with one empty seat, consists of President Renate Winter (Austria); Vice President Jon Kamanda (Sierra Leone); Justice George Gelaga King (Sierra Leone); and Justice Emmanuel Ayoola (Nigeria). President Winter reportedly has indicated that the Appeals Chamber intends to expedite any Taylor trial Qthe Appeals Chamber intends to expedite any Taylor trial appeals. Up for election in May, Winter may not, however, preside over the Appeals Chamber for any Taylor trial appeals, reportedly she will step down after the RUF appeal if she is not re-elected President.

))DEFENSE STRATEGY: WHO ME?))

9. (SBU) Drama-Bound Defense Case. A British Queen,s Counsel, Courtenay Griffiths, heads Charles Taylor,s top-notch and quick-tongued defense team, which reportedly finds itself in the midst of identifying and proofing witnesses. All signs indicate that Taylor himself will take the stand as their first witness possibly staying in the box for 6 to 8 weeks, and based on Defense,s actions to date, the Defense team will likely argue that although the crimes may have occurred, Taylor has no link to the crimes.

))AN IMMINENT BUDGET CRISIS))

10. (C) Funding Shortfall. The Registry fears that the Court will run out of money as early as next month, although an expected Canadian USD 6 million contribution would keep the Court financed until early July 2009. In a marathon campaign, Registrar Von Hebel attended 250 meetings in 15 months to drum up funds from potential donor countries, but with, according Von Hebel, little traction, due to donor fatigue, the difficult economic situation, and contributions going to other tribunals (e.g., the Special Tribunal for Lebanon (STL) or the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia). Von Hebel wants to make another run at the Arab countries of Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Kuwait, and the United Arab Emirates. He also believes that a letter from U.N. Secretary General Ban Ki-Moon asking countries to contribute might help open wallets. According to Von Hebel, when Ban sent out a similar letter in 2007, a number of countries made first-time donations. In addition, a couple of traditional donor countries have advised him they may need a similar letter in order to donate this year.

11. (U) Cost-cutting Measures: Concerned about the looming financial crisis, the Registry has undertaken cost-saving measures, reducing staffing costs by downsizing, incorporating liquidation clauses in contracts, and encouraging The Hague staff to use leave during the break between prosecution and defense cases. The Registry also plans to hand over the Freetown facilities to the GOSL in July 2010, reserving some space for its own continued use. Finally, Registry may look to consolidate the Appeals Chamber and the Taylor trial operations in The Hague, after the Appeals Chamber finalizes the RUF appeal.

12. (SBU) Help from Washington. The Registry may also seek USG,s assistance on financial issues. First, it may press the USG not to reduce its FY2009 contribution by 2 million, but to stay at last year,s level of 9 million USD. (Comment: The extra sum would not solve the Court,s immediate financial problem, since the USG generally contributes in the fall. End Comment.) Second, the Registry may ask for USG political support in the form of demarches to Arab countries, impressing upon the targeted Arab countries the critical nature of the SCSL,s financial situation.

))COMPLETION HICCUPS AND ISSUES))

13. (SBU) Registrar Musical Chairs. On April 8, 2009, the Court announced Registrar von Hebel,s resignation, effective as of June 1, 2009. Von Hebel will assume the Deputy Registrar position at the newly established Hague-based STL. (According to Embassy contacts, STL offered Von Hebel the position at the insistence of and to placate the Dutch, who believe the Dutch ICTY Registrar had been treated unfairly when the ICTY President unexpectedly declined to renew his contract). Given that the STL Registrar Robin Vincent (U.K.) recently resigned, Von Hebel may eventually step into Vincent,s shoes. Von Hebel is also tying up as many SCSL loose ends as possible, including signing a sentence-enforcement agreement with the Government of Rwanda. In terms of a successor Registrar, a Registry contact believes that the current Deputy Registrar Binta Mansaray (Sierra Leone) will surface as a strong candidate.

))COMMENT: RESIDUAL ISSUES))

14. (SBU) A Larger Role for The Hague? Although currently headquartered in Freetown, Sierra Leone, the Registry has toyed with the possibility of locating any Residual Mechanism Qtoyed with the possibility of locating any Residual Mechanism) or parts thereof) in The Hague. For instance, Von Hebel believes that the Court may need to move its archives out of Sierra Leone in order to properly maintain and secure them. The City of The Hague has indicated its willingness to provide archiving facilities in connection with the ICTY,s closure. Some have also suggested combining some or part of the SCSL,s residual functions with those of The Hague-based ICTY and the Arusha-based ICTR. A combined residual mechanism might prevent duplication, but it would also face significant hurdles, given SCSL,s structural differences, e.g. funding, oversight mechanism and applicable legal framework. Furthermore, GOSL desires will be key, since a joint GOSL-UN agreement created the Court.

He blamed the huge gap between the "richly endowed" natural resources and their utilization to produce goods and services in Liberia as the main cause of underdevelopment in the country.

It said Kouwenhoven was sentenced to eight years imprisonment for illegal arms trading in 2007. The landmark decision was one of the few instances of an individual being held to account in their own country for crimes allegedly committed in another. Global Witness first documented the involvement of Kouwenhoven in state-sanctioned illegal logging and arms trafficking in its 2001 report, Taylor Made, and later testified before the court and submitted extensive evidence supporting the prosecution's case.

The release: Kouwenhoven was head of the Oriental Timber Corporation (OTC) during the regime of President Charles Taylor, who waged a brutal war against the people of Liberia and Sierra Leone, funded largely through the sale of diamonds and illegal logging. OTC, also known as 'Old Taylor's Children' or 'Only Taylor Chops', was the most notorious logging company in the country and dominated the Liberian timber industry with 1.6 million hectares of concessions.

Kouwenhoven's sentence was overturned in 2008 by the Appeals Court. However, this appeal was quashed in April 2010 by the Supreme Court, which sent the case back to the Appeals Court – where the hearing starts today.

Goods and food commodities flooding the Liberian market are imported mainly from faraway Asian countries and the Indian subcontinent.

...the UN Security Council ex... tended the mandate of its peacekeeping mission in Cote d'Ivoire, initially due to expire on Dec. 31, to June 30, 2011.

The Council rejected Gbagbo's presidential order for UN and foreign troops to leave the country where the UN has more than 10,000 troops.

Meanwhile, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) announced on Tuesday that it would hold an emergency summit on the situation in Cote d'Ivoire on Friday. The regional body said in a statement reported by Xinhua that ECOWAS Heads of State and Government will be discussing the developments in Cote d'Ivoire.

The ECOWAS Commission said it has learnt with surprise and disappointment, the ultimatum issued by the outgoing President of Cote d'Ivoire, Gbagbo, to UNOCI, the UN Peacekeeping Mission, and the French Forces, Licorne, to leave the country immediately. "ECOWAS wishes to state that the ultimatum, far from helping the situation, would further heighten tensions and worsen the plight of the vulnerable in the country," the body said. "The Commission calls on the outgoing President to desist from his stand-off with the peacekeeping forces but rather to join in the effort in seeking ways of creating an environment of peace and security in the country," it added.

After the men were convicted of armed robbery, they rejected their fate by challenging police in fisticuffs in the full glare of Judge Gilayeneh, lawyers from both sides, and spectators, degenerating the courtroom into momentary chaos.

The men rejected the jurors' verdict arguing that a co-defendant was used as witness against them.

They also accused prosecutors of injustice by entering into a 'deal' with the codefendant as witness.

DECLARATION OF JUSTICE JULIA SEBUTINDE

1. For the reasons set out below, it is my considered opinion that it would be in the interests of justice for me to voluntarily withdraw myself from a decision on this Motion. The USG Code Cable contained in Annex B of the Motion involves a statement that un-named "sources in the Prosecution, Chambers and the Registry" of the Special Court allegedly made certain specific allegations against me.

2. In the Motion, the Defence requests an investigation into the contacts or sources in the Court who made these allegations. Indeed, the Defence has observed that "[t]he only sign of how seriously some members of this Court have taken the matter is through the personal response of Justice Julia Sebutinde to the allegations in one of the cables which impinge on her integrity, as reported in the media".[1]

3. I declare that while I am completely innocent of the allegations contained in the USG Code Cable and consider myself to be impartial and free of bias in relation to the issues at stake in this Motion, it is my considered view that in order for justice to be seen to be done, I should not participate in the deliberations or decision relating to this Motion.

4. Accordingly, I voluntarily withdraw from participating in the deliberations and the Decision on this Motion.

Done at The Hague, The Netherlands, this 26th day of January 2011.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. On 17 December 2010, the Guardian News and Media, Ltd.,[1] published two United States embassy cables relating to the ongoing trial against the Accused at bar, which were leaked through WikiLeaks.[2] The first cable, dated 10 March 2009,[3] makes it clear that the United States Government ("USG") wants to keep Charles Taylor out of Liberia at all costs. Confirming the position of the USG, the United States Ambassador to Liberia, Linda Thomas-Greenfield, states in that cable that "...the best we can do for Liberia is to see to it that Taylor is put away for a long time and we cannot delay for the results of the present trial to consider next steps. All legal options should be studied to ensure that Taylor cannot return to destabilize Liberia".[4] The second cable, dated 15 April 2009,[5] reveals that sensitive information about the trial has been leaked to the United States Embassy in The Hague by unnamed contacts in the Trial Chamber, the Office of the Prosecutor (OTP) and the Registry.[6]
2. On 23 December 2010, a Liberian newspaper, the New Democrat, published an article titled, "Sorry for the Leaks: Pres. Sirleaf Acknowledges US Ambassador's Apology".[7] Therein, it states that Liberian President Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf says the United States Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield has "apologized for the WikiLeaks classified cables emanating from the American embassy regarding key political developments".
3. Based on these Cables, the Apology, and other available information, there is an inescapable and axiomatic concern that the impartiality and the independence of the Court may have been compromised. No third party should be privy to such sensitive information about the trial. No third party should have secret sources in all three organs of the Court.[8] The disclosures in

Ms. Thomas-Greenfield was reacting to public statements made by then Special Court prosecutor, Stephen Rapp, regarding funding shortfalls at the Court. References by Ms. Thomas-Greenfield to the results of "the present trial" were to the outcome of the trial at bar. No reference was made by Ms. Thomas-Greenfield to the Accused's guilt or innocence regarding any alleged crimes in Sierra Leone.

[6] The April 2009 cable is at: http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/us-embassy-cables-documents/202468 [Annex B]. Sensitive comments, inter alia, relate to the pace and efficiency of the trial, as well as funding and personnel issues.

[8] Article 11 of the Court's Statute lists its three organs as being (i) the Chambers, (ii) the Prosecutor, and (iii) the Registry.

these Cables, in no small measure, place the integrity of the Court itself on trial, and the Court would have failed (regardless of whatever verdict it ultimately renders) if it is not seen to have been fair, or if it appears that the hidden hand of a third party influenced the proceedings. The Defence submits that the leakage of sensitive information to the USG by multiple officers of the Court suggests that the impartial and independent administration of justice has been interfered with and must be investigated.

4. For these and other obvious reasons, the Defence seeks immediate disclosure by the Prosecution and the Registry of the USG contact(s) within their respective organs, as well as the nature and extent of the relationship and the information that has been exchanged between the contact(s) and the USG. If either organ is unable or unwilling to fully disclose the requested information, the Defence requests that the Trial Chamber order an independent investigation to determine the identity of the sources and the nature and extent of their relationship with the USG, pursuant to its inherent powers and Rule 54 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.

5. Likewise, and in respect of the USG contact within the Chambers,[9] the Defence invokes the Court's inherent powers and Rule 54 in requesting that the Court commission an immediate and independent inquiry within its own quarters to determine the identity of the contact and the nature and extent of their relationship with the USG. The results of that internal inquiry should thereafter be made available to the parties and are sought through this motion.

6. The Defence seeks urgent adjudication of this matter given the advanced stage of the proceedings and the current filing schedule for the Final Brief submissions.[10] The Defence attempted to file this motion during the judicial recess on 31 December 2010,[11] but was refused permission by the Registry[12] and subsequently by the President.[13]

II. BACKGROUND

7. The USG has always politically and financially sponsored the arrest, prosecution and conviction of the Accused. The USG has also contributed significant if not strategic personnel to the Court. Three of the Special Court's four Prosecutors (David M. Crane, Stephen Rapp, and Brenda J. Hollis), as well as the Court's first Chief of Investigations (Dr. Alan White) and the Court's Chief of Prosecutions (James C. Johnson), are Americans who have been employed by the USG prior and/ or subsequent to their respective tenures as high-level employees of the Special Court.[14]

8. On 8 February 2006, then Special Court prosecutor, David M. Crane, appeared before the Subcommittee on Africa, Global Human Rights and International Operations of the United States House of Representatives' Committee on International Relations. A copy of his address and his written speech are contained in Exhibit D-404, and some portions of his address were quoted during the Defence's Opening Statement on 13 July 2009.[15] Crane's remarks provide clear evidence of the USG's intention to convict Mr. Taylor through the auspices of the Special Court in order to keep him out of Liberia, using whatever monetary and political pressure that is necessary. Crane explained that the USG had decided that if Nigeria (who was hosting Mr. Taylor in exile at the time) did not turn Mr. Taylor over to the Special Court, the United States would not give any further monetary assistance to the Nigerian Government.[16] Crane also highlighted his fear that Taylor would return to Liberia from exile, stating that the United States must "...hand Charles Taylor over to the Special Court for Sierra Leone for a fair trial. This takes him out of the local and regional dynamic [14] David M. Crane, the Special Court's first Prosecutor, and Dr. Alan White, the Special Court's first Chief of Investigations, worked in the United States Department of Defence for more 30 years [Annex F, available at: http://turtlebay.foreignpolicy.com/posts/2010/02/24/guinea_s_junta_hires_ex_war_crimes_prosecutors_and_gets_a_favorable_report]. Stephen Rapp, the Special Court's third Prosecutor, was previously a U.S. Attorney and left the Court after he was appointed U.S. Ambassador at Large for War Crimes [Annex G, available at: http://www.state.gov/r/pa/ei/biog/129455.htm]. Brenda J. Hollis, the Special Court's fourth and present Prosecutor served in the United States Air Force as an intelligence officer and Judge Advocate before being seconded by the U.S. Government to the ICTY and starting her career in international criminal law [Annex H, available in full at: http://globetrotter.berkeley.edu/people/Hollis/hollis-con0.html]. James C. Johnson, presently the Chief of Prosecutions, but with the Special Court since January 2003, served in the United States Army for 20 years, taught at the U.S. Army Judge Advocate General's School, and served as a prosecutor and international / operational law advisor to conventional and special operations units [Annex I, available at: http://www.roberthjackson.org/the-center/events/international-humanitarian-law-dialogs/ihld-2010/james-c-johnson/].

that is West Africa".[17] Crane further stated that he had given a copy of Taylor's Indictment to the U.S. Assistant Secretary of State and the U.S. Ambassador to Sierra Leone at a breakfast meeting two months before the Indictment was officially unsealed in June 2003.[18] Crane acknowledged that during his tenure as Prosecutor, the OTP had developed an "information asset system" and passed along information gleaned through that system to appropriate governments and law enforcement agencies, no doubt including those of the United States and Liberian Governments.[19]

9. Furthermore, Crane declared that the United States has been the biggest financial contributor to the Special Court.[20] The United States is also on the Special Court's United Nations-sponsored Management Committee.[21] Crane further stated that the United States had given undisclosed sums of money directly to the OTP,[22] in addition to, and separate from, its contributions to the Court as a whole.[23]

10. It will be recalled that Lead Defence Counsel submitted during the Defence's opening statement that Mr. Taylor was only indicted and arrested because of the USG's interests and [18] Exhibit D-404, p. 79, FN 10. A copy of the Taylor Indictment was given to U.S. Ambassador at Large for War Crimes Issues as well, but it is not clear when this happened.

[19] Exhibit D-404, p. 81, FN 25. Footnote 25 reads "[a]ll of this information has been passed to appropriate governments and law enforcement agencies." While it does not expressly mention the USG, the context of the remarks and appearance by Crane make exceedingly clear that the USG is one of the governments in question. The Defence further recalls allegations included in an affidavit filed as Confidential Annex D of the Defence Contempt Motion, which stated that a potential witness had been arrested for treason by the Liberian National Security Agency on the basis of information given to the NSA by "'their friends in the sub-Region', the Prosecution for the Special Court of Sierra Leone". See Prosecutor v. Taylor, SCSL-03-01-T-1090, Public with Confidential Annexes A-J and Public Annexes K-O Defence Motion Requesting an Investigation into Contempt of Court by the Office of the Prosecution and its Investigators, 27 September 2010 ("Defence Contempt Motion").

[21] The Management Committee is set up in accordance with Article 7 of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone on the Establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, dated 16 January 2002 ("SCSL Establishment Agreement"), stating that the Management Committee "shall consist of important contributors to the Special Court" and will "assist the [UN] Secretary-General in obtaining adequate funding, and provide advice and policy direction on all non-judicial aspects of the operation of the Court, including questions of efficiency..." (emphasis added).

See also, Defence Opening Statement, p. 24294.

[23] The Defence notes, for example, the Budget Summary of the OTP and its budgeted Operational Costs for 2009-2011, and queries whether money donated directly to it by the USG is included in such sums, or if this is purely representative of Registry funds distributed to the OTP. See, Seventh Annual Report of the President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, for the period June 2009 to May 2010, "Completion Strategy and Completion Budget" [Annex L, available in full at: http://www.sc-sl.org/LinkClick.aspx?fileticket=33ryoRsKMjI%3d&tabid=176].

pressure.[24] Mr. Taylor subsequently testified that the USG had a vendetta against him and sought to remove him from power through various means, including by demonizing[25] and destabilizing his government,[26] giving military support to opposition LURD rebels[27] (a contention confirmed by prosecution witness and former Liberian Vice-President Moses Blah),[28] and working to install Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf as President.[29] Mr. Taylor also testified that the United States was attempting to oust him in furtherance of U.S. commercial interests in the sub-region.[30] Other accounts imply the USG targeted Mr. Taylor because of unsubstantiated evidence linking Liberia to Al Qaeda and the attacks on U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998.[31]

11. The published Cables provide further insight into this relationship between the OTP and the USG. They also disclose and give fresh insights into what appear to be equally close relationships between the USG and source(s) within Chambers and the Registry, with the clear implication being that the USG has successfully infiltrated all organs of the Court.

III. APPLICABLE LAW

Impartiality and Independence of the Tribunal

12. The notion that courts of law, including international criminal tribunals, must be impartial and independent is ensconced in principles of natural justice as well as international criminal law jurisprudence. The Accused has a fundamental right to be tried before an independent and impartial tribunal. Indeed, this is an integral component of his fair trial rights.[32]

13. United Nations Security Council Resolution 1315 (2000), which called for the creation of the Special Court, emphasized "the importance of ensuring the impartiality, independence and credibility of the process, in particular with regard to the status of the judges and the prosecutors". The Statute unequivocally states that the organs of the Court must act independently and impartially, and without instructions from any Government or other source. This prohibits, it is submitted, any member or organ of the Court from disseminating or sharing with outside third parties, any sensitive information which may undermine the integrity of the Court or its proceedings. The Registry, under Article 16 of the Statute, is the official channel of communication with respect to all information relating to the Court properly for public consumption. All officers of the Court are enjoined from conducting themselves in any manner that undermines the integrity of the Court.

14. Article 13(1) of the Statute states: "The judges shall be persons of high moral character, impartiality and integrity … They shall be independent in the performance of their functions, and shall not accept or seek instructions from any Government or any other source." By extention and subject to the necessary changes, this must also apply to legal officers and other employees who are in Chambers and enjoy the confidence of the judges.

15. Article 15(1) of the Statute states: "The Prosecutor shall act independently as a separate organ of the Special Court. He or she shall not seek or receive instructions from any Government or from any other source".[33] Trial Chamber I has opined that "Article 15(1) reinforces, in unambiguous terms, an internationally accepted norm governing the exercise of prosecutorial authority, in International Criminal Tribunals, namely autonomy and independence".[34] The duty to act independently, by necessary extention, must also apply to all members of the OTP, including support staff and investigators.[35]

16. On the one hand, the Defence appreciates that while the Special Court or any of its organs may not seek nor receive instructions from governments or other entities, it may seek assistance from the same.[36] On the other hand, the distinctions between the two – seeking

[33] Similar language is found in Article 3(3) of the SCSL Establishment Agreement (stating "The Prosecutor and the Deputy Prosecutor shall be independent in the performance of their functions and shall not accept or seek instructions from any Government or any other source").

[35] See, for instance, Article 28 of the Code of Professional Conduct for Counsel with the Right of Audience before the Special Court for Sierra Leone, as amended on 13 May 2006, which states that counsel shall be held responsible for the misconduct of other members of his team in certain circumstances.

[36] See, for e.g.,, Rule 8(C) which allows the Special Court to invite States to provide assistance on the basis of an ad hoc arrangement or any other appropriate basis. Also, Rule 39(iii) gives the Prosecutor the power to seek the assistance versus the prohibition against receiving instructions – are clear and obvious and must be respected.

Disclosure and/or Investigation

17. The Trial Chamber has the inherent power and duty to ensure that proceedings are fair and impartial. Rule 26*bis* mandates that the Chamber "shall ensure that a trial is fair and expeditious and that proceedings before the Special Court are conducted in accordance with the Agreement, the Statute and the Rules, with full respect for the rights of the accused..." That Rule and others, such as Rule 54 (which vests the Trial Chamber with the power to "issue orders... as may be necessary for the purposes of an investigation or for the preparation or conduct of the trial"), confirm that inherent in the Rules is clear recognition that a Chamber has inherent powers to oversee and regulate the conduct of proceedings before it.

18. Accordingly, this Court has the inherent power to order the Prosecution and the Registry to disclose information which stands to undermine the integrity and impartiality of the proceedings, and/ or to order an investigation into the same. The same applies with equal force to the obligation of the Trial Chamber to investigate, in appropriate circumstances, any one or more of its members.[36]

IV. ARGUMENT

19. The Cables and the Apology clearly indicate, inter alia, two things: 1) the USG's desire to ensure that Mr. Taylor not return to Liberia;[37] and 2) proof that there is and have been contacts between the Trial Chamber, the OTP and the Registry, respectively, and agents of the USG outside the official lines of communication.[38] This, it is submitted, raises serious

---

[36] Compare, for example, the Defence's instant request for the Trial Chamber to investigate the leak within its own quarters, to Defence requests at the ICTR for disclosure from a Judge of material or information in the possession of the Judge which is capable of demonstrating actual bias or the appearance of bias. Karemera et al v Prosecutor, ICTR-98-44-AR73.15, Decision on Joseph Nzirorera's Appeal Against a Decision of Trial Chamber III Denying the Disclosure of a Copy of the Presiding Judge's Written Assessment of a Member of the Prosecution Team, 5 May 2009, para. 11 (deeming such requests appropriate and not frivolous).

[37] March 2009 cable, paras. 11, 13 and 14.

[38] April 2009 cable: communication from a source in the Trial Chamber, para. 7 ("one Chamber contact believes that the Trial Chamber could have accelerated the Court's work by excluding extraneous material and arguments"); communications from sources in the Prosecution and Registry, para. 7 ("contacts in the Prosecution and Registry speculate that Justice Sebutinde may have a timing agenda. They think she, as the only African judge, wants to hold the gavel as presiding judge when the Trial Chamber announces the Taylor judgment. Reportedly, her next stint as presiding judge begins in January").

doubts about the independence and impartiality of the Special Court's prosecution of Charles Taylor. Viewed objectively and reasonably, evidence suggests that the indictment and trial of Mr. Taylor by the Special Court is no more than an extension of U.S. foreign policy interests in West Africa, with there being no connection to any alleged crimes in Sierra Leone.

20. This is even more so when the Cables are considered in the greater context of the operation of the Special Court, which was created and funded in large part by the American Government. As indicated earlier, American personnel have also held very important positions in the Prosecution. The OTP and its Investigations division has been led by five employees of the USG: David M. Crane and Alan White (U.S. Department of Defence), Stephen Rapp (U.S. Attorney and presently U.S. Ambassador at Large for War Crimes), Brenda J. Hollis (U.S. Air Force intelligence officer and judge advocate), and James C. Johnson (U.S. Army and special operations instructor).[39] Furthermore, and most disturbing in view of the USG's stated position that Mr. Taylor must be tried and kept away from West Africa for a long time, the OTP has received, directly and separate from the contributions by the USG to the Special Court as a whole, undisclosed and unaccounted for sums of money from the USG to support Prosecution operations. The Defence is at a loss as to what covert operations the Prosecution runs on such clandestine funding, suffice to say that this casts serious doubts on the independence of the prosecution of the Accused. Lead Defence Counsel has often called the trial political and Taylor's indictment selective, especially when considered against the decision not to indict similarly-situated Tejan Kabbah.[40] This confluence of factors leads to the possible conclusion that Mr. Taylor is a target of selective prosecution[41] and that the integrity of the trial process is irreparably tainted.

21. The only way to remove any doubt about the independence and impartiality of the tribunal is for the Trial Chamber to order the disclosure of and/or an investigation into the identity of the source(s) within the Trial Chamber, Prosecution and Registry and the full nature of their relationship with the USG. Specifically, this must include an explanation of the context and circumstances within which each of the comments recorded in the Cables were made to representatives of the USG. Furthermore, in the interests of justice, the Trial Chamber should [39] See FN 14 above, and Annexes F-I.

[41] To demonstrate selective prosecution, the Defence must show: i) an improper or unlawful motive for prosecution and ii) that similarly situated persons were not prosecuted. Prosecution v. Delalic et al, IT-96-21-A, Judgement, 20 February 2001, para. 611.

order disclosure of any information tending to suggest that the Prosecution has sought or received instructions from the USG regarding any aspect of the Taylor trial, as well as an explanation and an accounting of the money provided by the USG to the Prosecution. If the parties are unwilling or unable to provide such information forthwith, then the Trial Chamber should order an investigation into the same.

V. CONCLUSION & RELIEF REQUESTED

22. Given the seemingly compromised impartiality and independence of the Special Court for Sierra Leone in light of its connection to the USG as alleged herein, the Trial Chamber must order disclosure and/or and investigation into the following:
    i. the identity of the source(s) within the Trial Chamber, Prosecution and Registry who provided the USG with the information in the Cables;
    ii. the full nature of the respective sources' relationship with the USG, specifically including an explanation of the context and circumstances in which each of the comments recorded in the Cables were made to representatives of the USG;
    iii. information tending to suggest that the Prosecution has sought or received instructions from the USG regarding any aspect of the Taylor trial; and
    iv. a full explanation of the money provided by the USG to the Prosecution, including the amounts of money given and when; the purpose of the funds; how the funds were used; and who the OTP was accountable to in the distribution and use of the funds.

23. The Defence further requests that the issue be considered on an expedited basis, given the advanced stage of the proceedings.

SUBJECT: PRO-TAYLOR ELEMENTS STILL A FORCE TO BE RECKONED WITH Classified By: Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield for Reasons 1.4 (b) a nd (d).

Summary

A US ambassador warns that a cash shortfall could jeopardise the case against the former Sierra Leone president, stirring up old resentments in Sierra Leone and Liberia. Key passages highlighted in yellow.

1. (C) Summary: The recent remarks by Special Court for Sierra Leone prosecutor Stephen Rapp suggesting Charles Taylor may go free because of budgetary reasons caused alarm within the GOL and has emboldened Taylor supporters. Communication inside the Taylor camp remains intact, and those in leadership roles continue to be active and unrepentant. Should Taylor be acquitted in The Hague or given a light sentence, his return to Liberia could tip the balance in a fragile peace. The international community must consider steps should Taylor not be sent to prison for a long time. We should look at the possibility of trying Taylor in the United States. End Summary.

2. (C) Chief Prosecutor Stephen Rapp's ill considered announcement in the press February 24 that Charles Taylor may walk free because of a supposed budget shortfall for the Special Court for Sierra Leone, where Taylor is presently on trial, made headlines in the local press, and raised anxiety here about Taylor's imminent return. The GOL was alarmed enough that President Sirleaf called Ambassador on February 28 to raise her concerns. Sirleaf pointed out that Liberia's stability remains fragile, and such remarks reverberated throughout the country, as people are still traumatized by Taylor and the war.

3. (C) The press accounts out of The Hague have also emboldened the pro-Taylor factions here, including his extended family members, financiers and National Patriotic Party (NPP) loyalists, raising their hopes that Taylor might be acquitted soon. Despite their rhetoric about "moving on," they have thus far refused to appear before the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) to account for their activities, and those on the UN Sanctions lists continue to request delisting on the basis they have done nothing wrong rather than demonstrating what they have done to provide restitution for their activities.

4. (C) The government itself is caught in the middle. There is quite little the GOL can do legally to arrest, prosecute or freeze assets of those who were close to Taylor, even if the political will were there, which remains an open question. The TRC has recommended a domestic war crimes court be set up, but under statute an Independent National Commission on Human Rights (INHCR) would implement the recommendation, and the Legislature (some of whom had close ties to Taylor) has thus far failed to establish the INCHR. The Legislature has also refused to pass any law that would allow the GOL to freeze assets of those on the UN sanctions list, and the Supreme Court has ruled that any confiscation of property can be done only after a trial.

5. (C) The Accra Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA) of August 2003 that ended the 14-year civil war, did not require the NPP to disband and in fact permitted the NPP to participate in the transitional government and in the 2005 elections. The NPP now holds seven seats in the Legislature (which may be one reason the legislation is being blocked). As well, none of Taylor's properties have been seized by the government and they remain in good shape and remarkably free of squatters, as no one dares to take the risk of retribution.

6. (C) The pro-Taylor forces still have the ability to organize themselves. An NPP rally in December 2008 gathered a sizeable crowd, and Taylor supporters in June 2008 succeeded in preventing FBI investigators from entering Taylor's residence "White Flower" to obtain evidence for the Chucky Taylor trial in Florida. The most recent example was their effort on March 7 to disrupt the International Women's Colloquium. Taylor remains popular within many rural communities, especially in Bong, Lofa and Nimba counties, and is seen as someone who was able to unite Liberia's different ethnic groups. We also suspect there is some sympathy within the Americo-Liberian population who saw him as their deliverance from their losses following the 1979 coup. While we do not suggest they would want Taylor to return, we are sure that they do no want too many rocks to be turned over.

7. (C) Although we do not have any direct evidence to support the belief that pro-Taylor factions are behind much of the armed robbery on the premise that crime will keep the government weak and the country unstable, the GOL is certainly convinced of this, and has taken steps to counteract the threat. The most recent act was to put Taylor-era head of police Paul Mulbah into the LNP as an "advisor" that some accuse (and the government denies) was in order to placate the Taylor people in advance of the March 7-8 International Women's Colloquium. That the Taylor crowd can still motivate such a reaction in the government is a testament to their influence.

8. (C) Lines of communications within Taylor's faction, the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL) remain intact. To be sure, the disarmament of the factions following the CPA has been extremely successful, and we have thus far been unable to confirm the existence of any large weapons caches, despite the persistent rumors. But the reintegration of the ex-combatants is far from complete. Former NPFL commanders Roland Duo (the only senior Taylor supporter to have testified before the TRC), Christopher "General Mosquito" Vambo and Melvin Sogbandi (none of whom are on the sanctions lists) remain in contact with the ex-combatants, and would have the capability to organize an uprising or even criminal activity.

9. (C) Certainly, the same is true for the other factions, the Liberians United for Reconciliation and Democracy (LURD) and the Movement for Democracy in Liberia (MODEL). While apparently unarmed and not active in Liberia, we continue to receive reports that LURD is recruiting ex-combatants for militias in Guinea and MODEL is doing the same for Cote d'Ivoire.

THREAT OF TAYLOR'S RETURN ADVANCES THEIR CAUSE

10. (C) XXXXXXXXXXXX

11. (C) The threat of a return of Taylor strengthens their hand and for now they see no need to give in at all. However, if Taylor is put away for a long time, the government may feel a bit bolder in recovering assets and bringing Taylor backers who committed war crimes to justice.

12. (C) The international community has just a few tools to pressure the Taylor people into accepting the new reality. The UN sanctions appear to have the intended effect of keeping them somewhat marginalized and fearful of further attempts to strip them of their ill-gotten gains. However, we have regularly heard of travel outside Liberia of those on the travel ban list without prior approval.

NEXT STEPS FOR THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY

13. (C) However, the best we can do for Liberia is to see to it that Taylor is put away for a long time and we cannot delay for the results of the present trial to consider next steps. All legal options should be studied to ensure that Taylor cannot return to destabilize Liberia. Building a case in the United States against Taylor for financial crimes such as wire fraud would probably be the best route. There may be other options, such as applying the new law criminalizing the use of child soldiers or terrorism statutes.

14. (C) The peace in Liberia remains fragile, and its only guarantee is the robust and adaptable UNMIL presence. The GOL does not have the ability to quell violence, monitor its borders or operate independently to fight crime. A free Taylor could tip the balance in the wrong direction. THOMAS-GREENFIELD

Summary
US officials wonder why a special court judge might be interested in slowing down the prosecution case against the former Sierra Leonean president. Key passages highlighted in yellow.

-- SUMMARY: SCSL MEETS A KEY MILESTONE, BUT FACES UNCERTAINTY IN TERMS OF TIMING, FINANCES, AND COMPLETION ISSUES --

1. (SBU) On February 27, 2009, the Special Court for Sierra Leone (SCSL or Court) took another step toward completing its work when the Prosecution rested its case against former Liberian President Charles Taylor -- the last SCSL case at the trial stage. The Court could potentially complete its work before the end of 2010. A number of open issues, however, may affect timing, including the start date and length of the Taylor Defense case. Timing may be particularly important given expected funding shortfalls and the possible loss of courtroom space this coming September. Additionally, the current Registrar, Herman von Hebel (Netherlands), has resigned effective June 1, and his successor will inherit a host of difficult issues and a complex transition during the final days of the Court,s operations.

--BACKGROUND: A SMALL COURT WITH SEVERAL FIRSTS --

2. (U) A Trailblazing Court. The hybrid SCSL, created in 2002 through an agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone (GOSL) and funded entirely by voluntary contributions, has jurisdiction over those who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in Sierra Leone after November 30, 1996. Although established almost ten years after the creation of the International Criminal Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda (ICTY and ICTR), the SCSL is poised to complete its work before these tribunals. The SCSL has also been the first internationalized criminal tribunal to: 1) issue an indictment for an African head of state (Liberian President Charles Taylor); 2) enter convictions for the crime of recruiting and using child soldiers; and 3) successfully prosecute forced marriage as a crime against humanity and intentional attacks on U.N. peacekeepers as a serious violation of international humanitarian law.

3. (U) Last Trial Standing. In 2003, the SCSL indicted Charles Taylor, the leader of the National Patriotic Front of Liberia from 1989 to 1997 and the President of Liberia from 1997 until the 2003 indictment. The indictment alleges Taylor,s deep involvement in the Sierra Leone conflict including his role in arming, training and acting in concert with the RUF and in trafficking the Sierra Leonean &blood diamonds8 that fueled and financed the fighting. The SCSL charged Taylor with eleven counts, including, inter alia, terrorizing the civilian population, unlawful killings, sexual violence, abductions and forced labor, and conscripting child soldiers.

))TIMING: TAYLOR TRIAL'S LINK TO CLOSING SCSL))

4. (SBU) Status of Trial. As the only ongoing SCSL trial, the Taylor trial is the linchpin to the SCSL completing its work. From April 6-9, 2009, the Court held the &judgment of acquittal8 hearing, with Defense arguing for acquittal on all of the charges. (Comment: In the &judgment of acquittal8 hearing, the Court considers whether Prosecution Qacquittal8 hearing, the Court considers whether Prosecution has presented any evidence that could sustain conviction on the charges, acquitting only if Prosecution has presented &no evidence8 to sustain the charge. End Comment.) In this hearing, Defense acknowledged that crimes had occurred in Sierra Leone but argued that the Prosecution had failed to 1) present evidence linking Taylor to those crimes and 2)establish that Taylor had been part of a joint criminal enterprise (JCE) because, if a JCE existed, it existed before November 30, 1996, the date at which the temporal jurisdiction of the SCSL begins. The Prosecution responded to these arguments by summarizing Taylor,s responsibility for the crimes and pointing to Taylor,s liability for JCE crimes committed after November 30, 1996, even if the planning of the JCE took place before that date. (Comment: The Court will most likely not issue its Rule 98 decision in April, especially since the Judges may recess through May. An acquittal does not seem likely. End Comment.)

5. (SBU) Next Up: Defense Case. A contact in the Registry has indicated that Defense will likely request three months to prepare for trial and four months to present its case. If the Court grants this request, the Defense case may start at the end of August. However, the same Registry source predicts that the Trial Chamber may order Defense to begin its case as early as June, working through July and August with a possible recess in September. One wild-card factor, however, is the Defense,s pending interlocutory appeal arguing that the Prosecution failed to properly plead the JCE theory of liability. The Trial Chamber may not schedule the Defense case before the appeals decision so the Defense knows which mode(s) of liability it must defend against. (Comment: Currently, the Registry,s budget milestone document projects an October 31 trial termination date, a March 2010 judgment, sentencing in April 2010, and the conclusion of appeals in October 2010. If, however, the Defense case starts in August, the timeline could be pushed back by approximately two months. End Comment.)

6. (U) Spill-Over Timing Effects. A delay in the timing for the Taylor trial may create additional challenges. First, the International Criminal Court (ICC), the location of the Taylor trial, has informed the SCSL that it will need its second courtroom as of September 2009. (The ICC scheduled its second trial to start September 24th, and will likely need the courtroom prior to September 24th for pre-trial work). Back-up options explored by the Registry include finding other space or working during gaps in the ICC schedule. Second, according to Registry sources, each additional month of trial time costs approximately one million dollars.

))THE JUDICIAL FACTOR))

7. (C) Judges Slowing Things Down? Further muddying timing predictions, Court employees have intimated that the Trial Chamber could work more expeditiously. The Taylor Chamber consists of three judges who take turns presiding: Justice Richard Lussick (Samoa), Justice Teresa Doherty (Northern Ireland) and Justice Julia Sebutinde (Uganda), along with an alternate judge, Justice El Hadji Malick Sow (Senegal). A couple of Court employees have grumbled that when the last Prosecution witness testified on January 30, 2009, the Court still had 11 outstanding motions, some over a year old. Additionally, one Chamber contact believes that the Trial Chamber could have accelerated the Court,s work by excluding extraneous material and arguments. Moreover, contacts in Prosecution and Registry speculate that Justice Sebutinde may have a timing agenda. They think she, as the only African judge, wants to hold the gavel as presiding judge when the Trial Chamber announces the Taylor judgment. Reportedly, her next stint as presiding judge begins in January.

8. (SBU) Expedited Appeals? The Appeals Chamber, with one empty seat, consists of President Renate Winter (Austria); Vice President Jon Kamanda (Sierra Leone); Justice George Gelaga King (Sierra Leone); and Justice Emmanuel Ayoola (Nigeria). President Winter reportedly has indicated that the Appeals Chamber intends to expedite any Taylor trial Qthe Appeals Chamber intends to expedite any Taylor trial appeals. Up for election in May, Winter may not, however, preside over the Appeals Chamber for any Taylor trial appeals, reportedly she will step down after the RUF appeal if she is not re-elected President.

))DEFENSE STRATEGY: WHO ME?))

9. (SBU) Drama-Bound Defense Case. A British Queen,s Counsel, Courtenay Griffiths, heads Charles Taylor,s top-notch and quick-tongued defense team, which reportedly finds itself in the midst of identifying and proofing witnesses. All signs indicate that Taylor himself will take the stand as their first witness possibly staying in the box for 6 to 8 weeks, and based on Defense,s actions to date, the Defense team will likely argue that although the crimes may have occurred, Taylor has no link to the crimes.

))AN IMMINENT BUDGET CRISIS))

10. (C) Funding Shortfall. The Registry fears that the Court will run out of money as early as next month, although an expected Canadian USD 6 million contribution would keep the Court financed until early July 2009. In a marathon campaign, Registrar Von Hebel attended 250 meetings in 15 months to drum up funds from potential donor countries, but with, according Von Hebel, little traction, due to donor fatigue, the difficult economic situation, and contributions going to other tribunals (e.g., the Special Tribunal for Lebanon (STL) or the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia). Von Hebel wants to make another run at the Arab countries of Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Kuwait, and the United Arab Emirates. He also believes that a letter from U.N. Secretary General Ban Ki-Moon asking countries to contribute might help open wallets. According to Von Hebel, when Ban sent out a similar letter in 2007, a number of countries made first-time donations. In addition, a couple of traditional donor countries have advised him they may need a similar letter in order to donate this year.

11. (U) Cost-cutting Measures: Concerned about the looming financial crisis, the Registry has undertaken cost-saving measures, reducing staffing costs by downsizing, incorporating liquidation clauses in contracts, and encouraging The Hague staff to use leave during the break between prosecution and defense cases. The Registry also plans to hand over the Freetown facilities to the GOSL in July 2010, reserving some space for its own continued use. Finally, Registry may look to consolidate the Appeals Chamber and the Taylor trial operations in The Hague, after the Appeals Chamber finalizes the RUF appeal.

12. (SBU) Help from Washington. The Registry may also seek USG,s assistance on financial issues. First, it may press the USG not to reduce its FY2009 contribution by 2 million, but to stay at last year,s level of 9 million USD. (Comment: The extra sum would not solve the Court,s immediate financial problem, since the USG generally contributes in the fall. End Comment.) Second, the Registry may ask for USG political support in the form of demarches to Arab countries, impressing upon the targeted Arab countries the critical nature of the SCSL,s financial situation.

))COMPLETION HICCUPS AND ISSUES))

13. (SBU) Registrar Musical Chairs. On April 8, 2009, the Court announced Registrar von Hebel,s resignation, effective as of June 1, 2009. Von Hebel will assume the Deputy Registrar position at the newly established Hague-based STL. (According to Embassy contacts, STL offered Von Hebel the position at the insistence of and to placate the Dutch, who believe the Dutch ICTY Registrar had been treated unfairly when the ICTY President unexpectedly declined to renew his contract). Given that the STL Registrar Robin Vincent (U.K.) recently resigned, Von Hebel may eventually step into Vincent,s shoes. Von Hebel is also tying up as many SCSL loose ends as possible, including signing

a sentence-enforcement agreement with the Government of Rwanda. In terms of a successor Registrar, a Registry contact believes that the current Deputy Registrar Binta Mansaray (Sierra Leone) will surface as a strong candidate.

))COMMENT: RESIDUAL ISSUES))

14. (SBU) A Larger Role for The Hague? Although currently headquartered in Freetown, Sierra Leone, the Registry has toyed with the possibility of locating any Residual Mechanism Qtoyed with the possibility of locating any Residual Mechanism) or parts thereof) in The Hague. For instance, Von Hebel believes that the Court may need to move its archives out of Sierra Leone in order to properly maintain and secure them. The City of The Hague has indicated its willingness to provide archiving facilities in connection with the ICTY,s closure. Some have also suggested combining some or part of the SCSL,s residual functions with those of The Hague-based ICTY and the Arusha-based ICTR. A combined residual mechanism might prevent duplication, but it would also face significant hurdles, given SCSL,s structural differences, e.g. funding, oversight mechanism and applicable legal framework. Furthermore, GOSL desires will be key, since a joint GOSL-UN agreement created the Court.

would be arrested.[25] In Monrovia, the Prosecution passed on false intelligence[26] against a potential witness and got him arrested, only to then twist his arm into cooperating.[27] Furthermore, through an unnecessary show of force[28] they ransacked the Accused's residence in Monrovia. In the course of this search, Alan White of the Prosecution also made unnecessary threats to the caretaker and confiscated his personal items.[29] The next day the caretaker narrowly escaped a kidnap attempt by or involving the Prosecution.

18. The [then] Chief Prosecutor, David Crane also made direct verbal threats and intimidated a potential witness. Crane threatened to imprison DCT-102, like Issa Sesay, if he did not cooperate. [30] DCT-102 even has a souvenir from Crane to corroborate his account.[31] The Prosecution also made up a story that DCT-133's life was in danger from persons associated with Charles Taylor simply intimidate him into cooperating at the back of an offer for protective measures.[32]

Offers of Bribes and Other Inducements

19. Based on all of the affidavits and signed statements attached in Annexes B-J , the Defence submits that there are credible reasons to believe that the Prosecution is in contempt for offering and/or providing monetary bribes and/or other inducements, such as relocation, in exchange for cooperation and testimony. With respect to this question, the Defence takes no issue with any payments that were made to prosecution witnesses by the Witness and Victims Section ("WVS") of the Registry;[33] WVS payments apply to both prosecution and defence witnesses. Rather the Defence takes issue with the inducements that were offered and made by the Prosecution's Witness Management Unit ("WMU")[34]

[25] Confidential Annex F: Affidavit of DCT-102.
[26] The Defence submits that this "intelligence" was based on information gathered from DCT-097, during the time in which DCT-097 was receiving over $40,000 from the Prosecution to, inter alia, provide information. See Confidential Annex J and Annex M.
[27] Confidential Annex D: Affidavit of DCT-133.

[29] Confidential Annex E: Affidavit of DCT-086.
[30] Confidential Annex F: Affidavit of DCT-102.
[31] Confidential Annex F: Affidavit of DCT-102 and "Don Ray" calling card.
[32] Confidential Annex D: Affidavit of DCT-133, and copies of plane tickets to Accra, hotel invoices in Accra, pictures of DCT-133's gate and fence with razor wire, calling cards of various Prosecution investigators and a slip of paper with Brenda Hollis' name and phone number.
[33] The Defence assumes these payments were made in accordance with the "Practice Direction on Allowances for Witnesses and Expert Witnesses", issued by the Registrar on 16 July 2004. The Practice Direction properly provides for a wide range of allowances to be paid to witnesses testifying before the Special Court. These include an attendance allowance as compensation for earnings and time lost as a result of testifying, accommodation, meals, transport, medical treatment, childcare and other allowances.
[34] For some insight into the apparent mandate of the WMU, see attached at Annex L a 2007 Vacancy Announcement for the Chief of the Witness Management Unit.

directly to its witnesses, potential witnesses or sources in relation to expenses that squarely fall within the purview of WVS. The Defence submits that these payments, administered through the opaque Witness Management Unit, are contemptuous.

20. While in terms of Rule 39(ii), the Prosecution may "[t]ake all measures deemed necessary for the purpose of the investigation, including the taking of any special measures to provide for the safety, the support and assistance of potential witnesses and sources" [emphasis added] such discretion is limited in at least two ways. Firstly, by the wording of the Rules itself, and secondly by the limitations in the Statute, Rules and Code of Conduct, as considered above. In terms of Rule 39, any payment must be objectively "necessary" and must be for the safety, the support and assistance of potential witnesses and sources.[35]
21. The specific limitation of the remit to potential witnesses and sources was deliberate as Rule 39 was designed to cover the Prosecution's pre-trial investigative phase whereafter the welfare of the witnesses would be taken over by WVS, which is neutral and independent of the parties. Article 16(4) thus allows the Registrar, through the WVS, to provide "protective measures and security arrangements, counseling and other appropriate assistance for witnesses" and even sources. In terms of Article 2(B) of the Practice Direction,[36] which amplifies the functions of the WVS, the WVS shall "ensure the payment of all allowances". In terms of both provisions, although WVS may act in consultation with the parties, WVS, to the exclusion of both parties, retains sole jurisdiction for the management and payment of witnesses.
22. Even accepting, arguendo, that the WMU's and WVS's functions could overlap with respect to witness payments, it would still be impermissible for the Prosecution to, without justification, duplicate or supplement payments made by the WVS.
23. The Defence submits that in making certain payments to witnesses, potential witnesses or sources, the WMU usurped the role of the WVS, which unlike the Prosecution is an independent organ of the court and therefore less susceptible to abusing the process. Further, by continuing to pay witnesses throughout the life of the trial, the Prosecution is undermining any need for an independent witness section. The Defence submits that this conduct by the Prosecution is deliberate and was designed to influence the cooperation, and consequently, the evidence of potential witnesses, witnesses, suspects or sources.

[35] The latter wording is, it is true, wider than that of the Rules of the ICTY or the ICTR, but it is not as wide as to permit an "unfettered discretion".
[36] Practice Direction on Allowances for Witnesses and Expert Witnesses Testifying in The Hague, 8 June 2007.

24. The Defence further submits that even some of the pre-trial payments to witnesses that were properly within the Prosecution's WMU purview were irregular as they went well beyond the proscribed rationale and were willfully and knowingly designed to interfere with the administration of justice. The exorbitant payments to DCT-097 at the time he was a Prosecution witness, recently disclosed,[37] are a ready example.
25. In Annex N is a list of many smaller but equally improper payments that were made by the Prosecution to witnesses who came and testified before this Court. As the Trial Chamber would observe, these were payments which, according to the witnesses' own evidence, were not justified by the explanations given by the Prosecution.
26. Aside from these, the Prosecution offered or made other payments or inducements to witnesses, potential witnesses or sources in order to elicit their assistance, cooperation or evidence. For instance, the Prosecution approached DCT-032[38] and DCT-133[39] with gifts of money before ever having a substantive conversation with them.
27. The most egregious examples are offers of relocation and/or security protection where none was requested or warranted, or worse yet, where the suggested security threat was actually created by the Prosecution. Abu Keita for instance testified openly before this Chamber at the back of earlier an agreement for relocation.[40] DCT-102 was told he could relocate to America and should open a bank account so the Prosecution could deposit $90,000, as his knowledge of RUF and diamonds was critical to the Prosecution case.[41]
28. Another of the Prosecution's stratagems was inducement by reference. Through this method, the Prosecution would, directly or indirectly try to induce potential witnesses by alluding to benefits or inducements they would have given to other persons known to the targeted witness. DCT-102, for instance, was told by a Prosecution investigator to consider how well off Gibril Massaquoi and Abu Keita were living on Prosecution largess. John Tarnue, listed as a Prosecution witness in this case,[42] called DCT-086 from America and tried to convince him to cooperate. In the case of DCT-032, one Kelvin of the Prosecution alluded to Vamuyan Sheriff's largess (a Prosecution-financed house in Kenema) and even called Sheriff for DCT-032 to confirm. Sheriff tried to persuade DCT-

032 to cooperate with the Prosecution. It is common knowledge amongst RUF ex-combatants that TF1-362 testified and lied before the Special Court and in exchange made approximately $10,000.[43] It is also common knowledge that Foday Lansana and Isaac Mongor both witnesses in this case were released from prison at the behest of the Prosecution, and/or that the Prosecution could have done so.[44] Such displays of power and munificence by the Prosecution poisoned the pool of potential witnesses and further interfered with the administration of justice in that the credibility of such witnesses who came to testify was severely impacted.

IV. Conclusion and Relief Requested

29. The Defence submits that for any one or more of the foregoing reasons, and based on other examples abounding within the attached affidavits, numerous members of the Prosecution are in contempt of court. The instances highlighted above are sufficiently credible indicia of a reason to believe that contempt has occurred, warranting the appointment of an independent investigation. The issue at stake not only affects the integrity of the Prosecution, but the entire judicial process.

30. The Trial Chamber should, pursuant to Rule 77(C)(iii) and subject to the necessary protective measures in place and any other measures the Trial Chamber might deem fit, order an independent investigation into:

    i) The conduct of the Prosecution, including all its employees or agents, since the inception of the Court, in relation to witnesses and potential witnesses in this case, that is in breach of the Statute, Rules and Code of Conduct, including but not limited to the acts indicated in the attached affidavits and signed statements in Annexes B-J;

    ii) All payments and benefits, including ongoing payments and relocations, offered and/or paid by the Prosecution to witnesses, potential witnesses or sources in connection with this case. This investigation should explore the full mandate of the Prosecution's Witness Management Unit, the source of its funding, and all disbursements made by that Unit in relation to this case.

DEFENCE REPLY TO PROSECUTION RESPONSE TO DEFENCE APPLICATION FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE OF ADJUDICATED FACTS FROM THE AFRC TRIAL JUDGEMENT PURSUANT TO RULE 94(B)

previous trial – some of whom were called to testify again in this trial – objectionable, even if the evidence in this trial is broader or more expansive. The Defence submits that there would be no harm to the Prosecution's case if the previous testimony of its witnesses, as adjudicated in the AFRC Judgement, were given a "presumption of accuracy" in this trial; unless of course, the Prosecution is now advancing a different account.

5. While admittedly, the Prosecution needs to tailor its case against a particular accused person before the court, one of the twin purposes of the doctrine of judicial notice is to create consistency of case law.[4] This and the other twin purpose – judicial economy – need only be balanced against the Accused's right to a fair trial.[5]

6. The Defence observes that none of the decisions cited by the Prosecution to support its argument on trial fairness and prejudice were made in the context of adjudicated facts.[6] Rather, the statements were made in relation to the admission of evidence during the Prosecution's own case, when the imperative that the Prosecution be treated fairly is of greater significance. In this instance, the Prosecution has had every opportunity to present evidence, both documentary and oral, and the admissibility of that evidence has been fairly determined. Thus, it is of no detriment to the Prosecution if the adjudicated facts are now admitted with a rebuttable presumption of accuracy.

7. At all times, the Prosecution must prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt. The standard of proof required to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt is obviously higher than the standard of proof required to challenge adjudicated facts that may be given a rebuttable presumption of accuracy.[7] The Prosecution concede that a certain volume of evidence has already been led in respect to the issues contained in the proposed adjudicated facts.[8] This evidence could be used to challenge any rebuttable presumption created. Therefore, the Prosecution is not prejudiced by the admission of these adjudicated facts even though it has essentially closed its case.

[5] Ibid.
[6] Response, para. 4.
[7] See Response, para. 12.
[8] Response, para. 13.

8. Furthermore, the admission of adjudicated facts at this stage does not require any mental somersault on the part of the Trial Chamber.[9] While the Prosecution has presented the bulk of its evidence, it is assumed that the Trial Chamber has not yet made a final determination on the accuracy, credibility, or reliability of the Prosecution evidence; the Defence case may impact its assessment in this regard. A presumption of accuracy for adjudicated facts is only one more factor to consider when weighing all the evidence at the conclusion of the case.
9. The Prosecution complains of the Defence "delay" in filing its application for adjudicated facts.[10] However, the Defence reiterates that Rule 94(B) imposes no restrictions as to which stage in the proceedings an adjudicated facts motion should be brought. To the degree that the stage in the proceedings is a discretionary factor against admission and some explanation is warranted, the Defence submits that these adjudicated facts will help form the basis of the Defence case; the Defence case has yet to begin. The Defence had initially hoped to wait and do a joint filing of adjudicated facts from the AFRC and RUF judgements, but as the RUF judgement and appeal filings were pushed further and further back, the Defence decided to go ahead with this application.
10. In regard to the stage of the proceedings, the Prosecution erroneously states that the Hadzihasanovic and Ntakirutimana cases do not assist the Defence.[11] In fact, in Hadzihasanovic, the Trial Chamber partially granted the Defence application and admitted 39 adjudicated facts, despite considering that both the Prosecution and Defence had finished presenting their cases (the rest of the facts were dismissed on other grounds).[12] Additionally, in Ntakirutimana, only one of seven proposed adjudicated facts was dismissed on the basis that taking judicial notice of the issue would not assist judicial economy.[13] Furthermore, in generally considering the issue the Trial Chamber decided that they were "not inclined to view judicial notice as significantly influencing judicial economy" because the case itself was short – only 27 trial days for the Prosecution case and one month scheduled for the Defence case.[14]

[13] Ntakirutimana Decision, para. 52
[14] Ibid, para. 31.

11. Consequently, because the Prosecution is not prejudiced by the admission of adjudicated facts which would establish a rebuttable presumption of accuracy for findings based on testimony of its own witnesses in another proceeding before this Tribunal, and because the stage of the proceedings would still allow the Prosecution to call rebuttal evidence and/or cross-examine Defence witnesses on these facts, the Trial Chamber should exercise its discretion in favour of the Defence application.

The Prosecution's objections to centrality and relevance have no basis

12. The Prosecution argues both that the proposed adjudicated facts go to issues central to the present case[15] and that some of the proposed adjudicated facts lack relevance.[16] Obviously, the proposed facts cannot be both "central" and "remotely connected" at the same time.
13. In reply to the substance of the objections, the Defence submits that there is no prohibition on the admission of 'central facts' through judicial notice, save that, that is discretionary. With respect to the relevance argument, the Defence submits that all of the facts objected to by the Prosecution are relevant to the relationship between or command structure of the AFRC and/or the RUF (Facts 6, 10, 11 and12), and the supply of arms/ammunition (Fact 9).
14. The relationship between the AFRC and the RUF, and any relationship between either of those organizations and the Accused is certainly central to this case. That is precisely why it makes judicial economy to admit previously adjudicated facts that go to some aspects of this issue, so that it does not have to be addressed to a great extent in the Defence case. In that event, the evidence already led by the Prosecution on this issue[17] could either be used to rebut the presumption of accuracy of the adjudicated facts or to fill in additional and contextual details. Even so, none of the proposed adjudicated facts discuss the relationship between either of the organizations and the accused.
15. To the extent this Defence team stands by the Agreed Facts of the previous Defence team, Agreed Fact 31, which states "[o]n about 6 January 1999, inter alia, RUF and AFRC forces attacked Freetown", that does not tie the Defence to any grand conclusion.[18] The admission is simply a factual recognition that there may have been RUF elements that participated in the AFRC attack on Freetown.[19] It says nothing about what the RUF may have done as a cohesive organization, or about whether or not the RUF sent reinforcements to Waterloo or the Freetown environs in the days after the 6 January invasion, etc. Thus the proposed adjudicated facts from the AFRC Judgement are not in contradiction with this Agreed Fact.

[18] See Response, para. 7, footnote 15.

Reformulations or clarifications in light of Prosecution objections

16. The Prosecution complains that the proposed adjudicated facts as stated mix principal and accessory facts.[20] The Defence disagrees that the mixed nature of these adjudicated facts and the fact that they are written in paragraphs makes them inappropriate for purposes of judicial notice. The facts are sufficiently clear, and the paragraph format allows the principal facts to be understood in context.

17. In relation to Fact 7, which does arguably contain a vague phrase, "the remaining period covered by the indictment", the Defence would not be opposed to amending it to clarify the date of the remaining period of the AFRC Indictment, which was January 2000. However, based on Prosecution objections set out below, the Defence agree to take out the last sentence of Fact 7 completely.

18. The Prosecution further complains that Facts 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, and 8 are formulated in a way that is misleading and tenditious.[21] The Defence disagrees that the proposed adjudicated facts are purposefully misleading or tenditious, but in light of the Prosecution's objections would amend some of the facts as follows, if the Trial Chamber deems it necessary.

   a. Fact 1 – Amend to include the final line of paragraph 169 of the AFRC Judgement, which states: "On 18 June 1997, the RUF issued an official apology to the nation for its crimes and went on to praise Johnny Paul Koroma's government."

   b. Fact 2 – Do not amend. Of course, there is evidence on record to show that the AFRC and RUF cooperated, but to what degree and on what basis, the Defence intend to challenge in its Defence case. It is a fact, however, that the AFRC and RUF relations deteriorated over time, and the specifics contained in Fact 2 are evidence of this split.

   c. Fact 3 – Amend to include the word "closely". There is no need to include the phrase "the available evidence suggests", as of course the fact is based on the evidence before

PROSECUTION RESPONSE TO DEFENCE APPLICATION FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE OF ADJUDICATED FACTS FROM THE AFRC TRIAL JUDGEMENT PURSUANT TO RULE 94(B)

Office of the Prosecutor:

joinder was allowed only for Accused within the AFRC and those within the RUF[13], the Prosecution properly focused primarily on the particular Accused in each of the two cases. The current trial brings the focus back to the relationship of the AFRC and RUF to the crimes committed in the course of the same transaction, the Accused's relationship to both groups, the concerted action of the AFRC, RUF and the Accused in connection to those crimes, and the participation of the AFRC, RUF and the Accused in a common plan, purpose or design.

6. The facts before the Trial Chamber in this case reflect that broader focus, and it is those facts which should be controlling. The Defence will have the opportunity to present evidence, to be considered in the same way the Prosecution evidence is considered. No interest of justice would be achieved by giving the proposed evidence of the Defence a presumption of accuracy and the Trial Chamber should base its findings on the evidence before it in the current case.

The proposed adjudicated facts go to issues central to the present case

7. Judicial notice of the proposed adjudicated facts would be inappropriate because, to the extent that they are relevant, they relate to central issues in this case,[14] namely the relationship between the AFRC and RUF, including the involvement of the AFRC and RUF in the operation/s culminating in the attack on Freetown in January 1999, and the relationship between the Accused and members of this alliance.[15] This Trial Chamber has heard extensive testimony on these issues, including the coordinated offensive of RUF and AFRC forces in late 1998 that led to the invading forces entering Freetown in January 1999[16]; provision of arms and ammunition from various sources to these invading

[14] Sesay Adjudicated Facts Decision, para. 21.
[15] These central issues are apparently in dispute, despite the following Agreed Facts from which this Defence team has never withdrawn:

30. Shortly after the AFRC seized power, the RUF joined with the AFRC in governing Sierra Leone.
31. On about 6 January 1999, inter alia, RUF and AFRC forces attacked Freetown.

forces[17]; the relationship and communications between Sam Bockarie and Alex Tamba Brima following the death of SAJ Musa, including that Brima was subordinate to and taking orders from Bockarie[18]; Bockarie's orders to burn and commit other crimes[19]; communications by RUF radio operators to radio operators in Freetown warning the forces in Freetown about ECOMOG jet raids; the presence of RUF and Liberian fighters sent by Charles Taylor among the invading forces[20]; the arrival and attacks in the peninsula of forces under Boston Flomo (aka RUF Rambo) and Dennis Mingo in an attempt to relieve or reinforce the forces within the city[21]; the willing engagement by Flomo's fighter's against the ECOMOG contingent at Jui in order to provide troop support to fighters in Freetown; the successful provision of a contingent of fighters under "Rambo Red Goat" to forces within Freetown[22]; the role of these and other commanders in organizing a fighting withdrawal from Freetown after the initial force was driven out of the State House area by ECOMOG and the eventual regrouping of forces at Waterloo and subsequent attempt to re-attack Freetown[23]. While some of these were not central issues in the AFRC trial, they are all clearly central to the charges against the Accused.[24]

8. Several other examples further illustrate the central issues to which the requested facts relate. Fact 3, concerning the command structure within and between the RUF and AFRC during the Junta, relates to a key issue and the evidence, including that of the radio operators, is more detailed in this case.[25] Fact 7 also deals with this relationship, in particular in regard to Johnny Paul Koroma and the RUF leadership. The more detailed evidence in this case comes from a variety of perspectives and paints a more complete and nuanced picture. For example, in contrast to the requested fact that when Johnny Paul Koroma arrived in Kailahun "he encountered a hostile RUF leadership", the evidence in this case is that Johnny Paul Koroma encountered a welcoming RUF leadership and that significantly from the way the fact was expressed when adjudicated in the previous proceedings, it must not have been abstracted from the context of the original judgement in an unclear or misleading manner, and it must not be unclear or misleading in the context in which it is placed in the Application.[8]

III. Submissions

The Facts Promote Fairness and Judicial Economy

8. The Special Court is an ad hoc court of limited temporal and geographic jurisdiction, and the cases before the Special Court necessarily overlap in terms of their factual background. As such, the Trial Chamber could promote fairness and judicial economy if it were to accept the proposed facts in Annex A and consequently narrow the factual issues that are in dispute.[9] The Defence does not wish to delay proceedings by bringing witnesses to testify to facts that have already been tested and adjudicated and thus do not need to be re-litigated.[10]

9. Rule 94(B) does not specify at which stage in the proceedings an application for judicial notice must be brought. Instead, if testimony has already been heard on a particular proposed fact, the Chamber should determine if taking judicial notice will advance the objective of expediency without compromising the rights of the accused. In this instance, the rights of the accused will be upheld by ensuring that the trial is not unnecessarily long.

10. The Prosecution would not be disadvantaged if this Chamber decided to judicially note these adjudicated facts. The Prosecution may have already led evidence to challenge the rebuttable presumption that would be established if the Trial Chamber judicially notes these facts. Alternatively, the Prosecution could in the future, arguably move this Chamber to call witnesses to challenge any rebuttable presumption that would be created. (In this regard, it is noteworthy that a Trial Chamber of the ICTR took judicial notice of certain facts even after the Defence had presented most of its evidence.)[11]

The Facts are Distinct, Concrete and Identifiable

11. The Defence submits that the proposed facts in the Annex are distinct, concrete, and identifiable. The facts do not contain ambiguities or vague references.

The Facts are Relevant to Issues in the Current Case

12. Rule 94 is not a mechanism that may be employed to circumvent the ordinary requirement of relevance and thereby "clutter" the record with matters that would not otherwise be admitted.[12] All of the fifteen adjudicated facts are relevant to the relationship between the leaders of the AFRC and RUF and/or the command structure of the two. Specifically, the facts relate to the relationship between the AFRC and RUF as it pertains to the Freetown invasion in January 1999. As the case against Mr. Taylor is dependent on the actions of members of the AFRC and/or RUF, the relationship between the two is obviously a relevant issue.

The Facts are Not Legal Characterisations or Conclusions

13. Factual findings may have legal aspects to them; therefore, each proposed adjudicated fact must be considered individually to determine whether it contains findings or characterisations which are essentially legal in nature.[13] The Defence submits that the relevant facts in the Annex are not of a legal character as they deal solely with the factual analysis of the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF and the fact that the RUF did not come into Freetown as a cohesive organization between about 21 December 1998 and 28 February 1999.

The Facts are Not Taken Out of Context and Were Not Altered on Appeal

The Burgh House Principles On The Independence Of The International Judiciary

The Study Group of the International Law Association on the Practice and Procedure of International Courts and Tribunals, in association with the Project on International Courts and Tribunals:

Recognising the need for guidelines of general application to contribute to the independence and impartiality of the international judiciary, with a view to ensuring the legitimacy and effectiveness of the international judicial process;

Having regard to the United Nations Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary (1985) and other international rules and standards relating to judicial independence and the right to a fair trial;

Mindful of the special challenges facing the international judiciary in view of the non-national context in which they operate;

Noting in particular that each court or tribunal has its own characteristics and functions and that in certain instances judges serve on a part-time basis or as ad hoc or ad litem judges;

Considering the following principles of international law to be of general application:

- to ensure the independence of the judiciary, judges must enjoy independence from the parties to cases before them, their own states of nationality or residence, the host countries in which they serve, and the international organisations under the auspices of which the court or tribunal is established;
- judges must be free from undue influence from any source;
- judges shall decide cases impartially, on the basis of the facts of the case and the applicable law;
- judges shall avoid any conflict of interest, as well as being placed in a situation which might reasonably be perceived as giving rise to any conflict of interests;
- judges shall refrain from impropriety in their judicial and related activities;

Proposes the following Principles which shall apply primarily to standing international courts and tribunals (hereafter "courts") and to full-time judges. The Principles should also be applied as appropriate to judges ad hoc, judges ad litem and part-time judges, to international arbitral proceedings and to other exercises of international judicial power.

1. Independence and freedom from interference

1.1 The court and the judges shall exercise their functions free from direct or indirect interference or influence by any person or entity.

1.2 Where a court is established as an organ or under the auspices of an international organisation, the court and judges shall exercise their judicial functions free from interference from other organs or authorities of that organisation. This freedom shall apply both to the judicial process in pending cases, including the assignment of cases to particular judges, and to the operation of the court and its registry.

1.3 The court shall be free to determine the conditions for its internal administration, including staff recruitment policy, information systems and allocation of budgetary expenditure.

1.4 Deliberations of the court shall remain confidential.

2. Nomination, election and appointment

2.1 In accordance with the governing instruments, judges shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, integrity and conscientiousness who possess the appropriate professional qualifications, competence and experience required for the court concerned.

2.2 While procedures for nomination, election and appointment should consider fair representation of different geographic regions and the principal legal systems, as appropriate, as well as of female and male judges, appropriate personal and professional qualifications must be the overriding consideration in the nomination, election and appointment of judges.

2.3 Procedures for the nomination, election and appointment of judges should be transparent and provide appropriate safeguards against nominations, elections and appointments motivated by improper considerations.

2.4 Information regarding the nomination, election and appointment process and information about candidates for judicial office should be made public, in due time and in an effective manner, by the international organisation or other body responsible for the nomination, election and appointment process.

2.5 Where the governing instruments of the court concerned permits the re-election of judges, the principles and criteria set out above for the nomination, election and appointment of judges shall apply mutatis mutandis to their re-election.

3. Security of tenure

3.1 Judges shall have security of tenure in relation to their term of office. They may only be removed from office upon specified grounds and in accordance with appropriate procedures specified in advance.

3.2 The governing instruments of each court should provide for judges to be appointed for a minimum term to enable them to exercise their judicial functions in an independent manner.

4. Service and remuneration

4.1 Judges' essential conditions of service shall be enumerated in legally binding instruments.

4.2 No adverse changes shall be introduced with regard to judges' remuneration and other essential conditions of service during their terms of office.

4.3 Judges should receive adequate remuneration which should be periodically adjusted in line with any increases in the cost of living at the seat of the court.

4.4 Conditions of service should include adequate pension arrangements.

5. Privileges and immunities

5.1 Judges shall enjoy immunities equivalent to full diplomatic immunities, and in particular shall enjoy immunities from all claims arising from the exercise of their judicial function.

5.2 The court alone shall be competent to waive the immunity of judges; it should waive immunity in any case where, in its opinion, the immunity would impede the course of justice and can be waived without prejudice to the exercise of the judicial function.

5.3 Documents and papers of the court, judges and registry, in so far as they relate to the business of the court, shall be inviolable.

5.4 The state in which an international court has its seat shall take the necessary measures to protect the security of the judges and their families, and to protect them from adverse measures related to the exercise of their judicial function.

6. Budget

States parties and international organisations shall provide adequate resources, including facilities and levels of staffing, to enable courts and the judges to perform their functions effectively.

7. Freedom of expression and association

7.1 Judges shall enjoy freedom of expression and association while in office. These freedoms must be exercised in a manner that is compatible with the judicial function and that may not affect or reasonably appear to affect judicial independence or impartiality.

7.2 Judges shall maintain the confidentiality of deliberations, and shall not comment extrajudicially upon pending cases.

7.3 Judges shall exercise appropriate restraint in commenting extrajudicially upon judgments and procedures of their own and other courts and upon any legislation, drafts, proposals or subject-matter likely to come before their court.

8. Extra-judicial activity

8.1 Judges shall not engage in any extra-judicial activity that is incompatible with their judicial function or the efficient and timely functioning of the court of which they are members, or that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality.

8.2 Judges shall not exercise any political function.

8.3 Each court should establish an appropriate mechanism to give guidance to judges in relation to extra-judicial activities, and to ensure that appropriate means exist for parties to proceedings to raise any concerns.

9. Past links to a case

9.1 Judges shall not serve in a case in which they have previously served as agent, counsel, adviser, advocate, expert or in any other capacity for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court or other dispute settlement body which has considered the subject matter of the dispute.

9.2 Judges shall not serve in a case with the subject-matter of which they have had any other form of association that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality.

10. Past links to a party

Judges shall not sit in any case involving a party for whom they have served as agent, counsel, adviser, advocate or expert within the previous three years or such other period as the court may establish within its rules; or with whom they have had any other significant professional or personal link within the previous three years or such other period as the court may establish within its rules.

11. Interest in the outcome of a case

11.1 Judges shall not sit in any case in the outcome of which they hold any material personal, professional or financial interest.

11.2 Judges shall not sit in any case in the outcome of which other persons or entities closely related to them hold a material personal, professional or financial interest.

11.3 Judges must not accept any undisclosed payment from a party to the proceedings or any payment whatsoever on account of the judge's participation in the proceedings.

12. Contacts with a party

12.1 Judges shall exercise appropriate caution in their personal contacts with parties, agents, counsel, advocates, advisers and other persons and entities associated with a pending case. Any such contacts should be conducted in a manner that is compatible with their judicial function and that may not affect or reasonably appear to affect their independence and impartiality.

12.2 Judges shall discourage ex parte communications from parties, and except as provided by the rules of the court such communications shall be disclosed to the court and the other party.

13. Post-service limitations

13.1 Judges shall not seek or accept, while they are in office, any future employment, appointment or benefit, from a party to a case on which they sat or from any entity related to such a party, that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality.

13.2 Former judges shall not, except as permitted by rules of the court, act in any capacity in relation to any case on which they sat while serving on the court.

13.3 Former judges shall not act as agent, counsel, adviser or advocate in any proceedings before the court on which they previously served for a period of three years after they have left office or such other period as the court may establish and publish.

13.4 Former judges should exercise appropriate caution as regards the acceptance of any employment, appointment or benefit, in particular from a party to a case on which they sat or from any entity related to such a party

14. Disclosure

14.1 Judges shall disclose to the court and, as appropriate, to the parties to the proceedings any circumstances which come to their notice at any time by virtue of which any of Principles 7 to 13 apply.

14.2 Each court shall establish appropriate procedures to enable judges to disclose to the court and, as appropriate, to the parties to the proceedings matters that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality in relation to any particular case.

15. Waiver

Notwithstanding Principles 7 to 13, judges shall not be prevented from sitting in a case where they have made appropriate disclosure of any facts bringing any of those Principles into operation, and where the court expresses no objections and the parties give their express and informed consent to the judge acting.

16. Withdrawal or disqualification

Each court shall establish rules of procedure to enable the determination whether judges are prevented from sitting in a particular case as a result of the application of these Principles or for reasons of incapacity. Such procedures shall be available to a judge, the court, or any party to the proceedings.

17. Misconduct

17.1 Each court shall establish rules of procedure to address a specific complaint of misconduct or breach of duty on the part of a judge that may affect independence or impartiality.

17.2 Such a complaint may, if clearly unfounded, be resolved on a summary basis. In any case where the court determines that fuller investigation is required, the rules shall establish adequate safeguards to protect the judges' rights and interests and to ensure appropriate confidentiality of the proceedings.

17.3 The governing instruments of the court shall provide for appropriate measures, including the removal from office of a judge.

17.4 The outcome of any complaint shall be communicated to the complainant.

but rather a basis for national legislation. None the less, the provisions of both the 1874 Brussels Declaration and the 1880 Oxford Manual formed the basis of the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions on land war and their annexed Regulations.

The immediate precursor of 1907 Hague Convention IV was 1899 Hague Convention II Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land. This had been adopted at the First Hague Peace Conference and had entered into force on 4 September 1900. The 1899 Convention was of particular importance in the development of the laws of war in that it represented the first successful effort of the international community to codify a relatively comprehensive regime governing the laws of land warfare. The provisions of 1907 Hague Convention IV represent a slight revision of those embodied in 1899 Hague Convention II. Most articles of the Regulations annexed to the Conventions are identical, and only a few contain substantial changes. The texts of both conventions are usefully juxtaposed in columns in J. B. Scott (ed.), The Hague Conventions and Declarations of 1899 and 1907 (which contains the US official translations used here), and also in A. Pearce Higgins, The Hague Peace Conferences (which contains the British official translations).

Two points should be noted about the applicability of 1907 Hague Convention IV. (1) It was intended to replace 1899 Hague Convention II as between states parties to both agreements. However, of the forty-six states which had become parties to the 1899 Convention, eighteen did not become parties to the 1907 Convention (Argentina, Bulgaria, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Greece, Honduras, Italy, Korea, Montenegro, Paraguay, Persia, Peru, Serbia, Spain, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela). They or their successor states (e.g. Yugoslavia) remained formally bound by the 1899 Convention. (2) The application of each convention was made more complex by the inclusion of a 'general participation clause' (Article 2). However, to the extent that aspects of the Conventions are considered customary international law, those aspects are binding on all states. The International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg in 1946, and a report of the UN Secretary-General to the Security Council in May 1993 concerning the establishment of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, expressly recognized 1907 Hague Convention IV as declaratory of customary international law.

While representing a relatively comprehensive agreement on the law of land warfare, 1907 Hague Convention IV (like 1899 Hague Convention II) was not regarded as a complete code of the applicable law. What has come to be known as the Martens Clause, appearing in the Convention's Preamble, declares that cases not included in the Regulations annexed to the Convention remain governed by customary international law relating to the conduct of warfare.

The provisions of 1907 Hague Convention IV and annexed Regulations have been complemented and supplemented in certain subsequent agreements, including 1949 Geneva Convention III (see Article 135), 1949 Geneva Convention IV (see Article 154), 1977 Geneva Protocol I, and the 1980 Convention on certain conventional weapons.

The statutes of the international criminal tribunals for Yugoslavia and Rwanda, and the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (not yet in force), all contain definitions of war crimes which echo the language of 1907 Hague Convention IV and annexed Regulations.

Convention (V) Respecting the Rights and Duties of Neutral Powers and Persons in Case of War on Land

His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia; [etc.]:

With a view to laying down more clearly the rights and duties of neutral Powers in case of war on land and regulating the position of the belligerents who have taken refuge in neutral territory;

Being likewise desirous of defining the meaning of the term 'neutral', pending the possibility of settling, in its entirety, the position of neutral individuals in their relations with the belligerents;

Have resolved to conclude a Convention to this effect, and have, in consequence, appointed the following as their plenipotentiaries:

[Here follow the names of the plenipotentiaries.]

Who, after having deposited their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following provisions:

CHAPTER I — The Rights and Duties of Neutral Powers

Article 1

The territory of neutral Powers is inviolable.

Article 2

Belligerents are forbidden to move troops or convoys of either munitions of war or supplies across the territory of a neutral Power.

2082

9362

CHAPTER II — Belligerents Interned and Wounded Tended in Neutral Territory

Article 11

A neutral Power which receives on its territory troops belonging to the belligerent armies shall intern them, as far as possible, at a distance from the theatre of war.

It may keep them in camps and even confine them in fortresses or in places set apart for this purpose.

It shall decide whether officers can be left at liberty on giving their parole not to leave the neutral territory without permission.

Article 12

In the absence of a special convention to the contrary, the neutral Power shall supply the interned with the food, clothing, and relief required by humanity.

At the conclusion of peace the expenses caused by the internment shall be made good.

Article 13

A neutral Power which receives escaped prisoners of war shall leave them at liberty. If it allows them to remain in its territory it may assign them a place of residence.

The same rule applies to prisoners of war brought by troops taking refuge in the territory of a neutral Power.

Article 14

A neutral Power may authorize the passage over its territory of the sick and wounded belonging to the belligerent armies, on condition that the trains bringing them shall carry neither personnel nor war material. In such a case, the neutral Power is bound to take whatever measures of safety and control are necessary for the purpose.

The sick or wounded brought under these conditions into neutral territory by one of the belligerents, and belonging to the hostile party, must be guarded by the neutral Power so as to ensure their not taking part again in the military operations. The same duty shall devolve on the neutral State with regard to wounded or sick of the other army who may be committed to its care.

Article 15

The Geneva Convention applies to sick and wounded interned in neutral territory.

Paragraph 2

1938 The first sentence gives substance to the principle of general immunity formulated in the preceding paragraph by explicitly prohibiting attacks directed against the civilian population as such, as well as against individual civilians. By using the words "directed" and "as such" it emphasizes that the population must never be used as a target or as a tactical objective.

1939 It should be noted that "attacks" are defined in Article 49 (Definition of attacks and scope of application), paragraph 1.

1940 In the second sentence the Conference wished to indicate that the prohibition covers acts intended to spread terror; there is no doubt that acts of violence related to a state of war almost always give rise to some degree of terror among the population and sometimes also among the armed forces. It also happens that attacks on armed forces are purposely conducted brutally in order to intimidate the enemy soldiers and persuade them to surrender. This is not the sort of terror envisaged here.[12] This provision is intended to prohibit acts of violence the primary purpose of which is to spread terror among the civilian population without offering substantial military advantage. It is interesting to note that threats of such acts are also prohibited. This calls to mind some of the proclamations made in the past threatening the annihilation of civilian populations.

1941 Finally, it is worthy of note that Article 85 (Repression of breaches of this Protocol), paragraph 3(a), defines the act of making the civilian population or individual civilians the object of attack as a grave breach, when it results in death or serious injury to body or health.

Paragraph 3

1942 The immunity afforded individual civilians is subject to an overriding condition, namely, on their abstaining from all hostile acts. Hostile acts should be understood to be acts which by their nature and purpose are intended to cause actual harm to the personnel and equipment of the armed forces. Thus a civilian who takes part in armed combat, either individually or as part of a group, thereby becomes a legitimate target, though only for as long as he takes part in hostilities. If the civilian is captured while he is committing hostile acts, the rules governing his fate are laid down in Article 45 (Protection of persons who have taken part in hostilities).

1943 During the course of the discussions several delegations indicated that the expression "hostilities" used in this article included preparations for combat and the return from combat.[13] Similar problems arose in Article 44 (Combatants and prisoners of war) with regard to the expression "military deployment preceding the launching of an attack". It seems that the word "hostilities" covers not only the time that the civilian actually makes use of a weapon, but also, for example, the time that he is carrying it, as well as situations in which he undertakes hostile acts without using a weapon. If a civilian is captured or arrested in such circumstances, he may have recourse to paragraph 1 of Article 45 (Protection of persons who have taken part in hostilities) and claim prisoner-of-war status; he must be treated as such pending determination of his status by a competent tribunal.

[12] O.R. XV, p. 274, CDDH/215/Rev.1, para. 51.

1944 What is the exact meaning of the term "direct" in the expression "take a direct part in hostilities" ? A similar expression is already used in paragraph 2 of Article 43 (Armed forces). In general the immunity afforded civilians is subject to a very stringent condition: that they do not participate directly in hostilities, i.e., that they do not become combatants, on pain of losing their protection. Thus "direct" participation means acts of war which by their nature or purpose are likely to cause actual harm to the personnel and equipment of the enemy armed forces. It is only during such participation that a civilian loses his immunity and becomes a legitimate target. Once he ceases to participate, the civilian regains his right to the protection under this Section, i.e., against the effects of hostilities, and he may no longer be attacked. However, there is nothing to prevent the authorities, capturing him in the act or arresting him at a later stage, from taking repressive or punitive security measures with regard to him in accordance with the provisions of Article 45 (Protection of persons who have taken part in hostilities) or on the basis of the provisions of the Fourth Convention (assigned residence, internment etc.) if his civilian status is recognized. Further it may be noted that members of the armed forces feigning civilian non-combatant status are guilty of perfidy under Article 37 (Prohibition of perfidy), paragraph 1(c).

1945 There should be a clear distinction between direct participation in hostilities and participation in the war effort. The latter is often required from the population as a whole to various degrees. Without such a distinction the efforts made to reaffirm and develop international humanitarian law could become meaningless. In fact, in modern conflicts, many activities of the nation contribute to the conduct of hostilities, directly or indirectly; even the morale of the population plays a role in this context.

Paragraph 4

1946 This provision is very important; it confirms the unlawful character of certain regrettable practices during the Second World War and subsequent armed conflicts. Far too often the purpose of attacks was to destroy all life in a particular area or to raze a town to the ground without this resulting, in most cases, in any substantial military advantages.

1947 On this subject the general rule was formulated in Article 48 (Basic rule): belligerents may direct their operations only against military objectives. The first specification is added in paragraph 2 of the present Article 51: attacks against the civilian population as such and against individual civilians are prohibited.

1948 Up to now the matter is fairly clear in theory, but it is less so in practice. In fact, civilians may be inside or in the immediate proximity of military objectives, whether these consist of persons or objects; moreover, purely civilian objects may in combat conditions become military objectives, thereby endangering the origins and consistently and explicitly applied in their judgments for almost two decades.

As the lead U.S. negotiator for the war crimes tribunals, I worked under the daily assumption that customary international law dictated the agenda. In contrast, the negotiations for the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court were conducted as a complex mixture of customary legal principles and heavily negotiated compromises unique to the Rome Statute. Aiding and abetting liability fell into the latter category.

Customary international law applies the knowledge standard for aiding and abetting as a mode of participation. This standard has been confirmed repeatedly by the war crimes tribunals. Indeed, within recent months, the knowledge standard has been upheld by the Trial Chamber of the Special Court for Sierra Leone in its judgment against former Liberian President Charles Taylor, Prosecutor v. Taylor, Case No. SCSL-03-01-T, Judgement, ¶¶ 486-87 (May 18, 2012), and by the Trial Chamber of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (the "Cambodia Tribunal") in its final judgment, affirmed by the Supreme Court Chamber (Appeals Chamber), against Kaing Guek Eav (alias Duch), the former warden of Tuol Sleng Prison in Phnom Penh during the Pol Pot regime. id. at 622, the NMT held that the act of loan-making was insufficient to impose criminal liability under international law.[6] Like "one who sells supplies or raw materials to a builder building a house," a bank, in making a loan, "does not become a partner in enterprise." Id. Thus, Rasche's acquittal resulted from inadequate evidence to establish the actus reus, not a mens rea of purpose.[7]

[6] The NMT held:

> Loans or sale of commodities to be used in an unlawful enterprise may well be condemned from a moral standpoint and reflect no credit on the part of the lender or seller in either case, but the transaction can hardly be said to be a crime. Our duty is to try and punish those guilty of violating international law, and we are not prepared to state that such loans constitute a violation of that law, nor has our attention been drawn to any ruling to the contrary.

Ministries at 622 (emphasis added). See also id. at 784, 854 (twice reiterating that Rasche's loan-making did not constitute criminal conduct).

[7] After concluding that Rasche had knowledge of the loans' use, the Tribunal stated that the "[t]he real question is, is it a crime to make a loan, knowing or having good reason to believe that the borrower will us[e] the funds in financing enterprises which are employed in using labor in violation of either national or international law?" Ministries at 622. The question is conjunctive, containing both an actus reus component (making a loan) and a mens rea component (with knowledge that the loan will be used to finance an illicit purpose). Because the Tribunal ultimately acquitted Rasche on this count (answering the conjunctive question in the negative), the Second Circuit concluded that a mens rea of knowledge was insufficient. It should be apparent, however, that this is not a necessary conclusion, as the acquittal was based on an insufficient actus reus.

determinative in an analysis of the proper mens rea standard for aiding and abetting liability.

B. The Rome Statute's mens rea for aiding and abetting liability remains ambiguous and could reasonably be interpreted by the ICC to reflect a knowledge standard consistent with customary international law

The mens rea standard for aiding and abetting liability in the Rome Statute has "yet to be construed by the [ICC]," so "[the Statute's] precise contours and the extent to which it may differ from customary international law thus remain somewhat uncertain." Khulumani, 504 F.3d at 275-76 (Katzmann, J., concurring). The court below implicitly relied on Article 25(3)(c) to determine that the Rome Statute requires a purpose standard, yet the meaning of this article remains ambiguous. The Statute never defines "purpose" and the legislative history provides no guidance to interpret this provision.[11] The drafters

[11] The Rome Statute certainly does not require specific intent for aiding and abetting liability. Where the Statute requires specific intent, it is explicitly enumerated as an element of the offense. See, e.g., art. 6 ("with intent to destroy"); see also Donald K. Piragoff and Darryl Robinson, Article 30: Mental Element, in Commentary on the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court: Observers' Notes, Article by Article 857-58 (Otto Triffterer ed., 2008). Nevertheless, some courts have relied on the Statute and the Second Circuit's decision to impose a specific intent requirement for aiding and abetting allegations in ATS cases. *See, e.g., Doe v. II. Paragraphs 2 and 3[14]

7 It is impossible to discuss one of these paragraphs separately from the other. They are distinct, but only to the extent of the nuance which flows from the power of assignment given to the Presidency by article 35 para. 3 (c).

By virtue of the latter provision, some of the judges may be assigned to full-time duty at the seat of the Court whilst the others remain available on call: hence the distinction between paragraphs 2 and 3 of article 40.

8 Paragraph 2 applies to all judges of the Court irrespective of their full- or part-time mandate. This paragraph embodies the basic principles governing their independence. It is in this paragraph that judicial independence, at the level of the international criminal court, is properly rooted. But the statement is made in a somewhat reverse way: what the judges should not do, of which activities they should not partake, so that their independence be held beyond doubt.

That is a matter which must be individually decided, when the occasion arises; and the circumstances may be infinite, as human affairs go. A classic example, however, oftentimes arises and each time leads to animated discussions; here is how it was settled in the Preparatory Committee[15].

> "The view was expressed that judges should not engage in any activities that would prejudice their judicial functions. In this connection, activities such as part-time teaching and writing for publication were considered compatible with such functions".

Unlike paragraph 3 of this article, paragraph 2 does not prohibit all occupations of a professional nature. This means that judges who have not yet been required to serve on a full-time basis remain free to continue to exercise other professional occupations, unless the occupation of itself would "interfere with their judicial functions". Thus, for instance, for a period following their elections to the Court, certain judges continued for a period to remain, and to perform the duties of, a judge of the ICTY and ICTR.

9 After having enshrined the principle for all judges in paragraph 2 of article 40, the Statute goes on to deal, in paragraph 3, with those judges – whose number is left to the discretion of the Presidency – who are called upon "to serve on a full-time basis at the seat of the Court". Their obligation is put at a higher level than that of their colleagues who, though members of the same Court, are not serving full-time and are given some freedom in the use of their time away from the Court. Paragraph 3 of article 40 forbids full-time judges to "engage in any other occupation of a professional nature".

10 "Any other" broadly encompasses the whole field under consideration, i.e. "occupations of a professional nature". The pivotal word is "professional". In the context of the ICC, what does "professional" mean?

Of course, it might refer to any profession as the term is generally understood in the Western world. In that case, the provision would appear to prohibit a full-time judge to carry concurrently the activities of an engineer, or a medical doctor, or an agronomist, to give only three illustrations which already show how the suggested construction offends sheer logic. So understood, the prohibition goes without saying and does not need an explicit provision to impress it upon the judges.

Then the word "professional" might be construed in a somewhat more pointed fashion, referring specifically to the legal profession. This approach is not devoid of internal logic: the Statute is dealing exclusively with a legal institution and is interested in the well-being of that institution and of its composing members. A full-time judge should not therefore, at the same time as he is bound and expected to devote his complete energies to his judicial duties, be allowed to practice law for his own account, be it by giving opinions to private clients, or acting

In its Res. 50/216 of 23 December 1995, the General Assembly confined itself, in general terms, to '[taking] note of the report of the Secretary-General'[81] and to requesting him 'to address the issues raised by the [ACABQ] concerning the conditions of service of members of the International Court',[82] with a view to discussing them again at the fifty-third session of the General Assembly.

In its Annual Report to the Assembly for the period 1 August 1995 to 31 July 1996, the Court stated: 27

> In its report of 12 December 1995 (A/50/7/Add.11), the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions raised questions about the practice of the Court in permitting its members to engage in occasional activities outside of the Court that may be remunerated: acting as arbitrators in inter-State and private international arbitrations, serving in administrative tribunals or quasi-judicial organs of specialized agencies, lecturing, writing. That occasional practice goes back to the origins of the Permanent Court of International Justice. Not only is it in conformity with the Statute of the Court; the repeated endorsement by the international organs and by the States that have appointed members of the Court as arbitrators shows their awareness of the contribution that the members of the Court may, by this function, make to the development of international law, and of the benefits deriving therefrom for all institutions concerned. The practice, which involves a very limited number of judges for very limited periods, has no adverse effect on the pace of the work of the Court or the total precedence given to that work by its members. The Court has recently considered the questions respecting that practice which the Advisory Committee has raised, and has adopted new guidelines governing the matter.[83]

Those guidelines confirm the great importance of consultation with the President whenever a judge is asked from time to time to engage in an outside activity and they underscore the de facto consequences of the very heavy workload now borne by the Court.[84]

The following comments should be made on the Court's Memorandum on incompatibilities. In respect of occasional participation by judges in other forms of pacific settlement of disputes, it will first be recalled that the Court is no ordinary judicial institution, but the principal judicial organ of the United Nations[85] and, as such, an important part of the peacekeeping machinery established by the Charter. Thus, there is nothing unusual in the Court contributing, by various means including some not specified in its Statute, to the achievement of this vital goal of the United Nations,[86] provided of course that, in so doing, it does not overstep the bounds laid down by the Statute.[87] It is a fact that there have always been very few individuals capable of settling an international dispute by arbitration. That is why—and each case must be looked at on its own—members of the Court took part in most of the major inter-State arbitrations in the latter half of the twentieth century: Beagle Channel (Argentina/Chile) (Award of 18 February 1977),[88] the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case (Awards of 30 June 1977 and 14 March 1978),[89] Delimitation of the Maritime Boundary between Guinea and Guinea 28

Bissau (Award of 14 February 1985),[90] Delimitation of the Maritime Boundary between Guinea Bissau and Senegal (Award of 31 July 1989),[91] Eritrea/Yemen—Question of Territorial Sovereignty over a Group of Islands in the Red Sea (Awards of 9 October 1998 and 17 December 1999),[92] and 1976 Convention on the Protection of the Rhine against Pollution by Chlorides (Netherlands/France).[93] This participation has indubitably bestowed particular authority on these arbitration proceedings and the settlement of the disputes was thereby facilitated; moreover, the prestige of the Court itself has undoubtedly been better served by these arbitrations than it would have been by a policy of flat refusal.[94]

The same considerations apply mutatis mutandis to participation by members of the Court in international conciliation commissions or commissions of inquiry,[95] provided that the occasional exercise of these duties is in no way political.

29 Members of the Court have in the past also sat on transnational arbitral tribunals, in arbitration proceedings conducted under the auspices of the International Olympic Committee, on ad hoc tribunals within the system of the United Nations and affiliated organisations (World Bank Administrative Tribunal and International Monetary Fund Administrative Tribunal) and even, for limited periods, on the European Court of Human Rights and the European Commission of Human Rights at a time when those organs operated on a part-time basis and the ICJ was much less busy. Finally, the Court has in the past also allowed its members to play a quasi-judicial role by participating in the work of certain ILO organs, such as the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, and the Committee on Freedom of Association. While the concurrent exercise of these various functions has always been held compatible de jure with the function of member of the Court (as well as with the function of member of other national and international tribunals, incidentally), it is now much more often incompatible de facto, given the greater workload of the Court.

30 In respect of scholarly activities, it has also been traditionally seen as eminently desirable for members of the Court to participate, when time permits, in the work of learned societies and to give lectures on the Court and other subjects of international legal interest in various parts of the world, while, of course, exercising the requisite caution.[96] These activities promote an understanding of the functions of the Court and of its work and may contribute to expanding its role.

31 Finally, it should be pointed out, to the extent that there is any need to do so, that the prohibition applicable to political and administrative functions in the broad sense (including, since the revision of the PCIJ Statute in 1929, parliamentary and judicial

[94] That was already the case with, inter alia, the awards rendered by President Huber in the British Property in Spanish Morocco cases of 1925, RIAA I, pp. 615 et seq., and in the Island of Palmas case of 1928, RIAA I, pp. 829 et seq. Cf. the list of arbitrations in which members of the PCIJ took part in Rosenne, Law and Practice, vol. I, pp. 413–414, fn. 95. It is in the same spirit that judges have always been allowed to be members of the PCA; it was also believed that judges were particularly well placed to determine the requisite qualifications for candidates for seats on the Court.
[95] This is the basis on which judges have been allowed to agree to nomination by their governments for inclusion on the list of fact-finding experts which the UN Secretary-General was asked to establish by the General Assembly in its Res. 2329 (XXII), UN GAOR, 22nd Sess., Suppl. 16, p. 84.

functions and permanent academic duties) concerns only the exercise of those functions, which would place the individual in a position of direct or indirect dependency vis-à-vis a government. A member of the Court is thus entitled to retain vested rights acquired in the course of national public service (different forms of 'leave' exist for this purpose). Likewise, while judges must refrain from participating in any way actively or directly in national political life (including by publicly expressing political opinions), it has always been clear that they are entitled to exercise their rights as citizens in their home countries (in particular, to vote and even, subject to the foregoing, to hold membership of a political party).

As was observed above,[97] Art. 16 of the Statute has not applied to judges ad hoc ever 32 since the revision of the Statute of the PCIJ. The 1929 Committee of Jurists concluded that judges ad hoc could not be barred from engaging in political or administrative activities or other professional occupations; the Committee did, however, establish an exception for those specific times when judges ad hoc were performing their duties.

It might be thought that de facto incompatibilities exist whenevet judges ad hoc must be at the disposal of the Court. De jure, the practice varies. It has happened that judges ad hoc were at the same time ambassadors or legal advisers of their countries and, in some cases, they held the exercise of those duties in abeyance. Moreover, it is increasingly frequent for judges ad hoc, before accepting new duties, to consult the Court, and if those duties bear any relationship to the case in which they are sitting, to refuse them.

Finally, it will be noted that disagreement has on occasion arisen as to the meaning of 33
Art. 16, para. 2: does the doubt referred to therein have to be raised by the judge in question or can it be expressed by any member of the Court? As evidenced by the practice, it is usually the judge in question who initially expresses any doubts he may have to the President. The President generally informs the Court of any question of incompatibility raised by a judge; he consults the Court whenever he deems necessary; where the President and the judge disagree, the question is submitted to the Court for decision. Naturally, once the Court is made aware of that question, doubts may be expressed by other members and may require a decision on its part.

C. Evaluation

All in all, except during the first years of the PCIJ—when the basic characteristics of its 34 functions were being gradually defined—the general regime of incompatibilities applicable to members of the Court has remained remarkably consistent. The nuances imposed by each specific context apart, it appears that since 1929 only two types of outside activities have in general been considered compatible in law with the function of judge: occasional contributions to the peaceful resolution of disputes by other legal means (arbitration in particular) and intermittent academic activities (specifically, participating in the work of learned societies, lecturing and producing written works promoting the activity of the Court or the development of international law).

These activities are compatible in fact with status as a member of the Court only to the extent that they do not interfere in any way with the Court's work, that in all cases they

Country Visits - Working Group on Arbitrary Detention

Visits to countries (also called field-missions) constitute an opportunity for the Working Group, through a direct dialogue with the Government concerned and representatives of civil society, to understand better the situation prevailing in that country, as well as the underlying reasons for instances of arbitrary deprivation of liberty or best practices preventing arbitrary detention from occurring. Discussions conducted during such visits with the representatives of the executive, judicial and legislative branches of government and other officials concerned, as well as with detainees, enable the Working Group members to enhance their understanding of the evolution, state application and implementation of national legislation from the perspective of international human rights norms, taking into account the social, political and historical context of each country. Such visits take place on the basis of an invitation from the Government concerned. The Working Group submits a report of the visit to the Human Rights Council, presenting its findings, conclusions and recommendations.

A/51/4

United Nations

Report of the International Court of Justice

1 August 1995 - 31 July 1996

General Assembly

Official Records · Fifty-first Session
Supplement No. 4 (A/51/4)

Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Court in April 1996. The theme chosen by the Court for its Colloquium evidenced its appreciation of the position: "Increasing the Effectiveness of the International Court of Justice". The Colloquium was attended by the Legal Advisers of the Foreign Ministries of some 45 States, by leading counsel in the Court and by scholars, as well as all judges of the Court and the Registrar and his colleagues.

197. The Court's internal procedures, devised when the Court had few cases on its List, currently are the subject of reconsideration by the Court's Rules Committee. While on the one hand they ensure scrupulous consideration of the plenitude of issues raised by a case by every Member of the Court and enable every Member to influence the content and drafting of the Court's decisions - great advantages in a court of universal composition and mission - on the other hand they take a great deal of time. The Rules Committee is reconsidering their utility in the light of these competing considerations.

198. In 1996, the Court has taken steps to avoid gaps in its work occasioned by the settlement of cases, by forward planning of oral hearings. Hearings are scheduled in Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America) for September 1996, and in the case concerning the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia) for February 1997. It is to be hoped that, with the practice of forward planning in place, States parties will be in a position in future to accelerate their appearance in Court at the Court's request when an earlier scheduled set of hearings is cancelled by reason of settlement of the prior case.

199. In its report of 12 December 1995 (A/50/7/Add.11), the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions raised questions about the practice of the Court in permitting its Members to engage in occasional activities outside of the Court that may be remunerated: acting as arbitrators in inter-State and private international arbitrations, serving in administrative tribunals or quasi-judicial organs of specialized agencies, lecturing, writing. That occasional practice goes back to the origins of the Permanent Court of International Justice. Not only is it in conformity with the Statute of the Court; the repeated endorsement by the international organs and by the States that have appointed Members of the Court as arbitrators shows their awareness of the contribution that the Members of the Court may, by this function, make to the development of international law, and of the benefits deriving therefrom for all institutions concerned. The practice, which involves a very limited number of judges for very limited periods, has no adverse effect on the pace of the work of the Court or the total precedence given to that work by its Members. The Court has recently considered the questions respecting that practice which the Advisory Committee has raised, and has adopted new guidelines governing the matter.

II. COMPETENCE OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNAL

31. The competence of the International Tribunal derives from the mandate set out in paragraph 1 of resolution 808 (1993). This part of the report will examine and make proposals regarding these fundamental elements of its competence: ratione materiae (subject-matter jurisdiction), ratione personae (personal jurisdiction), ratione loci (territorial jurisdiction) and ratione temporis (temporal jurisdiction), as well as the question of the concurrent jurisdiction of the International Tribunal and national courts.

32. The statute should begin with a general article on the competence of the International Tribunal which would read as follows:

Article 1

Competence of the International Tribunal

> The International Tribunal shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

A. Competence ratione materiae (subject-matter jurisdiction)

33. According to paragraph 1 of resolution 808 (1993), the international tribunal shall prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991. This body of law exists in the form of both conventional law and customary law. While there is international customary law which is not laid down in conventions, some of the major conventional humanitarian law has become part of customary international law.

34. In the view of the Secretary-General, the application of the principle nullum crimen sine lege requires that the international tribunal should apply rules of international humanitarian law which are beyond any doubt part of customary law so that the problem of adherence of some but not all States to specific conventions does not arise. This would appear to be particularly important in the context of an international tribunal prosecuting persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law.

35. The part of conventional international humanitarian law which has beyond doubt become part of international customary law is the law applicable in armed conflict as embodied in: the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims; 3/ the Hague Convention (IV) Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land and the Regulations annexed thereto of 18 October 1907; 4/ the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 9 December 1948; 5/ and the Charter of the International Military Tribunal of 8 August 1945. 6/

36. Suggestions have been made that the international tribunal should apply domestic law in so far as it incorporates customary international humanitarian

Fiftieth session
FIFTH COMMITTEE
Agenda item 116

PROPOSED PROGRAMME BUDGET FOR THE BIENNIUM 1996-1997

Conditions of service and compensation for officials other than Secretariat officials

Members of the International Court of Justice

Report of the Secretary-General

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The General Assembly, in paragraph 6 of resolution 48/252 A of 26 May 1994, decided that the emoluments and other conditions of service for the members of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) should next be reviewed at its fiftieth session in the light of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General (A/C.5/48/66). It further decided that the periodicity of review should be determined at the fiftieth session (ibid., para. 7).

2. In order to facilitate consideration of the various issues regarding the compensation and conditions of service of members of the Court, the present report is divided into the following sections: remuneration, including adjustment for currency fluctuation and cost of living; other conditions of service; pensions; analysis of the practice of the Court with respect to Article 16, paragraph 1, of the Statute of ICJ; financial implications; and the next comprehensive review.

II. REMUNERATION

3. Article 32 of the Statute of ICJ provides, inter alia, that each member of the Court shall receive an annual salary (para. 1), that these salaries and allowances "shall be fixed by the General Assembly" and that "they may not be decreased during the term of office" (para. 5).

the practice of the Court with respect to Article 16 of the Statute of ICJ. That Article provides as follows:

> "1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.
> "2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court."

30. In keeping with Article 16, paragraph 2, of its Statute, the Secretary-General requested the Court to provide clarification on the matters raised by the Advisory Committee. The Court interprets the provisions of the Article as prohibiting the Judges of the Court from exercising or maintaining any political or administrative function, whether international, national or local, whether commercial or otherwise; engaging in any other occupation of a professional nature, inter alia, holding a position in a commercial concern, engaging in the practice of law, maintaining membership in a law firm or rendering legal or expert opinions; or holding a permanent teaching or administrative position in a university or faculty of law.

31. Under the authority vested in the Court under Article 16, paragraph 2, of its Statute, ICJ has, in view of the judicial character of the activities involved, interpreted the bar to the members of the Court engaging in other occupations of a professional nature as not debarring a limited participation of Judges in other judicial or quasi-judicial activities of an occasional nature, as well as scholarly pursuits in the sphere of international law as members of learned societies or as occasional lecturers. The Judges accepting such occasional activities give the fullest precedence to their supervening duties as members of the Court. Based on a long-standing tradition of the Permanent Court of International Justice founded in 1922, as well as the recorded intention of the United Nations Conference on International Organization that adopted the text of Article 16 of the Statute, the Court further interpreted Article 16 as permitting the members to accept occasional appointments as arbitrators. In doing so, the Court referred to a similar practice existing in the courts of a number of Member States, such as Australia, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Tunisia, as well as some states of the United States of America.

32. The Court has consistently taken the position that contributions by its members to third-party settlement of disputes by legal processes in other forums, as by occasional service as arbitrators, are compatible with the Judges' functions as members of the Court. These activities are subject, however, to two conditions: the first is that the Judges must give absolute precedence to their obligations as members of the Court; and the second is that they should not accept appointment in an arbitral case, which, in another phase, is subject to being submitted to the Court.

33. The Court will continue to keep under review any questions that may arise of the compatibility of the functions of judges with the Statute of ICJ and with their supervening obligations.

A/RES/36/103
91st plenary meeting

36/103. Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2734 (XXV) of 16 December 1970, containing the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and its resolution 2131 (XX) of 21 December 1965, containing the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention in the Domestic Affairs of States and the Protection of Their Independence and Sovereignty,

Recalling further its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the Declaration of Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and its resolution 3314 (XXIX) of 14 December 1974, containing the Definition of Aggression,

Recalling also its resolutions 31/91 of 14 December 1976, 32/153 of 19 December 1977, 33/74 of 15 December 1978, 34/101 of 14 December 1979 and 35/159 of 12 December 1980 on non-interference in the internal affairs of States,

Deeply concerned at the gravity of the international situation and the increasing threat to international peace and security owing to frequent recourse to the threat or use of force, aggression, intimidation, military intervention and occupation, escalation of military presence and all other forms of intervention or interference, direct or indirect, overt or covert, threatening the sovereignty and political independence of other States, with the aim of overthrowing their Governments,

Conscious of the fact that such policies endanger the political independence of States, freedom of peoples and permanent sovereignty over their natural resources, adversely affecting thereby the maintenance of international peace and security,

Conscious of the imperative need for all foreign forces engaged in military occupation, intervention or interference to be completely withdrawn to their own territories, so that people under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes may freely and fully exercise their right to self-determination, so as to enable people of all States to administer their own affairs and determine their own political, economic and social system without external interference or control,

Conscious also of the imperative need for any threat of aggression, any recruitment, any use of armed bands, in particular mercenaries, against sovereign States to be completely ended, so as to enable the peoples of all States to determine their own political, economic and social systems without external interference or control,

Recognizing that full observance of the principles of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of sovereign States and peoples, either directly or indirectly, overtly or covertly, is essential to the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the widest disseminaion of this Declaration to States, the specialized agencies and other organizations in associaton with the United Nations, and other appropriate bodies.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention and Interference in the Internal Affairs of States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, that no State has the right to intervent directly or indirectly for any reason whatsoever in the internal or external affairs of any other State,

Reaffirming further the fundamental principle of the Charter of the United Nations that all States have the duty not to threaten or use force against the sovereignty, political independence or territorial integrity of other States,

Bearing in mind that the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security are founded upon freedom, equality, self-determination and independence, respect for the sovereignty of States, as well as permanent sovereignty of States over their natural resources, irrespective of their political, economic or social systems or the levels of their development,

Considering that full observance of the principle of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of States is of the greatest importance for the maintenance of international peace and security and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming in accordance with the Charter the right to self-determination and independence of people under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes,

Stressing that the purposes of the United Nations can be achieved only under conditions where peoples enjoy freedom and States enjoy sovereign equality and comply fully with the requirements of these principles in their international relations,

Considering that any violation of the principle of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of States poses a threat to the freedom of peoples, the sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity of States to their political, economic, social and cultural development, and also endangers international peace and security,

Considering that a declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States will contribute towards the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Considering the provisions of the Charter as a whole and taking into account the resolutions adopted by the United Nations relating to the contents of this principle, in particular those containing the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention in the Domestic Affairs of States and the Protection of Their Independence and Sovereignty, the Declaration of Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the Definition of Aggression,

Solemnly declares that:

1. No State or group of States has the right to intervene or interfere in any form or for any reason whatsoever in the internal and external affairs of other States.

2. The principle of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal and external affairs of States comprehends the following rights and duties:

I

(a) Sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity, national unity and security of all States, as well as national indentity and cultural heritage of their peoples;

(b) The sovereign and inalienable right of a State freely to determine its own political, economic, cultural and social system, to develop its international relations and to exercise permanent sovereignty over its natural resources, in accordance with the will of its people, without outside intervention, interference, subversion, coercion or threat in any form whatsoever;

(c) The right of States and peoples to have free access to information and to develop fully, without interference, their system of information and mass media and to use their information media in order to promote their political, social, economic and cultural interests and aspirations, based, inter alia, on the relevant articles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of the new international information order;

II

(a) The duty of States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force in any form whatsoever to violate the existing internationally recognized boundaries of another State, to disrupt the political, social or economic order of other States, to overthrow or change the political system of another State or its Government, to cause tension between or among States or to deprive peoples of their national identity and cultural heritage; and any sentence which the Court had jurisdiction to pass, if confirmed, are valid, notwithstanding any deviation from the Regulations or the Rules of Procedure or any defect or objection, technical or other. An exception exists only in the case where it appears that a substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred.

No action has yet been taken before British civil courts similar to that taken in the United States in the Quirin, Yamashita and Homma cases, where the proceedings of United States Military Commissions were made the subject of judicial review (see para. I supra and Annex II, pp. 111, 112-13 and 121).

XIII. THE AUTHORITY OF DECISIONS OF MILITARY COURTS

The Military Courts are not superior courts and their decisions are therefore not endowed with that special binding authority which Anglo-American law attaches to judicial decisions as precedents. Their relevance for the development of International Law may rather be compared with the relevance of judicial decisions in countries whose legal systems are not based on the Anglo-American doctrine of the binding character of precedents. Although the findings and sentences of British Military Courts trying war criminals do not lay down rules of law in an authoritative way, they are declaratory of the state of the law and illustrative of actual State practice.

Further forms of complicity are illustrated in other French trials concerning illegal arrests. In one of the trials previously referred to, the accused, Ferrarese,(1) was convicted not for having personally arrested and detained innocent French inhabitants, but for having caused their arrest and detention. Ferrarese, an Italian national, came to France in 1934 from Brazil. He settled down, married a French woman, and lived in Marseilles. During the war he became a secret agent of the Gestapo. Being a Catholic, he gained the confidence of a French Catholic priest, Paul Ardouin, who was a member of the French resistance movement and distributed resistance leaflets and pamphlets among his compatriots. Ferrarese denounced him to the Gestapo, which arrested the priest and deported him to Germany. The accused carried out this activity throughout the war and denounced a large number of French Catholic priests and other French citizens involved in the resistance movement. They were all arrested and tortured, and some were deported. The accused was condemned to death under Article 341 of the Penal Code, for having " caused the arrest, detention " and torture of the victims.

In another trial, also previously mentioned, the accused, Pitz, (2) a Nazi party administrator in Sierck, French Lorraine, was found guilty of having " aided or assisted " in the arrest and deportation of numerous French inhabitants in the area, by drawing up lists and submitting them to the authorities which made the arrests. He tried to induce French youths to enlist in the German army, which they refused to join. Upon his reporting to this effect they were arrested, interned and forcibly drafted in the Wehrmacht, and their families were deported to Germany. In July, 1942, he asked the French population to state openly whether they wanted to become Germans. Those unwilling had to report their names for transfer to other parts of France. Most of the latter were deported to Germany upon lists prepared by the accused. He was convicted to five years' imprisonment.

Special attention should be drawn to the case of complicity committed by means of denunciation. The question as to whether and to what extent denunciation is a crime in itself, was studied by the United Nations War Crimes Commission in connection with specific cases brought by member governments. A decision was made to the effect that denunciation did not in itself, constitute a war crime. The offence is committed only if, by giving information, the informer becomes a party to, or accomplice in, a war crime recognized as such in international law. This condition is fulfilled if circumstances constituting complicity are present, e.g., if the informer knew that his action would lead to the commission of a war crime and either intended to bring about this consequence or was recklessly indifferent with regard to it. This decision was applied by the War Crimes Commission in numerous instances.

It thus appears that, according to the above decision, denunciation is not punishable in itself, but only if it has resulted in a war crime and taken the shape of complicity in the traditional sense. This condition was present in the circumstances of the trial referred to above, the individuals denounced criminals for breach of the rules of war has been recognised by the practice of nations and is part of the traditional law. For that, I may again refer to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. The responsibility of fixing responsibility on particular agents is very noticeable.

Of course, I need not observe that that principle runs right through the series of trials which are reported in these volumes. I was, in fact, merely countering the conceivable though gratuitous and unfounded objection that, at least up to the time of the first World War, no such personal or individual responsibility was ever recognised in these matters ; it was recognised for instance in the Commission of Responsibilities, and also in the cases mentioned by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Yamashita case which has already been referred to in this Foreward, in particular may be noted cases where the offence was not a common law crime—as most of the war offences are—according to the normal rule of civilised people, but was only a crime in the particular area of military law, for instance the case of spying.

As was made clear at the outset, the trials reported in these volumes have been a selection of those of which records are in the possession of the United Nations War Crimes Commission. Only those of legal interest have been so selected for reporting, though most of those selected have also often been of importance in the history of the war. I may mention here some of the relevant figures relating to this process of selection :

No. 2012/12
8 March 2012

Swearing-in of Mr. Gaja and Ms Sebutinde, new Members of the Court

The Court will hold a public sitting on Monday 12 March 2012 at 10 a.m. before the public hearings in the case concerning Questions relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (Belgium v. Senegal)

THE HAGUE, 8 March 2012. The International Court of Justice (ICJ) will hold a public sitting on Monday 12 March 2012 at 10 a.m., during which Mr. Giorgio Gaja and Ms Julia Sebutinde, new Members of the Court, will make the solemn declaration provided for in Article 20 of the Statute of the Court.

Article 20 stipulates that "[e]very Member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously".

Mr. Gaja (Italy) and Ms Sebutinde (Uganda) were elected Members of the Court by the General Assembly and the Security Council of the United Nations on 10 November 2011 and 13 December 2011 respectively. The biographical note and official photograph of each Member of the Court can be found on the Court's website (www.icj-cij.org) under the heading "The Court/Members of the Court/Current Members".

After the sitting, the Court will retire briefly. It will return to the Great Hall of Justice shortly afterwards to begin the public hearings in the case concerning Questions relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (Belgium v. Senegal).

It should be noted that the Court is currently composed of only 14 Members, following the resignation of Mr. Awn Shawkat Al-Khasawneh (Jordan), former judge and Vice-President of the Court. It is recalled (see also Press Release No. 2012/1) that the United Nations Security Council has fixed Friday 27 April 2012 as the date for the election, by the Security Council and the General Assembly, of a successor to Mr. Al-Khasawneh.

The International Court of Justice (ICJ) is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It was established by the United Nations Charter in June 1945 and began its activities in April 1946. The seat of the Court is at the Peace Palace in The Hague (Netherlands). Of the six principal organs of the United Nations, it is the only one not located in New York. The Court has a twofold role: first, to settle, in accordance with international law, legal disputes submitted to it by States (its judgments have binding force and are without appeal for the parties concerned); and, second, to give advisory opinions on legal questions referred to it by duly authorized United Nations organs and agencies of the system. The Court is composed of 15 judges elected for a nine-year term by the General Assembly and the Security Council of the United Nations. It is assisted by a Registry, its international secretariat, whose activities are both judicial and diplomatic, as well as administrative. The official languages of the Court are French and English.

The ICJ, a court open only to States for contentious proceedings, and to certain organs and institutions of the United Nations system for advisory proceedings, should not be confused with the other — mostly criminal — judicial institutions based in The Hague and adjacent areas, such as the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY, an ad hoc court created by the Security Council), the International Criminal Court (ICC, the first permanent international criminal court established by treaty, which does not belong to the United Nations system), the Special Tribunal for Lebanon (STL, an independent judicial body composed of Lebanese and international judges, which is not a United Nations tribunal and does not form part of the Lebanese judicial system), or the Permanent Court of Arbitration (PCA, an institution founded in 1899, which is independent of the United Nations).

Mr. Boris Heim, Information Officer (+31 (0)70 302 2337)

Mt. Scopus Approved Revised International Standards of Judicial Independence

Approved March 19, 2008

Preamble

These Revised standards are approved in recognition of the need for the revision of the guidelines of general application to contribute to the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, with a view to ensuring the legitimacy and effectiveness of the judicial process;

In formulating these standards due regard has been given to the IBA Minimum Standards on Judicial independence 1982 and the UN Basic Principles of Judicial Independence 1985 and the long series of sets of other international rules and standards relating to judicial independence and the right to a fair trial; and The Burgh House Principles of Judicial Independence in International Law (for the international judiciary). Inspiration has also been drawn from the Tokyo Law Asia Principles; the Montréal Universal Declaration on the Independence of Justice; Council of Europe Staetements on judicial independence particularly Recommendation of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on the independence, efficiency and role of judges. Council of Europe 1998[1] ,The Bangalore Principles of Judicial Conduct November 2002,[2] and the American Bar Association's revision of its ethical standards for judges

The Standards were drafted bearing in mind the special challenges facing the judiciary in view of the challenges and problems in both the national and international spheres.

An updated comprehensive revision of minimum standards for judicial independence is called for in order to give appropriate response to the developments and challenges regarding the position of courts and judges in contemporary society. This revision is important to enable the judiciary to play a role in the adequate protection of human rights and in the operation of an efficient and fair market economy with a human face in the era of globalisation.

The standards give due consideration particularly to the fact that that each jurisdiction and legal tradition has own characteristics that must be recognised .It is also recognized that in the international judiciary each court or tribunal has its unique features and functions and that in certain instances judges serve on a part-time basis or as ad hoc or ad litem judges.

A. NATIONAL JUDGES

1. THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE JUDICIARY

1.1. An independent and impartial[3] judiciary is an institution of the highest value in every society[4] and an essential pillar of liberty[5] and the rule of law.

[2] adopted by Judicial Group on Strengthening Judicial Integrity, AJA, http://www.ajs.org

[3] Stating this in the body of the standards themselves in addition to the preamble helps stress the section's importance and ensures that it is more easily referred to.

→This is preferred to the first version as it describes exactly what elements are required in the Judiciary →Tokyo Law Asia Principles. Stating this in the body of the standards themselves rather than in a preamble helps stress the section's importance and ensures that it is more easily referred to.

1.2. The objectives and functions of the judiciary shall include:

1.2.1.1. To resolve disputes and to administer the law impartially between persons and between persons and public authorities;

1.2.1.2. To promote, within the proper limits of the judicial function, the observance and the attainment of human rights; and

1.2.1.3. To ensure that all people are able to live securely under the rule of law.[6]

2. THE JUDICIARY[7] AND THE EXECUTIVE

2.1. The Judiciary as a whole shall be independent.

2.2. Each judge shall enjoy both personal independence and substantive independence:[8]

2.2.1. Personal independence means that the terms and conditions of judicial service are adequately secured by law[9] so as to ensure that individual judges are not subject to executive control; and

2.2.2. Substantive independence means that in the discharge of his judicial function, a judge is subject to nothing but the law and the commands of his conscience.

2.3. The Judiciary as a whole shall[10] enjoy collective independence and autonomy vis-à-vis the Executive.

2.4. Judicial appointments and promotions by the Executive are not inconsistent with judicial independence as long as they are in accordance with Principles 4.

2.5. No executive decree shall reverse specific court decisions, or change the composition of the court in order to affect its decision-making.[11]

2.6. The Executive may only participate in the discipline of judges by referring complaints against judges, or by the initiation of disciplinary proceedings, but not by the adjudication of such matters.

---

[5] Preamble, Montréal Declaration.

[6] Montréal Declaration.

→Recall competing values of judicial independence and judicial accountability: "As phrased by a Canadian judge, Mr. Justice Riddell, commenting on an arrangement of divisions of labour among the judges, 'Judges are the servants, not the masters of the people.' Servants are accountable, so are judges." From Shetreet, Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate, at 593, referring to Davis Acetylene Gas Co. v. Morrison, (1915) 34 O.L.R. 155, 23 D.L.R. 871 (C.A.).

[7] The focus is really on the relationship with the judiciary as a whole, rather than with individual judges.

[8] Although substantive independence warrants wide protection, it is not without boundaries. Judges must exercise their powers subject to the general limit of mutual respect between the various branches of the government and accepted lines of demarcation of their respective responsibilities. The mutual respect is expressed in judge-made rules, including the rule that courts will not engage in the adjudication of unjusticiable issues, such as political questions: Shetreet, Judicial Independence :New Conceptual Dimensions and Contemporary Challenges , in Shetreet and Descenes Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate at 635.(1985)

[9] To clarify that these important conditions must be legally entrenched.

[10] Adds mandatory language.

[11] Montréal Declaration section 2.08.

2.7. The power to discipline or remove a judge must be vested in an institution which is independent of the Executive.

2.8. The power of removal of a judge shall preferably be vested in a judicial tribunal.

2.9. The Executive shall not have control over judicial functions.

2.10. Rules of procedure and practice shall be made by legislation or by the Judiciary in cooperation with the legal profession, subject to parliamentary approval.

2.11. The state shall have a duty to provide for the execution of judgments of the Court. The Judiciary shall exercise supervision over the execution process.

2.12. Judicial matters are exclusively within the responsibility of the Judiciary, both in central judicial administration and in court level judicial administration.

2.13. The central responsibility for judicial administration shall preferably be vested in the Judiciary or jointly in the Judiciary and the Executive.

2.14. The principle of democratic accountability should be respected and therefore it is legitimate for the legislature to play a role in judicial appointments and central administration of justice provided that due consideration is given to the principle of judicial independence.

2.15. The process and standards of judicial selection shall give due consideration to the principle of fair reflection by the judiciary of the society in all its aspects.[12]

2.15.1. Taking into consideration the principle of fair reflection by the judiciary of the society in all its aspects, in the selection of judges, there shall be no discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, gender, language, religion, national or social origin, property, birth or status, subject however to citizenship requirements.[13].

2.16. Candidates for judicial office shall be individuals of integrity[14] and ability, well- trained in the law. They shall have equality of access to judicial office.[15]

2.17. It is the duty of the state to provide adequate financial resources to allow for the due administration of justice.

2.18. Division of work among judges should ordinarily be done under a predetermined plan, which can be changed in certain clearly defined circumstances.

2.18.1. In countries where the power of division of judicial work is vested in the chief justice, it is not considered inconsistent with judicial independence to accord to the chief justice the power to change the predetermined plan for sound reasons, preferably in consultation with the senior judges when practicable.

2.18.2. Subject to 2.18.1, the exclusive responsibility for case assignment should be vested in a responsible judge, preferably the President of the Court.

2.19. The power to transfer a judge from one court to another shall be vested in a judicial authority according to grounds provided by law and preferably shall be subject to the judge's consent, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld.

2.20. Judicial salaries and pensions shall be adequate at all times, fixed by law, and should be periodically reviewed independently of Executive control

2.21. The position of the judges, their independence, their security of tenure, and their adequate remuneration shall be entrenched constitutionally[16] or secured by law.

2.22. Judicial salaries, pensions, and benefits[17] cannot be decreased during judges' service except as a coherent part of an overall public economic measure.

2.23. The Ministers of the government shall not exercise any form of pressure on judges, whether overt or covert, and shall not make statements which adversely affect the independence of individual judges, or of the Judiciary as a whole.

2.24. The power of pardon shall be exercised cautiously so as to avoid its use as an interference with judicial decision.

2.25. The Executive shall refrain from any act or omission which pre-empts the judicial resolution of a dispute, or frustrates the proper execution of a court judgment.

2.26. The Executive shall not have the power to close down, or suspend, or delay, the operation of the court system at any level.

3. THE JUDICIARY[18] AND THE LEGISLATURE

3.1. The Legislature shall not pass legislation which reverses specific court decisions.

3.2. Legislation introducing changes in the terms and conditions of judicial service shall not be applied to judges holding office at the time of passing the legislation unless the changes improve the terms of service and are generally applied.[19]

---

[16] UN Basic Principles.

→Change suggested in order to provide additional flexibility, and also to stress how this is an important enough issue to be constitutionally entrenched.

[17] In the interests of completeness

[18] The focus is really on the relationship with the judiciary as a whole, rather than with individual judges.

[19] In order to prevent "rewarding" specific judges.

→The US Constitution's Compensation Clause guarantees federal judges a "Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office." U.S. Const., Art. III, §1.

→See US v. Hatter (99-1978) 532 U.S. 557 (2001) 203 F.3d 795: Congress is prohibited from singling out judges for specially unfavourable taxation treatment, although it is permitted to impose a "non-discriminatory tax laid generally" upon judges and other citizens.

3.3. In case of legislation reorganising or abolishing courts, judges serving in these courts shall not be affected, except for their transfer to another court of the same or materially comparable[20] status.

3.4. Everyone shall have the right to be tried expeditiously by the established ordinary courts or judicial tribunals under law, subject to review by the courts.[21]

3.5. Part-time judges should be appointed only with proper safeguards secured by law.

3.6. The Legislature may be vested with the powers of removal of judges, upon a recommendation of a judicial commission or pursuant to constitutional provisions or validly enacted legislation.[22]

4. TERMS AND NATURE OF JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS

4.1. The method of judicial selection shall safeguard against judicial appointments for improper motives[23] and shall not threaten judicial independence.

4.2. a) The principle of democratic accountability should be respected and therefore it is legitimate for the Executive and the Legislature to play a role in judicial appointments provided that due consideration is given to the principle of Judicial Independence.

b) The recent trend of establishing judicial selection boards or commissions in which members or representatives of the Legislature ,the Executive ,the Judiciary and the legal profession take part ,should be viewed favourably, provided that a proper balance is maintained in the composition of such boards or commissions of each of the branches of government

4.3. Judicial appointments should generally be for life, subject to removal for cause and compulsory retirement at an age fixed by law at the date of appointment.

4.3.1. Retirement age shall not be reduced for existing judges.[24]

→See United States v. Will, 449 U.S. 200, 220-21 (1980): though Congress may not rescind a salary increase for judges once it has gone into effect - that would be a diminishment of compensation - Congress is under no constitutional obligation to grant salary increases.

→See Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245, 253 (1920): The imposition of a new federal tax that has the effect of reducing the judicial compensation of judges already in office is unconstitutional.

→But see O'Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277 (1939): an income tax levied against the judicial salary of judges who took office after the levy is in effect is constitutional, when the taxing measure is of general, non-discriminatory application to all earners of income.

4.4. Promotion of judges shall[25] be based on objective factors, in particular merit,[26] integrity and experience.[27]

4.5. Judicial appointments and promotions shall be based on transparency of the procedures and standards and shall be based on professional qualifications, integrity, ability and efficiency.

4.6. Judges should not be appointed for probationary periods except in legal systems in which appointments of judges do not depend on having practical experience in the profession as a condition of appointment, and provided that permanent appointment will be granted on merit.[28]

4.7. The institution of temporary judges should be avoided as far as possible except where there exists a long historic democratic tradition.

4.8. Part-time judges should be appointed only with proper safeguards secured by law.

4.9. The number of the members of the highest court should be fixed, with the exception of courts modeled after the courts of cassion, and in the case of all courts, should not be altered for improper motives.

5. JUDICIAL REMOVAL AND DISCIPLINE

5.1. The proceedings for discipline and removal of judges[29] shall be processed expeditiously and fairly[30] and shall ensure fairness to the judge including adequate opportunity for hearing.

5.2. With the exception of proceedings before the Legislature[31], the procedure for discipline should be held in camera. The judge may however request that the hearing be held in public[32] and such request should be respected, subject to expeditious, final and reasoned disposition of this request by the disciplinary tribunal. Judgments in disciplinary proceedings, whether held in camera or in public, may be published.[33]

5.3. All of the grounds for the discipline, suspension and removal of judges shall be entrenched constitutionally or fixed by law and shall be clearly defined.

5.4. All disciplinary, suspension and removal[34] actions shall be based upon established standards of judicial conduct.[35]

5.5. A judge shall not be subject to removal, unless by reason of a criminal act or through gross or repeated neglect or serious infringements of disciplinary rules or physical or mental incapacity he has shown himself manifestly unfit to hold the position of judge. The grounds for removal shall be limited to reasons of medical incapacity or behaviour that renders the judge unfit to discharge their duties.[36]

5.6. In systems where the power to discipline and remove judges is vested in an institution other than the Legislature, the tribunal for discipline and removal of judges shall be permanent, and be composed predominantly of members of the Judiciary.

5.7. The head of the court may legitimately have supervisory powers to control judges on administrative matters.

6. THE MEDIA AND THE JUDICIARY

6.1. It should be recognized that judicial independence does not render judges free from public accountability, however, the media and other institutions should show respect for judicial independence and exercise restrain in criticism of judicial decisions.[37]

6.2. While recognising the general right of freedom of expression of all citizens, a judge should not interview directly with the general media. If a judge needs to respond to the media in regard to a media report or inquiry, it shall be done via a spokesperson assigned by the court or a judge specifically assigned by the court for this purpose. In exceptional circumstances a judge may respond directly to the media if that judge's direct response will prevent an irreparable damage.

6.3. The media should show responsibility and restraint in publications on pending cases where such publication may influence the outcome of the case.

6.4. A judge shall not knowingly, while a proceeding is, or could come before the judge, make any comment that might reasonably be expected to affect the outcome of such proceeding or impair the manifest fairness of the process. Nor shall the judge make any comment in public or otherwise that might affect the fair trial of any person or issue. [38]

7.5. A judge should always behave in such a manner as to preserve the dignity of the office and the impartiality, integrity and independence of the Judiciary.

7.7. Judges may take appropriate action to protect their judicial independence.[42]

The state shall ensure that in the decision-making process, judges should be independent and be able to act without any restriction, improper influence, inducements, pressures, threats[49] or interferences, direct or indirect, from any quarter or for any reason. The law should provide for sanctions against persons seeking to influence judges in any such manner. Judges should have unfettered freedom to decide cases impartially, in accordance with their conscience and their interpretation of the facts, and in pursuance of the prevailing rules of the law. B. INTERNATIONAL JUDGES

The following text on minimum standards for the independence of the international judiciary is based, with minor amendments, on the Burgh House Principles on the Independence of the International Judiciary which were formulated by the Study Group of the International Law Association on the Practice and Procedure of International Courts and Tribunals

10. INDEPENDENCE

10.1 The international courts and the judges shall exercise their functions free from direct or indirect interference or influence by any person or entity.

10.2 This freedom of the judges and courts shall apply both to the judicial process in pending cases, including the assignment of cases to particular judges, and to the operation of the court and its registry.

10.3 The court shall be free to determine the conditions for its international administration, including staff recruitment policy, information systems and allocation of budgetary expenditure.

10.4 Deliberations of the court shall remain confidential.

10.5 All Judges of international courts and tribunals shall adhere to the principle that a judges who are nationals of a member state of the organisation establishing the court or tribunal when exercising judicial discretion and function shall engage in fair and independent adjudication of the case and by no means in representation of the member state.

11 NOMINATION, ELECTION AND APPOINTMENT

11.1 In accordance with the governing instruments, judges shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, integrity and conscientiousness who possess the appropriate professional qualifications, competence and experience required for the court concerned.

11.2 While procedures for nomination, election and appointment should consider fair representation of different geographic regions and the principal legal systems, as appropriate, as well as of female and male judges, appropriate personal and professional qualifications must be the overriding consideration in the nomination, election and appointment of judges.

11.3 Procedures for the nomination, election, and appointment of judges should be transparent and provide appropriate safeguards against nominations, elections and appointments motivated by improper considerations.

11.4 Information regarding the nomination, election and appointment process and information about candidates for judicial office should be made public, in due time and in an effective manner, by the international organisation or other body responsible for the nomination, election and appointment process.

11.5 For the promotion of the independence of judges it is preferable that appointment of judges to the international courts and tribunals shall be for one long term and shall not be open for re-election.

12 SECURITY OF TENURE

12.1 Judges shall have security of tenure in relations to their term of office. They may only be removed from office upon specified grounds and in accordance with appropriate procedures specified in advance.

12.2 The governing instruments of each court should provide for judges to be appointed for a minimum term to enable them to exercise their judicial functions in an independent manner.

13 SERVICE AND REMUNERATION

13.1 Judges' essential conditions of service shall be enumerated in legally binding instruments.

13.2 No adverse changes shall be introduced with regard to judges' remuneration and other essential conditions of service during their terms of office.

13.3 Judges should receive adequate remuneration which should be periodically adjusted in line with any increases in the cost of living at the seat of the court.

13.4 Conditions of service should include adequate pension arrangements.

14 PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

14.1 Judges shall enjoy immunities equivalent to full diplomatic immunities, and in particular shall enjoy immunities from all claims arising from the exercise of their judicial functions.

14.2 The court alone shall be competent to waive the immunity of judges; it should waive immunity in any case where, in its opinion, the immunity would impede the course of justice and can be waived without prejudice to the exercise of the judicial function.

14.3 Documents and papers of the courts, judges and registry, in so far as they relate to the business of the court, shall be inviolable.

14.4 The state in which an international court has its seat shall take the necessary measures to protect the security of the judges and their families, and to protect them from adverse measures related to the exercise of their judicial function.

15 BUDGET

15.1 States, parties and international organisations shall provide adequate resources, including facilities and levels of staffing, to enable courts and the judges to perform their functions effectively.

16 FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION AND ASSOCIATION

16.1 Judges shall enjoy freedom of expression and association. These freedoms must be exercised in a manner that is compatible with the judicial function and that may not affect or reasonably appear to affect judicial independence or impartiality.

16.2 Judges shall maintain the confidentiality of deliberations, and shall not comment extra-judicially upon pending cases.

16.3 Judges shall exercise appropriate restrain in commenting extra-judicially upon judgements and procedures of their own and other courts and may upon any legislation, drafts, proposals or subject-matter likely to come before their court.

17 EXTRA-JUDICIAL ACTIVITY

17.1 Judges shall not engage in any extra-judicial activity that is incompatible with their judicial function or the efficient and timely functioning of the court of which they are members, or that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality.

17.2 Judges shall not exercise any political function.

17.3 Each court should establish an appropriate mechanism to give guidance to judges in relation to extra-judicial activities, and to ensure that appropriate means exist for parties to proceedings to raise any concerns.

18 PAST LINKS TO A CASE

18.1 Judges shall not serve in a case in which they have previously served as agent, counsel, advisor, advocate, expert or in any other capacity for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court or other dispute settlement body which has considered the subject matter of the dispute or in a case where they had previously commented or expressed an opinion concerning the subject matter in a manner that is likely to affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality.

18.2 Judges shall not serve in a case with the subject matter of which they had other forms of association that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality.

19 PAST LINKS TO A PARTY

19.1 Judges shall not sit in any case involving a party for whom they have served as agent, counsel, advisor, advocate or expert within the previous three years or such other period as the court may establish within its rules; or with whom they have had any other significant professional or personal link within the previous three years or such other period as the court may establish within its rules.

20 INTEREST IN THE OUTCOME OF A CASE

20.1 Judges shall not sit in any case in the outcome of which they hold any material personal, professional or financial interest.

20.2 Judges shall not sit in any case in the outcome of which other persons or entities closely related to them hold a material, personal, professional or financial interest.

20.3 Judges must not accept any undisclosed payment from a party to the proceedings or any payment whatsoever on account of a judge's participation in the proceedings.

21 CONTACT WITH A PARTY

21.1 Judges shall exercise appropriate caution in their personal contacts with parties, agents, counsel, advocates, advisors, and other persons and entities associated with a pending case. Any such contacts should be conducted in a manner that is compatible with the judicial function and that may not affect or reasonably appear to affect the judge's independence and impartiality.

21.2 Judges shall discourage ex parte communications from parties and except as provided by the rules of the court such communications shall be disclosed to the court and to the other party.

22 POST-SERVICE LIMITATIONS

22.1 Judges shall not serve in a case with the subject-matter of which they have had any other form of association that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality.

22.2 Judges shall not seek or accept, while they are in office, any future employment, appointment or benefit, from a party to a case on which they sat or from any entity related to such a party that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality.

22.3 Former judges shall not, except as permitted by rules of the court, act in any capacity in relations to any case on which they sat during their judicial term of office.

22.4 Former judges shall not act as agent, counsel, advisor or advocate in any proceedings before the court on which they previously served for a period of three years after they have left office or such other period as the court may establish and publish.

22.5 Former judges should exercise appropriate caution as regards the acceptance of any employment, appointment or benefit, in particular from a party to a case on which they sat or from any entity related to such a party.

23 DISCLOSURE

23.1 Judges shall disclose to the court and, as appropriate, to the parties of the proceedings any circumstances which come to their notice at any time by virtue of which any of Principles 16 to 22 apply.

23.2 Each court shall establish appropriate procedures to enable judges to disclose to the court and, as appropriate, to the parties to the proceedings matters that may affect or may reasonably appear to affect their independence or impartiality in relations to any particular case.

24 WAIVER

24.1 Notwithstanding Principles 16 to 22, judges shall not be prevented from sitting in a case where they have made appropriate disclosure of any facts bringing any of those Principles into operation, where the court expresses no objections and the parties give their express and informed consent to the judge acting.

25 WITHDRAWAL OR DISQUALIFICATION

25.1 Each court shall establish rules of procedure to enable the determination whether judges are prevented from sitting in a particular case as a result of the application of these Principles or for reasons of incapacity. Such procedures shall be available to a judge, the court, or any party to the proceedings.

26 MISCONDUCT

26.1 Each court shall establish rules of procedure to address a specific complaint of misconduct or breach of duty on the party of a judge that may affect independence or impartiality.

26.2 Such a complaint may, if clearly unfounded, be resolved on a summary basis. IN any case where the court determines that more detailed investigation is required, the rules shall establish adequate safeguards to protect the judges' rights and interests and to ensure appropriate confidentiality of the proceedings.

26.3 The governing instruments of the court shall provide for appropriate measures, including the removal from office of a judge.

26.4 The outcome of any complaint shall be communicated to the complainant.

27 AD HOC JUDGES

27.1 An ad hoc judge in an international court or tribunal must act conscientiously and independently in the adjudication of the case to which that judge was assigned to sit.

27.2 The restrictions and provisions applicable to full-time international judges regarding past links, extra-judicial activities, post-service limitations, and security of tenure shall not apply to ad hoc judges.
